“Inquirers and candidates shall, with the permission of the presbytery of care, engage in some form of supervised service to the church. No inquirer or candidate who has not been previously ordained as a ruling elder may serve as moderator of a session, administer the Sacraments, or perform a marriage service. An inquirer or candidate previously ordained as a ruling elder may be authorized by the presbytery to preside at the Lord’s Supper when invited by a session.

“2.0607 Final Assessment and Negotiation for Service

“A candidate may not enter into negotiation for his or her service as a teaching elder without approval of the presbytery. The presbytery shall record when it has certified a candidate ready for examination for ordination, pending a call. Evidence of readiness to begin ordered ministry as a teaching elder shall include:

“a. a candidate’s wisdom and maturity of faith, leadership skills, compassionate spirit, honest repute, and sound judgment;

“b. a transcript showing graduation, with satisfactory grades, at a regionally accredited college or university;

“c. a transcript from a theological institution accredited by the Association of Theological Schools acceptable to the presbytery, showing a course of study including Hebrew and Greek, exegesis of the Old and New Testaments using Hebrew and Greek, satisfactory grades in all areas of study, and graduation or proximity to graduation; and “d. satisfactory grades, together with the examination papers in the areas covered by any standard ordination examination approved by the General Assembly. Such examinations shall be prepared and administered by a body created by the presbyteries.

“2.0608 Transfer of Relationship

“At the request of the inquirer or candidate and with the approval of the sessions and presbyteries involved, a presbytery may transfer the covenant relationship of an inquirer or candidate.

“2.0609 Removal from Relationship

“An inquirer or candidate may, after consultation with the session and the presbytery, withdraw from covenant relationship. A presbytery may also, for sufficient reasons, remove an individual’s name from the roll of inquirers and candidates, reporting this action and the reasons to the session, to the individual, and, if appropriate, to the educational institution in which the individual is enrolled. Prior to taking such action, the presbytery or its designated entity shall make a reasonable attempt to give the candidate or inquirer an opportunity to be heard concerning the proposed removal.

“2.0610 Exceptions

“By a three-fourths vote, a presbytery may waive any of the requirements for ordination in G-2.06, except for those of G-2.0607d. If a presbytery judges that there are good and sufficient reasons why a candidate should not be required to satisfy the requirements of G-2.0607d, it shall approve by three-quarters vote some alternate means by which to ascertain the readiness of the candidate for ministry in the areas covered by the standard ordination examinations. A full account of the reasons for exception shall be included in the minutes of the presbytery and communicated to the presbytery to which an inquirer or candidate may be transferred.

“2.0701 Ordination

“Ordination to the ordered ministry of teaching elder is an act of the whole church carried out by the presbytery, setting apart a person to ordered ministry. Such a person shall have fulfilled the ordination requirements of the presbytery of care and received the call of God to service to a congregation or other work in the mission of the church that is acceptable to the candidate and to the presbytery of call.

“2.0702 Place of Ordination

“The presbytery placing the call to the candidate for ministry shall ordinarily examine, ordain, and install the candidate.

“2.0703 Service of Ordination

“The order for that service [of worship] [found] in the Directory for Worship [(W-4.4000)][r] shall be followed.

“2.0704 Record of Ordination

“The presbytery of call shall record the ordination and installation, along with written affirmation of the new teaching elder to the obligations undertaken in the ordination questions, and enroll the teaching elder as a member of the presbytery. The stated clerk of the presbytery shall report these actions to the General Assembly, the presbytery of care, and to the congregation of which the candidate was formerly a member.

“2.08 CALL AND INSTALLATION

“2.0801 Pastoral Vacancy

“When a congregation has a vacancy in a pastoral position, or after the presbytery approves the effective date of the dissolution of an existing pastoral relationship, the congregation shall, with the guidance and permission of the presbytery, proceed to fill the vacancy in the following manner.

“2.0802 Election of a Pastor Nominating Committee

“The session shall call a congregational meeting to elect a pastor nominating committee that shall be representative of the whole congregation. The committee’s duty shall be to nominate a pastor for election by the congregation.

“2.0803 Call Process

“According to the process of the presbytery and prior to making its report to the congregation, the pastor nominating committee shall [obtain approval] [receive and consider the presbytery’s counsel] on the merits, suitability, and availability of those considered for the call. When the way is clear for the committee to report to the congregation, the committee shall notify the session, which shall call a congregational meeting.

“On the election of a pastor, if it appears that a substantial minority of the voters are averse to the nominee who has received a majority of the votes and that they cannot be persuaded to concur in the call, the moderator may recommend to the majority that they not prosecute the call. If the congregation is nearly unanimous, or if the majority insist upon their right to call a pastor, the moderator shall forward the call to the presbytery, certifying the results of the vote and any other facts of importance. The moderator shall also inform the person being called of the nature and circumstances of the decision.

“2.0805 [2.0804] Terms of Call

“The terms of call shall always meet or exceed any minimum requirement of the presbytery in effect when the call is made. The session shall review annually the minister’s terms of call and shall propose for congregational action (G-1.0501) such changes as the session deems appropriate, provided that they meet the presbytery’s minimum requirements. The call shall include participation in the benefits plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including both pension and medical coverage, or any successor plan approved by the General Assembly.

“2.0806 [2.0805] Installation Service

“When the congregation, the presbytery, and the teaching elder (or candidate) have all concurred in a call to a permanent or designated pastoral position, the presbytery shall complete the call process by organizing and conducting a service of installation. Installation is an act of the presbytery establishing the pastoral relationship. A service of installation occurs in the context of worship. The [order for that service] [of worship] [found] in the Directory for Worship [(W-4.4000)][r] shall be followed.
“G-2.09 DISSOLUTION OF PASTORAL RELATIONSHIPS

“2.0901 Congregational Meeting

“An installed pastoral relationship may be dissolved only by the presbytery. Whether the teaching elder, the congregation, or the presbytery initiates proceedings for dissolution of the relationship, there shall always be a meeting of the congregation to consider the matter and to consent, or decline to consent, to dissolution, unless the presbytery expressly finds that the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands dissolution of the relationship without such a meeting.

“2.0902 Pastor, Co-Pastor, or Associate Pastor Requests

“A pastor, co-pastor, or associate pastor may request the presbytery to dissolve the pastoral relationship. The minister must also state her or his intention to the session. The session shall call a congregational meeting to act upon the request and to make recommendations to the presbytery. If the congregation does not concur, the presbytery shall hear from the congregation, through its elected commissioners, the reasons why the presbytery should not dissolve the pastoral relationship. If the congregation fails to appear, or if its reasons for retaining the relationship are judged insufficient, the request may be granted and the pastoral relationship dissolved.

“If any congregation desires the pastoral relationship to be dissolved, a procedure similar to G-2.0902, above, shall be followed. When a congregation requests the session to call a congregational meeting to dissolve its relationship with its pastor, the session shall call the meeting and request the presbytery to appoint a moderator for the meeting. If the pastor does not concur with the request to dissolve the relationship, the presbytery shall hear from him or her the reasons why the presbytery should not dissolve the relationship. If the pastor fails to appear, or if the reasons for maintaining the relationship are judged insufficient, the relationship may be dissolved.

“2.0904 Presbytery Action

“The presbytery may inquire into reported difficulties in a congregation and may dissolve the pastoral relationship if, after consultation with the minister, the session, and the congregation, it finds the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it.

“2.0905 Officiate by Invitation Only

“After the dissolution of the pastoral relationship, former pastors and associate pastors shall not provide their pastoral services to members of their former congregations without the invitation of the moderator of session.

“G-2.10 COMMISSIONING RULING ELDERS TO LIMITED OR PARTICULAR PASTORAL SERVICE

“2.1001 Functions

“When the presbytery, in consultation with the session or other responsible committee, determines that its strategy for mission requires it, the presbytery may authorize a ruling elder to be commissioned to limited pastoral service as assigned by the presbytery. A ruling elder so designated may be commissioned to serve in a validated ministry of the presbytery. Presbytery, in its commission, may authorize the ruling elder to moderate the session of the congregation to which he or she is commissioned, to administer the Sacraments, and to officiate at marriages where permitted by state law. This commission shall also specify the term of service, which shall not exceed three years but shall be renewable. The presbytery shall review the commission at least annually.

“2.1002 Training, Examination, and Commissioning

“A ruling elder who seeks to serve under the terms of G-2.1001 shall receive such preparation and instruction as determined by the presbytery to be appropriate to the particular commission. The ruling elder shall be examined by the presbytery as to personal faith, motives for seeking the commission, and the areas of instruction mentioned previously determined by presbytery. A ruling elder who has been commissioned and later ceases to serve in the specified ministry may continue to be listed as available to serve, but is not authorized to perform the functions specified in G-2.1001 until commissioned again to a congregation or ministry by the presbytery.

“When the presbytery is satisfied with the qualifications of a ruling elder to serve a congregation providing the services described above, it shall commission the ruling elder to pastoral service as designated by the presbytery, employing the questions contained in W-4.4000.
“2.1004 Supervision

“The ruling elder commissioned under the terms of G-2.1001 shall work under the supervision of the presbytery. The presbytery may at any time withdraw the commission for reasons it deems good and sufficient. A teaching elder shall be assigned as a mentor and supervisor.

“G-2.11 CERTIFIED CHURCH SERVICE

“2.1101 Forms of Certified Church Service

“Persons may be certified and called to service within congregations, councils, and church-related entities, serving in staff positions. These individuals endeavor to reflect their faith through their work and to strengthen the church through their dedication. They should be encouraged by their session and presbytery to meet, or be prepared to meet, the certification requirements in a handbook provided by a national certifying body approved by the General Assembly. Names of those who have earned certification through a national certifying body shall be transmitted to the appropriate body of the General Assembly, which will forward them to the stated clerk of the presbyteries in which those persons labor.

“2.1102 Presbytery and Certified Church Service

“The presbytery shall encourage sessions to make continuing education funds and time available to those seeking certification, and shall affirm the skill and dedication of these certified persons by providing a service of recognition at the time of certification. The presbytery may grant the privilege of voice at all its meetings to persons in certified church service.

“2.1103 Christian Educators

“a. Skills and Training

“Certified Christian educators are persons certified and called to service in the ministry of education in congregations or councils. They shall have skills and training in biblical interpretation, Reformed theology, worship and sacraments, human development, faith development, religious educational theory and practice, and the polity, programs, and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“b. Presbytery Responsibility

“The presbytery shall establish minimum requirements for compensation and benefits for Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators and shall provide access to the area of presbytery that oversees ministry (G-3.0307). During their term of service in an educational ministry under the jurisdiction of the presbytery, the presbytery may grant Certified Christian Educators who are ruling elders the privilege of voice and vote at all its meetings.

“CHAPTER THREE

“COUNCILS OF THE CHURCH

“G-3.01 GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF COUNCILS

“3.0101 Councils as an Expression of Unity of the Church

“The mutual interconnection of the church through its councils is a sign of the unity of the church. Congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while possessing all the gifts necessary to be the church, are nonetheless not sufficient in themselves to be the church. Rather, they are called to share with others both within and beyond the congregation the task of bearing witness to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in the world. This call to bear witness is the work of all believers. The particular responsibility of the councils of the church is to nurture, guide, and govern those who witness as part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to the end that such witness strengthens the whole church and gives glory to God.

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is governed by councils composed of presbyters elected by the people (F-3.0202). These councils are called the session, the presbytery, the synod, and the General Assembly. All councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution. The councils are distinct, but have such mutual relations that the act of one of them is the act of the whole church. The jurisdiction of each council is limited by the express provisions of the Constitution, with the acts of each subject to review by the next higher council. Powers not mentioned in this Constitution are reserved to the presbyteries.

“Councils of the church exist to help congregations and the church as a whole to be more faithful participants in the mission of Christ. They do so as they “Provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard, responding to the promise of God’s new creation in Christ, and inviting all people to participate in that new creation;

“Provide that the Sacraments may be rightly administered and received, welcoming those who are being engrafted into Christ, bearing witness to Christ’s saving death and resurrection, anticipating the heavenly banquet that is to come, and committing itself in the present to solidarity with the marginalized and the hungry; and “Nurture a covenant community of disciples of Christ, living in the strength of God’s promise, and giving itself in service to God’s mission.

“3.0102 Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction

“Councils of this church have only ecclesiastical jurisdiction for the purpose of serving Jesus Christ and declaring and obeying his will in relation to truth and service, order and discipline. They may frame statements of faith, bear testimony against error in doctrine and immorality in life, resolve questions of doctrine and discipline, give counsel in matters of conscience, and decide issues properly brought before them under the provisions of this Book of Order. They may authorize the administration of the sacraments in accordance with the Directory for Worship. They have power to establish plans and rules for the worship, mission, government, and discipline of the church and to do those things necessary to the peace, purity, unity, and progress of the church under the will of Christ. They have responsibility for the leadership, guidance, and government of that portion of the church that is under their jurisdiction.

“3.0103 Participation and Representation

“The councils of the church shall give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and shall provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices (F-1.0403). In fulfilling this commitment, councils shall give due consideration to both the gifts and requirements for ministry (G-2.0104) and the right of people in congregations and councils to elect their officers (F-3.0106).

“Each council shall develop procedures and mechanisms for promoting and reviewing that body’s implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation. Councils above the session shall establish by their own rule [committees or entities, committees on representation] to fulfill the following functions: to advise the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, to advocate for diversity in leadership, and to consult with the council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403. [A committee on representation should not be merged with another committee or made a subcommittee of another committee.]

“The pastor of a congregation shall be the moderator of the session of that congregation. In congregations where there are co-pastors, they shall both be considered moderators and have provisions for designating who presides at a particular meeting. If it is impractical for the pastor to moderate, he or she shall invite another teaching elder who is a member of the presbytery or a person authorized by the presbytery to serve as moderator. If there is no installed pastor, or if the installed pastor is unable to invite another moderator, the presbytery shall make provision for a moderator.

“The moderator possesses the authority necessary for preserving order and for conducting efficiently the business of the body. He or she shall convene and adjourn the body in accordance with its own action.

“Each council higher than the session shall elect a moderator for such terms as the council determines. At the time of their election, moderators must be continuing members of, or commissioners to, the council over which they are elected to preside. They shall preside at meetings of the council during their term of office; councils shall provide by rule who shall preside in the absence of the moderator.

“Each council shall elect a clerk who shall record the transactions of the council, keep its rolls of membership and attendance, preserve its records, and furnish extracts from them when required by another council of the church. Such extracts, verified by the clerk, shall be evidence in any council of the church. The clerk of the session shall be a ruling elder elected by the session for such term as it may determine. The clerk of a presbytery, a synod, and the General Assembly shall be called stated clerk, shall be elected by the council for a definite term as it may determine, and must be a ruling elder or teaching elder.

“Councils may elect such other officers as the council requires.

“3.0105 Meetings

“Meetings of councils shall be opened and closed with prayer. Meetings shall be conducted in accordance with the most recent edition of Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised, except when it is in contradiction to this Constitution.
Councils may also make use of processes of discernment in their deliberations prior to a vote as agreed upon by the body.

“When a council makes a decision, a member of the body who voted against the decision is entitled to file a dissent or a protest. Filing a dissent or protest neither initiates nor prevents judicial process.

“a. A dissent is a declaration expressing disagreement with a decision of a council. It shall be made at the particular session during which the decision is made. The names of members dissenting shall be recorded.

“b. A protest is a written declaration, supported by reasons, alleging that a decision of a council is or contains an irregularity or a delinquency. Written notice of the protest shall be given at the particular session of the council during which it arose and shall be filed with the clerk before adjournment. If the protest is expressed in decorous and respectful language, it shall be entered in the minutes of the meeting, and may be accompanied by an answer prepared by the council. No further action is required.

“3.0106 Administration of Mission

“Mission determines the forms and structures needed for the church to do its work. Administration is the process by which a council implements its decisions. Administration enables the church to give effective witness in the world to God’s new creation in Jesus Christ and strengthens the church’s witness to the mission of the triune God.

“Councils higher than the session may provide examples of policies and procedures that may be gathered into advisory handbooks. These examples illumine practices required by the Constitution but left to councils for specific implementtation. Such handbooks may also offer information that enhances or secures the ministry of the particular council.

“Each council shall develop a manual of administrative operations that will specify the form and guide the work of mission in that council.

“A council may delegate aspects of its tasks to such entities as it deems appropriate, provided that those entities remain accountable to the council.

“The administration of mission demonstrates the unity and interdependence of the church, in that councils share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers (F-3.0203). Through their members and elected commissioners, lower councils participate in planning and administration of the work of higher councils, and in consultation between bodies concerning mission, budget, staffing and fair employment practices, and matters of equitable compensation.

“The funding of mission similarly demonstrates the unity and interdependence of the church. The failure of any part of the church to participate in the stewardship of the mission of the whole church diminishes that unity and interdependence. All mission funding should enable the church to give effective witness in the world to God’s new creation in Jesus Christ, and should strengthen the church’s witness to the mission of God.

“Each council above the session shall prepare a budget for its operating expenses, including administrative personnel, and may fund it with a per capita apportionment among the particular congregations within its bounds. Presbyteries are responsible for raising their own funds and for raising and timely transmission of [per capita] funds to their respective synods and the General Assembly. Presbyteries may direct per capita apportionments to sessions within their bounds[, but in no case shall the authority of the session to direct its benevolences be compromised].

“3.0107 Records

“Each council shall keep a full and accurate record of its proceedings. Minutes and all other official records of councils are the property in perpetuity of said councils or their legal successors. When a council ceases to exist, its records shall become the property of the next higher council within whose bounds the lower council was prior to its cessation. The clerk of each council shall make recommendation to that body for the permanent safekeeping of the body’s records with the Presbyterian Historical Society or in a temperature and humidity controlled environment of a seminary of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
“3.0108 Administrative Review

“Higher councils shall review the work of lower councils in the following ways:

“a. General Administrative Review

“Each council shall review annually or biennially, based on the body’s meeting frequency, the proceedings and actions of all entities related to the body, all officers able to act on behalf of the body, and lower councils within its jurisdiction. In reviewing the procedures of the lower council, the higher body shall determine whether the proceedings have been correctly recorded, have been in accordance with this Constitution, have been prudent and equitable, and have been faithful to the mission of the whole church. It shall also determine whether lawful injunctions of a higher body have been obeyed.

“b. Special Administrative Review

“If a higher council learns at any time of an alleged irregularity or delinquency of a lower council, it may require the lower body to produce any records and to take appropriate action.

“c. Directed Response

“The higher council may direct the lower council to reconsider and take corrective action if matters are determined to be out of compliance. In addition to administrative review, review and correction may be sought by initiating judicial process as described in the Rules of Discipline.

“3.0109 Committees and Commissions

“Councils may designate by their own rule such committees and commissions as they deem necessary and helpful for the accomplishment of the mission of the church, and may create such structures jointly with other councils, in consultation with the next higher council. In appointing such committees and commissions councils shall be mindful of the principles of unity in diversity consistent with the provisions of this Constitution (F-1.0403, G-3.0103).

“A committee shall study and recommend action or carry out decisions already made by a council. It shall make a full report to the council that created it, and its recommendations shall require action by that body. Committees of councils higher than the session shall consist of both teaching elders and members of congregations, [in approximately equal proportion] [with at least one half being members of the congregation].

“A council may designate two types of commissions:

“a. Judicial Commissions

“Judicial commissions shall consider and decide cases of process for the council according to the Rules of Discipline. Sessions shall perform the function of a judicial commission for the congregation; each council higher than the session shall elect a permanent judicial commission (see D-5.0000).

“b. Administrative Commissions

“Administrative commissions are designated to consider and conclude matters not involving ecclesiastical judicial process, except that in the discharge of their assigned responsibilities they may discover and report to the designating council matters that may require judicial action by the council.

“Functions that may be entrusted to administrative commissions include, but are not limited to:

“(1) (by sessions) ordaining and installing ruling elders and deacons, receiving and dismissing members, and visiting organizations within the congregation to settle differences therein;

“(2) (by presbyteries) ordaining and installing teaching elders;

“(3) (by presbyteries) examining and receiving into membership teaching elders seeking admission to presbytery, including approval of terms of call and commissions for ordination and installation; and receiving candidates under care;

“(5) (by presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly) visiting particular councils, congregations, or agencies over which they have immediate jurisdiction reported to be affected with disorder, and inquiring into and settling the difficulties therein, except that no commission of a presbytery shall be empowered to dissolve a pastoral relationship without the specific authorization by the designating body (G-2.0901);

“(6) (by all councils) making pastoral inquiry into persons accused of sexual abuse of another person (D-10.0401c) when jurisdiction in a judicial proceeding against such persons has ended due to death or renunciation of the accused; such inquiries shall not be understood as judicial proceedings but shall seek to reach a determination of truth related to the accusation and to make appropriate recommendations to the designating council.

“Commissions [A commission of presbytery, synod, or General Assembly shall be composed of ruling elders and teaching elders in numbers as nearly equal as possible and sufficient to accomplish their work. A quorum of any commission shall be established by the designating council but in no case shall be less than a majority of its members (except as limited by D-5.0204).

“Commissions [A commission of a session shall be composed of at least two ruling elders, and a teaching elder in an installed or temporary relationship with the congregation governed by that session or a ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service.

“The commission shall keep a full record of its proceedings and shall submit that record to the council for incorporation into its records. Actions of a commission shall be regarded as actions of the council that created it. A commission may be assigned additional duties as a committee, which duties shall be reported and handled as the report of a committee.

“The decisions of an administrative commission shall be reported to the clerk of the designating council, who shall report it to the council at its next stated meeting. A council may rescind or amend an action of its administrative commission in the same way actions of the council are modified.

“When an administrative commission has been designated to settle differences within a particular organization or council, it shall, before making its decision final, afford to all persons affected by its decision fair notice and an opportunity to be heard on matters at issue.

“3.0110 Administrative Staff

“Councils higher than the session may employ such staff as is required by the mission of the body in accordance with the principles of unity in diversity (F-1.0403). Councils may, in consultation with the next higher council, share staff as required by the mission of the body. A council shall make provision in its manual of administrative operations (G-3.0106) for the process of electing executive staff and the hiring of other staff, the description of the responsibilities of the positions, the method of performance review, and the manner of termination of employment.

“3.0111 Nominating Process

“All councils higher than the session shall have a process for nominating persons to serve in positions requiring election by the council. The process shall ensure that nominations are made by an entity broadly representative of the constituency of the council, and in conformity with the church’s commitment to unity in diversity (F-1.0403).

“3.0112 Insurance

“Each council shall obtain property and liability insurance coverage to protect its facilities, programs, staff, and elected and appointed officers.

“3.0113 Finances

“Each council shall prepare and adopt a budget to support the church’s mission within its area.

“A full financial review of all financial books and records shall be conducted every year by a public accountant or committee of members versed in accounting procedures. Reviewers should not be related to the treasurer(s). Terminology in this section is meant to provide general guidance and is not intended to require or not require specific audit procedures or practices as understood within the professional accounting community.

“G-3.02 THE SESSION

“3.0201 Composition and Responsibilities

titled to vote. The pastor shall be the moderator of the session, and the session shall not meet without the pastor or designated moderator. [If there is no installed pastor, or if the installed pastor is unable to invite another moderator, the presbytery shall make provisions for a moderator.] Presbyteries shall provide by rule for moderators when the session is without a moderator for reasons of vacancy or inconvenience.

“The session shall have responsibility for governing the congregation and guiding its witness to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that the congregation is and becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of the congregation, the session shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed congregations have identified themselves throughout history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

“a. provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard. This responsibility shall include providing a place where the congregation may regularly gather for worship, education, and spiritual nurture; providing for regular preaching of the Word by a teaching elder or other person prepared and approved for the work; planning and leading regular efforts to reach into the community and the world with the message of salvation and the invitation to enter into committed discipleship; planning and leading ministries of social healing and reconciliation in the community in accordance with the prophetic witness of Jesus Christ; and initiating and responding to ecumenical efforts that bear witness to the love and grace of God.

“b. provide that the Sacraments may be rightly administered and received. This responsibility shall include authorizing the celebration of the Lord’s Supper at least quarterly and the administration of Baptism as appropriate, in accordance with the principles of the Directory for Worship; and exercising pastoral care among the congregation; in order that the Sacraments may be received as a means of grace, and the congregation may live in the unity represented in the Sacraments.

“c. nurture the covenant community of disciples of Christ. This responsibility shall include receiving and dismissing members; reviewing the roll of active members at least annually and counseling with those who have neglected the responsibilities of membership; providing programs of nurture, education, and fellowship; training, examining, ordaining, and installing those elected by the congregation as ruling elders and deacons; encouraging the graces of generosity and faithful stewardship of personal and financial resources; managing the physical property of the congregation for the furtherance of its mission; directing the ministry of deacons, trustees, and all organizations of the congregation; employing the administrative staff of the congregation; leading the congregation in participating in the mission of the whole church; warning and bearing witness against error in doctrine and immorality in practice within the congregation and community; and serving in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline.

“3.0202 Relations with Other Councils

“Sessions have a particular responsibility to participate in the life of the whole church through participation in other councils. It is of particular importance that sessions:

“a. elect, as commissioners to presbytery, ruling elders from the congregation, preferably for at least a year, and receive their reports;

“b. nominate to presbytery ruling elders from the congregation who may be considered for election as commissioners to synod and General Assembly, and to serve on committees or commissions of the same, bearing in mind principles of inclusiveness and fair representation in the decision making of the church (F-1.0403);

“c. see that the guidance and communication of presbytery, synod, and General Assembly are considered, and that any binding actions are observed and carried out;

“d. welcome representatives of the presbytery on the occasions of their visits;

“e. propose to the presbytery, or through it to the synod and General Assembly, such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the church; and

“f. send to presbytery and General Assembly requested financial contributions, statistics[,] and other information according to the requirements of those bodies[, as well as voluntary financial contributions].

“3.0203 Meetings

“The session shall hold stated meetings at least quarterly. The moderator shall call a special meeting when he or she deems necessary or when requested in writing by any two members of the session. [The business to be transacted at special meetings shall be limited to items specifically listed in the call for the meeting.] There shall be reasonable notice given of all special meetings. The session shall also meet when directed by presbytery. Sessions shall provide by rule for a quorum for meetings; such quorum shall include the moderator and either a specific number of ruling elders or a specific percentage of those ruling elders in current service on the session.

“3.0204 Minutes and Records

“Minutes of the session shall be subject to the provisions of G-3.0107. They shall contain the minutes of all meetings of the congregation and all joint meetings with deacons and trustees.

“Each session shall maintain the following roll and registers:

“a. Membership Roll

“There shall be rolls of baptized, active, and affiliate members in accordance with G-1.0401, G 1.0402, and G-1.0403. The session may delete names from the roll of the congregation when requested to issue a certificate of transfer of membership to another congregation; when a member requests that his or her membership be terminated; when a member joins another congregation or otherwise renounces the jurisdiction of the session; when a member has moved or otherwise ceased to participate in the ministry of Christ’s Church as defined in G-1.0304 for a period of not less than two years and after efforts on the part of the session to encourage the member to return to meaningful participation have failed, and after provision of written notice; or when a member dies. Upon the member’s death, admission to membership in another congregation or presbytery, or renunciation of jurisdiction. The session may delete names from the roll of the congregation when a member so requests, or has moved or otherwise ceased to participate actively in the work and worship of the congregation for a period of two years. The session shall seek to restore members to active participation and shall provide written notice before deleting names due to member inactivity.

“There shall be registers of baptisms authorized by the session, of ruling elders and deacons, of installed pastors with dates of service, and such other registers as the session may deem necessary.

“3.0205 Finances

“In addition to those responsibilities described in G-3.0113, the session shall prepare and adopt a budget and determine the distribution of the congregation’s benevolences. It shall authorize offerings for Christian purposes and shall account for the proceeds of such offerings and their disbursement. It shall provide full information to the congregation concerning its decisions in such matters.

“The session shall elect a treasurer for such term as the session shall decide and shall supervise his or her work or delegate that supervision to a board of deacons or trustees. Those in charge of various congregational funds shall report at least annually to the session and more often as requested. Sessions may provide by rule for standard financial practices of the congregation, but shall in no case fail to observe the following procedures:

“a. All offerings shall be counted and recorded by at least two duly appointed persons, or by one fidelity bonded person;

“b. Financial books and records adequate to reflect all financial transactions shall be kept and shall be open to inspection by authorized church officers at reasonable times;

“c. Periodic, and in no case less than annual, reports of all financial activities shall be made to the session or entity vested with financial oversight.

“G-3.03 THE PRESBYTERY

“3.0301 Composition and Responsibilities

“The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district. Teaching elders and ruling elders should be present in numbers as equal as possible. The presbytery shall adopt and communicate to the sessions a plan for determining how many ruling elders each session should elect as commissioners to presbytery, with a goal of numerical parity of teaching elders and ruling elders. This plan shall require each session to elect at least one commissioner and shall take into consideration the size of congregations as well as a method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. Ruling elders elected as officers of the presbytery shall be enrolled as members during the period of their service. A presbytery may provide by its own rule for the enrollment of ruling elders serving as moderators of committees or commissions.
“The minimum composition of a presbytery is ten duly constituted sessions and ten teaching elders.

“The presbytery is responsible for the government of the church throughout its district, and for assisting and supporting the witness of congregations to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that all congregations become communities of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of its congregations, the presbytery shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

“a. provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard. This responsibility shall include organizing, receiving, [and merging], dismissing, and dissolving] congregations in consultation with their members; overseeing congregations without pastors; establishing pastoral relationships and dissolving them; guiding the preparation of those preparing to become teaching elders; establishing and maintaining those ecumenical relationships that will enlarge the life and mission of the church in its district; providing encouragement, guidance, and resources to congregations in the areas of mission, prophetic witness, leadership development, worship, evangelism, and responsible administration to the end that the church’s witness to the love and grace of God may be heard in the world.

“b. provide that the Sacraments may be rightly administered and received. This responsibility shall include authorizing the celebration of the Lord’s Supper at its meetings at least annually and for fellowship groups, new church developments, and other non-congregational entities meeting within its bounds; authorizing and training specific ruling elders to administer or preside at the Lord’s Supper when it deems it necessary to meet the needs for the administration of the Sacrament; and exercising pastoral care for the congregations and members of presbytery in order that the Sacraments may be received as a means of grace, and the presbytery may live in the unity represented in the Sacraments.

“c. nurture the covenant community of disciples of Christ. This responsibility shall include ordaining, receiving, dismissing, installing, removing, and disciplining its members who are teaching elders; commissioning ruling elders to limited pastoral service; promoting the peace and harmony of congregations and inquiring into the sources of congregational discord; supporting congregations in developing the graces of generosity, stewardship, and service; assisting congregations in developing mission and participating in the mission of the whole church; taking jurisdiction over the members of dissolved congregations and granting transfers of their membership to other congregations; warning and bearing witness against error in doctrine and immorality in practice within its bounds; and serving in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline.

“3.0302 Relations with Synod and General Assembly

“The presbytery has a responsibility to maintain regular and continuing relationship to synod and General Assembly by:

“b. electing ruling and teaching elders to be readers of standard ordination examinations;

“c. seeing that the guidance and communication of synod and General Assembly are considered and that any binding actions are observed and carried out;

“d. proposing to synod or General Assembly such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the church; and “e. sending annually to synod and General Assembly statistical and other information according to the requirements of those bodies.

“3.0303 Relations with Sessions

“Presbytery, being composed of the teaching elders and commissioners elected by the session of congregations within its district, has a particular responsibility to coordinate, guide, encourage, support, and resource the work of its congregations for the most effective witness to the broader community. In order to accomplish this responsibility, the presbytery has authority to:

“a. develop strategy for the mission of the church in its district;

“b. control the location of new congregations and of congregations desiring to move as well as to divide, dismiss, or dissolve congregations in consultation with their members;
“c. establish minimum compensation standards for pastoral calls and Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators within the presbytery;

d. counsel with a session concerning reported difficulties within a congregation, including:

“(1) advising the session as to appropriate actions to be taken to resolve the reported difficulties,

“(2) offering to help as a mediator, and

“(3) acting to correct the difficulties if requested to do so by the session or if the session is unable or unwilling to do so, following the procedural safeguards of the Rules of Discipline;

e. assume original jurisdiction in any situation in which it determines that a session cannot exercise its authority. After a thorough investigation, and after full opportunity to be heard has been accorded to the session, the presbytery may conclude that the session of a congregation is unable or unwilling to manage wisely its affairs, and may appoint an administrative commission with the full power of session. This commission shall assume original jurisdiction of the existing session, if any, which shall cease to act until such time as the presbytery shall otherwise direct.

f. consider and act upon requests from congregations for permission to take the actions regarding real property as described in G-4.0206.

“3.0304 Meetings and Quorum

“The presbytery shall hold stated meetings at least twice each year, shall meet at the direction of synod, and may call special meetings in accordance with its own rules.

“A presbytery may set its own quorum, but it shall not be fewer than three teaching elders who are members of the presbytery and three ruling elder commissioners from three different congregations.

“3.0305 Minutes and Records

“Minutes and other official records of the presbytery are the property of the presbytery, and are subject to the review specified in G-3.0108. The stated clerk is responsible for the preservation of the presbytery’s minutes and records.

“3.0306 Membership of Presbytery

“Each presbytery determines the teaching elders who are its members and validates the ministries in which they are to be engaged. It shall be guided in this determination by written criteria developed by the presbytery for validating ministries within its bounds (G-2.0503a).

“The presbytery shall examine each teaching elder or candidate who seeks membership in it on his or her Christian faith and views in theology, the Sacraments, and the government of this church.

“The presbytery may designate teaching elders to work as teachers, evangelists, administrators, chaplains, and in other forms of ministry recognized as appropriate by the presbytery. Those so designated may administer the Sacraments at times and places authorized by the presbytery.

“Every teaching elder shall ordinarily be a member of the presbytery where his or her work is situated or of the presbytery where she or he resides.

“A teaching elder who is serving in a church outside the United States may, with the approval of the presbytery, accept membership in that church for the period of such service without affecting his or her membership in a presbytery of this church.

“3.0307 Pastor, Counselor, and Advisor to Teaching Elders and Congregations “Presbyteries shall be open at all times to communication regarding the life and ministry of their congregations.

“Each presbytery shall develop and maintain mechanisms and processes to serve as pastor and counselor to teaching elders, ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service, and certified Christian educators of the presbytery; to facilitate the relations between the presbytery and its congregations, teaching elders, ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service, and certified Christian educators; and to settle difficulties on behalf of the presbytery where possible and expedient.

“Each presbytery shall develop and maintain mechanisms and processes to guide, nurture and oversee the process of preparing to become a teaching elder.
“To facilitate the presbytery’s oversight of inquirers and candidates, reception and oversight of teaching elder members, approval of calls for pastoral services and invitations for temporary pastoral services, oversight of congregations without pastors, dissolution of relationships, dismissal of members, and its close relationship with both member congregations and teaching elders, it may delegate its authority to designated entities within the presbytery. Such entities shall be composed of ruling elders and teaching elders in approximately equal numbers, bearing in mind the principles of unity in diversity in F-1.0403. All actions carried out as a result of delegated authority must be reported to the presbytery at its next regular meeting.

3.0401 Composition and Responsibilities

“The synod is the intermediate council serving as a corporate expression of the church throughout its region. It shall consist of not fewer than three presbyteries within a specific geographic region.

“When a synod meets, it shall be composed of commissioners elected by the presbyteries. Each presbytery shall elect at least one ruling elder and one teaching elder to serve as commissioners to synod. A synod shall determine a plan for the election of commissioners to the synod, as well as the method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103; both plans shall be subject to approval by a majority of the presbyteries in the synod. The commissioners from each presbytery shall be divided equally between ruling elders and teaching elders. Each person elected moderator or other officer shall be enrolled as a member of the synod until a successor is elected and installed.

“Synod is responsible for the life and mission of the church throughout its region and for supporting the ministry and mission of its presbyteries as they seek to support the witness of congregations, to the end that the church throughout its region becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of the church throughout its region, it shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

“a. provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard. This responsibility may include developing, in conjunction with its presbyteries, a broad strategy for the mission of the church within its bounds and in accord with the larger strategy of the General Assembly; assisting its member presbyteries when requested in matters related to the calling, ordaining, and placement of teaching elders; establishing and maintaining, in conjunction with its presbyteries, those ecumenical relationships that will enlarge the life and mission of the church in its region; facilitating joint action in mission with other denominations and agencies in its region; facilitating communication among its presbyteries and between its presbyteries and the General Assembly; providing services for presbyteries within its area that can be performed more effectively from a broad regional base.

“b. provide that the Sacraments may be rightly administered and received. This responsibility may include authorizing the celebration of the Lord’s Supper at its meetings and at other events and gatherings under its jurisdiction; and exercising pastoral care among its presbyteries; in order that the Sacraments may be received as a means of grace, and the synod may live in the unity represented in the Sacraments.

“c. nurture the covenant community of disciples of Christ. This responsibility shall include providing such services of education and nurture as its presbyteries may require; providing encouragement, guidance, and resources to presbyteries in the areas of mission, prophetic witness, leadership development, worship, evangelism, and responsible administration; reviewing the work of its presbyteries; warning or bearing witness against error in doctrine or immorality in practice within its bounds; and serving in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline.

3.0402 Relations with General Assembly

“The synod has responsibility to maintain regular and continuing relationship with the General Assembly by seeing that the guidance and communication of the General Assembly are considered and that any binding actions are observed and carried out, and by proposing to the General Assembly such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the whole church.

3.0403 Relations with Presbyteries

“Each presbytery shall participate in the synod’s responsibility and service through its elected commissioners to the synod. The synod has responsibility for supporting the work of the presbyteries within its bounds and as such is charged with:

“a. developing, in conjunction with its presbyteries, joint plans and objectives for the fulfillment of mission, providing encouragement and guidance to its presbyteries and overseeing their work;
“b. developing and providing, when requested, resources as needed to facilitate the mission of its presbyteries;

c. organizing new presbyteries, dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining presbyteries or portions of presbytery previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, creating non-geographic presbyteries, subject to the approval of the General Assembly, or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-3.0301 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created.

“3.0404 Reduced Function

“A synod may decide, with the approval of a two-thirds majority of its presbyteries, to reduce its function. In no case shall synod function be less than the provision of judicial process and administrative review of the work of the presbytery (G-3.0401c). Such a synod shall meet at least every two years for the purposes of setting budget, electing members to its permanent judicial commission, and admitting to record the actions of its permanent judicial and administrative commis sions. Presbyteries of such a synod shall assume for themselves, by mutual agreement, such other synod functions as may be deemed necessary by the synod.

“3.0405 Meetings and Quorum

“The synod shall hold stated meetings at least biennially, shall meet at the direction of the General Assembly, and may call special meetings in accordance with its own rules.

“A synod may set its own quorum, but it shall include an equal number of ruling elders and teaching elders representing at least three presbyteries or one-third of its presbyteries, whichever is larger.

“3.0406 Minutes and Records

“The synod shall keep a full and accurate record of its proceedings that shall be submitted to the next succeeding meeting of the General Assembly for its general review and control. It shall report to the General Assembly the number of its presbyteries and, in general, all important changes that have occurred within its bounds.

“G-3.05 The General Assembly

“3.0501 Composition and Responsibilities

“The General Assembly is the council of the whole church and it is representative of the unity of the synods, presbytery ries, sessions, and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It shall consist of equal numbers of ruling elders and teaching elders elected by the presbyteries and reflective of the diversity within their bounds (F-1.0403 and G-3.0103), to serve as commissioners according to the following proportions:

“8,000 members or less: 1 ruling elder and 1 teaching elder

“8,001–16,000: 2 ruling elders and 2 teaching elders

“16,001–24,000: 3 ruling elders and 3 teaching elders

“24,001–32,000: 4 ruling elders and 4 teaching elders

“32,001–40,000: 5 ruling elders and 5 teaching elders

“40,001–48,000: 6 ruling elders and 6 teaching elders

“48,001 or more: 7 ruling elders and 7 teaching elders

“Each person elected Moderator shall be enrolled as a member of the General Assembly until a successor is elected and installed.

“The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of the whole church, it shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

“In light of this charge, the General Assembly has responsibility and power to:
“a. provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard. This responsibility shall include establishing a comprehensive mission strategy and priorities for the church; establishing and maintaining ecumenical relationships and correspondence with other ecclesiastical bodies; uniting with or receiving under its jurisdiction other ecclesiastical bodies consistent with the faith and order of this church, subject to the provisions of G-5.02 and G-5.03; and commissioning, sending, and support of such mission personnel as will spread the good news of the grace of Jesus Christ to the world and foster the growth and development of God’s people.

“b. provide that the Sacraments may be rightly administered and received. This responsibility shall include authorizing the celebration of the Lord’s Supper at meetings of the General Assembly and other events and gatherings under its jurisdiction; authorizing the participation in the celebration of the Lord’s Supper in ecumenical gatherings attended by authorized representatives of the General Assembly; and exercising pastoral care throughout the whole church in order that the Sacraments may be received as a means of grace, and the church may live in the unity represented in the Sacraments.

“c. nurture the covenant community of disciples. This responsibility shall include providing those services, resources, and programs performed most effectively at a national level; communicating with the whole church on matters of common concern; warning and bearing witness against errors in doctrine or immorality in the church and in the world; providing such services of education and nurture as its presbyteries may require; providing encouragement, guidance, and resources to presbyteries in the areas of mission, prophetic witness, leadership development, worship, evangelism, and responsible administration; discerning and presenting with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, matters of truth and vision that may inspire, challenge, and educate both church and world; serving in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline; deciding controversies brought before it and advising and instructing in cases submitted to it, in conformity with this Constitution; authoritatively interpreting the most recent edition of the Book of Order in a manner binding on the whole church, in accordance with the provisions of G-6.02 or through a decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case, with the most recent interpretation of the Book of Order being binding; and establishing and maintaining an office of the Stated Clerk.

“3.0502 Relations with Other Councils

“The General Assembly has responsibility to maintain relationships with presbyteries and synods by:

“a. consulting with and providing resources for presbyteries and synods as they execute their constitutional responsibilities;

“b. overseeing the work of synods;

“c. reviewing the records of synods, taking care to ensure that they conform to this Constitution;

“d. organizing new synods, or dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining previously existing synods or portions of synods; and “e. approving the acts of synods to organize, divide, unite, or combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries.

“3.0503 Meetings and Quorum

“The General Assembly shall hold a stated meeting at least biennially. The Moderator, or in the event of the incapacity of the Moderator, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, shall call a special meeting at the request or with the concurrence of at least one fourth of the ruling elder commissioners and one fourth of the teaching elder commissioners to the last preceding stated meeting of the General Assembly representing at least fifteen presbyteries, under the jurisdiction of at least five synods. Commissioners to the special meeting shall be the commissioners elected to the last preceding stated meeting of the General Assembly or their alternates. Notice of special meetings shall be sent no fewer than sixty days prior to convening and shall set out the purpose of the meeting. No other business than that listed in the notice shall be transacted.

“A quorum of the General Assembly shall be one hundred commissioners, fifty of whom shall be ruling elders and fifty teaching elders, representing presbyteries of at least one fourth of its synods.

“THE CHURCH AND CIVIL AUTHORITY

“G-4.01 INCORPORATION AND TRUSTEES

“4.0101 Incorporation and Power

“Where permitted by civil law, each congregation shall cause a corporation to be formed and maintained. If incorporation is not permitted, individual trustees shall be elected by the congregation. Any such individual trustees shall be elected from the congregation’s members in the same manner as those elected to the ordered ministries of deacon and ruling elder. Terms of service shall be governed by the provisions of G-2.0404.

“The corporation so formed, or the individual trustees, shall have the following powers: to receive, hold, encumber, manage, and transfer property, real or personal, for the congregation, provided that in buying, selling, and mortgaging real property, the trustees shall act only after the approval of the congregation, granted in a duly constituted meeting; to accept and execute deeds of title to such property; to hold and defend title to such property; to manage any permanent special funds for the furtherance of the purposes of the congregation, all subject to the authority of the session and under the provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The powers and duties of the trustees shall not infringe upon the powers and duties of the session or the board of deacons.

Where permitted by civil law, each presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly shall cause a corporation to be formed and maintained and shall determine a method to constitute the board of trustees by its own rule. The corporation so formed, or individual trustees, shall have the following powers: to receive, hold, encumber, manage, and transfer property, real or personal, for and at the direction of the council.

4.0102 Members of the Corporation

“Only persons eligible for membership in the congregation or council shall be eligible to be members of the corporation and to be elected as trustees. The ruling elders on the session of a congregation, who are eligible under the civil law, shall be the trustees of the corporation, unless the corporation shall determine another method for electing its trustees. Presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly shall provide by rule for the election of trustees from among persons eligible for membership in the council.

“G-4.02 CHURCH PROPERTY

4.0201 Property as a Tool for Mission

“The property of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), of its councils and entities, and of its congregations, is a tool for the accomplishment of the mission of Jesus Christ in the world.

4.0202 Decisions Concerning Property

“The provisions of this Constitution prescribing the manner in which decisions are made, reviewed, and corrected within this church are applicable to all matters pertaining to property.

4.0203 Church Property Held in Trust

“All property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), whether legal title is lodged in a corporation, a trustee or trustees, or an unincorporated association, and whether the property is used in programs of a congregation or of a higher council or retained for the production of income, is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

4.0204 Property Used Contrary to the Constitution

“Whenever property of, or held for, a congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ceases to be used by that congregation as a congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in accordance with this Constitution, such property shall be held, used, applied, transferred, or sold as provided by the presbytery.

4.0205 Property of a Dissolved or Extinct Congregation

“Whenever a congregation is formally dissolved by the presbytery, or has become extinct by reason of the dispersal of its members, the abandonment of its work, or other cause, such property as it may have shall be held, used, and applied for such uses, purposes, and trusts as the presbytery may direct, limit, and appoint, or such property may be sold or disposed of as the presbytery may direct, in conformity with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

4.0206 Selling, Encumbering, or Leasing Church Property

“a. Selling or Encumbering Congregational Property

“A congregation shall not sell, mortgage, or otherwise encumber any of its real property and it shall not acquire real property subject to an encumbrance or condition without the written permission of the presbytery transmitted through the session of the congregation.
“b. Leasing Congregational Property

“A congregation shall not lease its real property used for purposes of worship, or lease for more than five years any of its other real property, without the written permission of the presbytery transmitted through the session of the congregation.

“4.0207 Property of Congregation in Schism

“The relationship to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of a congregation can be severed only by constitutional action on the part of the presbytery (G-3.0303b). If there is a schism within the membership of a congregation and the presbytery is unable to effect a reconciliation or a division into separate congregations within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the presbytery shall determine if one of the factions is entitled to the property because it is identified by the presbytery as the true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This determination does not depend upon which faction received the majority vote within the congregation at the time of the schism.

“The provisions of this chapter shall apply to all congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) except that any congregation which was not subject to a similar provision of the constitution of the church of which it was a part, prior to the reunion of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America to form the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), has been excused from that provision of this chapter if the congregation, within a period of eight years following the establishment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), voted to be exempt from such provision in a regularly called meeting and thereafter notified the presbytery of which it was a constituent congregation of such vote. The congregation voting to be so exempt shall hold title to its property and exercise its privileges of incorporation and property ownership under the provisions of the Constitution to which it was subject immediately prior to the establishment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This paragraph may not be amended (G-6.05).

“G.4.03 CONFIDENCE AND PRIVILEGE

“4.0301 Trust and Confidentiality

“In the exercise of pastoral care, teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament) and ruling elders who have been commissioned by a presbytery to limited pastoral service (G-2.10), shall maintain a relationship of trust and confidentiality, and shall hold in confidence all information revealed to them in the course of providing care and all information relating to the exercise of such care.

“When the person whose confidences are at issue gives express consent to reveal confidential information, then a teaching elder or a ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service may, but cannot be compelled to, reveal confidential information.

“A teaching elder or a ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service may reveal confidential information when she or he reasonably believes that there is risk of imminent bodily harm to any person.

“4.0302 Mandatory Reporting

“Any member of this church engaged in ordered ministry and any certified Christian educator employed by this church or its congregations, shall report to ecclesiastical and civil legal authorities knowledge of harm, or the risk of harm, related to the physical abuse, neglect, and/or sexual molestation or abuse of a minor or an adult who lacks mental capacity when (1) such information is gained outside of a confidential communication as defined in G-4.0301, (2) she or he is not bound by an obligation of privileged communication under law, or (3) she or he reasonably believes that there is risk of future physical harm or abuse.

“CHAPTER FIVE

“ECUMENICITY AND UNION

“G.5.01 ECUMENICAL COMMITMENT

“5.0101 Ecumenicity

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels seeks to manifest more visibly the unity of the body of Christ and will be open to opportunities for conversation, cooperation, and action with other ecclesiastical groups. It will seek to initiate, maintain, and strengthen relations with other Reformed and Christian entities.
5.0102 Interfaith Relations

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels seeks new opportunities for conversation and understanding with non-Christian religious entities.

5.0103 Secular Organizations

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels seeks to initiate and respond to approaches for conversation and common action with secular organizations and agencies where such approaches show promise of serving the mission of the Church in the world.

G-5.02 Relations with Other Denominations

5.0201 Correspondence

“In seeking the unity of the Church of Jesus Christ (G-5.0101), the General Assembly may authorize and direct that covenants, agreements, and statements of purpose and intent be developed with other Christian bodies. Such actions, when authorized and approved by the General Assembly, may address, but are not limited to, the mutual recognition of baptism and the orderly exchange of ministers. All councils of this church are encouraged to engage in opportunities to minister together in mutual affirmation and admonition with other Christian bodies.

“The General Assembly, through the Office of the General Assembly, shall maintain a relationship of correspondence with the highest council or governing body:

“a. of those churches with which it has had historical relations outside the United States, as recognized by the General Assembly;

“b. of those churches that are members of the ecumenical bodies in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds membership;

“c. of those churches with which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has formal ecumenical dialogue approved by the General Assembly.

5.0202 Full Communion

“The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in full communion with those churches so recognized by the General Assembly. Full communion shall include the mutual recognition of baptism and the orderly exchange of ministers, as defined by ecumenical agreement. Councils of this church are encouraged to engage in opportunities to minister together in mutual affirmation and admonition with churches with which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in full communion.

5.0203 Ecumenical Statements

“In seeking the unity of the Church in Jesus Christ (F-1.0302a and G-5.0101), and in addition to the above relations, the Office of the General Assembly shall develop formal agreements and ecumenical statements of understanding with other Christian bodies. Such statements and agreements shall be approved by the General Assembly as guides for shared action, and shall be submitted to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes.

G-5.03 Full Organic Union

“Full organic union of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with any other ecclesiastical body shall be effected subject to the following approvals:

“a. the approval of the proposed plan of union by the General Assembly and its recommendation to the presbyteries;

“b. the approval in writing of two-thirds of the presbyteries; and

“c. the approval and consummation by the next General Assembly, or other General Assembly specified in the proposed plan of union.

G-5.04 Union Presbyteries

“A presbytery of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may unite to form a union presbytery with one or more comparable councils or governing bodies, each of which is a member of another Reformed body, with the approval of the synod or comparable council or governing body of which each is a part.
5.0401 Constitutional Authority

“The union presbytery shall be subject to the constitution of each denomination represented in the union. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations differ, any mandatory provisions of one shall apply in all cases where the others are permissive. Wherever there are conflicting mandatory provisions, the union presbytery shall overture the highest council or governing body of the denominations involved to resolve the conflict either by authoritative interpretation or by constitutional amendment.

5.0402 Plan of Union

“A union presbytery shall be created by the adoption of a plan of union by two-thirds vote of each presbytery or governing body that is party to the union. The synod and/or governing body having jurisdiction over each of the uniting bodies shall approve the plan of union.

5.05 Joint Congregational Witness

When its strategy for mission requires it, a presbytery may approve the creation of a joint witness between congregations of this denomination and congregations of other Christian churches that recognize Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, accept the authority of Scripture, and observe the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper.

“a. Such joint witnesses shall be subject to the constitution of each denomination involved. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations differ, the mandatory provisions of one shall apply in all cases when the others are permissive. Wherever there are conflicting mandatory provisions, the congregational council shall petition the next higher councils or governing bodies to resolve the conflict.

“b. Such joint witnesses shall be formed according to a plan approved by a two-thirds majority of the members of each of the congregations at duly called meetings of the congregation, and by the presbytery or comparable council or governing body of each church. No provision of a plan for joint witness shall be construed as modifying or amending the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A).

“c. After consultation with the congregation involved in joint witness and the next higher council or governing body of the other denomination involved, a presbytery may receive a congregation from or transfer a congregation to a denomination with which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in full communion or correspondence when it determines that the strategy for mission of that congregation is better served by such a transfer (G-3.0303b).

Chapter Six

Interpreting and Amending the Constitution

G-6.01 Reform

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to be ‘the church reformed, always to be reformed, according to the Word of God’ in the power of the Spirit (F-2.02.) In light of this commitment, the following interpretation and amendment procedures are understood as a means to faithfulness.

G-6.02 Interpreting the Constitution

The General Assembly may provide authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order, which shall be binding on the councils of the church when rendered in the manner described in this section or through a decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case.

The General Assembly shall elect an Advisory Committee on the Constitution composed of nine persons, teaching elders and ruling elders in numbers as nearly equal as possible. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be a member ex officio without vote. No person who has served on the Advisory Committee on the Constitution for a full term of six years shall be eligible for reelection until four years have elapsed after the expired six-year term. The General Assembly shall provide by its own rule for the qualifications of members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order arising from councils of the church shall be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such questions of interpretation to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, except those pertaining to matters pending before a judicial commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall communicate its report and recommendations to the next session of the General Assembly, no less than sixty days prior to the General Assembly.
G-6.03 AMENDING THE BOOK OF CONFESSIONS

“Amendments to the confessional documents of this church may be made only if all the following steps are completed:

“a. The proposal to amend The Book of Confessions is approved by the General Assembly for study in the church.

“b. The General Assembly appoints a committee of ruling elders and teaching elders, numbering not fewer than fifteen, of whom not more than two shall be from any one synod, to consider the proposal. This committee shall consult with the committee or council from which the proposal originated. It shall report its findings to the next General Assembly.

“c. The next ensuing General Assembly considers the report of the study committee and approves the proposed amendment and recommends it to the presbyteries for vote.

“d. The proposed amendment receives the approval in writing of two thirds of the presbyteries.

“e. The proposed amendment is approved and enacted by the next ensuing General Assembly following the amendment’s receipt of the necessary two-thirds approval of the presbyteries.

G-6.04 AMENDING THE BOOK OF ORDER

“Amendments to the Book of Order shall be made only if all the following steps are completed:

“a. All proposals requesting amendment of the Book of Order are communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly.

“b. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such proposals to amend the Book of Order to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (G-6.02), which shall examine the proposed amendment for clarity and consistency of language and for compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). [At least sixty days prior to the meeting of the General Assembly, the advisory committee shall report its findings to the General Assembly along with its recommendations, which may include an amended version of any proposed constitutional changes as well as advice to accept or decline the proposals referred to the committee. The General Assembly shall not consider any amendment until it has considered the report and any recommendations from the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

“c. The same General Assembly approves the proposal to amend and transmits the proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their vote.

“d. Presbyteries shall transmit their votes to the Stated Clerk no later than one year following the adjournment of the assembly transmitting the proposed amendments.

“e. The Stated Clerk receives written advice that a proposed amendment to the Book of Order has received the affirmative votes of a majority of all the presbyteries. The proposed amendment so approved shall become effective one year following the adjournment of the assembly transmitting the proposed amendment.

G-6.05 EXCEPTIONS

“The provisions of G-4.0208 of this Constitution shall not be amended.

G-6.06 AMENDMENTS TO SPECIAL PROVISIONS

“The processes for amending the confessional documents and for effecting full organic union (G-5.03) can be amended only by the same method that they prescribe.”
General Introduction

The Form of Government Task Force was created by action of the 217th General Assembly (2006) and charged to draft a Revised Form of Government.12 This charge was the next step in a process of examination and revision to the Form of Government that began in the early 1990s.13

The task force presented its report to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The report included:

- Foundations of Presbyterian Polity, designed to replace G-1.0000–G-4.0403 in the current Form of Government;
- Revised Form of Government, designed to replace G-5.0000–G-18.0401 in the current Form of Government;
- Advisory Handbook for Councils, designed to assist in the development of policies and procedures for items moved from the Form of Government to the manual of operations of a council.

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved the recommendation to refer the new Form of Government proposal to the Office of the General Assembly for a period of churchwide study and response overseen by the task force, and to expand the task force to include members from the assembly committee to which the report was assigned. Taking into account the response gathered, the expanded task force was directed to produce a new draft of the documents for consideration by the 219th General Assembly (2010).14

With one exception, all of the members of the original task force chose to remain part of the new task force. Carol Hunley, Grace Bowen, and Daniel S. Williams were added to the task force from the Assembly Committee on Form of Government Revision.

The task force met in August 2008, under the leadership of the Moderator of the 218th General Assembly, the Reverend Bruce Reyes-Chow, to reorganize and begin its work. Cynthia Bolbach and Daniel S. Williams were elected co-moderators of the task force. The task force divided itself into three work teams:

14 Minutes, 218th General Assembly (2008), Part I, pp. 21, 391–450. (Link is to PC-Biz report). The referral was:

That the recommendation be referred to the Office of the General Assembly with comment:

The referral to the Office of the General Assembly is for a period of consultation and study with churches and presbyteries through a system or systems designed and implemented by the Form of Government Task Force and members of the 218th General Assembly Committee on Form of Government Revisions. The participation of every presbytery in the period of consultation and study will be strongly urged. New members of this expanded task force are to be chosen from the 218th General Assembly (2008) Assembly Committee on Form of Government Revisions by the Moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008), in consultation with the moderator and vice moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008) Assembly Committee on Form of Government Revisions.

The new task force will revise the Form of Government Task Force Report, taking into account the concerns and suggestions gleaned from the consultation and study process. The guidance of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, the overtures, and the testimony received by the 218th General Assembly (2008) Assembly Committee on Form of Government Revisions and the committee’s comments are referred to the task force for serious and studied consideration.

The revised report of the Form of Government task force is to be submitted to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than October 15, 2009, for distribution to the church at large no later than January 15, 2010, for consideration by the 219th General Assembly (2010). [Note: The referral also appended a list of recommendations from the assembly committee to be considered in the revision of the Form of Government documents.]
Rationale

The task force produced an interim version of the proposed Foundations of Presbyterian Polity and Form of Government documents, based on the feedback received through the 218th General Assembly (2008)—all of the overtures, advice and counsel memoranda, and comments from the assembly committee. These documents were made available online in mid-October 2008, for a period of study and response across the church until June 30, 2009. The task force also developed three papers to guide the study process: an overall description of the objectives of the study process, a guide to assist individuals in studying the documents in preparation for participation in a group response, and a guide for groups to use in discussing and responding to the documents. In addition, the paper “What Is Missional Ecclesiology?” (written by task force member Paul Hooker) was made available to stimulate discussion of missional polity.

Throughout its work, the task force reduced its number of face-to-face meetings by using conference calls, Go-to-Meetings online, Project Path (a Web-based editing tool), and email. Individuals and groups across the church submitted responses to the proposed documents, which were collected by Research Services and forwarded regularly to the task force. Task force members also made themselves available to governing bodies and other groups to interpret their work and gather additional input.

At the conclusion of the study period, the task force produced its final version of the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity and the proposed Form of Government. The group met in August 2009 to finalize and approve its recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Task force members will make themselves available to interpret their work to governing bodies and other groups between the submission of this report and the 219th General Assembly (2010). A face-to-face meeting is planned for April 2010 to make final preparations for the assembly.

God calls the church to be in mission in God’s world. In Christ, the church participates in God’s mission for the transformation of creation and humanity by proclaiming to all people the good news of God’s love, offering to all people the grace of God at font and table, and calling all people to discipleship in Christ.

The recommended revisions to the Book of Order do not change the constitutional standards of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Rather, these revisions return the Form of Government to its original intent—a constitution rather than a manual of operations. By so doing, it establishes a polity that empowers the church to engage effectively in the mission of God in the 21st century. This revised polity lifts up and enhances the core values that shape and govern the whole church. This polity enables the councils of the church to establish the processes through which they can effectively serve God’s mission in their own contexts. As we the church know, affirm, and live out these overarching standards that shape our life together, the work we do will be clearer, more easily understood, and more united in serving our Lord in mission.

The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity lays out the principles that are basic—or foundational—to government, worship, and discipline for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Preserving the vast majority of the material in the first four chapters of the current Form of Government, this section organizes the material into three chapters:

- The first focuses on the activity of God in the world in which the church participates. It describes what the church is called to be and do in terms of the Nicene Creed and the Reformation notes from the Scots Confession and the six great ends of the church. It concludes with a section on the church’s openness to the guidance of the Holy Spirit, which calls the church to reform, to ecumenicity, to unity in its diversity, and to openness to God’s mission in the world.

- The second describes how the Confessions function in the life of the church.

- The third outlines the historic principles of church order and government.

The proposed Form of Government spells out the constitutional framework for government of this denomination as it seeks to respond to God’s call to life in mission.
• Chapter I defines the structure of the congregation and the call to membership in a congregation.

• Chapter II details the orders of ministry (formerly called ‘offices’ of deacon, elder, and minister of the Word and Sacrament) and lifts up our distinctive commitment to parity between ruling elders and teaching elders in the church’s work of government and mission.

• Chapter III reclaims the ancient name of ‘councils’ for those bodies in the church that order its life through deliberation and decisions. This chapter emphasizes the requirement for diversity at every council more inclusive than the session. It describes the work of councils using the marks of the true church: proclamation of the Word, administration of the Sacraments, and right ministration of discipline.

• Chapter IV provides for those places where the government of the church engages with civil government.

• Chapter V describes the church’s involvement in church union and ecumenicity.

Chapter VI provides for interpretation and amendment of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Policies and Procedures Guide for the Work of the Session

The congregation is the church engaged in the mission of God in its particular context. Through the congregation God’s people carry out the ministries of proclamation, sharing the Sacraments, and living in covenant life with God and each other. In the life of the congregation, individual believers are equipped for the ministry of witness to the love and grace of God in and for the world. The congregation reaches out to people, communities, and the world to share the good news of Jesus Christ, to gather for worship, to offer care and nurture to God’s children, to speak for social justice and righteousness, to bear witness to the truth and to the reign of God that is coming into the world. (G-1.0101)

The session is the council for the congregation and has responsibility for governing the congregation and guiding its witness to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that the congregation is and becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of the congregation, the session is charged to keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed congregations have identified themselves throughout history (F-1.0303), and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304). (G-3.0201)

Councils within our denomination are mutually interconnected. Each council has an expansive range of unique responsibilities; however, the life and ministry of each council is subject to review by the next higher council (G-3.0108). In this review, certain constitutional requirements must be addressed. What follows is a listing of those areas in which a presbytery is required to or justified in reviewing the work of the session of a congregation. The purpose of this review is for mutual awareness of and encouragement in mission. The value of review is in shared knowledge rather than meticulous compliance.

The proposed Form of Government requires that “each council shall develop a manual of administrative operations that will specify the form and guide the work of mission in that council.” (G-3.0106) The following list does not intend to be exhaustive of all actions that might now be included in a session’s Manual of Administrative Operations. It does seek to identify those instances in the proposed Form of Government where specific policies or rules are required. In every case, a session should ask whether any existing policies of the session meet the expectations of a particular provision.

Policies and Procedures Guide for the Work of the Presbytery

The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district. The presbytery is responsible for the government of the church throughout its district, and for assisting and supporting the witness of congregations to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that all congregations become communities of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of its congregations, the presbytery shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304), (G-3.0301)

Policies and Procedures Guide for the Work of the Synod

The synod is the intermediate council responsible for the life and mission of the church throughout its region and for supporting the ministry and mission of its constituent presbyteries as they seek to support the witness of congregations, to the end that the church throughout its region becomes a community of faith, hope, love and witness (G-3.0401). As it meets, it is composed of commissioners elected by its constituent presbyteries. As it leads and guides the witness of the church throughout its region, the synod is charged to keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

Councils within our denomination are mutually interconnected. Each council has an expansive range of unique responsibilities; however, the life and ministry of each council is subject to review by the next higher council (G-3.0108). The purpose of this review is for mutual awareness of and encouragement in mission. The value of review is in shared knowledge rather than meticulous compliance.

The proposed Form of Government requires that “each council shall develop a manual of administrative operations that will specify the form and guide the work of mission in that body” (G-3.0106). The following list does not intend to be exhaustive of all actions that might now be included in a synod’s manual of administrative operations. It does seek to identify those instances in the proposed Form of Government where specific policies or rules are required. In every case, the synod should ask whether any existing policies of the synod meet the expectations of a particular provision.

Policies and Procedures Guide for the Work of the General Assembly

The General Assembly is the council of the whole church and is representative of the unity of the synods, presbyteries, sessions, and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-01

Advice on Item 07-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The task force’s proposal regarding Foundations and the Form of Government represents a significant shift in the way the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would relate to its Constitution in at least two ways.
First, the task force’s proposal envisions a polity that is more missional in nature. The Church exists to bear witness to and to participate in God’s work in the world. That mission takes place in particular contexts and in the life of congregations. The focus of the polity contained in the proposal is on supporting the work of the congregation. As understood in this polity, the work of the church at all levels is organized around the classical Reformed marks of the Church: that the Word of God is proclaimed, the sacraments are rightly administered, and the covenant community is nurtured through ecclesiastical discipline.

Second, the task force’s proposal regarding Foundations and the Form of Government offers a document that is less regulatory in nature than the existing Form of Government. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution has often noted a tendency on the part of the church to use its constitution as if it were a manual of operations, adding through the process of amendment a large number of administrative and procedural details. The proposed Form of Government eliminates many of the passages that define in detail the procedures of governing bodies. A positive aspect of this change may be the freedom offered to governing bodies to establish policies and procedures for their work that best suit the needs of their particular contexts. A negative aspect may be that many Presbyterians may be puzzled or troubled by the silence in the Constitution concerning issues addressed in the Form of Government now in effect.

If the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is ready to make this paradigm shift, the proposed Foundations and Revised Form of Government are coherent from a constitutional perspective to function as a replacement for the existing Form of Government. The advisory committee has, however, noted particular issues that should be resolved before the proposal is sent to the presbyteries for action. These are itemized in Sections VI. and VII. below.

I. The Historic Context of the Work of the Form of Government Task Force

Efforts to revise the Form of Government have been before General Assemblies for at least fifteen years. Throughout that time, the consistent theme has been the impetus to restore a sense of “constitutionality” to the language of the Form of Government. Proposals for revision have sought, by various means, to maintain clarity about national standards while reducing the amount of process-oriented material that might be handled in different ways by different parts of the church.

The Special Committee on the Nature of the Church and the Practice of Governance reported to the 205th General Assembly (1993). It suggested that the content of the Form of Government could be divided into standards and functions that should remain uniform across the church, and practices and processes about which there might reasonably be a greater degree of freedom and diversity. The assembly referred the matter of a systematic review of the Form of Government to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommended to the 208th General Assembly (1996) that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution be charged with creating a Form of Government divided into three components: (1) foundational principles, (2) binding policies, and (3) advisory practices, and that the new draft be presented to the 213th General Assembly (2001). In addition, the 209th General Assembly (1997) referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution an overture from the Presbytery of West Virginia to create a Form of Government

- that is true to the historic principles of polity in the PC(USA);
- that will serve as a constitutional reference, “encouraging creativity with broad strokes of wisdom”; and
- that will “empower governing bodies … and celebrate the diversity of the church” (Minutes, 1997, Part I, p. 710)

In its progress report to the 212th General Assembly (2000), the Advisory Committee on the Constitution offered drafts of Chapters X and XI of the Form of Government that divided the contents into foundational, policy, and practice categories. It also suggested that a draft of the entire Form of Government, reduced to include only foundational principles, be circulated among the church for study and comment. The assembly chose to refer the report back to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution for further refinement and report to the next assembly.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution report to the 212th General Assembly (2000) included a draft revision of Chapter XIV that reduced its contents to broadly stated principles and standards, while removing much of the process oriented material to advisory handbooks. The assembly approved the document for study and comment.
The 213th General Assembly (2001) sent to presbyteries a proposal to revise the contents of Chapter XIV along the lines of the 2000 Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommendation. While the amendment was defeated in presbyteries (29-141-2), there was the sense that the problems were not so much with the overall concept as with particular aspects of the proposal. The following year, the 214th General Assembly (2002) asked the Office of the General Assembly to propose a systematic revision of the Form of Government along the lines of the proposed revisions to Chapter XIV, and to report its work to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

The Office of the General Assembly requested and received permission to conduct an extensive series of consultations with various constituencies in the church regarding both the theory and style of revision of the Form of Government deemed most desirable.

The Office of the General Assembly reported its work to the 217th General Assembly (2006) in two parts:

1. A revision of Chapter XIV, similar in content and approach to the revision proposed in 2001, but with several options for dealing with potentially controversial aspects of change. The amendment was approved and is now Chapter XIV of the Book of Order.

2. The creation of a Form of Government Task Force, to be charged with revising the entire Form of Government to create a document that preserves the foundational elements of Presbyterian polity, provides leadership and support for congregations as missional units, and maintains the presbytery as the central governmental unit of the church. The task force was required to release the proposed Form of Government including advisory handbooks by September 1, 2007.

The Form of Government Task Force completed work on its initial draft in September and shared the document broadly within the church. Following a period of comment and critique, the task force submitted its final report to the Stated Clerk’s office in December, in anticipation of presentation to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The report recommended:

1. The replacement of current Chapters I–IV with a new document, “The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity,” intended to become the first of four sections of the Book of Order.

2. The replacement of current Chapters V–XVIII with proposed Chapters 1–6.

3. That the assembly send to presbyteries additional proposals for amending potentially controversial aspects of the proposed Form of Government, creating options for the church in such areas as permitting associate pastors and interim pastors to succeed to the position of pastor, requiring the inclusion of proclamation of the Word and administration of the sacraments in all validated ministries, and creating committees on diversity at the levels of presbytery, synod, and General Assembly.

The 218th General Assembly (2008) referred the recommendations of the task force to the Office of the General Assembly with comment. Augmented with new members appointed by the Moderator of the General Assembly, the task force produced an interim version of the Foundations and Form of Government that it circulated to the church in October 2008, and solicited and received extensive comment from across the church.

Following the period of comment and critique, the task force submitted its final report to the Stated Clerk’s office in August 2009. The report recommends:

2. The commendation to the councils of the church of the “Advisory Handbook for Councils for the Development of Policies and Procedures Required by the Form of Government.”

One of the most significant elements of the task force’s proposal is the creation of a new section to the Book of Order, titled “Foundations of Presbyterian Polity.” Consisting largely of material drawn from Chapters I–IV of the current Form of Government, this is a separate document that would precede the Form of Government, Directory for Worship, and Rules of Discipline as a fourth section of the Book of Order. The creation of a new section of the Book of Order requires consideration of both its contents and how they relate to the other parts of the Book of Order.

A. Contents of the Foundations

The Foundations document consists of three chapters. The first is titled “The Mission of the Church” and sets forth an understanding of how the church participates in the mission of God in the world. This chapter contains the greatest amount of new material, principally in sections discussing “The Mission of God” (F-1.01), “The Marks of the Church” (F-1.0302), and “The Notes of the Reformed Church” (F-1.0303). Section F-1.0403 is drawn from the language of our current G-4.0403, and carries our current commitments to unity and diversity forward into the Foundations.

The second chapter, “The Church and Its Confessions,” replicates Chapter II of the current Form of Government with only minor changes. The third chapter, “Principles of Order and Government,” include the Historic Principles of Church Order (F-3.01, retained in their original phrasing), Principles of Presbyterian Government (which are a restatement of the Historic Principles of Church Government in the present G-1.0400), a statement on the interpretation and force of the material in the Foundations, and definitions of The Book of Confessions and the Book of Order.

B. How the Foundations Relate to Other Sections of the Book of Order

Thematic relationships: A statement of “foundations” suggests material that is fundamental to understanding that which follows. The organizing theme of “the mission of the Church” recasts familiar material in the Foundations in a new light. The new material in the Foundations takes historic descriptions of the Church’s calling and interprets them as descriptions of the Church’s faithful participation in the mission of God.

Similarly, the Foundations set the tone for the new Form of Government that follows it. Likewise, the Form of Government expands the understanding of how the church’s internal structures and order facilitates the church’s calling as set forth in the Foundations. The Directory of Worship and the Rules of Discipline have not been similarly revised, and it is more difficult to see how the Foundations relate thematically to them.

Constitutional relationships: Section F-3.03 (“Foundational Statements”) puts forth the constitutional relationship between the Foundations and other parts of the Book of Order. It declares,

The statements contained in this section, “The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity,” describe the ecclesiological and historical commitments on which the polity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) rests. Provisions of any part of this Constitution are to be interpreted in light of the whole Constitution. No provision of the Book of Order can of itself invalidate any other. Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions.”

C. Comments

By creating the Foundations section, the task force has given special attention to its charge to preserve the foundational principles of our polity found in Chapters I–IV of the Book of Order. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes that the material in section F-3.03 preserves the current force of provisions in the Book of Order, as well as the relationship between provisions of the Book of Order.

III. Overview of the Proposed Form of Government

As noted above, the proposed Form of Government represents a significant shift to a more constitutional and less regulatory Form of Government. Nevertheless, the material in the revised Form of Government has a strong relationship to familiar material in the current Book of Order.

Chapter 1 of the proposed Form of Government is drawn from the current provisions of G-5.0000 and G-7.0000.

Chapter 2 is drawn from the current provisions of G-6.0000 and G-14.0000. As required by its mandate, the task force has preserved intact current G-6.0106a and b (G-2.0104). It has also preserved current G-6.0108a and b, but has combined them into a single paragraph (the new G-2.0105).

Chapter 3 is drawn from G-9.0000, G-10.0000, G-11.0000, G-12.0000, and G-13.0000.

Chapter 4 is drawn from specific material in current G-6.0000, G-7.0000, and G-8.0000. Proposed G-4.01 combines existing language in the current Form of Government from the current G-7.0401 and 7.0402. Proposed G-4.02 is the text of current G-8.0000, including G-8.0200, as mandated by the charter of the task force. Proposed G-4.03, “Confidence and Privilege,” is a summary statement of the provisions on the same subjects in current G-6.0204a and b, G-6.0304b, and G-6.0402b.

Chapter 5 is a consolidation of G-15.0000, G-16.0000, and G-17.0000.

Finally, Chapter 6 is derived from the current G-18.0000.

Except as set forth in the next section, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes that the task force has complied with its charge to draft a missional Form of Government that removes materials that could be described as regulatory or “manual”-type provisions.

The task force has honored its charge to retain the current G-6.0106. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes the proposed text uses the terms “ruling elder” and “teaching elder” where our current constitution uses “elder” and “minister,” and that this change was also made in G-2.0104b, which is intended to maintain the rule now found in G-6.0106. The task force has correctly recognized that changing the names of officers in G-2.0104b would maintain the force and effect of G-6.0106b as it currently stands.

The task force has also honored its charge to retain the current G-8.0200.

IV. Paradigm Shifts in the Proposed Form of Government

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution suggests that the 219th General Assembly (2010), in reviewing the Proposed Form of Government, consider its implications for a missional polity, language used concerning the offices of ministry, and its changes in the roles of governing bodies.

A. Missional Polity

According to the task force, the proposed Form of Government “establishes a polity that empowers the church to engage effectively in the mission of God in the 21st century.” The shift to a more missional polity is evident in several aspects of the proposal:

- The mission of God is the organizing principle of both the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity and the Form of Government. The Foundations document begins with a chapter on “The Mission of the Church.” Familiar material from Chapters I–IV of the current Form of Government is interlaced with new material highlighting the traditional Marks of the Church and Notes of the Reformed Church. Each of these Marks and Notes is expanded in ways that highlight its significance for the mission of the church today.

- The congregation is identified as the primary form and principal agent of God’s mission. The first chapter of the new Form of Government, “Congregations and Their Membership,” begins with the statement, “The congregation is the church engaged in the mission of God in its particular context,” and adds, “In the life of the congregation, individual believers are equipped for the ministry of witness to the love and grace of God in and for the world” (G-1.0101).

- The Reformation doctrine of the priesthood of all believers is reclaimed. Most obviously, this is emphasized by a semantic shift from “offices” to “ordered ministries,” and from “minister of the Word and Sacrament” to “teaching elder.” In addition, the meaning of membership is recast to include “a commitment to participate in Christ’s mission” (G-1.0304). Moreover, Chapter 2 of the Form of Government, on “Ordered Ministry, Commissioning, and Certification” begins with the affirmation, “The basic form of ministry is the ministry of the whole people of God, from whose midst some are called to ordered ministries, to fulfill particular functions. Members and those in ordered ministries serve together under the mandate of Christ” (G-2.0101).

- The Form of Government is edited to serve a less regulatory, more flexible function. Governing bodies (renamed “councils”) are given liberty to adopt practices that fit their particular needs and contexts of ministry. Some examples of this can be found in quorum and call requirements for congregational meetings (G-1.0501 and G-1.0502), the training and examination requirements of commissioned lay pastors (now “commissioned ruling elders”—G-2.1002), and required structures of higher councils (G-3.0109). It should be noted that the task force retained without change the church-wide standards on ordination (G-2.0104) and provisions regarding church property (G-4.02).

Comment:

The proposed Form of Government is influenced by the New Testament model of the Church as the apostolic community; that is, the Church sent forth in mission to the world. In embracing this model of the Church, however, the proposal does not abandon other models of the Church implicit in our polity. Therefore, the result is not a revolution in church polity, but an evolution. The charge to the task force specifically required preserving the foundations of our polity found in Chapters I–IV.
of the current Form of Government. Placed in a framework organized by the principle of the mission of God, these foundational statements generate new meanings for the ordering of the mission and ministry of the Church.

Of particular importance is the shift in the dynamics of governance in the proposed Form of Government. While the presbytery is still identified as the principal structure of governance, greater emphasis is placed on the congregation as the principal structure for mission. Thus the proposed Form of Government provides a greater degree of congregational autonomy than does our current Form of Government. This is emblematic of a general shift in responsibility, away from the more centralized, corporate polity of the mid-twentieth century to a more decentralized model. Nowhere is this more evident than in the potential for a vastly reduced role for synods.

The shift to a less regulatory, more missional Form of Government will necessarily result in less uniform practices across the denomination. Greater responsibility is placed on governing bodies to formulate, communicate, and enforce practices under their jurisdiction. While this may result in greater liberty for governing bodies to adapt practices to the particular needs of their mission contexts, it also may result in increased ambiguity and confusion, especially where governing bodies have established rules that are insufficient to order mission or ministry in their bounds, or that contradict or encroach on provisions of the Book of Order.

The increasingly regulatory nature of our current Form of Government reflects a decline in the trust and love that is essential to maintaining the fellowship of the church (G-7.0103). The shift to a less regulatory form of government may require councils to work through areas of tension and conflict which would no longer be resolved under the proposed Form of Government.

One of the frequently voiced concerns is that councils will have to spend an inordinate amount of time rewriting their manuals. This could only happen if they are already out of compliance with the requirement in the current Form of Government to have a manual. Existing manuals will remain in effect until the councils amend them. (For a more complete discussion of this matter, we draw the assembly’s attention to our advice on Item 07-10, the joint recommendation of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council.)

Under the proposed Form of Government councils will have to decide whether they wish to use their new opportunity for flexibility, and if so, in which areas in their life will they employ a different way of accomplishing their mission.

The purpose of a form of government is to provide the necessary structures and boundaries to ensure that essential Church functions are conducted “decently and in order,” in a manner consistent with scripture and the confessions of the church. In this regard, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the proposed Form of Government possesses those structures and boundaries necessary to the orderly functioning of the church, and orders the mission and ministry of the church in a manner consistent with the scriptures and confessions.

B. Language Concerning Offices of Ministry

The proposal has adopted terminology concerning church offices that is markedly different than that with which most Presbyterians are familiar. Instead of “church offices,” the proposal speaks of “ordered ministries”; rather than “minister of the Word and Sacrament,” the proposal utilizes the term “teaching elder.” These changes call for special consideration by both the assembly and the church generally.

As stated above, these changes have the purpose of reclaiming the Reformation doctrine of the priesthood of all believers, that is, the shared nature of the mission and ministry of the Church. The use of “ordered ministries” emphasizes that persons called to ordained service in the church differ in function only, and not status, from other church members: “The basic form of ministry is the ministry of the whole people of God, from whose midst some are called to ordered ministries, to fulfill particular functions” (G-2.0101). By contrast, the term “church officers,” it is argued, presents a more hierarchical connotation of ministry. Similarly, by replacing “minister of the Word and Sacrament” with the term “teaching elder,” the unique and historic Presbyterian principle of parity in governance between the clergy and ruling elders is underscored. (Indeed, even the word “clergy,” with its connotations of special status and privilege, is out of place in historic Presbyterian polity, which asserts that the biblical word “elder” (“presbyteros”) embraces both those exercising the role of governance and pastor to the flock.) The term “teaching elder” has been used as the preferred term for those exercising the pastoral function in the Church in various historic streams of our current denomination, most recently in the Book of Church Order of the former Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) prior to its reunion with the UPCUSA in 1983.

Comment:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes that changes in nomenclature in the proposal constitute a healthy appropriation of the historic principles of Presbyterian polity. Apart from the inherent challenge of relearning some fundamental terms of our polity, the changes do not present obstacles to the orderly functioning of our church government. They may, however, highlight distinctions of polity that are unique to the Presbyterian and Reformed tradition, which have been our contribution to ecumenical dialogue regarding the mutual recognition of ministries. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes that the proposal presents a faithful representation of our historic polity to our ecumenical partners.

C. Changes in the Roles of Governing Bodies

The proposal is straightforward in its assertion that a more missional polity will alter the roles and functions of governing bodies in the church. The emphasis on the congregation as the principle locus and agent of mission necessarily suggests a church order that is more decentralized and in which the higher governing bodies find their purpose in advancing the work of lower governing bodies. This shift in focus is also accompanied by a shift in relationships, in that it grants greater responsibility to lower governing bodies to adopt policies and practices that facilitate mission and ministry in their particular contexts.

This decentralization of mission and authority has implications for the structure of our polity. The familiar four-tiered hierarchy of governing bodies (session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly) does not neatly fit the missional theme. The role of synods, in particular, is diminished. The proposal puts forth the congregation as the principal agent of mission, the presbytery as the principal agent of governance, and the General Assembly as the expression of the corporate will of the whole church. However, synods, historically the principal agent of regional and specialized mission, lack a clear rationale. Accordingly, the proposal permits both synods with “reduced functions” (G-3.0404) that perform only essential administrative and judicial roles, and synods that choose to perform other significant functions within their bounds.

Comment:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds nothing inherently contrary to our polity in the role and structure of governing bodies (“councils”) put forth in the proposal. The proposed Form of Government maintains current standards in matters of faith and practice, set by the General Assembly and affirmed by the votes of the presbyteries and preserves the historic function of presbytery as the body charged with the oversight of the ministry of Word and Sacrament. However, the high degree of local responsibility envisioned in the proposed Form of Government calls for an equally high attention to the practice of administrative review of policies and actions of lower governing bodies. Administrative review, often regarded as a perfunctory function of governing bodies, is vital to the maintenance of unity and order in the church.

V. Status of Authoritative Interpretations

While the status and applicability of any authoritative interpretation is subject to the judgment of the assembly, it is the considered judgment of the ACC that if this proposal to amend the Form of Government were to be approved, generally speaking the status of authoritative interpretations would vary according to the relationship of newly approved language to previous language.

1. If language approved in the Constitution explicitly restates the content of existing authoritative interpretations, it is no longer an authoritative interpretation but is incorporated into the Constitution.

2. If language is approved that is identical to, or essentially the same as the language of constitutional provisions that have already been interpreted, current authoritative interpretations would continue in force. The ACC believes this would apply, for example, to authoritative interpretations regarding current G-6.0106b, G-6.0108, G-8.0201, and G-9.0404d.

3. If language is approved that is substantively different from currently interpreted constitutional language, clarification from the General Assembly would be required as to the status and applicability of existing authoritative interpretations through the provisions of G-13.0103r.

4. If language is approved that contradicts the substance of an existing authoritative interpretation, the current interpretation would have no effect.

5. If language is approved that totally removes a constitutional provision that has been authoritatively interpreted, the authoritative interpretations attached to that provision would be removed as well.

VI. Editorial Corrections to the Revised Form of Government

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution has noted some places where the proposed document is inconsistent in style or terminology, or places where minor changes can make the language more clear. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution considers these to be noncontroversial editorial changes and proposes that they be made.

A. G-2.0403, and G-2.0703, and G-2.0806

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that there are three occasions when reference is made to the Directory for Worship for services of ordination/installation—and the wording in each is different: 2.0403, and 2.0703, and 2.0806.
For consistency and to avoid confusion, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends using the same wording in all three locations: “The order for that service in the Directory for Worship [citation] shall be followed.”

B. G-2.0804

This section should be deleted and sections G-2.0805 and G-2.0806 should be renumbered. The task force’s language at G-2.0804 appears to reinsert material recently removed from the current Constitution.

C. G-2.0905

The word “offer” is too vague. Preferable would be “provide.”

“2.0905 Officiate by Invitation Only

After the dissolution of the pastoral relationship, former pastors and associate pastors shall not offer provide their pastoral services to members of their former congregations without the invitation of the moderator of session.”

D. G-2.1002

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes in 2.1002, “Training, Examination, and Commissioning”, the final words of the second paragraph “mentioned previously” have no specific previous reference—unless it is to “… as determined by the presbytery”. Even if that is the case, the “areas of instruction” are unclear.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises deleting “mentioned previously” and inserting “determined by presbytery” so that the sentence reads: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A ruling elder who seeks to serve under the terms of G-2.1001 shall receive such preparation and instruction as determined by the presbytery to be appropriate to the particular commission. The ruling elder shall be examined by the presbytery as to personal faith, motives for seeking the commission, and the areas of instruction determined previously. A ruling elder who has been commissioned and later ceases to serve in the specified ministry may continue to be listed as available to serve, but is not authorized to perform the functions specified in G-2.1001 until commissioned again to a congregation or ministry by the presbytery.”

E. G-3.0101

Section G-3.0101, First paragraph, third sentence. The clause “…both within and beyond the congregation…” needs to be set apart by commas. (The clause modifies and explains “with others”.)

F. G-3.0301

The use of “present” is unclear about where the equal numbers should occur. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the sentence be amended to show that the equal members should occur at meetings, so that the sentence is stricken: “Teaching elders and ruling elders should be present in numbers as equal as possible.” The text would then read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“3.0301 Composition and Responsibilities

“The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district. Teaching elders and ruling elders should be present in numbers as equal as possible. The presbytery shall adopt and communicate to the sessions a plan for determining how many ruling elders each session shall elect as commissioners to presbytery, so as to ensure the numerical parity of teaching elders and ruling elders. This plan shall require each session to elect at least one commissioner and shall take into consideration the size of congregations as well as a method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. Ruling elders elected as officers of the presbytery shall be enrolled as members during the period of their service. A presbytery may provide by its own rule for the enrollment of ruling elders serving as moderators of committees or commissions.”

G. 3.0109b “Committees and Commissions”

Section G-3.0109b is not consistent in referring to commissions in the plural. There are changes to singular forms when maintaining the use of plural forms would create confusion.
Usage of singular forms in two places would prevent confusion. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that G-3.0109b be amended for clarity as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Administrative commissions are designated to consider and conclude matters not involving ecclesiastical judicial process, except that in the discharge of their assigned responsibilities they may discover and report to the designating council matters that may require judicial action by the council.

“Functions that may be entrusted to administrative commissions include, but are not limited to:

“(1) (by sessions) ordaining and installing ruling elders and deacons, receiving and dismissing members, and visiting organizations within the congregation to settle differences therein;

“(2) (by presbyteries) ordaining and installing teaching elders;

“(3) (by presbyteries) examining and receiving into membership teaching elders seeking admission to presbytery, including approval of terms of call and commissions for ordination and installation; and receiving candidates under care;

“(5) (by presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly) visiting particular councils, congregations, or agencies over which they have immediate jurisdiction reported to be affected with disorder, and inquiring into and settling the difficulties therein, except that no commission of a presbytery shall be empowered to dissolve a pastoral relationship without the specific authorization by the designating body (G-2.0701);

“(6) (by all councils) making pastoral inquiry into persons accused of sexual abuse of another person (D-10.0401c) when jurisdiction in a judicial proceeding against such persons has ended due to death or renunciation of the accused; such inquiries shall not be understood as judicial proceedings but shall seek to reach a determination of truth related to the accusation and to make appropriate recommendations to the designating council.

“A commission of presbytery, synod, or General Assembly shall be composed of ruling elders and teaching elders in numbers as nearly equal as possible and sufficient to accomplish their work. A quorum of any commission shall be established by the designating council but in no case shall be less than a majority of its members (except as limited by D-5.0204).

“A commission of a session shall be composed of at least two ruling elders, and a teaching elder in an installed or temporary relationship with the congregation governed by that session or a ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service.

“The commission shall keep a full record of its proceedings and shall submit that record to the council for incorporation into its records. Actions of a commission shall be regarded as actions of the council that created it. A commission may be assigned additional duties as a committee, which duties shall be reported and handled as the report of a committee.

“The decisions of an administrative commission shall be reported to the clerk of the designating council, who shall report it to the council at its next stated meeting. A council may rescind or amend an action of its administrative commission in the same way actions of the council are modified.

Section G-3.0304, second paragraph. “…but it shall not be fewer than three…” “not” modifies “fewer” and should therefore immediately precede “fewer”: “…but it shall be not fewer than three…”.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that G-3.0304 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“3.0304 Meetings and Quorum

“The presbytery shall hold stated meetings at least twice each year, shall meet at the direction of synod, and may call special meetings in accordance with its own rules.

“A presbytery may set its own quorum, but it shall be not fewer than three teaching elders who are members of the presbytery and three ruling elder commissioners from three different congregations.”
VII. Items the Advisory Committee on the Constitution Recommends Be Modified

A. Foundations of Presbyterian Polity

   No changes are recommended.

B. Form of Government

   1. Chapter 1

      a. G-1.0201

         The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that in G-1.0201, the last paragraph begins “They shall be declared an organized congregation…” This phrase is in the passive voice and who declares the petitioners an organized congregation is undefined.

         The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the section make clear that it is the presbytery that declares the petitioners an organized congregation, so the last paragraph should be amended to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.].

         “They shall be At its sole discretion the presbytery may then declared them an organized congregation of the presbytery and the congregation shall then proceed to the election of ruling elders and, if they so decide, deacons. The presbytery shall prepare, examine, ordain, and install these newly elected persons. Presbytery shall continue to work closely with the congregation in securing pastoral leadership, in plans for the service and witness of the congregation, in coordinating its work with other congregations, in counseling concerning incorporation and bylaws for the congregation conforming to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and in giving other forms of support and encouragement that will strengthen the mission of the congregation in the larger life of the denomination.”

         The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that in G-1.0504 “Moderator,” provisions are made for when it is impractical for the installed pastor to preside or when there is no installed pastor. It does not provide for when the installed pastor is unable to preside and is unable to invite another teaching elder to preside.

         The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the last sentence be modified to read “If there is no installed pastor or the installed pastor is unable to moderate and/or to name another moderator, the presbytery shall make provision for a moderator.” This section would then read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

         “The installed pastor shall ordinarily moderate all meetings of the congregation. If it is impractical for the pastor to pre-sid, he or she shall invite another teaching elder who is a member of the presbytery or a person authorized by the presbytery to serve as moderator. If there is no installed pastor, or the installed pastor is unable to moderate and/or to name another moderator, the presbytery shall make provision for a moderator.”

      c. G-1.0505

         The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the secretary of the congregational meeting be an active member of the church. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution therefore advises the second sentence be amended to read, “If the clerk of session is unable to serve, the congregation shall elect a secretary for that meeting from among its active members.” The section would then read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

         “1.0505 Secretary and Minutes

         The clerk of session shall serve as secretary for all meetings of the congregation. If the clerk of session is unable to serve, the congregation shall elect a secretary for that meeting from among its active members. The secretary shall record the actions of the congregation in minutes of the meeting.

   2. Chapter 2

      a. G-2.0401

         The Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s advice to the task force about G-2.0401 included specific language to be inserted. The task force followed the Advisory Committee’s advice. But the Advisory Committee on the Constitution did not adequately consider its advice before giving it.

         The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that at 2.0401, “Election of Rulings Elders and Deacons”, that in providing greater flexibility, such ambiguity is created as to make the paragraph confusing. “Congregations may provide by their own rule for a congregational nominating committee. When no other provision is made, this committee shall include at least one ruling elder…” The logical conclusion is that a congregation could elect a nominating committee consisting of a single elder and the pastor ex officio.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that G-2.0401 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“2.0401 Election of Ruling Elders and Deacons

“Ruling elders and deacons are men and women elected by the congregation from among its members. The nomination and election of ruling elders and deacons shall express the rich diversity of the congregation’s membership and shall guarantee participation and inclusiveness (F-1.0403). Ruling elders and deacons shall be nominated by a committee elected by the congregation, drawn from and representative of its membership. Congregations may provide by their own rule for a congregational nominating committee, provided that the committee shall consist of at least three active members of the congregation, and shall include at least one ruling elder who is currently serving on the session. The pastor shall serve ex officio and without vote. When no other provision is made, this committee shall include at least one ruling elder who is currently serving on session, and the pastor shall serve ex officio without vote. When elections are held, full opportunity shall always be given to the congregation for nomination from the floor of the congregational meeting by any active member of the congregation. A majority of all the active members present and voting shall be required to elect.”

b. G-2.1001

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution had previously recommended that contracts for ruling elders who are commissioned to limited pastoral service be limited to twelve months to correspond to the temporary pastoral relations in G-2.0405. The task force proposal allows for renewable contracts up to three years long.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the renewable terms of contracts for ruling elders who are commissioned to limited pastoral service parallel the renewable terms for temporary pastoral relations. Section G-2.1001 would then read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“2.1001 Functions

“When the presbytery, in consultation with the session or other responsible committee, determines that its strategy for mission requires it, the presbytery may authorize a ruling elder to be commissioned to limited pastoral service as assigned by the presbytery. A ruling elder so designated may be commissioned to serve in a validated ministry of the presbytery. Presbytery, in its commission, may authorize the ruling elder to moderate the session of the congregation to which he or she is commissioned, to administer the Sacraments, and to officiate at marriages where permitted by state law. This commission shall also specify the term of service, which shall not exceed three years twelve months but shall be renewable. The presbytery shall review the commission at least annually.”

a. G-3.0109 “Committees and Commissions”

The report of the Form of Government Revision Task Force would require that committees of higher governing bodies consist of teaching elders [‘ministers’] and members of congregations “in approximately equal proportion.” Administrative commissions of higher governing bodies would be composed of ruling elders and teaching elders “in numbers nearly as equal as possible…."

The proposed composition of committees is more restrictive than the rule under the current Book of Order, where G-9.0501b states: “Committees of governing bodies above the session shall consist of laypersons and ministers of the Word and Sacrament with at least one-half the members being laypersons.”

We draw attention to our advice on Item 07-02 from the Presbytery of Western Reserve, which recommends an amendment to G-3.0109 that would restore the rule for committee composition as stated in our current Book of Order.

It should here be noted that organizational subunits that are delegated the power to make decisions on behalf of the council (such as COM, CPM, and coordinating councils), should be constituted as commissions of the council, not as committees.

b. G-3.0201 “Composition and Responsibilities”

1. Issue/Rationale

The first paragraph (addressing the appointment of a moderator when there is no pastor or the pastor is unable to moderate session) is different from 3.0104.
(2) Advice

For consistency, the same wording should be used in both paragraphs. If there is no installed pastor, or if the installed pastor is unable to invite another moderator, the presbytery shall make provision for a moderator. As amended, the first paragraph of G-3.0201 would read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“3.0201 Composition and Responsibilities

“The session is the council for the congregation. It shall be composed of those persons elected by the congregation to active service as ruling elders, together with all installed pastors and associate pastors. All members of the session are entitled to vote. The pastor shall be the moderator of the session, and the session shall not meet without the pastor or designated moderator. If there is no installed pastor, or if the installed pastor is unable to invite another moderator, the presbytery shall make provision for a moderator. Presbyteries shall provide by rule for moderators when the session is without a moderator for reasons of vacancy or inconvenience.”

c. G-3.0203

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the Form of Government state that the only business that may be transacted at a special meeting is the business named in the call of the meeting. As amended, G-3.0203 would read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“3.0203 Meetings

“The session shall hold stated meetings at least quarterly. The moderator shall call a special meeting when he or she deems necessary or when requested in writing by any two members of the session. The business to be transacted at special meetings shall be limited to items specifically listed in the call for the meeting. There shall be reasonable notice given of all special meetings. The session shall also meet when directed by presbytery. Sessions shall provide by rule for a quorum for meetings; such quorum shall include the moderator and either a specific number of ruling elders or a specific percentage of those ruling elders in current service on the session.”

d. G-3.0204 “Minutes and Records”

Section G-3.0204a. The language proposed by the task force uses “may” to cover all circumstances in which a member’s name is deleted from the rolls. There are circumstances in which it is or ought to be mandatory to delete a member’s name from the rolls, and there are also circumstances in which deletion should be at the session’s discretion.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that G-3.0204a be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“There shall be rolls of baptized, active, and affiliate members in accordance with G-1.0401, G-1.0402, and G-1.0403. The session may delete names from the roll of the congregation when requested to issue a certificate of transfer of membership to another congregation; when a member requests that his or her membership be terminated; when a member joins another congregation or otherwise renounces the jurisdiction of the session; when a member has moved or otherwise ceased to participate in the ministry of Christ’s Church as defined in G-1.0304 for a period of not less than two years and after efforts on the part of the session to encourage the member to return to meaningful participation have failed, and after provision of written notice; or when a member dies. Upon the member’s death, admission to membership in another congregation or presbytery, or renunciation of jurisdiction. The session may delete names from the roll of the congregation when a member so requests, or has moved or otherwise ceased to participate actively in the work and worship of the congregation for a period of two years. The session shall seek to restore members to active participation and shall provide written notice before deleting names due to member inactivity.”

4. Chapter 4

No changes are advised.

5. Chapter 5

No changes are advised.

G-6.02

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the section heading be shortened by striking the phrase”: THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION” so that it would read: “G-6.02 INTERPRETING THE CONSTITUTION.” This section preserves the current balance between the General Assembly in plenary and the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission acting properly on a case before it. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues with the same name and the same responsibility to give advice that the General Assembly in plenary may accept or reject.

Endnotes

1. In our opinion, the semantic change from “office” to “ordered ministry” in G-6.0106b/G-2.0104b is deemed to have no effect on the meaning, force, or application of the provision, and constitutes an editorial change allowed under Section IV.B.2.c. of the Organization for Mission, p. 9.

2. The provisions of G-8.0701/G-4.0208 (“Exceptions”) have been recast in past tense as the window for exercising this provision has closed. In the opinion of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, this does not constitute an amendment to the provision, but rather constitutes an editorial change allowed under Section IV.B.2.c. of the Organization for Mission, p. 9.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness (ACSWP) counsels several considerations and questions on the very consequential decision concerning adoption of the proposed new Form of Government (nFOG):

1. The new Form of Government does contain significant references to “prophetic witness” as a part of the church in all its councils (3.0201a, 3.0301a, 3.0401c, 3.0501c). As the body within the church specifically assigned to help steward Presbyterian social witness and teaching, the Advisory Committee appreciates the Form of Government Task Force’s understanding this essential aspect of the mission of Christ’s body in the world. “Prophetic witness” is not mentioned within the roles given to deacons, elders or ministers, although the “teaching elders” are to assist congregations in the “… task of reaching out in concern and service to the life of the human community as a whole …” (Item 07-01, 2.0504, adapted from the longer—though eloquent—section G-6.020b, Book of Order).

Section 3.0501c includes:

… warning and bearing witness against errors in doctrine or immorality in the church and in the world…providing encouragement, guidance, and resources to presbyteries in … prophetic witness… (Item 07-01)

This section also includes a clause that speaks to the authority of the General Assembly more broadly:

… discerning and presenting with the guidance of the Holy Spirit matters of truth and vision that may inspire, challenge, and educate both church and world… (Item 07-01)

2. The purpose of constitutions is to provide a framework of law to guide a given community or organization in its life, identifying rights and responsibilities, matters of entry and exit, and specifying relations between members and among institutions created to serve the community or population. The Reformed tradition has been influential in the development of constitutionalism in Western thought, partly through valuing the role of law as a “guide to the elect” (or “Third Use” of the law). Because of our realism about the personal and social dimensions of sin, regulation is seen as necessary, though always in need of reformation in light of God’s purposes for humanity.

The task force that produced the proposed new Form of Government has suggested that the current Book of Order over-regulates and recommends that much of what is not constitutionally essential find its way into manuals of operation. Critics have pointed to the duplication of effort and variation of result that this may entail, despite any model manuals provided. A perspective that distrusts “deregulation” might suggest our remembering the Articles of Confederation that preceded the U.S. Constitution. Those Articles—in some ways a treaty among the thirteen former colonies—came to be seen as an insufficient framework for effective interaction and interdependence. Commissioners will have to determine the net effect of removing many smaller rules and guidelines from the nFOG on the unity and institutional effectiveness of the church. (Effectiveness is not always the same as efficiency).

3. With regard to the need for institutions and agencies to maintain connections, develop goals and policies, and accomplish or implement programs, the nFOG is largely silent. Thus it chooses to trust councils to develop new or reinvent institutional forms, a process that is never value-neutral. As one of the key Historic Principles of Church Order (still wisely retained) says, “… truth is in order to goodness …” (Item 07-01, F-3.0104). Commissioners will have to determine whether there is enough enumeration of the “goodness,” or forms within which the church’s truth and ethos is to be embodied. (An example might be the current function of the Office of the General Assembly to steward the history of the denomination in the Office of History in Philadelphia. Is it necessary to put in wording such as, “safeguarding historical records and other resources that strengthen the identity and faithfulness of the church,” for this function to be done?)

4. Power clearly shifts in the nFOG to the presbyteries and congregations and away from the General Assembly and synods. The hope is that more flexibility if not creativity can be obtained. This is a re-weighting of responsibilities that is termed “missional,” but could contribute to a de facto congregationalism that is already prevalent in our church (and culture). We appreciate the use of the word, “mission,” that necessarily connects us with the Confession of 1967 and other theological bases of our church. At the same time, we note that as a minority in U.S. culture, increased connectionalism, if not centralization, may be required to retain our identity and ethos. There are various kinds of central, general, or church-wide forms of relationship available to the church, but we are clear that the General Assembly is both a crucial axis of relationship and a symbol of identity for Presbyterians. There is also creativity in the General Assembly and its agencies. The question is whether the nFOG helps develop a more creative connectionalism. (We are aware of a different set of concerns about congregational autonomy in the paper, Thinking Twice about the Proposed Form of Government, and acknowledge nFOG’s third charge, that the “presbytery shall continue as the central governmental unit …”).

5. The specific area where committee structures have been in debate is with regard to the need for specific committees on representation at the presbytery, synod, and General Assembly levels. The GA Committee on Representation has modified its recommendation to suggest designating some entity or committee to implement the goal of diversity. Their suggestions seem wise to us, and not unduly cumbersome. The goal of inclusiveness is, in fact, often difficult to achieve but even more so without some designated body or officers tasked with this function. ACSWP’s Advice and Counsel memorandum on Item 07-06 addresses this.

6. With regard to the ecumenical dimension of our Form of Government, the more streamlined nFOG may be more inviting, but it may leave many functions of union councils up for negotiation—which may be as it should be. The focus on Reformed bodies and others with whom we are in full communion is appropriate, and the inclusion of participation in ecumenical relationships in elder and minister responsibilities is noted (Item 07-01, G-2.0301 and G-2.0504). The provision of a separate chapter of the nFOG to this important area is valuable.

7. Staff for “councils higher than the session” are mentioned in nFOG G-3.0110, though no principles are provided in its short treatment for the structures of authority and accountability, theology of compensation, and freedom of conscience necessarily involved in the development of the manuals. This is an area where, absent guidance on the values of Presbyterian tradition and ethos, corporate or market values may tend to predominate. At the same time, the current Form of Government does not provide such principles in its enumeration of administrative roles (9.0700), while nFOG’s much shorter treatment continues to lift up the two qualities of “prudence and equity.”

8. The word, council, and the theology of participation it reflects are welcome. The words, teaching elder, are less so, not simply because most of the U.S. population may not understand the term, but because it tends to narrow the function of the ministry. Overall, it is not a defect of a church’s form of government to have explicit theology throughout; the question is whether the use of some terms will always require explanation.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 07-01

Comment on Item 07-01, Recommendation 1—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

Item 07-01, Recommendation 1, proposes to amend the Book of Order by deleting Chapters 1–18 of the current Form of Government of the Book of Order and inserting two new sections entitled “Foundations of Presbyterian Polity” (three chapters) and “Form of Government” (six chapters).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to do the following:

1. That F-1.0403 in the proposed “Foundations of Presbyterian Polity” be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

   “F-1.0403 Unity [in] [with] Diversity

   “[As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female, for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise’ (Gal. 3:27–29).]

   “[In Jesus’ ministry among us, relationships were restored, outcasts were welcomed at the table and into leadership, and all were invited to learn, to serve, and to follow. At his last supper Jesus prayed, ’I ask not only on behalf of these, but also on behalf of those who will believe in me through their word, that they may all be one. As you, Father, are in me and I am in you, may they also be in us, so that the world may believe that you have sent me’” (Jn. 17:20–21).]

   “The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, [see theological conviction, marital, or worldly condition.] There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership, and shall continue to address the systemic inequities that keep us from living out the ideal of a time when ‘there is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female, for all of you are one in Christ Jesus’ (Gal. 3:28). No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution.”

Despite the concerns of the religious leaders of the day, Jesus welcomed sinners to eat with him, invited outcasts and the marginalized into the inner circle, welcomed women to sit at his feet and learn, used the hated Samaritans as a positive example, and touched the lives of the untouchable. Jesus invited all who heard his call to “Follow me!”

However, Jesus recognized a need for unity in this diverse body of followers and at his final meal with his disciples prayed “that they may all be one.” (John 17:20). Our Christian unity derives from Christ and from his desire for our unity, and yet this is a goal that is still a work in progress.

One of the concerns of the GACOR is that the current language proposed by the New Form of Government Task Force focuses on individual discrimination and ignores the systemic discrimination that continues to exist. Under the current Book of Order, there are specific mechanisms in place designed to recognize and address the existence of systemic discrimination of which we as a whole may be unaware. This issue was so important to the denomination that in the Articles of Agreement that brought the PC(USA) into being in 1983, committees on representation were established to help us identify and rectify injustices of representation within the leadership of the church.

The GACOR would also suggest that the categories of diversity outlined in the New Form of Government be broadened to include “marital condition,” which is included in our current Book of Order, and “worldly condition.” The Confession of 1967 states, “A church that is indifferent to poverty, or evades responsibility in economic affairs, or is open to one social class only, or expects gratitude for its beneficence makes a mockery of reconciliation and offers no acceptable worship to God” (The Book of Confessions, 9.46).

Representation and full participation are the as yet unfulfilled goals. In Scripture, we have visions of that time when Christ will return and “the wolf shall live with the lamb” (Isa. 11:6) and there will be a “new heaven and a new earth” (Rev. 21:1). In the Confession of 1967, we are reminded that “the church applies itself to present tasks and strives for a better world. It does not identify limited progress with the kingdom of God on earth, nor does it despair in the face of disappointment and defeat. In steadfast hope, the church looks beyond all partial achievement to the final triumph of God” (The Book of Confessions, 9.55).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is blessed with a diversity of gifts, of cultures, of heritages, of perspectives. We are united into one body of Christ through our baptism in Christ, by the power of the Holy Spirit. We live in a time of “already, but not yet.”

The proclamation of Paul and the early Christian communities found in Galatians 3:28 was a declaration of an alternative way of life, that is, living a horizontal relationship of life in inclusive community, different from the outside social status quo. Diversity is not simple inclusion of all the differences. It includes that dimension, but first of all, the genuine concern about diversity is to challenge the hierarchical social relations and perceptions which sustains the hegemony of the dominant groups to discriminate, suppress, disregard, and even simply tolerate the differences in communities and groups. … One of the most significant aspects of the Pauline communities is that the churches practiced radical embracement of differences for their unity. (Lee, Jae Won. Re: A Question about Galatians and Representation, email message to author, February 5, 2010)

The labels in Galatians expressed some of the widest boundaries that were visible in the culture of the day. “At the very heart of Paul’s proclamation of the Christian identity (existence in Christ with differences of the church members) lies the issue of inclusive diversity as an effort to transform the unjust, unequal, hierarchical relationships among different members, but the differences of the members … were respected as the personal identities and were not discriminated, nor indifferentiatied” (Ibid). While it is easy for those in the dominant culture to believe that we have come close to attaining this radical inclusive diversity, the PC(USA) is called to demonstrate the wholeness of Christian community by ensuring that, as in 1 Corinthians 12, the weak part of the Body is more valued in Christ through considered and intentional unity with diversity.

We have made progress; however, we still have a long way to go before we reach the fulfillment of unity with diversity. There are still too many who have not been welcomed into our congregations or leadership in our presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly. These voices, dreams, hopes, visions could reform our denomination and help us more fully live out Christ’s prayer “that they may be one.”

2. That the second paragraph of G-3.0103 (Participation and Representation) in the proposed “Form of Government” be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“Each council shall develop procedures and mechanisms for promoting and reviewing that body’s implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation. Councils above the session shall establish [committees on representation in accordance with the Articles of Agreement] [by their own rule committees or entities] to fulfill the following functions: to advise [and report to] the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, to advocate for diversity in leadership, and to consult with the council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403.”
The Purpose of the Amendment: The new FOG proposed language focuses on functions rather than structures. As a result, a council could choose to dismantle existing committees on representation (CORs) and fulfill its G-3.0103 responsibilities by assigning those responsibilities to other existing committees or entities regardless of what their main functions or composition may be.

If the work of representation is not being accomplished while we have a structural, legal, and moral requirement, why do we assume that removing the requirement for that structure will be the impetus for that work to begin or the encouragement for it to continue? The purpose of the amendment proposed by the GACOR is to ensure that the ministry of the committee on representation (COR), as envisioned by the Articles of Agreement, is retained.

Historical and Moral Considerations: At the time of Reunion, leaders of the former racial ethnic, nongeographic, presbyteries were greatly concerned that they would lose their voices and influence if their churches were realigned into strictly geographic presbyteries. To address this concern, the provisions of Article 8, requiring the creation of CORs at each governing body above the session, were included to reassure leaders that racial ethnic leadership would continue to exist and to entice them to accept and approve the Reunion in 1983, in reliance on the implicit assurance that the provisions of Article 8 would always remain in effect. Now, as we seek to restructure our form of government, the GACOR submits that a promise was made that we must keep and, therefore, that CORs should be retained.

Legal Considerations: The Articles of Agreement embody the terms by which reunion between the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. (PCUS) and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (UPCUSA) was to be accomplished. In its Preamble, it is noted that the “two parties to the original agreement will no longer be in existence as separate Churches and hence the agreement cannot thereafter be altered” (Book of Order, Appendix B, Preamble, Paragraph 2). Article 8 describes the functions and the composition of the committee on representation (which is also described in existing G-9.0105a). There is no provision for amending the Articles of Agreement, and there is nothing in Article 8 to suggest that it, unlike other Articles of the Agreement, is a temporary or transitional provision. Thus, it is submitted that the Form of Government proposal to permit the elimination of CORs, and the assignment of its functions or responsibilities to other existing committees or entities, is to disregard the binding nature of Article 8 of the Articles of Agreement.

Role of CORs: The role of the committee on representation is to raise awareness of the places where we have fallen short of the goal of inclusive diversity. It can and has been a vital asset to the nominating committee of the governing bodies in discerning those who may have been inadvertently overlooked but are well-equipped by God for service to our Lord Jesus Christ through the PC(USA).

We recognize that committees on representation do not yet consistently function as they were envisioned. Yet it is important to maintain within our Form of Government this creative innovation of our heritage. By design, the committee on representation has the role of bringing to our attention those who are qualified yet marginalized in our denomination. By retaining the Committee on Representation, we assert that we continue to believe that inclusiveness in our leadership should be one of those high ideals we seek to attain.

Conclusion: There is great value in a ministry of presence. The General Assembly Committee on Representation strongly encourages the PC(USA) to keep its promises and comply with the Articles of Agreement, by retaining the concept of the committee on representation as a separate structure, a reminder of our desire to truly live out the calling of our faith to cherish our diversity in the midst of unity.

3. That G-3.0111 in the proposed “Form of Government” be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“3.0111 Nominating Process

“All councils higher than the session shall have a process for nominating persons to serve in positions requiring election by the council. The process shall ensure that nominations are made by an entity broadly representative of the constituency of the council, and in conformity with the church’s commitment to unity in diversity (F-1.0403). [This entity shall work in consultation with the council’s committee or entity for representation to ensure fair and equal representation.]”

This recommendation to amend the proposed new Form of Government addresses the collaborative nature of the work of nominations and representation. Each aspect of the task of securing leadership for our denomination is important, but approaches the responsibility to call into leadership those God has called from a somewhat different perspective. The need for both of these was recognized when the General Assembly in 1984 issued an authoritative interpretation stating that “The committee [on representation] must stand alone” (Minutes, 1984, Part I, paragraphs 55.108, 55.109). This was reaffirmed in 1997 when the General Assembly and the presbyteries approved adding to our current Book of Order, G-9.0105f, which
While the goals of full representation and participation have not yet been fulfilled, it is critical that the church continue seeking out opportunities to include persons in the daily life of the church who demonstrate to the world our Christian unity with diversity, showing our “one[ness] with differences” (the diversity within our unity) (Lee, op. cit.). Retaining a structure and therefore an avenue of accountability for committees or entities for representation will fulfill the church’s covenant made in the Articles of Agreement at the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s incorporation in 1983. Preserving a procedure whereby councils are held accountable to include fair and equal representation is a critical element to ensuring the church is a welcoming place for all of God’s children.

The advised amendment would ensure collaboration and communication between councils at presbytery, synod, and General Assembly levels, helping form stronger collaborative relationships and guaranteeing more opportunities for representation for the marginalized in our midst.

4. That the second paragraph of G-3.0401 ([Synod] Composition and Responsibilities) in the proposed “Form of Government” be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“When a synod meets, it shall be composed of commissioners elected by the presbyteries. Each presbytery shall elect at least one ruling elder and one teaching elder to serve as commissioners to synod. A synod shall [establish a committee on representation] [determine a plan for the election of commissioners to the synod, as well as the method] to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103[both plans shall be subject to approval by a majority of the presbyteries in the synod] [and determine a plan for the election of commissioners to the synod with the consent of a majority of its presbyteries]. The commissioners from each presbytery shall be divided equally between ruling elders and teaching elders. Each person elected moderator or other officer shall be enrolled as a member of the synod until a successor is elected and installed.”

While the foundational document of the proposed Form of Government affirms the importance of the denomination’s leadership reflecting the diversity of its members, synods sometimes face additional challenges to their ability to express that diversity through their elected commissioners. Since presbyteries do not consult with each other prior to electing their commissioners for the synod, having a mechanism available to address unintentional injustices or omissions, once they are discerned, is essential (i.e., establishing at-large commissioner positions to address the lack of representation of any group within its elected commissioners). The GACOR recommends that this task be fulfilled by the entity within the synod responsible for addressing areas where representation is lacking, and in particular, by the committee on representation. As this committee should be most aware of the general demographic makeup of the synod and of the elected commissioners, developing a plan to ensure broader representation serves as an important aspect of their advice and advocacy roles.

5. That G-3.0501c (nurture the covenant community of disciples) be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“c. nurture the covenant community of disciples. This responsibility shall include providing those services, resources, and programs performed most effectively at a national level; communicating with the whole church on matters of common concern; warning and bearing witness against errors in doctrine or immorality in the church and in the world; providing such services of education and nurture as its presbyteries may require; providing encouragement, guidance, and resources to presbyteries in the areas of mission, prophetic witness, leadership development, worship, evangelism, and responsible administration; [providing a committee on representation to give full expression to the rich diversity found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103 and developing means that will assure greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in the body of Christ;] discerning and presenting with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, matters of truth and vision that may inspire, challenge, and educate both church and world; serving in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline; deciding controversies brought before it and advising and instructing in cases submitted to it, in conformity with this Constitution; authoritatively interpreting the most recent edition of the Book of Order in a manner binding on the whole church, in accordance with the provisions of G-6.02 or through a decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case, with the most recent interpretation of the Book of Order being binding; and establishing and maintaining an office of the Stated Clerk.”

One of the roles of the General Assembly is to nurture the Body of Christ and assist the church to more fully express our “one[ness] with differences” (Ibid) throughout the denomination. A commitment to unity with diversity is established in F-
1.0403, yet that commitment is not explicitly reaffirmed in G-3.0501c, which lists the responsibility of the General Assembly for the various aspects of nurturing the covenant community of disciples. One of the Great Ends of the Church is to exhibit the Kingdom of heaven to the world (Book of Order, G-1.0200) It is imperative that the PC(USA) express its commitment to unity with diversity as an important function of its highest level of government and an essential task of nurturing covenant community.

[The assembly answered Item 07-02 by the action taken on Item 07-01, Recommendation 1. See pp. 18, 25.]

On Amending FOG-3.0109 of the Report of the Form of Government Task Force to Allow Flexibility in the Composition of Committees—From the Presbytery of the Western Reserve.

The Presbytery of the Western Reserve respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to amend the second paragraph of FOG-3.0109 of the Report of the Form of Government Task Force as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italics.]

“3.0109 Committees and Commissions…

“A committee shall study and recommend action or carry out decisions already made by a council. It shall make a full report to the council that created it, and its recommendations shall require action by that body. Committees of councils higher than the session shall consist of both teaching elders and members of congregations, in approximately equal proportion with at least one half being members of congregations.”

Rationale

One of the elements of the charge to the Form of Government Task Force was to provide flexibility to governing bodies: “The new Form of Government shall provide flexibility at all levels, granting authority while permitting governing bodies to develop the structures to carry out their respective missions” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 366; assembly action, pp. 38−39). However, the proposed new Form of Government, in requiring approximately equal numbers of teaching elders and members of congregation for all committees, would allow less flexibility.

The current Book of Order requires that all committees have both ministers and members and ensures that members of congregations will not be outnumbered by ministers, but allows governing bodies to form committees with more members than ministers (G-9.0501b); this amendment to the new Form of Government would maintain that flexibility by restoring the current, less-restrictive requirement.

If a presbytery chooses to maintain entities comparable to the committee on ministry and the committee on preparation for ministry, the current requirement of equal proportions of ministers and members in those committees would be preserved in the provision of 3.0307.

Since the pool of teaching elders is much smaller than that of members, those responsible for nominating persons to serve on committees may be challenged to find enough teaching elders to fulfill a requirement of “equal proportion.”

In 1988, a request to require that committees be composed of elders and ministers of Word and Sacrament in numbers as equal as possible was rejected.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-02

Advice on Item 07-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 07-02.

Rationale

The overture seeks to amend section G-3.0109 of the Report of the Form of Government Task Force to permit committees of governing bodies to be composed of an unspecified majority of “members of congregations” (i.e., elders and non-elders). The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advice on the report is found at Item 07-01. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution found no constitutional deficiency with the provision of the report that this overture seeks to amend.

History

One of the Principles of Presbyterian Government states, “Ecclesiastical jurisdiction is a shared power, to be exercised jointly by presbyters gathered in governing bodies” (Book of Order, G-4.0301h; proposed F-3.0208). Historically, this has been expressed through maintaining a balance of ministers of the Word and Sacrament and elders in higher governing bodies, and by limiting participation on committees and commissions of governing bodies to ministers of the Word and Sacrament and elders, in equal number.

With reunion in 1983, the restriction of service on committees to presbyters, found in both predecessor constitutions, was removed as a general requirement, though it was retained for the Committee on Ministry (G-11.0501b). At that time the provision requiring equal numbers of ministers and elders on committees was amended. Committees were required to have a membership with “… at least one-half being laypersons” (Book of Order, G-9.0501b). Nominating committees were required to have two-thirds of their membership comprised of members of congregations, equally divided between laymen and laywomen (Book of Order, G-9.0801a). “Administrative and judicial commissions of presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly shall be composed of ministers of the Word and Sacrament and elders in numbers as nearly equal as possible” (Book of Order, G-9.0504b).

The changes instituted at reunion were subsequently challenged by several overtures. In 1988, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution agreed with the Overture 46-88 from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh and wrote that “… the governance of the church should be by ministers of the Word and elders who are accountable through their vows taken at ordination,” and that, “… as part of the historic polity of the Reformed tradition … councils to which decision making is assigned should be composed of one-half ministers of the Word and one-half voting elders” (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 134). The Advisory Committee on the Constitution also stated, “… that this policy would be carried too far if extended to every committee. Non-ordained church members should be able to serve on other committees as governing bodies should have flexibility in choosing the committee organization it wishes to follow. It further believes that non-ordained church members may serve on councils with voice but not vote” (Minutes, 1988, Part 1, p. 134). The overture was not approved.

The Form of Government Revision Task Force Report

The report of the Form of Government Revision Task Force would require that committees of higher governing bodies consist of teaching elders ['ministers'] and members of congregations “in approximately equal proportion.” Administrative commissions of higher governing bodies would be composed of ruling elders and teaching elders “in numbers as nearly equal as possible …” (G-3.0109). It should here be noted that what is presently known as the Committee on Ministry, if delegated the power to make decisions on behalf of the presbytery, should be constituted as a commission of the presbytery, not a committee. Similarly, governing body coordinating entities (currently referred to as “councils”) with decision-making functions should also be treated as “commissions” in regards to their composition.

Findings

The present overture would restore to the proposed revision of the Form of Government the current practice of permitting committees to be composed of an unspecified majority of members of congregations (elders and non-elders). It suggests no change to the composition of commissions. It is consistent with the stated intention of the proposed revised Form of Government to grant greater flexibility to governing bodies to structure themselves for mission. The language proposed is clear and consistent, and sufficient to accomplish its intent.

Moreover, it addresses an oversight in the proposed revision of the Form of Government, namely, that presbyteries could be hindered in the formation of investigating committees to investigate and prosecute complaints of alleged offenses.

That having been said, since governing bodies have sometimes erred in assigning decision-making functions to committees rather than commissions, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is concerned that the parity of teaching and ruling elders in the governance of the church could be eroded through the careless application of this overture. Should the new Form of Government be adopted, it would be incumbent on the Office of the General Assembly to educate governing bodies so as to limit such errors.

On Adding a New G-3.0303, “Relations with Other Presbyteries and Ecumenical Partners” to the Proposed Form of Government—From the Presbytery of Huntingdon.

The Presbytery of Huntingdon respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to add to the proposed Form of Government a new G-3.0303 Relations with Other Presbyteries and Ecumenical Partners (and renumber current 3.0303–3.0307 as 3.0304–3.0308) to read as follows:
“G-3.0303 Relations with Other Presbyteries and Ecumenical Partners

“The presbytery has a responsibility to work in partnership with its fellow presbyteries and ecumenical neighbors.

“a. The presbytery may grant a teaching elder permission to engage in work that is outside its geographic bounds or that is not under its jurisdiction, but no presbytery shall permit a teaching elder to engage in work that is within the geographic bounds of another presbytery or properly within the responsibility of another denomination without consent of that presbytery or denomination. The presbytery may not grant a teaching elder or a minister of another denomination, who is not seeking to become a member of presbytery, permission to labor within its bounds, without ascertaining the permission of the presbytery of membership or denominational body of oversight for the teaching elder or minister to work within the bounds of the presbytery.

“b. When a particular church of another denomination requests that it be received by a presbytery of this denomination, the presbytery shall verify that the church has been regularly dismissed by the council of jurisdiction, and the advice of the highest council of that denomination dealing with relations between denominations has been received, and shall then receive the church in accord with its responsibilities and powers. Similar procedures shall be followed in dismissing a particular church from this denomination to another.

“c. The presbytery may initiate mission projects in cooperation with other presbyteries and ecumenical neighbors to support the mission of its congregations and its responsibilities in G-3.03.”

Rationale

Presbyterian polity is based on connectionalism and mutual forbearance.

For more than two hundred years, our polity has called upon governing bodies (or councils) to be respectful of our council partners and our ecumenical partners.

In support of such mutual respect, our polity has required that teaching elders receive the approval of both their council of membership and that of the council within whose bounds they wish to labor, upon those occasions when the teaching elders wish to labor outside the bounds of the authority of their council of membership and vice versa.

It is imperative theologically that any council have the authority to ensure that the Word is rightly preached and the Sacraments be rightly administered within its jurisdiction and legally that those preaching in its churches have the authorization both of their council of membership and of the council of work.

Once there is more than one authority involved, there needs to be a clearly defined way of operating, knowable in advance to all parties, in order that we may be respectful of ecumenical and council partners.

The proposed Form of Government (FOG) deals with teaching elders of this denomination and ministers of other denominations who do wish to become members of presbytery, but does not deal with teaching elders and ministers who do not want to become members of the entity within whose bounds they are laboring.

This proposal does not mention any need for a presbytery to ascertain whether such non-members of presbytery have the permission of their own ecclesiastical authority to serve in its congregations.

The new FOG outlines appropriate strategies for presbyteries in their relations with less inclusive and more inclusive councils, but lacks description of appropriate strategies for presbyteries, as councils of original jurisdiction, with one another and with other denominations.

The new FOG outlines appropriate strategies for the reception of a congregation from another denomination or transfer of a PC(USA) congregation to another denomination, when they are involved in “joint congregational witness,” but fails to deal with either congregations that are not playing by the rules or congregations that are following polity, but have not been involved in “joint congregational witness.”

We should set standards of dealing with our neighbors that respect and maintain accountability with our sisters and brothers in Christ in other denominations.

Advice on Item 07-03—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve Item 07-03 with proposed amendment.
07 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON FORM OF GOVERNMENT REVISION

Rationale

The intent of Item 07-03 is to amend the proposed Form of Government to articulate the relations of a presbytery with another presbytery or an ecumenical partner. The overture seeks to provide an orderly process for presbyteries and partner denominations to exercise jurisdiction over ministers laboring in contexts outside the bounds of the presbytery or denomination of membership. In addition, it seeks to provide an orderly process for receiving congregations from other denominations, and includes language permitting joint mission endeavors with other presbyteries or denominations.

The orderly exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction is essential to the peace, unity, and purity of the Church. Jurisdiction over ministers of the Word and Sacrament (“teaching elders”) engaged in ministry within the bounds of a presbytery or in a congregation of another denomination properly belongs to that presbytery or denomination (G-11.0401a). The provision for laboring inside/outside presbytery bounds was not included in the proposed Form of Government revision. The language of proposed G-3.0303a borrows from a portion of the current G-11.0401a and adds new language regarding ministers of other denominations that addresses matters in the current G-11.0405a-c.

While the issues addressed are omitted from the proposed revised Form of Government, the language employs makes significant shifts in meaning from the current provisions. The second clause of G-11.0401a currently reads, “… but no presbytery shall permit a minister to engage in work which is within the geographic bounds of another presbytery and which is properly within the responsibility of another presbytery without consent of that presbytery” (Book of Order, G-11.0401a, emphasis added). The present overture not only omits the clause limiting the conditions under which consent of the other presbytery is required, in so doing, it has the effect of altering the understanding of presbytery jurisdiction over ministers. (See Item 05-23, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution answer to a request from the manager for Polity Guidance and Training.)

By inserting language pertaining to ministers of another denomination at the proposed G-3.0303a, the overture outlines procedures for circumstances not addressed in proposed G-2.0506 which assumes the transfer or dual enrollment of the laboring minister. However, a literal reading of the provision would require that permission to labor be obtained even when the minister of another denomination is serving a church of that (or another) denomination. Should the General Assembly wish to approve the language of this section, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that it be amended as follows:

“… The presbytery may not grant a teaching elder or a minister of another denomination, who is not seeking to become a member of presbytery, permission to labor in a congregation under its jurisdiction within its bounds, without ascertaining the permission of the presbytery of membership or denominational body of oversight for the teaching elder or minister to work within the bounds of the presbytery.”

The intent of proposed G-3.0303b is also appropriate. However, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the word “shall” at the end of the first sentence be amended to “may.” A presbytery has the right to decline requests that a church be received from another denomination. The language of Item 07-03b would then read: [Text to be deleted is shown with a; strike-through; text to be added is shown as italic.]

“b. When a particular church of another denomination requests that it be received by a presbytery of this denomination, the presbytery shall verify that the church has been regularly dismissed by the council of jurisdiction, and the advice of the highest council of that denomination dealing with relations between denominations has been received, and shall may then receive the church in accord with its responsibilities and powers. Similar procedures shall be followed in dismissing a particular church from this denomination to another.”

The intent of proposed G-3.0303c is appropriate and consistent with proposed Form of Government revision. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes the language to be unnecessary to empower such mutual mission endeavors; however, in the context of the proposed amendment it provides helpful clarification.

[The assembly answered Item 07-04 by the action taken on Item 07-01, Recommendation 1. See pp. 18, 25.]

On Commending the Work of the FOG Task Force to the Church for Additional Study and Discernment—From the Presbytery of Middle Tennessee.

The Presbytery of Middle Tennessee overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to do the following:

1. Receive the report and recommendations of the FOG Task Force with thanks, and commend the latest work of the task force to the church for an additional period of study and discernment.

2. Affirm the goals of a more missional, less regulatory form of governance and conclude that the church has not broadly studied, nor adequately digested, the effects and implications of sweeping changes as proposed by the FOG Task Force. The goals of a further discernment process should include a. building greater understanding of FOG (or revisions as needed) among presbyteries and congregations that must live with—and make successful—any future form of governance;

b. further examination of the implications and intended (or unintended) consequences of such sweeping reform;

c. building confidence, trust, and “ownership” broadly within the PC(USA) for governance reforms to be undertaken.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-04

Advice on Item 07-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to answer Item 07-04 with its response to Item 07-01, Form of Government Task Force Report.

Rationale

This overture asks the General Assembly to commend the report of the Task Force on the Form of Government to the church for an additional period of study and discernment. The overture suggests goals, but not means, for the study and discernment process.

The 218th General Assembly (2008), received a number of overtures requesting that the report and recommendations of the Form of Government Task Force be referred for additional study. The passage of two years during which some presbyteries and sessions have studied the documents, and during which the augmented Form of Government Task Force has consulted broadly across the church and further refined its report and recommendations, does not diminish the authority of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to refer the current proposal for further study.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution reminds the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the advice we gave to the 218th General Assembly (2008):

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that it should consider the purpose of such a study. If the purpose of the referral is to provide opportunity for longer and more careful study of the proposed polity, then the ACC advises the assembly that some means and process will be necessary to accomplish the study, so that the church may be better prepared to vote on the revisions than it is at present. If the purpose of the referral is to delay action because of opposition to the proposed revision, the ACC reminds the assembly that the most effective way to oppose a proposed action is to speak and vote against it, rather than to postpone action with no plan for bringing more light to the discussion. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 453)

Item 07-05

On Developing the Form of Government as an Enabling Constitution Instead of a Manual of Operations—From the Presbytery of Foothills.

The Presbytery of Foothills overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to do the following:

1. Develop the Form of Government further as an enabling constitution instead of a manual of operations, and thereby help heal the present breakdown of governance.

2. Approve the proposed revision of the General Assembly Form of Government Revision Task Force (9/1/2009) as a step in that direction.

3. Establish a General Assembly-presbyteries partnership to develop the enabling constitution.

Rationale

A. The current breakdown in governance for the PC(USA) is directly linked to the Form of Government (FOG) as a manual of operations.

1. The view is widespread among Presbyterians and the general public: If religion is a matter of the heart, why do we need any organization, rules, or doctrine?

2. A manual of operations establishes rules, doctrine, and organization for everyone and every situation, at every level of the church’s operation. The rules are subject to frequent, easy change, but all members are expected to agree and keep the rules uniformly. Uniform enforcement for a manual of operations comes either by hierarchy from the top down or by peer pressure from the bottom up. Such demands for uniformity have repeatedly caused schisms over the history of American Presbyterians (1706–present). The same dynamics are at work in the PC(USA) today. As before, demands for uniformity disturb the peace, unity, and purity of the entire church—right, left, and center—and undermine its life and mission.

3. The simple majority now required to amend the Book of Order intensifies the dynamics of uniformity, especially at the General Assembly level. For the steady hand of governance over time, the church needs a broad consensus for making changes, hence a supermajority vote to adopt amendments and authoritative interpretations.

4. A manual of operations concentrates on the mechanics of church government, with theology operating separately at another level. Such “layering” disconnects the church’s confessions from its practice of governance.

B. An enabling constitution is better suited to Presbyterian church government and the governance of a large, multifaceted church.

1. The focus of an enabling constitution is on the principles of Presbyterian church government stated simply and clearly, with their biblical-theological warrants and roots.

2. An enabling constitution finds the unity of the church in Jesus Christ, the true governor of the Church. Such unity is connectional, with clear lines of authorization for each congregation and governing body of the church. The lower councils are subject to review and control by the higher councils, but they have such mutual relations that the act of one council at any level is an act of the whole church. This kind of unity, in Christ, requires shared worship, vigorous conversation, strong collegiality, and mutual cooperation, in sharp contrast to the uniformity demanded by a top-down hierarchy or bottom-up peer pressure.

3. The challenge of an enabling constitution, coordinated with the church’s stated theology, is to set definite standards for congregations, members, officers, and church courts; and enable the faithfulness, focus, vigor, creativity, flexibility, resources, and diversity essential to Christian mission for a variety of localities, times, people, and situations.

C. The proposed FOG Revision, while still in a manual of operations mode, is nonetheless an important, incremental step forward, and should be the starting point for developing the FOG as an enabling constitution. The accomplishments include:

1. A considered focus on mission at a foundational level;

2. Recognition that Presbyterian church government is structured around the marks of the true Church, definitively those of the Reformation;

3. A reduction in the size and complexity of the Form of Government;

4. An important shift in language toward orders of ministry, away from a personality-centered approach to church offices, especially for the clergy; and

5. A growing accent on Christ as the point of church unity amidst diversity.

D. As a way to proceed, a General Assembly-presbyteries partnership with a transparent, on-going dialog over church governance, offers important benefits. Such a partnership entails a General Assembly group interacting with corresponding groups in the presbyteries. The linkage between the current breakdown of governance and the Form of Government makes a major revision of the FOG crucial for the whole PC(USA). A General Assembly-presbyteries partnership would not only engage the whole church in shaping our future under God but also help to heal the present crisis of governance. Rationale E contains a list of issues that deserve active consideration going forward. Rationale F contains a list of suggestions for putting together the General Assembly side of the partnership.

E. The following issues deserve active consideration, going forward:

1. Whether the vision of the church participating in the ongoing, active life of the risen Jesus Christ (I/we as active members in Christ’s own body) holds greater promise for mission, creativity, and faithfulness than the instrumentalist vision (Christ embodied in and working through me/us) now in place;

2. Whether amendments to and authoritative interpretations of the Book of Order should require supermajority votes;

3. Whether the judicial mechanisms of the church need greater coherence and transparency (notably the ladder of PJC, bound by final decisions of the GAPJC, coordinated with the new, separate, powerful role of the ACC);

4. Whether the formative role of the confessions in the life and governance of the PC(USA) can be clarified and strengthened;

5. Whether the orders of ministry, the mission of the congregation, and the councils of the church need more concrete, transparent foundations;
6. Whether provisions for the standards, preparation, examination, and handling of the teaching elder are adequate and properly assigned;

7. Whether the finances of the church are matters of negotiation and voluntary commitment at every level of the church; and

8. Whether the overlapping repetitions of language in the Form of Government can be reduced and the tone of the document moderated.

F. Whenever the General Assembly appoints a partnering group to correspond with similar groups in the presbyteries, we suggest that:

1. The number of General Assembly partners be up to but not more than sixteen.

2. The members include at least:
   - two people with legal training;
   - active pastors from different backgrounds, ages, and experiences;
   - an active general presbyter;
   - lay persons for half the members, with due consideration given to gender, ethnic, and geographical representation; and
   - a trained theologian who is actively engaged with both the confessions and the Form of Government.

3. The General Assembly partners report their progress transparently at least quarterly over the Internet and to each subsequent meeting of the General Assembly until its work is over and the partnership is dissolved.

4. The General Assembly partners leave untouched the property provisions of the current Book of Order and the controversial part of G-6.0106b, unless or until these matters are changed by the larger church.

5. A supermajority vote be required to adopt the enabling constitution (Form of Government) by the General Assembly and the presbyteries.

6. Any change in the voting requirement for amendments and authoritative interpretations be delayed for at least two years after any new enabling constitution is adopted.

Endnotes

1. The disconnection arises from separating the Gospel and the work of the Church into different “layers,” in which God and the Gospel operate at one “layer,” while the merely functional, human practices of worship, service, and governance operate at another “layer.” Connecting the “layers” appears to hinge on a human response and effort that is optional. The disconnection thus remains and with it a crushing sense of the irrelevance of the Gospel to life, and of theology to polity—an irrelevance which all Christians in our time struggle daily to overcome. “Layered” language running through both the Revision and the current FOG includes: call-and-response, Church-and-World, God-and-Church-as-instrument, theory-and-practice. The corrective is to remove the “layered” language from the Form of Government and clarify the origin and role of the confessions in the life of the church.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-05

Advice on Item 07-05—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) regarding Item 07-05 as follows:

Rationale

The present overture seeks to develop the Form of Government “… as an enabling constitution instead of a manual of operations” (Item 07-05); approve the proposed revision coming to this assembly “… as a step in that direction”(Ibid.); and establish a partnership between the General Assembly and presbyteries to further reform the Constitution.
As to the first action proposed in the overture, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) notes that it has previously offered advice consistent with the intent of this action. The committee advises that this part of the overture be answered by the advice on the Report of the Form of Government Task Force (Item 07-01).

As to the second action proposed in the overture, the ACC recommends that this part of the overture be answered by the advice on the Form of Government Task Force, found with Item 07-01.

As to the third action proposed in the overture, the ACC recommends this action be disapproved.

The committee finds the recommended process, “a General Assembly-presbyteries partnership,” to be inconsistent with the Constitution. The process for amending the Book of Order is found in G-18.0300. Should the General Assembly wish to develop recommendations to amend the Book of Order, the appropriate process would be through a committee (or “task force”), per G-9.0501a:

> A committee is appointed either to study and recommend appropriate action or to carry out directions or decisions already made by a governing body. It shall make a full report to the governing body that created it, and its recommendations shall require action by the governing body. (Book of Order, G-9.0501a)

The General Assembly may constitute such a task force, consistent with requirements found in G-9.0501b, in the manner that best suits its needs. Moreover, in seeking and obtaining input for its work, the committee or task force should honor the principles of administration found in G-9.0404, which would require consultation with synods.

On Amending G-3.0103 and G-3.0111 of the Proposed Form of Government—From the Presbytery of San Fernando.

The Presbytery of San Fernando overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to do the following:

1. Amend the proposed language of the second paragraph of G-3.0103 in the proposed Form of Government as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “Each council shall develop procedures and mechanisms for promoting and reviewing that body’s implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation. Councils above the session shall establish an independent committee on representation in accordance with the Articles of Agreement by their own rule committees or entities to fulfill the following functions: to advise and report to the council regarding the fair and effective implementation of principles of unity and diversity, to advocate for diversity in leadership, and to consult with the council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403.”

2. Amend the proposed language of G-3.0111 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “All councils higher than the session shall have a process for nominating persons to serve in positions requiring election by the council. The process shall ensure that nominations are made by an entity broadly representative of the constituency of the council, in consultation with the council’s committee on representation, and in conformity with the church’s commitment to unity in diversity (F-1.0403).”

Rationale

Having studied the proposed Form of Government that will come before the 219th General Assembly (2010), we are concerned about the potential lack of representative accountability and the message we may be sending to our churches and the community at large about our commitment to diversity and full and fair representation, which has been addressed heretofore by the Committee on Representation.

We do not think the proposed Form of Government adequately takes into consideration the following:

- the potential challenge to the Articles of Agreement;
- the nature of cultural integration and understanding;
- the nature of the Committee on Representation as compared with other committees and entities.

1. The Committee on Representation is mandated by the 1983 Articles of Agreement. Some of the other Articles are time specific. However, the committee on representation is not, implying that it was intended to be a permanent committee. If the Book of Order is amended, and the COR is not defined and constituted in a way consistent with the Articles, the Articles may be challenged. We are concerned that a challenge to the Articles would make them subject to interpretation. Furthermore, we strongly believe that the original concern for parity in the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that is expressed in the Articles of Agreement, is of no less importance now. We do not think the proposed FOG adequately takes this into consideration.

2. G-3.0103 states that “the councils of the church shall give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and shall provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment.” We are concerned that the proposed FOG without specific mechanisms for implementation and oversight is not enough to enforce the imperative “shall.” People naturally seek sameness. For cultures to be integrated, we must be challenged. “Full participation and access” are terms open to interpretation. While we understand that the intention of the proposed FOG is to give us more flexibility. We fear that in this case, it may be too much flexibility. The task of learning to love, which is at the essence of cultural integration, is not accomplished by good intentions. It is learned in the midst of change and challenge. Change is not something we find comfortable. It must be intentional. We must have some sort of accountability; or we may naturally, and perhaps unintentionally, define our “membership” as “us.”

3. While there are many committees, like the Committee on Ministry or Committee on Preparation for Ministry, that are not spelled out in the proposed FOG, we see those entities as ones that address the concerns of “us.” There is a necessary degree of self-interest involved as we strive to order our ministry and mission. Committees on representation however, seek to challenge the definition of “us.” This sets them apart from other entities. If “participation” is left to our ruling councils to define and form, our concern is that we will not actively seek parity. There must be something, a separate entity, to create and maintain a healthy tension, without which we will not change.

In particular:

• We think that by including “in accordance with the Articles of Agreement,” we are referred to our foundational values, and a model after which we may create our own accountability for parity.

• The reporting of this separate committee to its council we think is crucial for accountability.

• We also think maintaining the “fair and effective” qualification lends some needed evaluative weight.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-06

Advice on Item 07-06—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 07-06 presents the following issues that the assembly should consider.

Rationale

In considering the present need for naming a specific structure for helping the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership, and for specifying its composition, the General Assembly should seek to discern the current realities and opportunities, and the best ways of expressing our unity in diversity. The assembly should give attention to our church’s experience of functioning with the constitutionally-specified committees on representation, to the accomplishments made through that structure to date, and to the need for further efforts to give full expression to the rich diversity within the church’s membership.

At the time of Reunion, the reuniting churches intended that:

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life …” (Book of Order, G-4.0403).

In furtherance of this intention, the Plan for Reunion included G-9.0105, the constitutional mandate for the committee on representation. Neither of the reuniting churches had a similar constitutionally-mandated structure. The committee on representation was not compromise, merger, or blend of structures in the reuniting churches but was a new venture for the new church.

In 1992 the General Assembly approved an amendment that added G-9.0105a–(6), naming “persons with disabilities” as an additional category for membership on the committee on representation. This amendment was a development in the church’s efforts to give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership.
The overture states that the Proposed Form of Government might raise a challenge to the Articles of Agreement if it does not require councils above the session to establish a committee on representation as described in the Articles of Agreement. This concern appears to arise from a misunderstanding of the role and purpose of the Articles of Agreement, which were not intended to be or become the foundational documents of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The final paragraph of the Preamble to the Articles of Agreement states:

Immediately upon the formation of the reunited Church, its new Constitution (G-1.0500) will be operative. It, rather than the Articles of Agreement, is the basic document of the single church and is subject to amendment in accordance with its provisions. (Book of Order, Appendix B, Articles of Agreement)

The reunited church fulfilled its responsibilities under Article 8.1 of the Articles of Agreement when it began functioning under its new Constitution, which established a committee on representation for each governing body beyond the session.

The overture incorrectly infers from the silence in the Articles of Agreement about an end date for the committee on representation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was intended to maintain the committees on representation forever.

Section G-18.0302 lists the constitutional provisions that are not to be amended, and that list did not (and does not) include G-9.0105, the section that established committees on representation.

In 1993, an overture (93-31) proposed the removal of G-9.0105 and G-9.0106 from the Book of Order, eliminating the constitutional mandate for the committees on representation. At that time the Advisory Committee on the Constitution said:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware of how difficult it is for many governing bodies to accept the principles and implementation of the section of the Book of Order that mandates a committee on representation at each level above the session.

The advisory committee is also aware that one of the reasons that principles as well as methods of implementation are in the Book of Order is to keep these issues before the church in order to assure compliance. Removing G-9.0105 will remove one more indication of good faith, showing those who have been discriminated against that they are of little importance. So much so that they need not be mentioned in the one place where the church’s policies and commitments can readily be seen by all.

The Presbytery of Scioto Valley fears quotas as it perceives this establishment of committee on representation membership to be. The presbytery seems to be unaware that before this, the quota system was used to limit the participation of persons listed in G-9.0105. The selection of the members of the committee based on what is to be monitored seems to be reasonable to the advisory committee. (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 314)

The distinction between our 1993 advice and our current advice has to do with the difference in what was being proposed. The 1993 advice concerned a proposal that singled out the committees on representation for elimination as a constitutional structure. Our current advice on the proposed Form of Government concerns a revision to the Form of Government that removes specific references to most of the currently mandated structures, one that assigns specific responsibilities to the councils, and that allows the councils to determine the best way to fulfill those responsibilities.

The overture proposes inserting into G-3.0103 the words “independent committee on representation in accordance with the Articles of Agreement” This insertion raises a number of issues.

First, “independent” suggests that the committee might not be subject to review and accountability. Perhaps the overture means to state that the committee on representation is not to be merged with or made a subcommittee of any other committee.

Second, “in accordance with the Articles of Agreement” would require the committee’s composition to be as the Constitution provided from 1983 to 1992, but would undo the mandated inclusion of “persons with disabilities” that has been in force since 1992. The General Assembly should be aware that mandating committees on representation in accordance with the Articles of Agreement would disenfranchise persons with disabilities. If the assembly believes that the attributes of the committee need to be specified in the Constitution, it would be appropriate to state the specific attributes that it believes will best promote the purposes of the committees on representation. To refer to the Articles of Agreement here, without a clear statement of which guidelines from the Articles of Agreement are intended for constitutional mandate, would tie the church to a standard that the church found inadequate seventeen years ago.

The overture’s proposal that the committee’s duty to “advise” needs to be replaced with “advise and report” is one that would add redundant language to the provision.

The overture’s proposal to insert the words “fair and effective” also adds unnecessary words to the provision, as though any council of the church would otherwise hope for any of its committees to recommend unfair or ineffective implementation of principles the council wishes to lift up.

The proposed amendment to G-3.0111 is in appropriate language that is consistent with the intent of the overture. However, if G-3.0103 is not amended to name the committees on representation, it would not be appropriate to amend G-3.0111 as suggested.

If the 219th General Assembly (2010) believes that the intent of Item 07-06 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed language for G-3.0103 in the recommendation of the Form of Government Task Force can be made consistent with that intent by amending it as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Each council shall develop procedures and mechanisms for promoting and reviewing that body’s implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation. Councils above the session shall establish committees on representation to fulfill the following functions: to advise the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, to advocate for diversity in leadership, and to consult with the council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403. The membership of the committees on representation shall consist of equal numbers of men and women. A majority of the members shall be selected from among the racial ethnic minorities within the council, and the total membership shall include persons from each of the following categories: majority male membership; majority female membership; racial ethnic male membership; racial ethnic female membership; youth male and female membership; and persons with disabilities. The committee on representation shall not be merged with another committee or made a subcommittee of another committee.”

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) concurs with the advice of the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) and advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 07-06 be approved.

Rationale

The report of the Form of Government Task Force proposes that “The councils of the church shall give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and shall provide full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices (F-1.0403). In fulfilling this commitment, councils shall give due consideration to both the gifts and requirements for ministry (G-2.0104) and the right of people in congregations and councils to elect their officers (F-3.0106)” (Item 07-01, G-3.0103); and “Each council shall develop procedures and mechanisms for promoting and reviewing that body’s implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation…” (Item 07-01, G-3.0103), but it does not provide a specific manner to fulfill this requirement.

The proposed overture, Item 07-06, with the proposed amendments of the Committee on Representation (GACOR), proposes the creation of a committee on representation in each council above the session to advise and report to the council regarding its implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation.

Comment on Item 07-06—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) agrees with the intent of Item 07-06, and advises the 219th General Assembly to approve the recommended amendments to the proposed Form of Government (Item 07-01).

The General Assembly is asked to read the comment of the GACOR offered on Item 07-01.

On Receiving the Report of the Form of Government Task Force and Posting a Draft on the Website Inviting Presbyteries to Propose Specific Amendment to the Present Form of Government—From the Presbytery of Central Washington.

The Presbytery of Central Washington overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Receive the report and recommendations of the Form of Government (FOG) Task Force;
2. Dismiss the task force with thanks;
3. Direct the Stated Clerk to have OGA staff post the draft of the task force-recommended substitutes for the present Form of Government on the PC(USA) website for informational purposes; and
4. Direct the Stated Clerk to send correspondence to the presbyteries inviting them to consider proposing specific amendments to the present Form of Government to improve and enhance the ways in which we govern ourselves missionally.
Rationale

We believe that the proposed changes to the Constitution of the PC(USA) are so vast and foundational, that they are not simply changes to our current communion, but would go so far as to functionally constitute the creation of a new denomination. As such, we believe that many who have taken ordination vows to a vastly different constitution would no longer believe that their vows were still in force. We believe the potential chaos of both intentional changes and unintended, unforeseen consequences will not serve to advance the mission of the church and will only escalate the level of strife and distrust that already exists.

An action of the 217th General Assembly (2006) created the Form of Government (FOG) Task Force, which was charged with producing a simplified and shortened version of the Form of Government (“G” section) of the Book of Order. They completed their task, and presented their report to the 218th General Assembly (2008). However, that report had very little support. A number of presbyteries submitted overtures related to the report to the General Assembly in 2008, none urging its passage. With the exclusion of the members of the task force, testimony before the General Assembly committee considering the report was virtually unanimous in its concern about the rewrite. At one point in the committee consideration, a member of the committee actually asked whether there was someone other than a Task Force member to speak in favor of the adoption of the Form of Government report. (There was no response.) After their work the General Assembly, the committee probably should have made a recommendation to General Assembly similar to the one being proposed above. However, the committee, as is frequently the case, found it very difficult to say “no” to the task force of sincere, hard-working folks who had invested so much time and effort in this report. So, the action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) was ultimately to reconstitute the task force and instruct them to work on the report for two more years. Unfortunately, the revised or new Form of Government report (nFOG) being presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010) inspires no more enthusiasm for its passage than the previous version.

The problem with the “old” FOG and the nFOG reports is not the quality of the work, or the effort made by the task force, but the impossibility of the task they were assigned to do. The chilly reception for their work indicates that there is very little enthusiasm around the denomination for a total rewrite of the “G” section of the Book of Order. Virtually every line of the present document is the result of some question that arose, or problem that needed resolution. Many of those lines represent substantial amounts of study, debate, and affirmative votes in the presbyteries. In a time when trust is in such short supply in our denomination, there is simply little interest in throwing the present document out. The proposal to shorten the Form of Government and eliminate duplications sounded like a great idea, until someone actually tried to produce a new document. Every removed, changed, or relocated sentence incites someone’s ire. (And the new version only marginally reduces the size.)

A compelling case has not been made that we need a total overhaul of the Form of Government. We are told that the nFOG report is more “missional” and that it is more “flexible.” Yet, curiously, we are not told exactly how the existing version is restricting the mission of the church, or how its specificity prevents presbyteries and sessions from working within the rules to meet the present needs of the people of God and the surrounding culture. Since there is no great demonstrable need to make polity changes, it seems pointless to roil the church with this overwhelming level of change at this time.

In addition to the general concerns about the nFOG report mentioned above, there are numerous specific concerns. A few of them are enumerated in the following:

• Concern about a diminished view of Scripture: The primary role of Scripture is not mentioned in the sections on the “Apostolicity of the Church” (nFOG F-1.0302d) and the “Unity of the Church” (nFOG F-1.0302a), or in the new section on the “Catholicity of the Church” (nFOG F-1.0302c). The present G-1.0100c is quite clear on the church’s responsibility to govern itself according to God’s Word. The new version found in F-1.0203 would read that “…Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed.” This moves Scripture one step further from actually conveying the will of Christ, thereby continuing the problem of separating the Word from Scripture.

• Concern about an impoverished Christology: The current G-1.0100a recognizes that Christ has been set above “…all power and dominion, and every name that is named …”. G-1.0100b presently speaks of Christ “…exercising his authority by the ministry of women and men for the establishment and extension of his Kingdom.” This grand language is lost in the nFOG.

• Concern about new GA powers related to financial assessments: The nFOG poses enormous danger to the finances of both presbyteries and sessions. The wording in nFOG G-3.0106 could require presbyteries to pay whatever the synods and the General Assembly assess, not only for per capita, but also for the mission budget. Such assessments would not have to be... made on a per member basis, but could be based on the presbytery’s analysis of a session’s ability to pay. For the first time ever, sessions could be punished if they did not pay assessed charges.

- Concern about loss of due process for pastors and congregations: Under nFOG many of the existing procedures related to the relationship between pastors, congregations, and the presbytery are eliminated or changed. An example is that nFOG G-2.0901 allows that a congregational meeting is not even required if “… the presbytery expressly finds that the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands dissolution of the relationship without such a meeting.” All the careful due process to dissolve a pastoral relationship presently prescribed in G-14.0600 would be gone. This is a breathtaking expansion of presbytery powers. The thought that a committee composed of as few as four members could be delegated plenary power to dissolve any and all pastoral relationships without due process should be unthinkable to Presbyterians.

- Other concerns about increased presbytery power: Criteria for determining the number of elders representing each congregation, currently found in G-11.0101 is eliminated in nFOG. G-3.0301 of nFOG says the presbytery shall adopt a plan for elder representation. Instead of membership, other criteria such as contributions, membership on presbytery committees, or theological stance could be used. All restrictions placed on calling special presbytery meetings are removed from nFOG. Instead, each presbytery is to establish its own rules related to special meetings.

- Concern about creating significant new work for governing bodies: G-3.0106 of the nFOG says that each council (governing body) “… shall develop a manual of administrative operations that will specify the form and guide the work of mission in that council.” These manuals are to provide the details that the rewrite simply omits. The nFOG requires governing bodies, from session up to the General Assembly, to take the time and effort to create multiple extensive new manuals of operation to replace regulations that are presently provided for everyone in the Book of Order.

- Concern about less accountability: One of the problems resulting from shifting so many policies and procedures out of the Constitution and into local manuals is that none of those policies would then be subject to the jurisdiction of permanent judicial commissions. The GAPJC has already ruled (in Hope et al v Presbytery of San Francisco) that it will not rule on violations of requirements that are not found in the Constitution.

- Concern about de-emphasis on Roberts’ Rules of Order: F-3.0205 of the nFOG would enshrine the present enthusiasm for “alternative methods of discernment” in the Constitution. Such an ill-advised attempt to replace Roberts’ Rules can only serve to rob minorities of their rights and will not increase the level of trust or the quality of decisions in the PC(USA).

- Concern about the difficulty of comparing documents to determine what has been moved or changed, and the virtual impossibility of determining what has been eliminated from the original: The study material provided to compare the current Form of Government with nFOG is voluminous, and very difficult to work with. In many cases, however, the problem with nFOG is not what is there, the problem is what is not there. It is insufficient simply to read the nFOG by itself and thus to decide if it should be adopted. Because it is purposefully shorter, and because it purposefully omits many requirements that are found in the present Form of Government, the only way to evaluate it properly is to examine the nature of the omissions. There is no other reasonable way to do this.

- Concern about congregational meetings: Most of the requirements related to congregational meetings (G-7.0303b, G-7.0302c, G-7.0305, G-7.0307) are omitted in the nFOG, opening the door to mischief, particularly in the ability to schedule “snap” meetings, or reduce the necessary quorum.

- Concern about loss of congregational power: Current G-7.0202a says that a newly organized congregation shall elect officers, making provision for their preparation, examination, ordination, and installation. However, nFOG’s G-1.0201 gives this responsibility exclusively to the presbytery. The current section on the “permissive powers of a congregation,” spelled out in G-7.0304 a (5), is completely omitted in the nFOG.

- Concern about voluntary covenants: The words voluntarily and voluntary are conspicuously removed from G-1.0102 and 1.0103 in the nFOG.

- Concern about watering down ordination standards: The requirement currently in G-11.0404b and G-14.0440 for supermajority presbytery approval for waiving ordination requirements is excluded from nFOG.

- Concern that candidates’ preparation becomes more difficult: The five areas of examination presently found in G-14.0431 are missing from nFOG G-2.0607d, leaving open the possibility that the General Assembly or the Cooperative Committee on Examinations simply could decide that a new area of examination would be required. Also, nFOG G-2.0606 adds a new requirement that candidates “… engage in some sort of supervised service to the church.”

- Concern about politics in pastoral succession: nFOG G-2.0504 would allow parish associates, associate pastors, and interim pastors to be eligible, with a three-quarters vote of the presbytery, to be the next installed pastor of the church they are serving. A particular problem with this provision is that it would seriously undermine the current understanding of an interim’s job. Interims might be seen as candidating for the open position, rather than taking the hard steps to heal and unite the congregation.

- Concern about expansion of the requirements for “inclusiveness”: nFOG F-1.0403 gives a much less specific list of categories of persons for inclusion than is presently found in G-4.0403. However, the third sentence of the same paragraph in nFOG F-1.0403 says “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership.” But what are “persons or groups within its membership”? It appears that a governing body might choose to include in their manual of operations any number of other groups for “inclusion.” Inclusion of a group so defined by a presbytery would then be mandatory for a session in that presbytery.

- Concern about how specific parts of the nFOG relate to the whole of the document: The first four chapters of the current Form of Government are combined into a new section called “The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity.” Although many would agree that those chapters currently lay out the “foundations” for the PC(USA), it is unclear what the impact of separating that language into a stand alone section of the Constitution might be. Is this a super section, overriding guidelines expressed elsewhere? Are the provisions for amending this section the same?

Concurrence to Item 07-07 from the Presbytery of Chicago (with Additional Rationale).

- The removal of the accrued “best practices” in the current Book of Order that were developed incrementally through many years of experience has the effect of creating a vacuum of procedures and practices that will have to be laboriously filled with the required new manuals of operation at every level of church governance. The time and energy this will require will not enhance mission but impede it for the foreseeable future.

- One of the primary claims made by proponents of the Proposed New Form of Government (nFOG) is that it is a missional ecclesiology. We do not find that the present Form of Governance has in itself hampered mission. Nor does adoption of such sweeping change as proposed by this nFOG enhance the church’s ability to do mission or to be missional.

- One consequence (perhaps unintended) of removing so much material from our Constitution will be to allow such variance in governance, and therefore in actual mission and ministry in different presbyteries and sessions, that what recognizable identity and unity that the PC(USA) has now is likely to be diluted.

- Changes in the Form of Government or G-section of the nFOG reduce congregational freedom in selecting mission, controlling offerings, choosing leaders, and even in deciding what may be appropriate for discussion at a congregational meeting.

- While the present Form of Government has many specifics (pejoratively characterized as “manual of operations”), those specific provisions serve to create a coherent and recognizable whole church in which the act of any governing body can be understood to be the act of the whole denomination. The effect of removing such common determinations would be to further destabilize a denomination already struggling to maintain its unity. The low ebb of trust that is now a fact in the PC(USA) is further drained when the playing field starts changing in ways that may or may not be accountable.

- Accountability is a problem in the new structure because many of the decisions taken in governing bodies under the nFOG will be governed by self-determined manuals. Manuals by definition are not the constitution.

- Because of the change in wording in many areas of the nFOG, settled precedent in General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission [GAPJC] decisions may not apply or may require further and repeated remedial cases to adjust to the changes. No certainty can be inferred from claims to the contrary.

- The change in definition of “church” (lower case “c”) from its current usage in the Form of Government to mean “the PC(USA)” in the Proposed New Form of Government (nFOG) has such enormous effect that has yet to be noticed, much less understood because of its sweeping implications. Footnote 1 (attached to the section heading of CHAPTER ONE, THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH) states:

  Throughout this document and the Form of Government, the capitalized term “Church” refers to the Church Universal, the Church as it is called to be in Christ; the lower-case term “church” refers to denominations, except as part of a title (i.e. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)). In place of the vernacular use of “church” to denote a congregation of believers, the term “congregation” is used. (Item 07-01, Form of Government Task Force Report, p. 1)

Concurrence to Item 07-07 from the Presbytery of Tropical Florida (with Additional Rationale)

We believe that the Proposed new Form of Government (nFOG) tampers with currently accepted theology.
The nFOG assigns new powers to governing bodies, specifically in the area of ordination; proposes removing precedents established by the church courts; generates concern about its effect on a session’s freedom to exercise stewardship principles and scruples, and about the new power given to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

We are also concerned that the Proposed Form of Government proposes changes in the meaning of “inclusiveness.” We believe that nFOG is less insightful about the mission of the church than the current form of government; that it generates concern that current practices and regulations which govern us will be eliminated altogether; that it has internal conflicts that seem to contradict themselves; and that it contains vague and confusing language that will lead to subjective interpretations and possible institutional chaos.

We also note that overtures concerning the Proposed new Form of Government have been unanimous in opposing the rewrite submitted in previous years, and we believe that it does not improve on our current Book of Order.

Concurrence to Item 07-07 from the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks (with Additional Rationale)

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks recognizes that a similar overture has been submitted to the assembly by the Presbytery of Central Washington (Item 07-07). While we concur with the text of the overture, we do not support the rationale of Item 07-07 and offer this as an alternative.

An action of the 217th General Assembly (2006) created the Form of Government (FOG) Task Force, which was charged with producing a simplified and shortened version of the Form of Government (“G” section) of the Book of Order. They completed their task, and presented their report to the 218th General Assembly (2008). However, that report had very little support. A number of presbyteries submitted overtures related to the report to the 218th General Assembly (2008), none urging its passage. With the exclusion of the members of the task force, testimony before the General Assembly committee considering the report was virtually unanimous in its concern about the rewrite. At one point in the committee consideration, a member of the committee actually asked, isn’t there someone other than a task force member who wants to speak in favor of the approval of the FOG report? (There was no response.) After their work, the General Assembly committee probably should have made a recommendation to General Assembly similar to the one being proposed above. However, the committee, as is frequently the case, found it very difficult to say NO to the task force of sincere, hard-working folks who had invested so much time and effort in their report. So the action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) ultimately was to reconstitute the task force and instruct them to work on the report for two more years. Unfortunately, the revised, or new, Form of Government report (nFOG) being presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010) inspires no more enthusiasm for its passage than the previous version.

The problem with FOG and nFOG reports is not the quality of the work, or the effort made by the task force, but the impossibility of the task they were assigned to do. The chilly reception for their work indicates that there is very little enthusiasm around the denomination for a total rewrite of the “G” section of the Book of Order. Virtually every line of the present document is there as a result of some question that arose, or problem that needed resolution, and many of those lines represent substantial amounts of study, debate, and affirmative votes in the presbyteries. In a time when trust is in such short supply in our denomination, there is simply little interest in throwing the present document out. A proposal to shorten the Form of Government and eliminate duplications sounded like a great idea, until someone actually tried to produce a new document. Every removed, changed, or relocated sentence incites someone’s ire. (And the new version only marginally reduces the size.)

A compelling case has not been made that we need a total overhaul of the Form of Government. We are told that the nFOG report is more “missional” and that it is more “flexible”. And yet, curiously, we are not told exactly how the existing version is restricting the mission of the church, or how its specificity prevents presbyteries and sessions from working within the rules to meet the present needs of the people of God and the surrounding culture. Moreover, a change of this magnitude carries with it the likelihood of unintended and unforeseen consequences that could significantly affect the polity and mission of our church. This would argue for a more incremental approach to change. Since there is no great demonstrable need to make polity changes, it seems pointless to roil the church with this overwhelming level of change at this time.

Advice on Item 07-07—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to answer Item 07-07 with its response to Item 07-01, the Report of the Form of Government Task Force.

Rationale

This overture asks the General Assembly to take four actions that it could take individually or jointly in a way that is consistent with either approving or disapproving the report and recommendations of the Form of Government Task Force.
When the Task Force presents its report to the 219th General Assembly (2010), the assembly will have received it. The 219th General Assembly (2010) can dismiss a task force with thanks, without regard for its action on the recommendations of the task force. The Report and Recommendations are already posted on the church’s website, and the 219th General Assembly (2010) can order that they remain on the website. Further, it is always in order for presbyteries to submit proposed amendments of any of the amendable provisions of the Book of Order.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) reported to the 218th General Assembly (2008):

... In reviewing the business coming to the 218th General Assembly (2008), the advisory committee notes that a number of overtures in effect seek to bring motions to postpone or motions to refer particular business before the assembly. The advisory committee reminds the church that these procedural motions could be brought by any commissioner. While such overtures are perfectly permissible, they suggest a lack of trust that the Holy Spirit will work by and through the commissioners to the assembly. The advisory committee reminds the church that such trust in the workings of the Holy Spirit is central to the functioning of our polity …” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 286).

From the rationale for the overture it appears that the intention is that the set of four actions should be approved as a disapproval of the recommendations of the task force.

The ACC advised the 218th General Assembly (2008) that it had the authority to approve or disapprove the recommendations of the Task Force on the Form of Government. The 219th General Assembly (2010) has the same authority to approve or disapprove the report and recommendations of the task force.

On Amending the G-3.0103 of the Report of the Form of Government Task Force—From the Presbytery of San Juan.

The Presbytery of San Juan of the Boriquen Presbyterian Synod of Puerto Rico overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that if the 219th General Assembly (2010) does approve that the amendments to the Book of Order proposed by the Form of Government Task Force be sent to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes that amendment be made to that text in G-3.0103, to require the establishment of committees on representation as required by Article 8 of the Articles of Agreement between the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., and that said committees on representation be required to report to their respective governing bodies. Therefore, the second paragraph of section G-3.0103 of the proposed Form of Government will be changed to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Each council shall develop procedures and mechanisms for promoting and reviewing that body’s implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation. Councils above the session shall establish committees on representation in accordance with the Articles of Agreement by their own rule committees or entities to fulfill the following functions: to advise and report to the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, to advocate for diversity in leadership, and to consult with the council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403 (Proposed Form of Government, G-3.0103).”

One of the images we have regarding the Kingdom of God, which also helps guide the committees on representation, is the one speaking of that time in which “… there is no longer Greek and Jew, circumcised and uncircumcised, barbarian, Scythian, slave and free; but Christ is all and in all!” (Col. 3: 11). The proposed amendment to the Book of Order would allow the functions of the committee on representation to be transferred to any other committee or entity and to eliminate the existing committees. This proposal is contrary to the Articles of Agreement between the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. approved in 1983, which required the creation of the committees on representation. It is also contrary to the commitment made with the presbytery and congregational leaders of racial minorities who feared that once they became members of white-majority presbyteries or synods, as a result of the Plan of Union, any real chance of being represented in the leadership of those presbyteries or synods would be lost.

In order to persuade these leaders to vote in favor of the Union, the creation of the committees on representation was agreed to, as well as the inclusion of Article 8 in the Articles of Agreement, where the functions and composition of the committees on representation are established.
We believe the aforementioned agreement should still be honored, which is both moral and legal, especially in light of the fact that the Articles of Agreement do not provide any means of amendment. Furthermore, the elimination of the committees on representation compromises and weakens the church’s commitment to the goals of eliminating discrimination for reason of race or ethnicity, age, gender, disability, theological differences consistent with the Reformed Tradition, or marital status, and of granting minorities full participation in decision-making structures of the denomination.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 07-09

Comment on Item 07-09—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) supports the intent of Item 07-09 and advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve the recommended amendments to the proposed Form of Government (Item 07-01). The GACOR also refers the General Assembly to its comment offered on Item 07-01 for a more detailed discussion.

Joint COGA/GAMC Amendment to the Proposed Form of Government

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council recommend that the 219th General Assembly (2010) amend the first sentence of G-3.0501c in the Proposed Form of Government as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]

“c. nurture the covenant community of disciples. This responsibility shall include providing those services, resources, and programs performed most effectively at a national level, as described in the Organization for Mission; communicating with the whole church on matters of common concern; warning and bearing witness against errors in doctrine or immorality in the church and in the world; providing such services of education and nurture as its presbyteries may require; providing encouragement, guidance, and resources to presbyteries in the areas of mission, prophetic witness, leadership development, worship, evangelism, and responsible administration; discerning and presenting with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, matters of truth and vision that may inspire, challenge, and educate both church and world; serving in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline; deciding controversies brought before it and advising and instructing in cases submitted to it, in conformity with this Constitution; authoritatively interpreting the most recent edition of the Book of Order in a manner binding on the whole church, in accordance with the provisions of G-6.02 or through a decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case, with the most recent interpretation of the Book of Order being binding; and establishing and maintaining an office of the Stated Clerk.”

Rationale

The General Assembly Mission Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly note that the task force’s proposed new Form of Government provides authority and responsibility for what we currently know as governing bodies without requiring particular structures or entities to carry out those responsibilities. Instead those governing bodies (councils) are to develop manuals of administrative operations. Should the 219th General Assembly (2010) affirm the proposed new Form of Government both of these entities want to be ready to move smoothly into our new Form of Government by having its manual in place. This minor change to G-3.0501c will assure that there is no gap in service by these entities.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-10

Advice on Item 07-10—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) disapprove Item 07-10 and offers the following advice.
This item asks that the Proposal of the Form of Government Task Force be amended at G-3.0501c by inserting the words “as described in the Organization for Mission” in the first sentence after the words “at the national level.”

The rationale offered for this amendment is that the Committee on the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council each “want to move smoothly into the new Form of Government by having its manual in place.”

In the current Form of Government, G-9.0405 says in part: “Each governing body above the session shall, in consultation with the governing body above and below it, develop a manual of administrative operations. …”

In the Proposal of the Form of Government Task Force, G-3.0106 states: “Each council shall develop a manual of administrative operations that will specify the form and guide the work of mission in that council.”

Neither the provision in the current Book of Order nor the provision in the Proposed Form of Government states which documents a governing body or council must include in its manual. The Proposed Form of Government is accompanied by templates for handbooks for each of the councils of the church; these handbooks do not dictate what the manuals must say, but identify issues that the manuals should address, and in most cases probably do address.

The Organization for Mission is an organized collection of policies and deliverances of the General Assembly, that can be amended by action of the General Assembly, according to provisions in the Organization for Mission. It is part of the Manual of the General Assembly; the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, also part of the Manual, make explicit reference to the Organization for Mission.

If this item is approved and the proposed Form of Government approved, the General Assembly would need to go through the process of amending the Constitution if it ever wished to change the name of the part of its Manual currently called the Organization for Mission.

One of the common misconceptions about the Proposed Form of Government is that its approval will cause the existing manuals of each of the governing bodies to become null and void, requiring the councils across the church to spend substantial time writing new manuals. There is no provision in the Proposed Form of Government that would void the existing manuals.

If manuals of governing bodies or councils include citations to nonexistent provisions or to provisions in a defunct Constitution, those citations merely indicate that the governing body or council adopted the rule to accord with a constitutional provision formerly in effect. The rule would not be invalidated unless it was in conflict with the new Constitution, an unlikely event in a Form of Government written to increase flexibility.

Unless the 219th General Assembly (2010) takes some action on its own to set aside its Manual, there is no risk of the General Assembly moving into the New Form of Government without its Manual in place. Nor is there any risk of a gap for any other governing body that is in compliance with G-9.0405.

[In response to Item 07-11, the approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 18, 26.]

Effect of a Major Revision of the Book of Order on Previous Authoritative Interpretations—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

Alternate Resolution:

The Assembly Committee on Form of Government Revision recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) empower the Moderator to appoint a Special Committee on Existing Authoritative Interpretations of the Book of Order. The special committee shall be composed of six members recommended by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC), and the Office of the General Assembly, and charged to make recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012) concerning the status of specific existing authoritative interpretations of the Constitution based on the Status of Authoritative Interpretations as shown below:
Status of Authoritative Interpretations

While the status and applicability of any authoritative interpretation is subject to the judgment of the assembly, it is the considered judgment of the ACC that if this proposal to amend the Form of Government were to be approved, generally speaking the status of authoritative interpretations would vary according to the relationship of newly approved language to previous language.

1. If language approved in the Constitution explicitly restates the content of existing authoritative interpretations, it is no longer an authoritative interpretation but is incorporated into the Constitution.

2. If language is approved that is identical to, or essentially the same as the language of constitutional provisions that have already been interpreted, current authoritative interpretations would continue in force. The ACC believes this would apply, for example, to authoritative interpretations regarding current G-6.0106b, G-6.0108, G-8.0201, and G-9.0404d.

3. If language is approved that is substantively different from currently interpreted constitutional language, clarification from the General Assembly would be required as to the status and applicability of existing authoritative interpretations through the provisions of G-13.0103r.

4. If language is approved that contradicts the substance of an existing authoritative interpretation, the current interpretation would have no effect.

5. If language is approved that totally removes a constitutional provision that has been authoritatively interpreted, the authoritative interpretations attached to that provision would be removed as well.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) answer Item 07-11 with the following response:

The focus of the questions being posed in this request primarily concerns the interpretation of a proposed revision to part of the Constitution. Hence, the questions do not involve matters of constitutional interpretation in responding to which the General Assembly may render an authoritative interpretation. Nevertheless, because the 219th General Assembly (2010) has before it a proposal to approve a revised Form of Government, this request raises issues that the General Assembly should keep in mind when it considers any proposed amendment to the Constitution.

While the status and applicability of any authoritative interpretation is subject to the judgment of the assembly, it is the considered judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) that if this proposal to amend the Form of Government were to be approved, generally speaking the status of authoritative interpretations would vary according to the relationship of newly approved language to previous language.

1. If language is approved that explicitly restates the content of existing authoritative interpretations, it is incorporated into the Constitution.

2. If language is approved that is identical to, or essentially the same as the language of constitutional provisions that have already been interpreted, current authoritative interpretations would continue in force. The ACC believes this would apply, for example, to authoritative interpretations regarding current G-6.0106b, G-6.0108, G-8.0201, and G-9.0404d.

3. If language is approved that is substantively different from currently interpreted constitutional language, clarification from the General Assembly would be required as to the status and applicability of existing authoritative interpretations through the provisions of G-13.0103r.

4. If language is approved that contradicts the substance of an existing authoritative interpretation, the current interpretation would have no effect.

5. If language is approved that totally removes a constitutional provision that has been authoritatively interpreted, the authoritative interpretations attached to that provision would be removed as well.

Accordingly, when a General Assembly is considering amending the Constitution, it has a number of options:

1. It may approve language in the proposed amendment that explicitly restates the content of existing authoritative interpretations.

2. It may approve language in the proposed amendment that is sufficiently similar to the language of constitutional provisions that have already been interpreted to ensure that the current authoritative interpretations would continue in force.
3. It may approve language that is sufficiently different from currently interpreted constitutional language to permit governing bodies ("councils" in the Proposal) either to make their own initial good faith judgment about whether the authoritative interpretation continues in effect, or to request a fresh interpretation from the General Assembly.

4. It may approve language that is sufficiently different from the currently interpreted language to require a reasonable reader to conclude that the current authoritative interpretation would be set aside by the adoption of the new language.

5. It may approve language that totally removes a constitutional provision that has been authoritatively interpreted.

6. It may approve language for its own minutes that describes what it was intending to accomplish through the proposed constitutional language.

7. It may explicitly rescind authoritative interpretations that it does not intend to remain in effect under the current constitution or any proposed amendment thereto.

Rationale

This recommendation comes as the result of a request received by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution from the General Assembly Committee on Representation. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution does not initiate business before the assembly. However, pursuant to G-13.0112, the Stated Clerk must submit to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution all questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution, in turn, must report its findings and any recommendations it has to the General Assembly. The assembly is free to approve, amend, or decline to approve the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s recommendation.

1. Questions

   a. In the event that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approves submitting the new Form of Government to the presbyteries for their approval and the majority of presbyteries approve the adoption of the new Form of Government, what will be the effect of such approval on the authoritative interpretations concerning issues of representation that have been previously approved?

   b. If some authoritative interpretations will continue in force while others will not, who would make the decisions?

   c. As functions of the Committee on Representation continue to be described in the proposed Form of Government, what would be the continuing force and effect of the authoritative interpretations?

   d. How does the first set of questions (referring to F-1.0403 and G-3.0103), found on page 65 of the Form of Government Task Force proposal comment on or affect the recommendation 1 provision that would require that COR functions be retained?

First Question Presented

The first question presented needs to be answered by means of separate analyses of the continuing effectiveness of the four 1984 authoritative interpretations to which it refers, and each analysis must take into account the fact that the proposal of the Form of Government Task Force can still be amended by the General Assembly for submission to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes.

What would be the continuing effect of the Authoritative Interpretation that “Conformity is expected within reasonable time?” This authoritative interpretation is a case in which the proposed language is sufficiently similar to the existing language to ensure the continuing effectiveness of the authoritative interpretation. The inquiry that gave rise to this interpretation emerged because the Plan for Reunion required change. The proposal from the Form of Government Task Force does not require change with regard to a committee on representation. Indeed, with the possible exception of the most recently created presbyteries, reasonable time for conformity with the requirement to elect a Committee on Representation has elapsed.

If the General Assembly approves Recommendation 1 from the Form of Government Task Force, and a majority of the presbyteries concur, every governing body that has a committee on representation, and that has a rule in its manual or standing rules for the formation of such committee, would be in conformity with the G-3.0103 requirement to:

establish by their own rule committees or entities to fulfill the following functions: to advise the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, to advocate for diversity in leadership, and to consult with the council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403.

Every governing body beyond the session without a rule in its manual or standing rules for the formation of a committee on representation, but which does have a committee on representation formed in accordance with G-9.0105, would be expected to revise its manual to provide for one or more committees or entities to fulfill the requirements of G-3.0103 “within reasonable time.”
A governing body that has a committee on representation and has given itself an exception from the composition requirements (under G-9.0106) would be in compliance with G-3.0103 once it adopts a rule for the establishment of the G-3.0103 committee.

On the other hand, a governing body that is out of compliance with G-9.0105 would be similarly out of compliance with G-3.0103.

What would be the continuing effect of the Authoritative Interpretation that “A presbytery should use its own wisdom in guiding its particular churches in such matters [as identifying minority groups]?” This authoritative interpretation is a case in which the proposed language is sufficiently similar to the existing language to ensure the continuing effectiveness of the authoritative interpretation.

What would be the continuing effect of the authoritative interpretation that “The committee [on representation] must stand alone?” This authoritative interpretation is a case in which the proposed language is so different from the provision interpreted in 1984 as to require the conclusion that the authoritative interpretation would no longer be in effect.

The most significant difference between the interpreted provisions and the proposal is that G-9.0902 lists the structures specified in our current Constitution, while the proposal includes no similar section. According to G-9.0901, a definite title was given to the committee on representation “in order to regularize the procedures that shall enable the governing bodies to work together in joint mission.” The proposal does not specify a name or number for the G-3.0103 committees.

Moreover, in 1997 the General Assembly approved G-9.0105f to codify explicitly the authoritative interpretation given in 1984. The General Assembly’s omission of any language similar to G-9.0105f would underscore the intention that the 1984 interpretation not continue.

What would be the continuing effect of the authoritative interpretation that “the classification of persons should be left to the judgment of the session?” This is a case in which the language of current and proposed provisions are sufficiently similar to ensure the continuing effectiveness of the authoritative interpretation.

Second Question Presented

The second question presented is not one that requires authoritative constitutional interpretation. If there is any question within the governing bodies responsible for implementing the terms of the revised Form of Government, the governing bodies would have access to the process outlined in G-6.02 in the proposal.

Third Question Presented

The third question presented is not one that requires authoritative constitutional interpretation. Inasmuch as the Proposal focuses on functions rather than structures, the authoritative interpretations concerning any functions that a governing body must assign to its committee on representation, and that are named in the proposal, would continue in effect and would be binding on whatever committees or entities the councils create to fulfill those functions.

Fourth Question Presented

The fourth question presented is not one that requires authoritative constitutional interpretation. The issues raised in Recommendation 2 of the proposal are issues that councils need to ensure are addressed in their manuals.

Under the proposal, the General Assembly could choose to update its Manual to fulfill its G-3.0103 responsibilities through its current committee on representation, could assign those responsibilities to other existing committees or entities, or could create new committees or entities to be responsible for those functions. What would be prohibited under G-3.0103 would be to fail to assign any of the named responsibilities to some committee or entity.

The composition of the committee on representation is described in G-9.0105a. The proposal does not specify the composition of the G-3.0103 committees or entities, thus requiring each council to determine the appropriate composition, with the freedom to continue the composition rule it is currently following.

2. Findings

About Authoritative Interpretation

Section G-13.0103r gives the General Assembly the authority to “to provide authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order which shall be binding on the governing bodies of the church when rendered in accord with G-13.0112 or through a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case.”
The provisions in G-13.0112c–d for authoritative interpretation state:

c. All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order arising from governing bodies of the church or from individuals shall be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly.

d. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such questions of interpretation to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, except those pertaining to matters pending before a judicial commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall communicate its report and recommendations to the next session of the General Assembly.

The proposed Form of Government is subject to amendment by the General Assembly prior to its submission to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes. The proposed Form of Government at G-3.0501c states that the responsibilities of the General Assembly include “authoritatively interpreting the most recent edition of the Book of Order in a manner binding on the whole church, in accordance with the provisions of G-6.02 or through a decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case, with the most recent interpretation of the Book of Order being binding.”

The provisions of G-6.02 in the proposal from the Task Force on the Form of Government regarding authoritative interpretation state:

All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order arising from councils of the church shall be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such questions of interpretation to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, except those pertaining to matters pending before a judicial commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall communicate its report and recommendations to the next session of the General Assembly.

About the Committee on Representation

In 1984 the General Assembly provided authoritative interpretations (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 604, 55.099) that:

• “Conformity [with the requirement for a Committee on Representation] is expected within reasonable time;”

• “A presbytery should use its own wisdom in guiding its particular churches in such matters [as determining what is a minority group], giving the fullness of meaning to G-4.0403 and G-9.0104.”

• “The committee [on representation] must stand alone.”

• “Such [session] reports [concerning the composition of the session and congregation] are to [be] made annually. The reports ought to reflect the judgment of the session. The classification of persons should be left to the judgment of the session. Finally, a presbytery may require the age and ethnic descent of persons elected to the nominating committee of a particular church in light of its power to see ‘that the orders of higher governing bodies are observed and carried out.’”

In 1993 the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the assembly against adopting an overture to remove G-9.0105 and G-9.0106 (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 79, 137, paragraph 13.001). This advice was not an authoritative interpretation.

In 1995 the General Assembly acted upon a report by the Office of the General Assembly as to how presbytery and synod committees on representation are functioning (Minutes, 1995, 137, 13.001). There are statements in this report that appear to interpret the Constitution; these statements are the opinion of that General Assembly, as they were not approved through the process for rendering authoritative interpretations.

[The assembly answered Item 07-12 by the action taken on Item 07-01, Recommendation 1. See pp. 18, 26.]

The Presbytery of Mississippi overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to receive the report and recommendations of the Form of Government (FOG) Task Force, dismiss the task force with thanks, and act upon their recommendations by taking the following actions:
Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

2. Shall G-6.03 from the proposed Form of Government task force’s recommendations be substituted for the current G-18.0200; and

3. Shall the last sentence of F-2.02 of the proposed Form of Government task force’s recommendations be substituted for the last sentence of the current G-2.0200.

Rationale

Overall Comments:

The report and recommendations of the Form of Government Task Force, taken as a whole, are in no way an improvement over the current Form of Government. The task force’s recommendations would remove important safeguards from congregations and presbyteries, and would render many aspects of our common life immune to judicial review. Among many other flaws, the proposed document would allow presbyteries to dissolve pastoral relationships without congregational meetings. It would remove from sessions the prerogative to determine the distribution of their congregations’ benevolences. It would introduce chaos into the process for ordaining ministers, even removing from the Book of Order the constitutionally required areas of examination for candidates. Worst of all, it would allow a vastly expanded vision of inclusivity to threaten our current ordination standards.

The product of the FOG Task Force would do all this in the name and for the sake of making the church more missional, all the while refusing to explain exactly what in the current Form of Government is inhibiting the church from carrying out the work of Jesus Christ.

It is impossible to summarize the many ways in which the form of government proposed by the Task Force would threaten the peace, unity, and purity of the church. Because it is purposely shorter, and because it purposely omits many requirements that are found in the present Form of Government, the only way to evaluate it properly is to examine the nature of the omissions in some detail.

The Presbytery of Mississippi therefore endorses the paper entitled “Thinking Twice about the Proposed Form of Government,” which follows this summary and with it forms the complete rationale for this overture.

Since the wholesale revision of Chapter 14 in the Book of Order, the lack of specificity in ordination procedures has proven itself to be singularly unhelpful. Some presbyteries have simply adopted the previous version of Chapter 14 as their method of preparing candidates for ministry. Other presbyteries have had to spend time laboring over the development of new procedures, wasting time which could have been better spent on furthering the mission of Christ’s Kingdom. The Task Force’s overall recommendations would require the same sort of fruitless effort to be expended on every part of our common life, developing presbytery handbooks of rules to replicate what is (or was) in the Book of Order. It would be far better to restore the previous version of Chapter 14 and do away with these handbooks altogether, exempt as they would be from the process of judicial review.

Rationale for action item 2:

One of the two improvements provided by the Task Force’s recommendations is the clarification of the process of amending The Book of Confessions. The Task Force’s G-6.03 helpfully arranges in chronological order the material currently found in G-18.0200. This improvement should be adopted by simple amendment to the current Form of Government.

Rationale for action item 3:

The only other improvement provided by the Task Force’s recommendations is the fuller quotation and more accurate translation of the Latin phrase currently found in G-2.0200. The Task Force is correct to say, “The church affirms Ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda secundum verbum Dei, that is, ‘The church reformed, always to be reformed according to the word of God’ in the power of the Spirit.” This is much to be preferred over the current wording, and should be substituted by simple amendment to the current Form of Government.

Advice on Item 07-12—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to answer Item 07-12 with the following comments.

Advice

1. Regarding the recommendation to substitute Chapter G-14.000 from the 2005–07 Book of Order for the current G-14.000, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) recommends disapproval of this part of the overture.

The ACC notes that while the recommendation may be in order, the consequences of such an action are not fully clarified. The complexity of the process leading to the adoption of the present Chapter 14 is revealed in the history of reviews and revisions (and ACC recommendations) of Chapter XIV by multiple General Assemblies, is contained in the Rationale for the Proposed Amendments (of Chapter XIV) that were approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006) and the majority of presbyteries in 2007.

If this debate is to be revisited, it should be referred to an appropriate committee of the General Assembly that has sufficient time and resources to consider it thoroughly and bring a recommendation to the General Assembly. The extent and scope of the changes approved in 2007 would require reopening debate on the rationale for each of the specific changes (including those that moved sections of Chapter XIV to other locations in the Book of Order.)

2. Regarding the recommendation to substitute Form of Government Task Force wording of G-6.03 for the current 18.0200, the ACC finds that the language is clear and consistent with its intent.

3. Regarding the recommendation to substitute Form of Government Task Force wording in the last sentence of F-2.02 for the last sentence of the current G-2.0200, the ACC finds that the language is clear and consistent with its intent.

4. For these and other reasons, the ACC continues to affirm the advice for the changes to Chapter XIV that it presented to the 217th General Assembly in 2006 and finds no constitutional imperative for reversing the decision of the denomination to adopt the existing Chapter XIV.

Findings

The main presenting recommendation, to receive the report of the Form of Government Task Force and to dismiss the task force with thanks, does not raise any constitutional issues. It is one procedural/parliamentary option available for responding to this report and its recommendations. To do so prior to consideration of the report would have the same effect as defeating the report without discussion of the merits or demerits of the actual report. The committee assigned this overture will need to decide whether this overture’s proposed action is preferable to having the report presented, arguments made for and against the actual report, and a vote on the report taken.

The ACC then notes that the three delineated recommendations included in this overture have only a tangential relationship to the Form of Government Task Force report and recommendations. The ACC therefore proposes that the three enumerated recommendations, since they do not apply directly to the question of the Form of Government Task Force Report, be referred, with recommendations to 1) a Standing Committee of the 219th General Assembly (2010) or 2) to the 220th General Assembly (2012) for action.

History

The 216th General Assembly (2004) directed the Office of the General Assembly “[t]o undertake an extensive cycle of consultation with various groups and constituencies within the PC(USA), including but not limited to: governing bodies (sessions, presbyteries, synods), governing body staff, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, racial ethnic caucuses, youth, women, pastors, new immigrant leaders, and other person or groups interested in the role of the Form of Government in the mission and ministry of the PC(USA)” and “[t]o bring recommendations to the 217th General Assembly (2006)” (Minutes: 2004, Part I, p. 86). This report is the response of the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to that referral.

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has always been a fluid document, being the living reminder of “‘Ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda,’ that is, ‘The church reformed, always reforming,’ according to the Word of God and the call of the Spirit” (Book of Order, G-2.0200). Virtually every twenty-five years since Presbyterianism came to this continent, the church has “reformed” its Form of Government, the last substantive reformation of it occurring at Reunion in 1983. Over this past decade, the church has consistently called for a new or different Form of Government.

In 1993, the Special Committee on the Nature of the Church and the Practice of Governance recommended to the 205th General Assembly (1993) that the Book of Order be revised. This resulted in the amendment of G-9.0103 granting powers not mentioned in the Constitution to be reserved to the presbyteries. The assembly also referred further discussion and review to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC).

Every year from 1993 to 2002, the General Assembly has dealt with business that asked for, referred for more study, or reported on major proposed changes in the Form of Government (for details see Appendix A, [Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 369]). The 213th General Assembly (2001) sent to the presbyteries as Amendment 01-H a recommended revision of Chapter 14 in its entirety. Many people maintain that the amendment was defeated because of two details, one which moved the ordination questions into the Directory for Worship, and one which allowed interim pastors to be called to installed positions in limited circumstances.

The Presbytery of St. Augustine overtured the 214th General Assembly (2002) (Overture 02-29) to send a second version of the Chapter 14 revision back to the presbyteries, but without the two offending substantive changes. This recommendation was sent to the OGA for revision, to be reported back to the 217th General Assembly (2006). The OGA presented an interim report to the 216th General Assembly (2004).

During the time since the 216th General Assembly (2004), the OGA, with the able guidance of the Office of Research Services, has undertaken an extensive cycle of information gathering. We have hosted more than thirty focus groups that have been made up of a wide range of participants. More than half of the governing body staff (executive presbyters, stated clerks, associate executives) have participated. A diverse group of Presbytery-rarians involved in new immigrant and racial ethnic ministries (pastors, elders, staff members) took part as well. We spoke with members of a variety of presbytery committees (COMs, CPMs, councils) and the elected members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. In addition, we utilized research survey instruments.

In conducting these consultations, we found an almost universal desire for change in our Form of Government. The great majority of responders hoped that a revision would provide more flexibility in favor of governing bodies and of presbyteries in particular. There was not universal agreement on what else ought to be changed, but two clearly identifiable preferences emerged.

1. There was great interest in an immediate “fix,” namely revising Chapter 14 of the Form of Government to make it shorter and more flexible in favor of presbyteries. Our second proposal is an attempt to do what Overture 02-29 asked in 2002; we have updated Chapter 14. We propose that the 217th General Assembly (2006) recommend that a whole new Chapter 14 replace the current Chapter 14. We propose that the 217th General Assembly (2006) offer the church as separate options the possibility of moving the ordination questions and allowing some temporary pastors to become installed. In our focus groups, interviews, and surveys the OGA also heard suggestions for a number of substantive changes to Chapter 14, which we suggest the 217th General Assembly (2006) propose as separate amendments. (See Amendments A and B.1.–6. of this report.)

Our consultations described above lead us to believe that the church needs the flexibility that such a revision would provide to presbyteries as soon as possible. Presbyteries are currently, and regularly, facing circumstances where they lack the flexibility to provide the pastoral leadership that is required by their member congregations. We heard great urgency in our consultations for some immediate relief from the regulatory approach currently manifested in Chapter 14, especially in relation to new immigrant fellowships, new church developments, and congregations. We see no inherent conflict in the 217th General Assembly (2006) permitting the presbyteries to vote on this reasonable revision while awaiting the report of a more dramatic revision proposal in 2008. We heard the presbyteries crying for some modest relief during the intervening three years between now and the possible implementation of a dramatically different Form of Government. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 370)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 217th General Assembly (2006) to approve Item 05-11, Recommendation 2.

Rationale

The recommendation is an omnibus action that would enable the Stated Clerk to send to presbyteries a package of amendments that, taken together, would strike the present contents of Chapter XIV of the Book of Order and replace it with a revised text. The amendments are divided into two groups: Amendments A.1 and A.2, and Amendments B.1 through B.6. Amendment A.1 consists of the strike-and-replace revision of the contents of Chapter XIV; in this revision, considerable process-oriented material would be removed to the status of a handbook and rendered optional. The remaining text would be reorganized and renumbered. Amendment A.2, which consists of five subparts, A.2.a.–e., consists of insertions in the text of Chapter 14. Amendment A.2.a.–e. is dependent on the approval of A.1. If Amendment A.1 is approved and transmitted to presbyteries, Amendment A.2.a.–e. is also approved; conversely, if A.1 is defeated, A.2.a.–e. is also defeated. The two are thus to be voted as a package rather than serially.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution has examined the work of the Office of the General Assembly in revising the contents of Chapter XIV. The committee believes that OGA has faithfully executed its charge to revise and restructure the contents of the chapter without changing the policy.

The effort to revise the Form of Government has a lengthy history. The 206th General Assembly (1996) charged the Advisory Committee on the Constitution to prepare proposals for revision of the Form of Government “that will take into consideration the possible division into foundational, policy, and advisory components…” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p.285). The outcome of that work was presented to the 212th General Assembly (2000) in the form of a revision of Chapter 14 that contemplated the removal of considerable process-oriented material in the chapter to handbooks that made such processes optional rather than mandatory. After a year of study and comment, the 213th General Assembly (2001) approved the proposal as Amendment 01-H. Included in the proposed 01-H was an amendment approved on the floor permitting interim ministers to succeed as the next installed pastor of a congregation they have served as interim. Research indicates that the inclusion of this late-developing change was part of the reason for the failure of the amendment at the presbytery level. In 2002, the Presbytery of St. Augustine overtured the 214th General Assembly (2002) to return the substance of 01-H to the presbyteries for vote, but without the provision concerning interim pastors. The assembly referred the overture to the Office of the General Assembly for study as part of a study process to examine the wisdom of revising not Chapter 14 only, but the entire Form of Government.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the committee and the assembly that, since these amendments are of a piece and flow together, the assembly would be well served by considering amendment A as a package, rather than to seek to amend various particular provisions in the revised text. Changes to the text of Amendment A will be considered if presented in appropriate form and in a manner consistent with the policies and practices of the assembly. However, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that, if the committee or commissioners desire to amend particular elements of the revised text of Chapter XIV, this end is best accomplished by adding particular amendments to Amendment B. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 371–373)

[The assembly approved Item 08-01. See p. 31.]

On Referring the Covenant to Adopt the Lund Principle, and Its Codicil, to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations—From the Synod of the Northeast.

The Synod of the Northeast overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to refer the Covenant to Adopt and Implement the “Lund Principle” and Codicil to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations, requesting a report with recommendations by the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Rationale

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved a document entitled The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), which contains a reference to the Lund Principle on page 3 and includes the following statement in the Affirmation on page 8: “… we recommit ourselves to the historic Lund principle that Christians should take united action whenever they find this possible” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 524).

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) contains numerous provisions that encourage growing ecumenical relations at all levels of governing bodies (session through General Assembly).

The following Statement of Covenant and its Codicil were drafted and approved by the Board of Trustees of the Vermont Ecumenical Council and Bible Society in 2005 and 2006, approved by the Presbytery of Northern New England in 2007, and adopted by the Synod of the Northeast in 2009.

The following Statement of Covenant and its Codicil are a concrete, regional expression of specific commitments to ecumenical partnerships as affirmed in the Lund Principle of 1952 and in The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of 2008.

The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) deserves to be more widely publicized and studied. The Lund Principle (1952) as affirmed therein also deserves to be more widely publicized and studied.

It would benefit the whole church for the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations to consider and report on what is being done in ecumenical relations by synods, presbyteries, and particular churches, and by state ecumenical bodies and how those activities are appropriate for participation by official representatives of the PC(USA).

It would benefit the whole church for the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations to consider the Vermont Ecumenical Council & Bible Society “Covenant and Codicil” and express an opinion as whether it is a worthy effort and whether others might well consider adapting it for their particular situation, or whatever seems to them to be good and wise in light of the 2008 Ecumenical Stance document.

“A COVENANT to Adopt and Implement ‘The Lund Principle’

“The members of the Vermont Ecumenical Council and Bible Society (churches, denominations, and ecclesial communities) have put to themselves the question that has come to be known as ‘The Lund Principle’ [The Third World Conference on Faith and Order, Lund, Sweden, 1952]:

“We have now reached a crucial point in our ecumenical discussions. As we have come to know one another better, our eyes have been opened to the depth and pain of our separations and also to our fundamental unity. The measure of unity which has been given to the Churches to experience together must now find clearer manifestation. A faith in the one Church of Christ which is not implemented by acts of obedience is dead. There are truths about the nature of God and His Church which will remain forever closed to us unless we act together in obedience to the unity which is already ours. We would, therefore, earnestly request our Churches to consider whether they are doing all they ought to do to manifest the oneness of the people of God. Should not our Churches ask themselves whether they are showing sufficient eagerness to enter into conversation with other Churches, and whether they should not act together in all matters except those in which deep differences of conviction compel them to act separately?

“We members of the Vermont Ecumenical Council and Bible Society now consider that we are ready to answer this question in the affirmative. Now each and all, we covenant with one another to pursue, with God’s help, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, full visible unity (Cf. our Bylaws Article II) by acting together in all matters except those in which deep differences of conviction compel us to act separately. Here and now we pledge our persons and resources to act toward fuller unity and urge the authorities and members of our churches, denominations, and ecclesial bodies to do the same.
“This Covenant is adopted with a Codicil that is inseparable from the Covenant and which will be understood as integral to the Covenant as an elucidation of the purpose of the Covenant as contained in the purpose of the Vermont Ecumenical Council and Bible Society and as one of the essential means to achieve the Council’s purpose.

“The Covenant is proposed to the member churches, denominations, and ecclesial communities for their reception and is subject to further and future development, as may be adopted by the Vermont Ecumenical Council and Bible Society.

“Vermont Ecumenical Council & Bible Society Trustees revised and approved this Covenant on March 29, 2006.

“Codicil to the Covenant

“This Covenant is adopted to further express and implement the basic purposes of the VEC & BS (Cf. Bylaws, Article II) by subscribing to the ‘Lund Principle’ [Third World Conference of Faith and Order, Lund, Sweden, 1952, the World Council of Churches]:

‘Should not our Churches ask themselves whether they should not act together in all matters except those in which deep differences of conviction compel them to act separately.’

“1. GOAL: We continue to recognize that the VEC & BS is a representative body of Christian churches, denominations and ecclesial communities which seeks to respond to God’s love for us, confess Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, and rely upon the power of the Holy Spirit to give us being and inspire our actions.

“Further, we acknowledge and celebrate God’s gift to us, the unity already present among those who accept Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, and what is revealed to us in Sacred Scripture. Furthermore, we seek the fullness of unity which the Apostle Paul affirmed, ‘there is one body and one Spirit, as there is one hope held out in God’s call to you; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all, Who is over all and through all and in all’ (Ephesians 4:4–6). This will be a visible unity, Christ’s body, which is one, but encompasses a diversity of Christian traditions.

“We regret our sins against this unity and understand our present imperfect unity as contrary to the Gospel. It is a source of sorrow for all who proclaim themselves as Christians. We pray that our relationships in the movement toward full unity may deepen and expand toward the day when all Christians will be united as God wills it, visibly loving one another and all God’s children even as Christ has loved us.

“a. Internal Renewal: Each church, denomination, ecclesial body is summoned by the Holy Spirit to its own internal renewal and change of heart. Wounded by sin that causes our divisions and separation, there is continual need for personal and social reform and purification. We must ‘repent and believe in the Good News’ (Mark 1:15). We must not only know well the faith-principles of our own church or denomination, we must live out our faith and celebrate the gifts God has given us. Furthermore, we must know our weaknesses and deepen our concern for full Christian unity.

“b. Prayer: We will increase our private and public prayer for unity. We will pray for one another. Our love for one another and for unity finds its most complete expression in common prayer. Christ is present with us when we unite to pray (Matthew 18:20). The closer we come to Christ in our own communities, the closer we will come to one another.

“c. Dialogue: We will engage in dialogue with one another. Ecumenical dialogue is indispensable. It is the communication of one’s Christian experience in Christ, both speaking and listening to one another in love. It is not merely an exchange of ideas. It is a process by which together we seek to transcend our divisions by clarification of the elements of our faith, the removal of past misunderstandings, the discovery of new language or categories by which we express our unity in faith. Through dialogue we discern the faith, the context, the life and worship of partners. It presupposes prayer and healing of memories through repentance and mutual forgiveness. It requires patience and humility. It is an essential part of the preparation for action together (Lund Principle).

“d. Collaboration: We will engage in practical cooperation with one another. Practical cooperation among all Christians vividly expresses the bond which already unites them, and it sets in clearer relief the features of Christ the servant. Unity in faith, though imperfect, leads to unity of action, and unity of action leads to the full unity of faith. Through this cooperation, all believers in Christ are able to learn how to understand and respect each other better. In the eyes of the world, cooperation among Christians becomes a form of Christian witness and a means of evangelization which benefits all involved.

“3. CONCLUSION: The ‘Lund Principle’ which endorses this practical cooperation is essential for our ecumenical life. Yet it does not stand alone in ecumenism. It is the outward sign and effect of renewal, prayer and dialogue. It is the sign and test of our love for all God’s children, Christian and non-Christian.
"Implementing the ‘Lund Principle’ may not be easy. We beg God’s help to give us the wisdom and conviction to do it. We firmly disagree that ‘action unites and doctrine divides.’ We must take great care not to abandon our Christian faith in favor of action. Truly effective social action must have a religious center. It must be rooted in the affirmation of God, centered on the Gospel and radiate from a deep life of prayer. It must be rooted in a spirituality that not only sustains the worker, but also is grounded in true social concern. Guided always by Christian principles, we pledge ourselves to plan and initiate Christian service whenever and wherever our members can, and to reach out our hand in cooperation to all those of good will for the common good.

“This is our covenant. God bless our work together. Adopted by the members of the Vermont Ecumenical Council and Bible Society December 14, 2005. Adopted by the Synod Assembly of the Synod of the Northeast at its stated meeting on October 16, 2009.”

[The assembly approved Item 08-02 with amendment. See pp. 31, 32.]

On Removing the Confusing and Theologically Incompatible Call for Presbyterians to Engage Other Faiths—From the Presbytery of Yukon.

The Presbytery of Yukon respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to remove (or rewrite) the confusing and theologically incompatible language noted below in the Call for Tolerance and Peaceful Relations Between the Christian and Muslim Communities, approved as Item 07-01 by the 218th General Assembly (2008) by taking the following actions:

1. In Section three of this item, strike the phrase “celebrate diversity,” to help clarify our understanding that, as Christians, we are called to bring all people into the church. [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through.]

   “3. Build on this understanding by calling for further dialogue among Jews, Christians, and Muslims, viewing each other [as equals] [with equal respect], and learning from one another to • promote peace, resolve conflict;
   • ensure human rights, prevent discrimination;
   • develop dialogue, emphasize commonality;
   • recognize differences, celebrate diversity [respect diversity];
   • advocate justice, oppose bias” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 507).

2. In section four, remove the following bulleted point since it is not our belief that it is possible, or desirable, to share religious holidays with Muslims and Jews, and sustain the faith that each hold dear [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through.]:

   “4. Commend the First Presbyterian Church of Rockaway and other Presbyterian congregations that have initiated dialogue with Muslim and Jewish communities, and to encourage other congregations to initiate three-way dialogues among Jews, Christians, and Muslims consistent with the Presbyterian Principles for Interfaith Dialogue.
   • To encourage congregations of these faiths to celebrate religious holidays together, setting aside days of worship during which there can be congregational suppers, and dialogue groups. [To encourage congregations of these faiths to set aside times to come together for meals, dialogues, and to plan ways they can work together’ (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 507).]

Rationale

In accordance with Scripture and our Reformed faith we base this upon the following:

We believe that it is not possible to “…celebrate religious holidays together…” or set aside “days of worship…” Common worship among these faiths is not compatible, nor do common aims exist to undertake this endeavor since the one triune God, revealed through Jesus Christ is the only true object of Christian worship (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 507).

We further affirm the uniqueness of Christian worship which is centered in Jesus Christ alone as affirmed by the revelation of God in Holy Scripture and attested to in our Book of Order and The Book of Confessions, that:
Jesus said, “I am the way, and the truth, and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me” (Jn. 14:6). See also the following passages of Scripture: Jn. 4:23, Rom. 10:14, Acts 4:12, Jn. 10:1–9, 1Tim. 2:5.

c. Jesus Christ is the living God present in common life. The One who is proclaimed in the witness of faith is:
   (1) the Word of God spoken at creation,
   (2) the Word of God promising and commanding throughout covenant history,
   (3) the Word of God
      (a) who became flesh and dwelt among us,
      (b) who was crucified and raised in power,
      (c) who shall return in triumph to judge and reign” (Book of Order, W-1.1003c).

… In Christian worship the people of God
   (1) hear the Word [Jesus] proclaimed,
   (2) receive the Word [Jesus] enacted in Sacrament,
   (3) discover the Word [Jesus] in the world, and
   (4) are sent to follow the Word [Jesus] into the world” (Book of Order, W-1.1004).

… In the name of Christ, by the power of the Holy Spirit, the Christian community worships and serves God” (Book of Order, W-1.1005b).

And those who are such in the Church have one faith and one spirit; and therefore they worship but one God, and him alone they worship in spirit and in truth, loving him alone with all their hearts and with all their strength, praying unto him alone through Jesus Christ, the only Mediator and Intercessor; and they do not seek righteousness and life outside Christ and faith in him. Because they acknowledge Christ the only head and foundation of the Church, and, resting on him, daily renew themselves by repentance, and patiently bear the cross laid upon them .... (The Book of Confessions, Second Helvetic Confession, 5.135)

See also The Book of Confessions: 3.16, 5.023—.025, and 5.134.

We believe that Jesus is not merely one of several viable understandings of how God has been revealed and how humankind can approach God in worship. As the Theological Declaration of Barmen states: “Jesus Christ, as he is attested for us in Holy Scripture, is the one Word of God which we have to hear and which we have to trust and obey in life and in death” (The Book of Confessions, The Theological Declaration of Barmen, 8.11).

“He is the image of the invisible God ... For in him all the fullness of God was pleased to dwell, and through him God was pleased to reconcile to himself all things, whether on earth or in heaven, by making peace through the blood of his cross” (Col. 1:15a, 19–20).

“He is the reflection of God’s glory and the exact imprint of God’s very being ...” (Heb.1:3).

Worship is a central expression of faith and shapes the identity of each religious community. The mode and meaning of worship for each faith, respectively, are determined by each faith’s foundational beliefs, which are not consistent among Christianity, Judaism, and Islam.

As Christians we believe:

• that true worship of God is worship in and through Jesus Christ alone (Jn. 14:6);
• the everyday practice of praying “in the name of Jesus” is the foundation of Christian worship;
• it is the exaltation of Jesus Christ as Lord of all and the One through whom we have access to God the Father that launched the early church into the discussions that grew into the Nicene and Chalcedonian Creeds, the standard-bearers for Christian belief;
• that the identity and centrality of Jesus Christ as God incarnate and the only Savior in worship are core beliefs, and these beliefs have distinguished Christianity from both Judaism and Islam.

The encouragement for Christians to worship together with Muslims is particularly troubling because, as a faith tradition, Islam:

• is very self-conscious regarding its beliefs about the person of Jesus;
• through the Qur’an, makes it clear that Jesus, while a prophet, is not and could not have been the eternal Son of God (Allah);
• through the Qur’an, clearly rejects Christian worship (through Jesus) as dishonoring to God (Allah), and is even a form of unbelief;
Given these foundational differences in our faiths, over the last fourteen centuries, since the emergence of Islam, Christianity and Islam have not been able to affirm common worship, because we hold very different beliefs about the nature and identity of God, the means of salvation, and what kind of worship honors God.

Nevertheless, in this action, the General Assembly has encouraged Presbyterians and Muslims to worship together. Such worship could only be accomplished by seriously compromising the Essential Tenets of Reformed Faith. It would require removing the centrality of our affirmation of the triune nature of God and the uniqueness and centrality of Jesus Christ as the only true Lord and Savior of humankind. Such worship would be contrary to our faith.

While we affirm the value of seeking “… new opportunities for conversation and understanding with non-Christian religious bodies in order that interests and concerns may be shared and common action undertaken where compatible means and aims exist” (Book of Order, G-15.0104, emphasis added).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 08-02 be disapproved.

Rationale

Item 08-02 asks the 219th General Assembly (2010) to remove or rewrite perceived “confusing and theologically incompatible language” from the Call for Tolerance and Peaceful Relations between the Christian and Muslim Communities statement approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008). The rationale presented by this resolution interprets the Call as a mandate for Christians, Jews, and Muslims to celebrate worship together and affirms foundational differences in our faiths. The Call, in fact, does not mandate but encourages congregations of these faiths to celebrate religious holidays together, setting aside days of worship during which there can be congregational suppers and dialogue groups.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the Call statement is consistent with the actions affirmed by the 211th General Assembly (1999) through its approval of the policy statement on Building Community Among Strangers. That assembly:

… believing that the Holy Spirit is at work in our interactions with people of other faiths, affirm[ed] that the Gospel of Jesus Christ has no place for arrogance toward people of other faiths … urge[ed] the General Assembly, middle governing bodies, sessions, and church-related entities to encourage witness and evangelism based upon sharing the good news of Jesus Christ with respectful humility toward those of other religions … (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 404).

Comment on Item 08-02—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The GAMC advises the 219th General Assembly (2010), in response to Item 08-02, to reaffirm Respectful Presence: an Understanding of Interfaith Prayer and Celebration from a Reformed Christian Perspective (commended to congregations and governing bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), by the 209th General Assembly (1997)) as a guide for prayer or celebration with neighbors of other religious traditions.

Some confusion has arisen in light of language that was included in actions taken by the 218th General Assembly (2008) related to Christian-Muslim relations. Acting on 2008 Item 07-01, that assembly affirmed “… that, as children of [a] loving God, we [Muslims and Christians] share the commandments of love for God and neighbor …,” and called on Presbyterians to “… build on this understanding by calling for further dialogue among Jews, Christians, and Muslims, … learning from one another to promote peace, resolve conflict; … recognize differences, celebrate diversity; advocate justice, oppose bias…” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 507). It also encouraged congregations of the three faiths “… to celebrate religious holiday’s together, setting aside days of worship during which there can be congregational suppers, and dialogue groups” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 507; language in italic is that quoted in the Item 08-02, an overture to the 219th GA (2010)).

Similarly, in response to 2008 Item 07-07, the 218th General Assembly (2008) acted “… to encourage and provide resources to presbyteries and local congregations to improve good relations and mutual understanding between Presbyterians and Muslims … Practices might include participation in sacred and holy observances in each other’s traditions, shared meals …” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 526, language in italic is that quoted in 2010 Item 08-02).
It is not clear what actions are intended by these references in terms of worship or mutual participation in sacred observances.

The substantial concerns of 2010 Item 08-02 are addressed in Respectful Presence (Minutes, 1997, Part I, pp. 435–440). This resource is available at http://www.pcusa.org/interfaith/study/presencesans.pdf. Respectful Presence helpfully outlines how Presbyterians might engage with our interfaith neighbors in a way that is both hospitable to interfaith neighbors and faithful to the God we worship in Jesus Christ. (Numbers relate to paragraph numbers in Respectful Presence.)

That document makes clear that participation of any kind in prayer or celebration with neighbors of other religious traditions is not to be confused with Christian worship. It notes that “Christian worship is a gathering within a community committed in response to God’s goodness in Jesus Christ…” (Respectful Presence, 138). It makes clear that:

There are limits to interfaith prayer, celebration, and worship for Presbyterians. These have been expressed in very general form in the paper, “The Nature of Revelation in the Christian Tradition from a Reformed Perspective” (Minutes, 1987, Part I, pp. 437–453)...

a. We must not bend or trim our faith in God’s revelation in Jesus Christ in order to achieve an artificial agreement with the doctrines of other religions....

b. We may learn from [other] religions insofar as what we learn can be incorporated into, and enrich, our personal and corporate relationship with the God of Israel who is revealed in Jesus Christ ...

c. Entering into interfaith dialogue in no way diminishes our calling to share the good news of Jesus Christ with all people, with all due respect for every good thing that God has given them in their religion. Indeed, expressing one’s own faith is a necessary condition of genuine interreligious dialogue... (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 452, 28.276; Respectful Presence, 129)

Apart from Christian worship, however, Respectful Presence also suggests that “… there are three forms of interfaith prayer and celebration:

1. when people of other faiths are present in Christian worship;
2. when Christians are present in worship activities of other faith communities;
3. when people of different faiths are together in interfaith prayer, celebration, or worship” (Respectful Presence, 140).

In these situations, it recommends that Presbyterians exercise “respectful presence”: “… Christians can be authentically open to the intimations of the Spirit’s presence in the midst of an interfaith gathering and, at the same time, deeply committed to their faith in God through Jesus Christ. They can share with others with integrity, aware that God is present and active in all creation…” (Respectful Presence, 139).

This General Assembly might do well to remind the church of the distinctions and possibilities that it has acknowledged in Respectful Presence, in order to make clear that the church does NOT recommend “common worship,” or the intermingling or confusion of Christian tradition with other traditions, but does see great potential benefit in the receiving and giving of hospitality that includes the respectful presence of Christians with others in the sharing of prayers, readings, and liturgical expressions of one another’s traditions.

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010):

1. Approve for study and reflection the paper, “Christians and Jews: People of God” and distribute it to the church electronically.

2. Commend “Christians and Jews: People of God” to governing bodies and congregations as guidance for the occasions in which Presbyterians and Jews converse, cooperate, and enter into dialogue.

3. Commend “Christians and Jews: People of God” to governing bodies and congregations as guidance for the development of programs and resources.

Rationale

This report is received in response to the following referral: 2004 Referral: Item 06-09. On Re-Examining the Relationship Between Christians and Jews and the Implications for Our Evangelism and New Church Development—From the Presbytery of Hudson River (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 20, 440).

A. Preface

“A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews” was approved by the 199th General Assembly (1987) as “a pastoral … teaching document to provide a basis for continuing discussion within the Presbyterian community … and to offer guidance for occasions in which Presbyterians and Jews converse, cooperate, and enter into dialogue.”

In response to four separate actions by the 216th General Assembly (2004) that created tensions between the American Jewish community and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the assembly directed the “Office of Theology and Worship, the Office of Interfaith Relations, and the Office of Evangelism to ‘reexamine and strengthen the relationship between Christians and Jews and the implications of this relationship for our evangelism and new church development in continuing response to the 211th General Assembly (1999) mandate to guide the church in ‘‘bearing witness to Jesus Christ in a pluralistic age’’ (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 20).

In partial response to the General Assembly’s mandate, staff from the offices of Theology and Worship, Interfaith Relations, and Evangelism met eight times with representatives of the National Council of Synagogues. These conversations led to four consultations that included rabbis from the Conservative, Reform, Orthodox, and Reconstructionist branches of Judaism, and Presbyterian pastors, theologians, and governing body staff. The consultations focused on a review of the 1987 Presbyterian paper, and three central topics: the Land, evangelism, and community identity.

“A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews” noted that “Theology is never done in a vacuum. It influences and is influenced by its context.” Specifically, four contextual realities were identified that affected the issue in 1987: (1) an increasingly global and pluralistic situation, (2) interpersonal and intercommunal dynamics, (3) the church’s commitment to the living Word as witnessed to in Scripture and tradition, and (4) the church’s own heritage of Scripture and theological tradition. These contextual realities endure, but our post-1987 context also includes a worldwide increase in overt anti-Jewish rhetoric and action, a sustained cycle of violence in Israel-Palestine, repeated breakdowns of the Israel-Palestine peace process, two American-led wars in the Middle East, the increase in worldwide terrorism, and more.

Furthermore, the past two decades have seen a number of statements on Jewish-Christian relations from ecclesial and academic groups. Specifically, “The Willowbank Declaration on the Christian Gospel and the Jewish People” (1989), “Dabru Emet: A Jewish Statement on Christians and Christianity” (2000), “A Sacred Obligation: Rethinking Christian Faith in Relation to Judaism and the Jewish People” (2002), and new attention to the papal encyclical, Nostra Aetate (1965) have deepened and enriched Christian theological understanding. In addition, scholarly publications and symposia on the history, theology, and moral dimensions of Jewish-Christian relations have multiplied.

The current context also includes developments within the PC(USA) that affect Jewish-Christian relationships generally and Jewish- Presbyterian relationships specifically. Turn to the Living God (1991), Between Millennia (2001), Hope in the Lord Jesus Christ (2002), The Trinity: God’s Love Overflowing (2006), and Invitation to Christ (2006) are signs of renewed Presbyterian attention to foundational theological issues and to the challenge of witnessing to Christian faith in a religiously plural world. The past two decades have also seen an increase in the number of PC(USA) presbyteries, congregations, and ministers who have developed close ties with Jewish organizations, synagogues, and rabbis.

All of these developments indicate that it is time to supplement the teaching of “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews,” providing Presbyterians with a deeper understanding of the bonds between Christians and Jews, and broader resources for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s relationship with the Jewish community in America and beyond. “Christians and Jews: People of God” is not meant to replace “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews.” The 1987 study paper represented a significant advance in Christian theological understanding and in Presbyterian-Jewish relations. Its “Affirmations and Explications” remain a valuable resource for discussion within the church. The present paper is intended to refine and deepen the theological understanding of the relationship between Christianity and Judaism as well as to provide a further resource for discussion in the church and for conversations between Christians and Jews.

B. Theological Perspectives

The relationship between Christians and Jews is not simply a particular instance of “interfaith relations.” The relationship between Christian faith and Judaism is unique, foundational, and enduring. The New Testament bears consistent witness to this relationship—the mercy of God in Jesus Christ embraces both Jew and Gentile; it does not abandon Jews in favor of Gentiles or forsake Jews in favor of the church. Supersessionism, the belief that God’s covenant with the church has replaced God’s covenant with Israel, and that the church has supplanted the Jewish people, is contrary to the core witness of the New Testament and is not supported by the mainstream of the Reformed tradition.
Unfavorable New Testament references to “the Jews” do not refer to all Jews of the first century, and certainly not of the twenty-first. The fact is that many first century Jews and most Jews since then have not placed faith in Jesus as God’s Messiah but it does not cancel God’s continuing fidelity to his people Israel. “… [H]as God rejected his people?” asks Paul; “… [H]ave they stumbled so as to fall?” His answer is clear: “By no means!” (Rom. 11:1,11).

Even when Paul draws the differences between Jews and Christians most starkly, he proclaims God’s enduring faithfulness to Jews: “As regards the gospel they are enemies of God for your sake; but as regards election they are beloved, for the sake of their ancestors; for the gifts [of God] and the calling of God are irrevocable” (Rom. 11:28–29). Because God remains true to Israel, Christians have confidence that God will remain true to us. Karl Barth asks, “Do you believe that it lies with us to exclude the Jew from this faithfulness of God? Do you really believe that we can and may deny him this?” He then gives voice to the Reformed theological tradition: “God’s faithfulness in the reality of Israel is in fact the guarantee of His faithfulness to us too.”

The relationship of the Christian church to the people Israel is not that of a replacement, but of “a wild olive shoot” grafted into “the rich root of the olive tree” (Rom. 11:17). While the New Testament contains numerous references to God’s “new covenant” in Christ, these cannot be taken to mean that “new” cancels God’s previous covenants. Just as the covenant at Sinai did not dissolve the covenant with Abraham, so the new covenant sealed in Christ’s blood “… does not annul a covenant previously ratified by God, so as to nullify the promise” (Gal. 3:17).

Throughout the centuries, the way that Christians relate to Jews has been a barometer of the church’s spiritual health. Too often, persecution and pogroms, forced “conversions,” ghettos, multiple forms of discrimination, and subtle modes of contempt have indicated that Christians have become “aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of promise” (Eph. 2:12). Often, these attitudes and events have resulted from uninformed stereotypes of Jews and Judaism. Genuine knowledge is essential, not only for the sake of Jews, but also because Christians can fully understand who we are as people of faith only when we understand who Jews are as people of faith. Understanding who Jews “were” in biblical times is insufficient; we must recover in our time the good news that Christ “has broken down the dividing wall, that is, the hostility between us” (Eph. 2:14).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to explore more deeply what it means to affirm that Christians and Jews now worship and serve the same God, and how this differentiates Christian-Jewish relations from Christian relationships with adherents of other religions.

John Calvin, devoting an entire chapter of the Institutes to an explication of “The Similarity of the Old and New Testaments,” declares that “The covenant made with all the patriarchs is so much like ours in substance and reality that the two are actually one and the same.” Clearly, there are differences in “the mode of dispensation” between the two, so that Calvin readily acknowledges that there are differences between the Old and New Testaments. “I freely admit the differences in Scripture, to which attention is called,” says Calvin, “but in such a way as not to detract from its established unity.”

Christian faith is firmly grounded in the faith of Israel, for Christian faith affirms that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is the one triune God. Superficial contrasts between “the wrathful God of the Old Testament” and “the loving God of the New Testament” are not only inaccurate readings of both Old and New Testaments, but also denials of the very foundations of Christian faith.

One of the earliest challenges faced by the Christian church came from Marcion’s attempt to detach Christianity from its Jewish heritage. He set out to remove all references to the Old Testament from Christian writings: only an edited version of Luke’s Gospel and edited versions of Paul’s letters remained once Marcion had excised all favorable mention of Israel, the law, and the justice of God. The church rejected Marcion’s assertion that the God who “has spoken to us by a Son” is not the same God who spoke “in many and various ways by the prophets” (Heb. 1:1–2). The early church preserved the truth of the gospel, yet both mild and virulent versions of Marcion’s heresy have endured.

Inappropriate uses of the historical-critical method of studying Scripture can reduce the Old Testament to a mildly interesting account of what people used to believe long ago and far away. For Christians, the Old Testament is more than a record of ancient Israel’s faith; it is “Christian Scripture.” Jesus proclaimed, “Do not think that I have come to abolish the law or the prophets; I have come not to abolish but to fulfill” (Mt. 5:17). Similarly, Paul says that “Christ is the “telos” of the law so that there may be righteousness for everyone who believes [telos—“end”—not as “termination” of the law, but as the law’s “goal, purpose”]. Christian interpretation of the Old Testament is properly theological while also employing historical-critical tools.

Well-intentioned replacement of the terms “Old Testament” and “New Testament” by “Hebrew Bible” and “Early Christian Writings” can have unintended yet unfortunate effects. They combine to imply that the “Hebrew Bible” is “their Bible,” not Christian Scripture, and that “Christian Writings” are confined to the New Testament. Using the common term “testament” for both indicates the integral, inseparable connection between the two. “Old” and “New” may be retained because the former does not mean outdated or inferior and the latter does not imply the replacement of the former. (“Older and Newer Testaments” or “First and Second Testaments” are alternatives that also convey this connection.)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to explore more deeply the singular reality that Christians and Jews share Scripture. At the same time, the church is called to recover the Old Testament as “Christian” Scripture.

“… and has broken down the dividing wall … of hostility …” (Eph. 2:14).

Many Christians mistakenly equate contemporary Jews with New Testament Pharisees, and the current state and people of Israel with Old Testament Israel. There is a sense in which the latter is an understandable mistake, for modern Middle Eastern cities and states often bear the same names as they did in the past—e.g., Egypt, Syria, Jerusalem, and Israel. However, biblical realities should not be read into present-day political situations, nor should modern political situations be read into biblical narratives or accounts of the gospel. Twenty-first-century Christians do not live under the Pharaohs, Assyrian conquerors, Babylonian captors, David’s Jerusalem, or the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. Christians live now with the modern heirs of those peoples, shaped by all of the intervening events and forces of history. Today’s Judaism is not the ancient Judaism that we see in the Bible, but Rabbinic Judaism. It is a faith that is rooted in Scripture, but one, like our own, that has been shaped by centuries of faithful interpretation, change, and renewal. Today’s Jews must be understood in relation to their long history since the time of Jesus, and in light of the faith, ethics, and practice that marks their lives today.

The survival of the Jewish people, in spite of hostility, exile, diaspora, and holocaust, is significant. Karl Barth relates the story about Frederick the Great asking his personal physician for a single proof of the existence of God. The physician replied, “Your Majesty, the Jews!” Barth comments that, “in the person of the Jew there stands a witness before our eyes, the witness of God’s covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and in that with us all.” It is a witness to the faithfulness of God, and the faithfulness of the Jewish people. The survival of the Jews comes in spite of suppression, separation, and persecution, most lamentably by Christians. Christian teaching of contempt for Jews and the subsequent history of ghettos, pogroms, and even holocaust is not simply a distant memory. Anti-Semitism is a continuing reality throughout the world, including within the Christian church.

The New Testament does not merely encourage toleration of the Jews. The New Testament surprise is not that Jews are encompassed within the grace of God, but that God’s mercy extends beyond Jews to include the Gentiles. It is the people of the other nations, the “Gentiles” (the overwhelming majority of the church) who were “without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of promise.” It is they who have been brought near by the cross of Christ (Eph. 2:12–13) so that “there is no longer Jew or Greek … for all … are one in Christ Jesus” (Gal. 3:28). The good news of the New Testament is not confined to the first century; its proclamation has enduring significance. Paul’s affirmation that God has not rejected his people Israel, that the Jews have not stumbled so as to fall, and his declaration that “all Israel will be saved” (Rom. 11:26) is as true today as Paul’s proclamation of our salvation in Christ.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to examine its interpretation of Scripture, its theology, its educational materials, and its public policy in order to avoid explicit or implicit teaching of contempt for Judaism and Jews. Continuing conversation with Jews should include faithful exploration of inaccurate and offensive characterizations of Jews and Judaism.

C. The Land

“… the LORD appeared to Abram and said, ‘To your offspring I will give this land’” (Gen. 12:7).

As the 1987 statement reminded the church, a faithful effort to understand the relationship of Christianity to Judaism, and of Christians with Jews, “cannot avoid the reality of the promise of land. The question with which we must wrestle is how this promise is to be understood in the light of the existence of the modern political State of Israel. … The State of Israel is a geopolitical entity and is not to be validated theologically.”

Addressing this issue is extremely difficult today, first, because of the unresolved conflict between Israel and the Palestinians, and the fact that assertions about the land figure centrally in political debates and determination of policies. The long occupation of Palestinian territory and the suffering of the Palestinian people has sometimes been justified on the basis of the biblical promise. Some Jews, particularly in the settlers’ movement, and some Christians have misappropriated the biblical promise, employing it as a political instrument. Moreover, some see any discussion of the issue of land as de facto part of a position on the Middle East, or on Israeli-Palestinian peace. The positions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on these matters are clear, and are to be found elsewhere. It remains to explore the biblical promise of land, and how it can be understood in the context of the Christian-Jewish relationship.

In Christian reading and interpretation of Scripture, the concrete particularity of the biblical promise of land has often proved to be a stumbling block, in a manner similar to the particularity of the incarnation and crucifixion of Jesus Christ (cf. 1 Cor. 1:18–25). God acts in and through the concrete realities of Jesus’ life and passion. In the same way, the Bible witnesses to God’s election of one people out of many, and God’s promise to one person, Abraham. It is not possible to deny the particularity of God’s gift of a specific land to the people of God’s covenant. At the same time, it is necessary to ask what this gift means for all the people of the world, and for the people of that particular place, both Israelis and Palestinians, at this time in history.

In the biblical account, the land of Israel is the land given by God to the Jewish people. This land was promised to the descendants of Abraham and Sarah. It is this land that was the promised place in which God’s people were to keep God’s covenant, live according to God’s will, and be a light to the nations. “If you obey my voice and keep my covenant, you shall be my treasured possession out of all the peoples. Indeed, the whole earth is mine, but you shall be for me a priestly kingdom and a holy nation” (Ex. 19:5–6).

In the scriptural account, the land is integral to the responsibility of God’s people. The land is given not just as a place to live, but primarily as the place in which the people Israel can live out the covenant and carry out God’s commandments. The concrete gift of land, as presented in the biblical text, comes less with rights than with distinctive responsibilities. The gift of the land is conditional upon the following of God’s way. The Scriptures warn repeatedly that failure to do so will result in God casting the people out of the land (cf. Lev. 20:22; Deut. 8:11–20, 30:15–18, etc.). The Scriptures also speak of this land in proclaiming the return of God’s people from exile; the land is central to the redemption of God’s people. God found this particular people “in a desert land, in a howling wilderness” (Deut. 32:10), and appointed them to be the Lord’s people. God gives this particular land to them, in which they are to fulfill His will, in order to establish the Sovereignty of God on earth.

The land for which Israel yearns and which it remembers is never unclaimed space but always a place with Yahweh, a place well filled with memories of life with him and promise from him and vows to him. It is land that provides the central assurance to Israel of its historicity, that it will be and always must be concerned with actual rootage in a place which is a repository for commitment and therefore identity. Biblical faith is surely about the life of a people with God as has been shown by all the current and recent emphases on covenant in an historical place. And if God has to do with [the people] Israel in a special way, as he surely does, he has to do with land as an historical place in a special way. It will no longer do to speak about Yahweh and his people, but we must speak about Yahweh and his people and his land. 10

While Brueggemann encourages us to acknowledge the concrete reality of the land for biblical faith, other Christian biblical interpreters have understood God’s gift of land in more spiritual or metaphorical terms. They assert that with the coming of the new covenant, God is no longer concerned with physical land, but with the human heart, and not solely with one particular people, but instead with all of humankind. God’s gift of this particular land to this particular people is seen by these interpreters as a demonstration of God’s gift of the potential for life, for fruitfulness, and for the pursuit of holiness and justice to all people.

Historically, a widespread, traditional interpretation of Scripture has argued that, because the Jews rejected Jesus, God rejected the Jews, put the church in the place of the Jewish people as God’s chosen ones, and cast them out of the land. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has clearly rejected this supersessionist teaching, affirming that “the church, elected in Jesus Christ, has been engrafted into the people of God established by the covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Therefore, Christians have not replaced Jews.”11

A minority of modern Christian interpreters attributes the creation of the modern state of Israel directly to God, and sees the ingathering of Jews to that state as a fulfillment of prophecy, or as the beginning of the end times. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has rejected such dispensationalist biblical interpretations, which purport to discern the time and order of God’s future activity.12 Presbyterians are also wary of attributing too much theological significance to a state, rejecting with Barmen “the false doctrine, as though the State, over and beyond its special commission, should and could become the single and totalitarian order of human life, thus fulfilling the church’s vocation as well.”13

Reformed and Presbyterian interpreters, however, have usually understood the promise of “land” primarily as an earthly and historical reality. The foundational events of Christian faith also took place in this land; it is here that the Word became flesh in Jesus of Nazareth, a Jew who lived in this same land, then under Roman occupation. History and the concrete material world are foundational to our understanding of God’s work of salvation. In biblical perspective, life in relation with God always involves actual human communities in concrete places, struggling to live within God’s kingdom.

Both the Old and New Testaments are clear that “The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps. 24:1). The earth is God’s creation, and God alone is holy and to be worshipped. Other texts go on to suggest that “in the end” God will create a “new heaven” and a “new earth,” in order to accomplish God’s own intentions (Isa. 65:17; 66:22; Rev. 21:1–5). No one but God has everlasting ownership of land on this earth, and because God owns the land, no one has ever been “more” than caretakers of the land of Israel, or of any other land. At the same time, God’s people, whether we mean the particular Jewish people or are speaking more universally, are “not less” than stewards. God has given the land as a trust for safekeeping, a place for responsibility, and an arena in which to deal justly with one another and with the land (Ex. 19:6).

The connection between the Jewish people and the particular land of Israel has been expressed in every generation of Jews, in liturgy and poetry, in daily prayers and charitable giving, and in periodic movements to return. Their connection with this land has been, and remains, a part of Jewish self-understanding, from antiquity through today. Though there are Jews who do not find this connection to either the biblical land or the modern state essential to their self-understanding, for the great majority of Jews the biblical land, the state of Israel, and Jewish identity are inextricably intertwined.

Most Jews understand that the land of biblical Israel and the modern state of Israel are two distinct realities: the state is a contemporary secular and political entity, whereas the land is the geographic place promised and given by God in the Torah, the boundaries of which are not exactly defined. Nevertheless, the two are closely related elements of Jewish peoplehood.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms the ongoing covenantal relationship between God and the Jewish people, and the continuing commitment of Jewish men and women to live out God’s will in daily life, for the sake of fulfilling God’s purpose for all humanity. Yet it is difficult for Christians to understand how the modern state can play a role for Jews, similar to the role of the ancient land, in the fulfillment of this covenant. In light of Christian experience through time, it is difficult for us to accord a contemporary state spiritual or religious significance. Moreover, as citizens of the United States, our thinking about the state is affected by the American understanding of the separation of church and state.

Most Christians find it far easier to understand the modern state of Israel as a haven of refuge for the Jewish people. Their long history of repeated displacement and persecution may remind American Christians of the need for refuge that brought many of our forbears to this country. Some Christians assert that this reality of Jewish history is being used politically in relation to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The church needs careful conversations with Jews in order to come to a fuller understanding of these issues.

It is certain that no clear geographical boundaries of the ancient land of Israel can be established from the biblical text. Thus, it is also certain that no boundaries of a modern state can be established from the biblical text. It is dangerous, and involves ignoring nearly two thousand years of intervening history, to embroil the Bible in the defining of the boundaries of Israel or any modern state.

While we affirm that God’s gift of land was, like the incarnation, particular and concrete, we also give thanks God as the giver of the potential for life, fruitfulness, and justice to all of humanity. God’s gift of land, and the potential and responsibility that goes with that gift, pertains both to the Jews and to the Palestinian people who live alongside them in what was the ancient, biblical land of promise. Both peoples have claims on the same land. Jews and Palestinians give voice to incompatible historical narratives and political claims, each assumed to be “correct” by its narrators. What is not often clearly said in the midst of the conflict is that both people, in different ways, are recipients of God’s gift and responsibility.

The tradition of God’s gift of land in the biblical account does not resolve this conflict, or provide any basis by which to settle modern territorial disputes. Neither the Israeli state nor the Palestinian Authority has a divine right to the land. Both the Israeli and Palestinian peoples do have the right to secure homelands in which to live responsibly, and pursue their national and cultural aspirations. Policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding the Israeli-Palestinian conflict make clear that an end to all forms of violence, together with the establishment of two viable states through a negotiated resolution of this conflict, are desperately needed for peace, security, and justice for both peoples.

However, Presbyterian commitments to justice and peace for Palestinians and Israelis alike can only stand if we base these commitments on strong support for justice for all people. This means that, in our work for Israeli-Palestinian peace, we must be sure to seek justice and security for both peoples. We must also reject and not make use of the history of Christian anti-Judaism and all of the stereotypes and prejudices that accompany it.

Whenever our critique of the Israeli-Palestinian situation employs language or draws on sources that have anti-Jewish overtones, or makes use of classic Christian anti-Jewish ideas, we cloud complicated issues with the rhetoric of ignorance, subliminal prejudices, or the language of hate. This undermines the church’s advocacy for peace and justice. Critical questions such as ending the occupation of Palestinian territory by Israel or the future of Jerusalem are complex and difficult. We must not make them more difficult by importing anti-Jewish motifs into our discussions.

Arguments suggesting or declaring that the Jewish people are no longer in covenant with God, or statements that echo the medieval Christian claim that the Jews are to blame for the crucifixion of Christ, employ classic themes of anti-Judaism. Presbyterians should be alert to occurrences of these themes and question any assertions that are based on them.

Characterizations of Zionism that distort that movement can all too easily demonize Jews. When Zionism is presented as monolithic or univocal, or solely as an extension of European colonialism and a result of anti-Semitism, the Zionist movement’s history, internal debates, and ethical concerns are distorted. The problems and suffering of the Palestinians are not due solely to Zionism. Many Israelis working passionately for peace are motivated by forms of Zionism. The origins, development, and practices of Zionism and its relationship to the realities of the Israeli-Palestinian situation are much more complex than such a picture presents.
Critique of the state of Israel and its policies is always legitimate and is not, in itself, anti-Jewish or anti-Semitic. It is common among Jews and Christians; Israelis, Palestinians, and Americans. However, critique by Christians can sometimes come close in tone or content to a denunciation of Judaism or the Jewish people. Polemic that identifies Israeli officials with Jewish authorities in the time of Jesus is especially problematic, and clouds an accurate understanding of the current situation. In addition, citizens in democracies such as Israel and the United States are responsible before God for the actions of their governments. The citizens of Israel, not the Jewish people as a whole, are responsible for the conduct of Israeli state policy.

Christian liberation theology embraces the Exodus narrative as a story of God’s liberation for all oppressed people. This theology reflects on the experience of an oppressed people and its liberation in light of the experience of ancient Israel. Broad theological use of the Exodus narrative does not abrogate its continuing centrality in the faith and self-understanding of the Jewish people. The biblical stories of liberation, like those of God’s gift of land, are at one and the same time particular narratives regarding God’s relationship with the Jewish people, and also descriptions of God’s intention to free and provide a home for all peoples.

Some expressions of Christian liberation theology tend to describe the Palestinian experience as oppression by “Jews” or “Zionists” rather than by Israeli state authority, or liken the passion of Jesus to the sufferings of the Palestinian people. Responsible theological critique of state policies should not characterize a whole people as oppressors or “Christ-killers.” Such a characterization of the situation can easily sound like an echo of the classic anti-Jewish accusation that all Jews everywhere are guilty of killing Christ. For Jews this is terrifying, because the narrative of the passion and crucifixion has been used as a theological basis for the ghettoization, denigration, and killing of Jews for nearly twenty centuries. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is attentive to Palestinian Christians as they speak theoretically about what is happening to them. At the same time, Presbyterians are called to discern echoes of the historic condemnation of Jews as “Christ-killers,” and to eschew any such anti-Jewish teaching.

Clearly, the relationships of Presbyterians (or any Christians) and Jews should neither depend on, nor dictate, particular positions regarding the Israeli-Palestinian situation or its resolution. Our relationships with Jewish neighbors do not necessitate approval of Israeli state policy. Speaking out respectfully against actions of Israeli authorities and groups, or of Palestinian entities, is to be expected among Christians and Jews. Disagreements about the dynamics and possible solutions of the Israeli-Palestinian situation are to be expected as well. Jews and Presbyterians may be surprised by the similarity of their critiques of Israel’s actions as well as by their shared hopes for the aspirations of Palestinians and Israelis alike.

Questions regarding our understandings of land, and of the politics of the Israeli-Palestinian situation, are central to engaged conversation between Christians and Jews. In order to build relationships of respect and honest understanding with Jewish neighbors, Presbyterians must be willing and prepared to talk with them about our concerns and questions regarding Israel and the land. Presbyterians must also be willing to listen to their expressions of attachment to Israel, their understanding of the biblical promise of land, and the ways that the state of Israel speaks to them of responsibility, justice, and hope.

D. Evangelism

“… the promise is for you, for your children, and for all who are far away, everyone whom the Lord our God calls to him.” (Acts 2:39).

Presbyterians share a basic conviction that the church is called to tell the good news of salvation by the grace of God through faith in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord to all people. In the midst of a world of death and decay, the church witnesses to the reality of God’s love revealed in Jesus Christ through its proclamation of the gospel and the character of its transformed life. The church’s incarnational witness has both personal and social implications. The community of faith declares the mighty acts of God, pointing others to Christ rather than to itself. “Evangelism is joyfully sharing the good news of the sovereign love of God and calling all people to repentance, to personal faith in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord, to active membership in the church, and to obedient service in the world.”

The church’s evangelistic task is to be witnesses, teachers, practitioners, and sharers, who engage in the struggles of life and extend to others the invitation to become Christ’s disciples. Unfortunately, the history of Christian mission includes some examples of evangelization carried out with little regard for the people to whom the gospel was proclaimed, in ways that have been aggressive, disrespectful, and damaging. Even so, Christian proclamation of the gospel has attempted to be faithful to “the Great Commission” that we follow Jesus into all the world, inviting all to become Christ’s faithful disciples.

In recent decades, Presbyterians have become increasingly aware of two new challenges to evangelism: the secularization of the culture and the religiously plural character of American society. North America is a mission field, and churches can no longer depend on the natural entrance of people into the community of Christian faith. These realities confront the church with new questions about the appropriate character and means of Christian proclamation.

How should the gospel be shared with Jews? Should Christians assume that Jews are without God, cut off from God’s covenant, and so must be converted to Christian faith in order to be restored to communion with God? Or does the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob continue to be present with his people? The New Testament makes it clear to Christians that Jews are not empty vessels, without God, who must be filled with Christianity in order to be restored to divine favor. “I ask then, has God rejected his people? By no means! … So I ask, have they stumbled so as to fall? By no means! … as regards election they are beloved … [that] they too may now receive mercy” (Rom. 11:1,11, 28, 31). With Paul, we affirm these things, but we also join our voices to Paul’s to affirm that these things are a mystery, and to confess, “Oh the depth of the riches and wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and how inscrutable his ways! … For from him and through him and to him are all things …” (Rom. 11:33, 36).

God remains faithful to the people Israel; God remains faithful to Christians. Jews remain faithful to the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; Christians remain faithful to the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob whom we know in Emmanuel, Jesus Christ. As two peoples who are known and loved by God and who know and love the one God, Christians and Jews are therefore called to be faithful to one another in bonds of love.

One mark of Christian fidelity to Jews is honest sharing of the faith that is in us. Christians are not called to witness to their faith because Jews are outside the embrace of God’s redemption and must be brought into the Christian church. Rather, Christians bear witness to Christ because brothers and sisters who live together in integrity do not withhold their deepest convictions from one another. Jews and Christians are called to live in open relationships of mutual witness in which beliefs and hopes are shared in love. Christians and Jews speak to one another, listen to one another, and learn from one another. And together, Jews and Christians bear witness to the world, showing in word and deed the faithfulness of the one God.

Mutual witness goes beyond formal dialogue to patterns of shared life in which conversation, cooperation, and collaboration develop between churches and synagogues, rabbis and ministers, individual Christians and Jews. It includes mutual disclosure of the ways God is known in the lives of both peoples, respectful listening to and learning from one another. It embraces both mutual affirmation and, when necessary, mutual questioning and correction.

Christian witness should not target Jews in pointed strategies of proselytism, attempting to convert them to Christianity. Especially to be avoided are attempts to present Christian faith in Jewish guise, duplicating Jewish liturgies and practices while avoiding or marginalizing distinctively Christian sacraments and symbols. Faithful, authentic witness to the gospel must always be both truthful and modest. Christian love can never be a Trojan horse for aggressive proselytism, and words of Christian proclamation cannot be used as weapons to coerce conversion. Christians should always be prepared to give “an accounting for the hope that is in [us]; yet do it with gentleness and reverence” (1 Pet. 3:15–16).

Yet persons who come to Christian faith from Jewish backgrounds must not be asked to deny their Jewish heritage, even though from a Jewish perspective they are no longer religiously Jewish. In the first century of the church, it became clear that Gentiles did not have to become Jews in order to become Christians. It would also be a denial of the gospel if in the twenty-first century Jews had to become Gentiles in order to become Christians. Yet Christian communities and all who confess faith in Christ should make clear the Lord to whom they belong, and publicly profess their Christian faith in work, liturgy, and life. Because Jews find it difficult to understand how Christian converts from Judaism continue to claim their Jewish heritage, Christians and Jews can engage in careful conversation in order to explore their incommensurate understandings of this matter.

Some Christians and Jews find themselves in “interreligious marriages.” The history of Jewish-Christian separation, suspicion, and antagonism makes it difficult for both Jewish and Christian partners, as well as their families and religious communities, to discover how each partner can live out their faith with integrity. Too often, the difficulties are such that both partners drift into “no religion.” The birth of children presents parents with the dilemma of how they can share religious faith within the family. Too often, the difficulties are such that children are deprived of any engagement with Judaism or Christianity. “Interreligious marriages” pose challenges to synagogues and churches, and especially to Christian and Jewish spouses and their families. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should see this complex matter as an occasion for intensive dialogue with the Jewish community.

E. Partners In Hope

“I am about to do a new thing … do you not perceive it?” (Isa. 43:19).

The relationship between Christians and Jews is not simply a concept. Theological understanding is essential, but theology must never become mere theory, abstracted from life. Paul’s letter to the Romans is not an academic essay, coolly considering the theological question of Jews who have not professed faith in Jesus as Messiah and Lord. Paul grapples with a matter that touches him personally and deeply:

I have great sorrow and unceasing anguish in my heart. For I could wish that I myself were accursed and cut off from Christ for the sake of my own people, my kindred according to the flesh. They are Israelites, and to them belong the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the worship, and the promises; to them belong the patriarchs, and from them, according to the flesh, comes the Messiah, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen. (Rom. 9:2–5)
Christians are called to know Jewish brothers and sisters, to listen and learn from them in the sharing of faith and faithfulness, and to give thanks for their living testimony to the enduring fulfillment of God’s gracious promises. In our worship and personal prayers we can join voices throughout the church, praying …

God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,
Father of us all, whose Son Jesus was born a Jew, was circumcised, and was dedicated in the Temple:
thank you for patriarchs and prophets and righteous rabbis, whose teaching we revere, whose law is our law fulfilled in Jesus Christ.
Never let us forget that we, who are your people, are by faith children of Abraham, bound in one family with Jewish brothers and sisters, who also serve your promise;
through Jesus Christ, our Master and Messiah. Amen. (The Worshipbook)

Almighty God, you are the one true God, and have called forth people of faith in every time and place.
Your promises are sure and true.
We bless you for your covenant given to Abraham and Sarah, that you keep even now with the Jews.
We rejoice that you have brought us into covenant with you by the coming of your Son, Jesus Christ, himself a Jew, nurtured in the faith of Israel.
We praise you that you are faithful to covenants made with us and Jewish brothers and sisters, that together we may serve your will,
and come at last to your promised peace. Amen. (Book of Common Worship)

May Jews and Christians join in voicing our foundational affirmation, “The LORD is our God, the LORD alone,” in mutual witness to the world.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 08-03 be disapproved.
Rationale

The ACREC believes that this paper should not be approved because of flaws in the process in which the paper was formulated and concerns about the theological bases upon which this paper relies. The ACREC strongly advises that approval and distribution of this paper be postponed until a broader consultation process can be instituted to include other church constituencies who have an interest in this topic.

1. Process Flaws

The ACREC is concerned that the National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus (NMEPC) and others, such as the Israel/Palestine Mission Network and the Middle East Study Committee, were not given an effective opportunity to contribute to this paper, resulting in vital contributors being sidelined.

- Consultation process ongoing for six years before NMEPC was asked to comment on the draft paper and was only given approximately three weeks to do so.
- The above constituencies should have been involved in the development of the paper.
- The process appears to have been shrouded in secrecy —identity of contributors/participants/writers, only recently made known, —limited circulation of drafts.

2. Content Flaws

The ACREC also has concerns about the following topics discussed in the paper that deserve greater input from a wider and more diverse group of scholars and by those who are affected by the paper, such as the NMEPC.

- The lack of Christology/the Lordship of Christ
  —Blurring the lines between Christianity and Judaism.
- Theology of the Land
  —Use of Scripture versus international law regarding Israel’s right to exist.
  —Justifying Israel’s use of force through Scripture.
- Endorsing Zionism, a political ideology
- Separating theology from ethics
- Demonization of Liberation Theology

Item 08-04

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) do the following:

1. Approve the report “Toward an Understanding of Christian-Muslim Relations” and commend it to the church for study and guidance.

2. In consideration of the need for a more intentional and engaged approach to Christian-Muslim relations, call upon the church, through its agencies and governing bodies, to support education for Christian-Muslim relations among Presbyterians, by

   a. developing and making available updated resources for study and reflection on Islam and Muslim life, including case studies of Muslims and Christian-Muslim relationships in a variety of countries of the world, and especially in the United States;

   b. urging presbyteries and seminaries to hold training events in partnership with the Offices of Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship of the denomination regarding Islam and Christian-Muslim relations, in order to equip congregational leaders and interested Presbyterians to teach others;
c. continuing to monitor the church’s own educational materials for sensitivity and accuracy regarding Muslims and Islam, and to encourage the inclusion of Islam and Christian-Muslim relations in curricular materials of the church;

d. encouraging Presbyterians to come to know and befriend their Muslim neighbors, and to talk in-depth with them about matters of shared concern, life and faith, and the questions each has about the other, to implement a program of shared community experiences that might include sharing meals, cultural events, and activities in mosques and churches together, and to develop an educational program that includes inviting a Muslim leader to offer instruction in a church and a Christian leader to offer instruction in a mosque.

3. Call upon the church, through its agencies and governing bodies, to support further theological reflection regarding Islam and Christian-Muslim relations, in company with Muslims and within the Christian family, by

a. providing for a series of consultations between Presbyterians and Muslims to be facilitated by the Offices of Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship;

b. learning more about Islam and Christian-Muslim relations in various areas of the world through interaction with partner churches and institutions, study centers, mission personnel; and

c. calling for the development, through this process, of a fuller study articulating a theological understanding of Islam and Christian-Muslim relations for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to be presented for consideration of the 221st General Assembly (2014). This process shall include broad consultation including representatives of the national Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus and partner churches in majority Muslim countries and other significant bodies both Muslim and Christian.

4. Call upon the church, through its agencies and governing bodies, to support Presbyterians in the practice of faithful witness with Muslims, by

a. encouraging presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians to engage with Muslims and to explore ways by which common concerns for justice and community development can be addressed through cooperation between Christians and Muslims;

b. asking appropriate bodies of the church, and individual Presbyterians, to identify and speak out against bigotry, prejudice, discrimination, and violence against Islam and Muslim peoples of all cultures, especially in the United States;

c. continuing to work with Christian churches in areas of Muslim majority in their efforts to live freely and openly as Christians, and to work for full religious freedom (including the right to change one’s religion) and for equal citizenship for all persons in their societies;

d. continuing to monitor the use of religion in the service of power, in the undergirding of systems of oppression, and in legitimating extreme political agendas, and to act as peacemakers and peacekeepers;

e. exploring missiological issues and the forms of Christian witness in use among Presbyterians, and the forms of Muslim da’wah (invitation, call), in the United States and in other parts of the world, in order to discern and practice respectful, open and honest ways to share faith in word and deed;

f. supporting and doing this work through ecumenical and interfaith partnerships and organizations whenever possible;

g. providing, through a continuing Office on Interfaith Relations, for maintenance and strengthening of relations, formal and informal, with persons and organizations of other faith communities, and in particular with Muslim organizations on behalf of the church, and for support of Presbyterians as they become involved, or continue to work, in building Christian-Muslim relations and other interfaith relationships.

This report is in response to the following referrals:

Toward an Understanding of Christian-Muslim Relations

A. Preface

The need to understand Islam and relate to Muslims has only increased since 1987, when the 199th General Assembly (1987) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) adopted a Study on Islam and mandated the development of resources for the church to use in learning more. Since then, complex world events, including the terrorist attacks of 2001, and growing interaction among Presbyterians and Muslims in the United States and other parts of the world, have raised practical and theological questions that require careful consideration.

The 218th General Assembly (2008) instructed the Office of Interfaith Relations and the Office of Theology and Worship to “undertake a study of current and evolving Presbyterian theological understanding of our relationship with our Muslim sisters and brothers” and urged that “such a study be done in a context of relationships and dialogue” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 526, Item 07-07). In acting on a companion overture, the 218th General Assembly (2008) called for a study “that would have the same scope and authority as the 1987 study on Christian-Jewish relations” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 507, Item 07-01).

In carrying out this mandate, careful attention was given to the earlier 1987 study of Christian-Muslim relations, conducted by an appointed task force over four years. That task force, its staff, and consultants included many who had significant experience living as confessing Christians among Muslims. They studied the issues carefully and created the book Christians and Muslims Together: an Exploration by Presbyterians (edited by Byron Haines and Frank Cooley) for the use of the church. Long out of print, that volume described Islam and the Muslim community, and identified a number of issues and questions needing attention by Presbyterians. The task force made a brief summary report to the 199th General Assembly (1987) with a number of recommendations.

In response to the mandate from the 218th General Assembly (2008), the Offices of Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship held two consultations in 2009, bringing together a small group of Presbyterians, with Muslim consultants, to discuss the most significant issues. The Presbyterians involved were: Frances Adeney, Louisville Presbyterian Seminary; Marsha Snulligan Haney, Interdenominational Theological Center; Ben Campbell Johnson, emeritus, Columbia Theological Seminary; Damayanthi Niles, Eden Theological Seminary; Margaret Orr Thomas, Presbytery of New York City; and J. Dudley Woodberry, Fuller Theological Seminary. Whitney Bodman, of Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, also served as a consultant. Muslim consultants included Ghulam Haider Aasi, American Islamic College; Naeem Baig, Islamic Circle of North America; Farhanahz Ellis, All Dulles Area Muslim Society; Marcia Hermansen, Loyola University Chicago; and Ronald Shaheed, Masjid Sultan Mohammed of Milwaukee. Staff members to the consultative process were Jay T. Rock, coordinator for Interfaith Relations; Victor Makari, coordinator for the Middle East; E. Quinn Fox, associate for Theology in the Office of Theology and Worship; Charles A. Wiley III, coordinator for the Office of Theology and Worship; and Robina Winbush, Associate Stated Clerk and director of Ecumenical and Agency Relations.

This document, written in the light of the rich interactions of those consultations, offers an initial response to the request for a new, theologically grounded study. It represents the beginning, rather than the end, of the longer process of reflection and ongoing engagement that is needed. It offers some initial theological understandings, and points of departure for further consideration. Additional study is needed in order to develop a resource that can adequately describe the changed contexts and dynamics within which Christians and Muslims interact in these early years of the 21st century, and that can deal clearly and at sufficient depth with the theological questions raised by the Christian-Muslim relationship.

B. What Compels Us Toward Understanding?

For nearly fourteen centuries, Christians and Muslims have lived together in many parts of the world. If Presbyterians could have ever imagined living separately from Muslims, that time has passed. In the United States, as in Europe, established and growing Muslim communities are our new neighbors, opening doors to relationships and raising questions in ways that cannot now be ignored. “If our immediate circle of neighbors or friends does not reveal the religious plurality of the world, we need look no further than our cities, our nation, and our globally-connected world to see the diverse religious traditions which increasingly intermingle there. In this environment, persons [and] communities affect one another even when they are unaware of so doing.”

There are an estimated 1.57 billion Muslims in the world today. Large Muslim populations are found in Asia, Africa, and the Middle East, with smaller Muslim communities in Europe, Australia, and the Americas. Some 8 to 10 million people in the United States are Muslims. Whether through the presence of Muslim children attending local public schools with our children, through contact with Muslim men and women in medical practice, teaching, and other fields, or in other ways, Presbyterians in the United States find themselves living together with Muslims as never before.

Our Christian mandate to love our neighbors as ourselves impels us to seek greater understanding. The ground of our relationship with Muslims is not simply our common humanity; it is much more the commandment to love that is the basis of our relationships as it is the basis of our lives as disciples of Jesus. “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.’ This is the greatest and first commandment. And a second is like it: ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself’” (Mt. 22:37–39).

Because Muslims and Christians have lived side-by-side for many centuries in much of the world, the history of the interaction of the two religious traditions is long and varied. Both Muslims and Christians carry historical wounds that affect contemporary relationships. These need to be understood, and addressed. In addition, we as U.S. Christians know little about the Muslim communities that live on many continents, are of many cultures, and speak many languages, and little about their interactions with Christian neighbors. The history of Muslims in the United States, particularly among African Americans, is itself long and complex. If we are to understand the contours of today’s “Muslim world,” and learn how to engage with the wide variety of Muslims among us, we must seek a more accurate historical understanding.

In addition, Islam and Christianity each claim that the truth they affirm is universally valid and significant for all human-kind. Both Muslims and Christians understand that part of their religious duty and privilege is to share the truth that they have received. Christian outreach and Muslim da’wah (invitation to belief and service of God) share many features; each is also a distinct and distinctive form of witness. In order to remain faithful in our Christian witness, we are impelled to know more than our own affirmations. We need to discover the seriousness of the spiritual quests and commitments of Muslims.

In many passages of the Qur’an, Christian readers encounter individuals, stories, and themes of the Old and New Testaments that are familiar to them, and yet not exactly the same as the biblical accounts or formulations. In order to understand the distinctiveness of Islam and Christianity, as well as their interrelatedness, Christians need a much clearer understanding of the Qur’an and of Islamic tradition. As we gain this understanding in our encounter with Muslims, we have an opportunity to come to a better understanding of our own faith, Scripture, and theological tradition.

Sadly, economic, political, and social factors have led to violent conflicts in many parts of the world in which Muslims live. In a few countries, radical groups that use violence in the name of Islam are active politically. At the same time, large-scale military interventions (from within or from outside) and other governmental actions often inflame and exacerbate local conflicts. Though the root issues of many conflicts are economic or social rather than religious in nature, religion is often used to express and manipulate emotions and to legitimate a wide variety of political and social agendas. The political issues are pressing and give greater impetus for us to seek Christian-Muslim understanding.

Understanding these political and social realities, often magnified and oversimplified in media presentations, requires study as well as honest and open exploration of such questions with Muslims themselves. It is urgent that we as Christians learn how to speak in an informed manner against the misuse of Islam, and of Christianity, in the service of extreme ideological ends, or as instruments of conflict. And it is important that we learn to work with Muslims in speaking out against abuse of religion, and in cooperating for justice and peace in our world.

In the United States, the events of 2001 and the years since have fostered a growing suspicion and antipathy toward Islam, and a readiness to accept stereotypes about Muslims in general. The media often use imprecise and sometimes inflammatory language regarding Muslims, and many books have been published painting an unrelievably negative picture of Islam. Any instance of violence connected to Islam readily feeds fears and misunderstandings. Unfortunately, this reaction is common among Christians in the United States. Lacking a knowledge of the religion of Islam, and having little interaction with Muslims as persons, many Christians have not been able to distinguish false characterizations from accurate statements, or to replace superficial and sometimes biased impressions of Muslims, with informed, personal knowledge of them. In the place of ignorance, stereotypes, and superficial knowledge about Islam and our Muslim neighbors, Presbyterians seek more accurate information and personal encounter with Muslims.

Many Presbyterians are already engaged in building relationships with Muslims in their local areas. The 199th General Assembly (1987) recommended that Presbyterian congregations and individuals engage with Muslims for dialogue, cooperative service, and witness. That assembly suggested that “as Christians and Muslims work together to discover new ways for the future and as Christians reflect theologically on the meaning of such experiences” clearer answers would emerge about “what faithfulness requires of the church” (Minutes, 1987, Part I, paragraph 31.324). The fruits of such experience and interaction are yet to be fully considered. A new study is needed (as suggested in the recommendations of this document) that will explore the theological issues in depth, and develop a more substantial grounding for a faithful Presbyterian response in Christian-Muslim relations.

C. Faithful Engagement

A fuller understanding of Islam and Muslims will enable Presbyterians to enter more faithfully into the responsibilities, challenges, and opportunities that are before us in living with our Muslim neighbors. Increased cooperation, open and probing dialogue, joint study, and friendship with Muslims are needed and desirable avenues that can lead us into more knowledgeable, personal, and responsible Christian-Muslim relationships. Members and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are encouraged to engage with Muslims in a renewed process of learning and discernment, to discover more fully how we can live with Muslims as neighbors in faith.

Christian faith invites us into ever-deeper relationship with God and with our neighbors. God’s overflowing love, known by us in Jesus Christ and through the Holy Spirit, draws us out of ourselves and into life in right relationship with God and others. To be made in the image of God is to be made for community. God became flesh and dwelt among us; God is present with us, and God’s Spirit invites us into deeper engagement with our fellow human beings, each of whom is made in God’s image as we are. “We are called to relate to people of other faiths in full humility, openness, honesty, and respect. We respect … others’ God-given humanity and the seriousness of their spiritual quests and commitments. It is our Christian faith in the Triune God and our intention to live like Jesus, not our cultural standards, that require this of us.”

Christianity and Islam are lived and living realities. Neither faith can be known fully through the study of ideas alone. We Christians embody our faith in worship, holy days, and practices of discipleship, as well as in our beliefs, spirituality and relationships. Islam likewise comes to life in prayer, holy days, acts of faith, thought, spiritual practices and relationships. Both religious traditions are communal in nature, and can be known more fully in community. Since we will not be able to understand one another unless we become personally acquainted, we need to spend time together, teaching each other who we are.

When Christians interact with Muslims, particular questions about our own faith are brought into focus. This encounter is a challenging opportunity to rediscover what we believe, particularly in relation to such issues as how we understand God and God’s revelation, and what it means to live faithfully. Engagement with Muslims can help us learn more clearly how to articulate our Christian faith, both in our words and in our practice.

D. Toward Theological Understanding

Theological questions arise for us, and for the Muslims with whom we relate, clothed in issues of culture and context. Our encounters and our thinking are affected by many factors that originate in the realities of our living, and in inherited and culturally conditioned patterns of thought and practice. When we engage others, we learn about the limits of our own assumptions, and realize that our theological reflection is shaped by our own cultural backgrounds and inherited certainties.

For fruitful theological reflection, the integrity and diversity of both the Christian and the Muslim communities of faith will need our attention. Since both traditions are multi-vocal and multicultural, care will be needed to comprehend the richness of Muslim thinking as well as to articulate the fullness of Reformed theology. The task of reflecting theologically on Islam and Christian-Muslim relations is complex and challenging. We confess that we now see but dimly what “faithfulness requires of the church” in relation to Islam and Muslims.

There are many points at which Christian faith and practice is similar to Muslim faith and practice; these can be a basis for cooperation and provide a beginning point for reflection. There are also many points of difference, at which the Christian way and understanding is distinct from Islam. Awareness of such differences can be the basis for even deeper relationships and mutual learning, rooted in the integrity of our separate faith traditions. The following reflections are initial insights that may lead to theological understanding.

1. God’s Revelation

Christians and Muslims desire to know God. The idea of God’s revelation to human beings is central to both Christianity and Islam. It is not unusual to hear Muslims describe Christians as “people of the Book,” a phrase from the Qur’an that refers primarily to Christians, Jews, and Muslims. The Arabic phrase (‘Ahl al-Kitāb) is perhaps best understood as people of scripture. For both Christians and Muslims, faith rests in an affirmation that there is a God who reveals.

For Christians, “Revelation is self-disclosure of God. Thus God is both its source and its content.” Revelation illumines our understanding of ourselves and others, but its primary content is knowledge of the one who is revealing. In the 1987 General Assembly theological statement, “Nature of Revelation,” revelation is divine self-disclosure that is analogous to the way human persons disclose themselves to one another by words and particular deeds. People are disclosed to each other in their characteristic behavior. Such encounters give knowledge, though not total knowledge, of the self of the other person. In the same way, God’s self is disclosed in God’s dealing with human beings, but God is still more than what is revealed. Reformed views of revelation have emphasized that God’s self-disclosure gives knowledge of God’s will or disposition toward us, and not only (or even primarily) of God’s inner nature, which remains mysterious and veiled in its revealedness. Through God’s self-disclosing activity we learn God’s purposes and precepts for our lives, God’s judgments, and above all God’s promises of grace. So understood, revelation is a personal meeting of God with human beings, the experience of which can be reported in language. It is given to bring us, both corporately and individually, into relationship with God, and to open to us a way of life, of reconciliation, peace, and joy, of worship and service, love and justice.

For Presbyterians, an affirmation of revelation is also an affirmation that God is “beyond anything we can ask or imagine” (Cf. Eph. 3:20). What we know of God through revelation is true knowledge, but it is not exhaustive. Revelation is an initiation into the mysteries of God, though, paradoxically, the more we (truly) know of God, the more we realize how much more there is to know. With real knowledge comes acknowledgement of the ultimate mystery of God.

Islam, like Christianity, affirms that revelation communicates the nature of God, and agrees that this nature is not fully communicable. Limited human intelligence cannot know God’s essence fully. Though it can be glimpsed in God’s attributes, contemplated in God’s names, and is revealed in the Qur’an, God’s nature is not revealed in its fullness. God is greater than what can be communicated to humanity in revelation. Thus both faiths affirm the human inability to express or understand the fullness of God.

Muslims also see God’s revelation in creation, and through human conscience. Muslims see in creation a “text” that teaches the believer about the ways in which God has ordered, bestowed, and planted love and mercy within all of life. The revelation of the Qur’an is, however, the clearest revelation of God for Muslims, confirming human understanding, and providing definitive guidance for living. All signs and testimonies to God should be studied, but in the Qur’an, Muslims hold, God completes and corrects all earlier revelations, and uncovers the “straight path” that God has given humanity to walk (Qur’an 1.6).

The Qur’an for Muslims is the fullness of revelation. For Christians, the fullness of revelation is found in Christ Jesus. Christians are invited to know “God’s mystery, that is, Christ himself” (Col 2:2). Christians believe that God was in Christ (2 Cor. 5:19) and “in [Jesus Christ] all the fullness of God was pleased to dwell” (Col. 1:19). The Confession of 1967 helps to clarify this:

The one sufficient revelation of God is Jesus Christ, the Word of God incarnate, to whom the Holy Spirit bears unique and authoritative witness through the Holy Scriptures, which are received and obeyed as the word of God written. The Scriptures are not a witness among others, but the witness without parallel. The church has received the books of the Old and New Testaments as prophetic and apostolic testimony in which it hears the word of God and by which its faith and obedience are nourished and regulated.

It is in the person of Jesus Christ that we have the “one sufficient revelation of God.” The Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are also revelation because through them, the Holy Spirit bears “unique and authoritative witness” to Jesus Christ. Through these writings, the church “hears the word of God.”

2. The Nature of God

Christians and Muslims together affirm that there is but one God, who is the Creator of all, and Sovereign over all. Nevertheless, there are important distinctions in how we understand God.

a. God Is One

The Christian Church’s earliest statements of belief—the Nicene and Apostles’ Creeds—begin with the affirmation of belief in the Almighty God who made heaven and earth. The Nicene Creed specifies that “We believe in one God, the Father, the Almighty” (The Book of Confessions, 1.1). Later, the Scots and Second Helvetic Confessions specifically state that “God is one”:

We confess and acknowledge one God alone, to whom alone we must cleave, whom alone we must serve, whom only we must worship, and in whom alone we put our trust. Who is eternal, infinite, immeasurable, incomprehensible, omnipotent, invisible …

… We believe and teach that God is one in essence or nature, subsisting in himself, all sufficient in himself, invisible, incorporeal, immense, eternal, Creator of all things both visible and invisible, the greatest good, living, quickening and preserving all things, omnipotent and supremely wise, kind and merciful, just and true. Truly we detest many gods because it is expressly written: “The Lord your God is one Lord” (Deut. 6:4). …

Muslim understanding of the oneness of God is expressed, for example, in the Shahada (testimony), or first “pillar” of Islam: “There is no deity but God, and Muhammad is the Messenger of God” (la ilāha illā Allāh, Muhammad (un) rasūl Allāh). The Qur’an teaches that God is unique—a being of pure oneness and otherness:

Say: He is God, the One and Only; God, the Eternal, Absolute; He begetteth not, nor is He begotten. And there is none like unto Him (Qur’an 112:1–4).

An essential affirmation of faith for Muslims is of God’s oneness (tawhid). Associating anything or anyone else with God is shirk—an unforgivable sin:

God does not forgive anyone for associating something with Him, while He does forgive whomever He wishes to for anything else. Anyone who gives God associates (partners) has invented an awful sin (Qur’an 4:48).

In this assertion, Christians will see a concern similar to the first of the Ten Commandments:

I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of slavery; you shall have no other gods before me. (Ex. 20:2–3)

For both Christians and Muslims, each in our own way, God is one—unique, infinite, immutable, eternal, and omnipotent—and to deny this in any way is a grievous transgression.
b. God’s Name

Both Muslims and Christians who speak Arabic call God “Allah.” Christians who are not Arabic speakers often have assumed, wrongly, that because Muslims use the word “Allah,” it means they have a different name for God, or are referring to a different deity than Christians. But Arabic translations of the Bible use the word “Allah” for God.

Although Muslims most often refer to God as “Allah,” and Christians speak of God as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, Islam and Christianity each have a tradition of using attributes of God as appellations. Christians are familiar with names for God such as “Almighty,” “Creator,” “Redeemer,” “Sovereign,” “Holy One,” and “Sustainer.” The Westminster Confession expands the early creeds’ affirmation that God is “almighty” by giving a comprehensive statement of traditional characteristics of God’s nature:

There is but one only living and true God, who is infinite in being and perfection, a most pure spirit, invisible, without body, parts, or passions, immutable, immense, eternal, incomprehensible, almighty; most wise, most holy, most free, most absolute, working all things according to the counsel of his own immutable and most righteous will, for his own glory; most loving, gracious, merciful, long-suffering, abundant in goodness and truth, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin; the rewarder of them that diligently seek him; and withal most just and terrible in his judgments; hating all sin, and who will by no means clear the guilty.

God hath all life, glory, goodness, blessedness, in and of himself; and is alone in and unto himself all-sufficient, not standing in need of any creatures which he hath made, nor deriving any glory from them, but only manifesting his own glory in, by, unto, and upon them: ... To him is due from angels and men, and every other creature, whatsoever worship, service, or obedience he is pleased to require of them.

Muslims speak of the “Ninety-Nine Most Beautiful Names” of God, and are familiar with names of God such as “All Compassionate,” “All Merciful,” “Creator,” “Bountiful Bestower,” “Judge,” “All Knowing.” Exploration of the similarities and differences of understanding contained in these ways of speaking of God can benefit both Muslims and Christians.

c. The Three Persons of the One God

Christian faith has always been clear, and distinct from Islam, in affirming that within God’s unity there is a trinity or “tri-unity”—God is simultaneously one and three. God is Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. These three “persons” constitute the one God.

It is here, in the understanding of God’s unity as Trinity, that Islam and Christianity are in serious disagreement. In the Second Helvetic Confession, written in the sixteenth century, we find these harsh words:

... we condemn the Jews and Mohammedans[sic], and all those who blaspheme that sacred and adorable Trinity. We also condemn all heresies and heretics who teach that the Son and Holy Spirit are God in name only, and also that there is something created and subservient, or subordinate to another in the Trinity, and that there is something unequal in it, a greater or a less, something corporeal or corporeally conceived, something different with respect to character or will, something mixed or solitary, as if the Son and Holy Spirit were the affections and properties of one God the Father ...

The Qur’an, in turn, rejects the Trinitarian understanding of God:

O people of the scripture, do not transgress the limits of your religion, and do not say about God except the truth. The Messiah, Jesus, the son of Mary, was a messenger of God, and His word that He had sent to Mary, and a revelation from Him. Therefore, you shall believe in God and His messengers. You shall not say, “Trinity;” You shall refrain from this for your own good. God is only one god. Be He glorified; He is much too glorious to have a son. To Him belongs everything in the heavens and everything on earth. God suffices as Lord and Master. (Qur’an 4:171)

If the language of The Second Helvetic Confession appears indelicate, the language in the Qur’an can also be sharp:

Unbelievers indeed are those who say that God is a third of a trinity. There is no god except the one god. Unless they refrain from saying this, those who disbelieve among them will incur a painful retribution. (Qur’an 5:73)

According to the Qur’an, Christians are committing “shirk” (association of another being or thing with God) by referring to Jesus as the Son of God and believing in the Trinity. For Muslims, such a confession constitutes a mistaken understanding of Jesus, and compromises the uniqueness and oneness of God.

Christians, on the other hand, affirm that God is known and experienced in the dynamism and interrelatedness of Creator, Redeemer, and Sustainer. God’s very being is found in the intimate communion of the three persons of the Trinity. “Trinity” is not simply how we speak of God, but who God is: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

3. Human Nature, Sin, and Wholeness

Both Christianity and Islam teach that God confers divine blessings upon human beings and all of creation. Each also, in very different ways, traces the history of God’s seeking and guiding men and women through the figures of Adam, Abraham, Moses, Jesus, and others. However, the two faiths reflect quite different understandings of the human condition, and how God acts on behalf of humanity.

a. God’s Guidance of Humanity in Islam

Like Christians, Muslims believe that human beings are responsible before God—humans are called to respond to God in love, worship, and obedience. The purpose of life is to live in the way that pleases God, that is, to live in the way God wills, and for which the Divine has created humanity. Muslims believe that through the prophets and in revelation, God gives men and women what they need to awaken from forgetfulness, and to return to their created nature, which is to live in accordance with the will of their creator, who is sovereign over all. God forgives humanity’s sins, and endows human beings with the ability to live in obedience. A “Muslim” is one who “is submitted” to God’s will.

Those who acknowledge God as their sovereign, and stay on God’s path through the guidance given in the Qur’an, enjoy peace and right relationship with God and neighbor in this life. Such obedience also leads to a life in paradise after death:

Those are limits set by Allah. Those who obey Allah and His Messenger will be admitted to Gardens with rivers flowing beneath, to abide therein (for ever) and that will be the supreme achievement. (4:13)

Human beings, in the Islamic view, are created “in the best form/stature” (Qur’an, Chapter 95) to recognize, serve, and worship God. Men and women do of course sin, and forget their purpose or lose their way, and therefore God has provided the reminder and guidance of revelation. Faithful humans who sincerely repent receive the forgiveness of their All-merciful Creator, as well as the ability to return to God’s service.

b. God’s Salvation in Christianity

The Christian understanding is markedly different. Christians affirm Paul’s statement, “… I can will what is right, but I cannot do it. For I do not do the good I want, but the evil I do not want is what I do … making me captive to the law of sin” (Rom. 7:18–23). In Reformed Christian understanding, human nature is marked by an inclination to sin. Men and women are created in the image of God, but are fallen creatures, in need of rebirth. Human beings need the power of God to break into their lives, in order to free them for obedience to God, and to transform them for participation in the new creation that God is bringing into the world.

The gospels recount the good news of this freeing activity of God through Christ Jesus. For Christians, the salvation story is a Trinitarian drama:

According to the witness of scripture, God’s love comes to us in a threefold way: God loved the world and gave the Son for our salvation (Jn 3:16); Jesus Christ, God’s only Son our Lord, loved us and gave his life for us (Gal 2:20); the gift of God’s love in Christ has been poured into our hearts by the Holy Spirit (2 Cor. 1:22). The church’s confession and praise of the triune God is rooted in the threefold self-revelation of the one God who is our creator, our redeemer, and our sanctifier. 16

The means of salvation is Christ’s life, death, and resurrection: “The cross of Christ is at the heart of our faith, for it is through the Lord’s death that we receive new life.”17

Unjustly condemned for blasphemy and sedition,
Jesus was crucified, suffering the depths of human pain and giving his life for the sins of the world.

God raised Jesus from the dead, vindicating his sinless life, breaking the power of sin and evil, delivering us from death to life eternal.18

“For God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, so that everyone who believes in him may not perish but may have eternal life” (Jn. 3:16).

Thus Christians embrace the good news of the love of God culminating in the transforming acts of Jesus’ suffering, death, and resurrection. Our understanding of Jesus and his salvific role is very different from the Muslim understanding of Jesus as a prophet. Traditional Islamic teaching generally holds that Jesus did not die on the cross; the crucifixion is unimaginable for a true prophet of God. God would not subject a prophet to the passion, nor would God require it, since only God’s constant and available forgiveness is necessary to restore the way to loving and obedient life.

This difference in understanding regarding human nature, redemption, and Jesus’ salvific role, is at the heart of the most critical theological differences between Christianity and Islam. Christians and Muslims will continue to struggle to understand one another in relation to their different affirmations regarding what humanity requires, and what God has done for them.

E. Toward Faithful Life and Witness

Resting in the love of God, set free through the love and power of Christ Jesus, and led by the Holy Spirit, Christians respond in faith, hope, and love. We journey in the way of Jesus, and seek to be transformed so that we might more closely live our lives as he did. In all that we do, we seek to be faithful followers of Jesus, who asked his disciples to be his “witnesses” to the ends of the earth (Acts 1:8). We give witness to what God has done and is doing in our lives, in the ways in which we live, and through the account we give for the hope that is in us. Witness is the expression of our Christian faith through worship, proclamation, and service.

1. Stewardship of Creation

Christians and Muslims share similar understandings of the human vocation in the world. Both the Bible and the Qur’an present a picture of the world as God wills it to be. Christians affirm that Jesus taught the Reign, or Kingdom, of God was breaking into the world, and invited his followers to behave as citizens of that Reign, caring for one another, healing, forgiving, praying, embracing those who had been excluded, and inviting others to join them in living life abundant. To live in the world in this way remains our Christian calling. The Qur’an portrays the world as fundamentally ordered by God, the merciful and gracious sovereign. Human beings have been created, in part, to be God’s stewards on earth. Muslims are called to act as God’s representatives (Arabic “khalifa”), working on God’s behalf. Christians understand that the goal of this calling is to build God’s community of love and justice on earth. For Muslims, the goal is to be agents to promote the realization and practice of God’s standards for a just and compassionate way of life. Though there are important differences in these understandings of the human role in God’s work in the world, the parallels may be the basis for significant understanding and cooperation.

2. Agents of Justice and Peace

As part of their lives of faith, both Muslims and Christians are also deeply concerned that the societies in which they live should be just. For Christians, concerns regarding justice are rooted in the teaching and example of Jesus, as well as in the prophetic tradition that clearly shaped his understanding and announcement of the kingdom of God. In the Qur’an, God’s concern for justice as well as compassion is stated repeatedly (cf. Qur’an 7:85, 5:8). Although inspired by different religious traditions, Christians and Muslims share many concerns for social justice. Poverty, homelessness, environmental degradation, and violence in media and society are all problems that Muslims and Christians can address together. “We are called to work with others in our pluralistic societies for the well-being of our world and for justice, peace, and the sustainability of creation.”

In seeking justice, it is possible and becoming for Christians and Muslims to make a joint witness as religious persons. “When all inhabitants of the planet bear joint responsibility for its life (e.g., for the environment or the globalized economy), our role is to cooperate with others in seeking mutually acceptable ethical standards for behavior.”

Human rights and the rights of communities are among the concerns that Christians and Muslims share. In the light of global discussions of such rights, and the difficult situations in many countries, these issues are often sensitive and entangled with particular historical and political struggles, or culturally specific claims. Christians and Muslims can make an important contribution by “affirming that the principles of human rights and religious freedom are indivisible…. Religious freedom does not only imply freedom of conscience but also the right to live in accord with religious values and the recognition of cultural and religious diversity as basic to human reality.”

The rights of religious groups and of minority populations in societies are important topics for both Muslims and Christians, and an area in which conversation between the communities is needed in order to clarify misunderstandings and explore shared concerns and possible areas for cooperation.

In such conversations, issues of history require attention. Many Muslims link Christianity and Christians with recent experiences of colonial power and control in various parts of the world, and these associations carry echoes of the Crusades for some. On the other hand, Christians often recall specific instances of violence against, or oppression of, Christians in parts of the world in which Muslims are in the majority. Such wounds are a living factor in Christian-Muslim relations today.

Presbyterians and other Christians live in relation to Muslims here in the United States and in many other parts of the world. In some places those relationships are marked by conflict, mistrust, even violence; in other places by familiarity, understanding, and shared community. Challenges and opportunities present in one place or time are different than those of another place or time, and it is important not to project one specific reality of Christian-Muslim interaction onto all Christian-Muslim relationships in all places.

An essential feature of Christian-Muslim encounter and engagement is the diversity of the communities involved. Muslims in the United States not only come from many different places in the world, but also reflect the diversity of thought that is characteristic of the Islamic tradition. There is significant diversity within Islam, which is manifest in the rich variety and differences in schools of thought, practices, and legal interpretation that Muslims follow. There are lively debates within the Muslim community regarding how certain religious values and commitments can best be lived out, particularly in a country that is nominally secular and does not have a Muslim majority, such as the United States.

In addition, the history of particular groups raises important issues for reflection and possible joint action. For example, the history of African American Christians and Muslims underlines the ongoing need to address issues of racism and marginalization in our relationships. African American Muslims also practice and give voice to an understanding of Islam that is thoroughly rooted both in the essentials of the tradition and in a particular, and particularly important, American experience. Other Muslims in the U.S. come from South and Southeast Asian countries, from the Middle East, or from cultures of Africa.
the Balkans, or the former Soviet Union. Relations among all of these groups, like relations among the diverse ethnic and cultural groups in the church, are often a source of mutual enrichment, but sometimes a source of difficulty. Racism is a reality within the Muslim community, as within the Christian. Perceptions of ethnic backgrounds and cultures, as well as racial prejudice and religious biases, come into play in Christian-Muslim relationships. Since both Christianity and Islam condemn denigration of others based on such factors, Christians and Muslims can work together to eradicate bias and foster reconciliation.

The experiences of women involved in Christian-Muslim relations also deserve careful attention. Historically and still in our own time, many women face difficult struggles in both traditions. It is important to note, however, that Christians often fault Islam about the treatment of women in ways that demonize Islam, A Muslim woman’s covering of her head is assumed to be a sign of oppression, even when the situation of that woman is not known. Western Christian reactions may prevent our recognition of the power women may have in particular Muslim contexts. The ways in which Christians and Muslims imagine women and women’s lives in each other’s traditions needs to be replaced with real knowledge of their lives and of women’s efforts to gain authority and voice in each tradition. Christian women may also need to listen with particular care and to consider the need to accommodate different standards and mores when engaging with women and others in the Muslim community.

Youth and young adults in both traditions bring concerns and experience that also deserve the attention of Christians and Muslims as relationships are being formed. These groups often encounter one another using patterns of interaction and ways of learning that are different from those found in more typical Christian-Muslim dialogues. The questions and concerns of youth and young adults are often distinctive, and can raise significant issues of justice.

Another concern for Christians and Muslims is the stereotypes, labels, and terms we use about one another. Stereotyping of one another is a type of false witness; it should be replaced by interaction and knowledge of each other. Christians too often create images of Islam and Muslims out of fears, from scraps of information, or on the basis of simplistic and sensationalistic media presentations, without benefit of direct encounter with Muslim men and women. We inflict harm on one another through uninformed speech and insensitive actions, often without intent. In this relationship in particular, Christians learn, or re-learn, that we live in a society that tends to demonize those we fear or do not understand. We confess that this tendency is alive in our churches. Addressing these concerns is another area for Muslim-Christian cooperation.

Christians and Muslims also share a vocation to come to know neighbors and strangers with whom we live. The teaching and ministry of Jesus, and the witness of the Old Testament, give clear guidance: for Christians, love of God and love of neighbor are inseparable. “Central to the ongoing story of the Bible is God’s long-term, patient, merciful purpose of recreating a human community in which the love of God and neighbor becomes a fact of history.”

We welcome the interaction between Muslims and Christians initiated by “A Common Word Between Us and You,” an invitation to Christians from a diverse, international group of Muslim leaders issued in October 2007. This letter has begun an exploration of how Muslims and Christians can come together for understanding and cooperation based on love of God and love of neighbor. Response to “A Common Word” is one of many avenues that can be explored to forge ties between our communities without ignoring our real differences, and live our call to be peacemakers.

3. Respectful Outreach

Among all persons of whatever faith or none, Christians are “called to make joyous witness ... in a spirit of respect, openness, and honesty.” “Turn to the Living God: A Call to Evangelism in Jesus Christ’s Way,” approved by the 203rd General Assembly (1991), elaborates on this calling:

As our Christian affirmation meets the faith of other, we are not called to respond in judgment but in awareness of the limitless, saving presence, power, and grace of God. The spirit that is to inform our witness among [them]

... presupposes our presence with them, sensitivity to their deepest faith commitments and experiences, willingness to be their servants for Christ’s sake, affirmation of what God has done and is doing among them and love for them.

Our Christian witness should be done in the way of Jesus. It should be marked by a sharing of a people’s hopes and suffering; openhearted hospitality and acceptance; a servant love that renounces arrogance, domination, or manipulation; healing; prayer that leads to openness and builds bridges of love; urgency; shared ministry; proclamation in word and deed; and living, and calling others to live a holy life.

When God gives us courage to engage in the giving and receiving—the listening and speaking—of [interfaith] dialogue, Jesus is present. Through the power of God’s Spirit, we are enabled to be truly ourselves in authentic relationships. When we interact with others personally, Jesus offers reconciliation, healing, teaching. Through his body, the church, he extends his ministry of love.

Muslims are also called by their faith to extend a clear witness to the teaching of Islam (Qur’an 2:143; 3:64). Muslims are expected to make the message of Islam clear in the world, and to engage in outreach (da‘wah) to share the message of God by word, worship, and deed. Both Christian and Muslim communities affirm the importance of making witness to God in the world, and both believe that their message is for all humankind. Muslims, like Christians, send missionaries. In both communities, the majority of missionaries serve among their own sisters and brothers to equip and renew them. In many situations of mission and da’wah, both Christians and Muslims recognize the fact that how one behaves or lives is the most appropriate and effective witness.27

As Christians and Muslims witness to one another, we will learn about one another and one another’s faith, enjoy occasions of life together, talk about a wide range of topics and concerns, and also share our faiths with one another. The intent among both Christians and Muslims should be to do this in ways that foster the peace and welfare of our life together, upholding the right of each community to exist and to conduct their religious life freely, and guarding against the denial of such freedom, and against harmful uses of the power of either community.

While recognizing that mission and da’wa are essential religious duties in both Christianity and Islam, Muslims and Christians need to uphold the spiritual and the material well-being of all. Many missionary activities, and the methods they use, arouse legitimate suspicions. There are situations where humanitarian service is undertaken for ulterior motives and takes advantage of the vulnerability of people. Thus the clear distinction between witness and proselytism becomes crucial. It is the basis for the recognition that people of faith can enjoy the liberty to convince and be convinced and at the same time, respect each other’s religious integrity, faithfulness to one’s tradition and loyalty to one’s community.28

An important corollary to mutual witness is mutual correction. Though it may be difficult, the interaction of sharing our faiths with one another makes it possible to raise questions about perceived errors in thinking, and harmful attitudes or behaviors. Since mutual correction is also a two-way dynamic of Christian-Muslim relationships, Christians may receive critique as well as give it. This is a welcome, if sometimes uncomfortable, aspect of growing friendship.

In Christian-Muslim relationships in our time, it is clear in new ways that, as human beings, we often fail one another. Muslims and Christians fail to understand one another, and often do not make the effort to do so. Commanded by our faith to love our neighbors as ourselves, and committed to do all in our power to do so, Presbyterians seek fuller understanding of Islam, relationships with Muslim communities, and discernment of what God requires of us in Christian-Muslim relations.

The “Study Catechism” (1998) gives us guidance on interaction with people of other faiths:

As much as I can, [with Muslims] I should meet friendship with friendship, hostility with kindness, generosity with gratitude, persecution with forbearance, truth with agreement, and error with truth. I should express my faith with humility and devotion as the occasion requires, whether silently or openly, boldly or meekly, by word or by deed. I should avoid compromising the truth on the one hand and being narrow minded on the other. In short, I should always welcome and accept these others in a way that honors and reflects the Lord’s welcome and acceptance of me.29

The limits to salvation, whatever they may be, are known only to God. Three truths above all are certain. God is a holy God who is not to be trifled with. No one will be saved except by grace alone. And no judge could possibly be more gracious that our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.30

Striving Together in Dialogue, #31.

Jesus said, “I give you a new commandment, that you love one another. Just as I have loved you, you also should love one another. By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another.” (Jn. 13:34f). See also Mark 1:44, where Jesus heals a leper and says, “See that you say nothing to anyone.”

“Striving Together in Dialogue: a Muslim-Christian Call to Reflection and Action” commended for study by the 214th General Assembly (2002) (Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 400), #32. It is important to note that in Islam “da’wa” or outreach is not a legal requirement for a Muslim that is “essential” in the way in which other practices, like the five daily prayers, or the fast of Ramadan, are. Making Islam clear and present in the public sphere, revival or renewal of the Muslim community, and outreach are all part of the Muslim parallels to Christian witness.

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 08-04 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“2. d. encouraging Presbyterians to come to know and befriend their Muslim neighbors, and to talk in-depth with them about matters of shared concern, life and faith, and the questions each has about the other; to implement a program of shared community experiences that might include sharing, meals, cultural events, and activities in mosques and churches together; and to develop an educational program that includes inviting a Muslim leader to offer instruction in a church and a Christian leader to offer instruction in a mosque.

“4. b. asking appropriate bodies of the church, and individual Presbyterians, to identify and speak out against bigotry, and prejudice, discrimination, and violence against Islam and Muslim peoples of all cultures, especially in the United States …” (Item 08-04).

Rationale

This report is from the beginning of a Muslim-Christian dialogue process. The first amendment is meant to encourage congregations throughout the church to embed dialogues of their own in a variety of communal activities. The second amendment proposed is to help Presbyterians understand the full range of Muslim perceptions and realities, some of which contribute to Christian-Muslim tension.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 08-04 be disapproved.

Rationale

The ACREC believes that this report should not be approved because of flaws in the process in which the report was formulated. We believe the report needs a broader consultation to include the National Middle East Presbyterian Caucus, PC(USA), among other groups.
The National Presbyterian Middle East Caucus of the Presbyterian Church (NPMEC) was not given an effective opportunity to contribute to this paper. The consultation process had been ongoing since the last General Assembly; the NPMEC was given a short period of time (three weeks) to comment on a draft report. We think that the NPMEC, among other groups within the PC(USA) such as the Israel/Palestine Mission Network and the Middle East Study Group, should have been involved in the development of the report, as opposed to being given no opportunity or a marginal opportunity with little or no impact. Why did this process have to be closed off from constituencies within our own church who are so affected by the results of this paper?

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following churches be invited to send Ecumenical Advisory Delegates to the 220th General Assembly (2012):

Overseas: Presbyterian Church of East Africa; Church of Central Africa Presbyterian; Javanese Christian Church; China Christian Council; Guatemalan Presbyterian Church; Greek Evangelical Church; Evangelical Reformed Church of Poland; National Evangelical Synod of Syria & Lebanon; the Orthodox Patriarchate of Antioch and All the East; Waldensian Evangelical Church of the Plata River.

Within the United States: Reformed Church in America; Moravian Church (Northern and Southern Synods); Church of the Brethren; Progressive National Baptist Convention; Assemblies of God.

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations nominates to each General Assembly churches to be invited to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the subsequent assembly (Standing Rule B.2.g.; Organization for Mission, Section IV.C.7.). We recommend ten overseas churches and five churches from within the United States. Of the overseas churches, we recommend at least one church from each area staffed by the World Mission area. Of the churches within the United States, we recommend at least one church from the Formula of Agreement, at least two churches from Churches Uniting in Christ, and at least one church in our conciliar relationship.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following:

1. Affirm that

   a. the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in correspondence with the Evangelical Presbyterian Church, by virtue of our common membership in the World Alliance of Reformed Churches;

   b. our common membership in the World Alliance of Reformed Churches is a visible sign of our oneness in Jesus Christ; and

   c. as members of the body of Christ, we are all called to treat one another as followers of Jesus Christ.

2. Request the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to create guidelines offering basic protocols for interactions and behaviors between its member denominations.

3. Call the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to

   a. confess to the rich tradition of freedom of conscience that we claim as Reformed, Presbyterian Christians, and

   b. recognize that this same tradition causes us to be prone to separation, demonization of those with whom we disagree, and a captivity to insistence on our own rightness.
4. Invite the Evangelical Presbyterian Church to enter into such a season of confession with us.

5. Acknowledge the unique complexity of the relationship between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Evangelical Presbyterian Church, given the fact that the ecclesial roots of many churches, members, and ministers [now in the Evangelical Presbyterian Church lie in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its antecedent denominations] [are historically interwoven between these congregations].

6. Invite the General Assembly of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church to engage in bilateral dialogue concerning various dimensions of the relationships between the two denominations and its member churches, members, and ministers; and that a report from this dialogue be made to the 222nd General Assembly (2016), with an interim report made to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

7. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to develop resources to support presbyteries with congregations and/or ministers engaged in a process of discernment or undergoing the process of dismissal, in light of denominational learnings in the recent past.

8. [7.] Acknowledge the deep pain caused by the experiences of congregations departing or going through schism and of ministers departing, and call upon synods to consider developing care teams to listen to people’s stories, thereby enabling healing, with presbyteries also urged to extend extra care during such vulnerable times of congregational and presbytery life.

9. [8.] Encourage presbyteries, congregations, and individual families who experience the pain of separation to recognize that there is more than one way to understand the same event and to pray for one another through our shared faith in Jesus Christ.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 07-03. On Investigating the Actions and Conduct of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church—From the Presbytery of Peace River (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 512–13).

I. Preface

The 218th General Assembly (2008) received the following overture from the Presbytery of Peace River:

The Presbytery of Peace River respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to request the Executive Office of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) to investigate the actions and conduct of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church, as described below, and to take appropriate action.

Rationale

This report comes in response to an overture from the Presbytery of Peace River to the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the PC(USA) that would have asked the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) to investigate the role of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC) in persuading PC(USA) congregations to disaffiliate from the PC(USA) and be dismissed to the EPC. The assembly referred the overture to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations, which appointed a task group to make recommendations.

The task group met with presbyteries in which congregations had departed the PC(USA), with pastors and members of congregations who had departed or were considering departing the PC(USA) including those affiliated with the New Wineskins Association of Churches, and with leadership of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church. In listening to people’s stories and in reviewing documents, the task group sought to distinguish between actions of Evangelical Presbyterian Church, and actions of the New Wineskins Association (which consists of PC(USA) pastors and members, as well as former PC(USA) pastors and members who are now affiliated with the EPC).

The distinction is important in that the actions of the New Wineskins members can be considered matters internal to the PC(USA), at least at their root. Actions of the EPC, on the other hand, are matters between churches—churches that are both members of WARC. It is this latter category that is the focus of the original overture. The report that follows presents the findings of the task group regarding activities that are internal and external to the PC(USA), and presents recommendations on how the PC(USA) should move forward in its relations with the EPC.

II. Introduction

The 218th General Assembly (2008) received the following overture from the Presbytery of Peace River:

The Presbytery of Peace River respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to request the Executive Office of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to investigate the actions and conduct of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church, as described below, and to take appropriate action.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in correspondence with the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC) because both denominations are members of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC).

The Evangelical Presbyterian Church is actively pursuing a strategy to persuade Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches to disaffiliate with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and be dismissed to the Evangelical Presbyterian Church.
The Evangelical Presbyterian Church has created a transitional presbytery to facilitate the process. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 512)

The overture received the concurrence of the Presbytery of Minnesota Valleys.

The overture was referred to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations. The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations (GACER), a permanent committee of the assembly, advised that the 218th General Assembly (2008) refer the overture to GACER with the following rationale:

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations is charged with the responsibilities to act on and process recommendations and proposals addressing ecclesiastical ecumenical work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and to give guidance to the nurturing of unity among Presbyterian and Reformed churches in the U.S.A., with one another and with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In addition, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations seeks to work with our ecumenical agencies in addressing issues of mutual concern.

Item 07-03 raises significant issues about our ecclesiastical relationships with another Reformed Church and implications for our ecumenical relationships. Referral of Item 07-03 to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations would allow them to carry out their responsibilities both with another Reformed church and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 513)

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations concurred with the advice of GACER to refer the matter to GACER on a vote of 53 yes, one no, and one abstention. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved the committee’s recommendation to refer the matter to GACER on a voice vote.

The GACER determined the need for more information about what was happening and had happened in the affected presbyteries and congregations with regard to the EPC and thus formed a task group to listen to the parties and to formulate recommendations for the committee’s consideration based on what they heard.

The task group included: the Reverend Krystin Granberg (Presbytery of New York City), chair and a member of GACER; Elder Ed Chan (Presbytery of Pacific), a former member and past chair of GACER; the Reverend Terry Epling (Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy); the Reverend John Goodman (Presbytery of Coastal Carolina); the Reverend Joy Kaufmann (Presbytery of Huntingdon); and the Reverend Jeff Vamos (Presbytery of New Brunswick). The Reverend George Wilkes (Presbytery of Foothills) served January–April 2009, the Reverend Eugene Turner (Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse) served from January–June 2009.

The Reverend Robina Winbush, Associate Stated Clerk and director of the Department of Agency and Ecumenical Relations for the Office of the General Assembly, served as staff to the group.

III. The Process

The task group first met in January 2009. It reviewed information about those presbyteries that had experienced the loss of congregations to the EPC and outlined the following process for its work:

1. Identify which presbyteries to visit from among those that had congregations that had been or were in the process of being dismissed to the EPC.

2. Schedule visits to these presbyteries—Eastminster, North Alabama, Peace River, Pittsburgh, Redstone, Sacramento, South Louisiana, Wabash Valley, and Western North Carolina.

3. Conduct visits in teams of two task group members and attempt to meet face-to-face for interviews with
   - presbytery officers and staff (stated clerk, executive/general presbyter, moderator, etc.);
   - other presbytery leaders involved, as possible (council members, trustees, committee on ministry members, etc.);
   - persons affiliated with the PC(USA) and who were members of congregations that were dismissed to or joined the EPC or that are considering leaving the PC(USA);
   - pastors, leaders, and members of congregations that have been dismissed to or joined the EPC, are seeking dismissal, or are considering leaving the PC(USA).

4. Report to the whole group findings from each of the presbyteries visited.

5. Meet with leadership of the EPC to hear their perspectives and experiences regarding church relations with the PC(USA);

6. Report to GACER with observations and recommendations related to the task group’s assignment.

Between March and August of 2009, teams from the task group made visits and conducted interviews in the nine presbyteries identified and reported on these visits and interviews to the full task group.
On January 15, 2010, the task group met with four EPC leaders who had been designated for such a meeting by the Reverend Dr. Jeffrey J. Jeremiah, EPC Stated Clerk.

IV. Glossary of Terms

“Article 13”—Article 13 of the “Articles of Agreement,” (Appendix B of The Book of Order), which, at the time of reunion in 1983, provided a specific timeframe of eight years and rubrics within which congregations from the former Presbyterian Church in the United States could be dismissed from the PC(USA). It offered the possibility for a congregation to take its property with it as it was dismissed.

New Wineskins: A Time for Every Purpose Under Heaven—The document produced by the New Wineskins “Strategy Team” of nine persons (eight of whom have now left the PC(USA) for the EPC) giving options for how congregations might respond “faithfully” when they disagreed with various positions taken by PC(USA) General Assembly. The options included remaining as PC(USA) congregations as well as guidance about how to depart from the PC(USA), including advice on departing unilaterally. This publication was adopted at the New Wineskins convocation in 2007.

“Chapter 8/The Trust Clause”—A brief term that references the section of Chapter 8 in the PC(USA) Book of Order that has to do with property matters, also referred to as the “Trust Clause” in our Constitution. It describes how, given PC(USA) covenantal theology, the polity reflects that theology. Congregational buildings and other real property represent mission outposts, and therefore are held in trust by and on behalf of the denomination.

Loyalist—This term is used in this document, without association of positive or negative value, to refer to congregational members or ministers intending to remain in the PC(USA).

Disaffiliate—Departure from the PC(USA) by a congregation, usually operating unilaterally, without the advice and consent of the presbytery of which it was a member congregation.

“The Louisville Papers”—In response to requests from presbyteries facing congregations who wished to leave the PC(USA), denominational staff prepared two documents providing ecclesiastical and legal guidance.

- “Church Property Disputes: A Resource for Those Representing PC(USA) Presbyteries and True Churches in the Civil Courts”—This document was considered privileged and confidential attorney work communication.
- “Processes for Use by Presbyteries in Responding to Congregations Seeking to Withdraw”—This document was not marked by denominational staff as confidential. However, subsequent copies of the document appearing in New Wineskins and Presbyterian Lay Committee material bore “privileged and confidential” markings.

These documents outlined a range of possible options and strategies that presbyteries might consider. The documents were subsequently referred to as “The Louisville Papers” by critics of these documents, including the New Wineskins Strategy Team and The Presbyterian Lay Committee.

V. History

The focus of the task group was to listen and ascertain facts around the experiences of those involved with congregations and pastors wishing to leave the PC(USA). These facts provide the context for the report.

1. The EPC and PC(USA)—Early History

The histories of the EPC (with its organizing General Assembly in 1981) and the PC(USA) (with its organizing General Assembly in 1983) are deeply woven together, particularly since a large number of the congregations and ministers making up the EPC in its formative years had previously been a part of the PC(USA) or its predecessor bodies. Both the EPC and the PC(USA) lay claim to deep roots within the Presbyterian and Reformed traditions of the larger Christian family tree. Beginning with the reunion that created the PC(USA) in 1983, a process was in place for eight years whereby congregations could leave the PC(USA) with property; many such congregations left, and contributed to the early expansion of the EPC. This process, provided for in “Article 13” of the Articles of Agreement (see Glossary), remains a living memory. Further, despite occasional tension between the two denominations, the EPC and PC(USA) generally were able to maintain relatively cordial working relations up through the early part of the 2000s.

2. The PC(USA) New Wineskins Initiative—Beginnings

The New Wineskins Initiative began in 2003 by six ministers who were becoming dissatisfied with what they referred to as the “direction” of the PC(USA). At six-month intervals, these PC(USA) pastors met, adding to their number. Anticipating the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the PC(USA), this group began work on a vision statement of what a Reformed and Presbyterian denomination could and should look like according to their opinion. Missional theology, which was gaining popularity, provided a framework for their vision.
The EPC in the Early Twenty-First Century

As noted above, the EPC was initially comprised of congregations that had been determined not to be connected with the newly reunited PC(USA). From those beginnings, however, the EPC was determined to grow by planting new congregations.

The EPC had developed a denominational understanding of property that is substantively different from the understanding in the PC(USA). The EPC and its leadership see no reason for holding onto congregations, ministers, or real property if those assets will help those persons to be more effective in their mission. In this area, the EPC’s ecclesiology differs significantly from the PC(USA)’s.

4. The New Wineskins Initiative Evolves

By June of 2005, the New Wineskins movement held a “New Wineskins Convocation” in Edina, Minnesota. The vision statement crafted in 2003 led to a structural design, with working groups formed to craft a statement of faith essentials, a declaration of ethical imperatives, a preliminary version of a new constitution with which to replace the PC(USA) Book of Order. The PC(USA) ministers and sessions on behalf of congregations could sign on to the faith essentials and ethical imperatives and thus become New Wineskins adherents.

At the 2006 New Wineskins convocation in Tulsa, Oklahoma, practical issues around property and money came to the fore. Members of the New Wineskins Initiative pondered what leaving the PC(USA) might entail. A nine-member team was assembled to work on a transitional guide as a means to support congregations as they sought to exit from the PC(USA). They issued New Wineskins: A Time for Every Purpose Under Heaven (see Glossary) as a report early in 2007.

Also at its 2006 convocation, the New Wineskins Initiative voted to become The New Wineskins Association of Churches, an “umbrella organization” that enabled members of other non PC(USA) communions to affiliate with it. This also enabled former PC(USA) leaders who had become EPC to continue to participate.

5. Reaction Within the PC(USA)

By 2004–2005, many in the PC(USA) had taken notice of The New Wineskins Initiative and how it was becoming a vehicle for encouraging congregations to depart the denomination. Such developments engendered several reactions within the PC(USA): concern for the mission of the whole church as lived out in local communities; concern over the potential departure of large congregations with large numbers of members; concern about possible property implications; and concern for ruptured relationships within presbyteries.

The property trust provision (see Glossary), a historical tenet of the PC(USA) that bespeaks its connectional identity as a covenental community, ran counter to the emerging New Wineskins and EPC understanding of property. In the PC(USA), every congregation is understood to be a mission outpost of the denomination. Should any congregation cease to exist, the property devolves back to the denomination through the presbytery, and the property would be used to further the mission of the PC(USA) in the local area. The EPC’s contrasting understanding of property ownership is thus stated, “The particular church has ownership of its own property. It may buy, sell, lease, rent or otherwise determine the use of its property….” (EPC Book of Order, Sec. 7-4).

6. Conversations Between the EPC and the New Wineskins Initiative Leaders

As members of the New Wineskins Initiative within the PC(USA) were casting about for ways to encourage more missional congregations and were expressing increasing disapproval of the PC(USA), an informal conversation between a minister within the New Wineskins Initiative and an elder within the EPC occurred. This led to conversations between other leaders within the EPC and the New Wineskins Initiative.

At the same time, the EPC had entered into conversations among its leaders for some months in the early twenty-first century about how to structure a “missional” denomination, just as the New Wineskins adherents were also entering into similar conversation about how to live out a missional identity. The EPC went so far as to vote one of its geographic presbyteries as a “missional presbytery.” Additionally, with increasing numbers of the New Wineskins Initiative inquiring about becoming EPC, leaders in the EPC wondered how they could handle an influx of possibly 200+ congregations into their modest-sized denomination of approximately 185 congregations. They began to explore different ideas.

The EPC Stated Clerk Jeffery J. Jeremiah, in a December 20, 2006, letter to all the EPC congregations, referenced two specific decisions of the 2006 PC(USA) General Assembly as a “result (of which) many churches and pastors who identify themselves as Bible-believing evangelicals are looking to depart from the PCUSA. … I believe that in this point in our history, God has strategically placed the EPC to respond to the opportunity these changes represent. We are unapologetically confessional and reformed in a moderate way. We are not ‘loosey goosey’ in our theology, nor do we beat each other over the head over disagreements on the finer points of our theology. … Two ways we are taking advantage of this opportunity are (1) the transitional presbytery proposal our leadership has been developing since September, and (2) our conversations with the leadership of the New Wineskins. … The transitional presbytery (or presbyteries—we may need more than one) if approved at our 2007 General Assembly, will allow churches interested in coming into the EPC to find a safe haven outside their current denomination as quickly and as easily as possible. … [Rev. Dr. Jeremiah then references several EPC leaders meeting with New Wineskins leadership.] … Because of the hostile environment evangelical pastors and churches currently face in the PCUSA, at their request we cannot divulge much information about that meeting at this time. …” (see: Appendix A, which can be found as an attachment, gacer-rec-re-epc-appendix-a-message-from-scjeffjeremiah.pdf).

The stage was set for creation of the New Wineskins Transitional Presbytery.

7. Creation of the New Wineskins Transitional Presbytery of the EPC

At its General Assembly in 2007, the EPC voted to create the New Wineskins Transitional Presbytery, a nongeographic, transitional presbytery, effective upon the adjournment of that assembly and with an ending date of June 30, 2012. The purpose of the New Wineskins Transitional Presbytery, as stated in public documents, was to make smooth the departure of congregations that wanted to leave the PC(USA) in order to be received by the EPC. The creation of this presbytery allowed congregations to gain membership in the EPC provisionally. While in this provisional status, the EPC would have opportunity to assess whether the congregation or minister is an appropriate fit for full EPC membership in a geographic presbytery. Thus the geographic EPC presbyteries and their congregations were protected culturally from a large influx of congregations and ministers who might have changed the EPC in a substantial way. And the new congregations and ministers were given the means to sort out what direction to take: either stay at the end of the five-year transitional period and join “regular” geographic presbyteries, or be dismissed.

It should be noted that, although the stated purpose of the New Wineskins Transitional Presbytery was to facilitate the receiving of the disaffected PC(USA) congregations, according to the EPC leaders interviewed by the task group, the EPC did not actively solicit congregations and ministers to join the EPC.

Dismissing congregations to a nongeographic, transitional presbytery of the EPC presented problems for the PC(USA) presbyteries, since PC(USA) polity does not allow dismissing a congregation to independence, nor to a nongeographic presbytery (see VI.3.d below). As noted in VI.3.e, this became an issue when agreement to dismiss to a geographic presbytery of the EPC was not honored by the EPC in certain instances.

8. Deterioration of the PC(USA)/EPC Relationship

Inasmuch as some were beginning to name the New Wineskins Initiative a “schismatic movement” within the PC(USA), the creation of an ecclesial body within the EPC whose very purpose and name seemed to aim at absorbing PC(USA) New Wineskins congregations and pastors created a chilling in the relationship between the two denominations. This tension is evidenced by correspondence between the Stated Clerks, Michael Glodo and Jeffrey Jeremiah, of the EPC, and Clifton Kirkpatrick, Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) (see: Appendix B, which can be found as an attachment, gacer-rec-re-epc-appendix-b-letters-between-epc-stated-clerks-and-pcusa-stated-clerk.pdf).

VI. The Findings

The task group offers the following findings of fact, themes, and observations, which the task group gleaned from the listening process and site visits, as outlined Section II above. The task group’s conversations with those involved in situations where congregations and pastors departed (or attempted to) revealed varying degrees of conflict, disagreement, misunderstanding, pain, confusion, and, in some cases, grace.

In large measure, the conflict involved leaders affiliated with the New Wineskins Initiative (NWI)/New Wineskins Association of Churches (NWAC), loyalists (see Glossary) wishing to remain PC(USA), while EPC leaders also occasionally entered the scene. Since the NWI/NWAC and the EPC were and are so closely aligned, as noted above, full detail of how these situations unfolded “on the ground” is offered here.

1. Three main strategies for leaving: The task group’s visits revealed that congregations desiring to leave generally used one of three strategies. These three strategies are outlined in the Strategy Team report, New Wineskins: A Time for Every Season Under Heaven. This book served as a “playbook” for congregations desiring to leave. The suggested strategies are, essentially,

   a. negotiate with the presbytery,

   b. negotiate with the presbytery, but also use civil legal process, or

   c. just walk away (also termed “disaffiliation”; see Glossary).

2. Nature of conversations within congregations about separating from the PC(USA). Congregations desiring to explore leaving the denomination usually followed a process of congregational conversation and prayer, generally called “a season of discernment.” Following are some themes and trends the task group encountered in regard to these conversations.
a. The NWI/NWAC often had pastors or elders who provided resources for the congregation. Either through persons, web, or print materials, congregations received resources, many coming from NWI/NWAC, critiquing the PC(USA) and praising the EPC.

b. In some cases, in addition to NWI/NWAC materials, The Presbyterian Lay Committee provided resources or representatives.

c. There were several instances when representatives of the EPC or representatives of NWI/NWAC who were technically still members of the PC(USA) (but were clearly on the “departure track”) were invited in to speak to the congregation.

d. The PC(USA) presbytery representatives involved in these conversations often felt they were “not on a level playing field.” Typically, they were invited to speak as part of a series of speakers in which they were the only presenters representing the PC(USA)’s perspective and interests, while the vast majority of time was devoted to other presenters who spoke against the PC(USA) (and often for the EPC.)

e. In congregations where a significant PC(USA) group within the congregation organized to advocate for remaining in the PC(USA), this group also felt that the conversation was one-sided, and most felt there was, to some degree, manipulation of facts—in some cases over years—aimed at an exit from the PC(USA). In many cases, frustration was expressed over how the pastor or other leaders allowed only one story to be told, and used the “power of the pulpit” on a regular basis to frame the issues and advocate for an obvious outcome that the pastor or other key leaders desired.

f. Several loyalist groups cited also the book Steeplejacking, by Sheldon Culver and John Dorhauer, which outlines the means by which outside groups are able to “infiltrate” and lead a congregation out of a given denomination. They found this book useful to explain the painful phenomenon they had experienced.

g. Most PC(USA) presbytery representatives were aware of the use of a chart found in New Wineskins Initiative: A Time for Every Purpose Under Heaven, p. 14, Copyright 2007 New Wineskins Initiative, available at www.newwineskinsassociation.com/documents/Strategy_Team_Report_book_format.pdf (see Appendix C, which can be found as an attachment, gacer-rec-re-epc-appendix-c-comparison-pcusa-nwac.pdf) they believed untruthfully, or over simplistically, compared the PC(USA) with the EPC, and unfairly created the impression of theological unfaithfulness on the part of the PC(USA). These presbytery representatives often believed that “Louisville,” the General Assembly, and sometimes their presbytery had been “unfairly demonized.” These actions created further distrust in situations that were often already tense.

h. When a series of discernment conversations had been held with speakers from various perspectives, invariably the EPC/New Wineskins representatives or pastors committed to leaving the PC(USA) articulated that the processes had been fair, in contrast to PC(USA) leaders and loyalist groups who clearly felt the opposite.

i. Conversations with pastors who have departed the PC(USA) for the EPC generally indicated their understanding that they sought to provide adequate “space” for those wanting to stay in the PC(USA). In many cases, they felt they also provided means and encouragement for those desiring to remain PC(USA).

j. In several cases, both New Wineskins representatives now in the EPC as well as PC(USA) representatives said that when presbytery processes were followed, the outcomes were better than if a congregation entered into litigation against the PC(USA) presbytery. In every instance where the civil courts were involved, representatives of both New Wineskins and loyalist PC(USA) leaders said it became extremely painful.

k. When congregations became quite serious about departing from the PC(USA), the presbytery often required a particularly careful voting process. In every instance, the task group learned, the voting processes were scrupulously detailed and fairly carried out. Such instances generally occurred when an ecclesiological process was followed.

l. There was no evidence that the EPC took the initiative in entering PC(USA) congregations to speak against the PC(USA), for the EPC, or about affiliation with the EPC. However, there was ample evidence that when invited by a session or pastor, EPC representatives went in without consultation with the appropriate judicatory within the PC(USA) and spoke freely.

3. Observations about relations between PC(USA) leaders and EPC leaders in local situations involving departing congregations. Differing understandings of ecclesiology, as noted above, also played out at the local level. Often, these differences in assumptions led to very different interpretations of what the actions of the various parties involved meant. The same stories were heard from representatives from all perspectives, but the interpretation of events varied with the person’s ecclesial perspective.

a. In various conversations with PC(USA) presbytery representatives, their expectation that normal, standard ecumenical courtesy would be extended by local or national EPC judiciary leaders was repeatedly frustrated.
b. There were instances of PC(USA) stated clerks from presbyteries attempting to contact their counterparts in the EPC, and return contact was not made in a timely fashion.

c. Further, there was evidence that the interference of one denomination’s affairs had a deleterious effect on the conversation between the PC(USA) presbyteries and the congregations involved.

d. There were consistent instances of misunderstanding between local EPC and PC(USA) leaders about their respective ecclesiology regarding dismissal of congregations by the PC(USA) and the reception of congregations by the EPC. As noted above, the differences in each others’ assumptions about how the two communions ought to behave toward one another provided fertile ground for such misunderstanding—namely, the fact that PC(USA) polity does not have a specific process for dismissal, and does not include a provision for a presbytery to dismiss a congregation to either independence or a temporary judiciary.

e. In some instances, PC(USA) presbyteries negotiated settlements with departing congregations that stipulated that the congregation would be dismissed to a geographic presbytery in the EPC. In several cases, the dismissing PC(USA) presbytery later discovered that the congregation had, in fact, been received into the EPC transitional presbytery.

f. Instances were observed of PC(USA) pastors, who were about to be disciplined by their presbyteries for their actions, transferring into the EPC by renouncing jurisdiction of the PC(USA) and then being easily received into EPC membership. In no instance were the PC(USA) presbyteries consulted as to the circumstances of the pastors’ departure. In every instance, the former PC(USA) pastor’s version of the story was believed without question or investigation by the EPC. More often than not, no reference check of any sort was conducted by the ECP officials with their PC(USA) peers.

g. There were instances of PC(USA) congregations declaring themselves “disaffiliated” (see Glossary) from their “voluntary affiliation” with the PC(USA), and thus declaring themselves independent congregations. This action is not provided for in the Constitution of the PC(USA). Nevertheless, the EPC received these congregations as if they were independent churches.

h. The tension resulting from the situations outlined above often resulted in a great deal of bitterness, and difficulty for parties to relate to each other as Christian brothers and sisters.

4. How PC(USA) presbyteries dealt with departing congregations. The following section describes findings that for the most part involved the actions of PC(USA) leaders as they dealt with leaving congregations. They are offered to the extent they shed light on the larger process and context, described above, involving the relationship between the EPC and the PC(USA).

a. Presbyteries in most cases struggled to deal with these situations as they arose and often felt caught off guard, especially in circumstances that involved multiple congregations leaving at the same time.

b. The size of the congregation was often a driving factor in the approach to discussions and the process for departure. Smaller congregations with fewer human and real property assets were often more easily resolved. In other cases, especially when the congregation was larger, the presbyteries recognized the need to be immediately engaged, and the situation often led to civil litigation, resulting in very large costs—emotionally and financially—for all involved.

c. In general, those congregations that followed an ecclesiastical process (option “a” and to a lesser extent, option “b”) fared better. Although it depends upon the state, courts generally have sided with the PC(USA)’s understanding of Chapter 8, Sections G-8.0200, G-8.0300, and G-8.0400 (see Glossary). In some cases, departing congregations relying on a legal strategy alone or in concert with an ecclesiastical one, lost additional money or property, and would have been much better off without civil action. Situations that involved a higher degree of trust and communication usually resulted in a negotiated settlement with which all parties could live and still feel respect for one another. Some of these situations even seemed to result in what was perceived by many as a “grace-filled” process.

d. In those situations where matters went to civil court (options “b” and in many cases, option “c”, from the New Wineskins: A Time for Every Purpose Under Heaven strategy book), the time, energy, and money expended on both sides was enormous. Some New Wineskins leaders who sought membership in the EPC expressed that if they had it to do again, they would likely follow an ecclesiastical process with the presbytery. Likewise, the presbyteries that had to respond to civil action, or that chose to initiate it, regretted the court costs and intervention into the life and work of the presbytery. Court proceedings were universally perceived as draining of the financial and other resources of the presbytery. Also, what trust might have been present prior to legal proceedings was often ruptured once those proceedings began.

e. Presbyteries tended to deal on a case-by-case basis with each process, as each presbytery bears responsibility for the care and oversight of all the congregations and ministers in its membership. The situations in the presbyteries were often highly dynamic, so presbyteries often felt like they were dealing “on the fly” with negotiations and legal matters for which they were unprepared and lacked capacity, both human and financial. Often presbyteries were less than agile in their ability to negotiate, sometimes on account of their own PC(USA) structures or processes they have developed to provide oversight.

f. Denominational staff prepared two documents, “Church Property Disputes: A Resource for Those Representing Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Presbyteries and True Churches in the Civil Courts,” and “Processes for Use by Presbyteries in Responding to Congregations Seeking to Withdraw,” which provided ecclesiastical and legal guidance to presbyteries. These documents were subsequently dubbed “The Louisville Papers” (see Glossary). The documents outline a range of possible options and strategies that presbyteries might consider, ranging from arranging for listening teams, to appointing an administrative commission; and from freezing of assets (particularly in congregations that are divided), to releasing the property, if doing so would “advance the mission and government of the church.”

g. Legal actions taken between congregations and presbyteries tended to make communication between parties tense and difficult. Departing congregations often cited their fears that PC(USA) presbyteries would “come and padlock our doors” as their reason for taking preemptive legal action in the form of a restraining order against the presbytery, in spite of presbyteries stating they had no intention of doing so. It should also be noted that taking legal action before even approaching presbytery, as a way to assert congregational ownership of property, is one of the options presented in The New Wineskins Strategy Team Report, “New Wineskins: A Time for Every Purpose Under Heaven” and A Guide to Church Property Law: Theological, Constitutional and Practical Considerations by L. Lunceford, both of which were often used by departing congregations.

h. Presbyteries often tried to delegate work to small groups, but sometimes then overrode the work of the small groups. This added to the frustration for all involved, especially for the session and pastor of the departing congregation.

i. When the parties acted under different theological and ecclesial frameworks, it created an impasse in mutual understanding. Presbyters who thought they were loyally upholding the Constitution of the PC(USA) often felt they were viewed by those seeking to depart as “punitive and retributive.” On the other hand, those seeking to leave for matters of conscience often felt there was a “hostile environment” among their colleagues.

j. The PC(USA) presbytery leaders and members often expressed anger and disappointment that those seeking to leave were “breaking their ordination vows.” The PC(USA) loyalists appeared to have in mind the vow to be, “… governed by our church’s polity,” and to “abide by its discipline … [to] be a friend among your colleagues in ministry, working with them, subject to the ordering of God’s Word and Spirit” (PC(USA) Book of Order, W-4.4003e).

k. In some cases, PC(USA) presbyters claimed that pastors wishing to leave the denomination had broken a clear promise not to lead their congregation out of the denomination.

l. On the other hand, those leaving defended themselves against the charge that they were violating their ordination vows by claiming that “I haven’t left the denomination. The denomination has left me.” This line is found in New Wineskins: A Time for Every Purpose Under Heaven. They claimed the theological center of the PC(USA) that governed their original vow had shifted such that their conscience allowed them to be released from their original vow. This statement and line of logic is also noted in the book, Steeplejacking, cited above, as having been in frequent use in similar situations occurring within other denominations.

5. Theological differences and the desire for theological clarity: The task group’s findings in local situations regarding a desire for “theological clarity” mirrored the language of the New Wineskins Initiative’s national spokespersons. Two EPC pastors interviewed expressed great relief now that they are in a denomination where the theological parameters are clear and nonnegotiable on the topics of ordination standards, the authority of Scripture, and Christology.

a. The task group noted one significant area of theological incompatibility—at least in some instances—between the EPC and NWI/NWAC leaders. Some NWI/NWAC leaders expressed to the task group that disallowing women’s ordination was “a deal breaker” for them. Some congregations leaving for the EPC seemed not to fully understand that the EPC has a “local option” for women’s ordination—that is, each presbytery can decide such a question in the case of ministers, and the congregation can decide in the case of elders and deacons. Their conversations on the topic have moved the EPC to create a task force to consider “Women’s Ministry.”

b. During the task group’s visits, the issue that garnered the most theological—and legal—disagreement was that of the PC(USA)’s property trust provision in Chapter 8 of the Book of Order. What was debated among the NWI/NWAC’s national leadership played out “on the ground” in local congregations regarding property. Those desiring to leave saw this as a violation of their conscience, and their understanding of the nature of the church. The PC(USA) loyalists defended the ownership of property under the trust provision as biblical and held in Presbyterianism long before the explicit Book of Order clause. The different ecclesial understandings of the two denominations led to disagreement not only around ordination standards, property, and theology, but also around the meaning of congregational independence and connectionalism/congregationalism.
6. Leadership of the New Wineskins Initiative/Association and the EPC Intertwined

The leadership of the EPC and New Wineskins had become, to some extent, intertwined. New Wineskins pastors, sometimes before and sometimes after they made the move into EPC membership, were willing to speak in PC(USA) congregations that had invited them as part of their conversation over whether to depart from the PC(USA). On a few occasions, other leaders from within the EPC were also willing to speak to PC(USA) congregations, when a session had invited them in, often showing the PC(USA) in a less than flattering light.

7. Ecumenical Etiquette

The task group observed that normal ecumenical etiquette that dictates courtesies and behaviors between communions was not followed in the following ways. In addition to such violations of ecumenical courtesy that were observed “on the ground,” already noted above in IV.2.1. and IV.3.a., there was no conversation between the EPC and the PC(USA), by stated clerks or at the level of national leadership, around the creation of the “New Wineskins Transitional Presbytery.”

8. Questions About the Future

Leaders within the EPC indicated they are unsure of what the long-term impact of PC(USA) congregations affiliating with the EPC will be. These leaders indicated that approximately forty-six churches have been received into geographic EPC presbyteries and a like number into the transitional presbytery, with future projections of numbers being unknown.

VII. Theological and Biblical Reflection

The task group sought to be guided by biblical and theological understandings of the unity of the church.

At the core of Presbyterian theology and polity is the claim that Christ alone is head of the Church; it is Christ who calls the church into existence. The authority of the church is not based on tradition or any human council, but on conformity to the Word of God alone, with the marks of the true church being the gospel rightly preached, the sacraments rightly administered, and church discipline rightly administered (The Book of Confessions, The Scots Confession, Chapter XVIII, 3.18; and The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.143). Created in the image of God, all that we are and all that we have belongs to God. Thus our allegiance is to Christ, who calls us to be followers and disciples.

As Reformed, Presbyterian Christians, ours is a particular expression within the one, holy catholic and apostolic church. We are an interdependent body called into communion not only by and with Christ, but with all Christians in every time and place. Despite our varying expressions and understandings of the faith, through baptism we are bound together as one church and inheritors of the Kingdom of God, united as brothers and sisters in Christ. We are interconnected and intertwined like branches on a vine. Christ is the vine, in which we abide and are nourished as a community of people; cut off from this source of life, we “can do nothing.”

The unity of the church is not a human work; it is a gift of God. We find our call to unity in the prayer of Jesus in John 17:21: “That they all may be one.” This is the gift of unity bestowed upon us by God. In Ephesians, Paul understands that the very nature of the church is unity, to which believers are called to respond: “[make] every effort to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one Spirit, just as you were called to the one hope of your calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all …” (Eph. 4:3–6). With this gift comes mutual obligation that is part of our corporate identity in Christ.

We recognize that some of the principles that are formative to Reformed theology can predispose us toward disunity. Fundamental to our Reformed understanding is that, “God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men which are in anything contrary to his Word, or beside it, in matters of faith or worship” (“Book of Order” G-1.0301). Ironically this premise also contains the seeds for continuing separation. Our identity has been shaped to some degree by the need to separate in order to be faithful, but the faithfulness has had a cost in the fullness of faith.

To be clear, we need to differentiate, theologically, the terms division and separation. Division connotes dissention, derision, disruption, distrust, and distancing. Division breaks apart the body, and creates disunity where Christians unintentionally become inwardly focused, and no longer first seek God in worship and praise. Such disunity disrupts the peace, purity, and unity of the church. Intentional division, creating disunity, is marked by emotive responses that, due to our broken nature, take the form of corruption, self-justification, self-preservation, and distrust, obscuring God’s gift of unity.

Separation, distinct from the division that attends disunity, is painful and unfortunate, but may also be seen as a necessary and even faithful act if it seeks to maintain unity within the body of Christ. In that light separation can even be seen as potentially fruitful. Division and separation, two sides of the same coin, are not born of the same spirit of Christ. Separation requires humility and trust in Jesus Christ, and not in our own “rightness.” But if separation can be seen in any sense as faithful, we must also acknowledge the complexity, and competing values, that weigh against this. Because of our highly covenantal and connectional understanding of ecclesiology, separation (as does division even more so) rubs against the covenant. and vows that bind us together as a communion. Separation, if it is to be faithful and potentially fruitful, must also account for the integrity of such covenants and promises that bespeak the very nature of our biblical understanding of God’s intention for the church.

Separation in itself is not an end. When acted upon in faith, attended by the spirit of Christ, and absent the seeds of division, separation can lead to new life. Given the space, time, and means to share perspectives, attitudes, and experience, separation can often provide the spur for growth and understanding and can be a way to live in the unity of the spirit in new and refreshing ways.

Several biblical stories illustrate how separation is difficult, but also can transform relationships, e.g. Jacob and Esau, Joseph and his brothers, and Peter and Paul. Our understanding of the Trinity or Triune God also contains the dual notions of separateness, and unity. The Triune God is dynamic, maintaining a unity without being uniform or identical, each member to the other. There is room for all of us, even as Jesus reminds us there are many rooms in my father’s mansion (John 14).

Even in our separateness, Paul, in his letter to the Church in Corinth, states that we are one body with Christ as the head. Different and distinct parts are bound together so that one cannot say to another that “you are not needed.” “The eye cannot say to the hand, ‘I have no need of you,’ nor again the head to the feet, ‘I have no need of you’” (1 Cor. 12:21).

Underlying the PC(USA)’s ecumenical commitment is a calling to express the visible unity through the work reconciliation. While we may not always agree on biblical interpretation, ecclesiology, or how to be in fellowship with one another, reconciliation and visible unity are possible through the reconciling work of Jesus Christ. “[In] Christ God was reconciling the world to himself … and entrusting the message of reconciliation to us” (2 Cor. 5:19). Further, The Ecumenical Stance of the PC(USA) reminds us that “the church must consider how our ministry of reconciliation is compromised if we are not reconciled among ourselves.”

God has entrusted us with a ministry of reconciliation that seeks to give visible expression to God’s gift of unity. It is this reconciled unity that allows us be in full communion with, for example, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, without requiring merger or uniformity of theology and practice we can aspire to live as faithful Presbyterians as one part of the body of Christ.

Just as unity is a gift of God so is reconciliation, to which we have been called. The Confession of 1967 affirms, “… This community, the church universal, is entrusted with God’s message of reconciliation and shares [God’s] labor of healing the enmities which separate [human beings] from God and from each other. Christ has called the church to this mission and given it the gift of the Holy Spirit. The church maintains continuity with the apostles and with Israel by faithful obedience to his call” (“The Book of Confessions,” 9.31). We are called into mission in Christ’s name proclaiming the visible unity even as we stand as our distinct and separate members within the body of Christ (Book of Order, G. 3-0300).

VIII. Conclusion

The task group’s observations around congregations separating from the PC(USA) during these past few years brought to light many immensely painful experiences for all involved. Such circumstances have been painful for congregations and members who have chosen to leave the PC(USA), for members who have stayed with the denomination, and for presbyteries where congregations have departed.

The task group would submit that the presenting cause for this struggle originates in an internal conflict within the PC(USA). On one side are ministers and members of the PC(USA) who believe that they cannot in good conscience stay within this denomination. On the other side are ministers and members of the PC(USA) who believe that unity of Christ’s body, made clear through the Constitution that binds us all together in a covenantal community, should be honored and preserved. Members on both sides have advocated for their positions, created resources, developed legal strategies in order to act out of their own sense of faithfulness to Jesus Christ, all indeed consider themselves to be faithful Presbyterians. The task group notes that individuals on both sides have indicated that they, at one time or another, have used language or taken actions that they later regretted as inappropriate. The entire body of Christ suffers when Christians sacrifice keeping faith with one another, even in the attempt to remain faithful to Jesus Christ.

The Evangelical Presbyterian Church, in receiving congregations and ministers who were dissatisfied with the PC(USA), has now inserted itself into our own internal struggle. The creation of a transitional presbytery as a mechanism for receiving congregations is seen by the EPC as a means to prevent a large influx of PC(USA) congregations from changing the EPC’s culture. However, it has been seen by some in the PC(USA) as inappropriate interference in our internal conflict and a clear breach of ecumenical protocol. Further, since New Wineskins members who have left the PC(USA) for the EPC should now be properly under the discipline of the EPC, actions by New Wineskins EPC members and by the New Wineskins Transitional Presbytery with regards to PC(USA) congregations should also be governed by ecumenical protocol between the PC(USA) and the EPC.
The relative lack of communication between the PC(USA) and the EPC has been identified by both PC(USA) and EPC members as being problematic—leading to misunderstanding and lack of trust on all sides. This lack of communication is symptomatic of a deeper problem in the relationship between the two churches. There has not been evidence of a relationship that articulates and respects our differing ecclesiologies. This has contributed to circumstances where presbyteries of one body feels the other body has acted out of turn by acting too slowly or too quickly, or through secular legal proceedings. We must find a way to improve the quality of our relationship and improve our communication, in a way that will enable both communions to be faithful to our mutual and primary mission: to bear witness to the gospel of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior.

While the immediate temptation may be to address only the operational details of transferring pastors and congregations, far more critical is the state of the relationship between the PC(USA) and EPC. Situations in which congregations are separating from the denomination will always be painful and will never be ideal. But in observing the situations noted in this report, we believe they could have entailed much less rancor had the two communions engaged in conversation based upon mutual respect for each other’s ecclesiology. The task group recognizes that attempts to have conversations were made, and also recognizes that such attempted conversations were often quite difficult. The task group also recognizes that the history of the relationship between the EPC and the PC(USA) contribute to a potentially awkward conversation over such matters. It is precisely the complexity of the relationship that makes dialogue essential. It is time to understand one another for who we are, not for who we perceive the other to be.

The story of Christ’s church has been one marked by separation, beginning with the separation between the Eastern church and Western church nearly 1,000 years ago, followed by the Protestant Reformation nearly 500 years ago, to say nothing of subsequent schisms that are too many to count. And yet, the story of the Church has also been marked by reconciliation: reunion in the Presbyterian family among northern and southern denominations after more than a century of separation; full communion between churches offering recognition of one another’s sacramental practices and one another’s ordained ministries, as well as a commitment to mutual cooperation short of merger. Reflections on the Protestant Reformation and the ecumenical journey of the past 500 years have shown that at times separation is both “necessary, but unfortunate” and “unfortunate, but necessary.” It is in the pain of separation that we are dependent upon the grace of God to heal the schism and show us the way toward reconciliation and unity.

We do not know how long the conversation between the PC(USA) and the EPC will take, or how difficult it may be. We do believe it is a critical conversation to begin. The PC(USA) and EPC owe it to each other as members of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to engage in such a conversation. Our commitment to those congregations whose transition to the other’s care suggests it to be of great value. But most importantly, our faithfulness to Jesus Christ, the Savior whom we believe it is a critical conversation to begin. The PC(USA) and EPC owe it to each other as members of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to engage in such a conversation. Our commitment to those congregations whose transition to the other’s care suggests it to be of great value. But most importantly, our faithfulness to Jesus Christ, the Savior whom we all serve, demands it.

Endnote

1. Brief History of Property Trusts

Prior to 1981 in the UPCUSA and 1982 in the PCUS, the two major Presbyterian church denominations did not have express property trusts in their constitutions. They did not need them. The 1871 U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Watson v. Jones referred to property held by trustees of a particular Presbyterian church as in trust for the persons who by the Presbyterian Church Constitution, usages, and laws are entitled to that use. The Watson court then went on to hold that, as a hierarchical church, once the highest governing body of the Presbyterian church had ruled on the matter, the civil courts would enforce that ruling as to the property control. Watson’s hierarchical deference rule did not require or even suggest an explicit property trust provision; it upheld the traditional polity of review by successive governing bodies of the Presbyterian church.

In Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull in 1969, the U.S. Supreme Court announced the neutral principles doctrine but did not define it. In 1979, in Jones v. Wolf, the Supreme Court defined the neutral principles doctrine and instructed denominations and others on how to meet this new standard: “Alternatively, the constitution of the general church can be made to recite an express trust in favor of the denominational church . . . . And the civil courts will be bound to give effect to the result indicated by the parties, provided it is embodied in some legally cognizable form” (443 U.S. at 606). Both the UPCUSA, effective 1981, and the PCUS effective 1982, followed the Supreme Courts instructions to the letter, adopting express property trusts in favor of the denomination and in language that could be clearly and simply applied by courts. Where opponents point out that the property deeds contain no express trust language and/or the

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) do the following:

1. Authorize the participation in the Seventh-day Adventist-Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) dialogue, which will begin in the fall of 2010, for a period to last four years, and request a report to the 221st General Assembly (2014);

2. Appoint the Reverend Dr. Sheldon Sorge, the Reverend Dr. Eileen Lindner, Elder Dr. Barbara Wheeler, and the Reverend Dr. David Cortez as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) representatives to this dialogue.

Rationale

For many years the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has conducted dialogues with many churches, most of these churches could be considered “main stream” churches. As affirmed in our churches’ Ecumenical Policy, one of our priorities is to engage in conversation with churches that have not been traditionally involved in the ecumenical movement. For many years this church was viewed by many as a Christian cult or sect. During the last ten years, the Seventh-day Adventist church has been more widely accepted as a “main stream” evangelical denomination in our country.

From 2006 through 2008, representatives of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists met for a series of church-to-church conversations. Through exchange of scholarly papers and hours spent in discussion, the two churches reached a deeper understanding and appreciation of each other’s beliefs and practices, removed many false stereotypes, and explored possible areas of cooperation. A deep level of friendship and fellowship developed as we acknowledged one another as brothers and sisters in Jesus Christ. Based on the positive results of these initial gatherings, both groups recommended to their respective churches the desire to continue into a deeper dialogue.

In order to fully understand each other’s perspectives, the dialogue will commence by laying out our respective approaches to Scripture, that is, our particular hermeneutics.

The specific topics that the dialogue will address are:

1. Sabbath-Sunday

   The topic of Sabbath and Sunday is primarily a Seventh-Day Adventist concern, rather than a Reformed one. The Reformed delegation will approach this topic from the perspective of the “Law and Gospel,” with Sunday and Sabbath being a subset of that larger topic. This larger category is certainly a significant concern for the Reformed. Under this category we will address at least these topics:

   • How both testaments function as norms for Christian faith and life.
   • The shift from Sabbath to Sunday worship in Scripture and Christian history.
   • The three uses of the Law in the Reformed understanding.
   • The benefits and blessings of following the Law, with special focus on Sabbath-keeping.
   • How Jesus Christ both fulfills and supersedes the Law, and how this shapes the Christian Gospel.

For the Sabbath-Sunday topic, the Adventists will take up at least the following topics:

   • The Sabbath in Scripture in history.
   • Sunday in Scripture and history.
   • Theological implications of the Sabbath.
2. Religious Liberty and Justice

Reformed churches tend to talk more about “Church-State” issues, rather than “religious liberty,” even though many of our churches are also actively involved in “religious liberty” issues. This difference, itself, might be an important beginning point of dialogue and engagement. The Reformed delegation will address at least these topics:

- Advocacy for religious minorities abroad—How do we each view the idea of American Christians seeking to influence American policies of aid and trade to foster better treatment of religious minorities (or perhaps only Christians) in other nations.
- Religion in the Public Square—Matters ranging from the place of prayer in the public schools to the issue of Christmas displays on public property.
- Charitable Choice—How does each community view the use of public moneys by church agencies who offer services such as soup kitchens, tutoring, job training, addiction recovery, etc.
- Religious Liberty in a Pluralistic Context—With growing religious pluralism in the U.S., we face new challenges to matters of religious liberty we thought were settled. Schools, government, and banks, etc., tend only to observe Christian and sometimes Jewish holidays. How will our cultural life show equal respect for myriad other faiths now living within the culture.

For the area of Religious Liberty and Justice, the consultation (Adventists) will take up at least following topics:

- The biblical basis of religious liberty.
- Justice as a biblical principle and responsibility.
- Defending religious liberty in today’s world
- Justice in today’s world: individual and corporate aspects.
- Adventist/Reformed cooperation in advocating and defending religious liberty and justice.

Item 08-08

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) do the following:

1. Affirm support for the historic commitments and core callings (e.g., bilateral dialogue, full participation of women and youth, mission, justice, etc.) of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) as essential to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s life and witness.

   As WARC has affirmed these callings, [they are to] [the PC(USA) is to]

2. Prepare to participate fully and constructively as the World Alliance of Reformed Churches transitions to become the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC). This includes prayerful and disciplined consideration of the deeper fellowship implied in the move from being an “alliance” to becoming a “communion” with its call to greater unity in the Spirit.

3. Continue its commitment of human and financial resources to the work of WARC and Caribbean and North American Area Council (CANAAC) of WARC now, and to the WCRC and CANAAC in the future.
4. Integrate and interpret Encourage a study of the Accra Confession and the historic commitments, along with the life and work of the WCRC/CANAAC, throughout PC(USA), its congregations and presbyteries.

5. Partner with WCRC/CANAAC and their distinctive communities as a unique laboratory for contextualizing theological inquiry faithful to the Reformed ethos and the Word of God.

6. Confess that mission has too often been a source of division within the Reformed family and participate in developing new approaches to mission for a contemporary world in an age of empire. Call upon the General Assembly Mission Council’s Office of World Mission to give priority in mission co-workers placements in countries in which we have WCRC/CANAAC partnerships and to acknowledge these relationships in all interpretative materials.

7. Maintain the broadest possible participation and representation of cultural and regional diversity, gender, youth, and young adults. This includes helping to create the next generation of ecumenical participants as a reflection of global diversity by supporting scholarships, exchanges, and support for on-going pastor education and the Global Institute of Theology. Additionally, recognizing that use of technology may exclude those without access to various means of advanced technologies, develop methods of communication that are inclusive with regards to race, gender, and culture.

8. Improve interpretation and visibility of WCRC/CANAAC by doing the following:
   a. Make greater use of WCRC and CANAAC delegates between assemblies as a resource for informing congregations and presbyteries of the ongoing work of WCRC/CANAAC and the need to participate fully in global partnerships. This includes creating a structure for PC(USA) delegates to share their cross-cultural experiences with one another and to communicate with the Office of Ecumenical Relations and the CANAAC Steering Committee between assemblies.
   b. Highlight WCRC/CANAAC at major church-wide events and celebrations, including conferences and various training events throughout presbyteries and synods.
   c. Encourage celebration of Reformation Sunday and our Reformed heritage as a major annual event. Resources for such observances might be made available through Presbyterian News Service, Thoughtful Christian, Presbyterians Today.
   d. Highlight the work of WCRC/CANAAC on the PC(USA) website at least quarterly.
   e. Request the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) to provide a special briefing for the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) on WCRC/CANAAC work and ministry on an annual basis.
   f. Request the director of the General Assembly Mission Council’s Mission Interpretation to dedicate pages in the Mission Yearbook to prayer for the ministry of WCRC/CANAAC staff and member churches.
   g. Work in partnership with WCRC/CANAC in developing resources to enrich Reformed worship traditions with cultural gifts of music, visual and performing arts, and liturgy while recognizing that this is also essential to our own spiritual and worship renewal amidst the diversity of today’s world.

9. Request the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations to contact the coordinator for the Committee on Theological Education and seminary organizations to provide briefings on the new realities of WCRC/CANAAC, and to ask PC(USA) seminaries (including seminaries in covenant agreement with the General Assembly) to include the Accra Confession as a study document.

10. Ask the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) to include at least one seminary professor or seminary student as a member to WCRC/CANAAC delegations.

11. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to implement these recommendations.

12. Direct GACER to monitor the implementation of these recommendations.

Rationale

The 212th General Assembly (2000) requested the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) “to design a process for review of councils and other ecumenical alliances to which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) belongs” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 108). The previous report of the “World Alliance of Reformed Churches/Caribbean and North American Area Council of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC/CANAAC)” was received by the 214th General Assembly (2002). This review of the “World Alliance of Reformed Churches/Caribbean and North American Area Council of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC/CANAAC)” is presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The team that conducted and edited this review included: Jerrod Lowry, Raleigh, N.C. (chair); Ruy O. Costa, Boston, Mass.; Catrelia Steele Hunter, Cleveland, N.C.; Jeanne Choy Tate, San Francisco, Calif.; Eileen W. Lindner, New York, N.Y. Staffing was provided by Carlos Malavé.

1. Memorial for the Reverend Dr. Lewis S. Mudge

A Dedication Honoring the Legacy of Those Who Kindle the Call to Ecumenism

In gratitude to God, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations dedicates this report to our brother and friend, the Reverend Dr. Lewis S. Mudge, who returned to the Lord on September 11, 2009. A tireless servant of Christian unity, Lew S. Mudge defined ecumenism for a generation. As teacher and colleague he inspired others to the quest for a greater expression of unity and served with distinction as staff to the World Alliance of Reformed Churches from 1957 until 1962, and as a faithful participant thereafter. His example, his faith, and his devotion to the church and its mission inspires us still.

And there shall be one fold and one shepherd. That is, that all the children of God may be gathered and united into one body; as we acknowledge that there is one holy universal church, and there must be one body with one head. There is one God, says Paul, one faith, one baptism. Therefore we ought to be one, as we are called into one hope (Eph. 4:5).

“Each time we read the word ‘one,’ let us be reminded that it is used emphatically. Christ cannot be divided. Faith cannot be rent. There are not various baptisms but one, which is common to all. God cannot be torn into different parts. It cannot but be our duty to cherish holy unity, which is bound by so many ties. Faith and baptism, and God the Father and Christ, ought to unite us, so as almost to become one human being” (John Calvin’s Commentary on Ephesians 4:5).

2. WARC/CANAAC and the Reformed Quest for Unity

“As an expression of the one holy catholic and apostolic church, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has never been able to live in comfortable detachment from other churches. Instead, we search for diverse patterns of the visible unity of Christ’s church, seeking concord in essential things: faith, sacraments, mission, and ministry. Such forms of communion are both signs of the church’s unity and means by which the church’s unity is achieved. … The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in gratitude for God’s grace and mercy, commits itself to faithful use of God’s gifts in the search for fuller expression of the visible unity to which we are called” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 107, The Ecumenical Vision Statement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)). Among the ways by which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to express Christian unity are membership in councils of churches such as the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC).

The World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC), soon to become the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC), is a unique expression of ecumenism that seeks both to foster visible unity in Christ and deepen the fellowship among the churches that are heir to the theological legacy of Calvin, Knox, Hus, and other reformers who have shaped this particular strain of Christian thought and life. The extended family of the Reformed tradition as expressed through WARC is comprised of some 75 million Christians in 214 churches in 107 countries.

The WARC is committed to bringing churches together, seeking theological clarity that unites churches for social action and has taken great initiative to stand and interject a voice of faith in the face of injustice. The WARC has spoken: concerning religious freedom for minorities, for those enslaved by others, for racial equality, for equality in the eras of Nazism and apartheid, for women’s rights in church and society, for a voice for young people when they are silenced, for the human rights of oppressed persons, and for justice in sharing and managing the resources of the earth in an age of neoliberal economic globalization.

Furthermore, WARC does not address social issues as tourists on the precipice of injustice. Between general councils, WARC implements its seven core callings through its five regions: Africa (ARCA), the Caribbean and North America (CANAAC), Europe, Latin America (AIPRAL), and Northeast Asia (NEAAC). In these regions, the policies, priorities, and directives of the general council are contextualized to live out a regional expression of WARC directives. In turn, delegates within each region gather to study the Bible, to reflect theologically on WARC preparatory materials, and to provide input to the next general council.

The CANAAC is the regional expression of WARC in the Caribbean, U.S.A., and Canada. The CANAAC is comprised of twenty member churches; however, the formation of the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC) will add the Christian Reformed Church of the Dominican Republic to CANAAC, creating a presence in the Dominican Republic.

What is more, CANAAC calls the PC(USA) into a global witness of mutual partnership and cross-cultural dialogue. It provides the PC(USA) with a living laboratory for building relationships of trust and integrity between northern and southern neighbors. One participant recalled a time when racial issues divided two churches of different ethnicities in the same coun-
Thus, The Birth of WCRC and Its Implications

The PC(USA) and the Call to Christian Unity

In the year 2010, the Uniting General Council for the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) will convene in Grand Rapids, Michigan, and is expected to merge with the Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC) to form the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC). Members of the two uniting groups trace their roots back to the 16th century Reformation. The alliance reflecting the high priority the fellowship of the Reformed family has held within the ecumenical commitments of the PC(USA). Such an investment by the church has provided dividends of experience and insight that have enriched the life of individuals and the church as a whole. Only through the gathering of Reformed Christians are we able to learn of our tradition’s capacity to bring the Good News of Jesus Christ in cultural, economic, ethnic, and linguistic contexts quite unlike our own. It has been the encounter with the valiant faithfulness of Reformed Christians in contexts of repression, poverty, and suffering that has enabled us to know who we might become and how we might more fully witness to the risen Christ.

The WARC has enabled the Reformed churches to engage together in bilateral ecumenical dialogues with diverse Christian traditions, has provided a unique laboratory for Reformed theological inquiry, and has offered a venue in which our relationships with Reformed global mission partners can find common life and witness. Here in WARC and CANAAC the longing of Jesus’ pastoral prayer “that they might be one that the world might believe” is given concrete and tangible expression. And through the words of the Declaration of Debrecen, WARC gave voice to the tangible and Reformed call to Christian unity: “We are not our own. With Christians for the Reformed faith through the centuries, and with the whole people of God, we join our voices to proclaim Soli Deo Gloria! We are called to be built into a new community in the Spirit of God.”

Moreover, CANAAC presents PC(USA) with innovative models for connecting theology with praxis, including an exploration of the ways that position and privilege influence interpretation and theological perspective. The CANAAC has developed a contextual model to ensure that its Bible study and theological reflection express the full diversity of the Caribbean-North American region. The host country for each CANAAC assembly becomes a resource for theological reflection on socioeconomic and political issues as delegates learn about the host country’s culture, history, and ways of being church. Delegates also worship in local congregations to explore how Reformed worship takes on cultural forms as well as how it is interpreted by young people of the region. Thus, CANAAC provides opportunities to enrich Reformed worship traditions by expressing culture creatively in musical, visual, and liturgical forms to honor the fullness of God in diverse congregations and communities.

Both WARC and CANAAC are faithful attempts by its member churches to proceed with intentionality to “maintain the unity of the Spirit through the bond of peace” (Eph. 4:1–6). The WARC/CANAAC are essential vessels for encouraging, nurturing, and maintaining Christian unity as no one communion/denomination can be the Body of Christ unto themselves. Instead, it is our unity and the collaboration of the many that transforms a cacophony into a resounding chorus of praise to God who places us on this earth to live as families despite the many boundaries and barriers that might divide us. It is this enduring sense of our own longing to reclaim the unity demonstrated in our baptism that continues to provide the purpose for PC(USA) participation. In a new age and as the institutional transition to the WCRC unfolds, new patterns of participation and service to a broken world will emerge and once again lay claim to Reformed Christians.

3. The PC(USA) and the Call to Christian Unity

The question of why the PC(USA) participates in WARC and CANAAC properly precedes the question of how the church participates. In an era in which interfaith relationship and ecumenism across the many Christian traditions require time and attention from the church, the question can be fairly asked, “what is the priority in the life of the church for an ecumenical expression confined to the Reformed tradition?” The response to this question turns on our understanding of the PC(USA) as an expression of the Reformed tradition and as a faithful vehicle for God’s engagement in the life of that tradition.

Throughout the history of WARC, the PC(USA) has been disproportionately represented among the leaders and staff of the alliance reflecting the high priority the fellowship of the Reformed family has held within the ecumenical commitments of the PC(USA). Such an investment by the church has provided dividends of experience and insight that have enriched the life of individuals and the church as a whole. Only through the gathering of Reformed Christians are we able to learn of our tradition’s capacity to bring the Good News of Jesus Christ in cultural, economic, ethnic, and linguistic contexts quite unlike our own. It has been the encounter with the valiant faithfulness of Reformed Christians in contexts of repression, poverty, and suffering that has enabled us to know who we might become and how we might more fully witness to the risen Christ.

The Reformed theological enterprise has been particularly enriched by the work of WARC and CANAAC. Shared statements such as that of Accra and the rediscovery and exploration of historic Reformed confessions such as Belhar have deepened the understanding of the tradition’s specific approach to faithfulness and its requirements in the twenty-first century. Gatherings of younger theologians in rich diversity of gender, race, ethnicity, and sociopolitical context have been productive of fresh leadings of the Spirit and hold promise of hastening the way toward healing deep human rifts of race and clan. In particular, calls to humbly acknowledge and address economic injustice and ecological degradation have brought an invigorated vitality to a new generation of Reformed Christians. The PC(USA) has been fully present in each of these aspects of ecumenical sharing and continues to learn, teach, and be challenged by these encounters.

4. The Birth of WCRC and Its Implications

In the year 2010, the Uniting General Council for the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) will convene in Grand Rapids, Michigan, and is expected to merge with the Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC) to form the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC). Members of the two uniting groups trace their roots back to the 16th century Re-
A joint WARC/REC executive committee has drafted a constitution and proposed a new structure for WCRC, along with a plan to eliminate the budget deficit by 2011. A 2008 deficit, due primarily to a drastic fall in the exchange rate, is expected to extend into 2009 and carry forward into the new organization, leaving WCRC little core provision for its beginning. The issue is not one of over-expenditure. In fact, expenditure of the organization has decreased each year. The reality is that income does not keep up with expenditure despite the fact that WARC has taken pride in its lean and modest lifestyle.

The new global grouping of WCRC will represent 80 million Reformed Christians worldwide. Though twenty-seven of the REC member churches also belong to WARC, there is symbolic value in healing divisions between these two major branches of the world Reformed community. In a world filled with fragmentation, the union offers a more global witness as a faithful response to Christ’s call to unity.

The union has also created an opportunity for WARC to rethink its identity as a “communion” rather than an “alliance” of churches. To move from being an alliance to being a true communion of churches is consonant with the biblical image of the Church as the Body of Christ, where all are organically connected to one another under the leadership of Jesus Christ, who is the head of the Church. Use of the word “communion” also implies that member denominations of the new organization will accept the ordination of each others’ clergy and respect the rites of each tradition.

While the union of WARC and REC has its share of positives there are certainly some impending concerns that this review committee also acknowledges. Several of those concerns will be shared in the next section of this document (4. Sustainability of Our Ecumenical Hopes) as issues that must be addressed to assure the sustainability of WCRC. However, it is essential that we mention here the presence of WARC members and staff who express some apprehension because REC has historically been less ecumenically inclined and less active on justice issues—such as women’s ordination and apartheid—the prophetic voice of WARC may be diluted. Nevertheless, both WARC and, more recently, REC are to be commended on the integrity of their separate decisions to continue the status of “suspended member” with the Netherdutch Church of Africa, a minority denomination of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa, until that church expresses its conviction that the theological defense of apartheid constitutes heresy. The WARC’s general secretary, Setri Nyomi, responds to such justice concerns with the following comments:

This radical unity does not give us room to ignore injustice of any kind. In such a relationship one part of the body cannot be content because it has in abundance while another part is languishing in suffering and want. We belong together. … If our unity is integral to who we are, we cannot help but sharpen our resolve to speak and act against anything that breaks the bond of peace—including all forms of injustice.

The WCRC/CANAAC presents the PC(USA) with an unparalleled opportunity to view itself through a global lens, to discover what it means to function as partners in global mission and to develop cross-cultural resources to aide us in fulfilling the mission to which Christ calls us in our own increasingly diverse nation. We conclude that it is essential that the witness and resources of this partnership with WCRC/CANAAC more fully inform our own mission and witness as the Presbyterian church in the United States of America and permeate the culture of PC(USA).

5. Sustainability of Our Ecumenical Hopes

An essential component in identifying WARC sustainability would be review of both the governance and financial viability of the organization. The WARC is governed by general councils that establish policies and programs, consider matters brought by member churches, and give oversight to the life of the organization. These general councils assemble consistently with adequate representation from a significant number of member churches. And since 1989, the bylaws have been strengthened to assert that delegations will be as representative as possible of the diversity within member churches: women, men, youth, ordained, and lay people.

The general council is also responsible for the election of officers (president, three vice-presidents, and moderators of departments) and an executive committee consisting of the officers, twenty-five other members, and the executive staff as corresponding members. The executive committee meets annually between general councils to carry out the program decided by the general council, elect executive staff members, supervise finances, and act whenever necessary in the name of the alliance.

The review committee would like to raise particular awareness that often WARC serves as the only opportunity for wider-church participation for many of the smaller churches. In light of this knowledge, WARC has been careful to ensure that these small member churches are able to be full participants in governing sessions. Many of these small member churches are in countries of the global south where the Reformed presence is a minority. For these special considerations, WARC has been willing to subsidize delegates’ travel.

Furthermore, the review committee finds that WARC finances are well-managed, and the accounts are audited annually. A very large amount of programs and service is delivered from a very modest budget. The WARC serves more than 200 Reformed churches around the world, with more than 75,000,000 members, with an executive staff of five persons and a support staff of seven persons. The WARC has always enjoyed a very professional and dedicated team of staff. Due to recent deficits, however, WARC now functions with minimum staff who are faced with major challenges of overwork. Together with the proposed smaller executive committee, staff will need to stretch to ensure that the expanded membership feels adequately heard and represented. Though financial challenges remain, it would not be wise to further reduce the number of staff.

Shifts in international currency exchange rates complicate WARC’s finances. Total expenditures in 2008 were about US$1,889,566.47. In 2009, the expenditure budgeted was approximately US$2,365,571.34. The PC(USA) provided approx-

In 2008, administrative costs ran about 16.5 percent of the budget. Salaries and related costs amounted to approximately 78.5 percent, while programming and the executive committee took the remaining 5 percent. (See Appendix C for details.)

The review committee recognizes that giving patterns to WARC have demonstrated a decline in the number of churches contributing financially to the ecumenical organization. As WCRC begins to shape its approach to financial stewardship within this very difficult economic climate, especially among developing nations, emphasis upon participation in financial support rather than the amount of that support should take precedence.

Consider the charts in Appendix C for a reflection of the finances reported in the 2008 audit. That chart reveals the financial data of member churches that supported WARC from 2004 to 2008.

The review committee is concerned with member denominations’ financial support. Appendix B shows a decline in the number of member churches that supported WARC from 2004 to 2008. As WCRC begins to shape its approach to financial stewardship in these times of economic challenges, emphasis should be placed on member denominations’ participation in financial support as a demonstration of commitment to WCRC, regardless of the amount each member church is able to contribute.

6. Interpretation and Visibility of WCRC/CANAAC

The PC(USA) has played a vital role in WARC over the years and is in full support of the WCRC goal of giving witness to the unity of the body of Christ through the union of WARC and Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC). In the review process, several issues came to the forefront as areas in particular need of support and encouragement in WCRC’s future. Our best ecumenical hopes will find fulfillment as PC(USA) delegates to WCRC and CANAAC bear in mind the following priorities:

a. For the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC)

In these times of economic and ecological crises, covenanting for justice in the economy and the earth is more crucial than ever. The new global economy exacerbates the growing gap worldwide between the rich and the poor while taking a heavy toll on the earth. The WARC vision calls Reformed churches to respond to the injustice of massive poverty and environmental degradation as a witness to the fullness of life God intends for all creation. A key WARC focus has been the dissemination of the Accra Confession so churches can use it to affect their local contexts. Through study of the biblical and Reformed perspective on economic life and justice, as well the study of how economic processes work locally and globally, the Accra Confession creates space for a healthy debate and for hearing the voices and concerns of women and men, young and old, people from the Global South and the Global North. The hope is that member churches will act as agents of transformation in a manner that goes far beyond the church by:

• Developing strategies and establishing priorities that apply the Accra Confession and Covenanting for Justice in the Economy to address economic and environmental injustices in today’s global economy and lend support to the development of alternative life-giving models.

• Creating more unified approaches to partnership in mission that recognize the need for new forms that unite divisions in the global church and are relevant to contemporary times.

• Continuing to build theological consensus faithful to the Reformed ethos and the Word of God to ground social justice.

• Supporting the development of contextualized models for Reformed Theology and Bible study that use local and global contexts as a resource to address issues of economic and environmental justice.

Covenanting for justice in the economy and the earth is only possible through the renewing winds of the in-breaking of the Holy Spirit. However, churches planted during the period of colonial mission are still using nineteenth century European and North American models of worship rather than models that reflect their own cultures and times. Around the world, many WARC churches feel overshadowed by the free style of worship offered by Pentecostal, charismatic, and evangelical churches.
Worship that emphasizes head over heart, mind over body, grows increasingly stale in the diversity of today’s world. A church that is always reforming needs the diverse gifts, including cultural gifts, of all the people who make up our churches. Profoundly affected by worship experiences in Ghana, WARC was led to acknowledge that “using drums is not a sin; clapping and dance are not disrespectful … [and] also we affirm the role of silence and meditation, of chanting.” It is the hope of this review committee that WCRC will continue to do the following:

- Acknowledge that spiritual renewal and renewal of worship are urgent priorities if Reformed churches are to grow, to reach out to new generations, and to have the power to engage in the prophetic witness to which Christ calls us. Develop a theology of worship and spiritual renewal that enriches Reformed worship traditions through musical, visual, and liturgical forms to honor the fullness of God in culturally diverse congregations and communities.
- Maintain the broadest possible participation and representation of cultural and regional diversity, gender representation, youth and young adults, even within the context of diminishing funds and a smaller WCRC executive committee.
- Ensure that all members understand their responsibilities as they relate to making WCRC effective.
- Build commitment to continuing the tradition of bilateral dialogue, historically associated with WARC, in the new WCRC. This is particularly important because REC has less history of bilateral involvement.
- Address financial viability and the need for strategic fund-raising to bring in new resources to support the mission and work of WCRC/CANAAC. It is particularly important to ensure adequate staffing for this ongoing work.

b. For Caribbean and North American Area Council (CANAAC)

The CANAAC has developed an innovative contextual model to ensure that its Bible study and theological reflection express the full diversity of the Caribbean-North American region. The host country for each CANAAC assembly becomes a resource for theological reflection on socioeconomic and political issues as delegates learn about the host country’s culture, history, and ways of being church. Delegates also worship in local congregations to explore how Reformed worship takes on cultural forms as well as how it is interpreted by young people of the region. It is the hope of this committee that CANAAC will consider ways to:

- Sustain and enhance the theological focus that has been the hallmark of Reformed gatherings. This is of particular concern since responsibilities previously lodged with a theology committee and a pool of trained theologians has been taken on by the steering committee. Some interviewees expressed concern that “CANAAC’s theological focus could become M.I.A.” or that dialogue could become “politically-laden and politically-driven.”
- Develop structures for ongoing Bible study, reflection, and analysis among CANAAC delegates between assemblies and, recognizing that not all members have access to technology, develop ways for members to hear from and give input to the work of the steering committee.

Appendix A
Update on WARC Programs to Implement Its Core Callings, 2005–2010

WARC Core Callings (Mission): The purpose of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches is to enable its member churches individually and collectively to make real Jesus Christ’s promise that all might have life in fullness (John 10:10) through achieving seven core callings:

- To covenant for justice in the economy and the earth.
- To search for spiritual renewal and renewal of Reformed worship.
- To foster communion within the Reformed family and the unity of the church ecumenical.
- To interpret and re-interpret the Reformed tradition and theology for contemporary witness.
- To foster mission in unity, mission renewal, and mission empowerment.
- To promote inclusivity and partnership in church and society.
- To enable Reformed churches to witness for justice and peace.

The WARC communicates about the work of its numerous programs through a quarterly newsletter, Update, regular news releases, and the WARC website (www.warc.ch). It offers analysis of the theological issues at the heart of the Reformed family in its quarterly journal, Reformed World. It also publishes many other studies.

To covenant for justice in the economy and the earth.

In these times of economic and ecological crises, covenancing for justice in the economy and the earth is more crucial than ever. The new global economy exacerbates the growing gap worldwide between the rich and the poor while taking a heavy toll on the earth. The WARC vision calls Reformed churches to respond to the injustice of massive poverty and environmental degradation as a witness to the fullness of life God intends for all creation. The WARC’s Covenanting for Justice in the Economy and the Earth Project mobilizes member churches and other partner churches to address economic and ecological injustices. Together with Church World Mission (CWM) and World Council of Churches (WCC), WARC is developing Oikotree as an ecumenical web site to monitor economic and ecological issues, respond to current crisis, and strengthen ecumenical partnership. The hope is that member churches will act as agents of transformation in a manner that goes far beyond the church.

A key WARC focus has been the dissemination of the Accra Confession so churches can use it to affect their local contexts. Through study of the biblical and Reformed perspective on economic life and justice, as well the study of how economic processes work locally and globally, the Accra Confession creates space for a healthy debate and for hearing the voices and concerns of women and men, young and old, people from the Global South and the Global North. In addition to a resource book produced for 2006 Reformation Sunday celebrations (Renewing the Church: Resources for Celebrating Reformation Sunday), CANAAC recently published an Accra Confession curriculum available at its Web site: http://www.canaac.org/.

Spiritual renewal and renewal of worship are urgent priorities if Reformed churches are to grow, to reach out to new generations, and to have the power to engage in the prophetic witness to which Christ calls us. Covenanting for justice in the economy and the earth is only possible through renewing winds. However, churches planted during the period of colonial mission are still using nineteenth century European and North American models of worship rather than models that reflect their own cultures and times. Around the world, many WARC churches feel overshadowed by the free style of worship offered by Pentecostals, charismatic, and evangelical churches. Worship that emphasizes head over heart, mind over body, grows increasingly stale in the diverse cultures of today’s world. This hampers both their celebratory worship and evangelism.

The WARC seeks to develop a theology of worship and spiritual renewal that understands worship and spiritual life are expressed through cultural forms of music, visual arts, and liturgy that enrich Reformed traditions. Profoundly affected by worship experiences in Ghana, WARC affirms that Reformed congregations no longer need to be “God’s frozen chosen.” “[U]sing drums is not a sin; clapping and dance are not disrespectful. … [A]lso we affirm the role of silence and meditation, of chanting.” To this end, WARC has conducted a survey of spiritual renewal in Reformed and Presbyterian churches worldwide to assist member churches in their journey towards life in fullness. It is working with REC to develop a paper on spiritual renewal and renewal of Reformed worship.

To foster communion within the Reformed family and the unity of the church ecumenical.

The WARC is strongly committed to Christian unity. In addition to the newly formed union with REC, WARC engages in dialogue with Roman Catholics, Pentecostals, Lutherans, the Orthodox, and others. The WARC also provides a healing presence by working to overcome divisions in Reformed churches and mission fields in countries like Korea, Nigeria, Chile, and Brazil.

To interpret and re-interpret the Reformed tradition and theology for contemporary witness.

A classical function of WARC has been the fostering of theological reflection faithful to the Reformed ethos and the Word of God. If WARC member churches are to be faithful witnesses to our Lord Jesus Christ in the contemporary world, Reformed themes need to be interpreted in relation to the issues of our time (i.e. the sovereignty of God, sola fide, sola gratia, sola scriptura, the church as covenant community, election—not just for salvation but also for service).

The WARC has as its objective the formation of Reformed theologians with a global perspective and the training of future ecumenical leadership. It is currently discussing how its office of covenanting for justice and its office of theology can more fully integrate their work. One possibility is a theological course for pastors in the field that would equip them for work in justice.

Many students from Africa, Asia, and Latin America, who would not have the opportunity to pursue further theological studies in their own countries, have benefited from the WARC scholarship program. A Global Institute of Theology (GIT) in Accra 2004 and a smaller GIT in conjunction with the 2008 CANAAC meeting in Guyana were so successful that another GIT will be held in conjunction with the 2010 Uniting General Council. Here theological students will gather for academic courses focused on theological reflection around the theme of the Uniting General Council “Unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.” Out of the seventy students expected, 60 percent will come from the Global South and 40 percent from the Global North.

To foster mission in unity, mission renewal, and mission empowerment.

The WARC Mission project provides opportunities for mission studies, reflections on international mission relations, and networking to strengthen mission today. The Theology Department is seeking new understandings of mission for an age of empire and a contemporary world, specifically through the ecumenical Edinburgh 2010 study on “Mission and Power” around changes or lack of changes in our understanding and practice of mission and unity since 1910.

The WARC dialogues with economists, agriculturists, jurists, theologians, ethicists, etc., to analyze issues related to justice in the economy and the earth and to search for alternative life-giving models. Its Mission in Unity project has focused on how to overcome ways mission has been used to create divisions in the Reformed family. The Making a Difference Program (MADIP) and the WARC Mission Project’s intercultural Pilot on Mission Today provide opportunities for innovative mission experiments whose lessons of concrete life-giving alternatives to economic globalization could be shared with WARC member churches.

The WARC also responds to mission and development challenges, devastating disasters, and emergencies through the Reformed churches Partnership Fund. The Partnership and Youth Programs focus on empowering those who are often excluded from mission leadership.
To promote inclusivity and partnership in church and society.

Though building a church truly inclusive of all God’s people ought not be necessary at the beginning of the twenty-first century, the reality remains that the need still exists. Women, youth, people from minority backgrounds in different cultures, new immigrants, and people of disabilities still need to be welcomed into full participation and leadership. To that end, WARC organizes programs and develops written resources that challenge church and society on issues related to gender, leadership, and power. Addressing the status and participation of women in the church, a number of studies and events have explored theological, cultural, and other issues concerning women’s ordination to challenge churches that do not ordain women. A theological education scholarship fund for women in the south aims to support women’s theological studies and their preparation for the ordained ministry.

The WARC also facilitates a space to support the work of its Youth network, including those in the area councils. The CANAAC, for instance, sent youth delegates to the 2009 CANACOM-sponsored Young Adult Mission Work Camp in Jamaica, and is assisting in the planning of the Pre-Council Reformed Youth gathering slated for the 2010 Uniting General Council. It provided scholarships for Caribbean delegates to the July 2009 consultation on John Calvin’s 500th anniversary at Montreat. In addition to holding its own GIT for theology students at its Guyana assembly, CANAAC will send participants to the GIT held at the 2010 Uniting General Council, to the pre-Uniting General Council Youth Forum, and will provide scholarships for delegates from Caribbean churches to the Uniting General Council.

To enable Reformed churches to witness for justice and peace.

The WARC has a dynamic history of making a difference by bringing churches together, to seek theological clarity that unites churches for social action while struggling for economic, ecological, and gender justice. The WARC works alongside its member churches in countries where conflicts and human rights violations compromise the lives of people. This has been particularly evident in the powerful witness of WARC and its member churches when life and justice are at stake: for religious freedom for minorities; for those enslaved by others; for racial equality; for equality in the eras of Nazism and apartheid; for women’s rights in church and society; for a voice for young people when they are silenced; for the human rights of oppressed persons; for justice in sharing and managing the resources of the earth in an age of neoliberal economic globalization.

Actions from the last four general councils offer dramatic demonstration of WARC’s actions for justice and reconciliation:

- The 21st General Council at Ottawa in 1982 declared that apartheid was a sin and its moral and theological justification a heresy. This was a watershed moment for WARC with it gaining major international attention for its courageous stand.
- The 22nd General Council at Seoul in 1989 affirmed the commitment of the alliance to address injustices experienced by women in church and society by launching a new program with full-time staff for this work. It also questioned the disunity in the manner in which Reformed churches engage in mission, laying the background for the Mission in Unity Project that came a decade later.
- The 23rd General Council at Debrecen in 1997 took very seriously the suffering caused by economic and environmental injustice and called on member churches to commit themselves to a process of recognition, education, and confession concerning economic injustice and ecological destruction.

[Comment: The committee endorses the intent of “Christians and Jews, People of God” enhancing Christian and Jewish relationships. We also encourage PC(USA) congregations to employ A Theological Understanding of the Relationships Between Christians and Jews (1987, OGA-88-071) as a resource until a better resource is perfected.]

On Referring “Christians and Jews: People of God” and “Understanding Christian-Muslim Relations”—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. [Postpone the reports] [Refer the report] from the Offices of Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship entitled: “Christians and Jews: People of God[,]” [and “Understanding Christian-Muslim Relations”] until such time as funding is provided by the General Assembly for the appointment of a special committee of the church, to be appointed by the moderator, [back to the Office of Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship] to rewrite [both] [the] report[s] after broader consultation to include the National Middle East Presbyterian Caucus, PC(USA) partner churches and agencies in the Middle East, relevant mission networks of the PC(USA), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy.

2. That correspondence about [these two] [this] report[s] between the National Middle East Presbyterian Caucus and the General Assembly Mission Council, and between the Israel-Palestine Mission Network and the General Assembly Mission Council be sent to [this special committee] [these offices and committee working on the revised paper].

Rationale

In 2009, the Office of Interfaith Relations (OIR) contacted certain entities and individuals in the PC(USA) asking them to read and make comments on these papers. Those receiving these early drafts were asked not to share them, even with members of the groups they represented, because they were considered drafts and therefore confidential. At least some of the groups and individuals asked to review the papers were told that the OIR had reached out to other PC(USA) entities for the same kind of input.

An unknown number of these groups and individuals submitted comments and suggestions. In at least one case (regarding the Israel-Palestine Mission Network), the moderator of the IPMN contacted the OIR months later to learn the status of the report, and request a copy of the final draft that was soon to be presented to the General Assembly Mission Council.

In the case of the Israel-Palestine Mission Network, there was evidence in the final draft that a number of its comments about problems with “Christians and Jews: People of God” were taken seriously and addressed.

What also became evident was that there were many important Middle Eastern entities and individuals in the PC(USA) who had not been contacted at all. They were unaware that these papers were being written—meaning that those who will be most affected by these reports were shut out of the closed and secretive process of writing and vetting these reports.

The leadership of the Israel-Palestine Mission Network, upon learning that such entities had not been invited to participate in this process, expressed its concern to the Office of Interfaith Relations. The issues raised in the following critique of “Christians and Jews: People of God” by the IPMN in its memo of February 18, 2010 to the General Assembly Mission Council have not yet been addressed, and need to be—in a substantive manner. (See attached background materials for text of this memo.)

It has been the traditional practice of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), with regard to important theological and ecclesiastical papers impacting the future practice and policy of this denomination, that the vetting process be open to the whole church before final approval is given by a meeting of the General Assembly. The purpose of this overture is to make sure that the Offices of Interfaith Relations and Theology & Worship abide by these standards with regard to these important papers.

[Background material, specifically the IPMN memo referenced above, is found as an attached letter to this overture. [See p. 647.] The two referenced reports, “Christians and Jews: People of God,” Item 08-03, and “Toward an Understanding of Christian-Muslim Relations,” Item 08-04, are coming to this General Assembly and available elsewhere.]

Comment on 08-09—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to disapprove Item 08-09 and approve the two reports, “Christians and Jews: People of God” and “Understanding Christian-Muslim Relations” that they may serve the church as the basis for study by congregations and individual Presbyterians, and as grounding for further conversation and consultation among the many constituencies of the PC(USA) and its partners.

1. The mandate for a new report on Christian-Jewish Relations was given by the 216th General Assembly (2004) to staff of the Theology and Worship, Interfaith Relations, and Evangelism Offices. The mandate for a new report on Christian-Muslim relations was given by the 218th General Assembly (2008) to staff of the Theology and Worship and Interfaith Relations Offices. These requests for documents to be created by staff for review and action by a future assembly are not unusual, as this overture suggests, but are increasingly common in this era of limited funds. The fact that these reports were to be written was made known to all in press reports, through summaries of General Assembly actions, as well as in the Minutes of the assemblies involved.

2. The process of consultation undertaken by staff in relation to both documents involved many Presbyterians of varying perspectives. Those Presbyterians and Jews involved in the more formal consultations that informed the writing of “Christians and Jews: People of God” are noted in Appendix A. The request for discretion re: the sharing of drafts, while suggesting an untoward “secretive process” to the writers of this overture, was intended as a means to keep drafts of the documents from public scrutiny before they were completed.

3. The General Assembly Mission Council must approve reports written by GAMC staff before sending them on to the General Assembly for action. Both GAMC approval and General Assembly consideration are public processes, with agendas and papers posted on the Web in advance of the meetings. Advisory Committees and other bodies of the church will make the comments they deem appropriate during this process. The General Assembly is itself representative of the whole church, but it is able to hold hearings if its commissioners deem more input is needed for responsible decisions to be made.

4. The GAMC considered the concerns of the National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus, and the letter from the Israel/Palestine Mission Network when it voted at its February, 2010, meeting to forward these reports to the General Assembly for approval. On February 10, the GAMC Executive Director requested the Caucus to provide its critique of, and input to, “Christians and Jews: People of God,” but no comment has been received from them to date. World Mission sent this document to partners in the Middle East on March 16, asking for comment and critique of it, but has not yet received any responses.

5. In regard to “Toward an Understanding of Christian-Muslim Relations”, which calls for further study by the denomination, the GAMC took specific action to ensure that this process included broad consultation including representatives of the national Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus and partner churches in majority Muslim countries.

6. The reports in question provide an urgently needed and clear basis for further discussion of issues involved in Christian-Jewish and Christian-Muslim relations. They can serve well as grounding documents for any further consultation deemed necessary, and can be clarified by future assemblies.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following:

1. That the PC(USA) become a full participant in Christian Churches Together (CCT) for a period of four years, at which time a review of participation will be done by GACER and reported to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

2. That, in its capacity as a participant in CCT over the next four years, the PC(USA) take the following steps toward strengthening CCT’s response to racism and gender inequality by doing the following:
   a. Request that CCT add “racial injustice” and “gender inequality” to the rotation of annual discussion topics at the CCT gatherings (currently the topics are limited to poverty and evangelism).
   b. Request that CCT include race and gender in their ongoing conversations of poverty and evangelism.
   c. Request that, as CCT expands its conversations around race and gender, CCT issue statements of common Christian agreement and conviction about racial justice and gender equality, as has been done by CCT regarding poverty.
   d. Expect and help to ensure that these conversations recognize the ongoing effects of historic racial divisions that have been promoted by churches, and in which churches in the United States continue to be complicit, wittingly or unwittingly. As we in the PC(USA) continue to wrestle with and repent of our own complicity in racial injustice and division along racial lines, we will call upon CCT to also take seriously words and actions of repentance and commitment that would help us together build bridges across the racial divisions of all our churches.
e. Expect and help to ensure that these conversations recognize that our differing theologies and understandings of the roles of women and men in churches and society are a source of real and painful division within and among the churches. Further, for some of our churches, including the PC(USA), these divisions are not merely cosmetic but confessional, and thus must be fundamental to our ecumenical conversations.

f. Request that CCT review its leadership models and structure in order that they would more fully reflect biblical values that promote equality and justice in the church and society, especially in relation to race and gender. To that end, the PC(USA) will continue to send a diverse delegation to CCT, and encourage change in CCT structure as necessary.

3. That the steps listed above, and CCT’s response to them, form a foundation for the review of our participation in CCT for the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2006 Referral: Item 07-05. On Becoming a “Provisional” Participant in Christian Churches Together—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 574ff).

The 217th General Assembly (2006) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) authorized the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to become a provisional participant in Christian Churches Together in the U.S.A. (CCT) for a four-year period (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 574).

At the time of this action, the General Assembly received a Rationale that recognized the “unique vision that informs Christian Churches Together is that a hospitable space for growing together must be inclusive of the diversity of Christian families in the United States, including Evangelicals, Orthodox, Roman Catholics, Pentecostals, historic African American churches, and other racial and ethnic churches” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 575).

Over the past four years, CCT has formalized organizational structure, acquired staff, held annual gatherings and regular steering committee meetings, and been actively engaged in building fellowship and addressing core commitments of evangelism and poverty in the context of the United States. Over these four years, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has actively participated, sending representatives to the annual CCT gathering, steering committee, and other forum meetings of the CCT.

The CCT has created a meeting place for a wide range of churches and organizations. While the diversity of organizations in CCT may not be unique to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), it is certainly unique to many of the participants. In a series of interviews, it became clear that an overwhelming percentage of participants appreciated CCT as a place for worship, fellowship, and some limited action among people who had rarely if ever worked together before. Meetings of CCT have focused upon the topics of evangelism and poverty.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) authorized provisional participation in CCT (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 574). The current bylaws of CCT do not recognize the status of “provisional participant.” To remain connected to CCT, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would need to formalize its participation or address the provisional nature of its presence by requesting observer status.

In consideration of next steps in the relationship between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and CCT, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations appointed a review committee. Interviews were conducted with representatives from CCT participant bodies and with representatives of churches that have been ecumenically engaged but are not participants. Interviews were also conducted with leadership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and an open call for comments on the matter was made through the Presbyterian News Service.

The review committee found that participation in CCT is consistent with the policies of the church, including the policy statement, “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” However, the committee also noted that some of the concerns about CCT that existed in its formation remain today, specifically about whether women can be fully represented in its leadership, and CCT’s ability to address and place a priority on combating racism in the church and in the larger society.

The CCT is organized into five historic Christian families (Evangelical/Pentecostal, Orthodox, Roman Catholic, historic Protestant, and Racial Ethnic), and the five presidents of CCT are drawn from these families. All the presidents to date have been male. In addition, more than 80 percent of the Steering Committee members have been male. This is primarily due to the design of CCT that places a premium on the involvement of heads of communions or organizational executives, positions that are by design or by practice filled by men in many participant churches and organizations.

Though there are some exceptions, few of the historic African American churches are actively participating in CCT, especially those that have held membership in the National Council of Churches. In interviewing those familiar with CCT, there were many who expressed disappointment that CCT has not taken up addressing the history of racial relationships and division within the church and explicitly addressing racism in the larger society.

In assessing our ecumenical commitments and partnerships, the review committee and the full General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations spent significant time reflecting on the PC(USA)’s own struggles with race and gender, and with power and leadership in our denomination and in our relationships with other churches. We are aware that our internal history and division have an effect on how we view our external relationships and commitments, and how we make choices about them.

The limited success of CCT in explicitly addressing racism and in creating a structure that limits the possibility of greater inclusion of women in leadership has the potential of undermining the very goal of CCT, to “offer a space that is inclusive of the diversity of Christian families in the United States.” In its own life, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) struggles with concerns for empowerment of women and building a multicultural church community, and while CCT holds potential for being a forum where such concerns could be claimed, that potential has not yet been realized. Nevertheless, GACER does not believe it is yet time to withdraw our support and participation from CCT. We believe our commitment to ecumenical partnerships calls us to continue to engage and be active in CCT despite our concerns, and to work to strengthen CCT as we are called by the leading of the Holy Spirit.

[Financial Implications: Christian Churches Together has a scaled dues table based on the churches’ membership totals. Based on that table, our church is responsible for a yearly contribution between $5,000–6,000.]

Commissioners Resolution. On Celebrating the Dedication of Clinica Tzeltal Manos de Christo in Chiapas, Mexico.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) celebrates with our brothers and sisters in Christ in the Tzeltal Synod of the National Presbyterian Church of Mexico, our partnership in the gospel, and the dedication of Clinica Tzeltal Manos de Christo, giving thanks to God through our Lord Jesus Christ for the faithful response of all who answer God’s call to serve where the need is great, wherever the Holy Spirit directs, and the love of Christ is at work to heal and restore.

Rationale

In the same way that Jesus introduced the kingdom of God to the poor of Galilee through his healing love and attention to people in need, the church has long sought to convey God’s love through medical ministries. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a particularly strong record of building hospitals and sending medical missionaries to serve Jesus Christ in the world.

By the grace of God, over the past fifteen years a partnership has emerged between Presbyterians from throughout the United States and the Tzeltal Synod of the National Presbyterian Church in Mexico to identify the spiritual and materials needs of the indigenous people and churches of central Chiapas, the southernmost state in Mexico. The Presbytery of Arkansas formed a covenant relationship with one of the synod’s presbyteries, The Lacandon Presbytery, in 2003. The Presbytery of Salem in the Piedmont of North Carolina formed a covenant relationship with the Tzeltal Synod in 2009. Additionally, congregations from Arkansas, North Carolina, Virginia, Arkansas, Georgia, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Washington, Texas, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, and Kansas have shared in the ministries that have grown out of the partnership.

In 2005, the Tzeltal Synod crafted a vision and plans to build a medical clinic in Ocosingo, Mexico, to serve the indigenous population of central Chiapas. More than 1 million people in the state of Chiapas do not have access to basic health care primarily due to limited resources and language issues. The medical clinic will provide Christian medical care to indigenous people (primarily Tzeltal Bachajon, Ch’ol, Tojolabal, and Tzeltal Oxchuc people). While indigenous people represent the target population, the clinic will serve people without regard to race, creed, nationality, or religion.

Mexico has more than 300 indigenous language people groups with twelve of those groups represented in the state of Chiapas and eight in the county of Ocosingo. Most indigenous people speak their native language but do not speak Spanish. Most of these people are farmers living in outlying jungle villages, often miles from the nearest medical facilities. When they are able to access government sponsored health services, language differences and prejudice often prevent them from receiving appropriate and adequate care. The indigenous people of Mexico have suffered years of prejudice and maltreatment resulting in political, spiritual, medical, educational, and environmental damage. A Christ-centered medical clinic is a novel idea in this area of Mexico. A Presbyterian clinic will be a beacon of evangelism and will be an opportunity to demonstrate Christian principles in a medical setting devoid of the prejudice and barriers to quality medical care experienced by indigenous people in the past.
The Ocosingo Medical Clinic, named by the Tzeltal Synod “Clinica Tzeltal Manos de Christo,” will provide a variety of medical and dental care services. The clinic will also provide a service site for medical volunteers (both local and foreign); provide an opportunity and a location for surgical services not available elsewhere; provide a base for visiting medical groups, who will work in the clinic or travel to villages to provide on-site medical care; and provide a place where referrals to outside hospitals can occur and provide assistance with comprehensive case management.

An important component of the project is the training and support of “Barefoot Doctors” or “Paramedicos.” Begun in the 1950s by a missionary nurse, selected native individuals are trained in basic health-care skills, allowing them to bring some level of health care to remote villages. The new clinic will provide a site for training, opportunities for physician-supervised internships (not currently available), and a base of ongoing support for barefoot doctors. While not licensed physicians, these individuals represent an important component in the health-care delivery system in the indigenous communities, and the quality of their care to patients can be improved by having access to better training and physician consultation at the medical clinic in Ocosingo.

Ground was broken in March of 2006 for Clinica Tzeltal Manos de Christo and the footing were dug by pastors, elders, and bare foot doctors of the Tzeltal Presbyterian church. Members from many of the local churches have worked alongside American Presbyterians to complete Phase I of the clinic. A dedication is planned for October of 2010.

The above recommendation is offered to the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for its approval, as a means to convey to the Tzeltal Synod our joy in our partnership in the gospel, our gratitude to God for the completion of Clinica Tzeltal Manos de Christo, and our commitment to pray for our brothers and sisters in Christ in the Tzeltal Synod, especially as they seek to serve Jesus Christ and his people in central Chiapas.

The National Presbyterian Church in Mexico faithfully serves our Savior Jesus Christ in its proclamation of the gospel in both word and deed, calling men and women to repentance and to faith in Jesus Christ, teaching God’s Word, and advancing the kingdom of God through the demonstration of justice and compassion.

The Tzeltal Synod of the National Presbyterian Church in Mexico, with its three constituent presbyteries—Ebenezer, Maya, and Lacandon—representing the 35,000 Presbyterians of central Chiapas, discerned the need for a medical clinic to serve the indigenous people of central Chiapas and God’s call to build it, and dedicated itself to its construction at the Alpha-Omega Bible School in Ocosingo, Chiapas.

The Tzeltal Synod invited the partnership of others in its holy endeavors, calling brothers and sisters in faith to participate with them in the realization of God’s will, principally calling on congregations and presbyteries of the PC(USA), reaching out to Presbyterians in Arkansas, North Carolina, Virginia, Arkansas, Georgia, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Washington, Texas, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, and Kansas.

Whereas God has been faithful to provide the vision and the means to fulfill it through the obedience of the Tzeltal Synod and its partners both in Mexico and in the United States;

The work of the clinic will be a continuation of the Christ’s healing ministry, in which the very name of the clinic, “The Hands of Christ,” will bear witness to God’s love in Jesus Christ, touching people in ways that the Holy Spirit directs and empowers.

A. Report of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches Covering 2008 and 2009 to the PC(USA), Setri Nyomi (General Secretary)

1. Introduction

   The May 2009 joint executive committee meeting of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) and the Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC) was one of the symbolic moments in the unfolding of history. It is significant that it took place during one of the high points of celebrating the Calvin 500 jubilee year in Geneva. Steps along the way of fulfilling the desire expressed by our Lord Jesus Christ in the High Priestly Prayer, “that all may be one” are important markers of the desire of the Reformed family to be faithful to the sovereign Lord to whom we belong.

   In his commentary on the biblical passage from which the WCRC General Council theme was chosen, John Calvin writes:
08 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON ECUMENICAL AND INTERFAITH RELATIONS

Each time we read the word “one”, let us be reminded that it is used emphatically. Christ cannot be divided. Faith cannot be rent. There are not various baptisms but one, which is common to all. God cannot be torn into different parts. It cannot but be our duty to cherish holy unity, which is bound by so many ties. Faith and baptism, and God the Father and Christ, ought to unite us, so as almost to become one human being.5

It is this Unity of the Spirit that we are called upon to maintain in the bond of peace. This radical unity does not give us room to ignore injustice of any kind. To be in Communion beckons us to truly be one with God and one with one another. In such a relationship one part of the body cannot be content because it has in abundance while another part is languishing in suffering and want. We belong together. This is even more critical as we see what the global economy continues to mete out to millions of people. While those who have been victims of injustice for decades continue to suffer, recent failings in those who have held the purse strings of a system that has resulted in such suffering have been rewarded with massive rescue packages. If our unity is integral to who we are, we cannot help but sharpen our resolve to speak and act against anything that breaks the bond of peace, including all forms of injustice.

As the contents of this report will show, the work we have been doing through the Mission Project, covenanting for justice in the economy and the earth, gender justice, theology and ecumenical engagement, and youth are all aimed at living out our core callings. They all foster our sense of Communion and justice. These programs have been effectively undergirded by what we have been doing through our Communications office and Finance office in communicating the actions and commitments of the Reformed family and resourcing what we do. The full reports of all these engagements have been written by my colleagues and are available to all participants in the executive committee meetings. In this report, I give the main highlights.

2. Theology and Ecumenical Engagement Office (TEE)

Douwe Visser took office as the executive secretary for Theology and Ecumenical Engagement on 1 June 2008, bringing to an end a long period of transition. One of the first things he initiated was to have us form an editorial advisory board for Reformed World. Issues of the Reformed World published in the period under review have focused on John Calvin, the theme of the Uniting General Council, Reformed identity, and reflections in a time of crisis.

The Theology and Ecumenical Engagement Office carried out a series of eight regional consultations on Communion and justice, and a global one that brought together representatives of the eight regional consultations. As WARC and REC journey towards becoming the World Communion of Reformed Churches, these consultations provided a good forum for church representatives and theologians to reflect on what this means in a manner that informs us on who we are becoming.

The office is also preparing for a Global Institute of Theology as a part of the Uniting General Council.

From 3 to 8 October 2008, the Lutheran Reformed Commission took place in Buenos Aires. This was the third meeting in this round of Lutheran Reformed dialogue. A final meeting took place in January 2010. Taking into consideration that it was already said in an earlier round that theologically there are no major differences between Lutheran and Reformed churches, it seems to be time for courageous steps concerning unity.

The WARC’s other bilateral dialogues with World Communions are in various stages. There was a meeting of the Reformed Pentecostal dialogue in Scotland in May 2008. Discussions are in their preliminary stages on preparing a new round of Reformed-Roman Catholic dialogues after 2010. Our Executive Secretary and other WARC representatives were involved in a discussion of the Vatican “Harvest Document,” which is a report of the recent dialogues in which the Vatican has been involved. Exploration on a new round of the Orthodox-Reformed dialogue will be started.

Given all the comings and goings in the Theology and Ecumenical Engagement office, our scholarship program has had limited operation. It is our hope that this will pick up again this year after the Uniting General Council.

3. Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership Office (CRJP)

This office has carried out the vision and coordination of three core callings of WARC very effectively—Covenanting for justice in the Economy and the Earth, Gender Justice, and Youth. Our gratitude to the Executive Secretary, the Reverend Sheerrattan-Bisnauth, for all the work she has led in these three core commitments of WARC. In the next paragraphs, we will report the work of this office under the different core calling headings.

a. Gender Justice

Since launching the Scholarship Fund in 2001, WARC has supported sixty-five women from Africa, Asia, the Caribbean, Latin America, and the Pacific, with a total amount of CHF400,000. During the reporting period twenty-four women from fifteen countries were awarded scholarships amounting to about CHF153,000. The awards are in support of their theological studies in preparation for the ordained ministry. We hope that our worldwide network, including the Executive Committee will help to promote the fund in churches, which have low numbers of women in the ordained ministry.

The CRJP Office carried out a survey on former and current scholarship awardees and is currently preparing for an assessment of the project and to measure its benefits and impact on churches and the lives of the beneficiaries.
In 2008, the Executive Secretary for CRJP visited theological colleges and churches in North East India, listening to them, and exploring ways in which WARC could be more involved in them. These visits were important as well for discussing issues of gender justice.

A survey on women in the ordained ministry is being carried out. The data received will be compiled and posted on the website. The last time such a survey took place was in 1998. The Executive Secretary participated in a Lutheran World Federation Consultation on Women’s Ordination and shared with them WARC study documents and the situation regarding women’s ordination in WARC.

Following the Limuru 2007 Consultation on Gender, Leadership and Power, a proposal for a global study was developed and shared with the Gender Network and participants of the Kenya consultation. The study has five themes: Bible study, Globalization, Cultural Identity, Leadership, and Racial/Ethnic Identity. The findings will be shared at the WARC Women’s Pre-Council gathering at the WARC General Council in Grand Rapids, U.S.A., June 2010.

The Reformed Church of the Canton Argovia in Eastern Switzerland has established a prize to support and encourage women in church leadership and has invited WARC to be a partner in the management and implementation of the prize. The prize is in honor of the Reverend Sylvia Michel, who was ordained in 1964 and served as the first woman president of the Federation of Swiss Protestant Churches. The Sylvia Michel Prize was launched at the WARC Consultation on Gender, Leadership and Power in Limuru, Kenya, (July 2007) and awards a prize of USD5,000 every two years to outstanding women from the WARC constituency who have made significant contribution to church and society. The 2008 prize was awarded to two Kenyan women theologians, Professor Dr. Esther Mombo, deputy vice chancellor of St Paul’s University and Dorcas Chebet Wamalwa of the Reformed Church of East Africa.

A workshop on “Machismo to Partnership” was held in Malawi (11 to 18 September 2008) in collaboration with the WCC Women’s Desk and WARC member churches in Malawi. Participants were two-thirds male. The workshop provided space for sharing about masculinity and gender.

In the Caribbean, a workshop on “Men as Partners: Promoting Positive Masculinities” was held in Guyana (18 to 24 January 2009). It brought together thirty-five participants (with two thirds being male) from various denominations, ecumenical organizations and nongovernment organizations. The main aims of the workshop were to support the development of church leaders by increasing their awareness of gender concepts and issues; and to equip, motivate and encourage them to be agents of change. It is hoped they will be catalysts in working with their churches and communities in promoting positive masculinities, building partnership between women and men and addressing pressing gender issues, such as gender based violence.

The CRJP Office is grateful to the PC(USA) Presbyterian Women for their support for the Gender justice work of WARC.

b. Covenanting for Justice in the Economy and the Earth

The Covenanting for Justice Project is even more crucial in these times of economic and ecological crises. The challenges of life today require a radical transformation of the logic undergirding the prevailing economic system, which is centred on capital accumulation and competition as means to wealth and prosperity. Not only has it exacerbated the economic crisis to alarming proportion; it also takes a heavy toll on the earth, worsening another grave crisis—that of global warming, which will be of catastrophic dimensions for millions of people. We are already experiencing consequences in varying degrees. There is urgency for a vision, which puts people at the center, supporting social well-being, racial, ethnic, and gender justice, exercise of freedom and cooperation among people, and which honors creation.

During the reporting period a key focus has been on mobilizing people’s engagement with the Accra Confession, especially at the grassroots. The regional Covenanting for Justice processes are progressing. These were coordinated by the following persons: Puleng LenkaBula (Southern Africa), Collin Cowan (Caribbean), Germán Zijlstra (Latin America), Martina Wasserloos Strunk (Europe), and Gretel Van Wieren (North America).

The International Ecumenical Conference, “Abolished, But Not Destroyed: Remembering the Slave Trade in the 21st Century.” took place in Runaway Bay, Jamaica (10 to 15 December 2007). It was organized in collaboration with WCC and CWM and brought together fifty theologians, church leaders, social scientists, and social and cultural activists from Africa, the Caribbean, Latin America, and North America. The conference marked the 200th anniversary of the Abolition of the Slave Trade Act. Participants called on churches that were complicit in the slave trade to name the trade and other modern forms of slavery a sin. Some papers were published in Reformed World, March 2008, coordinated and edited by Robina Winbush.

A Workshop on “Spirituality of Resistance, Liberation and Transformation” was held in Matanzas, Cuba, in May 2008. The main goal of the workshop was to provide an essential foundation for the covenanting for justice movement with the understanding that justice movements require strong solidarity among people of faith communities. This was an excellent example of theology connecting with people’s struggles and hopes.

The Feminist Discourse on “Economy, Ecology and Empire” was held in Bangalore (12 to 17 August 2008). The discourse was designed to engage in north/south and ecumenical dialogue on issues regarding economy, ecology, and empire. The Feminist Discourse was seen as an opportunity to include feminist/womanist thinking into the current debate and to flesh out the issues of economy, ecology and empire and their links. Following the Bangalore Feminist Discourse on Economy, Ecology and Empire, a proposal was developed for a resource book that would be aimed at understanding economy, ecology, and empire and interrogating their links from various womanist/feminist perspectives. This book will be a theological resource for churches, seminars, and social and ecumenical movements.

Oikotree, created by WARC, CWM, and WCC, continues to develop as the ecumenical space in which participants, who are seeking to live faithfully in the midst of economic injustice and ecological destruction, can raise their voices and demonstrate their actions for alternatives to the current unjust systems. It is a space in which a covenanting for justice movement can form itself and grow in strength. The term Oikotree is derived from Revelation 22 with its reference to the tree of life “and the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations.” The WARC was the main organizer for the Oikotree launch event, which took place in Manila, Philippines, in December 2008. The movement was launched with a website, www.oikotree.org. It is an open invitation for people of faith communities to build an ecumenical platform as a global witness for peace with justice.

Together with Oikotree, WARC co-organized two events prior to the World Social Forum held in Belem, Brazil (25 to 30 January, 2009). The World Forum on Liberation Theology took place from 22 to 24 January: one seminar (up to 500 people) put justice at the heart of faith in local contexts tackling economy, ecology, and empire, and the other workshop was on justice spiritualities.

Significant processes and meetings took place in Africa, Caribbean and North America, Europe, Latin America, and other places in connection with the Accra Confession.

Twenty-five women and men from the Reformed family in Africa met in Pretoria, South Africa, from 18 to 21 April 2008 for a Consultation on the Accra Confession. The main purposes of the consultation were to critically analyze, reflect, and discuss key issues regarding economic justice and ecological concerns in Africa, to discern the signs of today, and to plan further steps in churches’ engagement with the Accra Confession. In Maputo, Mozambique, (2 to 6 December 2008) an Accra Confession workshop was organized around the Assembly of the Alliance of Reformed Churches in Africa (ARCA). The Africa consultant, Puleng LenkaBula, published an Accra Confession Study Guide for Africa.

Reformed churches from the Caribbean and North America regions participated in an Accra Confession workshop in Guyana from February 25 to 28 2008. Delegates were engaged in analysis, reflection, and discussion on critical issues regarding economic justice and ecological concerns. The workshop focussed on Caribbean perspectives on the world economic order and its impact on the livelihood of people. Participants were also engaged in analyzing the link between poverty, wealth, and ecology and lifting up threats and challenges. It remarked that CANACOM/CANAAC would not be effective in leading a process of transformative justice unless the issue of power was discussed. From the Caribbean context, a Christian education book on the Accra Confession with a Reformed theological perspective was developed.

Many local churches in Europe have been discussing the theological and economic dimensions of the Accra Confession. Some churches in Germany have been engaged in dialogue with partners in the South (one example is a project of the German Evangelical Reformed Church and the Uniting Church in Southern Africa on economic globalization). Some are also engaged in analysis and reflection on the topic of globalization, including theological positions. They have also been looking at motivation and support for communities and church members, as well as how to influence politics on the issues of poverty, trade, environment, and development by the values of justice, peace, and sustainability.

In Germany, “empire” was discussed in synods, academic institutions, and church leaders’ conferences. Although it is seen as a controversial issue, the impression is that this discussion is helpful. It advances the debate on the structure of globalization and challenges the churches to sharpen critical theological thinking.

The AIPRAL and CLAI held an integrated forum in May 2008 in Guatire, Venezuela. The main outcome of this forum was an Open Letter on the Financial Crisis, which called for renewed energy in recognizing the prophetic role of the alliance in denouncing the neoliberal system that is having such a devastating impact on the lives of millions of people—condemning them to exclusion, while at the same time destroying the environment for economic gain. In Cartagena, 4 to 7 November 2009, AIPRAL organized a Faith and Economy Meeting entitled “Unjust Commerce and Human Dignity.” This meeting drew out commitments of Spanish-speaking Caribbean churches to promote study, reflection, and action on the Accra Confession. Churches made commitments to work in partnership with social and popular movements that seek alternatives for a just economic model and that preserve creation and protect the weakest of our world.

The Accra Confession Pamphlet (North America), developed under the leadership of Gretel Van Wieren, has been well received. It has been translated into Spanish. The North America Covenanting for Justice Working Group has developed a web-based workshop for congregational and educational resource. It includes workshops around the following issues in order to help groups engage and live out the Accra Confession in a variety of ways and according to particular contexts: sweatshops, farm workers, environmental justice, climate change, and incarceration. Each topical workshop is structured according to the organization of the confession itself (reading the signs of the times, confessing our faith, covenanting for justice) and includes a video component.

A global dialogue on covenanting for justice in the economy and the earth was held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 3 to 8 September 2009. It brought together churches and partners who have been active in their engagement with the Accra Confession. It included representatives of churches, which have responded to the Accra Confession, theologians, economists, and activists who have participated in studies, consultations, and workshops on the Accra Confession. The Johannesburg statement developed at this gathering will be a key document that will be tabled in the Uniting General Council in Grand Rapids, U.S.A., in June 2010.

c. Youth

The youth moderator continues to lead our youth work, coordinating with our Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership office. A youth newsletter was produced in 2007. It was well received. We have been intentional about involving youth in a number of consultations.

The Youth have been working hard to plan for the Reformed Youth forum just before the Uniting General Council in Grand Rapids.

4. Mission Project

In the period under review, two impulses contributed significantly to the shaping of and emphases in the programs prioritized by the Mission Project Advisory Committee: The Edinburgh 2010 study process and the Making a Difference Project.

The Edinburgh 2010 study process is an ecumenical action-reflection process around different themes. The Edinburgh 2010 question on changes or lack of changes in our understanding and practice of mission and unity since 1910 adds special impetus to the WARC Mission Project’s Intercultural Pilot on Mission Today. The Edinburgh 2010 theme of “Mission and Power” informs the study on Partnership in Mission. As a broad-based ecumenical process, Edinburgh 2010 also provides new opportunity to develop programmes with other denominations.

The development and coordination of the Making a Difference Project (MADIP) (2006 to 2009) became a major undertaking of the Mission Project, as it was possible to incorporate several programmatic foci into one mission empowerment project that would serve as a test model. This served the focus of mission study, reinterpretation, and empowerment of the Mission Project. Transforming international relations, searching for new expressions of mission in unity, immigrant issues, and rethinking mission are all built into the MADIP programmes. The MADIP was designed with three WARC churches—the Presbyterian Church in Rwanda, the Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa, and the United Protestant Church of Belgium—which already had some experience of working together. The aim was to deepen these relations by developing new ways of engaging together in mission at different levels of the church. The MADIP’s overall focus was peace, reconciliation, and justice action with special reference to dealing constructively with ethnic and racial differences.

Under the same theme of mission study, reinterpretation, and empowerment focus, the Mission Project began work on a survey of contemporary mission statements. This is an attempt to draw out convergences but also the specific insights that our Reformed tradition brings to the ecumenical discussion on mission, evangelism, and unity today. The findings will be a contribution to the Edinburgh 2010 study process. The Mission Project also facilitated an Intercultural Pilot Project on Mission Today as part of the Edinburgh 2010 process. The LWF has joined WARC in facilitating this programme programmatically and financially.

The Mission Project is coordinating the development of an ecumenical pilgrimage on foot during the Edinburgh 2010 event (2 to 6 June 2010). The pilgrimage will bring to life untold mission history between 1910 and 2010 as lived out by Christians in different places and of different traditions, and engage the pilgrims in reflection on their own mission commitments today. The Mission Project also coordinated a study on Partnership in Mission as a contribution to the Edinburgh 2010 theme “Mission and Power”. It included a process of gathering partnership studies of member churches. In the latter part of 2009 an expanded working group met to interpret the findings and to develop the global contribution for the Edinburgh 2010 study process.
The focus “Relations and Cooperation of Historic and Immigrant Churches in the North”, is incorporated into the MA-DIP project. In addition this continues to be a focus through ongoing work on a case study of the Christian Reformed Church in North America and through networking with different groups in Europe which seek to enable greater cooperation between different immigrant churches and the older churches.

Between November 2008 and March 2009 we had an evaluation of the Mission Project. The process recommended that the Mission project be continued after 2010.

5. Communications Office

We said “Good bye to John Asling in December 2008, and welcomed Kristine Greenaway to the office in Geneva in January 2009.

The Communications Office continues to issue timely news releases. The WARC’s quarterly newsletter, Update, is produced in French and English and published in print, email, and web editions. Selected articles are translated into Spanish by the Alliance of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in Latin America (AIPRAL) for publication in their magazine La Voz. The Alliance of Reformed Churches in Germany translates and publishes about six articles per issue in die reformierten on a pro bono basis. We continue to make better use of information technology. We have tried to make our website more responsive to the needs of our member churches. The office also continues to facilitate the publication of books and flyers.

The ecumenical news agency, ENI, continues to be a vital mechanism for distributing news stories about the ecumenical movement. The WARC is one of four founding member organizations.

6. Finance and Fundraising Office

The Finance and Fundraising Office continues to play the leading role in faithfully managing the limited financial resources we have. We continue to face major challenges in our finances. Our auditors, Compagnie fiduciaire de révision S.A., have carried out the audit of the 2008 and 2009 accounts and recommended that they should be approved by the Governing Body of WARC.

We continue to be good stewards of the resources that come to us. However, we have had to face constant deficits. The deficits were primarily due to the reduction in income on account of the drastic fluctuations in the exchange rates. The May 2009 Executive Committee meeting took steps to ensure that beyond 2010 we do not experience deficits any more. The main element of these steps is to design the staff structure of WCRC to be smaller than the staff complement we have had until 2009. This is a painful but necessary step to lead us to a balanced budget.

We thank God for the churches and agencies that give towards program expenditure. This is what we depend on to carry out programs. While the bulk of income for programs comes from special fundraising, there is, however, always a small element of program expenditure that is borne by the core budget—in 2008 around CHF16,000.

We continue to be grateful to our member churches whose contributions form the core of our income. We are grateful to the PC(USA) for your commitment to what we do together to make a difference in the world. Some of our member churches have increased their membership contributions during the period under review. Sadly, a few have also reduced. The president and general secretary’s visits, as well as visits of executive secretaries, have been important instruments for discussing WARC’s financial challenges with our member churches. In the past we discussed block grants with German agencies and also with CWM. We continue to explore these.

7. Partnership Fund

The Reformed Churches Partnership Fund continues to be an important instrument that strengthens the mission our member churches engaged in the Global South. Given the human resources’ limitations we have, administering the Partnership Fund has been through more challenges than we expected.

8. Endowment Fund

We have established a WARC Endowment Fund. Thanks to the generous contributions of executive committee members—led by our president—we opened the Endowment Account with USD26,000. We initially wanted the Presbyterian Foundation to manage this for us, but this did not work out. We have now transferred those funds to the Barnabas Fund.

9. WARC—REC Relations: Process Towards the WCRC

The Joint Working Group set up by both WARC and REC executive committees has been working very hard as WARC and REC journeys towards union. They led the process of drafting a Constitution, formulating Articles of Union, crafting the staffing structure of the WCRC and preparations towards the Uniting General Council.
The strongest expressions of our togetherness have been our joint governing body meetings. A joint officers’ meeting between WARC and REC was held in Utrecht, the Netherlands, in October 2008 and joint Executive Committee meeting in Geneva in May 2009.

Shortly after the October 2009 joint officers’ meeting, the draft Constitution was sent to all member churches. Some responses came in and have been processed.

In view of the challenging financial situation, the Joint Working Group established a task force to explore relocation of the office in a more cost effective venue. At the end of the process it was decided that for the time being the office needs to stay in Geneva.

10. Uniting General Council—June 2010

Preparations for the Uniting General Council are proceeding steadily. An Expanded Planning Committee meeting was held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, in February 2009. This was necessitated by the desire of the Joint Working Group to make sure that in the planning of the council all voices in the WARC and REC families (regional, gender, and age-wise) were given space to contribute. It was a very good meeting during which various aspects of the Uniting General Council were planned.

The Worship Committee for the UGC is being coordinated by the Institute of Christian Worship of Calvin College. They held meetings in January 2009 and January 2010 and are planning some great times of worship at the UGC. They were also charged with developing a statement on worship renewal in readiness for the Uniting General Council.

In March 2009, a temporary website was launched to serve as a source of information about the Uniting General Council and to allow on-line functions related to it, including registration and delegate sponsorship. The WARC and REC are grateful to the Reformed Church of America for creating and maintaining this site.

Preparation materials have been prepared. Most are on the www.reformedchurches.org website. Some have been mailed out to participants.

11. Relations with the Disciples Ecumenical Consultative Council (DECC)

The WARC and DECC held a joint meeting in July 2008 in Nashville, Tennessee, U.S.A. We reaffirmed our commitment to being in partnership towards the unity of the church. We also discussed our relationship in view of the uniting process of WARC and REC. The decisions include redefining the associate member provision for WCRC. The DECC has decided to come into the WCRC as an associate member. This is a key step in the closeness of the relationship between the Disciples and the Reformed.

The DECC leadership also made some helpful suggestions to the WCRC draft Constitution. We have also agreed to deepen our programmatic collaboration in a number of areas, including our dialogues with the Roman Catholics.

12. John Calvin 500 Anniversary Celebrations

The WARC, the Protestant Church of Geneva, the Federation of Swiss Protestant Churches, the Faculty of Theology of the University of Geneva, and the John Knox International Reformed Center in Geneva jointly engaged in planning the activities and processes of the Calvin jubilee commemorations.

In 2008, WARC and the John Knox International Reformed Center co-published The Legacy of John Calvin: Some Actions for the Church in the 21st Century, in time for the 499th birthday anniversary. The book was initiated by the late Lukas Vischer and is available in English, French, German, and Spanish. The WARC also sponsored the republishing of the French edition of André Biéler’s La pensée économique et sociale de Calvin, published by Editions Georg, Genève.

The president and general secretary were guests at numerous seminars and public events connected with the Calvin jubilee in a number of countries. Other WARC staff members have also given lectures in connection with the Calvin celebrations. Groups visiting the Ecumenical Centre in Geneva regularly request meetings with WARC staff to learn about our work in the context of Calvin’s legacy.

On Pentecost Day 2009, there was a special celebration in the St Pierre Cathedrale in Geneva. This was televised and it reached many countries. Prior to it, WARC brought together seventy participants from different countries to participate in a Calvin study tour. We thank Kathy Reeves of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and our intern, Merve Rugenstein, for their diligent work in organizing the study tour. We called on WARC member churches to set aside time to celebrate the jubilee the weekend of July 10 to 12, 2009. Many did. The focus on these celebrations was not so much on Calvin as a person, but on how his legacy inspires us into life-giving actions today.
13. Area Councils

Our area councils were all active in 2008 and 2009. The Caribbean and North America Area Council (CANAAC) had its assembly in February 2008. It focused on covenanting for justice in the economy and the earth. It also laid the structures for a vibrant youth movement for the area, and strengthened its ties with CANACOM. Dr. Kirkpatrick and the Reverend Sheerattan-Bisnauth attended on behalf of WARC.

14. Visits to Member Churches

In 2008 and 2009, the president and general secretary visited many member churches and encouraged them in the challenges they were facing. We visited churches in the following countries: Indonesia, the United States of America, the United Kingdom, Kenya, South Africa, Scotland, Switzerland, France, the Netherlands, Canada, Ghana, Brazil, Thailand, Malawi, Botswana, Jamaica, Madagascar, China, Hong Kong, Japan, Taiwan, Korea, Hungary, Vanuatu, Solomon Islands, Australia, and Germany.

Throughout the year different colleagues also visited member churches on behalf of WARC—especially in connection with programs and meetings they had in those areas or in connection with a special invitation. All these constitute direct contacts that we have with our constituencies.

15. South Africa

Following discussions in the officers meeting in Utrecht on the stalemate between the Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa and the Dutch Reformed Church in the reunification of the Dutch Reformed family, as well as the lingering issues around the readmission of the Nederduitsch Hervormde Kerk van Afrika (Dutch Reformed Church), a team was set up to visit South Africa. This team visited in March 2009. Our visits to both processes were not very easy. Regarding the unification process, we heard both sides. We were encouraged because both agreed that what is needed includes a process towards reunification that is based on truth, restorative justice, and reconciliation. It was also agreed to put in place a process of studying the Belhar Confession. We commissioned Dr. Jerry Pillay, the ARCA president, to follow up on this.

On the Nederduitsch Hervormde Kerk van Afrika (Dutch Reformed Church), our discussions showed a deep division in the church around moving beyond apartheid. It was our determination that they were not ready for readmission to WARC or to the WCRC when it is formed. They remain under suspension.

16. Gratitude and Conclusion

We thank all my current colleagues for their dedicated professional service to the alliance—especially now that we are fewer. Thanks to Pat, Jet, Douwe, Kristine, Maureen, John, Penny, Franziska, Ming, and Veronika who carried the work in the two years under review. We are grateful to God for our ever-faithful volunteer, Hartmut Lucke, who is a real asset to the alliance, and to the faithful interns who were with us. Without this team, we could not have done much.

We thank God for the president, Dr. Kirkpatrick. We have been inspired and strengthened by his leadership. His visionary and pastoral leadership has brought us through many challenging times. We thank God for the president and all other Officers as well as other executive committee members. I am very grateful to the leadership of REC for our cooperation throughout the two years, 2008 and 2009.

Fundraising is a very demanding task that requires not only careful and profound proposal writing and follow up, but also many reports. We are grateful to all agencies, churches, and persons who have provided support to enable us to raise the funds needed to carry out our programs, and for all those who gave gifts of all kinds to ensure we worked well 2008 and 2009.

Yes, we are called upon to make every effort to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. We in WARC continue to fulfill this calling. We pray that the emerging World Communion of Reformed Churches when formed in June 2010 will be an effective body that understands its calling to communion as including the commitment to justice.

The Reverend Doctor Setri Nyomi
WARC General Secretary

1. The General Secretary’s Introduction

Looking back on the early days of 2008, we rejoice that Christians joined in worldwide celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity. This exercise in shared spirituality bears living testimony to how good and pleasant it is when believers demonstrate that we are truly one in Christ. I was privileged to represent the World Council of Churches (WCC) at the Vatican for a service of common prayer and commemoration of this milestone in the quest for full Christian unity. This event coincided with a meeting of the Joint Working Group between the Roman Catholic Church and the WCC, a consultation of representatives drawn from many traditions who even now are exploring new opportunities for dialogue among the churches and their cooperation in mission to the whole creation.

Throughout the year, the World Council of Churches observed its sixtieth anniversary. In a February celebration, His All Holiness Bartholomew I, Ecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople, reminded a near-capacity crowd at Geneva’s St Pierre Cathedral that the WCC has accomplished much during the past six decades. “The council has provided an ideal platform where churches with different outlooks and a great variety of theological and ecclesiological traditions have been able to engage in dialogue and promote Christian unity,” he said. The sixtieth anniversary gave us pause to reflect on how far the ecumenical movement has come since the council was born in 1948 and where the Holy Spirit is leading as we proceed into the uncharted territory of the twenty-first century.

This annual report reflects some of the initiatives we have taken as a council and shares some of the ways in which we have joined in partnership with others. We have endeavoured to confront the economic upheavals of our time, threats to our planet, offences against human rights, and the proliferation of violence and warfare. We have travelled far and wide to stand in solidarity with the poor, the oppressed, the physically exhausted, and those who mourn. We have also promoted greater visible unity among Christians through theological consultation and the experience of life together. In 2008, we wept with those who weep, yet we also found cause for joy in many opportunities given us by God. I visited the 2008 World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland to speak frankly with political and financial leaders; at the same time, the council was instrumental in preparations for the 2009 World Social Forum and related events in Belém, Brazil. Concern over climate change has taken me and many ecumenical partners from conference rooms in Helsinki, to talks with indigenous leaders in Latin America, to encounters with the people of Pacific island churches.

We have stood in solidarity with Christians and their neighbours caught up in conflict, from Gaza to Sri Lanka, and we have borne witness to Christ’s will for peace with justice in tense cities on every continent. This past year saw tragic scenes of internal turmoil in too many places, north and south, including my home country of Kenya. We have worked with international bodies and national churches to address the roots and consequences of such troubles. As you will see in these pages, there is reason for hope, despite the many challenges that face us. Young people are demanding fuller participation in finding solutions to the problems of this age. New conversations are opening up between factions within divided churches. Inter-religious discussions and understanding are more and more in evidence, with a proposal for a United Nations “Decade” for inter-religious dialogue and cooperation for peace. Ecumenical efforts, particularly in Africa, are yielding results in the establishment of HIV-competent churches and defining the role of congregations as they support local healthcare and sustainable communities. I am grateful to have been able to play a part in these ecumenical activities and in so many others.

In May 2008, Desmond Tutu visited the Ecumenical Centre in Geneva to honor the council and its sixtieth anniversary. Before becoming an archbishop, he served on the staff of the WCC. Watching him interact with a group of schoolchildren who were also visiting the World Council of Churches that day, one could sense both the history and potential of Christian fellowship lived within the providence of God. Archbishop Tutu reminded an audience made up of the children and members of the Ecumenical Centre staff, “We in South Africa would not be free if it had not been for the support of the WCC.” He added, “Evil, injustice, oppression, all of those awful things, are not going to have the last word. Goodness, laughter, joy, caring, compassion, the things that you do and you help others do, those are going to prevail.” We hope that the information presented in this report will leave you with the sort of enthusiasm and determination exhibited by Archbishop Desmond Tutu during his visit. And may the grace, communion, and love of God be with us all throughout the coming year.

The Reverend Dr Samuel Kobia
General Secretary
World Council of Churches

2. 2008 Highlights

a. “Living Letters” Carry Hope

Eleven ecumenical delegations traveled to locations around the world where Christians strive to overcome violence. These “Living Letters” teams, composed of WCC member church representatives, visited Kenya, Sudan, Germany, Indonesia, Uganda, Liberia and Sierra Leone, Nicaragua, South Africa, Pakistan, Haiti, and Colombia. In the first such visit in 2008, a “Living Letters” delegation to Kenya witnessed the country’s fragile return to peace after disputed elections sparked devastating violence along ethnic lines. For Rev. Canon Peter Karanja, general secretary of the National Council of Churches of Kenya, Kenyans “… need to understand that the interests of any ethnic community are linked to all the others and that the country is large enough for all of us to have a place.”

b. Forging Religious Encounters among Young People

During three weeks in July, twenty-two young people from four continents and three religious backgrounds lived, ate, and reflected together on religious prejudices, differences, and common values at the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey. The intense inter-religious dialogue, facilitated by Geneva-based and international Christian, Muslim, and Jewish experts emphasized the importance of encountering and understanding more about other religions. Participants were encouraged to carry these experiences back to their home communities.

c. Witnessing to the Peace of God in Oceania

Churches around the world prayed for the peoples of the Pacific as the 2008 regional focus of the Decade to Overcome Violence. Prayers and worship resources from a variety of denominations in the region were collected and shared, particularly for the International Day of Prayer for Peace on September 21, 2008. A Stories of Peace competition invited children and young people to depict through art what “peace in the Pacific” meant to them.

d. Exploring the Promised Land

Exploring the Promised Land, a conference held in Bern, Switzerland, aired different theological approaches to this key issue in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. A key result of the discussions by church leaders and theologians was a better understanding of the question of land in the Bible, in theology, and in the conflict. The Bible “must not be utilized to justify oppression or supply simplistic commentary on contemporary events,” the final declaration states.

e. A Need for Water Is Shared by All

The first Ecumenical Water Network Summer School was held at the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey bringing more than twenty young men and women from eighteen countries together for eight days of intense learning about the global water crisis. Participants came from privileged countries where a constant supply of clean water is taken for granted and from countries where water scarcity is a daily fact of life. The summer school generated enormous energy among a new generation of Christian leaders. The participants committed themselves to take up water issues in their home churches and youth networks.

3. The World Council of Churches and the Ecumenical Movement in the Twenty-first Century

a. Young Leaders Bring New Energy to Ecumenism—WCC Interns

“You have the entire world in one single place,” states Henrik Hansson of the Church of Sweden, describing what drew him to work for one year with the WCC in Geneva as an intern. “I thought of this as a way to experience how worldwide the church is.”

For the three young people who worked within the WCC during 2008, it was definitely an “eye-opening” experience. Ginger Porter of the Congregational Christian Church, American Samoa, reflects. “It was something brand new to me—the WCC, the ecumenical movement.”

The WCC internship program is one way youth contribute their ideas and gain experience in the worldwide ecumenical movement. Their active participation in program areas like the Decade to Overcome Violence, youth, communication, and member relations gives them an opportunity to work and learn in an international, multiconfessional setting. “I recommend it for everybody,” says Antsa Rakotoarisona, from the Anglican Church in Madagascar, “during one year you can learn much about the churches, ecumenism, and Jesus Christ.” The involvement of young people also gives the WCC valuable ideas and energy. As Martin Robra, director of the program on the WCC and the Ecumenical Movement in the twenty-first century states, “This is not token youth participation; this is strong engagement and full contribution to the work of the WCC.”

“Youth have always had a role in this whole movement, since the beginning,” emphasizes Porter. “It was a youth movement that spurred the ecumenical movement, and I think it has always been a nudge, not necessarily a powerful one at certain points … but it has always been there and it will always be there.”

Following the WCC’s Ninth Assembly in Brazil, young people are increasingly involved throughout WCC activities. In addition to the internship program they act as stewards for major WCC meetings. A new youth commission, ECHOS, also enables young people to develop their visions of the ecumenical movement and strengthen their role in the decision-making mechanisms of the WCC.

“I think the WCC has a lot to offer youth,” says Ginger Porter. “I think the churches in the world open up a lot of opportunities for youth. It is a matter of actually implementing them and actually giving the youth the opportunity to rise again and to do things.”

If there is one recurring characteristic young people bring, it’s the sense of action. “I think youth are more ‘let’s take some action’ rather than just taking time, ‘let’s discuss this,’” says Porter.

Or, as Hansson puts it, “Most young people are quite pragmatic and we haven’t gained so much status and power—we don’t have so much to lose and so we are more action oriented.” Hansson says that being action oriented is also connected to “thinking outside the box” and not feeling so bound by institutional memories. “You can’t live on old merits” he states, and this gives an opportunity for a “fresh start” for the ecumenical movement in the twenty-first century.

b. Nurturing the Growing Fellowship of Churches—New Member Churches

Two church communions from opposite sides of the globe were welcomed into full fellowship of the World Council of Churches (WCC) by the central committee in February 2008, increasing the membership of the WCC to 349.

But membership of the WCC is not just about numbers. It is about expanding and strengthening the sense of fellowship among Christians worldwide. Each member contributes to, and receives inspiration from, the vast and diverse expressions of faith and witness to Jesus Christ.

The newest members of the WCC are the Independent Presbyterian Church in Brazil and the Lao Evangelical Church. Under the WCC’s new membership guidelines, both churches were received for an interim period at the September 2006 central committee meeting, allowing for a time of interaction and further evaluation.

The Lao Evangelical Church is the first WCC member from Laos, a nation of some six million people. Growing out of mission work from the late nineteenth century, it was formally established in 1956 and today has approximately one hundred thousand members in three hundred congregations. It is the largest denomination in the country officially recognized by the government.

“Ecumenism is not new to us,” says the church’s president, Mr. Khamphone Kounthapanya. In addition to being members of the Christian Conference of Asia, the church works with the other officially recognized churches in Laos, the Roman Catholic Church, and the Seventh Day Adventists. “We have no problems. We always come together,” he states, and continues pragmatically, “If we fight, the government is going to close down all of us.”

The Independent Presbyterian Church in Brazil has about ninety-five thousand members and five hundred congregations. It formally organized in 1903, developing a variety of mission projects, social work, and education programs over the next century. It is the sixth WCC member church from Brazil, which hosted the WCC’s Ninth Assembly in 2006.

Their membership has been long in development. “As a matter of fact, our church participated in all WCC assemblies since New Delhi (1961), always as an observer,” says Rev. Assir Pereira, president of the church. But “only in our last assembly was the decision taken, almost unanimously, to request full membership with the council.”

Pereira reflects that while some were frustrated over such a long delay in joining the WCC, it was crucially important to bring the whole church together in the decision. “Today I understand that a sensitizing process was needed, a gradual growing up of our church, before we could achieve it. And it is important that the decision was made with such broad support, without a split, with the awareness that the moment was ripe to make this commitment to contribute to the ecumenical movement through the World Council of Churches.”

Through involvement in WCC programs, visits to member churches, participation in governing body meetings, reflection and prayer, and actions of solidarity in times of crisis, the WCC member churches live out Jesus’ prayer of unity, “so that the world may believe.”

4. Unity, Mission, Evangelism, and Spirituality

a. Celebrating a Century of Prayer for Christian Unity

After one hundred years of prayers for Christian unity, there are still unprecedented opportunities. From new local initiatives and special global events, to a venture into cyberspace, the 2008 Week of Prayer for Christian Unity lived out its theme, “Pray without ceasing,” as new energy and recommitment were gathered for its next century.

In Rome, WCC general secretary Rev. Dr Samuel Kobia joined Pope Benedict XVI in praying for Christian unity at a vespers service presided over by the Pope—a tangible sign of the spirit of cooperation between the WCC and the Vatican that has marked the forty years of joint production of the liturgical materials for the week. There was also a celebration in Geneva organized by the WCC and local churches with testimonies of ecumenical involvement in different parts of the world.

While bringing greetings in Rome from the WCC fellowship of churches, Kobia underlined the importance of “a church that is one and united in its witness” in a world marked by violence and disunity.

New and rising leaders in the churches and the ecumenical movement also contributed energy for unity. For the first time, the major global Christian student and youth organizations, including the WCC youth desk, issued a joint call to prayer and action to encourage young people worldwide to come together and express Christian unity at local and national levels. A page on the social networking Web site Facebook connected young people around the world in sharing plans and prayers for the week.
Towards the end of the week, in a letter to church leaders, the youth organizations reaffirmed the need “… to focus on that which unites us and work together in a spirit of openness and respect.” They said their organizations “… affirm the importance of this expression of unity and celebrate that young people have always been pioneers of the movement for ecumenism.” The letter expresses the hope that people around the world will continue to build on the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity through “concrete actions.”

Such concrete actions are often the fruit of local celebrations. For worshipers in Yealand, a small village in the northwest of England, their first celebration of the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity had a significant impact.

Catherine King Ambler, clerk of the local Quaker meeting, acknowledged that despite several attempts, it had been difficult for the Church of England, Catholic, and Quaker communities to come together in a joint service. The one hundredth anniversary of the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, though, provided an opportunity that “enabled some deeper spiritual contact with each other.” The three churches conducted a prayer pilgrimage, drawing on the theme and prayers in the materials produced by the WCC and the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity. It “felt much more sincere and participatory,” reflected Ambler. The activities of the week have led to a longer-term joint project. “The Week of Prayer for Christian Unity really facilitated a good opportunity for getting to know each other,” says Ambler. “Barriers have been broken down.”

b. Indigenous Peoples: Exploring Ancient Theological Roots in New Ways

“Just as all Christians are brought together in the one body of Christ, so too are the indigenous Christians who are crying out for their rightful place in the mainstream churches,” says Evelyn Parkin of Australia.

Parkin was one of more than thirty participants from sixteen countries representing indigenous communities in a WCC consultation on the “Ecclesial and Social Vision of Indigenous Peoples” held in October in the Philippines. While the WCC has long advocated for the rights and inclusion of indigenous peoples, particularly through the United Nations, the consultation was an important step in fully recognizing and including their theological insights among the worldwide fellowship of churches.

“Someone once said that the church is like a bird flying with one wing that continuously flies in circles. The bird needs to have both wings to balance,” says Parkin. “For me the church is a bit like this—until indigenous Christians are accepted and become a part of the church, it too, is left in an imbalanced order.”

The consultation explored commonalities and differences among indigenous theologians and noted those that particularly contributed to a wider Christian perspective, such as “stewardship,” in which indigenous theologians can help “… to rethink the way we live in the world.” As the report noted, “… our value of community in the journey of Christian pilgrimage can show the church a renewed sense of hope for its ecclesiological understandings. Sharing, community and love of one’s neighbour are areas where our indigenous values can inform the Christian theological task.”

Hosted by the National Council of Churches in the Philippines, the consultation was called in response to the WCC Ninth Assembly’s recommendation for theological input from an indigenous perspective to strengthen the life and witness of the WCC.

Juan Jacobo Tancara from Chile reflected that in his context of Pentecostal indigenous churches, “ecumenism is still very rare and the revalorization of indigenous spirituality sounds, at least in the discourse, dangerous.”

As Parkin stated, it impacted her “knowing that I belong to the much bigger picture of Indigenous Christians across the globe I see the Spirit moving across the waters drawing all into the one voice for the Indigenous peoples’ struggles.” For Tancara, the consultation was personally significant as he “had never been in an international meeting like this before.” And, he hopes that “the diversity of ideas and the shared will of a fairer healthier land, a strong awareness of the destructive process where extreme capitalism is taking us, and the shared ideas that are presented in the document” will promote common understanding and joint action among indigenous peoples and the wider Christian community.

5. Public Witness: Addressing Power, Affirming Peace

a. United Nations Advocacy Week

Advocacy for justice, peace, the abolition of poverty and the preservation of the ecology becomes more effective when churches and their partners combine forces to interpret the gospel’s demands for the present day. In November, 120 people, representing a variety of confessional traditions and diverse nationalities, spent six days participating in the WCC’s fourth annual United Nations Advocacy Week (UNAW) in New York. It was an opportunity for strategic planning and dialogue with representatives of the U.N. and related networks of activists.

The UNAW provides an evolving model of ecumenical collaboration and a significant moment for expressing concerns and addressing questions of power, inequality, and structural injustice throughout the world. As the global financial crisis of 2008 turned the media’s focus to stock exchanges, banks, and centers of government, advocates of the poor and dispossessed took the opportunity to remind international leaders that, for the poor, this was not a threat to privileged lifestyles, but literally a matter of life and death.

Dr Robert C. Orr, the U.N. assistant secretary-general for strategic planning and policy coordination, spoke at one of the UNAW discussion sessions. “In times of crisis,” he observed, “people tend to look inward and seek to protect their own families and communities. You need to help people fight this instinct; because we can cope with this crisis only if we look outward and all work together.”

Founded by the WCC’s Commission of the Churches on International Affairs in 2003, the advocacy week at the U.N. in New York has among its stated goals the gathering of churches and ecumenical partners in a forum dedicated to common advocacy on global issues. It is also intended to deepen theological and ethical insights concerning identified priorities, build the capacity and understanding of Christians with regard to advocacy within the U.N., and create opportunities for dialogue with the U.N. member states and related agencies.

The UNAW’s advocacy areas in 2008 included human rights, migration, and the continuing violence in Sri Lanka. The week’s events moved through four phases: (1) setting the context for common strategic, global, ecumenical advocacy; (2) deepening common understanding of priority advocacy issues; (3) engaging as one in ecumenical advocacy; and (4) setting common commitments for networking and follow-up.

The six-day program resulted in many participants planning and undertaking regional and inter-regional projects on such problems as upholding the rights of migrant workers, the affirmation of indigenous cultures, youth and gender issues, the intersection of climate change and economic justice, as well as the search for peace amid conflicts like that in Sri Lanka.

b. Empowering People to Demand Their Human Rights

On April 28, 2007, Jonas Burgos was having lunch alone at a restaurant in his town in the Philippines when four armed men and one woman in civilian clothes forced him into a car. The license plate of the car was eventually traced to a local army battalion. Despite strong evidence of military involvement in Jonas’ disappearance, no one was brought to justice and nothing more was heard or seen of him until almost a year later. A friend of the family working in the military showed them an army document that listed Jonas as an insurgent who had been “neutralized”—a military term for killed. Jonas, an organic farmer, had been giving technical training to local members of a peasant movement that the Philippine government and armed forces labeled a “front” organization for the Communist Party.

Jonas’ story is one of over nine hundred extrajudicial killings and almost two hundred enforced disappearances from 2001 to 2007 in the Philippines. Many of the victims were political activists and human rights defenders, including church leaders. Jonas’ mother, Dr Edita Burgos, and several other family members of victims were members of WCC-supported delegations to the United Nations Human Rights Council (UNHRC) in 2008.

“I went with the ecumenical delegation to Geneva to give a face to the victims,” said Dr Burgos in her reflections on the trip. “I did not know what to say before the UNHRC. I am just another mother looking for her son.” But inside events, visits with missions and personal testimony, Dr Burgos and the other members laid out the chilling facts of case after case of death and disappearance. And, face to face with the Philippine government delegation, Dr Burgos challenged their suggestion to debate the issue of enforced disappearances: “I told them, ‘what is there to debate about? Even if you accuse my son of being a communist, he is still a human being who has rights’.” After her words, the U.N. hall was silent.

The WCC has been one of many church and ecumenical groups supporting the churches in the Philippines in their outspoken and persistent pursuit of truth and justice. Pastoral and political solidarity over several years led in 2008 to facilitation of the preparation and participation of several delegations acting as part of the UNHRC’s Universal Periodic Review of the Philippines.

Through technical and material support, the WCC enables those most affected by injustice to plead their own case effectively before international forums. Mervin Sol Toquero, assistant program secretary for the National Council of Churches in the Philippines (NCCP), notes that the WCC’s offices in New York and Geneva provided the necessary support for the delegations to engage with the UNHRC, from the planning and writing stages of the extensive report, Let the Stones Cry Out, to organizing side events and submitting official interventions to the U.N. body.

The personal testimony that accompanied the delegation’s documentation made an even more powerful impact. The Reverend Rex Reyes Jr, general secretary of the NCCP and a member of the delegations to the U.N., stated in reflections on the launch of the book Let the Stones Cry Out that “a major factor that contributed to the credibility of their delegations was the inclusion and active participation of the relatives of victims.” The book itself is not only a record of injustice, but is intended as a reference for other groups bringing their concerns to the United Nations.

A reduction in the rate of killings suggests that international pressure is having an effect, but it has not yet been enough. Reyes concludes from the delegations’ experiences: “It taught us that vigilance and faithfulness to truth still remain important parts of the conduct of the struggle for peace and justice. And it taught us the necessity of global response to the human rights crisis in any country.”

For Edita Burgos, her search for her son continues. Yet she has hope. “I can see a growth in impact of the ecumenical delegation because of the perseverance of the team and the support of the international community,” she reflects in the concluding chapter of Let the Stones Cry Out. As she considers the task still ahead in bringing to justice the individuals and institutions behind the violence, she says, “that is why it is important for people to be aware. It will be the action of people combined with prayer that will dismantle these institutions.”

6. Justice, Diakonia, and Responsibility for Creation
   a. Preserving the Gift of Creation

“The storms and waves eat away our beaches, and as they continue they will some day eat us,” states Rev. Baranite Karate from Kiribati, one of three Pacific Island countries facing immediate threat from rising sea levels. For his community and many others already vulnerable to changes in weather patterns, climate change is not just a statistical probability but a fact with devastating consequences. In Kiribati, those living on the coast have already had to move further inland as floods are more frequent and intense. At the same time, diseases and extreme heat have become more common. The prospect of being refugees is more acute as the place they call home progressively disappears beneath rising waters.

The WCC has addressed environmental issues and climate change for nearly two decades. It brings a moral and faith-based voice to United Nations Climate Change Forums that works at establishing agreements, commitment, and urgent action to reverse the effects human activity has on climate change. The voice and experience of Pacific churches have added to the urgency of the ecumenical message. At the December U.N. conference on the Kyoto Protocol, the WCC told delegates that much more radical steps must be taken. In February, the WCC Central Committee addressed global warming and climate change by building on previous statements of the WCC to emphasize the need for immediate action by governments and for a “profound change in the relationship towards nature, economic policies, consumption, production, and technological patterns.” The central committee said, “the responsibility lies with all of us, from our individual ecological footprint through parishes, corporations, and states.”

Following the lead of the Ecumenical Patriarchate, the central committee named September 1 as a special day of prayer and action for the care and stewardship of creation. As His All Holiness, the Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew I, wrote in his encyclical for that day, “the use of the world and the enjoyment of material goods must be eucharistic, accompanied by doxology towards God; by the same token, the abuse of the world and participation therein without reference to God is sinful both before the Creator and before humanity as creation.”

The WCC has worked on climate change and the care of creation through direct work with churches and their members. It has also utilized its networking skills and U.N. accreditation and recognition to bring churches, other religions, and grassroots communities to speak together and directly to countries and international forums. Activities range from staff leadership of a week’s Focus for Christians on Caring for Creation in August, organized by the Council for World Mission in Europe, a visit to Pacific churches led by the WCC general secretary in July, and plenary statements and other advocacy during the sessions of the Conference of Parties of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. Ecumenical cooperation on the inter-related issues of climate change and water also led to the formation of the Ecumenical Water Network (EWN), whose secretariat is hosted by the WCC. Initiatives such as the EWN’s “Seven Weeks of Water for Lent” encourage biblical reflection on the use of the earth’s resources.

The importance of the leadership and advocacy within churches is clear. In a March visit to the WCC, U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon told WCC staff, “Global warming will only be resolved through a global common response, and we need your help.” The WCC’s efforts are grounded in the call to care for God’s creation. This call does not hesitate to remind people at every level of the responsibilities they hold to care for such a gift. As the WCC told the delegates attending the high-level segment of the U.N. meeting on the Kyoto Protocol in December, “With a sense of wonder we look at life on planet Earth. It is a miracle and a gift! We all share the responsibility of being conscious caretakers of this home of ours.”

b. Through Migration, Understanding a Church “on the Move”

On Fridays, the Holy Trinity church compound in Dubai is abuzz with worshippers from early morning until after nightfall. Over ten thousand members of more than 120 different Christian groups and congregations come here on the Emirates’ weekly day of rest.

Services in more than a dozen languages, including English and Arabic, and South Asian languages such as Urdu, Tagalog, Tamil or Malayam, fill not only the main church from 6 am to 11 pm, but twenty-five other halls built around a central courtyard, adorned with a Canterbury cross.
A vibrant church life may not be the first thing that comes to mind when thinking about the Gulf region, which is primarily Muslim. But in a way, the three to four million Christians in the region, almost all of whom came in search of work from around the globe, present a microcosm of Christianity and a challenge of church unity.

Migration is a fact of life all over the world, whether people are seeking safety, freedom, or a better life. Wherever it occurs, migration contributes to a more diverse religious presence in the countries concerned. Among Christians, that can also lead to tensions between the established churches in a country and the new migrant churches. “Why do migrants stay in migrant churches? Why don’t they go to mainline churches?” are central questions, says Sydia Nduna, WCC’s program executive for Migration and Social Justice.

A consultation in Palermo, Italy, in November addressed migration and the changing ecclesial landscape, touching on the essence of the church, as Nduna put it, “providing protection, identity, human dignity, self-esteem, and human worth.” This meeting was the first church consultation between mainline and migrant churches organized by the WCC in collaboration with the All Africa Conference of Churches, the Churches’ Commission for Migrants in Europe, and the Federation of Protestant Churches in Italy.

These issues of pastoral care have become one of the priorities of the Global Ecumenical Network on Migration, a WCC network that works closely with other church bodies to deepen understanding of migration issues such as racism, xenophobia, and the effect of migration on the understanding of the church. This understanding directs the churches as they seek to have more impact on global policy.

In Dubai, where a WCC delegation led by General Secretary Rev. Dr Samuel Kobia visited in April, the ecclesial and religious challenges of migration are stark. Referring to the churches built in the compounds jointly granted to several denominations, the chaplain appointed to care for the spiritual welfare of the expatriate Christians laments that they “are often built facing away from one another, when, in fact, each church could encourage the other.”

In his sermon at the Anglican Holy Trinity Church in Dubai, Kobia encouraged Christians to, in the words of the prophet Jeremiah, seek the welfare of the city where God has sent them into exile and reminded them of the biblical mandate “to open up … relationships so that we may move from being strangers to being neighbors.”

Amélé Akué, professor at the WCC’s Ecumenical Institute in Bossey, stated in Palermo, “A church of strangers and sojourners will understand itself as a church of people on the move, in which the otherness is not a motive for exclusion but a source of mutual growing in recognition and respect of the diverse versions of Christianity.”

7. Education and Ecumenical Formation

a. Real Life Faith and Study

When Angok Achuil was 11, he was recruited as a child soldier into the Sudan People’s Liberation Army. Since that time he has become an Anglican and a spiritual leader. Both of these experiences have profoundly affected his graduate studies at the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey. “It has been very emotional here,” he says. “It is really about issues of life, and not what I think about when coming and doing theology.”

In class discussions, students connect academic study with real experiences. Few, however, have the raw memories Angok has. “Like when we talk about water,” he says, “I know how many people have been killed because of water in our place, how many people have died because of hunger, because of drugs.”

Angok’s 2008 class at the Graduate School at the Ecumenical Institute had nineteen students from thirteen different countries. A quarter of the graduate students were women and about half of them came from Africa. Two master’s programs offered by the Institute have an additional nineteen students, with a rising number of women (now 40 percent). With students in residence at Bossey every day of the year, some of the most profound lessons come just from living and worshipping together.

“The first fascinating thing that caught my attention was during the orientation time,” says master’s student Emmanuel Babatunde Gbogboade from the Church of the Lord (Aladura) Worldwide in Nigeria. “They asked how we wanted to live in community…? This is a new community, how do we want to live?” Emmanuel applies this globally now: “Peace is possible if we respect one another and the talents of one another, not to be jealous of one another. As the world, how do we want to live?”

For Emmanuel, worshipping together was also a revelation, even though his church in Nigeria is already ecumenical in outlook. After participating in Orthodox services and sharing his own style of worship, he says, “I have a better understanding and value of how people worship their God.” And, he reflects, “God understands the way everyone worships.”
Angok says his experiences at Bossey have changed him completely. “I will not be going back as the same person,” he says. “I’ve discussed with many people—Orthodox, Catholic, and Pentecostal. You cannot know yourself… as the only way.”

His respect, though, is not limited to Christians alone. “When I go back, I will reflect a lot about what I can do, especially in my churches,” Angok says. “In my diocese, if we have Muslims, we can have dialogue with Muslims, not call them terrorists like we do. It is the same among the Christians, with the denominations. We have to have something in common as a people of God.”

b. Practicing Ecumenism: It’s a Way of Life

Sister Pina Sandu says that in her Orthodox monastery located in the mountains of Romania they practice touristic spirituality. With a resort built up around the monastery, like it or not the tourists “hear the bells, hear the services three times a day … they hear, they feel, they know that something is happening.” As a result, their curiosity leads them into the yard and the church—“small, sure steps towards something beautiful.”

Sister Pina and five other sisters—two each from Orthodox, Roman Catholic, and Protestant orders—are providing a similar but subtle radical witness at Bossey for students and visitors alike. The sisters live together, coordinate the worship and prayer life at the Ecumenical Institute, and participate in classes—while embodying a sense of spirituality in daily life.

Their presence alone, in their striking habits, is noticeable to all who use the Institute for meetings and events. Visitors come from church, development groups, and secular organizations like Rolex or the regional Swiss television company. All are invited to take part in the prayer life at the Institute.

But their main role over their year at Bossey is to provide pastoral support for the students. Rev. Emmanuel Twahirwa, a graduate student from the Anglican Church in Rwanda, appreciates their worship facilitation. “When you come, you find yourself lost in academic study and you may end up forgetting your spiritual life,” he says. “We have to balance the two.” Even more, he appreciates their presence: “Sisters from different denominations, living together—it is important for us to learn from them.”

The sisters themselves were uncertain how it would work living together. Sister Sperancia Mulashani Thadeo, from the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Tanzania, reflected that she had met other Roman Catholic sisters but could not imagine how it would work living with them. “I thought perhaps they would stay in other parts,” she says ruefully. The reality she found was that it is possible to live together. “The happiest of times is sharing about our life, what we are doing and our spiritual life.”

“For us,” says Ivy Athipozhiyil, a Dominican sister from India, “ecumenical spirituality is living together… We are sharing everything, laughing. This we offer, without knowing, to others, like the students. For them it is a sign.”

Maria Elena Romero Molina, a Missionary Dominican sister from Guatemala, states it most simply, “Ecumenism is not a concept. It is a way of life.”

Sister Pina reflects, “The motto of the life and work commission, back then, was ‘doctrine divides, service unites’.” Now, she states, “I could say doctrine divides, spirituality unites.”

8. Inter-Religious Dialogue and Cooperation

a. Encouraging Inter-religious Paths to Peace

“Our concerns are very much the same as yours,” a senior Buddhist leader told a WCC delegation visiting Sri Lanka in October. As a member of the Conference of Religions—a grouping of Buddhists, Hindus, Muslims, and Christians in the country—he has been an advocate for a political solution to the protracted ethnic conflict there.

Yet not all Buddhists support this approach. One of the highest ranking Buddhist leaders in Sri Lanka, Udugama Sri Buddhharakkhita Mahanayaka Thero of the Asgiriya chapter, supports the government’s military intervention. He told the delegation, “It is the government’s duty to suppress and overpower the misguided [Tamil militant] groups and protect the civilians” against terrorist activities. “As religious leaders,” he said, “we will never tell the government to shy away from its duty to protect the civilians.”

In countries such as Sri Lanka, religious identity often becomes entangled with ethnic identity, and religious people of all faiths can become polarized. In the program activity, Accompanying Churches in Conflict Situations, the WCC seeks ways to encourage religious leaders and communities to come together for dialogue and seek justice and peace together.

Such an approach is critical in places like Pakistan where Christians make up a tiny minority of a population that is 95 percent Muslim. Political, religious, and economic barriers are compounded when Christian identity is linked with the Western world. Events such as the U.S. invasion of Iraq and the publishing of inflammatory cartoons in Europe resulted in violence against Christians in Pakistan.
“You people sneeze in the West and we get a cold,” Bishop Munawar K. Rumalshah, from the Church of Pakistan, told a Living Letters team from the WCC.

“Living Letters” are small international ecumenical teams traveling to locations around the world where Christians strive to overcome violence. Such teams, in addition to other visiting delegations such as the one to Sri Lanka led by WCC General Secretary Rev. Dr Samuel Kobia, discuss how churches can help ease political and religious tensions. The visits provide tangible solidarity to the churches. They also provide an opportunity to build new relationships while strengthening existing ones with other religious communities. They encourage working together to seek just and peaceful ways of conflict resolution and reconciliation.

b. Women Promote Peace through Religion

While the WCC encouraged inter-religious dialogue in places of conflict, another form of dialogue took place in Gothenburg, Sweden during 2008. In September, twenty-five women from Iran, U.S.A., Pakistan, Senegal, Palestine, Sweden, and other European countries met to discuss the role of women in inter-religious dialogue. They exchanged experiences with Swedish families and local Christian-Muslim women’s groups in an effort to strengthen the capacity of women for peace-making.

“The dialogue in this meeting makes us all understand the issues we face as women,” stated Bibifatemeh Mousavi Nezhad, director of the Iranian Institute for Inter-Religious Dialogue (IID). “This not only affects the work we do back home, but influences the way we initiate dialogue in our own countries and communities,” she said. This journey of women working together for peace through dialogue began in 2007 in Tehran when the IID hosted the first meeting of this project. The event was co-organized with the WCC. The women involved came from diverse backgrounds. They are policy makers, journalists, educators, doctors, NGO workers, religious scholars, and filmmakers. Their common perspective as women strongly influenced how the meeting addressed issues hindering peacemaking in communities and societies.

“Being women influences the way we communicate with each other,” said Catherine Oberg-Sadjedi, an American with both Christian and Muslim roots. “Women do speak differently when we are alone together and we tend to approach the issues from a cultural and social aspect as well. We are able to share about the problems that concern us and initiate dialogue in a unique way.”

“Dialogue in this event has made us learn from each other, educate ourselves, and listen to the diverse voices,” said Lily Habash, a Christian from Palestine. “This can be called a first step in peacemaking, where dialogue creates a deeper understanding of how we understand the ‘other.’”

“Breaking the barriers through interfaith dialogue makes us realize that we can accept the ‘others,’ and [that] we are not the only ones with the ‘truth,’” Habash said.

The exchanges at this meeting enabled the group to build a network of Christian and Muslim women who can strengthen community projects and bring new methodologies for building interfaith understanding at the grassroots level. The network is now involved in three projects—an educational booklet on methodologies on inter-religious dialogue from the perspective of Christian and Muslim women; a Web site and documentary to share information, best practices, and connect with a wider audience and women’s groups; and a national effort in Iran that uses WCC resources in an effort to work with religious groups on HIV and AIDS.

However, it is perhaps at the personal level where inter-religious dialogue and encounter has its strongest effect. In such cases, women have been empowered to play a more effective role in the religious debate of their own communities.

Reflecting on her painful experience of the occupation of Palestine, Habash states, “I can tell that my country is a land of people and not stones. If there is a hope for peace, women are in a significant position to influence that process along with men.”

RE: "CHRISTIANS AND JEWS: PEOPLE OF GOD"
AN EXAMPLE OF OCCUPATION THEOLOGY

The 216th General Assembly (2004) directed that "formation of a Worldwide Ministries Division-related Palestine Mission Network...for the purpose of creating currents of wider and deeper Presbyterian involvement with Palestinian partners, aimed at demonstrating solidarity and changing the conditions that erode the humanity of Palestinians." It is with this mandate in mind that we respond to the report before you, Christians and Jews: People of God.

The Israel-Palestine Mission Network (IPMN) has had very little time to examine the report, Christians and Jews: People of God, because the drafting process was confidential and the vetting process very limited. Since the document was made public on February 4, we have only had time to prepare an initial response, which follows.

There is much that we affirm in this report.

- We appreciate the call to "reject...anti-Semitism and all the stereotypes and prejudices that accompany it." (p. 13) As we said in Steadfast Hope: The Palestinian Quest for Just Peace, this includes charges that Jews are Christ-killers (delicide) and that the New Covenant in Christ negates the covenant God made with the Israelites (supersessionism).

- Likewise, we affirm the call to recognize the Old Testament as Christian scripture and intimate on-going connection between Jews and Christians.

- In addition, we applaud the recognition that both the Israeli and Palestinian peoples have a right to secure homelands and that God’s promises to ancient Israel cannot serve as the basis for contemporary land claims by Israeli settlers in the occupied Palestinian territories or by the state of Israel.

In spite of these very positive elements, the overall impression we have is that this document represents what has been called "Occupation Theology." This applies to both what is said in the document and what is left unsaid. The political effect of Christians and Jews is that it will justify Israel’s military occupation and minimize its effect on Palestinians.

This document quotes the 1987 report, “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship between Christians and Jews,” which states: “Theology is never done in a vacuum. It influences and is influenced by its context.” A central element of our context today is the pressure on the churches from American Jewish religious and secular organizations to stop criticizing Israel and provide uncritical support of Israel. Christians and Jews appears to be a response to that pressure.

Fatal Flaws:

It is with heavy heart that we identify some fatal flaws in this document.

- The Separation of Theology and Justice
  One of the hallmarks of Presbyterian and Reformed theology is the unity of theology and ethics. This report lacks that unity. Christians and Jews is based on a faulty analysis of the situation in Israel-Palestine. The report reduces the cause of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict to “incompatible historical narratives and political claims” and limits the description of the conflict to “a sustained cycle of violence.” The origins and history of the conflict, the United Nations resolutions regarding the conflict, the U.S. vetoes of U.N. Security Council resolutions, and the ongoing breach of international law and human rights that has characterized the conflict are passed over in silence, as if this had nothing to do with Jewish-Christian relations in the contemporary world.

Nothing is said about the nature of the military occupation, the ongoing blockade of Gaza, or Israel’s 2008-2008 war on Gaza and the crimes against humanity that were reported in the Goldstone Report. (See Kairos Palestine, section 1. “The reality on the ground” for a description of life under military occupation.)
By neglecting the reality on the ground, this report would "make nice" with certain American Jewish organizations to avoid unwarranted charges of anti-Semitism. These are the organizations that have provided financial and political support for the Israeli occupation and colonization of Palestinian lands since 1948, and used threat and intimidation to censor debate about Israel within and without the Jewish community. A report that confesses Christian guilt for the past and calls for changes in our theology and practice but neglects to mention the contribution of American synagogues to the oppression of Palestinians over the past six decades appears to us as inauthentic interfaith dialogue.

Why this separation between theology and ethics? During the February 17 "webinar" discussion of Christians and Jews, the question was asked: does this report deal with the issue of divestment? One presenter replied, "No. We don't deal with these issues here." The other presenter added, "These are theological papers. These papers are not about the Middle East conflict." By neglecting the "elephant in the room" this report makes no attempt to deal theologically with the ongoing confiscation of Palestinian land, the ongoing ethnic cleansing of Palestinians, and the contribution of the Israeli lobby and the U.S. government to these actions.

- A House Divided Against Itself?
  Since 1948 the PC(USA) has passed resolutions strongly supporting the right of Israel to exist within the internationally recognized pre-1967 borders and emphatically condemning violence against civilians by all parties. The church affirms that Israel and all nations have the right to provide security for their citizens by taking appropriate measures that are consistent with international law.
  Our Church has also strongly supported the right of Palestinians to an independent and sovereign state within the pre-1967 borders, the right of return of refugees or a negotiated compensation, the removal of all illegal Israeli settlements in occupied Palestinian territories or a negotiated and fair swap of land, a shared Jerusalem, an end to Israel's military occupation of Palestinian territories, either the total removal of the Separation Wall or the removal of those portions of the Wall that are on Palestinian land, and equal rights for Palestinians who are citizens of Israel.

While the existence of GA statements on Israel-Palestine is mentioned in passing in Christians and Jews, the specific positions of the GA are passed over in silence. Statements like "both peoples have claims on the same land," and "critical questions such as ending the occupation of Palestinian territory by Israel or the future of Jerusalem are complex and difficult" give the impression that because Israel has taken more Palestinian land and built more illegal settlements, things have changed or become more difficult, so that maybe the PC(USA) should reconsider its previous statements in light of the current facts on the ground.

Palestinians will certainly consider any weakening of the GA statements as another nail in their coffin. They will also be confounded by a report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that discusses Jewish-Christian relationships in today's world without taking into account how those relationships affect their very survival in the Holy Land.

Thus, the question arises, is the PC(USA) a house divided against itself in which world mission (and the mission networks), social witness policy, peacemaking, and racial ethnic ministries are on one team and interfaith relations, theology and worship, and evangelism are on an opposing team?

- "A worldwide increase in Anti-Jewish Rhetoric and Actions" (p. 2)
  This statement needs to be contextualized. This "anti-Jewish rhetoric" does not arise out of a vacuum, or some inchoate reservoir of anti-Semitism. In fact, the case can be made that it is a reaction to the actions of the state of Israel. And that this is related to the American Middle East wars, which, combined with the U.S. defense of Israel internationally, fuels anti-Jewish stereotypes and some classic anti-Semitic beliefs.

- Jarring Metaphors
  This report makes use of two New Testament metaphors to describe the theological relationship between Christians and Jews: "...to share the rich root of the olive tree..." (Romans 11:17) (p. 3) and "...and has broken down the dividing wall of hostility." (Ephesians 2:14) (p. 6). In the present context, the use of these metaphors is jarring—even offensive—unless reference is also made to the way in which actual relationships in the Holy Land deny this theological affirmation. Since 1967 Israel has uprooted over one and a quarter million Palestinian olive trees; since 2002 Israel has constructed a 25-foot high Separation Barrier which has been condemned by the International Court of Justice.

- "The same God"

1 The package (a bomb?) sent to 100 Witherspoon St in 2004, the fire in a Rochester church, the picketing of the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship event at GA when Professor Norman Finkelstein was a featured speaker, and the many visits of teams of Jewish neighbors to local Presbyterian churches are examples of these tactics. This type of censorship and intimidation is so frequent that Jewish Voice for Peace has created a special website to document it. See www.muzziewatch.com/.
Christians and Jews uses selected texts in the Old Testament and in Romans 9-11 to affirm the continuity of Jewish and Christian faith. It declares that both are "People of God" and "serve and worship the same God." (p. 4) While much is said about the differences between Christian and Muslim understandings of God in the report entitled "Toward an Understanding of Christian-Muslim Relations," nothing is said in Christians and Jews about the differences between Christian and Jewish understandings of God. The rest of the New Testament is strangely absent from this report, as if giving an account for the hope that is within us is important in dealing with Muslims but inappropriate in dealing with Jews. Nowhere do we find anything about Christmas (the Incarnation), Lent and Easter (Christ's suffering, death, and resurrection) or Pentecost, which sends us into the world in mission. The Christian understanding of divine suffering is also absent, along with the command to love our enemies and eschew revenge.

The significant differences between Jewish and Christian understandings of God are glossed over in Christians and Jews, whereas the differences between Muslim and Christian understandings of God are highlighted in the report on Christian-Muslim relations. Muslims who compare the titles of the two reports may conclude that we believe they worship a lesser God than Christians and Jews.

- Biblical claims to land
  At crucial points in the discussion of the biblical promise of land, reference to the military occupation is particularly called for. For example: "In the Scriptural account, the land is integral to the responsibility of God's people. The land is given not just as a place to live, but primarily as the place in which the people Israel can live out the covenant and carry out God's commandments. The concrete gift of land, as presented in the biblical text, comes less with rights than with distinctive responsibilities. The gift of the land is conditional upon the following of God's way." (p. 9) "God has given the land as a trust for safekeeping, a place for responsibility, and an arena in which to deal justly with one another and with the land." (Exodus 19:5) (p. 11)

The absence of any reference to Israeli laws, policies, and practices which contradict these biblical passages decontextualizes the discussion of relationships between Christians and Jews in the U.S. and the role that these relationships have played in supporting injustice in the Holy Land.

On page 9 of this report the Christian Old Testament scholar Walter Brueggemann is quoted in support of Jewish biblical claims to land. The quotation is from The Land, first published in 1977. Brueggemann has since changed his position. In his preface to Mark Braverman's new book, Fatal Embrace: Christians, Jews, and the Search for Peace in the Holy Land, Brueggemann writes:

It is Israel's elemental conviction about being God's one chosen people—and the ensuing social-political exceptionality—that is the root cause of the conflict....The claim for exceptionalism—held commonly by Israel's most one-dimensional advocates and by Israel's most urbane Jewish critics—makes serious, realistic political thinking impossible and gives warrant for brutalizing policies carried out by the Israeli government that are destructive, self-destructive, and finally irresponsible. (p. xiii)

Brueggemann continues:

When I published my book, The Land: Place as Gift, Promise, and Challenge in Biblical Faith (1977), I was, as were many Christian scholars of the Bible, rather innocent about the extrapolation of the land promises into Israeli ideology....in the newer edition of my book (2002), I made an important revision, concluding: "It is clear on any reading that the modern state of Israel has effectively merged old traditions of land entitlement and the most vigorous military capacity thinkable for a modern state. The outcome of that merger of old traditional claim and contemporary military capacity becomes an intolerable commitment to violence that is justified by reasons of state." (p. xvii)

While Christians and Jews cites Old Testament texts of God's promise of land, it neglects the silence of the New Testament on this subject. Neither Jesus, nor Paul, nor any other New Testament writer has anything to say about God's promises of land to Abraham and his descendants. When Paul speaks about this, it is in the context of faith and the spiritual descendants of Abraham, both Jew and Gentile. Paul demonstrates a new understanding of the Old Testament promise by replacing the word "land" with "world." ("The promise to Abraham and his descendants, that they should inherit the world (cosmos)..." (Rm. 4:13) A promise to "inherit the world," is spiritual, not a real estate deed.

- Biblical interpretation
  We celebrate that Jewish and Christian biblical interpreters have used historical critical methods to call into question the validity of anti-Jewish texts in the New Testament, e.g., texts that have given rise to charges of decide and supersessionism. To do so is to act justly. At the same time, we believe it is necessary to use historical critical methods to call into question biblical texts in Genesis, Deuteronomy, and Joshua that are used to support the Israeli treatment of Palestinians within Israel and in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. This too is to act justly. The section on Land appears to accept the Old Testament texts at face value, using terms like "in the biblical account," rather than subjecting them to a critique based on justice. What is called for is a consistent hermeneutic for both the Old Testament and the New Testament that is consistent with the confessions and the statements of the General Assemblies of the Church.

- Palestinian cruciform interpretation of their suffering and death

  Christians and Jews states: "Some expressions of Christian liberation theology tend to describe the Palestinian experience as oppression by "Jews" or "Zionists" rather than by Israeli state authority..." (p. 14). We believe this statement is inaccurate. Palestinian theologians do compare their situation under Israeli military occupation to the Roman occupation under which the Jews of Jesus' time suffered grave injustices. From what we have read and heard, Palestinian Christians level their criticisms at the Israeli state, those who carry out Israeli policies, and those forms of Zionism which fuel the occupation and the ongoing "ethnic cleansing." Palestinians have many Israeli Jewish allies in the peace and human rights movements. Never have we heard any of those Jews criticize Palestinian theologies for targeting Jews indiscriminately. Nor have we ever read or heard of any Palestinian "...theological critique of state policies...[that]...characterize[s] a whole people as oppressors or "Christ-killers."" (p. 14)

  Christians and Jews also criticizes theologians who "... liken the passion of Jesus to the sufferings of the Palestinian people." (p. 14). There are theologians who make the reverse comparison: they liken the sufferings of the Palestinian people to the passion of Jesus. We fail to understand why this is a problem. Oppressed Christians in every place and every age have identified with the suffering of Christ. In fact, the Lord's Supper immerses us in the passion and crucifixion of Jesus who urges us to "do this in remembrance of me." For many Christians throughout the ages, being "crucified with Christ" was a physical experience, not a metaphor. In the Palestinian situation where land confiscation, imprisonment, torture, home demolition, and all the evils of a military occupation is a part of everyday life, it would be very surprising if Christians did not identify with the crucified Christ.

- Zionism

  Christians and Jews rightly cautions against the portrayal of Zionism as "monolithic or univocal." What the report fails to recognize is that expansionist forms of political and religious Zionism have been major ideological forces behind the confiscation of Palestinian land and the ethnic cleansing of Palestinians by every Israeli administration since 1948. The literature on this subject is vast and the reality undeniable. The push by the current government of Netanyahu for recognition of Israel as a "Jewish state" is one example of this ideology.

Conclusion

Many of the flaws cited above could have been avoided if the process of preparing this report had avoided two pitfalls.

- A Tightly Managed Process

  Normally, reports dealing with such important issues are done by appointed committees with representation from all segments of the church. Various drafts of the report are circulated widely for comment and the names of their members are included with the report. In contrast, this report, and its companion paper, Toward an Understanding of Christian-Muslim Relations, were not widely circulated and were kept confidential until the very last moment. Those involved in the process of creating Christians and Jews remain anonymous.

- Absent Partners

  Normally, those who will be affected most by a report are part of the process of writing and editing. As far as we know, none of the following were consulted: the Middle East Caucus; Church leaders from Palestine or any other part of the Middle East; members of the Advisory Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns; the IPMN (with the exception of one member); members of the Middle East Study Group.

4 Chapter 1 of Jeff Halper's book, An Israeli in Palestine (2008) examines various forms of Zionism and Zionist groups, from liberal to conservative. The common denominator of most forms of Zionism is the demand for a Jewish State. As the past six decades have demonstrated, this ideology, when put into practice, has resulted in on-going ethnic cleansing and legally sanctioned discrimination against non-Jews.

December 20, 2006

I want you to know that I was able to represent you all at the funeral service on Wednesday, December 13, for Associate Pastor John Patterson at Cherry Hills Community Church in Highlands Ranch, Colorado. Several thousand people attended this service of remembrance and celebration of John’s life, ministry and resurrection victory in Jesus Christ. Please continue to remember Cherry Hills and John’s family (Mary Ellen and Elizabeth, Laura, John and Will) in your prayers. John and I first met twenty years ago. He is one of the most engaging, likeable servants of Christ I’ve ever known. A “Remembrance” of John is found on the Cherry Hills church website, www.cherrylhills.com.

Thanks to many of you for your responses to my inquiry about blogging. Because of your help, I’ll be doing further research in the coming weeks with a much better sense of direction and understanding.

I can identify personally with the fact that the 21st century is a time of rapid change. It was just four months ago that I told the Session of First EPC that I believed God was calling me to take the Stated Clerk position. I finished in Renton on October 7 and started in Detroit on October 9. I took over for Mike on November 7. Having been immersed in this new, different and exciting ministry for about sixty days, let me share with you these thoughts about changes we’re in the midst of, and the opportunity I believe Jesus Christ could have for us in these changes.

I see two momentous changes occurring in American Christianity. First, the continued break-up of the mainline denominations. In the PCUSA, their 2006 General Assembly produced two watershed events: (1) a report recommending the adoption of heterodox Trinitarian language. Though not approved, its use was not discouraged; (2) the approved Peace, Unity and Purity (PUP) report effectively allows churches and presbyteries to ordain homosexuals to the offices of the church. As a result, many churches and pastors who identify themselves as Bible-believing evangelicals are looking to depart from the PCUSA.

Second is the rise in new ways of doing ministry. During the EPC Stated Clerk search process, Luder Whitlock was the first person who made me aware of the “third wave” of American Christianity. The first wave was the establishment and hegemony of the mainline protestant denominations. The second wave was post-World War II evangelicalism. At the local church level, the second wave distinguished itself from the first wave on theology. However, it maintained the same forms, structures and ways of doing ministry as the first wave. The third wave, while adhering to biblically-based, orthodox theology, has scrapped the forms and structures of the first two waves, and has pursued entirely new and different ways to think about and do ministry for Jesus Christ.

I believe that in this point in our history, God has strategically placed the EPC to respond to the opportunity these changes represent. We are unapologetically confessional and reformed in a moderate way. We are not “loosey goosy” in our theology, nor do we beat each other over the head over disagreements on the finer points of our theology.

Speaking to the second change, almost everyone I’ve talked with recently within the EPC recognizes that in the United States, the church no longer ministers in a church-culture. Our local community is now every bit as much a mission field as Third World areas. EPC churches large and small, traditional and contemporary, rural, suburban and urban are struggling with and seeking the Lord’s direction as to what it means to be the church in anunchurched culture. We’re doing “third wave” thinking and beginning to act on that thinking as we move our churches into the 21st century. Some of our churches are further along than others, but we’re all on the same path. The Long Range Planning committee is working hard to help redirect our church ministries to more effectively serve and share Jesus Christ in this new era.

I believe the Lord has given us a tremendous opportunity to re-capture the great priorities of the church of Jesus Christ in American Presbyterianism. We are placed in a very attractive position to gather and help create a new, re-energized evangelical and Presbyterian entity that could make a major impact for Jesus Christ in the 21st century, far out of proportion to our impact today. The Parable of the Mustard Seed comes to mind immediately as I consider the possibilities before us. Today, we are indeed small, but could it be that before us is the opportunity for an impact for Christ incredibly out of proportion to our size in our country and world? I believe so.

Two ways we’re taking advantage of this opportunity are (1) the transitional presbytery proposal our leadership has been developing since September, and (2) our conversations with the leadership of the New Wineskins.

1. Transitional presbytery/presbyteries

219TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2010)
While this proposal has not been finalized, I can give you this overview. The transitional presbytery (or presbyteries—we may need more than one), if approved at our 2007 General Assembly, will allow churches interested in coming into the EPC to find a safe haven outside their current denomination as quickly and as easily as possible. The transitional presbytery will be non-geographic, and will exist for five years. During this five-year period, the church can “heal” from its departure, assess who they are and the future the Lord has for them, and learn about who we are. This five-year period also gives us time to learn about them and whether they would be a good fit for us. We’ve repeatedly described our relationship with churches in the transitional presbytery as a “courtship.” When the church is ready to seek admission as a full member of the EPC, it would pursue the currently established process to receive new churches (which helps maintain our theological integrity). If it does not look like we would be a good “match,” we would work together to accomplish an amicable departure. A church in a transitional presbytery can seek to enter the EPC at any time within the five-year period. Please note that the transitional presbytery does not prevent a church from entering the EPC directly from another denomination. Some of our presbyteries are currently working to receive individual congregations who want to merge now.

2. New Wineskins

New Wineskins is a group of 148 PCUSA churches that has been talking since 2002 about their concerns for the PCUSA. (I’d note that there are many other churches interested in the New Wineskins who are not formal members.) They are very interested in the possibility of becoming a part of the EPC. As we’ve become better acquainted, we’ve discovered some remarkable similarities. The New Wineskins have indicated that their doctrinal and confessional commitments are similar to ours. The New Wineskins are talking about reforming how they do ministry in ways that are very similar to the deliberations of our Long Range Planning Committee, and conversations I’m having with you. (If you’re interested in learning more about New Wineskins, they are easily found on the internet: www.newwineconv.org.)

On December 12–13, Nate Atwood, Paul Heidebrecht, Bill Meyer, Bill Vogler and I met with New Wineskins leaders in Tampa, Florida to discuss further the possibility of proceeding together into the future. You should be proud of the way Nate, Paul, Bill and Bill represented you in that meeting, which was successful in every way. Because of the hostile environment evangelical pastors and churches currently face in the PCUSA, at their request we cannot divulge much information about that meeting to you at this time. The CoA, Executive Committee and Stated Clerks are aware of these developments. In January, I hope to provide a report of that meeting and the ensuing plan. I anticipate that as a group, a portion of the New Wineskins will want to become a transitional presbytery, should we approve the transitional presbytery proposal at our 27th Assembly in Colorado.

How will we respond to these changes, these opportunities? My hope is that we will prayerfully pursue Jesus Christ as He leads us, we’ll be open to how and where He leads us, and we’ll converse regularly among ourselves about our dreams, goals and hopes for the church we serve. I’ve appreciated the chance to respond to questions and concerns that many of you have raised. Please know I’m committed to serving you in a way that honors Christ and furthers the great work you are doing for your Lord.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)
OFFICE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

January 29, 2007

The Reverend Jeffery Jeremiah
Stated Clerk of the General Assembly
Evangelical Presbyterian Church
17197 N. Laurel Park Dr., Suite 567
Livonia, MI 48152

Dear Jeff:

Greetings in the name of our Lord.

I still look forward to an opportunity for us to meet face to face, but even prior to that time I need to seek clarification from you about several issues related to EPC's proposed "transitional presbytery" and how that might relate to our churches seeking to be dismissed to the EPC through that presbytery. I obviously wish we were not dealing with these issues of division, but since we are, I hope we can do it in ways that do not damage the relationships between the PCUSA and the EPC.

After your December 20, 2007 letter appeared on the EPC's Web site our offices began to get inquiries as to the protocol of our Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) presbyteries transferring congregations to your proposed "transitional presbyteries." As I am sure you recall our polity limits our presbyteries to dismissing member congregations to ecclesiastical bodies "whose organization is conformed to the doctrines and order of this Church." We have always considered the Evangelical Presbyterian Church and its geographical presbyteries to fall into that definition.

We are being asked by our presbyteries to give them advice as to the polity propriety of transferring PCUSA congregations and pastors into a transitional "Presbytery." Given the church case law made in the Presbyterian Church, U.S. at the creation of the Presbyterian Church in America, there are a number of unanswered questions in the current context. Therefore I am hopeful that you can provide me with some clarity as to EPC's understanding of a "transitional presbytery."

When will the transitional presbytery be created?

What will be the relationship of a transitional presbytery to the EPC?

Will it be treated as a member presbytery? (power to ordain, receive, and discipline ministers, create new congregations, assess apportionments, release congregations).
The Reverend Jeffrey Jeremiah
January 29, 2007

Will current EPC presbyteries be able to transfer congregations into a transitional presbytery?

What Office would act to receive congregations into transitional presbyteries?

Will congregations simultaneously be members of a geographical EPC presbytery and a transitional presbytery?

Will there be separate admission standards, or will the transitional presbytery accept the examination of the transferring presbyteries?

I am hopeful that you can give my offices some clarity that we may provide advice to our presbyteries in responding to requests to dismiss congregations and ministers to a transitional presbytery.

Cordially yours,

Clifton Kirkpatrick

Dear Jeff:

Thank you for your recent letter providing additional information about the proposal to create a Transitional Presbytery in the Evangelical Presbyterian Church. I do understand that this proposal will be subject to further development, and I will appreciate receiving a copy of the finalized, or penultimate, version once you deem it to be appropriate. It will be helpful to both of us to be very clear about the nature of the presbytery to which some or all of our churches may be seeking to be dismissed, and our Advisory Committee on the Constitution will need this as they prepare to our Assembly how to respond to questions of constitutional interpretation that are already pending on this matter.

I appreciate your commitment to maintain good relations between our two denominations and not to actively encourage churches within the PCUSA to withdraw to the Evangelical Presbyterian Church. However, I am having a difficult time explaining this to many of our members when you and your moderator actively participate in events planned by those whose stated purpose is to withdraw from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

For the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) there is not a detailed process in our Constitution for the dismissal of congregations to another denomination. What is clear is that that action can only be taken by one of our presbyteries and that such a dismissal must be to another Reformed body of similar organization and doctrine. I am enclosing for your information a document entitled, “Dealing Pastorally with Troubled Churches,” which makes suggestions to our presbyteries in dealing with these matters.

May God’s richest blessings be with you during this season of Lent and may you find special joy in the Resurrection this Easter Sunday!

Dear Clifton,

I read with interest your interview that appeared in the Christian Post. Congratulations on the recent arrival of your newest grandchild!

As I respond to your letter of January 29, I'm afraid that I'm not able to answer all of your questions at this time. This is because the Transitional Presbytery proposal is still "in process." After the Committee on Administration approved the proposal and the Permanent Judicial Commission ruled that it was constitutional, we sent it to our presbyteries for their suggestions/questions during the January-February meeting cycle. Having received really good input, we're now engaged in a further development/refinement of the proposal. After Easter, the Committee on Administration will approve the finalized version of the proposal and it will then be reviewed by our Permanent Judicial Commission. I am confident that I can answer your questions after that review.

The questions I can answer: If the Transitional Presbytery proposal is approved,

1. The Transitional Presbytery will be created by an Act of the General Assembly at our June, 2007 meeting
2. The Commission that oversees the Transitional Presbytery will receive congregations and ministers into the Transitional Presbytery.
3. The Transitional Presbytery will accept the examination of the transferring presbyteries, with two additional requirements: 1) affirmation of the "Essentials of the Faith" without reservation, 2) affirmation that the Westminster Confession of Faith is the sole confessional standard.

Let me re-iterate that the Transitional Presbytery proposal is the EPC response to churches that have approached us about the possibility of affiliating with the EPC. While this proposal is an exception to our past practice, we are working within the boundaries of our constitutional "norm," as stated in our Book of Government. We do not solicit, recruit or initiate contact with churches outside our denomination about affiliation. Although I have yet to see it in print, in all of my interviews I have made clear my goal to maintain cordial relations with you and the PCUSA.

Our desire is to enable a reception of churches that is amicable and honors our Lord. I know you are seeking a dismissal of churches that is the same. I'd like to dialogue with you about these unanswered questions you have to ensure we have the best opportunity to meet our goals, which I believe will glorify Christ and advance His kingdom work in this first decade of the 21st century. In preparation for that conversation, it would be most helpful to me if I knew the details of the process of dismissal you are directing from your office.

Sincerely in Christ,

Dr. Jeffrey Jeremiah

Dear Dr. Jeremiah:

Greetings in the name of our Lord and Savior!

The Presbytery of Indian Nations received the Reverend Mateen A. Ellass as minister member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). When a minister from another denomination seeks membership in one of our presbyteries we require a letter of good standing and removal from the rolls of the sending church. Reverend Ellass took a call in the year 2000 as pastor of the Immanuel Presbyterian Church (EPC) in Illinois. His process to become a minister member of the Presbytery of Indian Nations is subject to his transfer from the Evangelical Presbyterian Church.

I'm cordially requesting, on behalf of the Presbytery of Indian Nations, a letter that attest that the Reverend Mateen A. Ellass is a minister in good standing, and will be removed from the roles of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church.

May God richly bless you and the witness of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church.

Cordially yours,

Clifton Kirkpatrick

Dear Dr. Martin,

Thank you for your letter of September 24, which was received by my office, directed to our Committee on Administration and discussed on October 15.

You are correct in noting that we relate to one another through our memberships in the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC). However, we have never understood that this relationship means that our reception of churches into the EPC is conditioned upon any dispute a church might have with the denomination from which it has departed. The EPC does not recruit, solicit, seek out or initiate contact with any church outside our denomination. We take calls and offer help to churches that first seek us out, which is what Grace Chapel did. The National Transition Presbytery received their application for membership, found it in good order, and received the church and its pastor into the Presbytery. Having reviewed this process, the Committee on Administration does not believe that we have made an error in taking this action:
Grace Chapel EPC is a member in good standing in the EPC.

While we are pleased to provide you this response, it is not our practice to have our General Assembly respond to enquiries from presbyteries of other denominations. Any further correspondence about Grace Chapel EPC should be directed to John Adamson, chair of the National Transition Presbytery.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey Jeremiah

Re: October 23, 2007 to Arthur Martin

Dear Dr. Jeremiah:

I am troubled by the second paragraph of that letter where you represent that: “The EPC does not recruit, solicit, seek out or initiate contact with any church outside our denomination.”

I do not believe this to be an accurate statement. At the New Wineskin’s gatherings in Tulsa and in Orlando, your GA Moderator and other GA level officers were present and doing exactly such solicitation. I am in possession of a very slick folder entitled “Information for Inquiring Congregations” which actually questions the actions of our 217th General Assembly in Birmingham. That folder contains CD’s with forms and applications for admission.

Finally, the EPC’s 217th General Assembly took action to create a New Wineskins Transitional Presbytery to receive PCUSA congregations into the EPC. These are not actions consistent with your statement.

I have several times requested that you and I sit down and discuss this situation and reiterate that request today. This situation is destruction to US based members of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

I hope to hear a substantive response.

Dear Jeff:

May this Advent Season be a time of hope and renewal for you!

As you know, the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its related authoritative interpretations make provision for PC(USA) presbyteries to dismiss congregations to another Reformed body of similar doctrine and organization. A number of congregations have been transferred in accord with our Constitution to presbyteries of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC) in the past year. However, in recent months the Office of the General Assembly has received complaints from our presbyteries concerning the reception of congregations and ministers by the EPC prior to Constitutional release by PC(USA) presbyteries. We have also received information that Evangelical Presbyterian Church representatives have been actively recruiting, seeking, and initiating contact with PC(USA) congregations to encourage their leaving this denomination.

Both practices are contrary to the principles and expectations of our respective Books of Order.

I am writing to request that your office advise your presbyteries – including the transitional presbytery – they should abide by the processes in our Books of Order.

If this pattern continues unabated, I expect one or more of our presbyteries will overture the 218th General Assembly of the PC(USA) next summer, requesting that the assembly examine the basis of the PC(USA)'s relationship with the Evangelical Presbyterian Church. Such examination might well result in the 218th General Assembly taking action that would adversely affect the relationship between our two communions and the possibility of being able to transfer congregations between our presbyteries in the future. You may be aware that just over thirty years ago, the 199th General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America considered just such an action.

Dear Jeff:

As we begin a new year, I wish you God’s blessings on your ministry.

I am in receipt of your December 18 response to my letter, for which I am grateful. However, I continue to be concerned about the dynamics between our two denominations.

You note that you received my letter on November 30, 2007. In the two weeks that followed the receipt of my letter, I received strong expressions of concern from two of our presbyteries about your “presenting” the Evangelical Presbyterian Church to PC(USA) congregations in Florida and Kansas, both of which also had an abundant of interpretive material that had obviously been provided to encourage them to seek transfer to the EPC. That kind of activity, exacerbated by EPC presbyteries “receiving” congregations that have not been dismissed by PC(USA) presbyteries is simply creating a climate of distrust that is helpful to neither of our denominations.

My concern was heightened dramatically when my office received a draft overture asking the 218th General Assembly (2008) to withdraw “in correspondence” rights and privileges from the EPC. I do not know whether such an overture would pass the General Assembly, but it is the first time in my service the prospect has ever been seriously raised as a possibility. The impact of such an overture, if passed, would be that our presbyteries would be prohibited from being able to dismiss congregations to the EPC, and that would not be good for either of us.

Jeff, we have been down this road before in the relationship between our two denominations, and we need to learn from those experiences. Following the reunion of the PC(USA), we moved to a period of better relations between our two denominations. I still remember fondly your predecessor, Ed Davis, joining us as a very helpful ecumenical delegate to our General Assembly in Charlotte. While there will undoubtedly be tensions between some of our churches, I hope we can find a path to deal with one another as entities that respect the integrity of each other’s order and ministry.

I do believe there is value in our meeting together, but even if that does not happen, I hope that we would at least be able to “speak the truth in love” to one another and to respect each other’s governing bodies as fellow members of the body of Christ. To let these circumstances continue to escalate is not likely to advance the mission of either of our denominations.

Dear Clifton,

While Ms. Brooks emailed me your November 30 letter, I was not able to review it until Tuesday, December 11. The contents and tone of your letter require a response.

You allege that “EPC representatives have been actively recruiting, seeking, and initiating contacts with PC(USA) congregations to encourage their leaving this denomination.” In the EPC, we do not solicit, initiate contact or recruit churches and leaders outside our denomination. We do respond to enquiries and accept invitations from the elected leadership of local churches to answer questions about, and present the Evangelical Presbyterian Church to them. I would appreciate substantiation of this allegation so that we can adequately respond to it. If no substantiation is forthcoming, a retraction is expected.

You also state that we are receiving congregations prior to “constitutional release” by their PCUSA presbytery. We have received churches and ministers pending their dismissal from the PCUSA, in part because past history tells us that some PCUSA presbyteries will not dismiss until after we’ve taken action to show that the way is clear for the minister and/or congregation to be received.

Your letter gives the impression that it is actions of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church that are causing churches to depart the PCUSA. This is simply not true. Again, we are simply responding to leaders and congregations who are finding it increasingly difficult to remain in the PCUSA.

It would be helpful to me if you could respond to these issues of concern before I consider meeting with you. Much has happened since I offered to meet with you in Seattle over Thanksgiving weekend of 2007. I hope these concerns can be addressed and resolved.

Dear Clifton,

I am in receipt of your letter of January 3, which I received in the office on January 10. I was disappointed to find that incorrect information about the ministry of the EPC is being used in a way that can only produce dissension and potential division in the relationship between the EPC and the PCUSA.

In response to my request for evidence that EPC leaders are soliciting, initiating contact and recruiting PCUSA churches in an effort to bring them into the EPC, you cited complaints by two presbyteries about my activities since November 30. My involvement at Covenant - Ft. Myers, FL is consistent with that of EPC leaders in the past year. At the invitation of the elected spiritual leadership of the church, we come to congregational information meetings that are open to the public to present and answer questions about the EPC. Any materials that are made available to the congregation are created and produced by the leadership of the host church, not by the EPC. The EPC produces no materials about the PCUSA. You state that a presbytery in Kansas complained of my activities presenting the EPC to PCUSA churches there. I have never been to a PCUSA church in Kansas.

I assumed that our correspondence would not only be open and honest, but also respectful of each other. I was further disappointed to learn on December 17 and 18 that your November 30 letter addressed to the EPC was distributed by your office to presbytery leadership across the PCUSA, and even to local PCUSA churches. It is difficult to see how distribution of a letter addressed to my office, given that it contains inaccurate information, can have anything but a negative impact on the relationship between the PCUSA and the EPC.

To insist that our activities are causing churches to depart the PCUSA is simply not true. We do not solicit, initiate contact or recruit churches to come into the EPC. We do respond to enquiries and invitations from hurting and struggling congregations.
In light of these realities, I do not believe that continued correspondence would be beneficial. When we are presented with accurate information and our correspondence is treated fairly and respectfully, we will willingly seek to engage the PCUSA in a way that we hope will mitigate distrust between our denominations.

Respectfully,

Item 09-01

Item 09-02

On Considering That All Undesignated Funds from the Foundation to the General Assembly Level Be Allocated Directly to Individual Presbyteries—From the Presbytery of Sierra Blanca.

The Presbytery of Sierra Blanca overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to consider that all undesignated funds flowing from the Presbyterian Foundation to the General Assembly level/General Assembly Mission Council/Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a Corporation, be allocated directly to individual presbyteries (by percentage of denominational membership) for direct dispersal to particular churches of that presbytery, as each presbytery determines.

Rationale

For well-intentioned reasons, over several decades, the General Assembly level of our denomination has, with reorganization after reorganization, proceeded in what may be described as a headquarters model of ministry. During those decades denominational membership has declined. Committed skilled people both employed by and volunteering in the efforts of this model have made mighty efforts.

Our particular churches are vital to the continuance and growth of membership: This overture simply takes a new approach by taking an existing revenue source and using it for direct funding to our particular churches. This overture would give particular churches much needed financial resources for ministries as each sees fit. The conduit and allocation point is the presbytery.

The effect of this overture will impact how General Assembly level does ministry, it is incumbent to note that funds designated to General Assembly level ministries and Shared Mission Support donations by individuals and particular congregations to the General Assembly level will remain.

This overture seeks to facilitate the distribution of undesignated funds entrusted to the Presbyterian Foundation for use by particular churches through the presbytery. Each presbytery will determine dispersal to particular churches within its bounds. In order to facilitate the change in policy with GAMC and with the presbyteries, we recommend the action become effective January 1, 2014.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-02

Comment on Item 09-02—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The GAMC concurs that congregations are of vital importance to the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Church universal. However, the GAMC opposes this overture and urges the 219th General Assembly (2010) to disapprove Item 09-02 because its passage will have a significant, immediate, and long-term detrimental effect on Presbyterian mission, including, but not limited to, GAMC mission in support of congregations.

The Presbytery of the Grand Canyon overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to amend Section 3.h. of the Manual of the General Assembly, “Forming Social Policy,” which was approved by the 205th General Assembly (1993) (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 768–70), as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“h. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy shall submit a penultimate draft of the policy statement or resolution for consultation as described in section 3.a. on p. 68.

“(1) All social witness policy and resolutions shall be sent to all presbyteries for study, discussion, and comment back to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy prior to the General Assembly that is to act on the policy or resolution for inclusion in its final report and recommendations to the General Assembly, in order that General Assembly commissioners may have the benefit of feedback from the wider church as it considers the actions to be taken.

“(4)(2) The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy may augment the number of participants gathered in consultation for purposes of inclusivity and expertise.

“(2)(3) The consultation may create a report, including suggested changes to the proposed policy statement, which shall be received by the Committee on Social Witness Policy.

“(3)(4) The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy may amend the proposed policy statement, refer the proposed policy statement back to the task force, or reaffirm the original policy statement.”

Rationale

The current process for Forming Social Policy, approved in 1993, requires a prospectus defining the social issues to be addressed to be distributed to synods and presbyteries encouraging their input. However, this input occurs in the very earliest stages of policy formation and does not require feedback and response from the wider church on the final recommendations to the General Assembly for its action.

c. The task force shall develop and make known to the whole church a plan indicating the manner in which the whole church can participate (advise, offer input, etc.) in its deliberations.

d. The task force shall listen to the
   (1) voices of the biblical text;
   (2) wisdom of theological discourse;
   (3) guidance of the Reformed confessions;
   (4) insights of sociopolitical disciplines;
   (5) tradition of past policy statements;
   (6) advice of members and all governing bodies of the church; [emphasis added]
   (7) insights of people who are poor, victims of existing policies, and those who have not had a voice in the councils of the church; and
   (8) counsel of ecumenical partners. (Manual of the General Assembly, Forming Social Policy, Section 3.c.—d., p. 68)

The 216th General Assembly (2004) voted to “initiate the process of selective, phased divestment.” Jewish groups and some Presbyterians launched immediate and vociferous protests and interfaith relations nationally and locally were strained. As a result, more than twenty overtures were submitted to the 217th General Assembly (2006) on the subject. The 217th General Assembly (2006) acknowledged the hurt that the actions of the 216th General Assembly (2004) caused referring the matter to the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee to initiate a phased, selective divestment and to make recommendations to the General Assembly Council for action.

While “no social witness policy documents shall use language which implies that the conscience of individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is bound by General Assembly statements or recommendations” (Manual, Forming Social Policy, p. 67), these statements do impact the internal as well as public image of the denomination. Therefore, it is important that these statements have the support of its governing bodies.

Prior to the action of the 205th General Assembly (1993) that approved the current process for making social witness policy and resolutions, there were at least two different attempts by presbyteries to require a ratification process by the presbyteries of such statements approved by a General Assembly before they could be enacted. These were disapproved as they might hamper the timeliness of a General Assembly’s ability to approve such statements.

While the overture leaves responsibility for approving statements of social policy and speaking for the denomination with the General Assembly, it seeks to broaden participation in forming social policy prior to action by the General Assembly.

Social policy is intended to have long-lasting effects, and the process should take the time necessary to consider the diversity of thoughts and positions.

Now that the General Assembly meets biennially, the participation and action on forming social policy can be conducted in a two-year General Assembly cycle.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-03 from the Presbytery of the Grand Canyon requests the 219th General Assembly (2010) to amend the process for forming social witness to require that all policy documents and resolutions be sent to all presbyteries for study and discussion and submission of comments to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy for inclusion in its final report and recommendations to the General Assembly.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 09-03 be disapproved with the following comment:

The ACSWP advises the General Assembly to consider requesting the Coordinator of Middle Governing Bodies to set up consultations between middle governing bodies and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to consider more effective means of communication and feedback concerning the development and dissemination of the church’s social witness policy.

Rationale

Item 09-03 describes actions taken by the 216th General Assembly (2004) that resulted in numerous reactions, including twenty overtures to the 217th General Assembly (2006). However, these actions were in response to an overture from the Presbytery of St. Augustine (“Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 64–67), not to a policy recommendation submitted by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP). It would seem then that the remedy being suggested is misdirected. Presbyteries are free to submit overtures to a General Assembly as they prayerfully and carefully decide. The action described by Item 09-03 would not correct the problem described.

However, the confusion that this overture illustrates merits further attention. Recognizing that the current process is designed to work through middle governing bodies, ACSWP suggests that the General Assembly request the Coordinator of Middle Governing Bodies to facilitate consultations between the middle governing bodies and ACSWP for the purpose of developing more effective means of communication and feedback. Item 09-03 would not achieve this goal.

Item 09-03 should be evaluated in light of the current processes by which social witness policies and resolutions are currently developed. Adopted by the 205th General Assembly (1993), the current process was the product of a task force created in 1988 in response to numerous overtures about the procedures by which the newly reunited church made social witness policy. The policy, Why and How the Church Makes a Social Witness, primarily amended Standing Rule 57 of the Manual of the General Assembly (http://www.pcusa.org/acswp/whyandhow.htm#process).

First, issues are raised from the church in the form of overtures and commissioners’ resolutions which are referred by a General Assembly to ACSWP (a body of nine elected members from the wider church and three from the GAMC). If new policy is required, a prospectus is prepared by ACSWP and sent to each presbytery and synod with a one-page summary for each church and the new policy study is announced in the Presbyterian media—all for the purpose of soliciting comments and nominations for persons to serve on the task force that will develop the paper. Members of the task force are selected with attention to expertise in the subject and demographic and theological diversity.

The task force is charged with listening widely to the whole church. This is done through consultations with experts and interested persons and by selecting varied meeting places. Often ACSWP organizes its own meetings to receive updates from a task force in a location where the local presbytery can provide specific insights and experiences. Policy task forces typically develop study documents that are sent out to the church at large to elicit responses. All of this is taken into consideration in the writing of the final report and recommendations. The task force presents its final draft to ACSWP, where it may receive further refinement. Sometimes it may even be returned to the task force for further work prior to submission to a final consultation with representatives from all of the synods.

The ACSWP reviews the report from the synod consultation and again revises the paper as necessary before voting to approve it for submission to the General Assembly, “… the collected wisdom and united voice of the whole Church” (Book of Order, G-1.0400).

This process, from General Assembly to General Assembly, is long, complex, and highly consultative. Policies are grown from an expression of the church’s concerns by a General Assembly, developed by diverse representatives of the church, critiqued by the church at local and middle judicatory levels, and given approval only by a subsequent General Assembly.

The proposal raised by Item 09-03 would require that at the last stage of development, a draft document of both potentially new policy and the application of existing policy (resolution) be submitted “… to all presbyteries for study, discussion, and comment back to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy prior to the General Assembly that is to act on the policy or resolution…” (Item 09-03). This replicates an already existing consultative practice of policy task forces. It unnecessarily complicates the resolution process which does not involve the development of new policy. It could effectively add as much as a year to the process of policy development that is now typically a two-year process, but which may at times be longer. The result would be a significant delay in the church’s ability to speak to urgent and serious issues facing us and impacting God’s children. Needless to say, this would also add to the cost of developing policy at a time of serious fiscal constraints.

For presbyteries, this process could mean the need to organize representative study groups for the purpose of studying and commenting on one or more policy documents prior to each General Assembly. If this process were also mandated for the development of resolutions, presbyteries would need study groups for as many as three to seven resolution papers prior to each General Assembly.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 09-03 be disapproved.

Rationale

The ACREC sees this item as cutting out the core of the Presbyterian process by not trusting the Spirit at General Assemblies to move commissioners to the right decisions. Currently, commissioners are entrusted to make decisions on behalf of the church at-large and this overture takes away that trust and implies that if everyone had a vote, the results would be different or better.

Further, the item singles out social witness policy amongst all other votes and decisions. If the will of the assembly is not to be trusted in one area, then why trust it in other areas? Should all decisions be taken to a wider electorate?

The ACREC sees this item as one that would bring the Presbyterian representative system to a standstill where no decisions would be made in a timely manner. The ACREC believes that such a move would mean the loss of a prophetic voice for the church.

On Support of Missionary Funding—From the Presbytery of Shenango.

[The Presbytery of Shenango overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to] [That the 219th General Assembly (2010) instruct the General Assembly Mission Council to continue to make missionary support among the highest priorities in the 2011 and 2012 budgets [to the end that the long-awaited reversal in the numbers of mission personnel may be sustained] [in order to sustain the long-awaited reversal in the numbers of mission personnel, the 219th General Assembly (2010) invites each presbytery to participate in sharing the costs of one mission co-worker during 2011 and 2012].

Rationale

The Scriptures are clear in affirming the importance of partnership with Christians around the world in personal and public witness to Jesus Christ (Acts 1:6, Matthew 28).

The Book of Confessions (6.055ff; 6.187ff; 9.31ff) and Book of Order (G 1.0200; 3.0000) affirm the missionary responsibility of the church.

Many PC(USA) partners in the world Christian community are in a period of dynamic growth while the American church is in decline, signaling the importance of a deep and abiding relationship with these partners.
Partner churches have for decades consistently requested more mission workers to join with them as partners (“Presbyterian Do Mission in Partnership,” approved by the 212th General Assembly (2000), Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 229ff).

The Dallas Declaration (“An Invitation to Expanding Partnership in God’s Mission”) of January 2008, as approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) states, “We commit ourselves to seeking more mission personnel who will serve long-term in cross-cultural contexts through the PC(USA), and to supporting them fully” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 716).

The 2009 and 2010 General Assembly budgets were established based on a commitment to turn around the long decline in the number of mission workers. The financial support from congregations and individuals has been dramatically more than could ever have been expected, including two encouraging World Mission Celebrations and two highly successful Mission Challenge programs of mission worker itineration (2007 and 2009).

Thirty-one new missionaries (the most in twenty years) have been commissioned since the 218th General Assembly (2008). That has allowed a total that had dipped below 200 to stand at 205 as of July 2009.

The work of world mission is profoundly relational. Large numbers from PC(USA) congregations participate in international mission travel each year. This further highlights the need for an increase in mission workers. The PC(USA) missionaries are very important in assisting short-term mission travelers because they have extensive language proficiency and a deep understanding of the cultural context with which our church members are directly involved.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-04

Comment on Item 09-04—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council is very appreciative to Shenango Presbytery for its long-standing support of international mission co-workers. During 2009–2010, the GAMC has, in fact, reversed the decline in the number of mission co-workers, having made this a priority for this budget cycle. The GAMC increased its financial support for international mission personnel and launched a funds development effort to provide sustained support for this initiative.

Since July of 2009, the GAMC has been engaged in an intensive strategy process for the 2011–2012 ministry cycle. As part of that process, the GAMC sought input from across the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), at all levels, regarding strategic priorities for 2013 and beyond. The GAMC conducted stakeholder research (including paired weighings, a Presbyterian Panel survey, and video interviews with church leaders), listening sessions (seeking trends for the future in the world and in the church), and analyzed funding patterns for GAMC mission efforts.

The results of this research showed that Presbyterians look to the GAMC for support across a broad range of ministries, both domestic and international, and there is no consensus top priority ministry.

Over recent years, the GAMC has remained solid in its commitment to international mission personnel, as demonstrated by the percentage of its budget committed to their support. In 2011–2012, the percentage of the GAMC budget committed to mission personnel will increase.

* 2007, 2008, and 2009 are actual figures

In a very real sense, the more that Presbyterians give, the more mission personnel the General Assembly Mission Council will be able to send. We continue to seek the necessary funds to sustain the increase in 2010 and beyond. Our mission workers serve on behalf of the whole church. We need the support of the whole church to continue this long-sought growth.

The General Assembly Mission Council is not able to sustain the increase in mission personnel into 2011–2012 without additional financial support. The General Assembly Mission Council encourages those who want to see the number of international mission personnel increase to give to Extra Commitment Opportunity account E132192. In addition, the General Assembly Mission Council requests that the General Assembly amend the overture from Shenango Presbytery, so that it would read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“[The Presbytery of Shenango overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to] [That the 219th General Assembly (2010) instruct the General Assembly Mission Council to continue to make missionary support among the highest priorities

_On Amending the Manual of the General Assembly Mission Council to Require Certain GAMC Staff to Actively Participate in the Work/Worship of a Congregation—From the Presbytery of Great Rivers._

The Presbytery of Great Rivers respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to amend the _Manual of the General Assembly Mission Council_ with regard to personnel to include the following:

> "That all General Assembly Mission Council personnel who serve as Executive Director or Deputy Executive Directors or who staff committees that recommend policy to the Council and the General Assembly, shall actively participate in the work and worship of a PC(USA) congregation. It shall be a part of the annual review of this staff member by the Personnel Committee or by his or her supervisor to evaluate this participation."

Rationale

The General Assembly and its General Assembly Mission Council constitute “… the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and governing bodies.” (G-13.0103). These are the bodies that set the direction of the denomination and represent its public face to the world. The staff who serve the church at this level have important ministries in providing support, information, and insight for the committees and other entities who formulate the policy of the denomination. From time to time, these policies and pronouncements create situations for local congregations that cause consternation or worse. It is important not only for the members of committees to take into account the ramifications of their decisions, but it is also important for their staff to be cognizant of the struggles often faced at a session table, in a Sunday School class, or as a congregational member in a community after the General Assembly or a committee has taken a stand on a particular issue. Participation by these staff members in a local congregation can help them to evaluate the impact of proposals made by the committees and entities they staff.

The General Assembly may submit changes to the _Manual of the General Assembly Mission Council_ according to the Manual, Appendix 12, Section II. C.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-05 calls for the 219th General Assembly (2010) to amend certain aspects of personnel policy contained in the _Manual of the General Assembly Mission Council._

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 09-05 be disapproved.

Rationale

1. Jesus said, “… for the tree is known by its fruit” (Mt. 12: 33). He is concerned with whether people contribute positively or negatively to their community and world. Where a person contributes is less important than the outcome of their service.

2. From the _Book of Order_:

   6. Christian Vocation

   “God calls a people:
   a. to believe in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior;
   b. to follow Jesus Christ in obedient discipleship;
   c. to use the gifts and abilities God has given, honoring and serving God:
      (1) in personal life,
      (2) in household and families,
      (3) in daily occupations,
      (4) in community, nation, and the world. (Book of Order, W-5.6000)
Obedient discipleship to God can take many forms and be expressed in many different places. There is no suggestion here that it must occur within a specific Presbyterian Church congregation.

3. The overture proposes that senior PC(USA) staff be evaluated annually as to the quality of their congregational participation. This is not properly a part of performance evaluation as the GAMC comment clarifies, but the larger matter is that policy is set by elected committees and the assembly itself. While it is important to have employees who understand and participate in the PC(USA) at senior levels, theological understanding of Presbyterian tradition and ethos is most necessary in elected agency members. Such an approach could also eventually lead to evaluating the faithfulness and stewardship of the congregations where the staff members attend.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-05

Comment on Item 09-05—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) believes that its employment policies and procedures allow it to develop and maintain a diverse, high quality work force and suggests that nothing be done to put that ability in peril.

Rationale

The Employee Handbook for the General Assembly Mission Council describes the manner in which Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation seeks to order its institutional life—by the biblical and theological themes that give it purpose and mission: “... It seeks for its structure to reflect its policy: one that places a high value on participation and diverse representation in decision making and avoids decisions imposed by individuals. It seeks to cultivate an environment where people support one another, utilize their gifts creatively and productively, and embody the love and openness of Jesus Christ” (Employee Handbook, p. 5).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is an equal opportunity and affirmative action employer. “… All employment policies and practices including recruiting, selection, benefits, compensation, performance reviews, promotion, transfers, discipline, training, and separation will be administered without discrimination based on race, color, national origin, gender, age, marital status, sexual orientation, creed, protected disability status, citizenship status, genetic information, uniformed service … veteran status, or religious affiliation (except where a category is a bona fide occupational qualification)...” (Employee Handbook, p. 7)

Membership in a Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregation or presbytery is a bona fide occupational qualification for several positions, including the GAMC Executive Director, the Deputy Executive Directors, the Ministry Directors, and several other key positions. This requirement is due to the public profile of these positions, and occupational expectations for these employees to be fully conversant and engaged in the life and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Other positions call for theological or technical expertise, but do not require membership in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Thus the positions of Executive Director and Deputy Executive Director named in the overture already meet this requirement.

The overture includes several incorrect assumptions about the role of GAMC staff (including any who might not be members of the PC(USA)) in supporting the work of elected committee members.

The GAMC Employee Handbook contains explicit instructions:

“607. Role of Staff in Resourcing Meetings

During meetings of the GA, GAMC and related committees, employees must be perceived as impartial providers of resources and services, not advocates on issues coming from sources other than those sources that may come before the meeting for action. When staffing these meetings, they are working as GAMC employees, and are expected to give full and accurate representation of the position of the GA and GAMC in matters of policy, social witness statement, or theological or doctrinal positions, even when representing GA or GAMC policies or positions that do not represent the employee’s personal position. It is appropriate for employees who participate in advocacy or advisory roles as part of their position description to, at times, engage in work in opposition to or toward changing GA or GAMC policies or around which there is controversy, but in so doing the employee must accomplish such work in consultation with the employee’s supervisor and not in a manner intended to advocate the employee’s personal position on any issue. Employees may be asked by the GA, GAMC or committee members for recommendations or to provide leadership on topics in meetings. Such recommendations or leadership must be provided in a balanced, impartial manner that is consistent with the employee’s duties as defined by the position description, supervisor and organization. (Employee Handbook, p. 61)

The GAMC policy requires staff to be impartial providers of resources and services for committee members, and in that role, it is important for them to be cognizant of the life and mission of the PC(USA). However, it is not the role of staff to evaluate the impact of committee actions upon the life of the church. Rather, this is the role of the elected committee members, as they “…seek together to find and represent the will of Christ” (Book of Order, G-4.0301d).

The GAMC believes that this policy sufficiently guides its staff in serving committees that may recommend policy to the Council or the General Assembly, and is consistent with the employment guidelines that have been established. Therefore the GAMC urges the General Assembly not to amend the GAMC Manual of Operations in the manner requested by the overture.

On Reestablishing an Office of Collegiate Ministries as a Vital Part of Ministry and Mission—From the Presbytery of North Central Iowa.

The Presbytery of North Central Iowa overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the General Assembly Mission Council to reestablish an Office of Collegiate Ministries in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a vital and integral part of the ministry and mission of the church and direct that office to prepare a strategy for mission in higher education in concert with middle governing bodies, congregations, and, where possible, ecumenical partners, to be presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor denominations enjoy a long and historic preference for educational pursuits as means of understanding the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The commitment of the Presbyterian church in the United States to ministry in higher education is its oldest continuing mission beyond the congregation.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is represented on many campuses of higher education, including colleges and universities in covenant with the denomination, through the committed work of chaplains and campus ministers.

The students on the campuses of the nation’s colleges and universities represent a tremendous mission opportunity for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and can be valuable servants for carrying out the mission of the church in areas of social and environmental justice.

Synods and presbyteries that traditionally have been responsible for collegiate ministry are experiencing difficulties in coordinating and financing ministries of higher education.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affiliated collegiate ministries are facing a crisis in funding.

Traditional methods of evaluating the effectiveness of collegiate ministries may be ineffective and may not be valid measures of the higher education mission value to Christ’s church; and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has not, as recommended in “Renewing the Commitment: A Churchwide Mission Strategy for Ministry in Higher Education” (adopted by the 213th General Assembly (2001)) financially supported the restoration and renewal of our denomination’s commitment to the oldest continuing mission of the church.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through its General Assembly Mission Council, has not, as recommended in “Renewing the Commitment: A Churchwide Mission Strategy for Ministry in Higher Education” (adopted by the 213th General Assembly (2001)), “[established] with Mission Funding and Development a focused and systematic process of funds development for the continuing support of the church’s ministry with college and university students …” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 197).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has not, as recommended in “Renewing the Commitment: A Churchwide Mission Strategy for Ministry in Higher Education” (adopted by the 213th General Assembly (2001)), requested an annual report from the General Assembly Mission Council “… regarding progress and implementation of the strategy contained in ‘Renewing the Commitment’.” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 197)

The Presbyterian Association for Collegiate and Higher Education Ministries, conceived by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), was formed by the denomination’s 2004 Higher Education Summit, but it is not funded by the denomination and is connected to the denomination only through a covenant.

Budgetary Impact

The General Assembly Mission Council estimates that the cost of implementing this overture is $85,000 annually. This amount includes programming and staff expenses (salary, benefits, travel, and shared office services).
Concurrence to Item 09-06 from the Presbyteries of Chicago, Florida, Northern Kansas, and Western North Carolina, and from the Synod of Lakes and Prairies.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-06 requests that the General Assembly Mission Council reestablish the Office of Collegiate Ministries in the PC(USA).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 09-06 be approved.

Rationale

Item 09-06 reaffirms the action of the 213th General Assembly (2001) to call for a national Office of Collegiate Ministries. Campus ministries are a vital Christian witness and source of spiritual nurture at colleges and universities. They play important roles in the intellectual, spiritual, and moral development of young adults. Much of the current young adult leadership in our congregations comes from alumni/ae from Presbyterian related institutions like Stillman and Davidson colleges and Whitworth University.

There are some notable examples of PC(USA) congregations that serve Presbyterian students at nearby institutions of higher education. Most Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations, however, are ill equipped for this kind of ministry. Many of the young people who have grown up in Presbyterian churches are involved in ministries to young adults at non-PC(USA) related schools like the InterVarsity Christian Fellowship and Campus Crusade for Christ. In earlier decades, Presbyterian students involved in these programs often returned in later life to PC(USA) congregations. That trend seems to be coming to an end. Attracting, nurturing, and re-engaging young adults is essential for the future of the PC(USA). Without such a ministry, the church will continue to lose members.

Our support for a renewed effort to address this ministry need on a national basis does not deny the value of the associations that the PC(USA) continues to maintain. Nor does it presume the availability of unrestricted funds for every worthy purpose. We do, however, want to support a more substantial game plan for re-designing ministry on campuses. For a tradition that prides itself on an “educated ministry,” this still seems like an area worthy of strategic investment and greater coordination.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-06

Comment on Item 09-06—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) has demonstrated a long-term commitment to collegiate and young adult ministry. Because of significant reductions in budget and staff for the GAMC, not every commitment can require a distinct office and dedicated staff. The ministry function is being served in the current General Assembly Mission Council structure through the Associate for Young Adult and Collegiate Ministries. Reestablishing a separate Office of Collegiate Ministries would require elimination of other programs and staff that are vital to the mission of the PC(USA).

Ministry to young adults across the GAMC is alive and well. The following list is the areas of where the GAMC supports ministries to young adults:

- Presbyterian Association for College and Higher Education Ministries (PACHEM)
- Presbyterian Student Advocacy Leadership Team (PSALT)
- Presbyterian College Chaplains Association (PCCA)
- College Ministries Summit
- Young Adult Women’s Leadership Development
- National Network of Presbyterian College Women (NNPCW)
- Racial Ethnic Young Women Together (REYWT)
- Young Adult Volunteers (YAV)
- National Taiwanese Presbyterian Young Adult Council (NTPYAC)
- Filipino American Young Adult Council (FAYAC)
- Young Adult Interns at the United Nations Office
- Christian Vocation/PLSE
The total annual funds that go to support the work and strategies of these ministries are more than $1.3 million.

The role of the General Assembly Mission Council is changing in response to trends in mission engagement and funding throughout the denomination. The focus of our ministry is to inspire, equip, and connect Presbyterians as they engage in ministry.

We are moving away from:

• creating offices at the denominational level to coordinate every area of specialized ministry, and
• producing our own resources where good resources exist from other sources.

This ministry focus for the GAMC is consistent with the available funding streams and the broad range of ministry support that Presbyterians expect.

We invite Presbyterians with a passion for specialized ministries to form ministry networks for collaboration and coordination. The PC(USA) Web site provides tools for these networks to form and for synergies to emerge. New features are being added to the Web site to improve that capability. These varied ministries are vital for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and we will continue to seek ways to foster connections and collaboration to join in expanding partnership in God’s mission and to grow Christ’s church deep and wide.

Item 09-07

On Affirming the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association—From the Presbytery of Elizabeth.

The Presbytery of Elizabeth respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Affirm the work of the Presbyterian Health Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA) as an early, effective, and continuing model of social networking and an effective way to multiply gifts; and

2. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to develop and apply a funding strategy for the continuing life of PHEWA before the end of the fiscal year 2012 so that it may continue to implement GA-mandated ministries as an entity of networks [and report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) the results]; and

3. Direct that an impact study be conducted before the next General Assembly, in 2012, to ascertain whether the GAMC termination strategy (due to lack of funding) has had a disproportionate impact on programs and structures within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that served the value of justice; and if so a method of remediation be designed, and that such study be reported in full to the commissioners of the 220th General Assembly (2012) for their consideration, recommendation, and action. [That an extra commitment opportunity fund account be earmarked to provide salary and support for the position of executive director of PHEWA as described in the historic covenant of shared ministry partnership agreement that outlines our collaborative ministry.]

[Financial Implications: 2010: $50,000; 2011: $25,000; 2012: $25,000 (GAMC)]

Rationale

The first Guiding Principle adopted by the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) in February 2010 recalled our ordination vows, “… to show the love and justice of Jesus Christ.”

The Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) is in covenant partnership with the GAMC and has organized, for more than fifty years of service within and beyond the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), “… to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with … God” (Mic. 6:8). The service of PHWEA has been to connect and network grassroots ministries that implement General Assembly-mandated ministry (i.e. mission that General Assembly commissioners called for by vote).

At present ten volunteer networks of PHEWA now exist:

Presbyterians for Addiction Action
Presbyterian Association for Community Transformation
Presbyterians Against Domestic Violence Network
The Presbyterian AIDS Network
Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Options
The Presbyterian Association of Specialized Pastoral Ministries
Presbyterian Child Advocacy Network
Presbyterians for Disability Concerns
The Presbyterian Health Network
Presbyterian Serious Mental Illness Network

These networks are led by trained, committed Presbyterians with expertise that is volunteered to the denomination in a minimum of ten different ministry areas. PHEWA has been coordinated, nurtured, held accountable, and resourced by very minimal staffing, even when it had an Executive Director, who serve as generalists who know where the most effective volunteer expertise is for each particular need that is presented. This model of ministry networking is cost effective and serves the denomination.

The PHEWA has been operating for the past year without an executive director, but is served by an extraordinary full-time program assistant, Susan Stack, along with additional staff work from the program offices of Bill Somplatsky-Jarman, Martha Gee, and Peggy Gunther.

The PHEWA is “good news for the poor” from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in work with some of the most marginalized persons of our country using community organizing strategies for both evangelism and justice.

“Justice” carries a top priority value for members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as disclosed through the survey conducted in September 2009, as well as the succeeding Presbyterian Panel survey conducted by Research Services.

The PHEWA has historically received most of its funding from investment funds designated to the Social Welfare Organizations office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In 2005, the decision was made by the General Assembly Council (now GAMC) at the recommendation of the Presbyterian Foundation to divest the church of the principal as well as the annual yield of these investments. This decision effectively de-funded some of the most significant justice ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and in particular PHEWA, which received the majority of its network budgets and staff support from the social welfare organizations budget.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 9-07 from the Presbytery of Elizabeth asks the 219th General Assembly (2010) to affirm the work of the Presbyterian Health Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA); to direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to develop and apply a strategy for funding these General Assembly-mandated ministries; and to do an impact study to determine if justice ministries have been disproportionately impacted by recent reduction in force strategies.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises the 219th General Assembly that Item 9-07 be approved.

Rationale

In the development of social witness policy, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) is mandated to listen widely to the whole church, especially to those impacted by an issue and to those who minister with and advocate for them. The many networks that constitute PHEWA are formed by church members who, as volunteers, devote their time, energy, and compassion to a ministry mandated by the General Assembly. Numerous policies developed by ACSWP, in response to a General Assembly mandate, have been developed with the help and expertise of these church members, including the policy on serious mental illness approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and the policy paper on becoming an HIV and AIDS competent church that is being considered at this General Assembly. The ministry of these networks is an important part of the church’s experience and expertise on many justice issues.

The question of assessing the place of justice networks within a holistic mission strategy for the church does, as the proponents suggest, involve financial questions. The network model is cost effective and connectional, though its program mainly involves sharing resources and guidance among practitioners. National networks provide institutional continuity as well as historical memory. The organizational challenge is partly to make their value known within and beyond the congregations. The overall leadership and identity of the General Assembly certainly benefits from the justice component.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 09-07 deals with affirming the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA).
The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture.

Rationale

For more than fifty years, PHEWA has worked to connect and network grassroots ministries for justice, doing ministry to help the excluded, poor, and marginalized. This ministry has been mandated by the General Assembly by commissioner vote. Justice issues have been shown to be a top priority by a recent paired weighting survey within the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). Without positive action on this overture, this ministry is in danger of disappearing. Financial implications are involved, but can we as a church afford not to do so as followers of Christ?

On Supporting Mission and Ministry in North Korea—From the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse.

The Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Affirm the historical commitment of the PC(USA) and its predecessor denominations to bring the good news of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the people of Korea, recognizing that while the amazing growth of Christianity and Presbyterian churches in South Korea gives testimony to the good fruits of this mission, the challenge to demonstrate God’s love and bring the good news to people in what today is defined as North Korea remains enormous.

2. Affirm the 2009–12 General Assembly Council Mission Work Plan (February 15, 2008), which states in part: “The General Assembly [Mission] Council will join God in transforming societies to reflect God’s intention for a just, peaceful, and compassionate world by:

   “… Equipping and supporting congregations, mission initiators, global partners, and mission personnel as they bear witness to God’s intentions; [and]

   “Working to alleviate injustice, poverty, hunger, and the effects of illness, disaster and suffering…” (General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) 2009–12 Mission Work Plan, p. 4).

3. Instruct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to:

   a. develop and publicize a mission strategy to proclaim and demonstrate the gospel of Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the PC(USA)’s commitment to caring for the vulnerable population in North Korea—“... one of the least of these ...” (Mt. 25:40)—and thereby open up the way to reach the people in North Korea with the gospel of Jesus Christ in the future; and

   b. use PC(USA) mission resources in South Korea to further promote partnership with the Presbyterian Church of Korea (PCK) and other ecumenical partners to collaborate on this mission to North Korea; and

   c. plan for fully-supported PC(USA) mission personnel for mission work in North Korea in the future.

4. Affirm the work of the Lighthouse Foundation, which was established in 2004 by U.S. Presbyterian mission personnel, including PC(USA) Mission Co-Worker Sue Kinsler, to spread God’s love to the impoverished and suffering in North Korea and other nations.

5. Instruct the GAMC in its strategy to minister to the vulnerable population in North Korea, to continue its cooperation with the Lighthouse Foundation, whose programs of providing food for orphans and others at risk from hunger and providing rehabilitative services to persons with disabilities have proven remarkably successful in what is considered a “closed” country, and through whom the PC(USA) contributed emergency food aid in 2008.

6. Commend Sue Kinsler as she continues ministry in North Korea through the Lighthouse Foundation. Sue has provided visionary leadership and been the primary force for ministry through the Lighthouse Foundation. In this ministry, she has earned a special trust and privilege in North Korea, making her one of the most effective agents for God’s work in this mission field.

7. Support the Lighthouse Foundation by setting a goal of raising $150,000, outside of the budget, to match the $150,000 being provided by Pyongyang Presbytery (Presbyterian Church of Korea), which has an international partnership with the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse. This would be done by appropriately appealing to congregations,
[8.] [4.] Inform the PC(USA)’s national and global ecumenical partners of this action and encourage them, and PC(USA) congregations and entities, to participate in praying for, raising awareness of, and contributing funds [for this ministry] to feed the hungry and bring hope to the disabled in this reclusive country.

Rationale

“… ‘Lord, … you know that I love you.’ Jesus said to him ‘Feed my sheep.’” (Jn. 21:17)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) “is called to be Christ’s faithful evangelist

…(3)participating in God’s activity in the world through its life for others by

(a)  healing and reconciling and binding up wounds,

(b)  ministering to the needs of the poor, the sick, the lonely, and the powerless,

(c)  engaging in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression, hunger and injustice,

(d)  giving itself and its substance to the service of those who suffer,

“(e)  sharing with Christ in the establishing of his just, peaceable, and loving rule in the world. Book of Order, G-3.0300c

“The Church is called to undertake this mission … sharing the gospel, and doing those deeds in the world that point beyond themselves to the new reality in Christ” (Book of Order, G-3.0400).

Presbyterian missionaries arrived in Korea in the late 19th century and began to spread the gospel message across the peninsula. Within a few decades, the gospel message took root and was spread by indigenous Korean church leaders. Today nearly one-third of all South Koreans are professing Christians.

But North Korea, separated from South Korea after World War II, has been isolated. Cut off from economic, cultural, and religious interaction with South Korea and other Western countries, its economy was further devastated in the 1990s as it lost barter trade ties and economic support from other communist countries. Floods, drought, and hunger-related problems caused the deaths of some three million North Koreans between 1996 and 2008. Among those most severely affected have been orphans and those with disabilities. North Korean public policy has not been protective of the disadvantaged and disabled, to the extent that it was once declared that there were no disabled people in North Korea. This at-risk population deserves special attention and support from Christians, both in Korea and around the world.

Because Presbyterian missionaries served extensively in Korea both before and after the division of the country; because there are within the PC(USA) so many Korean Presbyterians and Korean Presbyterian Churches; and because projects supported by the Lighthouse Foundation (www.lighthousekorea.org) offer both individuals and church entities a most unusual opportunity to help people with great need in what essentially is a “closed” country, it is appropriate to seek to raise the funds for humanitarian aid to North Korea by making an appeal through as many channels as possible. Where ecumenical partners share concern for North Korea, it is also valuable to involve those relationships in this ministry. Through this overture, the Presbyterian church will be able to facilitate humanitarian aid and social welfare work where even the Korean Christian Federation, the North Korean official state Christian organization, is unable to act.

By identifying a strategy for mission and ministry in North Korea that includes the Lighthouse Foundation, the PC(USA) gains enormous potential for “ministering to the needs of the poor, the sick, the lonely, and the powerless” (G-3.0300c (3)) because of the high degree of respect and trust that both South Korea and North Korea have in Sue Kinsler and in the Lighthouse Foundation.

In 1997, Sue turned her attention to the needy in North Korea. Overcoming roadblocks in both South and North Korea, she developed a program that now feeds several thousand young children soybean milk and bread (with a goal of 200,000). In 2004, she found a way to serve the physically challenged when North Korea agreed to open up to the programs of the Lighthouse Foundation and allowed it to set up a job training center in Pyongyang. The Lighthouse Foundation now services twenty sites offering food, medical services, and rehabilitation programs for infants, children, pregnant women, the elderly, and the disabled of all ages.

In 2000 the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse, PC(USA), and Pyongyang Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church of Korea (PCK) in South Korea entered into an international partnership agreement with one of its goals identified as joint mission in North Korea. In 2008 and 2009 representatives of the Korean Partnership Mission and Ministry Team of the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse, along with members of Pyongyang Presbytery, met with Sue Kinsler, studied the work of the Lighthouse Foundation, and affirmed its mission.
In November 2007, North Korea granted the Lighthouse Foundation a piece of land on which to build a new facility to provide services to the disabled people in North Korea. The vision for this new four-story center, the Pyongyang General Rehabilitation Center for the Disabled, is to set up and put into operation a facility with a variety of programs for the welfare of the disabled of all ages. The center will promote health and well-being through nutritious meals, hygiene services, medical services, and rehabilitation therapy. The center will help people become productive members of society and advance their human rights through special education, general and vocational training, and the opportunity to participate in special programs in arts and athletics. The dining room and auditorium will promote sharing and service between people from the North and South and between persons with and without disabilities. The center will also serve as a model for future centers throughout the county.

The current plan is for the outside world to provide the building and equipment for this center and for North Korea to provide the personnel, utilities, and supplies to run the center. The architect and construction firm come from South Korea and were involved in the building of Bongsoo Church in Pyongyang (the construction of Bongsoo Church was a project of Pyongyang Presbytery and the PCK). They did an excellent job and have valuable experience as a South Korean firm working on a project in North Korea. The budget is estimated at about four million dollars and the construction is projected to take two and one-half years. The center will be a project where those from North and South Korea, and visitors from abroad can serve together.

In August 2009, the Lighthouse Foundation received a $500,000 matching grant from the Unification Ministry of the South Korean government—one of only ten granted (out of the forty-seven nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) that applied). This constituted a major policy change by South Korea, after months of denying humanitarian aid shipments to the North. The Lighthouse grant was the largest grant awarded. Of particular interest was its focus on providing food for young children and help for people with disabilities while maintaining a record for effective accounting and aid monitoring.

In October 2009, Pyongyang Presbytery voted to begin providing extensive support for the Lighthouse Foundation. In response to the matching grant awarded to the Lighthouse Foundation by South Korea, Pyongyang Presbytery pledged to raise funds to support the construction of the Pyongyang General Rehabilitation Center for the Disabled. In addition to the actual construction requirements, however, a great deal of humanitarian aid in the form of food, medical equipment, medicines, and medical supplies will also be needed for those served by the Center. Meanwhile, the challenge of feeding nutritious meals to the orphans and elderly in all of the various Lighthouse Foundation work sites continues unabated.

The scope of the hunger problem and the challenge to serve persons with disabilities in North Korea is beyond what the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can address with its own resources. By adopting this overture the church can live into its calling to be a connectional church and one which values working with its global partners, accomplishing more good for God’s kingdom in collaboration (one of the core values identified by General Assembly Council in 2007) than it can on its own. The 2009–12 Mission Work Plan calls the PC(USA) to “Strengthening and discovering new ways to witness faithfully with Presbyterian and ecumenical partners in the United States and around the world” (2009–12 Mission Work Plan, p. 3). The “Invitation to Expanding Partnership in God’s Mission” developed in 2008 also calls for “collaboration,” “cooperation,” and “partnership.” Collaboration between PC(USA) entities, the Lighthouse Foundation, Pyongyang Presbytery (PCK), and other ecumenical partners will significantly increase the good news in North Korea by providing a means for “[w]itnessing to the Gospel’s transforming power locally and globally with special emphases on people at the margins of society and those with no active church affiliation …” (2009–12 Mission Work Plan, p. 3).

May the body of Christ speak with a united voice to minister in Christ’s name to the orphans, to the hungry, and to the disabled people of North Korea so that they may experience the Lord’s healing care, and with prepared hearts, one day find hope and joy in the good news of Jesus Christ!

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

Item 09-08 requests the PC(USA) to affirm the custodial commitment of the PC(USA) to bring the good news of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the people of Korea, recognizing that while the amazing growth of Christianity and Presbyterian churches in South Korea gives testimony to the good fruits of this mission, the challenge is to demonstrate God’s love and bring the good news to people of North Korea.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 09-08 be approved and we request consideration of the following:

That the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) raise $100,000 in the next three years through Extra Commitment Opportunity (ECO) special mission giving to be used through world mission in consultation with Pyongyang Presbytery in South Korea to provide material support such as food, supplies, and clothes to disabled and starving children in North Korea.
Rationale

The PC(USA) should affirm the past and current mission in North Korea by PC(USA) mission workers and also affirm the 2009–2012 General Assembly Council Mission Work Plan (February 15, 2008), which states in part:

The General Assembly Council will join God in transforming societies to reflect God’s intention for a just, peaceful, and compassionate world by:

Working to alleviate injustice, poverty, hunger, and the effects of illness, disaster and suffering.

We also should affirm that Jesus Christ commended us “to love our enemies” (Lk. 6:27).

Therefore, supporting North Korean disabled starving children is a right thing to do as Jesus loves all children (Mt. 19:14), however, not without some stipulations.

Too many starving children in North Korea suffer from malnutrition that results in deforming and disabling them physically and emotionally if they even survive.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-08

Comment on Item 09-08—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

World Mission is grateful for having been part of God’s marvelous work on the Korean peninsula for 125 years. Working together with Korean partners, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has shared in promoting the good news of Jesus Christ through evangelism, education, health ministries, advocacy for the poor, and promoting peace, justice, and the peaceful re-unification of the Korean peninsula.

In its previous actions, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has consistently taken a stand to advocate for peace on the peninsula, and in doing so has always consulted with our primary partners, the Presbyterian Church of Korea (PCK) in South Korea, and the Korean Christian Federation (KCF) in North Korea.

This consultative approach is based upon our theological and missiological convictions which emphasize doing mission in partnership with mutual respect and recognition. We continue to honor these principles of doing mission in partnership as we work with our Korean brothers and sisters in all areas of ministry.

Therefore, World Mission maintains that any overture coming to the General Assembly should be proposed only after consultation with and consent from partners who are directly involved, have intimate knowledge and understanding of the often complex issues, will share in the implementation of the proposed initiative, and will live with the consequences of the initiative.

World Mission is unable to support this overture for the following reasons:

1. The establishment of the Lighthouse Foundation was not carried out in consultation with or consent from either the PCK or the KCF, and continues to operate independently of our partners. It is one of sixty-two Non-Governmental Organization (NGO)s recognized by the South Korean government that are given permission to provide humanitarian aid and relief to North Korea.

2. Neither Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) partner in North or South Korea was consulted as to the specifics of this overture, or invited to comment upon the proposed recommendations before it was submitted.

3. This overture contradicts our understanding of doing mission in partnership, and circumvents the process of working in collaboration with our partners by seeking their input.

4. As an independent, registered, charitable organization in South Korea, the Lighthouse Foundation is not related to our long-standing partner in South Korea, the PCK.

5. Because World Mission affirms the one body of Christ, which is comprised of many members, each having gifts for service, to commend one person overlooks the gifts and service of others.

6. The General Assembly office of the PCK has not been officially consulted on the work of the Lighthouse Foundation in North Korea.

Finally, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) consulted with the leadership of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Korea and they expressed concerns about the way the Lighthouse Foundation has circumvented their General Assembly offices.
In view of the above, and given the extreme delicacy of the political and military climate of the Korean peninsula, the potentially significant consequences that our Korean partners might face due to actions of the Lighthouse Foundation, and the critical importance of coordinating actions in such a sensitive context, World Mission is unable to concur with recommendations 4–7 of Item 09-08, but supports recommendations 1–3 and 8.

On Reinstating “Criminal Justice Sunday” in the PC(USA) Planning Calendar, and Establishing an Office of Criminal Justice Issues—From the Presbytery of New York City.

The Presbytery of New York City overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Reinstat[e Criminal Justice Sunday (second [a] Sunday [of] [in] February) in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Planning Calendar, and within all calendar and schedule instruments.

   [Financial Implications: 2010: $0; 2011: $4,773; 2012: $4,773 (GAMC)]

2. Create an Office of Criminal Justice Issues, informed by the example of the Office of Immigration Issues—in its education and networking function, and located in the appropriate mission area, e.g., Compassion, Peace, and Justice. This office is to be staffed by at least one full-time staff person. The responsibilities of this office would be to:

   a. Educate members of our churches and presbyteries concerning the criminal justice crisis in the United States—the U.S. incarcerates a larger percentage of its population than any other country in the world, and incarcerated individuals come from disproportionately large percentages of communities of color. Content of this education would include (but not be limited to):

      - current trends in criminal justice in the United States: patterns of incarceration, sentencing, probation, and parole; the role of race in the exercise of criminal justice policies in the United States; the role of for-profit prisons in the formation of criminal justice policies in the United States;

      - models for ministry to currently and formerly incarcerated people—including those ministries oriented towards helping formerly incarcerated people find sufficient support and resources for life after incarceration such that they do not return to prison;

      - policy engagement in areas that impact the lives of people living in prison, and those who have come home—at the federal, state, county, and local levels—such as those related to judicial discretion, alternatives to incarceration, parole reform, and housing and employment policies that apply to formerly incarcerated people.

   b. Educate members of our churches and presbyteries concerning Presbyterian positions—dating back to 1959—on various aspects of criminal justice, including restorative justice, particularly as outlined in the paper, Resolution on Restorative Justice, passed by the 214th General Assembly (2002); In the Resolution on the Abolition of For-Profit Prisons—approving the Monitoring Report on the Implementation of the Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Prisons, passed by the 217th General Assembly (2006); and in repeated resolutions in opposition to the death penalty, summarized in On Seeking an Immediate Moratorium on All Executions in All Jurisdictions That Impose Capital Punishment, approved by the 212th General Assembly (2002).

   c. Link synods, presbyteries, and churches to ecumenical and civil society organizations that are working on criminal justice issues, services, and policies, in a manner that reflects the values of restorative justice as outlined in the Resolution on Restorative Justice passed by the 214th General Assembly (2002).

3. Formulate an initial funding strategy for the Office of Criminal Justice Issues with consultation from all appropriate parties within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as identified by the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). While the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has faced financial difficulties and these seem likely to continue, the incarceration crisis in the United States must prey upon our conscience, our hearts, and our spirits—as it has for many years, as visible in the many criminal justice resolutions passed since before reunion. If need be, after two or more years of initial funding, this office may be required to raise its own budget: through use of designated giving; appeals to synods, presbyteries, churches, and individuals; and through foundations.]
Rationale

Preface:

A note about language: the Rationale outlined below includes quotes from source materials that use words such as “offender,” “inmate,” and “prisoner.”

It is important to note the importance of language in discussions about criminal justice issues. To that end, below is an excerpt from “An Open Letter to Our Friends” from the NuLeadership Policy Group of the Center for Law and Social Justice at Medgar Evers College in Brooklyn, New York. It is the first public policy think tank founded and directed by people who were formerly or are currently incarcerated.

… One of our first initiatives is to respond to the negative public perception about our population as expressed in the language and concepts used to describe us. When we are not called mad dogs, animals, predators, offenders and other derogatory terms, we are referred to as inmates, convicts, prisoners and felons. All terms devoid of humanness which identify us as “things” rather than as people. While these terms have achieved a degree of acceptance, and are the “official” language of the media, law enforcement, the prison industrial complex and public policy agencies, they are no longer acceptable for us and we are asking that you stop using them.

In an effort to assist our transition from prison to our communities as responsible citizens and to create a more positive human image of ourselves, we are asking everyone to stop using these negative terms and to simply refer to us as PEOPLE. People currently or formerly incarcerated, PEOPLE on parole, PEOPLE recently released from prison, PEOPLE in prison, PEOPLE with criminal convictions, but PEOPLE… . (An Open Letter to Our Friends, NeLeadership Policy Group: The Center for Law and Social Justice, see also www.NuLeadership.org)

1. Criminal Justice Is a Critical Mission Field for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

a. Brief Notes on Criminal Justice in the United States

• In 2008, there were 2,304,115 people in the United States incarcerated in jails or prisons. Another 5,099,086 were either on probation or on parole.

This means that in 2008 more than 7.3 million people—one out of every forty-two—in the United States was under the supervision of some branch of the criminal justice system. Many more were impacted, e.g. family and community members.

While the growth of this population has slowed dramatically in recent years, the number still represents a dramatic increase over the past 28 years. In 1980, only 1,842,100 people in the United States were either on probation, incarcerated, or on parole (Bureau of Justice Statistics). Marc Mauer, Executive Director of the Sentencing Project, has called the increase in incarceration that took place during this period “the race to incarcerate” (The Race to Incarcerate, 1999: The Sentencing Project).

• The U.S. recidivism rate in 2006 was 67.5 percent

The United States has in excess of 2 million people in prison—more than any developed nation in the world—and 95 percent of this population will eventually return to our communities. Yet few ex-offenders are prepared for that reintegration. They seldom meet minimum educational standards and have little employment history, and because few people want to house them, former inmates usually return to familiar environments conducive to crime or end up in homeless shelters. It is not surprising that the national recidivism rate in 2006 was (at 67.5 percent) up from 51.8 percent in 1994.

If we could lower this rate, not only would fewer people become crime victims, but taxpayers also would save between $52 and $92 per day per inmate (the cost of incarcerating an inmate varies by state). What’s more, criminal justice expenses (public defenders and legal fees), health-care expenses (Medicare), and social services expenses (dependent child welfare programs and food stamps) would dramatically drop. (Irwin, John, “After Prison: Comprehensive Reintegration Programs Will Lower the U.S. Recidivism rate” 2008: Stanford Social Innovation Review.)

• Between January 1 and February 15 of 2010, seven people were put to death by lethal injection in the United States. In 2009, over three thousand people were incarcerated on death row. (Death Penalty Information Center, <http://deathpenaltyinfo.org>.)

b. Brief Notes on Criminal Justice Positions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

• References to Criminal Justice Sunday, and concern about prison reform and the U.S. criminal justice system were expressed in actions by the General Assembly dating back to before reunion (ACWSP Social Policy Compilation, Crime and Justice, p. 1.) Since reunion, resolutions have expressed a common theme in a biblical understanding of compassion—for both the victims of crime and the people who commit them; and a steady concern about the exercise of criminal justice policies in the United States.

• The 2002 Resolution on Restorative Justice summed up the orientation of compassion of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in its description of Restorative Justice:
Restorative justice is a creative and constructive alternative to the widespread understanding of justice as retribution, with its emphasis on retaliation or punishment. Restorative justice is not oriented toward the imposition of penalties, or the exaction of revenge, or the infliction of pain, but toward the realization of the biblical visions of shalom and the kingdom of God. A simple definition of restorative justice is ‘addressing the hurts and the needs of the victim, the offender, and the community in such a way that all —victim, offender, and community—might be healed. (Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 576)

• At the 212th General Assembly (2000), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) reaffirmed its opposition to the death penalty and called for a moratorium on all executions in Overture 00-90, “On Seeking an Immediate Moratorium on All Executions in All Jurisdictions that Impose Capital Punishment” (Minutes, 2000, p. 476–478).

• As recently as 2008, the 218th General Assembly (2008), in approving A Social Creed for the 21st Century, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirmed the importance of working for “[a] system of criminal rehabilitation, based on restorative justice and an end to the death penalty …” (Minutes, 2008, p. 925).

• The 215th General Assembly (2003) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved a Resolution calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Private Prisons (Minutes, 2003, p. 439–458). For-profit prisons are thriving in the United States. The current (February, 2010) Corporate Profile of the Corrections Corporation of America begins as follows:

Corrections Corporation of America is the nation’s largest owner and operator of privatized correctional and detention facilities and one of the largest prison operators in the United States, behind only the federal government and three states. CCA currently owns and operates more than 60 facilities including 44 company-owned facilities, with a design capacity of more than 85,000 beds in 19 states and the District of Columbia. (Corrections Corporation of America Web site, <http://ir.correctionscorp.com>)

• Racism is a persistent factor in patterns of incarceration and the exercise of other criminal justice policies in the United States. Dismantling racism is a priority of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as articulated in Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community, approved by the 211th General Assembly (1999) (Minutes, 1999, p. 273–287).

In recent years:

• 38 percent of prison and jail inmates are African American, compared to their 13 percent share of the overall population.

• Latinos constitute 19 percent of prison and jail population compared to their 15 percent share of the population.

• A black male born in 2001 has a 32 percent chance of spending time in prison at some point in his life, a Hispanic male has a 17 percent chance, and a white male has a 6 percent chance…

…While African American youth represent 17 percent of their age group within the general population, they represent:

• 46 percent of juvenile arrests

• 31 percent of referrals to juvenile court

2. “…I was in prison and you visited me” (Mt. 25:36b).

• Both the Hebrew Bible and the New Testament carry admonitions to the faithful to be concerned about people who are incarcerated.

• See the Resolution on Restorative Justice (Minutes, 2002, p. 576ff) for an extensive discussion of the biblical warrants for restorative justice.

3. Dedicated staff make a difference, particularly in an era when prison and reentry service, ministry and advocacy organizations are faced with addressing a national crisis in a time of economic stress. Staff from entities such as denominations have the capacity to leverage the work of others: both faith-based organizations and civil society organizations.

• A partnership in the greater New York City area between the Presbytery of Hudson River, the Presbytery of New York City, and Prison Fellowship, Inc. is leading to a conference titled NY Out-4-Life. The purpose of the conference is to help the prison and reentry service, ministry, and advocacy fields take a significant step forward in realizing its potential for collaboration and mutual mentoring; and the synergy of its combined strength for political advocacy. The importance of this goal has been affirmed by multiple area stakeholders. Planning for the conference would not be possible without the participation of staff from both presbyteries.

• The Resolution on Restorative Justice (214th General Assembly (2002)) noted that the “… the Criminal Justice Program of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has become an articulate voice within a widespread movement that is best known as restorative justice” (Minutes, 2002, p. 576). Yet in 2006, the Criminal Justice Program of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ceased to exist. With the dissolution of that office, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) lost its national voice, lost that office’s work to raise awareness within our church, and abandoned a critical mission field—a field as important as any other in which our church is engaged.

4. A dedicated Criminal Justice Sunday as part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Planning Calendar will provide a regularly occurring opportunity for education, reflection, discussion, discernment, and action. Many denominations have specially-designated Criminal Justice Sundays.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly that Item 9-09 be approved.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor bodies have a long history of involvement in issues and contributions to solutions related to criminal justice, retributive justice, and restorative justice. As early as 1972, the PCUS expressed its concern for the disproportionate incarceration of people from the marginalized sectors of U.S. society. “We are concerned for people who are inmates of prisons. A large percentage of these people are poor, black, friendless, young, uneducated, unskilled, and products of unstable families…” (Prison Reform, PCUS, 1972, p. 174). In recent years, the church has developed policies regarding hate crimes, the privatization of prisons, the growth of for-profit prisons, and restorative justice methods for both victims and perpetrators. This large and comprehensive body of policies continues to be relevant today as the U.S. leads the world community in both the number and the percentage of its population that is incarcerated (more than 1 in every 100 persons) and the continuing disproportionate burden of U.S. policies on racial/ethnic minorities and the poor.

ACSWP also advises the General Assembly to consider answering the proposal for an Office of Criminal Justice by mandating the creation of a Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) network on criminal justice for education and advocacy ministries. This would recognize the financial limitations of a full program office (noted in the overture) and strengthen the capacity of PHEWA (if the network approach were adopted).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The item calls for the reinstatement of Criminal Justice Sunday in the PC(USA) Planning Calendar and the establishment of an Office of Criminal Justice Issues.

The Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 09-09 be approved with the following comment:

“In a context of a precipitous growth in the number of incarcerated U.S. residents and citizens, Criminal Justice Sunday is a needed interpretive tool for U.S. Presbyterians and Presbyterian congregations to inform and to increase awareness of the issues underlying the increase in incarceration rates. Furthermore, the establishment of an office would offer leadership and resourcing to these efforts.”

ACREC also would like to be included in the group of those consulted in Recommendation 3 of the overture, as racial ethnic persons are disproportionately represented in the U.S. prison population.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-09

Comment on Item 09-09—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) makes the following comments about recommendations in Item 09-09.
Recommendation 1—Regarding Reinstating Criminal Justice Sunday

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is charged with the annual review and approval of programmatic emphases celebrated by the church and published in the Presbyterians Planning Calendar.

The GAMC uses these “Guidelines for Programmatic Emphases:”

The life and worship of the local church finds its rhythm in the seasons of the church year as they reflect the life of the Lord and relate to our faith narrative found in scripture. At the same time, the people of God do not live in isolation. The context of Christian ministry and worship is the world in which we live. The faith community proclaims that God is sovereign over all creation, acts in history, revealed in scripture, and at work in our world today. Each congregation has the responsibility through its session to respond to the work of God’s Spirit in the life of the community, presbytery and region. Our sense of Christian vocation leads us in a variety of responses through mission service and spiritual formation. Programmatic emphases are those opportunities for church-wide participation and focus on the whole church’s mission together.

The following criteria reflect the theological and liturgical grounding in which our programmatic emphases are rooted:

1. Approved emphases will demonstrate a commitment to the liturgical calendar, the lectionary, and the programmatic needs of the denomination.

2. The church’s liturgical calendar with particular attention to Advent and Christmas, the Season of Lent and Easter Sunday, as well as historic feasts of Epiphany, The Transfiguration, the Day of Pentecost, Trinity Sunday, and The Festival of Christ the King provides an historical and theological framework for shaping the rhythm and life of our church.

3. Ecumenically shared emphases will receive primary consideration.

4. The Mission Work Plan of the General Assembly Mission Council provides a framework for understanding church-wide mission. In order to give substance and meaning to these designated observances, programmatic emphases should relate to and be supported by the Mission Work Plan.

5. In order to be fair to all General Assembly Mission Council programs, requests will be reviewed for overlap and redundancy. Each program team will normally have no more than one programmatic emphasis, and is responsible for providing interpretive resources.

6. Since the church in God’s world must be cognizant of its relationship with other world religions and the culture in which it exists, major Jewish, Islamic, and secular holidays will be included for information.

Recommendation 2—Create an Office of Criminal Justice Issues

The role of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is changing in response to trends in mission engagement and funding throughout the denomination. The focus of the ministry is to inspire, equip and connect Presbyterians as they engage in ministry.

The GAMC is moving away from:

- creating offices at the denominational level to coordinate every area of specialized ministry, and
- producing our own resources where good resources exist from other sources.

This ministry focus for the GAMC is consistent with the available funding streams and the broad range of ministry support that Presbyterians expect.

We invite Presbyterians with a passion for specialized ministries to form ministry networks for collaboration and coordination. The PC(USA) Web site provides tools for these networks to form and for synergies to emerge. New features are being added to the Web site to improve that capability. These varied ministries are vital for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the GAMC will continue to seek ways to foster connections and collaboration to join in expanding partnership in God’s mission and to grow Christ’s church deep and wide.

Item 09-10

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) confirm the election of Elder Linda B. Valentine to a second, four-year term as the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council.

Rationale

Upon recommendation of the Personnel Committee, the General Assembly Mission Council voted unanimously to elect Elder Linda B. Valentine to a second, four-year term during the GAMC meeting of February 23–26, 2010.
Item 09-11
[The assembly approved Item 09-11. See pp. 72, 83.]

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct that effective December 31, 2013, Mission Partnership Funds, as we know them, shall come to an end. Synods currently allocated such funds may forego receiving those funds prior to the cessation of this system on December 31, 2013.

Rationale

MISSION PARTNERSHIP HISTORY IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

A. The Board of Christian Education and The Board of National Missions

During much of the last century, Presbyterian mission in the U.S. was understood to be primarily the responsibility of the General Assembly, with synods and presbyteries playing a secondary role. The Board of Christian Education and Board of National Missions oversaw program in presbyteries and synods as deployed field staff, and generally functioned in the role of middle governing body staff on the field. After World War II, some presbyteries increased their staffs (and became known as “self-administering units” — SAU’s), but synods were generally defined by state boundaries and had deployed staff from Philadelphia and New York. During this time, funding remained the responsibility of General Assembly.

B. Overture H

In 1973, in response to Overture H, the General Assembly of the UPCUSA enacted a new structural model for organizing middle governing bodies—regional synods. It shifted responsibility for oversight of former national mission ministries from General Assembly to middle governing bodies. The General Assembly Committee on Boundaries created regional synods with the intention of one major metropolitan area in the bounds of each new synod, but it often grouped synods with the expectation that because of size and shape of the ministries, there would be ongoing funding for what have come to be called “historical ministries.” General Assembly continued, initially, to provide staffing for all middle governing bodies, which was coordinated through the oversight of the former Council on Administrative Services. With institutions, the General Assembly turned over many properties (including their assets) to newly formed boards, which boards often had no experience in running institutions or managing property.

C. Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS)

In the PCUS, this shift was already well-advanced because of the longstanding mistrust of large, national institutions in those regions. In the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (UPCUSA) the decision was made to keep most of the dollars flowing to the General Assembly and then to “circulate” those funds back to synods (and through them, to the presbyteries). A strong guiding principle was that dollars might not always be available in the region where they were needed — so the General Assembly was in charge of managing the flow of funds across the church.

D. Following Reunion

In 1983, following reunion of the PCUS and UPCUSA, additional changes followed. The difference in style between synods and presbyteries in the former churches was part of the transition. New boundaries, particularly in the southeast, were created to incorporate presbyteries from the former churches. At the same time, the Council on Administrative Services was ended and presbyteries and synods began to take responsibility for their own staffing.

About this time, synods and presbyteries that had received “oversight” of national mission ministries and properties began to seek some funding pattern from General Assembly to sustain those ministries that had been “given” to MGBs, often with no commitment to sustained funding.

By the time of reunion, this system was well-established but not universally adored in the UPCUSA. To most people in the PC(USA), it seemed cumbersome and regulatory. One very significant difference between the two former denominations was that the UPCUSA had a number of synods and presbyteries with very large geography and very small numbers that made it difficult-to-impossible to support mission entirely from dollars generated within the region (Alaska, Arizona). The PCUS had no such regions. Through a series of consultations held with synods in 1986 and 1987, Mission Partnership Funds were created to replace the circulating funds system.

E. Similarities to Previous Patterns

As Mission Partnership Fund (MPF) began, there were two similarities to the previous pattern:

1. Partnership funds for the first year (1988) would be exactly the same number of dollars as were distributed as circulating funds in 1987.
2. The causes to be supported by MPF—staff, campus ministry, aid-to-field, racial ethnic ministries—were the same causes for which circulating funds had been negotiated.

F. Differences from Previous Practices

Important differences in the two systems:

1. While everyone participated by sending dollars (basic mission support) to the General Assembly, synods were given the opportunity to negotiate a “revenue neutral” withdrawal from receiving partnership funds. Seven synods took this step.

2. While the causes to be supported remained the same, MPF were recognized as block grants.

3. The MPF allocation for each synod was determined through a consultation process involving the General Assembly Council (GAC) and all sixteen synods rather than one-on-one negotiations between a committee of the General Assembly and a particular synod.

4. The total amount placed in the General Assembly budget for MPF is percentage (10.447 percent) of the General Assembly’s total unrestricted revenue. This percentage was determined by the General Assembly and cannot be decreased by action of the GAC alone.

G. Problems with MPF

1. Because we began the system with the allocation formula from the old circulating funds system, any inconsistencies in the old system became a part of the new system;

2. We have never been able to determine effective criteria for asking for and receiving MPF. How does one evaluate the need for staff in a presbytery in Atlanta alongside the need for Native American ministry in Arizona? Therefore, the inherited pattern in item one becomes normative.

3. Despite the best efforts of a number of people, a “welfare mentality” keeps insinuating itself into the discussion—sometimes from those most dependent on the funds and sometimes from those who are seen as “givers.”

H. Changes Since 2000

By the early 2000s, declining membership and more dollars being kept “at home” either in the congregation or the presbytery, meant that the General Assembly had fewer dollars available to spend. This now means fewer dollars as well for MPF. In addition, congregations began to designate their giving to General Assembly meaning that there were significantly fewer unrestricted dollars available.

At the same time, the sixteen synods have changed their original structure and priorities since the late 1980s when MPF was created. Therefore, national consultations have tended to perpetuate the same model of distribution without having a way to understand or appreciate the differences and how those differences would affect MPF distribution. For example, some synods used all MPF moneys for their own operating expenses. Other synods did not keep any of the money and used it in its entirety to support the ministries of presbyteries within their bounds. What did remain consistent was the original uses of the funds: campus ministry, new church development or redevelopment, racial ethnic ministries, governing body staff.

I. Previous Actions of the Mission Partnership Consultation and MPF “Table”

In April 2007, the synods represented at the Mission Partnership Consultation and GAC agreed that we needed a new plan, and adopted the following action:

1. That this April Mission Partnership Funds Consultation (2007), in solidarity with the September GAC/MGB Joint Meeting (2006), October National Polity Conference (2006), and the February “Communion and Conversation” gathering (2007), affirm that these times require extraordinary means of moving into the future. We have heard that mere changes in management of present systems is not the most fruitful approach.

2. Confirm that the present system of the division of the Mission Partnership Funding System, including the portion set aside for Mission Funds Development Projects for 2007 and 2008 continue until such time as some new system addressing critical needs of middle governing body personnel and mission issues in a framework of shared theological values be put in place by the synods and General Assembly Council [now General Assembly Mission Council] through 2010, or whichever is earlier.

3. Moving towards a new system:

a. That this consultation direct its National Mission Partnership Committee (inclusive of all the synods and the General Assembly Council) to immediately engage a planning conversation with the General Assembly Council with the intent of developing a new system that affirms that the General Assembly Council and synods together find a way to support mission and ministry mutually affirmed and that recognizes concerns of historic obligations and future needs;

b. That planning for a new system includes a comprehensive survey of the impact of ending the former system on the middle governing body system.

c. That a report with a plan of action be given to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

4. This consultation affirms that new collaborative mission initiatives across governing body boundaries need to be funded through other channels than the Mission Partnership Funding stream.

5. In the interest of fulfilling the General Assembly Council’s responsibility for accountability of funds given for support of the church’s mission, each recipient shall provide within ninety days after their fiscal year a complete and accurate financial accounting of the use of all National Mission Partnership Funds demonstrating compliance with the National Mission Partnership Funds mission arenas. Reporting shall be in a form reasonably satisfactory to the General Assembly Council.

Subsequent actions include the following:

In September 2007, GAC ACTION 20-907 Request for Conversation with National Mission Partnership Committee—The General Assembly Council VOTED that representatives from the National Mission Partnership Committee and representatives of the General Assembly Council (GAC) be requested to immediately engage in a planning conversation with the intent of developing a new system that affirms that the GAC and synods together will find a way to support mission and ministry mutually affirmed and that recognizes concerns of historic obligations and future needs. The council further requested that the National Mission Partnership Committee, in conjunction with the GAC, provide a status report to the Shared Support Committee at the September 2008 General Assembly Council meeting and a full report to the September 2009 General Assembly Council meeting.

August 2008 MPF Group (Synod representatives and GAC)—The committee then agreed that in creating a proposal particular issues need to be included in the draft proposal

1. Defining the historical context
2. Where we want to be (how we get there)/Survey on Impact
3. Process
4. Timeline
5. Impact—in similar format

After discussion, the NMPF committee VOTED to adopt a five-year plan for elimination of the current funding method based on the same 10.447 percent, ending at the end of 2013, with each receiving synod receiving their current percentage of funds.

The committee VOTED that within the 2009–13 timeframe to do the following:

1. Encourage the nine receiving synods that are able to decline their allocations from the National Mission Partnership Funds.

2. Create a transitional generative team that will be composed of nine members (five, [Expanded] NMPF, two GAC, two executive presbyters [EPs]). This writing team will draft a process and report back to the NMPF.

Members of the Writing Team: Joyce Emery, convener (NMPFC); David Crittenden (NMPFC); Jan DeVries (NMPFC); Nancy Kahaian (NMPFC); Jack Shelver (NMPFC); Conrad Rocha (GAC); Mike Kruse (GAC); Joy Kaufman (Huntingdon Presbytery/Trinity). A second EP was appointed but was subsequently unable to participate.

3. Urge the writing team use a consultant for this project if necessary.

4. Designate any allocated funds declined by the nine receiving synods be pooled in an account to be used at the determination of the [Expanded] National Mission Partnership Funds system.

5. To designate $100,000 of unallocated Mission Partnership Funds to fund this process (extra meetings, consultant, expenses etc.) Sources of the $100,000 would be:

a. Unused portions of the moneys set aside (10 percent) in 2008 for funds development projects.
b. A portion of the moneys being returned to the larger pool in 2009 with the end of the funds development projects.

J. Today

The transitional generative team presented their report to the Expanded National Mission Partnership Committee in Atlanta on June 14 and 15. Their central findings were that:

1. The present mission partnership funding needs to end and a more collaborative model needs to be developed for national mission.

2. The transition out of the present system into a new way of doing national mission risks damage to existing ministries that are presently receiving Mission Partnership Funds. A process is needed that will ensure appropriate consideration is given to the future of these ministries as we make the transition.

3. Synod leadership, as they work in collaboration with other parts of the church, need to take on a more collaborative and generative role.

The report generated the following three recommendations that were approved by the Expanded National Mission Partnership Committee on June 15, 2009, and sent to the General Assembly Mission Council [GAMC] for consideration. The GAMC approved Recommendations 1. and 2. during their September 2009 GAMC meeting:

1. That the GAMC establish a task force for the purpose of identifying, evaluating, and making recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012) regarding those ministries and that work now supported by Mission Partnership Funds (MPF), including the ramifications of ending that support and possible other avenues of support to all, some, or none of those ministries and that work beyond December 31, 2013.

   a. Such committee to be comprised of seven persons

      (1) two appointed by the GAMC;

      (2) one appointed by the current ENMPC from among those synods currently receiving support from MPF;

      (3) one appointed by the current ENMPC from among those synods not currently receiving support from MPF; and

      (4) three persons appointed by the moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008), one of whom shall be appointed as moderator of the task force.

   b. Such task force to be funded from a portion of the $100,000 set aside to fund ENMPF and if not possible, allow the chairperson of the ENMPF and the chair of the GAMC to negotiate a shared funding for the process,

2. That GAMC in partnership with the middle governing bodies of the PC(USA), encourage, and to the extent possible, facilitate and support conversations throughout the church regarding the meaning and direction of National Mission.

3. That the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct that, effective December 31, 2013, Mission Partnership Funds, as we know them, shall come to an end. Synods currently allocated such funds may forego receiving those funds prior to the cessation of this system on December 31, 2013.

Item 09-12

Communications and Funds Development Recommendation for Approval of Revised Criteria and Guidelines for Special Offerings.

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the revised “Criteria and Guidelines for Special Offerings” and direct that the Organization for Mission, Appendix A, be amended accordingly.

“Criteria for Participation in Special Offerings

“The special offerings operate within the PC(USA) as a distinct but integrated part of the church’s overall, coordinated funds development and communication strategy. As they provide important sinew for the connectional church, they are too valuable a resource to be squandered on emphases of passing interest to church members. The following criteria attempt to outline ways of discerning whether a particular focus is eligible to be considered for funding by one of these special offerings.

“1. Churchwide special offerings will provide valuable mission interpretation opportunities within the overall funds development and communications strategy of the whole church.
“2. Churchwide special offerings will enable the church to meet historical and ongoing needs in relationship to the total mission priorities of the church, always proclaiming the name of Jesus.

“3. Causes included in a churchwide special offering will have demonstrated potential for churchwide donor support.

“4. Causes included in a churchwide special offering will specifically define the needs to be met; plans will be provided for funds’ allocation, program implementation, and accountability.

“5. Causes grouped within the same churchwide special offering will have a focused, coherent mission purpose.

“Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings

“In order to fulfill the promise of special offerings, the following principles and practices are necessary to guide the churchwide special offerings of the PC(USA):

“1. On a four-year cycle, the General Assembly will provide for review and evaluation of the causes supported by churchwide special offerings, and will consider new causes in light of established criteria. Between reviews, the task force created for this evaluation will continue to review performance, accountability, and accumulation of reserves on an annual basis and will forward its findings to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). Finally, this task force will send its findings and active questions to the successor task force.

“2. Churchwide special offering promotions will occur in a central promotions office rather than within programmatic entities.

“3. Costs of promoting and receiving each churchwide special offering will be paid from receipts of the offering. After deducting each offering’s costs from total receipts, restricted and unrestricted, of that offering, all receipts will then be considered permanently restricted, and will be used only for the purposes for which they were given. Each offering’s costs will be determined by the GAMC through its regular budget process.

“4. Start-up costs for new or significantly revised special offerings will be expensed as incurred.

“5. Promotion materials for a special offering will relate to the liturgical season in which the offering is received.

“6. Any change in the pattern of distribution of a churchwide special offering will require an eighteen-month time period before becoming effective to allow adequate time for development and distribution of promotion materials.

“7. There will be no more than five churchwide special offerings in any given calendar year. The General Assembly will identify times for the promotion and receipt of offerings.

“8. The agencies receiving churchwide special offering funds will prepare an annual report concerning the receipt and distribution of those special offering funds for review by the General Assembly Mission Council. This report, which shall include a compilation of reports from congregations and middle governing bodies where portions of the offering have remained summarizing their use, will be made available to churches and other governing bodies.

“9. All programs receiving funds from churchwide special offerings will work with mission interpretation staff to identify and develop networks of potential interpreters throughout the church.

“10. All churchwide special offerings will develop interpretive materials that are well-grounded in Reformed theology and appropriate to the offering’s recommended liturgical season.”

Rationale

The General Assembly approved two actions on Churchwide Special Offerings. One action involved changes to the criteria for Churchwide Special Offerings and the other changes to the Churchwide Special Offerings section of Appendix A. A revised Criteria and Guidelines for Churchwide Special Offerings has been created out of the two actions.

Item 09-13

[The assembly approved Item 09-13. See pp. 71, 81.]

The General Assembly Mission Council requests that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the update of the mandate of the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People.
Rationale

The mandate of the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People has been updated to reflect the structural and name changes made to the General Assembly Mission Council.

Updated Mandate of the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People

The Assigned Function is to provide for a coordinated approach to assist in self-development of poor, oppressed and disadvantaged people through a Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People. Its purpose will be to assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in carrying out its global commitment to work toward the self-development of people who are poor, oppressed and/or disadvantaged, who have initiated, control, and benefit directly from projects which promote long-term change in their lives and communities.

a. Assigned Tasks

(1) Provide program and strategy for the church’s mission of self-development with poor, oppressed, and disadvantaged people in cooperation with ministry areas and governing bodies.

(2) Be responsible for receiving, reviewing, referring, and/or approving funding of proposals from poor and oppressed communities.

(3) Be responsible for overall direction, oversight, training, and certification of presbytery and synod Self-Development of People Committees whose membership shall be at least seventy-five percent (75%) Presbyterian and a majority of racial ethnic persons.

(4) Educate the church on the condition and status of poor and oppressed communities and share the theological insights of these communities.

(5) Work cooperatively with ecumenical partners in the self-development effort.

(6) Work cooperatively with the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry to enable a coordinated approach to development and report regularly to the ministry area.

b. Linkage

The Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People will be responsible administratively to the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry.

The director (coordinator for administrative purposes) of the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People will be elected by the ministry area. The search committee will be appointed by the ministry area with a majority of members chosen by the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People. The search committee will elect its own chair. the search committee will recommend the director to the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People. The Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People will nominate the director for election by the ministry area.

The director will be accountable to the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People for the functions assigned to the committee and accountable to the ministry area director in all matters related to coordination of the work of the committee with the ministry area and the General Assembly Mission Council.

The staff rationale of the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People will be approved annually by the General Assembly Mission Council. Any staff other than the director will be selected by the committee and its director. They will be accountable to (with duties assigned by) the director of the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People.

After consultation between the director of the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People and the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry, staff of the committee may be assigned to other specific responsibilities of the ministry area. The staff, however, continues to be primarily accountable to the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People. Any responsibility beyond linkage and coordination functions must be negotiated between the committee and the ministry area. The committee will be responsible for the annual review of staff. (This responsibility has been delegated to the director, by the Self-Development of People Committee, in consultation with the ministry area.) An in-depth annual review of the director is carried out by the Self-Development of People Personnel Committee, in consultation with the ministries

c. Membership

The committee will be composed of thirty-one (31) persons, chosen so as to reflect diversity and inclusiveness in accordance with G-9.0104. The members of the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People will be nominated through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process and elected by the General Assembly for a three-year term and eligible for re-election to one additional term. At least 75 percent (75%) of the members will be members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); a majority of the members will be racial ethnic persons. The membership will be composed of twenty-two members at-large nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee, three members nominated by synods, and six members nominated by presbyteries in consultation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee so as to facilitate meeting the competency needs of the committee. Presbyteries and synods chosen to nominate members for the committee will be selected on a rotating basis to be established by the General Assembly Nominating Committee. The committee elects its own chair.

Item 09-14

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends the 219th GA (2010) approve the revised Covenant Between Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the General Assembly Mission Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Rationale

Over the years, it became apparent that a clear understanding about the relationship between Presbyterian Women and the national church structure needed to be articulated. The covenant approved in August 2001 by the Churchwide Coordinating Team of Presbyterian Women (CCT) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly Council, now known as the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), clarifies, enhances, and strengthens that relationship.

Covenant Between Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. and the General Assembly Mission Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

I. PREFACE

This covenant expresses the partnership in mission among Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. (PW) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The PW and the GAMC have had a long-standing partnership based upon shared beliefs, complementary visions and commitments, common history, and a relationship of mutual respect and cooperation. While this covenant is specifically for the relationship between PW and the GAMC, it is commended as a model for Presbyterian Women in relation to other corresponding governing bodies and councils.

II. THE COVENANT-BASED RELATIONSHIP

A covenant is essentially an agreement between two or more parties committing themselves to certain responsibilities. The idea of Covenant is at the heart of the Biblical story and is generally understood as different from a contract. A contract is about legal and economic transactions while a covenant depends on trust and fidelity and focuses more on the quality of the relationship. It is agreed that PW, GAMC, and the GAMC’s Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministry/Presbyterian Women Ministries Area (RE&WM) will each assume responsibility for their actions, and the signing of the covenant does not hold any party liable for the actions of another party. As reflected in this covenant, the GAMC provides various services to PW. PW supports the mission of the GAMC.

A. Background:

PW is a not-for-profit, national women’s organization related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), hereinafter PC(USA). Its members are first and foremost members of the PC(USA). Prior to incorporation, Presbyterian Women came into being in 1988, five years after the reunion of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. PW incorporated in 2009 as a mission entity related to the PC(USA). Its members participate in leadership coordinating teams at all governing body levels from the congregation to the General Assembly.

From reunion in 1983 until the organizing Business Meeting of Presbyterian Women in 1988, a Working Team of the Women of the Church (WOC) and United Presbyterian Women (UPW) proposed designs to their constituencies which culminated in the approval of the present structure. The 198th General Assembly (1986) received the Presbyterian Women Purpose and Principles of Organization as information only, pending approval by the uniting constituencies. The General Assembly action affirmed the independence and responsibility of Presbyterian Women to make its own decisions concerning leadership, program and budget.

Membership in Presbyterian Women is open to all women who choose to participate in or be supportive of the PW organization in any way.

The PW Purpose states: “Forgiven and freed by God in Jesus Christ and empowered by the Holy Spirit, we commit ourselves: to nurture our faith through prayer and Bible study, to support the mission of the church worldwide, to work for justice and peace, and to build an inclusive, caring community of women that strengthens the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and witnesses to the promise of God’s kingdom.”

In 1986, UPW and WOC, as they looked ahead to becoming Presbyterian Women, willingly became a part of the Women’s Ministry Unit where they were in partnership with Justice for Women, Women Employed by the Church, and the Committee of Women of Color. In 1993, the Women’s Ministry Unit was reorganized into the Women’s Ministries Program Area of the National Ministries Division. In 2007, Women’s Ministries Program Area was reorganized into RE&WM. PW continues to be in partnership with RE&WM with staff as part of the ministry area and as further evidenced by an administrative services agreement. PW supports the PC(USA) ministries that advance the role of women in the church and society. With each restructure or reorganization of the denominational staff, the PW organization made the decision to be lodged with women’s constituency groups and emphases.

Because of PW’s status as a corporate entity, assets currently held or managed by the GAMC’s corporate entity, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, will be transferred to PW together with liabilities and contracts pursuant to a written agreement.

B. The Covenant Responsibilities of the PW

PW will:

1. a. nurture (their) faith through prayer and Bible study,
   b. support the mission of the PC(USA),
   c. work for justice and peace,
   d. build a community of women that strengthens the PC(USA);

2. work cooperatively with the RE&WM as a whole and with other offices within the GAMC organization and other related entities;

3. be an active presence on the GAMC through the PW Moderator’s membership, voice and vote and vice moderators’ attendance at GAMC meetings as observers;

4. be faithful stewards of the money given by Presbyterian women from throughout the church, whether that money is given for the general mission of the church, for ongoing work of PW, or for projects of Creative Ministries offerings;

5. ensure editorial autonomy for Horizons magazine, the annual Bible study, and all other publications of PW;

6. respect the limits of staff time;

7. understand that staff operate under the rules of the GAMC Employee Handbook and report via the regular process of supervisors within the GAMC;

8. be guided by general policies of the GAMC (for example: contract procedures, minority vendor policies, and travel and meeting policies).

C. Covenant Responsibilities of the General Assembly Mission Council

The GAMC will:

1. recognize and respect PW’s autonomy and status as a separate corporation, self-determining in its leadership, budget, program and lodgment;

2. provide support to PW:
   a. honoring the relationships as stated in the GAMC Manual of Operations, recognizing the full membership with voice and vote on the GAMC of the Moderator of PW Churchwide;
   b. appointing a member of the GAMC to serve with full voice and vote on the Corporate Board (CCT) of the PW.
c. acknowledging and ensuring editorial autonomy for all PW publications, including Horizons magazine and the annual Bible study;

3. through specifically assigned staff persons, seek ways to build tangible partnerships with PW for joint programming with various program areas of the PC(USA) in which the mission priorities of the church are served;

4. through the GAMC staff assigned and the RE&WM Ministry Area Director, maintain close connections with PW and be responsive to changes, new developments, and program options.

III. ACCOUNTABILITY:

In the following ways, PW, GAMC, and RE&WM stay in communication as each party attempts to be faithful to the covenant promise:

A. PW will provide an annual report to the GAMC through RE&WM of its programs, services, and policies, and PW’s mission giving will appear in the General Mission Budget.

B. A member of the GAMC will sit with full voice and vote on the CCT of PW and report on the policies and activities of the GAMC at the triennial Churchwide Gathering Business Meeting of PW.

C. A representative group from each body will meet on a three-year cycle to review the covenant and propose any changes, the terms of this covenant being three years, commencing January 1, 2010 and expiring June 30, 2013.

D. Any party may propose changes in the covenantal relationship at any time upon prior written notice to the other parties.

Item 09-15

[The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct the Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to appoint a task force of nine to review mission funding and the development of new ways to raise and sustain for the mission of the whole church.]

[The task force shall consist of the following:]

[This task force would be staffed by one (1) person from the Mission Funding area of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).]

[Advise GAMC and the Presbyterian Foundation to consult with ACREC and its constituencies to develop new ways to raise and sustain mission funding.]

Rationale

The church’s mission council and its ministries, and indeed all church agencies, are under increasing pressure to do more with less as giving patterns change. A new funding plan and strategy with varied methods, philosophies, and material would be helpful in order to increase giving for this growing diverse church community. A variety of dynamics encourage this recommendation:

- Mission funding is decreasing as the number of members decreases.
- Mission funding is being affected by the social and theological issues facing the church.
- Emerging ethnic church communities have varied patterns that are not necessarily traditional for funding mission and are not included in the usual plans for raising funds.
- Mission funding for racial ethnic church growth is not adequate to promote, sustain, or encourage that growth.
ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

- Racial ethnic communities have varied ways of funding mission.
- Social changes are rapidly taking place and the church needs to be sensitive to these changes.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-15—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACS WP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 09-15 be approved.

Rationale

The funding crisis within the PC(USA) has reached critical proportions. The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) has just been through two reductions in force that have heavily impacted the ability of the church to carry out its mission. Current attempts to raise money have relied heavily on direct mailings, which have been proven statistically to have a limited response. A new approach to stewardship that engages well established Presbyterian networks might prove to be helpful. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) proposal deserves serious consideration.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-15

Comment on Item 09-15—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) requests that the 219th General Assembly (2010) disapprove the recommendation from the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns on the development of a Task Force to Review Mission Funding, but does join with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns in seeing the need for new ways to raise and sustain funding for Christ’s mission.

Rationale

The Mission Funding Task Force began operations and developed its own charge: “To develop a multi-dimensional funding design for the mission, program, and administration of the whole church, built upon relationships among sessions, presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 669). In 2006, the General Assembly added to the mandate for the Mission Funding Task Force, instructing the GAMC to “… assist congregations in communicating to their membership the reality of changed patterns in unrestricted giving and the resulting cost implications of administering restricted funds, and … to seek alternative ways of budgeting in order to deal with this changing reality” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 649).

The GAMC brought the results of the four year study, “Funding Christ’s Mission through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” to the 218th General Assembly (2008), which approved its recommendations. The Mission Funding Task Force found that any attempt to design a successful funding system that supports the ministry and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must be imbued with the theology of stewardship. “We affirm that stewardship is not merely one part of Christian discipleship, but involves every aspect of life as we respond gratefully to God’s grace and goodness” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 668).

God’s Spirit alone enables faithfulness to Jesus Christ: Because God loves the world, and Christ gave his life for it, God’s Spirit calls us as individuals and as the Church to respond with our lives and resources.

The Mission Funding challenge facing the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not a problem of resources, as Presbyterians are a people with abundant resources.

The primary challenges for the mission funding system of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are low awareness of Presbyterian mission, a preference for designated gifts, and a complicated funding system which is difficult to understand. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 670-671)

Therefore the task force recommend[ed]:

“• a raised priority for the communications and funds development activities of the General Assembly [Mission] Council…” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 671). And this work has begun. The staff have now been in place for about eighteen months, and awareness of General Assembly mission has increased (from 16 percent who were aware in a 2005 study, to 36 percent when the questions were asked again in 2009, and awareness among elders has grown from 29 percent to 44 percent).
“• a revision of the funding system to broaden the availability of designated mission funding opportunities…” (Ibid.) With the creation of a new funds development ministry, this work is beginning to take hold. We have developed direct response funding and special gift opportunities for individuals, and strengthened our relationships with congregations and presbyteries for restricted and unrestricted mission funding opportunities.

“• a new emphasis on simplified giving and accountable processes, so that all Presbyterians might more clearly understand the need for funding and accountability for how the funds have been used…” (Ibid.). These recommendations will be fully realized in the 2011–12 mission budget. We have sought to fully allocate the cost of all programs to the budgets of those programs, as a demonstration of transparency in accounting and mission funding. In addition, we have streamlined the online giving process, and begun to narrow the thousands of individual giving opportunities to families of related funds that are more generally restricted.

The full spectrum of the Mission Funding Task Force recommendations are to be implemented over a five year period (2009–14), therefore, at this time the General Assembly Mission Council requests that the 219th General Assembly (2010) not adopt the recommendation from the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns, which begins a new mission funding study, so that efforts might focus on fully implementing the results of the 2008 study, rather than launching another study two years after receiving the results of the previous one.

Funding Christ’s Mission through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the 2008 Mission Funding Task Force report, emphasizes the equal importance of restricted giving alongside unrestricted support, and makes space for promoting particular causes within particular constituencies for funding support. Rather than establishing a new task force to review mission funding, the GAMC thinks it would be better to tap the passionate energy of concerned individuals from all areas of the church’s life in telling stories of transformation, inviting engagement, asking for financial support, and thanking supporters for their generous responses. In short, we are asking all leaders of the church to take an active role in fund raising.

If the General Assembly does wish to commission another mission funding task force, it would be helpful for the General Assembly to clarify the scope of work for the proposed task force. The ACREC recommendation speaks generally regarding mission funding in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), but the rationale draws explicit attention to mission funding for racial ethnic church growth, and the varied ways of funding mission in racial ethnic communities.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following:

1. Grant a two-year extension of the 2004 referral to replace the term “racial ethnic” with new terminology so that ACREC can study and reexamine all the issues and implications in the broader contexts in the renaming of ACREC.

[2. Enable ACREC to form a special study group of five people that includes ACREC member(s), a theologian, and a sociologist who have a deep understanding on racial, cultural, ethnic, and growing diverse demographic issues in the United States and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).]

[3. Request that ACREC bring a report [on the study] and recommendation of a new name of ACREC to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Rationale

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a report from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns called Creating a Climate for Change within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In that report the committee recommended that the term “racial ethnic” be discontinued and replaced with the term “emerging majorities” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 51, 540). Their reasoning was that the phrase racial ethnic no longer adequately represented the groups and persons it was originally intended to represent. This was apparent because Caribbean blacks didn’t fit neatly in the church’s racial ethnic classification of Black American, nor Brazilians in the church’s racial ethnic classification of Hispanic, nor Filipinos in the church’s racial ethnic classification of Asian and so on and so on. Their thinking was this new phenomenon could best be expressed in the new demographic reality that theorizes the United States people. This emerging majority is projected to constitute a majority of the nation’s population by 2050, a majority of diverse ethnicities, nationalities, and cultures.
The General Assembly was not ready to institute such a radical departure and thus it referred the issue of renaming back to the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns for continued examination. To this point no definitive decision has been made on the issue, but ACREC sees it as an important task for several reasons:

1. The church first encountered this dilemma when Middle Eastern Presbyterians asked to be recognized as a caucus although technically there was no category for Middle Easterners in the federal category recognized by the church. To resolve this dilemma, the General Assembly made an exception to its official policy and recognized the caucus, but in spite of the action no formal alteration of the policy was ever made.

2. In approving the Creating a Climate for Change within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) report, the 216th General Assembly (2004) essentially broadened the focus of the church’s emphasis on diversity from one focused primarily on race to one essentially focused on the broader category of culture. The report is clear to point out that this change does not minimize the problem of race or imply that it has gone away but based on the dynamics of a changing social context broadens the focus of diversity beyond traditional connotations of race.

3. Because the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is overwhelmingly Anglo-American and nondiverse in its style, culture, and outlook, it is important for the church to have a highly recognizable, representative and nonjudgmental term that identifies populations that in the annals of the denomination are underrepresented, underserved, and rarely heard. For many years now some variation of the term “race” has been used for such references; the question now is whether or not there is a more appropriate term that should be used—a term that doesn’t have some of the inherent exclusions that “race” as defined by the federal category implies.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that unused funds designated for the work of the Status of Women Task Force in 2009 ($19,345) be re-designated for the work of the Status of Women Task Force through 2012 when their report will be presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

[Financial Implications: 2010: $0; 2011: $19,345; 2012: $0 (Per Capita—GAMC)]

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the following referral: Item 09-12: Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the PC(USA), Recommendation 1. Create a Task Force to Design a Mechanism for the Study of the Status of Women at all Levels in the Church That Will (a) Assess the Presence, Participation, and Effectiveness of Women at All Levels of the PC(USA), Both Elected and Employed, (b) Explore and Analyze Attitudes About Women in Leadership, and (c) Describe the Treatment of Women in Leadership Positions, Including How They Are Compensated as Compared with Men—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 961–64).

Funds in the amount of $19,345 were provided for the work of the Status of Women Task Force in 2009, but went unused due to a delay in beginning work resulting from restructuring within the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) Women’s Ministries area. Since the work of the task force was only begun in January of 2010, ACWC recommends that the funds be re-designated to the group in order that it can complete the work assigned it by the 218th General Assembly (2008).

WITHDRAWN 5-12-10

Item 09-19

The Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) take the following actions:

1. Affirm the continuance of the present structure with separate advocacy committees for racial ethnic and women’s concerns.
2. Instruct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), in formal consultation with each of the two advocacy committees, to review and revise the scope of responsibilities of each of the advocacy committees, and on this basis consider how best to provide staff services.

3. Direct that a formal consultation process be used in the hiring of the associate(s) for the advocacy committees similar to the search process used for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s (ACSWP’s) coordinator.

[Direct the GAMC to amend its policy on closed meetings (GAMC Manual of Operations, Appendix 1) to provide that corresponding members to the GAMC from the advisory and advocacy committees be included in all closed sessions of the GAMC with the understanding that they are bound by confidentiality.]

[5. Recommend to the three committees reviewed that they investigate the use of alternative strategies including social networking sites, to engage younger people in social justice, advocacy, witness, and policy development work, using such resources as the Office of Communications and Funds Development.

6. Advise the GAMC to identify and encourage additional fundraising opportunities for social witness policy development and advocacy for social justice, such as donations from individual churches, Extra Commitment Opportunities (ECO), and grant funds.

7. Defer the six-year review cycle of these three committees by two years, thus postponing the Advocacy Committee on Women’s Concern’s (ACWC’s) review from 2012 to 2014 due to current the work load and staffing situation. The other two committees’ reviews would also be postponed two years each.

8. Recommend that GAMC Executive Director assign staff to be responsible for the dissemination of General Assembly policies and studies developed by the three committees.

9. Instruct the GAMC to meet at least once every two years with the elected leadership of the advocacy committees.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 08-16. That the General Assembly Council Create a Review Committee, with Each Agency Reviewed Having a Voice on the Review Committee, to Review the Service of the Whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Its Permanent and Advisory Committees as Related to the General Assembly Council by Doing Items 1.-3.—From the General Assembly Council (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 23, 24, 709–11).

Recommendations 1.–3. from Item 08-16 reads as follows:

1. examining the interaction, cooperation between such committees and commissions, as well as their scope and authority;
2. the collective role each contribute complementing and implementing the General Assembly’s total mission program or directives; and

In response, the General Assembly Mission Council appointed a Review Committee of six members: Elder Doug Megill (Presbytery of Lake Erie), chair; the Reverends Bill Chapman (Presbytery of the Palisades) and Lemuel Garcia (Salem Presbytery); and Elders Charles Easley (Presbytery of Greater Atlanta), Joyce Smith (Scioto Valley Presbytery), and Sylvia Washer (Mission Presbytery). The committees under review sent representatives who also participated in committee work with voice and no vote. Representing the committees were Elder Jean Demmler (Denver Presbytery, ACSWP); the Reverend Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty (Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns [ACWC]); and the Reverend Cynthia Holder Rich (Presbytery of Lake Michigan, ACREC). The review committee received staff support from Curtis Kearns, Mark Koenig, and Alejandra Sherman. [Note: The name of the General Assembly Council was changed to the General Assembly Mission Council in 2009 after the presbyteries ratified the relevant amendment to the Book of Order. For clarity, General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is used throughout this document.]

I. Committee Process

The committee met early in its process, either by conference call or in person, with Linda Valentine, Executive Director, GAMC; Gradye Parsons, Stated Clerk of the General Assembly; and the leadership teams of each of the committees under review. Subsequently, the committee sent representatives to meet with each of the committees under review; with the Executive Leadership Team (ELT) of the GAMC; and with the Executive Committee of the GAMC.

After initial review of the committee’s call and other documentation and meetings with key persons, the committee settled on two additional objectives for their work beyond those specified by the 218th General Assembly (2008):
1. To review the level of resources needed for the committees to effectively execute their duties, including funding required for adequate staffing, research and administration, and committee support.

2. To identify ambiguities and incompatibilities in the current organizational structure when encountered and recommend strategies for alleviating these conditions.

Following the compilation of feedback from the three committees and the GAMC, the review committee drafted recommendations and findings in its meeting of December 9–11, 2009. After further revision, this draft was approved by the review committee and circulated for comment in January 2010. After review of the comments received, the review committee adopted its final report by conference call on February 1, 2010, and submitted it to the GAMC for transmittal to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

II. Introduction and Background

The value placed on social witness and advocacy by members of the PC(USA) varies. All of us have read Christ’s words recorded in Luke 4:18:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me to bring good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim release to the captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to let the oppressed go free, to proclaim the year of the Lord’s favor. (NRSV)

Yet, we certainly may and do have different understandings of how we follow our Lord in such matters. The PC(USA) has approved this statement in the Book of Order, G-3.0300c(3), c. The Church is called to be Christ’s faithful evangelist ...

(3) participating in God’s activity in the world through its life for others by

(a) healing and reconciling and binding up wounds,
(b) ministering to the needs of the poor, the sick, the lonely, and the powerless,
(c) engaging in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression, hunger, and injustice,
(d) giving itself and its substance to the service of those who suffer,
(e) sharing with Christ in the establishing of his just, peaceable, and loving rule in the world.

The principles of God’s sovereignty and service in the public realm are of utmost importance within the Reformed tradition. Organized social witness on this continent by Presbyterians began in 1706 with the foundation of the Presbyterian church. The present structure of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) is reasonably dated from 1936. The 205th General Assembly (1993) set up the present structure of one advisory committee (ACSWP) and two advocacy committees (Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns [ACWC] and Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns [ACREC]).

Foundational to the actions taken by the 205th General Assembly (1993) is a document entitled “Vision for Social Policy and Witness—Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness.” This vision of the task of social witness for the church takes as its beginning foundation statements from the 1991 “A Brief Statement of Faith.” It continues, outlining affirmations of why and how the church makes a social witness and develops a social witness policy, discusses how people of Reformed faith discern the movement of the Spirit, how the church is a community of discernment, and how this discernment happens.

Specifically, discernment of God’s call in a Reformed context happens in community. It is undertaken in conversation with God’s Word offered to us in Scripture and strives therefore to be faithful to Scripture. This discernment and the making of social witness policy is named as the unavoidable responsibility of covenanted people. The importance of the church’s social witness being made from an informed and knowledgeable stance is noted. Therefore, employing the full range of expertise available, including biblical, theological, and ethical scholarship, and including serious study of all relevant documents and resources, is seen as imperative.

The “Vision for Social Policy and Witness—Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness” document particularly calls for the inclusion in the discernment process of the perspectives of those on the margins of society and those who will be most impacted by a social witness. Awareness of past policy documents is also required, as is a faithful stance taken by all who disagree. In fact, disagreement is an expected part of the process, which invites response, dialogue, and communication. There is accountability, to and from those who adopt it, to and from the ministry units that use adopted social witness policy to create programmatic emphases, and to church and society. Social witness policy is understood as evangelical, and should result in mission activity. Finally, the document states that the making of social witness policy is a task undertaken by those called on behalf of the whole church. These affirmations have assisted the committee in understanding the task they have been called to undertake.
This part of the report is in four sections, the first two sections responding to the 218th General Assembly (2008)’s specific charge; and the last two relating to the additional objectives the committee set for its work.

A. The Distinctive Roles of the Advocacy and Advisory Committees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The understanding of the Reformed view of social witness outlined in the previous section makes it clear that the church will need to continue social witness until Christ comes again. It is our hope and dream that the advocacy committees may not one day be necessary.

Presently, ACREC faces increasing responsibilities as demographic realities continue to shift in the U.S., with growth of some groups previously called “minorities” and increasing in-migration of new immigrant groups. The recent call at the General Assembly level for discussion of the name of the committee, raising questions about the term “racial ethnic,” has sparked conversation on ways of understanding racial and ethnic relationships, new and old, and how these can be transformed in ways that are faithful to the call to share the Good News with all. Growing the church deep and wide in our time requires diverse understandings and methods of evangelism. And, as our society becomes increasingly pluralistic and diverse, legacies of past injustices persist and are combined with new challenges to the justice mandate of our faith. There is no shortage and, indeed, increasing responsibility for ACREC.

The inclusion of women in all levels of ministries in the PC(USA) is something to celebrate. There have been many ecclesial, social, political, and economic advances for women in the United States. However, these advances offer only a partial response to questions of equality and justice for women in the U.S. and around the world. Scratching beneath the surface one finds that women’s realities continue to be shaped by expectations created for them that are beyond their control. Pay equity, property ownership, domestic violence, human trafficking, and full representation in the public forum name just a few of the issues related to women’s daily lives in the U.S. and around the world. The ACWC has been charged with the task of raising the church’s consciousness of these issues and enabling the church to more effectively witness to God’s hope for justice for all people in the midst of the realities that women face every day.

The distinction between “advisory” and “advocacy” committees needs to be understood. To quote from the GAMC Manual of Operations, an advisory committee is formed “for the purpose of providing advice, recommendations, resources, information or counsel to its parent body.” An advocacy committee is formed “for the purpose of providing resources and support for a stated cause, constituency, policy or defined interest through recommendations, advice, counsel and efforts that endorse, define or encourage.”

The review committee finds that the advisory and advocacy committees have similar roles but that each has a different focus and emphasis. These committees are not duplicating work being done by other committees currently at work in the church, nor are any of the three committees under review duplicating the work being done by other advocacy or advisory committees. These three committees complement each other effectively and engage in many cooperative projects. This is the basis for the first of our recommendations.

It is important to note that these committees do not establish or implement policy, nor are they called to do so by the mission programs or directives of the General Assembly. The ACSWP has authority to develop policy statements, which are then submitted for review and approval by the General Assembly. The role of the three committees was described during the review committee process as a “prophet to power” relationship, advising the church on social and ethical issues. Most of their work is based on initiatives approved by the General Assembly, some referred from the GAMC and only a small portion on the committees’ own initiative (yet the taking of such initiative is explicitly authorized by the GAMC Manual of Operations). Nor are these committees programmatic agencies. Their role is to relate to, respond to, monitor, and advise the General Assembly and the GAMC. They interact with online networks; a variety of national, international, and ecumenical organizations; as well as middle governing bodies as part of this work.

The review committee finds that it would be unwise, even counterproductive, to expect these committees to solicit funding for their work. Yet, the GAMC should seek to develop particular funding sources that might mitigate the impact on this work of the general decline in PC(USA) revenue sources.

We find that the three committees are seeking to adapt themselves to the needs of the church and the changing demographics of the PC(USA). Several of our recommendations are intended to encourage and strengthen such adaptations.

B. The Relationship Between the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Advocacy & Advisory Committees

The review committee found many difficulties and strains in the relationship between the GAMC and the three committees under review. It should be recognized by all that some of these tensions are built-in to the structure. The GAMC has broad responsibilities, the advocacy and advisory committees are more focused. The “prophet to power” analogy is apt. All would affirm the need for working at communication, speaking the truth in love, and strenuous effort in private conversation before public announcement or criticism. There are areas of significant mutual appreciation in the relationship as well, but for the sake of brevity this report will focus more on problem areas.

Some comments from meetings with the different groups give understanding of the places where strain exists and where appreciation emerges.

- GAMC Executive Committee (GAMCX): The place of justice work in the whole of the mission of the church is one area where there is clearly a difference of opinion between the GAMC leadership and the committees under review. Is justice a primary calling of the church or simply one part of its mission? Secondly, the GAMCX reports frustration with the initiation of studies and projects for these committees beyond that which the GAMC budget planned. The review committee noted a significantly different understanding of who was responsible for the dissemination of the advocacy and advisory committees’ work: the particular committee or the GAMC—each thought they were not responsible. The GAMC acknowledges the need for regular interaction with the advocacy and advisory committees, whether in a joint meeting or regular brief presentations to GAMC meetings on a rotating basis. The GAMC expresses its appreciation to the advocacy and advisory committees for adding an extra layer of focus to understanding the impact of GAMC actions and how they may be perceived.

- Executive Leadership Team, GAMC: Members of the Executive Leadership Team (ELT) encourage front-end collaboration between the committees under review and the GAMC, and an assumption of the GAMC’s goodwill in the relationship by the advocacy and advisory committee membership. The ELT would like to see more engagement of the three committees with middle governing bodies. The three committees were commended for serving with energy, passion, and enthusiasm; for the importance of their collective work; and for the unique perspective they provide on social justice, a perspective that would often not be considered otherwise.

- ACREC: Committee members noted that while the GAMC states that they want to nurture the relationship, “constant review is not nurturing.” The time that the review process has taken in this term, time that then has not been available for other committee business, is seen as problematic for the committee in its work. This comment generated the review committee’s seventh recommendation.

The ACREC shares a hope with the ELT that its collaboration with middle governing bodies and congregations will increase in the future, as the committee works to assist the church in growing in diversity and in cultural competence and sensitivity with the continuing demographic shifts in North American society. Related to this effort, the review committee encourages that the staff persons associated with all three committees coordinate with the associate for Youth Ministries the inclusion of social witness and advocacy and policy development at the Youth Triennium and similar events.

- ACSWP: It is important to note that ACSWP is an “advisory” and not an “advocacy” committee, thus differing from the other two committees in this review. Recently ACSWP has had an amicable relationship with the GAMC, perhaps due to the fact that despite the downsizing of the elected GAMC, three members of GAMC still serve on ACSWP. The ACSWP members are open to more assignments from GAMC. The strength of the relationship allows ACSWP’s work to be engaged with the program content of mission work, which enables ACSWP to integrate understanding of programmatic concerns when they respond to requests and recommendations from General Assembly. The ACSWP would like to see more visibility of their committee, its work and its members among GAMC members and at GAMC meetings, to strengthen the sense that social witness is central to the whole work of the church. The committee is looking into how social networking sites and other web-based strategies can be used for social justice work and the making of social witness. One notable (though gradual) change is that justice issues are “increasingly international, interracial, and interfaith.”

How the church responds in a time of decreasing revenues and membership is a real concern. The crucial nature of the unity of the Gospel and justice can get lost within the life of a church busy with “other things.” The review committee calls upon General Assemblies to be accountable when they refer work to ACSWP and the advocacy committees to the reality that studies and development of social witness policy statements take time, research, and funding.

- ACWC: The ACWC notes that setting up committees to take on the work of advocacy for social justice is distinctively Reformed, stating that “The church in Reformed tradition has been understood as a community in which God’s work is made visible to the world, but it has never been understood as a perfect community.” Both of these aspects of the nature of the church have been built into our confessional heritage from the Reformation era and continue to be included in confessional statements to the present day. Members of the ACWC submit that this is why the direct relationship to General Assembly is a primary calling of the church or simply one part of its mission? Secondly, the GAMC reports frustration with the initiation of studies and projects for these committees beyond that which the GAMC budget planned. The review committee noted a significantly different understanding of who was responsible for the dissemination of the advocacy and advisory committees’ work: the particular committee or the GAMC—each thought they were not responsible. The GAMC acknowledges the need for regular interaction with the advocacy and advisory committees, whether in a joint meeting or regular brief presentations to GAMC meetings on a rotating basis. The GAMC expresses its appreciation to the advocacy and advisory committees for adding an extra layer of focus to understanding the impact of GAMC actions and how they may be perceived.
The ACWC, like ACREC, requests access to GAMC and the ELT similar to that the GAMC Manual of Operations gives to ACSWP. They also ask for participation and consultation in the hiring of staff; and for funding adequate to their needs. They hope to develop new avenues for dissemination of the work of the committee, utilizing Presbyterian Women and the agencies of the General Assembly.

The GAMC Manual of Operations gives the responsibility for distribution of policies as follows: [The committees should] “provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret [the social witness policies of the General Assembly and/or General Assembly policies on racial ethnic or women’s concerns].” The review committee finds that social witness policies and studies are approved by the General Assembly. This would be tasked to the GAMC, as reflected in our eighth recommendation.

Another issue identified as a concern of the advocacy committees is the issue of attendance of their representatives at closed meetings of the GAMC. The General Assembly Open Meeting Policy allows General Assembly entities like the GAMC to go into closed session for any of four reasons: property negotiation, personnel, litigation, and security. Corresponding members need not be included in closed sessions according to the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy. There are fifteen corresponding members of the GAMC, each of the three committees subject to this review is entitled to send their chair to the GAMC meetings as a corresponding member. For the other corresponding members, see the GAMC Manual of Operations. In the spring of 2006, corresponding members were excluded from GAMC budget deliberations on personnel reductions. The advocacy committees protested that their exclusion from those sessions adversely impacted their ability to perform their monitoring function. After the 2006 budget meeting, the GAMC revised its policy to allow the attendance of all corresponding members at closed meetings. But then in 2009, the GAMC reverted to the previous policy of not automatically including corresponding members in closed meetings. However, they can be invited in on any particular closed meeting, and in fact they have not yet been excluded since the 2009 policy change. The review committee finds that the monitoring function of the advocacy committees and ACSWP justifies their attendance at all closed meetings of the GAMC. Those who represent these three committees must adhere to the confidentiality requirements of closed sessions. This is the basis of our fourth recommendation.

C. Resources Needed for the Committees to Do Their Work

The provision of sufficient resources to support the work of these committees was the most difficult question the review committee sought to address. In the current funding pattern, the expense of the elected committees is funded by per capita offerings and the cost of paid staffing is funded by mission dollars. The review committee was well-informed of the anticipated declines in both sources of revenue, but the pattern continues to be a sensible one in terms of our polity and we believe it should be continued.

The advocacy committees perceive that there was a reduction in the staff budgeted for ACWC and ACREC from each having a full-time person to a half-time position each in the fall of 2008. The ELT would note that prior to that redesign those two individuals had programmatic responsibilities beyond their committee tasks. But the advocacy committees strongly feel their staffing was reduced. The ACSWP did not see such a reduction in 2008. Presently, ACSWP has three full-time staff persons, down from four in 2006, though ACSWP has also seen non-personnel budget cuts. We concur with both ACWC and ACREC that the current GAMC plan of funding one person who serves both committees half-time calls for a combination of talents and experience unlikely to be found in a single individual. Both advocacy committees presented a strong case for the need a full-time staff person for each committee. We concur with ACREC that their workload is increasing, as ACREC tries to deal with the increasing number of constituencies and emerging groups in the church and arising on the margins of the church that do not currently have representation at the ACREC table. In a similar way, ACWC’s work related to intersections of race and gender and the economic circumstances of women is also increasing. There is historical and present-day support for the concern that justice issues are particularly vulnerable to marginalization when budgets are tight and revenues are decreasing. The assigned work of the committees takes significant research and time in writing. Staff with gifts and training in these areas are needed to assist the elected members to efficiently and effectively complete the work they are assigned. The lament that the PC(USA) is asking these committees to “make bricks without straw” has validity.

The review committee debated its responsibility to the church in this regard. There was unanimity that we ought to uphold the PC(USA)’s continued commitment to justice and social witness. All of us recognize the financial trend lines of church revenue. It was noted that the call of the 218th General Assembly (2008) in commissioning this review did not charge us with taking into account the financial implications of this work. Ultimately, the decision-making involved in developing a budget for the overall work of the church means making priority judgments that go beyond the scope of reviewing three particular committees. Therefore, the review committee considered but declined to make an explicit recommendation that ACWC and ACREC each have a full-time staff person. We would affirm the call of the GAMC Executive Committee that all concerned need to “develop a better partnership in meeting the new realities that are confronting us.” Our conclusion is reflected in our second recommendation.
D. Identified Ambiguities and Incompatibilities

This section of the report notes issues the review committee finds need action to alleviate problems.

1. The three committees under review differ in access to the GAMC. The GAMC Manual of Operations calls for an annual meeting between ACSWP and the GAMC leadership but no such provision is made for the advocacy committees. Moreover, such a GAMC-ACSWP meeting has not taken place for some years, though one was scheduled for February 2010. Our final recommendation calls for similar forums to involve the advocacy committees as well.

2. The issue of staff hiring, oversight, and termination procedures was a major focus of the review. All groups interviewed noted this as an area of conflict. The GAMC Executive Committee and the ELT emphasized the responsibility lying with the Executive Director for this, while the committees under review emphasized their expectation of mutually recognized consultation about hiring and oversight, which they perceive as not being accorded them in recent staffing decisions. Shared understanding of this issue is needful to move into the future in a positive and faithful way. The review committee makes its third recommendation in support of this, while acknowledging the limitations on this for matters of oversight and termination.

3. Some of our interviews indicate misunderstanding of the assigned duties of the advocacy and advisory committees. Issues raised that are not included on the assigned duties include evangelism and new church development, in addition to the dissemination issue addressed above. Evangelism is certainly part of our common responsibility as church members; the review committee does not recommend making it a specific responsibility of the advocacy and advisory committees.

IV. Final Comments

The review committee was unanimous in its praise for the commitment of the elected members of the advisory and advocacy committees, their knowledge on a wide range of issues before the church, and the passion and energy with which they work for justice.

We also were well-received and assisted by both elected and staff members of the GAMC; as well as staff we consulted in the Office of the General Assembly. The church is well-served by these individuals as well.

Thanks are offered to God for each of these faithful servants.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-19

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-19—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 09-19 deals with the report of the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the recommendations of this report and urges the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve all nine recommendations presented by the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee Report without amendment.

Rationale

The report reflects the faithful work of the review committee, for which ACWC wishes to thank each member of the committee.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-19

Comment on Item 09-19—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

Recommendation 8

The General Assembly Mission Council shares this concern for the distribution of General Assembly policies and studies developed by the three committees, and will look for ways of addressing the concern within the context of existing resources. The GAMC will encourage program area and ministries to communicate policy information in their interpretive materials, include interpretation of policy information in workshops and conferences, and use the Web site more effectively for this purpose. The upgraded PC(USA) Web site provides both a more comprehensive and useable place to find information, and increased interactive features that can facilitate communication, distribution, and engagement with matters of church policy.

Recommendation 4

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) suggests that to amend the GAMC Manual of Operations in the manner directed by this recommendation would eliminate the ability for members elected by the General Assembly to discuss appropriate matters in closed sessions. Members elected by the General Assembly have the ultimate responsibility for decision making for the council. The General Assembly Mission Council requests that the General Assembly retain a means for these members to restrict their discussion to other elected members, should the subject matter require that degree of sensitivity, in accordance with the General Assembly’s Open Meeting Policy.

The General Assembly Mission Council has two categories of members: voting and non-voting. Voting members include those who have been elected by the General Assembly for service on the council, and four ex-officio members (the current and previous Moderators of the General Assembly, and a representative from both the Presbyterian Women and Presbyterian Men organizations). Non-voting members include corresponding members, ecumenical advisory members, and at-large members of the Audit and Stewardship committees, elected by the General Assembly.

Corresponding members are representatives from the five other General Assembly agencies and their senior executive, a representative of the Committee on Theological Education, the chairpersons from the Advisory and Advocacy Committees, and the GAMC Executive Director.

In March 2009, the GAMC voted to revise its Manual of Operations to allow the council the ability to have closed meetings, within the parameters of the General Assembly’s Open Meeting policy, limited to voting members and at-large members of Stewardship and Audit Committees, so that these sensitive matters involving property negotiation, personnel, civil and criminal litigation, or security, could be discussed, if necessary, within the context of members elected by the General Assembly.

The GAMC retained the ability to invite non-voting members into these discussions if needed.

As of April 2010, since amending the Manual of Operations in March 2009, the GAMC has only had one closed session limited to members elected by the General Assembly. This session was focused on the third year performance review of the GAMC Executive Director. The council felt that it was appropriate to discuss this personnel matter without the presence of corresponding members, (which would have included the staff colleagues of the executive director from the other five GA agencies, as well as the GAMC Executive Director.)

The GAMC values the work of these committees, and has commissioned several of its own members to serve as members of the Advisory and Advocacy Committees (three GAMC members serve on ACSWP, one serves on ACWC, and one serves on ACREC). Even though there might be meetings in the future that do not include corresponding members, the GAMC would have the benefit of the perspective of the advisory and advocacy committees through these members of the GAMC who also serve on those committees, and could, if needed, vote to allow corresponding members in closed sessions.

Because the council seeks to preserve the capacity for conversations limited to members elected by the General Assembly, on sensitive matters, it encourages the 219th General Assembly (2010) not to approve this recommendation.

[The assembly approved 09-20 with amendment. See pp. 72, 84–85.]

On Supporting Young Adults in Mission and Leadership Development in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—From the Presbytery de Cristo.

The Presbytery de Cristo overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the General Assembly Mission Council to provide budgetary support in the amount of [$100,000 ($50,000 for 2011 and $50,000 for 2012) for scholarships for] [$10,000 for each] Young Adult Volunteer[s], above and beyond currently budgeted support for the Young Adult Volunteer (YAV) program, for the costs of their service internationally and nationally through the Young Adult Volunteer Program (YAV) of the World Mission Office. These funds would help cover the cost of living expenses for [each] YAVs, which include housing and utilities, health insurance, and stipends for food and local transportation. (YAVs would continue to raise support for their year of service at a lesser, more attainable amount.)

[This request for funds is for up to 100 volunteers per year, not to exceed $1,000,000 total per YAV calendar term (August-August). The GAMC should review and evaluate this funding mandate every second General Assembly year (every fourth year).]

[Site coordinators should be treated as mission coworkers and GAMC should invite presbyteries to financially support them.]

[Financial Implications: 2010: $0; 2011: $50,000; 2012: $50,000 (GAMC)]

Rationale

The Young Adult Volunteer (YAV) Program has both national and international components as part of World Mission, engaging in mission in the United States as well as expanding the opportunities congregations and individual members have to connect with World Mission partners in other counties.

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) has approved a Presbyterian World Mission Strategic Direction with the four directional goals of:

- communities of mission practice,
- faithful and effective mission,
- strategic engagement in critical global issues, and
- achieving organizational excellence.

The YAV Program already practices these directional goals through its existing program.

The report “Raising Leaders” developed by the Joint Committee on Leadership Needs for the Presbyterian church raised up the following goals for the development of young leaders—are all hallmarks of the YAV Program, with demonstrable results in each of these areas:

- cultivate missional leadership formation;
- stimulate character formation;
- form people in discipleship, spiritual disciplines, and missional practice;
- teach awareness of church systems, how they are formed, and how to cultivate change within them;
- imagine new forms of engaging our communities;
- prepare evangelists as new church development pastors and for other community-based ministries;
• develop cultural awareness, sensitivity, and intercultural competence;
• increase Biblical knowledge, literacy, and understanding; and
• shape creative worship leaders.

The YAV program aligns with the emerging Priorities for Mission being developed by the leadership within the World Mission Office as they • work with youth and young adults,
• participate in leadership development,
• focus on particular global issues, and
• on mission that connects world mission partners with local and regional missions within the U.S.

Young Adult Volunteers already serve in ministries and churches engaged in mission practice and with World Mission partners overseas and in the United States.

Most YAVs go on to vocational ministry and leadership, and approximately one third go on to attend Presbyterian seminaries.

The Young Adult Volunteer Program teaches and develops leaders through the support and guidance of local mission co-workers and site coordinators versed in the local mission field and versed in the mission culture. It embraces a global perspective through both our international placements and the cross-cultural ministries with which our national placements are engaged.

National and local funds which traditionally support the YAV Program are no longer available and the sustainability of our ministries are at risk. At the same time, volunteerism is on the rise, as is competition for top candidates for service. The YAV program cannot keep pace with competitors for volunteers at current funding levels, yet it has been identified as a “High Priority” program. We believe sustainable funding is appropriate.

At its inception in 1994, the Young Adult Volunteer program was charged, “... to identify, assess, recruit, prepare, and deploy a large number of Presbyterians for service and learning experiences in cross-cultural, cross-economic settings; … [t]o assist individuals and congregations to understand our cultural captivity as U.S. Christians… [a] to empower a new generation of Christian leadership for the church and for the world … and to evangelize and revitalize congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 214, citations from A Proposal to the General Assembly Council for Volunteers in Shared Ministry). “… [And to] be the vanguard of an undertaking aimed at nothing less than changing the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 214).

Comment on 09-20—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is very appreciative to the Presbytery de Cristo for its support of the Young Adult Volunteer (YAV) program. Item 09-20, as proposed by Presbytery de Cristo has a significant financial impact: one million dollars in 2011 and again in 2012.

If approved by the General Assembly, this overture would require the elimination of multiple programs within the GAMC mission budget. The GAMC requests that the GA disapprove Item 09-20 and respond to this request by drawing attention to the church-wide giving opportunities already in place to support the YAV program.

Rationale

The YAV program began in 1994 with goals “to identify, assess, recruit, prepare, and deploy a large number of Presbyterians for service and learning experiences in cross-cultural, cross-economic settings … To assist individuals and congregations to understand our cultural captivity as U.S. citizens… to empower a new generation of Christian leadership for the church and for the world … and to evangelize and revitalize congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) …” for “… as many as one hundred young adults [to] be introduced to the 206th General Assembly—the vanguard of an undertaking aimed at nothing less than changing the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)…” (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 214).

More than one thousand Young Adult Volunteers have joined in national and international service and learning during the past sixteen years. As these young adults continue to mature and respond to God’s call for faithfulness and transformation, many become church and community leaders, committed to the missional values learned and practiced during their time as YAVs.

There are currently six national YAV sites in cities around the U.S. and six international sites with global partners in other countries. YAVs serve for one year with a commitment to spiritual growth, simple living, mission service and learning, vocational discernment, and leadership development.

The YAV program is currently funded through a combination of unrestricted contributions, endowments, 25 percent of the Pentecost Offering, grants from presbyteries and participating community agencies within the U.S., and fund raising on the part of YAV participants.

In a very real sense, the more that Presbyterians give, the more Young Adult Volunteers the General Assembly Mission Council will be able to support. An extra commitment opportunity account is available for support: #E049075. Funds given through this account are used for programmatic site support or to directly support young adult volunteers through reimbursement of outstanding student loans, housing and food allowance, and/or a travel subsidy. The YAV program needs the support of the whole church to expand this important ministry. The GAMC requests that the General Assembly respond to this overture by drawing attention to these giving opportunities.

Recommendations Pertaining to Budgetary and Financial Concerns of the Church

A. Relating to Budgets for General Assembly Mission Program

[The assembly approved Item 09-21, Recommendation A.1. See pp. 71, 81.]

[The display that is found in gamc-budget-charts-A-1.pdf is the report of actual revenue and expenditures for the years 2008 and 2009. See pp 706–09.]

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted policy governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall:

1. Report to each General Assembly:
   a. Actual total financial resources used to support the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the expenditures during the most recently completed year. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 375)

[The assembly approved Item 09-21, Recommendation 2, with amendment. See pp. 80, 85.]

[Upon the recommendation of] [T]he General Assembly Mission Council, the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination now recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the 2011 General Assembly Mission Budget and Program in the total amount of $82,097,234 and the 2012 General Assembly Mission Budget and Program in the total amount of $80,550,613.

[The charts that are found in game-budget-charts-A-2.pdf show the 2011 and 2012 General Assembly Mission Budget and Program. See pp. 710–13.]

| 2012 Budget| $207,683 |]
The Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination further recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct the General Assembly Mission Council to make the adjustments necessary to incorporate into the General Assembly Mission budgets for 2010, 2011 and 2012 the items with financial implications that have been approved by the 219th General Assembly. The necessary adjustments may include identifying additional sources of revenue, redirecting existing budget; or a combination of both.

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted Policy Governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly Level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall:

3. Recommend to the General Assembly the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program for the next succeeding budget cycle. Displayed in the recommendation shall be:
   a. All projected financial sources; and
   b. Anticipated uses of financial resources in light of mission objectives.

The General Assembly Council is required by the Constitution to “prepare and submit a comprehensive budget to the General Assembly” (Book of Order, G-13.0202f).

B. Relating to Reserved or Committed Funds

[The assembly approved Item 09-21, Recommendation B. See pp. 71, 81.]

Unrestricted and Committed Funds

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) receive the report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation regarding unrestricted and committed funds as of December 31, 2009.

[The charts that are found in game-budget-charts-B.pdf show the Unrestricted and Committed Funds. See pp. 714–18.]

Rationale

The report of the unrestricted funds is divided between uncommitted and committed funds. The following file, game-budget-charts-B.pdf, indicates those funds as well as the activity of those funds and the status of the total reserves as of closing December 31, 2009. The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted the following policy:

A. Presbyterian Mission Program Fund

1. A fund composed of all unrestricted and uncommitted receipts and assets intended for the support of the General Assembly mission program.

2. Sources to maintain this fund shall include all unified revenue available for the General Assembly Mission Program, including but not limited to:
   a. unified income including receipts from congregations, presbyteries, or individuals;
   b. unrestricted gifts, legacies, bequests
   c. unrestricted investment income;
   d. gift annuity excess reserves;
   e. such nonrecurring income as the General Assembly Council shall direct by general or specific policy statement; and
   f. under expenditure of the unified portion of the General Assembly Mission Budget.

3. The Uncommitted Funds portion of the Presbyterian Mission Program Fund at year end must be equal to at least 30% of the Unified portion and direct mission support of the General Assembly Mission Budget, which minimum provides for:
   a. Cash flow needed for mission purposes;
   b. Guarantee of the current unified budget.”
C. Relating to Support for General Assembly Mission

[The assembly approved Item 09-21, Recommendation C.1. See pp. 71, 81.]

1. John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) allocate the annual income realized in 2009 and projected for 2010 from the John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds in support of the budget for the general mission work of the General Assembly.

Rationale

Current practice is to recommend to each General Assembly the allocation of annual income from these two funds in light of wording in the donors’ wills that requires this annual process.

Portion of the will of Edmund P. Dwight (May 23, 1903):

I will and bequeath to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America, to be used for the establishment of the Christian Religion, that the light of the gospel may be made to join more perfectly...

Portion of the will of John C. Lord (January 2, 1873):

...to the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., for religious and charitable uses, to be called the John C. Lord Fund, the annual interest of which is to be disposed of and distributed by the said General Assembly at each annual meeting for the furtherance of the Gospel of our Blessed Saviour, at home or abroad, as the Assembly may deem best....

The applicable provisions of the two wills facilitate the annual income realized from these funds to be used in the General Assembly’s General Mission Budget.

Income from these funds in 2009 was $29,811.78 and it is projected that the income from these funds in 2010 will be approximately $30,790.54.

2. Special Offerings 2009

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) incorporate into its Minutes the following summary of receipts from Special Offerings for the years 2008 and 2009.

[The charts that are found in gamc-special-offerings-C-2.pdf show the summary of receipts for Special Offerings for the years 2008 and 2009. See p. 719.]

Rationale

Special Offerings enable an important part of the General Assembly Mission Program. In 2008, income from these offerings totaled approximately 21 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 33.1 percent of the mission gifts from congregations. In 2009, income from these offerings totaled approximately 23 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 34.8 percent of the mission gifts from congregations.

Item 09-Info

The PCCMP has been extraordinarily active in its support of chaplains since the 217th General Assembly (2006). Our chaplains have been deployed to warzones up to four times. At least two have been wounded. Several have Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) diagnoses. Chaplains, their families, and their congregations have served well and are strained and tired from this long war. Ever since 9-11, reserves and National Guard have been mobilized in large numbers. That continues today with at least forty-one reserve and National Guard chaplains mobilized from 2008 to 2010. We have been in near constant contact with most of them—assisting in their entry in the active military; speaking with their families, churches, and presbyteries; helping explain pension and United Services Employment Re-Employment Rights Act (USERRA) rights; and providing support when they returned from the military. With many forces deployed to Afghanistan, Iraq, Kuwait, Djibouti, and the region, the tempo of reserve component utilization may remain high for years. Disasters like the Haiti earthquake, New Orleans hurricane, and Samoan tsunami have only added to the call for military assistance. We’ve enjoyed assisting individuals, churches, presbyteries, and General Assembly offices in supporting deployed military members and chaplains. We’ve been gratified to see prayers offered, care packages sent, and chaplains “adopted” by churches.
Approximately fifty-eight of our active duty chaplains were deployed into Southwest Asia for actions regarding Iraq and Afghanistan from 2008 to 2010. Many are still deployed. Our military chaplains suffer the same hardships as other military; their ministry is often in harm’s way. Some of them are quite exhausted after a war tour; some have symptoms of post-traumatic stress. We seek to be with them and find appropriate support. We hold annual retreats for chaplains attended by 60–110 chaplains and family members. We were at funerals for several retired chaplains. We look forward to contacts after chaplains redeploy and are reunited with their families.

The PCCMP has two core functions:

- The ecclesial duty of endorsement of clergy for service in the military and Veterans Administration (VA) chaplaincies.
- The pastoral function of supporting those same clergy during their time of service.

Over the past two years, we approved eleven persons for military chaplain candidate (seminarian) programs. We endorsed twenty-two people for the Army, Navy, and Air Force; some are in the reserves while others went immediately to active duty chaplaincy. We endorsed twelve people for the Veterans Administration (VA) chaplaincy and three people for the Civil Air Patrol (Air Force Auxiliary). Each approval or endorsement requires a collection of applications, transcripts, presbytery approval, and letters of reference. After the documents are gathered, we interview the candidates.

Our current data on chaplains by denomination is below. We provide endorsement and support to 47 seminarians and 341 clergy. Eighteen of the active duty personnel are female as are two of our VA chaplains. Most of our presbyteries have participants in one or more of the chaplaincy programs.

We attended General Assemblies or General Synod for all of our denominations. The chaplain ministry is well-received and supported by each denomination. Because of our covenant relationship, we also participate in the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) of the PC(USA) without vote. We will host our annual meeting in November 2010.

The ongoing pastoral care for chaplains is an extension of what presbyteries do through committees on ministry. We expect our chaplains to maintain a sound relationship with the PCCMP and their presbytery. We seek to keep a semiannual written contact with each active duty chaplain. We augment that contact with e-mail and telephone. We also make personal contact with each chaplain at least every other year with a visit to their duty station or a meeting at a gathering of chaplains. We also respond very quickly when chaplains and families are in crisis. We work hard to serve chaplains who are changing commands, moving from the U.S.A. overseas or the reverse. Quite a few stop by the office in the District of Columbia while in a move or when in Washington for military duty. The PCCMP also hosts an annual retreat for chaplains and their families; this facilitates networking and mutual support for our Presbyterian clergy who are often isolated from other Presbyterian contact.

The PCCMP works to interpret its mission and needs to the church. We had good support from the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church (ARP) magazine, the Cumberland, Presbyterians Today, Horizons, and the Presbyterian News Service to explain what chaplains do. We’ve also been published in several seminary publications, the Outlook, and the Layman. We made visits to nine seminaries these past two years and to many presbyteries to interpret the chaplain story and PCCMP mission.

The PCCMP also maintains sound working relations with the chiefs of Chaplains offices for each branch of the military and the VA. It offers leadership in the Military Chaplain Association, the National Conference on Ministry to the Armed Forces (NCMAF), and the Endorsers Council for Veterans Affairs Chaplaincy (ECVAC). The NCMAF is the advisory body on religion to the secretary of defense.

Keeping the ministry vital with adequate funding has been difficult. We have redoubled our development efforts, using several regional volunteer assistants. We have also found a new fund source in the Combined Federal Campaign. However, the bedrock of our financial health remains with the PC(USA). We are most appreciative of our restored covenant relationship (renewed in 2008) and the inherent financial support of this ministry and function of the church. We greatly appreciate the PC(USA) telling the story of chaplains and the PCCMP on their webpage and in mailings.

Anyone wishing more information can check at our website: www.pccmp.org or call our office in Washington D.C., 202-244-4177. We will also gladly mail a DVD showing our chaplains and agency at work with the military. It is very helpful to those contemplating military chaplaincy as a call and for churches including the PCCMP in their mission budgets.

As instructed by the 204th General Assembly (1992), the General Assembly Mission Council presents to the General Assembly annually, the work of all task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies established by the General Assembly Mission Council, its divisions, or other assembly entities (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 144, 147, 277–78).

All ministries and the Executive Director’s Office were requested to disclose information on how many task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies were currently at work in their entity. Of the entities responding, sixty-five such groups are currently operating. Fifty-four of the groups were reported as having ongoing responsibilities. The other eleven groups have set completion dates with a written report expected by the entity, the General Assembly Mission Council, or the General Assembly itself. Whenever it is possible, the General Assembly Mission Council assigns tasks to an existing part of its structure. All persons serving on a board, committee, task force, or work group with an expected life of more than two years are selected through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process.

1. Evangelism & Church Growth
   b. Ongoing responsibilities: Mission Development Resource Committee, Ghost Ranch Governing Board, Stony Point Center Governing Board, Mountain Retreat Association Board of Trustees of Stock (Montreat).

2. Compassion, Peace & Justice
   b. Ongoing responsibilities: Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), Presbyterian Hunger Program Advisory Committee, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee, Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People, Jarvie Commonweal Service Committee.

3. Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women
4. Theology Worship & Education

Ongoing responsibilities: Committee on Theological Education.

5. World Mission

6. Vocation

Ongoing responsibility: Educator Certification Council.

7. Executive Director’s Office

a.(1) Advisory and Advocacy Committee Review Committee—ends with 219th General Assembly (2010)

(2) On-going responsibility: General Assembly Mission Council/Middle Governing Body Meeting Planning Team—September 2010. This is a short-term team that is established each year to plan for one meeting.

b. Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

(1) Teams and Work Groups:

   (1) Gun Violence Resolution Team—Report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

   (2) HIV/AIDS Resolution Team—Report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

   (3) Public Education Resolution Team—Report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

   (4) Theology of Compensation Update Resolution/Study Team—Report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

   (7) Economic Crisis Resolution Team (also following up Just Globalization Study Guide preparation)—Report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

(2) Ongoing responsibilities: Theological Educators for Presbyterian Social Witness (TEPSW)—annual conference with ongoing exchange of papers among seminary ethics professors and other ACSWP consultants; Colloquium on Policy Interpretation related to peacemaking, often co-sponsored with Peacemaking Program.

c. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns:

1. Introduction

   Out of the various “calls” to mission, justice, equality, affirmation, love, hope, and charity, the partnership of congregations and governing bodies works to achieve the goals of equal employment opportunity and affirmative action.

2. Our Goals

   As outlined in the Churchwide Plan for Affirmative Action and Equal Employment Opportunity, approved by the General Assembly in 1985, the church has accepted the EEO goals of 40 percent women and 20 percent racial ethnic as established by the General Assembly Mission Council.

3. How the Information Is Reported

   Entities of the General Assembly are reported separately as well as jointly. The following categories are reported:

   - General Assembly Mission Council PC(USA);
   - Office of the General Assembly (OGA);
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions (BOP);
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (FDN);
Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC); Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, Inc. (PILP); synods;
presbyteries;
thecological institutions;
conference centers
Jarvie Commonweal Service
Hubbard Press

4. Our Results

For 2008 and 2009, all reporting entities met the 40 percent goal for women. General Assembly Mission Council, Office of the General Assembly, conference centers, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (FDN), theological institutions, Jarvie Commonweal Service and synods met the 20 percent goal of racial ethnic persons. Churchwide totals met the 40 percent goal for women and the 20 percent goals for racial ethnic persons.

2009 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis
Prepared by Research Services, A Ministry of the General Assembly Mission Council

A. Overview

By action of the 197th General Assembly (1985), the General Assembly Mission Council is required to report annually the equal opportunity information of all PC(USA) agencies, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods.

At the request of the Office of Human Resources, Research Services handled the collection of data for the Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis for 2009. Based on the success of Web-based data collection for previous years (2005 through 2008 were handled by Research Services), we followed similar procedures.

A Web-based data collection instrument was developed, tested, and deployed by Research Services. A point of contact in each organization or entity was invited by email to provide data for the organization. (The original invitation is included here as Attachment A.) Initial e-mail invitations were sent January 20, 2010. Two reminder e-mails were sent to all non-responding organizations on January 28 and February 3, 2009. Responses were accepted until February 19, 2010.

B. Invited Organizations

The following agencies and organizations were requested to provide their workforce analysis data: Board of Pensions, General Assembly Mission Council, Hubbard Press, Jarvie Commonweal Service, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment & Loan Program, Inc., Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, Office of the General Assembly, and all conference centers, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods associated with the PC(USA).

C. Response Rate

Of 211 invited organizations, complete data were received from 144 organizations, for a response rate of 68 percent of all organizations. However, seven e-mail invitations were returned as bad e-mail addresses for which we could not find new e-mail addresses. This means EEO/AA data was provided by 70 percent of organizations to which e-mail invitations were delivered. Attachment B shows organizations that provided complete data. Of responding organizations, a majority (60 percent) used the Web form, and 40 percent (or 58) submitted hard copy by fax, e-mail, or interoffice mail.

D. Results

Attachment C shows the results for responding organizations and presents the percentages of employees by gender and racial ethnic category.

E. Recommendations for the Future

The changes and improvements put in place in recent years limited many of the problems that occurred previously. This year we received few calls from organizational representatives asking questions about the terms used on the form. Further, the ability to bypass the Web-based survey and fax the required information was something that quite a number found helpful.
Requesting this information in January seems to be more effective than doing so in December. This year, we received far fewer complaints about being a bad time of year for this process.

Nonetheless, two problems remain: (1) Using e-mail to invite more than 200 organizations to respond requires having current e-mail addresses for each organization. Despite using the most recent e-mail lists, considerable time was spent correcting e-mail addresses, and some could not be corrected. (2) Some organizational representatives questioned whether the General Assembly action applies to their organization. The action specifically mentions “agencies of the General Assembly, related schools, theological institutions, and synods.” The inclusion of conference centers and presbyteries in this process was questioned by some. Others argued that theological institutions are essentially independent of the General Assembly and should not be included.

Subj: Important General Assembly Mission Council 2009 EEO/AA Workforce Analysis Information Needed

We are compiling this information electronically again this year. Please follow the instructions below. A copy of the form is attached to this email. We suggest using this to gather the needed information before you access the survey on the Web. Please forward this information to the appropriate person in your organization if you are not the person responsible for your organization’s workforce analysis data.

- Go to the survey Web site at: surveys.pcusa.org/eeoa2009.aspx
- Enter the password XXXX assigned to your organization.
- Complete the workforce analysis form. (Definitions are provided below and on the attached form.)
- If you prefer, complete the form attached and fax it back (502-569-8736).

The deadline for your organization’s information is Friday, January 29, 2010. [later extended into February]

If you need additional information or have questions, please contact Roxanna Farris (888-728-7228, x 5131 or roxanna.farris@pcusa.org).

If you have trouble with the survey Web site, please contact Research Services (888-728-7228, x 2040 or research@pcusa.org).

Note: Sometimes an organization’s firewall prevents transmission of responses to the survey site. If the survey returns you to a page after you’ve entered your responses, please re-enter your responses. It should work on the second attempt. We apologize for this problem.

We appreciate your assistance and cooperation.

Definitions for Use in Completing the Form

Racial Ethnic Categories: These are current categories defined by the federal government for EEO AA reporting. Note that each employee can be counted in only one category.

- American Indian and/or Alaska Native (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of North and South America (including Central America), and who maintain tribal affiliation or community attachment.
- Asian (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of the Far East, Southeast Asia, or the Indian subcontinent, including, for example, Cambodia, China, India, Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippine Islands, Thailand, and Vietnam.
- Black and/or African American (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the black racial groups of Africa.
- Hispanic and/or Latino: All persons of Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Central or South American, or other Spanish culture or origin, regardless of race.
- Native Hawaiian or Other Pacific Islander (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the peoples of Hawaii, Guam, Samoa, or other Pacific Islands.
- Two or More Races (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons who identify with more than one of the other racial categories.
- White (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of Europe, the Middle East, or North Africa.

Other Definitions:

- Exempt: Employees who are not entitled to overtime pay (i.e., professional staff including clergy).
- Non-exempt: Employees who are entitled to overtime pay (e.g., secretarial, clerical, and custodial staff).
- Full-time: Employees who work at least 30 hours weekly.
- Part-time: Employees who work fewer than 30 hours weekly.

The General Assembly Mission Council Manual of Operations, page 1, states, “The General Assembly Mission Council may change those appendixes to the Manual of Operations that are within its purview following a first reading, which may be electronic, and adoption at a subsequent plenary session. First reading and action may take place during the same session of the General Assembly Mission Council. The General Assembly Mission Council Executive Committee shall submit a written report of changes to the appendixes to the next General Assembly.”

In accordance with the above, the General Assembly Mission Council Executive Committee reports the following changes to the Appendixes of the Manual of Operations, as approved by the General Assembly Mission Council between the 218th General Assembly (2008) and the 219th General Assembly (2010):

1. GAMC Meeting of March 24–25, 2009:

   Appendixes 1 and 5—The GAMC approved changes to the Appendix 1.D. Closed Meetings as follows (Deletions are shown with a double strike-through and additions are in italic):

   “D. Closed Meetings

   “Closed meetings shall be held in accordance with the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy (see Appendix 5 below). In closed meetings, only voting members of the Council, (both voting and non-voting) at-large members of Stewardship Committee, and Audit Committee, and other persons explicitly invited by the Council to serve are to be present. The Council will determine, by majority vote, that it wishes to go into if its members wish to deliberate in a closed meeting. Minutes kept of a closed meeting may be approved only in a closed meeting. All present in a closed meeting are honor-bound to keep the confidentiality of the discussion of the confidential all discussions occurring during the closed meeting. Ordinarily, when the use of a closed meeting can be anticipated, the GAC chair or Executive Director will provide advance notice to the GAC that a closed meeting is recommended and the reason for closing.

   “A separate policy exists governing non-business gatherings. Refer to Appendix ___, Media and Visitor Policy for Non-Business Gatherings.”

   Appendix 5—General Assembly Open Meeting Policy—The GAMC approved deleting this policy from the GAMC Manual of Operations, and to place the policy within Appendix 1 immediately following “D. Closed Meetings” as listed above.

   Background for This Action

   The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is subject to the policies of the General Assembly. The present GAMC Closed Meeting Policy is much broader than permitted by the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy. Changing the policy to that which is stated by the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy allows for others to be invited to attend the closed session as deemed appropriate.

2. GAMC Meeting of February 23–26, 2010

The GAMC voted to approve changes to Appendixes 1 and 3 as follows:
a. Appendix I, Section II. Closed Meetings (current page 6)—Add a note following the GA Open Meeting Policy to include the action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) directing entities to post their open meetings on the PC(USA) Calendar Web page.

Background for This Action

Including the action of the General Assembly keeps this directive with the policy so that it is not lost or forgotten.

b. Appendix I, Section V.e.—(current pages 10, 11), Delete 3. Personnel Committee, re-number the following committees, and adjust the Manual as follows:

- Appendix I, Section III, B. Vice-Chair (current page 7)—Delete #3 “Serve as the Chair of the GAMC Personnel Committee”, and insert a new # 3, “Lead and moderate the Executive Committee in all personnel matters as listed in Section IV.A.1.d. (15).”

- Appendix I, Section V. A.1.d. (current page 9), add a new #15 to the duties of the Executive Committee: “Act regarding personnel matters of the GAMC as follows: [list duties of Personnel Committee as found in former Appendix 1, Section V.e], and renumber the following responsibilities of the Executive Committee.

Background for This Action

Including Personnel in the responsibilities of the Executive Committee instead of having the Executive Committee act as an independent Personnel Committee, allows for ease of acting upon personnel matters, reporting to the GAMC, and record-keeping. The vice chair of the GAMC will still lead the Executive Committee in discussion/action on personnel matters.

c. Appendix I, Section V. A. 3. “General Assembly Mission Council Nominating Committee, b. Responsibilities, #14—(current page 12). Change the number of members nominated to the Mountain Retreat Association, Inc.’s Board of Directors from 4 to 2.

Background for This Action

This change was requested by Pete Peery, president of Montreat, and Linda Valentine, GAMC Executive Director. It has the support of Linda Scholl, GAMC Nominating Committee chair. The change will allow the Mountain Retreat Association Board to include additional members to bring diversity and expertise.

Background for This Action

The Presbyterian Women voted to incorporate this past summer, effective July 16, 2009. The incorporation charter requires the board to have a GAMC voting member as a member of the board. Since the charter was effective July 16, Carol Adcock, GAMC chair, appointed Joyce Smith to the board. The new #16 will allow the GAMC member to be nominated by the GAMC Nominating Committee for election by the full GAMC. This is the same process used to nominate and elect GAMC members to other agency boards.

e. Appendix 3, “A Vision for Governance for the General Assembly Council,” remove references to Appendix 3, found on pages 3 & 5, and renumber appendixes.

Background for This Action

Item 09-NB

[The assembly approved Item 09-NB. See pp. 72, 83.]

Item 09-New Business. Convocation on Criminal Justice.

That the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) provide up to $10,000 in 2011 to support a broad convocation of interested individuals, to be called by PHEWA, to consider and propose the creation of a Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) network on criminal justice for education and advocacy ministries to the 220th General Assembly (2012) and recommend a funding strategy.

[Financial Implications: 2010: $0; 2011: $10,000; 2012: $0 (GAMC)]

C-4
Item 10-01

[In response to Item 10-01, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See p. 34.]

Alternate Resolution: The General Assembly strongly condemns the gratuitous trivialization of the use of the name of the Lord in the media and directs MRTI to communicate this condemnation to any companies in which it owns stock that own media content or media distribution companies and asks the appropriate office of the General Assembly to make available materials for use by local congregations for conversations with children, youth, and adults to help them determine the effects of media content for their lives.

On Protesting the Blatant Disregard for the Sanctity of Our Lord’s Name in Motion Pictures and Public Broadcasting—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

The Presbytery of the Grand Canyon overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to protest in the strongest possible terms the blatant disregard for the sanctity of our Lord’s name in motion pictures and public broadcasting by the entertainment industry and direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to send letters to officials of organizations representing the motion picture and public broadcasting industries and members of the United States Congress that express the desires of this overture.

Rationale

Approval by the General Assembly would be an important stand on an issue that is sensitive to many members.

In a time when Presbyterians are often seen by others as bowing to the norms of secular culture, the overture takes a stand against an abhorrent practice.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-01 calls for the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the Stated Clerk to communicate to film and radio executives a strong protest against “the blatant disregard for the sanctity of our Lord’s name,” and to communicate this as well to members of Congress.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly to approve Item 10-01 with the following amendment: [Text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of the Grand Canyon overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to protest in the strongest possible terms the blatant disregard for the sanctity of our Lord’s name in motion pictures and public broadcasting by the entertainment industry and direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to send letters to officials of organizations representing the motion picture and public broadcasting industries and members of the United States Congress that express the desires of this overture, supporting measures to allow consumers and citizens not to subsidize degrading and offensive material. In particular, cable TV subscribers should not be forced to pay for objectionable “basic” channels when they ask that such channels be blocked, and the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) should continue to apply considerations of common good, fairness, human dignity, and consumer protection, as well as free speech, in performing its regulatory function. This action should also be referred to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s Washington Office and Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment for implementation.”

Rationale

The proponents of this overture are correct in understanding that many Presbyterians are offended by much of what passes for entertainment in film and on television. They also seem aware that it is not our Presbyterian way simply to denounce things. Thus, beyond the good basics of writing the corporations and our elected representatives, the proposed addition speaks to ways to improve a situation that has evolved, or devolved, over the past fifty years.

1. Market and technology factors have diversified the range of media and delivery systems for all cultural products. Broadcast TV is only used by 20 percent of households, for example, with satellite at 15 percent and cable TV at 65 percent. The internet, DVD players, and other factors make it hard to restrict viewer and listener choices—even in countries with totalitarian regimes.

2. Until 1993, radio and broadcast frequencies were considered public goods that could be used in the public interest by private companies, with those companies obeying some limits on negative content and providing some amount of positive content. In 1993, such frequencies were auctioned off at “fair market value,” with limited public access exceptions. This contributed to the erosion of policies, such as the “fairness doctrine,” that required channels to provide opposing viewpoints that limited the amount of unchallenged exaggeration, lying, and abusive language.

3. Under the second Bush Administration, FCC Chairman Keith Martin sought to get a rule passed, as summarized in ACSWP’s amendment, that would allow cable TV subscribers not to pay for “basic” channels they found offensive. This remains one of the few ways to resist the general toleration of lower standards on television. It is technically and financially feasible to block channels and cost-out their percentage of cable bills; claims that this is censorship are simply inaccurate.

4. The degradation of cultural values through cursing, humiliating “reality” programs, pornography, and grotesque levels of violence and horror is of serious consequence to the capacity for worship and respect for human dignity. Various Christian networks and websites provide alternatives but it should be understood that major corporations set the terms for most of what is available on TV, radio, and the Internet.

5. Christian ethicist Alisdair MacIntyre summarizes some of the costs of the loss of concepts such as honor, insult, blasphemy, and obscenity, among others, in “Corporate Modernity and Moral Judgment: Are They Mutually Exclusive?” in Ethics and Problems of the 21st Century, K.E. Goodpaster and K.M. Sayre, eds. (Notre Dame & London: University of Notre Dame Press, 1979). Many others have also addressed the value of the First Amendment in relation to the costs and benefits of corporate media and cultural trends.

Item 10-02

On Celebrating the 100th Anniversary of the Passage of the First Social Pronouncement of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the passage of the first social pronouncement of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. at the 1910 General Assembly. The social statement, based on the Social Creed of 1908 passed at the organizing of the Federal Council of Churches, called attention to fourteen social problems related to industrial issues facing the nation. In the light of this precedent, we call for the promotion and education within our congregations and presbyteries of the new Social Creed for the Twenty-first Century passed by our 218th General Assembly (2008), which calls attention to the twenty social problems related to globalization. [We also ask the assembly to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to distribute the resource, Connecting to the Creed, to presbyteries and congregations. We also ask for Connecting the Creed to be posted and provided in digital form by the Office of the General Assembly and printed in limited quantity for presbytery resource centers and other uses. Further, the General Assembly urges the General Assembly Mission Council to include a celebration of the Social Creed for the Twenty-first Century at the next Big Tent.]

[Financial Implication: (2010) $0; (2011) $1,700; (2012) $0 (Per Capita—GAMC)]

Rationale

Industrial conditions in the early 20th century set concerned Christians to calling the churches to appropriate action to remedy the social ills impacting an industrializing U.S. In 1908, at the creation of the Federal Council of Churches, the organizing assembly passed the Social Creed of the Churches. The Social Creed, which outlined specific industrial issues within U.S. society, laid the foundation for the churches’ social and education policies in the next decades.

In 2008, in recognition of a century of social awareness and action on behalf of these issues, the National Council of Churches and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) passed a contemporary Social Creed speaking to the social issues confronting citizens in the 21st century.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Chicago overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the first social pronouncement of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., the Social Creed of 1908; to promote the Social Creed for the 21st Century adopted by the 218th General Assembly (2008); to educate presbyteries and churches about it; and to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to distribute Connecting to the Creed to presbyteries and congregations.
Connecting to the Creed
Toward a New Social Awakening

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 10-03 be approved with the following amendment: [Text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to adopt a statement urging the United States Congress to pass a law to cap interest rates on credit card lending and direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to the president of the United States and the U.S. Congress.”

Rationale

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved the Social Creed for the 21st Century at the 100th anniversary of the Social Creed of 1908. The 1908 creed focused attention on issues of social justice related to the nation’s industrialization, particularly the rights of workers. In a similar spirit, but with a broader focus, the Social Creed for the 21st Century addresses serious social issues facing Christians at the start of a new century. It is important to the contemporary church’s understanding of the tradition from which it has come and to which it belongs that it celebrate this one hundred years’ tradition of faithful witness to “… the promotion of social righteousness; and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world” (Book of Order, G-1.0200). The Big Tent gathering between General Assemblies is a highly appropriate forum for celebration and education about the Social Creed.

Materials describing this history and facilitating its study are available on the Web site of the Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy at <http://www.pcusa.org/acswp>, including the following: Connecting to the Social Creed; the Social Creed for the 21st Century in English, as well as in Korean and Spanish; Toward a New Social Awakening, a 28 minute DVD; Social Creed poster; Prayers for a New Social Awakening, edited by Rev. Christian Iosso and Rev. Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty; and To Do Justice: Using the Creed in Deed, edited by Rev. Rebecca Todd-Peters and Rev. Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty. The advantage of distributing the resource requested is that it is already designed, with some copies already in print.

On Urging the United States Congress to Cap Interest Rates on Credit Card Lending—From the Presbytery of Salem.

[The Presbytery of Salem respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to adopt a statement urging the United States Congress to pass a law to cap interest rates on credit card lending and direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to the president of the United States and the U.S. Congress.]

[The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urges the United States Congress to enact legislation to cap consumer credit interest rates governing credit cards, payday loans, auto title loans, home equity loans, and other frequently usurious practices, to support a consumer finance protection agency independent of banks and other financially interested parties to ensure that such legislation is implemented, and to encourage publicly-owned banks and credit unions to provide more consumer choice and more regional and local investment, and to direct the Stated Clerk and appropriate General Assembly Mission Council offices to communicate this action to the president of the United States, the U.S. Congress, and state governors and state banking commissions.

[The 217th General Assembly (2006) of the PC(USA) approved a report, A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the Twenty-First Century, calling for measures including, but not limited to, ‘... efforts to provide more effective and less costly financial services to people who are now forced to utilize high-cost alternative financial resources....’ and advocate ‘... change of state and federal policies and legislation that allow lenders to take advantage of either the naiveté or financial plight of borrowers ...’ (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 804–805).

[The 219th General Assembly (2010) directs the ACSWP to produce print and interactive online resources (or make available existing resources) that can be used to educate consumers about predatory lending and encourage healthy borrowing practices and actively promote these resources throughout the church.

[The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) urges the credit industry to develop specific credit products with low interest rates and appropriate maximums that extend credit and credit counseling to persons in poverty.]
Rationale

The biblical witness condemns usury as stealing—usury defined as charging any interest on a loan, except to a foreigner.

The Reformed tradition differentiated between loans to individuals and businesses, defining interest as exorbitant interest, and forbidding charging interest to poor persons. The tradition permitted charging interest to businesses because the business and the lender would receive mutual benefit.

The Book of Order of the PC(USA) in G-2.0500a(3) and (4) lifts up “[a] faithful stewardship that shuns ostentation and seeks proper use of the gifts of God’s creation”; and “[t]he recognition of the human tendency to idolatry and tyranny, which calls the people of God to work for the transformation of society by seeking justice and living in obedience to the Word of God.”

The 217th General Assembly (2006) of the PC(USA) advocated church-wide education on financial stewardship and further advocated for federal and state policies on fair lending practices.

A faith grounding mandates us to care for the poor, and, as it indicts us personally and corporately not only for complicity in the sin of usury but also for our failure to live in ways that allow balance between profit and need, the Presbytery of Salem calls on the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) to approve a statement urging the United States Congress to pass a law to cap interest rates on credit card lending.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-03 calls for the 219th General Assembly (2010) to urge the United States Congress to pass a law to cap interest rates on credit card lending.

“… the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [to adopt a statement urging] [urges] the United States Congress [to pass a law][ to enact legislation] to cap[ consumer credit] interest rates [governing credit cards, payday loans, auto title loans, home equity loans and other frequently usurious practices] [on credit card lending][, to support a consumer finance protection agency independent of banks and other financially interested parties to ensure that such legislation is implemented, and to encourage publicly-owned banks and credit unions to provide more consumer choice and more regional and local investment, and[ to] direct the Stated Clerk[ and appropriate General Assembly Mission Council offices] to communicate this action to the president of the United States, and the U. S. Congress [and state governors and state banking commissions].”

The ACSWP also advises the assembly to replace the second paragraph of the Rationale, for clarity of reference, with a more specific reference to the report approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006), A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the Twenty-First Century. The ACSWP suggests the following substitute wording: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and strike-through. Text to be added is shown with brackets and underline.]

“[In 2008, in recognition of a century of social awareness and action on behalf of these issues, the National Council of Churches and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) passed a contemporary Social Creed speaking to the social issues confronting citizens in the 21st century.] [The 217th General Assembly (2006) of the PC(USA) approved a report, A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the Twenty-First Century, calling for measures including, but not limited to, “… efforts to provide more effective and less costly financial services to people who are now forced to utilize high-cost alternative financial resources…”, and advocate “… change of state and federal policies and legislation that allow lenders to take advantage of either the naïveté or financial plight of borrowers …” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 804–805).]”

Rationale

These changes would allow the church to speak more broadly in support of legislation to restrict interest on payday loans, car title loans, and other usurious practices, and to address the need to protect all consumers and borrowers from overly complex and risky financial investments. This is a very complex subject, especially in the current economy.

The ACSWP also notes the basis for action in the major report “Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development,” approved by the 208th General Assembly (1996). This report deals primarily with policies for global human development; however, many of the biblical and theological principles cited in this report are applicable in the matter of individual indebtedness. The following brief excerpt is an example:

… The repayment of debts and interest at the expense of the basics of life raises serious questions of justice…. Justice is an expression of love in social relationships and in community and national life. It is not merely a legalistic rending of another’s “dues” but is fairness combined with compassion and kindness. It is both an individual responsibility and a responsibility of government. And while justice is to be done at all, the persons of prime concern are those most vulnerable: the poor, the needy, the hungry, the widow, the fatherless, and the sojourner or stranger…

Without making simplistic comparison between that [biblical] time and our time, we have to confess that greed, expressed in ever more sophisticated ways, remains prominent. The burdens and benefits of production and distribution are not shared so that all may participate in sustainable sufficiency…

(Matines, 1996, pp. 539–540)

Recently, both the Christian Century (“The People’s Interest,” by Jess J. DeConto, January 12, 2010) and Sojourners (“Leveling the Playing Field,” interview with Elizabeth Warren, April 2010) provide stories on Christian efforts to improve economic fairness.

A Resolution to Study Violence Against Women and Children on the Mexico-U.S. Border—from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) do the following:

1. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to create a study group to examine the issue of violence against women and children along the United States-Mexico border[, and in particular the circumstances in Ciudad Juarez, Chihuahua, Mexico,] in consultation with [Presbyterian Border Ministries, the National Presbyterian Church of Mexico,] the Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus, Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Enhancement [Support Office, Presbyterian Women, ACWC, and presbyteries along the border, seeking concrete actions that the PC(USA), its agencies, congregations and partners, both in the U.S. and in Mexico, can implement to effectively impact this tragic issue within our own church and culture, as well as our neighbors, in a timely manner].

2. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to create bilingual study materials in consultation with the Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus and Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Enhancement for congregations directly dealing with and seeking education around issues of violence against women, including education surrounding issues connected to “machismo” cultures.

3. Direct GAMC to continue their work on the border and denounce violence against women and children on the Mexican-United States border.]

[Financial Implications: (2010) $10,980; (2011) $24,470; (2012) $0 (Per Capita—GAMC)]

Rationale

The 208th General Assembly (1996) directed the former General Assembly Council (GAC) to “give priority to new programs and funding to those programs that benefit women and children, particularly the women and children in economically impoverished and marginalized communities … .” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 610).
For more than fifteen years, women in Ciudad Juárez, Chihuahua, Mexico have been disappearing. Amnesty International reported in 2006 that over eleven years, more than 400 women and girls were killed or disappeared. The scene of violence and murder in Juárez has only escalated throughout 2009 as a result of combat against drug cartels, including an increase in the numbers of women both murdered and disappeared. On the occasions when these women or girls are found, they have typically been brutally raped, mutilated, and murdered. Some suspect human trafficking plays a role in these disappearances. Others believe the disappearances could be related to cult activity. Still others wonder if the violence is not connected to the increase of women working in the city’s factories while men continue to struggle to find work.

Whatever the case, the situation continues to be an unresolved tragedy that affects the daily lives of people living on the border. Aside from the disappearance of women along the border, women in the midst of the violence there are subject to unjust labor conditions, sexual slavery, hate crimes, and separation from family and children.

Clearly, this is an issue that affects those who find themselves already largely marginalized by society—women and children. As the Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus has also noted, this is an issue that directly affects men and women within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), particularly those living on or near the border, but also all who claim the call to follow Christ and serve “the least of these” (Mt. 25:40).

As a denomination, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has not taken any official action related to this situation since 2004–2005, when a letter was sent to government officials urging action regarding this situation. The Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus brought this situation back to the attention of ACWC, who now recommends the church again take action. The ACWC asked that the Stated Clerk and Moderator of the General Assembly write a letter asking the governor of Chihuahua and the president of Mexico to take action to resolve the violence.

In direct response to the letter received from the Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus, ACWC also commends to the church the importance of examining and educating people about cultural traditions that may contribute to discrimination and violence against women. As noted by the Hispanic-Latino Caucus, there is a need for “re-education” surrounding the culture of “machismo” within Hispanic-Latino communities.

The issue of violence against women and girls along the border has for too long gone unaddressed or under-addressed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It is time for the church to draw its attention there, to confront the violence and the systemic nature of that violence fostered by some Hispanic-Latino cultures. In light of our commitment as a denomination to giving priority to funding programs that benefit women and children in marginalized communities, giving attention to and seeking justice for the women and children of Juárez seems only fitting.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-06

Comment on Item 10-06—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) affirms that the church should denounce violence against women and children on the Mexico-U.S. border and around the world. The scope of the recommendations of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), however, is vast. The issue of violence exists on both sides of the border. Studying this matter will not ensure that this situation will be addressed by the Mexican government or those with the responsibility of providing a safe environment for women, children, and the citizens of Mexico, particularly those in Ciudad Juárez. Further, the creation of bilingual study materials by the GAMC around issues of violence against women and “machismo” cultures, to be distributed to Presbyterians in the U.S., will not unravel the growing violence in Ciudad Juárez and other cities in Mexico, much of it linked to drug traffickers.

Violence against women and children along the Mexico-U.S. border might better be addressed by Presbyterian Border Ministry, a joint ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the National Presbyterian Church of Mexico, http://www.presbyterianborderministry.org. We commend Presbyterian Border Ministry in their assistance to visiting mission teams up and down the border region, helping them to become more aware of the situation and the causes of violence in the region. This has led some groups to advocacy, appealing to the U.S. government to take responsibility for arms trafficking, and pressuring the Mexican government to take responsibility for the violence against women in Juárez. We also commend and encourage churches on both sides of the border at Juárez, Mexico, and in El Paso, Texas, to continue to urge local and state authorities to investigate each case and to utilize radio, correspondence, and rallies to highlight this important issue.

A Resolution to Explore the Intersection of Gender and Race—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) request the Office of General Assembly to request that presbyteries explore local resources and conduct training in cultural proficiency on the intersection of race with gender, using as a resource the book, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, in recognition of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s decade of hearing, singing, and celebrating the voices and contributions of women of color.

Rationale

The 218th General Assembly (2008) declared 2009 to 2019 a “Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God” in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In response to this declaration, the Women of Color Joint Working Group was formed as a permanent committee to monitor the church’s response to issues and concerns of racial ethnic women in the church. (See Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Report of the Women of Color Consultation Task Force to the 218th General Assembly (2008); Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 964–77).

Since the Women of Color Joint Working Group was created, they have been working on promoting this decade of recognizing racial ethnic women. Unfortunately, efforts to spread the news throughout the church have yet to be very successful. For this reason, ACWC is requesting that presbyteries be asked to draw their attention to this General Assembly declaration and actively work to dismantle the racism and sexism that exists within the church and society.

The book, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, published by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), documents some of the history of the experience of women of color in the PC(USA) and makes suggestions on confronting the unique experiences of racism and sexism that women of color experience. While the Women of Color Joint Working Group is officially responsible for monitoring the church on these matters, it is essential that the church as a whole collaborate in these efforts.

Given that at the time of the 219th General Assembly (2010), we will be one and a half years into the “Decade of Hearing and Singing” with little to no recognition having been given to this General Assembly mandated celebration, the time for the church to act on what it has put into writing is well overdue. Asking presbyteries to join in this celebration by actively working to educate church members on the intersection of gender and race is one small and overdue step in hearing and singing new songs to God.

The book Hearing and Singing New Songs to God is available for free through The Presbyterian Marketplace (http://www.pcusa.org/marketplace), or the document can be downloaded free online at: http://www.pcusa.org/acwc/wocctaskforcereport02-22-08.pdf.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 10-07 be approved.

Rationale

This item is regarding a joint task force originally formed with the cooperation of ACREC and ACWC to study the position of women of color in church and society. The ACREC has been represented in the study and the task force and urges the church to explore the intersection between gender and race.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-07

Comment on Item 10-07—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) agrees with the intent of Item 10-07, and offers the following insertion to direct which entity will be responsible for responding to the action: [Text to be added is shown as italic with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) request that presbyteries explore local resources and conduct training in cultural proficiency on the intersection of race with gender, using as a resource the book, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, in recognition of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s decade of hearing, singing, and celebrating the voices and contributions of women of color.”

This amendment will assure that if the General Assembly approves this action, it will be referred to the Office of General Assembly. The GACOR is lodged and staffed through the Office of General Assembly and will commit itself to monitoring this requested action.

Recognizing a similar function within its own mission and mandate and outlined in its Manual of Operations, the General Assembly Committee on Representation has a sister committee at each level of the denominational structure with the exception of the session.

The GACOR uses the tools of cultural proficiency in its Biennial Synod COR Trainings to equip committees on representation for their work. Recognizing the deeper understanding made possible when race and gender are examined together and as they intersect and affect women of color in particular, the GACOR supports the action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) in approving the report and recommendations of the Women of Color Consultation Task Force, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.

Each committee on representation includes a function to be “… a continuing resource to the particular governing body” (G-9.0105c.) and in doing so, encourages training at every governing body level to encourage diverse and inclusive leadership and equip the body for inclusiveness.

A Resolution Supporting the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW)—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct the Office of the Stated Clerk to send a letter to the president and Congress calling on the United States government to ratify, without reservations, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women.

Rationale

The United Nations (UN) has a commitment to promoting human rights, and within that commitment, recognition that securing and promoting the rights of women specifically still requires intentional focused attention throughout the world. For this reason, the work of the U.N. Commission on the Status of Women has been essential for providing crucial declarations that protect women’s rights.

In December of 1979, the UN adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), a document created by the Commission on the Status of Women as a comprehensive agreement to end discrimination against women and girls around the globe. Since then, 186 countries have ratified the convention, committing themselves to the standards laid out by the document that call for equal treatment of women in all spheres of life, including education, employment, health care, and legal rights in confronting violence. Only eight countries in the UN have not ratified CEDAW, including Iran, Somalia, Sudan, and the United States of America.

The U.S. failure to ratify the treaty signals an unwillingness to commit to the standards of just treatment for women spelled out by the document. As a denomination committed to struggling against sexism, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has explicitly articulated in the Articles of Agreement (Section 5.6) its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. It was appropriate, then, that the 199th General Assembly (1987) asked that the U.S. ratify CEDAW.

With the thirtieth anniversary of the adoption of CEDAW on December 2009, attention was again drawn to the failure of the U.S. to ratify this international treaty and commit the country to these global standards for women’s rights. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) requests that the PC(USA) reaffirm its commitment to gender equality and to continue its prophetic mission for justice by submitting a renewed request to the U.S. government for the ratification of CEDAW.
Item 10-09

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010), affirming the values of human rights, covenant community, public responsibility, vocation-affirming work, and sustainability, approve the following recommendations to be communicated by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and advocated by appropriate offices of the General Assembly Mission Council:

1. That the Stated Clerk be requested to send a copy of this social involvement report to each [pastor, congregation] in the denomination.

2. That the appropriate PC(USA) ministry area or areas, including the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), [the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns,] be directed to develop a study for the 220th General Assembly (2012) that assesses the long-term implications of our current economic trends and practices, including their impact on the church itself, and provides appropriate recommendations for consideration by members, congregations, presbyteries, and local, state, and federal government. This assessment should center on the role of fairness and justice in our economy, with particular attention to growing inequality, the decline of the middle class, the tax structure, the shifting makeup of the labor force and its effects on employee rights, the role of regulatory agencies in protecting the public interest, and access to environmental resources that is equitable and sustainable. [The study should also reflect the concern of the impact of the economic crisis on women and incorporate case studies of both women and men.]

3. That congregations be invited to create within their midst ways of supporting [individual, unemployed persons and, if appropriate, their families][persons and families impacted by unemployment, under-employment, and economic downturn].

4. That congregations and families be urged to meet together to discuss actions and behavioral changes that they might undertake to lower their consumption, live more simply, and share their resources more generously.

5. That all members, congregations, and presbyteries be requested to advocate for the preservation and strengthening of public services essential for the public good, e.g., education, libraries, fire and police protection, and others as appropriate to local circumstances.

Rationale

A. Troubled Times

Headlines in every community, small town, rural area, and urban city, put in bold print what lives in many homes as personal pain and wrenching fear: State jobless rate climbs higher, National unemployment now at 10.2 percent, Underemployment at 17 percent, One in four families suffer job loss in past year, Many youth have no career ladder to climb, Pension losses estimated in trillions, Weak job market fuels more foreclosures, Personal bankruptcies at record high, State budgets strapped, Cities struggle to provide basic services, No police response to breaking and entering, Requests for food assistance soar, 49 million Americans hungry, Poverty rising.¹

These losses to human well-being and dignity impact each of our congregations in some way. Few pastors today have lived through such difficult times. In the past one could count on community resources to help with a family in stress. Today community service organizations themselves are struggling to survive. Community amenities that soften the hard edges of life, such as libraries, recreational centers, neighborhood parks, youth sports, and school bands, are being cut from government budgets just as more families need them. Even the basic foundations of community life, police and fire departments, school systems and community colleges, public transportation, and infrastructure, are being cut back. Many communities are unable to maintain what were once considered essential services.

As we wrestle with how to respond to the growing human needs in our own communities and congregations, we learn that other populations are also battered by the consequences of suddenly unreliable economic theories. Hard won reductions in poverty achieved in many countries during the 1990s have been too quickly reversed.² More than one billion people worldwide are undernourished and need greater emergency food response. We are told that a child dies every six seconds from malnutrition.³ But we have been hearing about world hunger for a lifetime. Now, as hunger, job loss, homelessness, underemployment, loss of health insurance, and other blows to family well-being appear in our own neighborhoods, perhaps we begin to realize that for some in the human family such deprivation, and worse, has been a way of life for generations. What media describe as a new economic crisis is not at all new for too many people. It is not new to some of our communities and churches even here in the United States. Some of our urban and rural churches, having struggled for decades with depression level conditions as daily realities, are further tightening their already too-tight belts to keep doors open and compassion flowing to ever growing numbers of God’s children in need. As in the Great Depression, a growing number of congregations will be forced to close.

Other headlines project a vastly different reality. “Wall Street profits return, big bonuses likely.” “Wealth gap widens: Chasm between wealthiest households and everyone else has grown more than 50 percent since 1960s.” “Wealth inequality is vast and growing.” Compensation at the largest investment banks for 2009 is projected to total around $140 billion. This continuing reward structure increases the danger of our becoming more of a class society, with limited social mobility for many and political control by powerful interests and elites. We learn that the United States has the highest rate of economic inequality among all industrialized nations. In spite of our wealth, we learn that a comparison of national health indicators ranks the United States as number thirty-seven in the community of nations. We wonder why that is and whether it matters. How are Christians to evaluate this economy, our roles in it, and our responsibilities to it? And if the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a “middle class church,” how do we adapt when the middle class declines?

These questions are sharpened as we face the realization that the billions of dollars spent to stabilize the economy, through the Troubled Asset Recovery Program (TARP) and other parts of the stimulus package, have helped an even-more concentrated financial sector return to profitability while unemployment remains dramatically high and the U.S. manufacturing sector continues to evaporate. While the decline of manufacturing began earlier and is due partly to a deliberately undervalued Chinese currency, the tilt toward massive balance of payments deficits and high consumer debt also reflects the growth of the financial sector over the past thirty years. Even with gigantic infusions of public money, bank lending has been limited and consumer finance protections have been stubbornly resisted, particularly in the area of credit card fees. Of more consequence to overall economic stability, the incentives for speculative currency “bets,” leveraged buyouts, junk bonds, collateralized debt obligations, and credit default swaps—components of the credit meltdown—remain largely unregulated and allowed to impact consumer finance. It is this nonproducing part of the economy, “Wall Street,” and its finance lobby, which spent $476 million on the 2008 election campaign alone, that has benefited while “Main Street” and most family budgets have suffered. No wonder that many prominent economists, including some who were instrumental in conceptualizing our current laissez-faire economic model, now admit that their theories were flawed. Others go further in labeling our economically troubled times as a “global crisis of American capitalism.”

B. The Church’s Witness

At a moment like this, it may be that we are more willing to ask questions that have long engaged the minds of Presbyterians, even if rarely heard in our society at large. When we are stretched to understand how, who, and, more deeply, the meaning of it all, perhaps we are better prepared to reconsider the insights and wisdom of our biblical and theological traditions regarding the oikonomia, the economy: its impact on our lives through production, distribution, and consumption behaviors. As Christians, especially Christians of the Reformed tradition, this may be the moment to reaffirm that the management of our lives through any economy is always part of our response to God’s oikonomia, God’s own work of creation, redemption, and reconciliation. Economic systems are not “laws unto themselves … free of religious and moral constraints …” To believe so is a denial of God’s sovereignty. Our Reformed tradition teaches us that we are called to shape the economic system, as we are called to shape every aspect of our lives, as a service to God. In 1993, the 205th General Assembly reaffirmed this principle:

Churches in the Reformed tradition are sustained by worship, make corporate confessions of faith, and are known for their engagement with the public order. This is not without reason. For Reformed Christians, God is at the center of life in all its varied facets. God is active in the world as its creator and redeemer, neither staying on the sidelines nor being contained within certain boundaries. Churches seek to witness to God in public life because God is present there.

Therefore, we Presbyterians evaluate any economic system not simply on the basis of the material goods and services it provides, but especially on the basis of its human consequences: what it is doing to people, what it is doing with people, and what it is doing for people, particularly the most vulnerable among us. In our tradition, economic behavior, like all behavior, must be subject to moral scrutiny. For this reason the church must speak to the present economic crisis, to the devastation it has brought, and to the hope to which we bear witness: that in Christ a more just order is arising.

C. Economics in Biblical and Reformed Traditions

Despite the complexity of modern life, the rise of a global economy, and the invention of financial instruments not fully understood by even the smartest Wall Street inhabitants, the church continues to speak from its unshakable foundation:

“The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and all those who live in it” (Ps. 24:1, NRSV).
From this foundation, this insistence that all humans belong to God and all creation is owned by God, the church asserts that the secular economy—the business of production, marketing, distribution, and consumption—exists within and under God’s management. Biblical examples of economic values abound. The Jubilee traditions in Leviticus 25 speak to the social harm caused by unrelinquished debt and its resulting servitude. They speak to the response of the righteous. Those who have legally accumulated wealth due to the misfortunes of others are called upon to return it to those families from whom it originally came. Centuries of prophetic indictments of poverty caused by landowners’ abandonment of social responsibilities and absence of compassion equate justice with true knowledge and worship of God (for example, Am. 5:21–24). Jesus describes assistance to the neediest, the sick, the naked, and the imprisoned, as service to the Son of Man (Mt. 25:31–46). He proclaims woe to the rich and sated after blessing the poor and hungry (Lk. 6:20–26). Biblical economic values demand nothing less than the establishment of economic well-being for all, those present today and those who will follow us, as the purpose of society’s economy and its faithful response to God.

Thus, any economy, regardless of size or form, is judged by its capacity to serve the needs of people, particularly the most vulnerable. This has been the historical witness of the Reformed tradition. For example, the Westminster Larger Catechism interpreted the commandment, “Thou shalt not steal,” to include these positive economic activities:

… giving and lending freely according to our abilities and the necessity of others; moderation of our judgments, wills, and affections concerning worldly goods; …frugality; … and an endeavor by all just and lawful means to procure, preserve, and further the wealth and outward estate of others, as well as our own” (7.251).14

In a 21st century response to contemporary lending practices, the 217th General Assembly (2006) stated that “a proper understanding of usury for this (or any other century) will attend to the business practices surrounding lending.” It proposed three criteria for evaluating lending practices: does the law or practice (a) “take advantage of the financial distress of those economically disadvantaged,” (b) “balance the economic benefit of both the lender and the borrower,” and (c) “lead to the conduct of financial transactions in a fair and just manner” including truthfulness, nondiscrimination, full and clear disclosure, and no coercion.15 Sadly we recognize the dramatic relevance of these moral principles for our times. Would that the subprime lenders and lax regulators had listened to the church—or that we had spoken more clearly!

In light of growing knowledge about our surrounding physical environment, the church has come to recognize that the gospel’s message of commitment to and responsibility for others exists within the context of earth’s limited capacity to provide resources and reabsorb our wastes. The earth simply cannot sustain itself under the weight of the unlimited consumption and subsequent waste produced by 6.8 billion people. Therefore, a just distribution of material goods and the wealth to acquire them,

. . . put[s] moral limits on economic activity for the sake of human well-being, future generations, and nonhuman life. It calls for a renewed emphasis on the Reformed norm of frugality and lifts up the norm of sufficiency so that all may participate in the ‘good life,’ calling for abundant living in caring communities in a way that is less materialistic and more frugal.”16

A year of revelations about financial arrangements pursued for profit, without regard for risk to individuals and communities, yet rewarded by salaries, bonuses, and stock options beyond the ken of 95 percent of our U.S. households, reveals just how far from the moral standards of frugality and sufficiency our economic practices have drifted.17

When economic conditions have not been just, the church has spoken out forcefully. The Social Creed of 1908 denounced the appalling conditions of the working poor and demanded a living wage, safe working conditions, the right of all people to self-maintenance, and the “abatement of poverty.”18 The 208th General Assembly (1996) denounced the very existence of poverty as “… ‘intolerable,’ a moral scandal of maldistribution and unsustainability, that disregards human dignity, solidarity, and equity, as well as ecological integrity.” And, yet, the church confessed with anguish, poverty “has been condoned by churches and societies!”19 In 2006 and 2008, the General Assembly approved Just Globalization and then A Social Creed for the 21st Century, both of which speak to wrongful economic conditions that continue to deny millions basic conditions of dignity while threatening the health of the planet.20

In summary, these two principles, (1) economic justice for all (the establishment of economic conditions that support the human flourishing of all), and (2) sustainability (the establishment of conditions of economic justice today that will not destroy the earth’s capacity to provide abundant life to future generations), remain the basis of the biblical and Reformed imperative to promote social righteousness in economic matters.21 They remain the plumb lines against which economic practices in the 21st century must be judged. They are the product of a way of thinking about God, neighbor, self, and all of creation derived from Reformed beliefs and values that refute many economic assumptions and practices commonly accepted by our society today.

D. The Church’s Message for Troubled Times

A number of biblical and theological themes provide the moral principles to guide the church’s witness in these trying times.
1. Protecting the Human Rights of all safeguards the dignity with which God has created each. Grounded in the biblical affirmation that all humans are created by God and in God’s image, the church teaches that all humans have certain rights that are essential to living with dignity as children of God. In 1978, the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. adopted a Declaration of Human Rights that included the right to basic needs such as work, food, clothing, and shelter, as well as the right and responsibility to participate in one’s community. Subsequent church policies have lifted up other needs as human rights, such as adequate health care and the right of older persons to adequate material resources. Hope for a Global Future reaffirmed that such rights include “the satisfaction of basic biophysical needs, [and] physical security.” The fulfillment of these human rights by society is the first priority of a just economy, and should guide economic decisions regarding the production, distribution, and consumption of resources. The lack of such fulfillment where resources are adequate becomes evidence of injustice that the church denounces as “moral scandal.” Yet, as these are human rights, Christians in the United States must gauge our use of the earth’s resources in light of the rights of all other humans to the resources that sustain their lives. We are all challenged by the church’s statement of this first principle in its Resolution on Just Globalization: “The fulfillment of basic needs is indispensable for human development. Sufficiency for all requires that poverty be eradicated and that the affluent live more frugally.”

2. Living in Covenant Community presents us with moral guides for our use of private property. Who owns the land? The Bible recognizes the goodness of private ownership of property. In agricultural societies, owning land permitted people to work and sustain themselves in dignity, owning the products of their labor. The Jubilee traditions testify to the importance of this concept. Today, the economic basis of maintaining our lives with dignity may take many forms: land, stocks and bonds, money, jobs, social safety nets. Yet, all of these ultimately depend on “land” as the material basis of human life. The biblical witness is equally emphatic that the land, that is, all forms of property, belongs first and ultimately to God (Lev. 25:23), as do our very lives. As these two concepts merge, Christians see that our personal ownership of property, regardless of the form it takes, is relative and finite. We own it for a short while; and we own it subject always to God’s purposes. We own it mortgaged to a much larger household, the oikonomia of God who declared that “there will be no poor among you …, if only you will obey the voice of the LORD your God …” (Deut. 15:4 RSV).

Covenant is the biblical concept that points to this quality of community. Covenant is the name for human community defined by the individual’s commitment to the well-being of all within the community. Covenant is the context in which individuals flourish in community as one family. In the covenant community, the organization of society is based on our recognition that we are our brothers’ and sisters’ keepers, and they are ours. We acknowledge that shalom, that peace that grows out of our just and loving relationships with one another and God, is rooted in our actual interconnectedness and interdependence. In covenant community the unjust suffering of any diminishes all. There is no place in covenant community for the secular celebration of possessive individualism. The singular pursuit of self interest, even in the economy, has no biblical warrant. Indeed, the Bible warns against the seductive nature of possessions and wealth, as well as the idolatry that results when we identify ourselves with them and endlessly strive to obtain them. With realism we recognize the power of financial incentives, but Jesus’ greatest commandments broadcast the greater incentives of love.

3. By Engaging with the Public Order we work to create a common good. As Christians in the Reformed tradition, we have been guided by John Calvin’s concept of a third use of God’s law: namely, that through the gift of God’s grace, we can strive to live more faithfully not only as individuals, but as community. Seeing God at work in all of life, we see the public arena of laws and policies as instruments through which the good of all should be discerned, provided and defended. Good laws and policies guide believers and non-believers to live together in mutual regard for the good of all. It is because government works for the good of all that Calvin considered service in it the “highest vocation.”

For example, recognizing that an unfettered, competitive market system inevitably tends to consolidate wealth and power in the hands of fewer people, the Reformed tradition has emphasized the importance of the role of government to establish and maintain conditions that nurture human development and safeguard equality of opportunity: “A fundamental task of government is to organize and preserve the basic social support systems that enable individuals and their mediating institutions to thrive together cooperatively and fairly.” This typically takes the form of government support for those institutions that serve the common good, such as schools, infrastructure, public recreational facilities, product safety, defense, and even, as we have now seen, the rescue of private companies deemed “too big to fail.” It also takes the form of regulations that protect our health and safety, promote civil rights, safeguard us as homeowners or renters, workers, consumers and savers, and provide special care to us as children, the sick or disabled, and the elderly. In a large and complex society, government also responds to the needs of those for whom a supposedly rational and efficient economy does not work. Among the many who are not adequately supported by our current economic model are: low-wage workers (one in four workers earned poverty-level wages in 2007), the unemployed, the underemployed, the young, the elderly, the sick, and the disabled.

In this economic crisis, these public interest functions of government have been revealed once more as essential to the good quality of our society. Richard A. Posner, long a leading figure in the conservative “Chicago School” of economics, argues that “we need a more active and intelligent government to keep our model of a capitalist economy from running off the rails.” Deregulation has proven itself as harmful as over-regulation. The revolt against taxation has been as devastating... to the common good, to schools, to roads, and to our capacity for response to the basic needs of our citizens, as is the wasteful use of government revenues. In the Reformed tradition, government is seen as having a positive role to play in creating the social conditions that support and encourage us to live cooperatively for one another, as God has commanded and Jesus has modeled. It is through regulation and taxation that government carries out our covenant responsibilities to protect the social foundation that supports individual and family well-being. Realism, again, says that we bear each other’s burdens partly through taxation, given the time-proven limits of charity.

Let us be clear: historically, the United States has been economically and socially healthier when it has been more egalitarian and when broad, high-quality public education increased productivity in every sphere. Thus the role of government is not simply about taxation and redistribution, but includes planning and public investment to create infrastructure, public utilities and transportation grids, and to encourage research. To be an opportunity society, we need to be a stewardship society, one that measures not only aggregate financial numbers but also monitors the social impacts of unemployment and poverty. The disincentives of inequality lead some to resentment and discouragement, limited horizons and literal depression, the rise of addictions and the increasing break-up of families. It leads others to a hardening of hearts, disinterest in the common good, and a false sense of self-worth and entitlement. A “great recession” seems an appropriate time to review the effectiveness of public subsidies, public debt, and arbitrary restrictions on governmental creativity. This may be a time to examine the ideological preference for subsidizing the private sector. From a pragmatic standpoint, for example, could direct public investment in “green jobs,” and sectors such as public health, student loans, and public transportation be more socially efficient in some cases, and leave fewer Americans behind?

4. Work of all kinds is a calling through which we serve God, neighbor, and self. In Reformed theology, work, all work, is understood as a vocation: a response of gratitude to God and of love to neighbor. Through work we contribute not only to the material well-being of our society, but also to its moral quality, particularly its ability to nurture human development. With this understanding of the value and purpose of what we do when we work, we can pursue our earthly callings with vigor. In Christ, however, we reject secular judgments about the value of people and their work based on monetary measures of success expressed in the accumulation of wealth and possessions.

Work is also the way we carry out our responsibility to care for our families. Work, in this sense, embraces both unpaid and paid activities. The economy, often thought to encompass only paid work, includes and impacts both. In the current crisis, middle-income families subject to pay or job loss are experiencing the increase in unpaid work that occurs when family income declines and public services are reduced or eliminated. Perhaps this experience reveals to some of us the hard, time-consuming, but unpaid, work the poor must always do to survive. Because our church values the unpaid work of families, it has called for “a society in which the well-being of every child is nurtured and supported. … in which families have sufficient time together at home to nurture relationships, to care for children and other dependents, and to worship God together.”

Yet it is through paid work that most families gain their essential access “to sufficient economic resources to support the household and care for dependents.” Paid work clearly impacts the quality of our communities and our families. It has the power to enhance or deny human dignity and well-being. All of our uniquely human capacities, our cultural creativity, spirituality, and moral sensitivity, require a sufficiency of basic material support (needs). Therefore, the assumption that efficiency and profit are the only legitimate goals of economic institutions is false. The church challenges any economic system that ignores its responsibility to provide the material conditions that support human dignity and encourage the development of human capabilities. For these reasons, the church has long called for economic and political policies that support full and fair employment, including the following principles from God’s Work in Our Hands:

- The foundation upon which all just employment policies are built is access to employment at a level of compensation that allows people to live in dignity and security. …
- Inequalities in compensation and working conditions demand the strictest scrutiny. …
- All conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions, should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well-being of households and families, the social cohesiveness of communities, and the integrity of the global environment.

To achieve these and other just employment conditions, the church affirms that people must have the opportunity to participate in economic decisions that will impact them. Thus, the church has long endorsed the right of all workers to choose to organize for collective bargaining. A Social Creed for the 21st Century reaffirms “The rights of workers to organize, and to share in workplace decisions and productivity growth.”

In contrast to these principles, recent decades have seen stagnation in the wages of most nonsupervisory workers and a weakening of workers’ organizations. The percentage of workers covered by employer-based health insurance is declining, as is the percentage covered by pensions. Fewer pensions provide a guaranteed income at retirement. Job elimination has often become the first step in cost reduction. However, in these same decades, the compensation of executives has soared even as the middle class feels increasingly squeezed. In 2007 the average CEOs of major companies earned 275 times what average (nonsupervisory) workers made. Twenty years earlier the ratio was 71 to 1.34 Clearly, the benefits of increased productivity have shifted away from most workers and communities to concentrate within the highest levels of management and the primary owners of stock.35 And when the capital gains or profits from securities are taxed at only half the rate for “earned income,” economic inequality is further reinforced.

Christian discipleship calls us to challenge these practices. We do that when we embody our biblical and Reformed values in our own institutions and work for their embodiment in our secular economy. Christian faith calls us to pray for the imagination, courage and commitment that such discipleship will require.

5. The challenge of Sustainability revives the importance of a tradition of frugality. For some, unfortunately, the word frugality has come to mean a rigidity and austerity that wrings out joyful living. However, in the Reformed tradition its true meaning refers to the virtue of living with moderation as recipients of Christ’s love and as loving neighbors of all others. Its meaning calls upon us as individuals, households, and economic institutions to apply an ethical discipline to our production, distribution, and consumption. It calls upon us to consider the good of all, the covenant community, in which we live—now a global community. John Calvin summarized frugality this way: “We are the stewards of everything God has conferred on us by which we are able to help our neighbor, and are required to render account of our stewardship. … the only right stewardship is that which is tested by the rule of love.”36

Today, the word “sustainability” expands our understanding of frugality to include the protection of the planet and the real limits of the environment to support an ever-expanding human economy. In the face of poverty and ecological devastation, frugality oriented towards sustainability is an urgent moral responsibility for each of us. Clearly this ethic raises a moral challenge to lifestyles that consume many times over the consumption level of average Americans. However, as those of us who are “average” learn that our lifestyles would require the resources of four or more planets if copied by everyone on earth, we too are confronted by the moral challenge of this ethic. In contrast to endless consumerism, the values of frugality and sustainability challenge us to redefine our material needs in light of the needs of others who are our neighbors and God’s children. It challenges us to redefine our material needs in light of the needs of future generations. And it challenges us to redefine our material needs in light of the needs of the earth that first and ultimately belongs only to God.

E. The Church’s Call to Witness

Biblical and Reformed values raise significant questions about the way our economy functions, its assumptions, and its values. As one Presbyterian study document put it almost three decades ago, “What is clear is that our corporate economic life is now committed to and fosters a new notion of humanity, one deeply antithetical to our Christian convictions.”37

If that is true, even if only in part, then we as Christians are called to envision a new economic paradigm, a new way of incorporating biblical values into economic life. While this challenge is great, it is not impossible. Indeed, the knowledge and wisdom it will require could emerge now out of the experience of our congregations and communities in this time of unjust loss and suffering. As a human creation, a dysfunctional economy can be reshaped by a Christian response of witness and action. What can we do, as individuals, congregations, and denomination?

First, we can acknowledge our responsibilities. We can neither look away from these issues, nor claim a stance of neutrality. As individuals, families, congregations, and denomination, we are the economic actors who participate in making things the way they are. Some of us benefit materially a good deal more than others of us from a system that today has produced a level of inequality not seen since the 1920s. Some of us are experiencing an extent of material loss and insecurity that we never imagined could happen to our responsibly led lives. Some of us have suffered such conditions long before the present recession, particularly in our racial ethnic communities. As members of one Body, we must look to one another and discover the connections between our different experiences. Answering the question, “Am I my sister’s and brother’s keeper?” requires that we come to know our sisters and brothers, globally as well as locally, and learn how our lives intersect, for better or worse, through our economic choices.

Second, we can study and learn together. Economics is not the monopoly of economists. How a society organizes the economic activity that sustains life will be rooted in the beliefs and values of all its members. Experts can be helpful in explaining how things work and how they came to be this way. They can provide important social analysis that helps us to understand the issues we face. There will be disagreement among them, requiring us to read diverse sources and perhaps frustrating us. At this time, after the successive collapse of speculative “bubbles” in the technology and housing markets, beliefs in the “rational expectations” and “efficient markets” theories have been widely discredited.38 In reaction, the economics field is shifting back to valuing the stabilizing role of government stimulus and the security of public investment. But we must remember that experts have no greater moral expertise in these times than do the people of God gathered to discern the will of God. Even if markets were rational, infallible, and self-correcting, experts cannot answer for us the ethical question: how should things be?
We understand that our biblical and theological values call us to behave at variance with some of the values shaping our society and its economy. As we seek ways to live our values, we can make use of our church’s social witness policies. We can seek out the organizations working with those who struggle daily to sustain themselves and their families, in our neighborhoods and around the world. We can and should educate ourselves on these issues. Guided by our alternative vision of economic life, we can turn back to experts and ask the question “how?” How can we today, as individuals, as congregations, as citizens, and as economic actors in many locations, bring our Christian values into our economic behavior?

Third, we can choose to produce, distribute, and consume differently. We do not work to earn money for social status; rather, we work to help our neighbors and give glory to God. We do not see wealth as a reward and a license to consume, but as a social responsibility. We recognize that individuals flourish best in a society that defends the human rights of all and maintains the common good. We have learned to look at any product or service and see within it our sisters and brothers whose labor made it available to us and the sun, rain, and earth from which it came. We can raise moral questions about who produced what we use and under what conditions. We can question and resist the growing inequality in our society. We can reflect on the power of consumerism in our own lives. We can resist the frivolous use of the earth’s resources.

Fourth, we can advocate for public policies that reflect our economic values. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a long and distinguished history of serious study about and theological reflection on the issues of its day. As Christians in the Reformed tradition, we understand our responsibility to help shape the common good through our support for democratic government, our engagement in political processes, our social witness to those processes, and our principled advocacy at all levels of government. Therefore, it is appropriate for us to apply these understandings to the current economic crisis and to advocate, as individuals, congregations, and denomination, for those policies and practices of business and government that best embody them. We advocate for such policies with faith that God is working through us in these times to establish more fully God’s oikonomia among us.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 10-09 deals with living through economic crisis: the church’s witness in troubled times.

It is advised that a member of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) be included on the study committee to reflect the concern for the impact of the economic crisis on women. It is further advised that the study incorporate case studies of both women and men that illustrate the challenges of the economic crisis to communicate its depth and breadth and ways congregations have responded to individual and family needs.

Rationale

There have been many reports of how the economic crisis has impacted men more than women. However, it has been shown from data gathered at the onset of the financial crisis in 2007 that “over half of the 37 million Americans living in poverty were women.” Furthermore, women in America are lagging behind women in other developed countries with the gap in poverty rates between men and women among the highest in the Western world. This feminization of poverty holds across race, skill-level, and educational attainment. Female poverty reaches particularly disturbing levels among black and Hispanic populations. Recent data shows that 26.5 percent of African American women are poor compared to 22.3 percent of African American men; 23.6 percent of Hispanic men. This sits atop mounting job losses that are disproportionately impacting the poorest women, especially female-headed households and single mothers.

According to Alexandra Cawthorne, a research associate in Poverty & Prosperity and Women’s Health & Rights programs at the Center for American Progress, Women face higher levels of poverty for a number of inter-related reasons, including industry clustering, unpaid work burdens and outright discrimination. Nearly half (43 percent) of the 29.6 million employed women in the United States in 2007 were clustered in just twenty occupational categories, earning $27,383 on average.

Much research has been done to show that the well-documented pay gap between men and women across industries is exemplifies discrimination toward women.

Applying a gender lens to the ACSWP study, “Living Through Economic Crisis: The Church’s Witness in Troubled Times” will reflect a more accurate and inclusive witness.

Item 10-10

[The assembly approved Item 10-10 with amendment. See pp. 34, 35.]

Neither Poverty Nor Riches: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends, in order to strengthen Presbyterian unity in mission and solidarity in ministry, that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following measures for churchwide study and action on the theology of compensation:

1. That the full text of the study, “Neither Poverty nor Riches: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church,” be received by the assembly, included in its Minutes, posted and provided in digital form by the Office of the General Assembly, and printed in limited quantity for presbytery resource centers and other uses.

2. In order to affirm the covenantal vision that unites all those serving the church:
   a. Commend those agencies that are demonstrating a theological sense of connectedness and solidarity in mission by implementing alternate compensation plans that exhibit signs of the church’s covenant community, such as the pay structure for overseas personnel in World Mission, the 5:1 salary ratio found in the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), and the practice of the Board of Pensions (BOP) in basing pensions of ministers who were not highly compensated during their active pastorates on the median effective salaries of ministers in the PC(USA), understanding that all congregations and ministers are assuring that those who labored faithfully should be adequately supported in retirement.
   b. Request the Board of Pensions (BOP) to require that pension dues be paid on all effective salary, removing the cap for those who receive higher compensation.

   [e. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), as a matter of justice,]

   [(1) to implement in its personnel policies the directive to provide ratios between highest-paid and lowest-paid church employees, both salaried and non-salaried, which was directed to the General Assembly Council by the 207th General Assembly (1995) in the policy statement, God’s Work in Our Hands, (IV, Implementation Action Plans, A.4.b.(1)) (Minutes, 1995, Part I, p. 438); and

   (2) to establish the goal of achieving, in a reasonable period of time, a 5:1 ratio between highest-paid and lowest-paid church employees beginning with new General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) positions, understanding this to be a partial return to earlier policy and a practical embodiment of missional solidarity.]

   [d. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to convene the leadership of all six agencies related to the General Assembly to review together the fourteen current principles of compensation in the ‘Report from the General Assembly Advisory Committee on Church-wide Compensation’ (213th General Assembly (2001); Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 558–59) and to explore the possibility of setting ratios for compensation [in light of the 5:1 ratio recommended in 2.e.(2) (above)] in order to promote greater covenantal unity within our one church and in our mission together.

   [e. Request the leadership of the Board of Pensions (BOP), the Presbyterian Foundation (FDN), the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC), as well as the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, to join in the interagency consultation of Recommendation 2.d. [c.] above, and to consider the assembly’s action on compensation within their own boards, reporting on such consideration in their agency reports to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

   [f. Request the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) to convene an appropriately structured discussion among the seminaries on the matter of compensation ranges and sharing economic burdens during recession periods, reporting a digest of their findings to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

   [g. Request the Office of Vocation, in an effort to support the development of just new models of compensation for pastoral ministry in small and struggling congregations

   (1) to encourage discussion in its on-line communities of new ways to include solidarity concerns (such as those in this theology of compensation) in the ministry of congregations and in developing new ministries and congregations; and]
(2) to invite presbytery- and synod-wide planning approaches that include the participation of congregations with smallest budgets, tent-making pastors, and the underemployed.

Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in coordination with the Office of Vocation, to review the compensation practices of other churches and nonprofit organizations in response to the economic recession and secular patterns of inequality in order to assess the potential for interchurch solidarity and witness and to encourage broader theological and ethical discussion of the themes in this report, inviting especially responses from those working in the fields of economic justice and business ethics.

Urge that presbyteries do the following:

1. Establish maximum as well as minimum terms of call, with the proviso that congregations providing calls that exceed the maximum would contribute an amount that matched the overage to a presbytery fund to be used to support pastors in congregations of that presbytery unable to afford its minimum terms of call.

2. Consider the possibility of having differential minimum terms of call that acknowledge differing realities within presbyteries, such as cost-of-living variations.

3. Conduct an analysis of past and present instances in which their presbytery set aside their minimum terms of call or allowed them to be circumvented. This review should include an analysis of the circumstances and the methods by which the terms of call were set aside or circumvented and how these actions affected racial ethnic and women pastors, in particular.

4. Determine current ratios between highest-paid and lowest-paid pastors in the presbytery including commissioned lay pastors, and between highest-paid and lowest-paid staff members of the presbytery, the foregoing based on full-time equivalent salaries.

5. Report the results of all of the above to the Office of the General Assembly through the annual statistical report questionnaire sent to the stated clerks of presbyteries.

Encourage sessions and congregations to

1. reflect on the ways their lives together as a congregation are impacted by differences in compensation as discovered through analyzing ratios of their highest-paid and lowest-paid staff members, based on full-time equivalent salaries;

2. consider establishing a ratio between maximum and minimum salaries for church employees as approved by the session; and

3. report the results to the Office of the General Assembly through the annual statistical report questionnaire submitted by the clerks of session.

Direct the Moderator and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to issue a pastoral letter to members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urging them to stand as a witness against excessive compensation in church and in society.

Rationale

These recommendations and report are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 09-08. Report, God’s Work in Women’s Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation, Recommendation 2.i. That the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in Consultation with Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry Area and the Office of Vocation, Update the PC(USA)’s 1983 “Theology of Compensation” Report to Provide Theological Guidance to Church and Society with Regard Particularly to the Impact of Secular Market Assumptions on the Compensation Practices of the PC(USA)—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 897–923).

This resolution with recommendations and study paper is submitted to the 219th General Assembly (2010) in response to the directive of the 218th General Assembly (2008):
The title for this report comes from Proverbs 30:8, quoted in Walter Brueggemann’s 1983 Theology of Compensation, the most in-depth treatment of this topic in recent years and a vital part of the basis for current compensation policies in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Yet the economies of both church and society have changed dramatically in the twenty-seven years since his writing. Most importantly, the common assumption that a minister’s call would involve climbing a career ladder of congregations of increasing size, has met the cultural and demographic reality of a smaller denomination in a context of significant economic inequality, the reality lived daily by countless Presbyterians. This theological and ethical study reflects on the reality of the church and, seeking to move beyond the idolatry of secular models of success, in its recommendations proposes actions for the church to take in response.

Even before the credit meltdown of September 2008 and the ensuing Great Recession, data from the Office of Vocation confirmed a growing gap between congregations able to afford full-time, seminary-trained pastors and those relying on part-time ministers, commissioned lay pastors, and dedicated elders. Survival has become the focus of many congregations and presbyteries. The ability of the church to manage, let alone reverse this trend of downward mobility, is in question.

The study and recommendations present a theological analysis based in Scripture and our Reformed heritage, particularly that of John Calvin, of the secular market assumptions at work in the church, including those models of career and salary inequality that distort so many of our expectations. Reformation and change, though difficult, are vital to continued health and growth in the church, but must be based on a biblical and theological understanding of our mission. Hence, any plan for change, for re-focusing the church’s mission, incentives, and internal accountability, will arise from the context of our mutual vocation and mission. We are called to resist the world’s trends, and not operate on the world’s terms. It means facing the disconnections within the church and among its agencies with honesty and humility, re-claiming as the Body of Christ the covenantal vision that is affirmed in the heart of the Gospel.

The study is written to appeal to the lay reader, though many ministers may be unaware of how much realistic and remarkably relevant economic thinking Calvin did, especially in his great commentaries. He understood, as did Jesus and his great interpreter, Paul, that while the Kingdom is not about bread alone, it is about breaking bread together. For in breaking of bread and the in-breaking of the Spirit, the unity and equality of the members is revealed, “that the members may have the same care for one another” (1 Cor. 12:25). How do we embody that mutual exchange and mutual support that are characteristics of this one body? We ask that each reader, each congregation, each council consider whether in our practice we are operating from a theology of solidarity or a theology of individualism or even a theology of abandonment—and whether we can reassert some of the deep connectionalism that is stronger than market forces. Are we indeed in the market but not of it? And even in a market culture, does the church not have a witness to make that it is God who determines value, not wealth, nor power, nor ideology—idols that demand too many sacrifices.

The current theology of compensation is partly an aspirational compromise between merit-based and egalitarian approaches. It encompasses a rationale for regionally varied minimum salaries, non-binding ratios for minimum to maximum salaries in national agencies, a pension system that redistributes retirement income upward for pastors of lower pre-retirement income, and a market-based system of pastoral compensation that reflects differences in ability, experience, background, and congregational resources. The Board of Pensions (BOP) and Presbyterian Foundation (FDN), both agencies of the General Assembly, are increasingly hierarchical and have pay scales that are significantly beyond the salaries of any other employee in the denomination. Although a few pastors are very well paid, many receive compensation at or only slightly above presbytery minimum. Yet even presbytery minimum salaries are increasingly unaffordable by many congregations. Those congregations frequently find it necessary to have a part-time pastor, a commissioned lay pastor, bi-vocational or tent-making minister, or non-Presbyterian pastor. Some have no on-going relationship with a pastor at all.¹

This resolution leads the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to say that we must live in covenant community with God and with one another. With the intention of being good stewards of the church’s resources, we have moved toward the efficiencies and values of the marketplace. However, this has led to practices that threaten the solidarity of the church, as well as solidarity with our neighbors locally, nationally, and internationally. We believe that the church is called to ministry, not for itself alone, but for and with and in the world that God created and loves. We engage in this ministry as partners, recognizing that partnership requires consideration of just compensation. As we do, we demonstrate our understanding that all are called and all are valued as workers for God’s kingdom in and through the Body of Christ.
A. The Challenge and the Task

1. We Are Challenged

a. By Our Culture

• “… the average baseball salary fell just short of $3 million this year, reaching $2,996,000, according to the annual report of the players’ association” (The Plain Dealer, December 2009, p. D6, Cleveland newspaper).

• Executive bonuses—especially in the form of stock and option grants—represent the most prominent form of legal corruption that has been undermining our large corporations and bringing down the global economy. Get rid of them and we will all be better off for it (Henry Mintzberg Wall Street Journal, November 30, 2009).

• “Having ever been unemployed makes you permanently less connected to your community” (Robert Putnam, professor at Harvard University, as quoted in Newsweek, December 21, 2009, p. 53).

b. In Stories from the Church

• A modest-sized center-city church with a large endowment needed a new head of staff. The chair of the search committee, a CEO of a large firm, decided to not use church processes. “When we need a new leader in my business, we hire a head hunter. He’ll find us the person we want, someone who knows what it’s like to head up a business of this size, and he’ll be able to tell us how much we should pay for a really great guy!”

• A congregation decided to enroll its entire staff, including employees of the church’s day-care facility, in the Board of Pensions plan. “It’s the right thing to do,” elders decided. The church opted for the two-step option, enrolling non-ordained staff only in the medical benefits provision at first, knowing that several years later they would be required to enroll everyone in the full plan, and that the cost to the church would increase significantly. When that time came, the circumstances of the congregation had changed and they could not afford to pay for all staff persons to be part of the Board of Pensions plan. After long deliberations, the session decided that their only alternative was to reduce the number of staff in the day-care center and reduce the number of children who could be served by the center.

• A recent seminary graduate waited for almost three years before receiving a call from a congregation. During those three years, she worked as a part-time church secretary and preached weekly in a small congregation. She barely earned enough money for her living expenses and depended on money borrowed from family members when her car had to be repaired and her computer had to be replaced. When she accepted a call and was ordained, it was to a church that paid the presbytery minimum salary. “I love the people of my church,” she said, “but I’m not sure I’ll be able to stay here for the long term. I have a lot of debts to pay off.”

• “I have served small churches since 1988 and with a growing family, growing debt load, and the cost of living, have been very concerned about my terms [of call].”

• “My wife and I both work to support our family. I will not even consider a call that does not adequately provide for us. That includes living in the community where the church is.”

• “God provides all things, but he seems to provide a lot more to leaders in large, rich, white churches than smaller, poorer, or minority churches. As a denomination is our treasure going where our heart really is? Are our best leaders serving the haves or the have nots?”

• “Smaller congregations struggle to even meet established presbytery minimums, especially factoring in pension dues.”
“Why are pastors paid so differently in the first place? In a nearby PC(USA) church with four pastors, one is paid three times as much as another. Is his work three times more valuable to God’s kingdom? Are we really all ordained to the same status, just with different functions? Or is there really a hierarchy with the rich at the top?”

d. Yet We Remember the Witness of John Calvin

“... the lawful use of all benefits consists in a liberal and kindly sharing of them with others. No surer rule and no more valid exhortation to keep it could be devised than when we are taught that all the gifts we possess have been bestowed by God and entrusted to us on condition that they be distributed for our neighbors’ benefit” (John Calvin).

“Let this … be our rule for generosity and beneficence: We are the stewards of everything God has conferred on us by which we are able to help our neighbor …” (John Calvin).

“To covet wealth and honors, to strive for authority, to heap up riches, to gather together all those follies which seem to make for magnificence and pomp, our lust is mad, our desire boundless” (John Calvin).

e. And What the Bible Teaches

“... those who want to be rich fall into temptation and are trapped by many senseless and harmful desires that plunge people into ruin and destruction. For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil, and in their eagerness to be rich some have wandered away from the faith and pierced themselves with many pains” (1Tim. 6:9–10).

f. Even

“Now the whole group of those who believed were of one heart and soul, and no one claimed private ownership of any possessions, but everything they owned was held in common. … There was not a needy person among them, for as many as owned lands or houses sold them and brought the proceeds of what was sold. They laid it at the apostles’ feet, and it was distributed to each as any had need” (Acts 4:32, 34–35).

g. The Challenge: Inequality

What do we mean by “inequality”? When people talk about “inequality,” they are typically thinking about financial inequalities: income and wealth. It is easy to document that such inequalities exist in the U.S., have always existed, and, after a period of narrowing the gap between WWII and the early 1970s, have been increasing. For example:

- Measuring the share of income (wages, salaries, and capital gains) going to the top 1 percent of households, economists Piketty and Saez find that income concentration in 2006 was higher than in any year since 1913, except 1928: the top 1 percent of households received 23 percent of household income.

- In 2007 the share of family income (wages and salaries) going to the top 20 percent of families was 47.3 percent. The bottom 80 percent shared the remaining 52.7 percent.

- In 2004 the top 20 percent of households owned 90.7 percent of all common stock (including that in pensions) and the bottom 80 percent of households owned the remaining 9.4 percent. The top 0.5 percent of households owned 27.6 percent of all common stock.

- In international comparisons with nineteen other nations belonging to the OEDC (Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development), the U.S. is found to have the greatest inequality in household income based on several types of measures: Gini coefficient; the 90-10 ration (how many times more income a household in the 90th percentile has compared to one in the 10th percentile); comparison of 10th percentile household to median income household of a country; and the ratio of 90th percentile household to median household. In fact, these authors find that “inequality in the United States is so severe that low-income households in the United States are actually worse off than low-income households in all but four peer countries.”

- While the median family income for white families in 2007 was $64,427, it was much less for black families ($40,143) and Hispanic families ($40,566)

- Income inequalities can also be correlated with other inequalities, such as income mobility (lifetime and intergenerational); access to health insurance, health outcomes and life expectancy; and educational achievement.

- Race and gender inequalities intersect with income and wealth inequalities such that women (of all races/ethnicities) and people of color are disproportionately represented among those in lower income and wealth quintiles.
h. Is Inequality Equitable? Some say, “Sure!”

However, the above is not really new information to most Americans. Income and wealth inequality have been (and are) an acceptable aspect of U.S. culture for several reasons. Here are some beliefs common in U.S. society:

- The fact of inequality does not settle the ethical question of whether the inequality is unjust.

Perhaps it is true that the top 20 percent (and especially that top 1 percent) works harder in both time and complexity of tasks, is more educated and skilled, more creative, and adds much greater value to the economy than does the other 80 percent. Perhaps the other 80 percent is average or less in these characteristics, sicklier, less educated, less interested in a life devoted to work. Inequality may be merited.

- Economic inequality serves as motivation.

Horatio Alger stories, and perhaps President Obama’s, support faith in upward mobility for anyone. Anyone can become president. Rather than challenging the wealth of the rich, Americans hope to become one of them.

- Inequality does not necessarily mean that some are suffering actual material deprivation.

Inequality, like poverty, is relative. Absolute poverty, or deprivation, is signaled by malnutrition, starvation, early death. Relative poverty describes the poor in the U.S. as only poor in comparison to others in the U.S.; but not poor in comparison to those absolutely poor in low-income countries.

- Some say that a better measure of inequality is consumption. The poor in the U.S. today have access to goods unheard of in the 1920s or ’60s. Doesn’t everyone have a refrigerator and TV? Therefore, inequality of income/wealth does not really describe actual standards of living, some say. (But here the data become murky as liberal economists find growing inequality in consumption while Will Wilkinson of the Cato Institute says it is not.)

- Inequality is the result of freedom.

Freedom allows individuals to choose different paths and interests in life. The economic rewards of these choices will differ. So, some women prefer to give more time to domestic responsibilities than to employment, some men do the opposite; some choose to stay in school, others prefer to start working at an early age. Inequality is the result of our exercise of our liberties. The coercion necessary to force equality on society would undermine our freedoms, as well as democracy itself.

- Income distribution is simply the pattern that results from millions of people making individual choices.

No one is “distributing” income from on high. For example, when a poor immigrant enters the U.S., or a low-income person wins the lottery, the income gap increases—although no one is worse off.

- Equality of opportunity is essential in a democratic society, but not equality of result.

Equality of opportunity does not mean radical leveling of incomes and wealth; it means access to a baseline level of opportunity (education, for example).

i. Challenges: Values and Vision

We of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in the early 21st century face difficult questions of values; how we should live our lives in consonance with our understanding of the biblical mandates for the Body of Christ and as members of the individualistic and powerful United States of America. We are bombarded by conflicting statements found in many forms of media, offering scholarship and expertise that tug in different directions. Are we to adhere in literal fashion to the Bible and/or John Calvin? Does accepting our role as Christians mean that we must find ourselves at odds with our role as citizens? How can we mesh the ideal with the reality in which we live our lives? Does our loyalty to the biblical witness mean that we must consider living differently?

We find ourselves in a dilemma. We wish to be faithful to God’s calling, faithful to the model of life we find in Jesus. Yet we live in a society that uses money to measure our worth. Our self-esteem is often bound up in what we earn monetarily, comparing ourselves to others in our families, to our neighbors, to former classmates, to co-workers. We hear of those who are rewarded for their labors in the marketplace with amazingly large salaries, and wonder why it is that our intense, faithful labors and hard work are not similarly rewarded. Even more troubling, we know and hear of those who are living without even the basic necessities of life—who are not at fault, yet have nowhere to live, inadequate or no food, barely adequate clothing, and little basic health care. How are we to act when faced with such discrepancies?

Proverbs 29:18a said, “Where there is no [vision] the people [perish],” but what that vision is remains somehow unclear, unwise, unreasonable, or, at the very least, unattainable. In the face of this dilemma, of this uneasiness caused by conflicting values, we have set out to try to discern God’s will for our lives together in this time, for this people and this community, and in the face of a culture that is at best confused and at worst in great conflict one part with the other. If we believe we can discern the ideal as found in the understanding of justice proclaimed in both the Hebrew Scriptures and the New Testament, it is often hard to see how we are to apply a “Sunday world” to the weekday world in which we live. For we know the world has changed, expanded, and become complicated, a world in which the ideal of biblical times may not be attainable. Yet we ignore the teachings of our faith and the wisdom of the elders at our peril.

The relationship of the church to the society in which we live has also changed. From the primitive Christian experience of being persecuted outsiders, we moved through eras when Christianity grew in importance, even to becoming partners with governments or becoming the government itself. Through the centuries, as peoples of one area of the world mingled with those of other areas, as religions came into close physical proximity of one another, those areas where Christianity had become dominant have tended to become less religious, and Christendom has given way to tolerance of other religions, with many governments expressing a strong desire to be secular and apart from the dominant religion of the people. In this latter view, Christianity in the United States of America may almost be seen as an anachronism, a belief system that once held sway, but cannot now speak with any authority to this complex, globalized, secular, intertwined economic world. It is less certain, however, that the nature of humanity has changed so completely, that there is nothing to be learned or discerned from the tradition, teaching, and faith that we espouse. Rather, we believe that a careful consideration of our heritage informed by a thoughtful reading of the Scriptures may assist both our church, its members, and the society to which we belong to live fuller lives, lives where sufficiency for all is found and where equity is the standard. This is our vision.

A vision will not be useful to the church, however, if it is not grounded in some understanding of its origins, backed by scholarship and resources, and tested in current experience and understanding. This paper will provide some of that background in order for the church to study the complex topics of money, monetary compensation for working people, and the wants and needs of people in different regions under different circumstances. The Presbyterian church has spoken of this topic in the past and has strong policy backed by equally strong theological statements.

j. Presbyterian Policy

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor denominations have studied and spoken about money, compensation, and vocation many times. In 1910 the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America adopted the Social Creed, as drafted by the Federal Council of Churches with Presbyterian assistance in 1908. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved a revised version of this ecumenical creed. Both statements were based on justice for workers in terms of compensation, as well as other issues of social concern.

Other policy statements about compensation were developed in the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA) in response to institutional structural change in 1975, with a final policy adopted in 1976. (Expanded discussion of these policy statements will be found in Appendix A.) Issues of parity, sufficiency, and sharing of resources among all the parts of the church were discussed, asking that the ministers be assured a “moderate standard of living.”

Other major studies were undertaken in preparation for and at the time of the Reunion in 1983 by both the UPCUSA and the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS), presented to and adopted by the reunion assembly. The policy of the PCUS was accompanied by a major theological discussion of compensation by the Reverend Dr. Walter Brueggemann, a minister in the United Church of Christ. The policy statements as adopted by the 195th General Assembly (1983) were issued as study documents, including a Special Mission Board Report on Compensation for Lay Employees.

Since these major reports and policy documents were adopted and published, the work on compensation has been largely confined to implementation in smaller reports, by means of budgets, and through the personnel policies of the General Assembly and its entities. In part, the implementation of these policies have tended to move away from the egalitarian framework of the earlier denominations, particularly the PCUS, with relaxing and then removal of the guidelines concerning the distance between the highest and lowest paid salaries of servants of the church. What began as a ratio of 3:1 changed to “approximately four times the salary range of the lowest position” and then was removed entirely in 1999 in favor of “a reasonable relationship” between the salaries of all church employees.

k. Brueggemann’s Theology of Compensation

[Note: Quotes in this section, unless otherwise marked, are taken from Theology of Compensation, by Walter Brueggemann.]

The Theology of Compensation paper, written by Walter Brueggemann for the General Assembly Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. just prior to the 1983 reunion, turns on a different axis than the merit versus equality report of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., which also had been prepared and was presented at the reunion General Assembly in 1983. Brueggemann focuses on the distinction between church and culture, with the Reformed tradition understood as a justice-seeking agent of social as well as church reform. The General Assembly Mission Board introduced Brueggemann’s work with the warning that it could be “unsettling,” in characterizing our culture as one of “consumer capitalism,” but that his critique, while espousing a position, was based on neither liberal or conservative ideology.

The paper begins by affirming that “the fundamental purpose of human life is ‘to glorify God and enjoy him forever.’” For the first, “a theology of compensation is rooted in our common call to glorify God, i.e. make God more visible and more central in the process of human community.” The enjoyment includes the capacity “to use freely the gifts of God who is creator.” Denying any split between spiritual and material, the paper then maintains that “God’s glory is primarily evidenced in the just conduct of public life.” Thus, “to glorify God is to shape on earth a community capable of humaneness and humaneness according to the humanness disclosed in Jesus Christ,” and this means “to enact God’s holiness on earth in the form of justice.” Elaborated again, the enjoyment of God’s presence and God’s gifts must be balanced in a given context: the well-off may need “rigorous disciplines of genuine relinquishment, renunciation and self-denial,” while the disadvantaged may need more resources of all kinds. “So there is no ‘final’ theology of compensation.”

Following that theological context, the paper looks at the cultural context: economic disarray, including inflation, concern for taxes, a recent recession, and a continuing arms race. Yet, while middle class church members feel “squeezed,” it is partly because they see the expectation of affluence that converts desires to necessities and seeks more. Brueggemann contrasts this with the “give me neither poverty nor riches …” of Proverbs 30: 8–9. Part of the squeezing process is due to the guiding “economic ideology of scarcity,” although this is unsettlingly tied to using energy in a profligate way. We live not in a stewardship society of the church, but are enmeshed in a culture of competitive consumerism. Brueggemann suggests that “nuclear anxiety” contributes to a desire to achieve safety by “consum[e]r ourselves into numbness.” Together a model of humanity has developed since 1945 that is “antithetical to our Christian convictions … an idolatrous notion of Americanism.” The commanding notion is that self is what counts, that security is our goal, that satiation is unending and to be pursued without limit.” “…Until the extraordinary alternative vision of reality (the scandal of Jesus of Nazareth) is faithfully preached and taught, we likely will not get free of our enmeshments.”

The paper thus poses a stark choice between capitulation to “economic ideology of our culture” (affluence and consumer values) or “theological claims of discipleship and discipline” that need creative new embodiment. Choosing the latter, the paper then argues four points:

(1) That the “reversal” message of Jesus (his servanthood, “the last shall be first,” “losing one’s life to find it,” etc.) applies to the pattern whereby the haves (and congregations) with more capital get more: wealth is thus to be shared in some unsettling ways.

(2) Alternative economic practice is larger than compensation for ministers. All church members have to wrestle with “how to give economic embodiment to the conviction that we are all members one of another.” The Reformed tradition “eschews any economic distinction between laity and clergy,” so that lay employees must be treated better in many cases, and vocation is an issue in all cases.

(3) Once the whole church is seen to be implicated, then ministers need to face the culture’s assumptions of “inordinate inequality, not at all based on need but based on merit, success, luck, ability to pay…” “Such a criterion of success blurs the intrinsic value of persons…” In contrast, “the Church claims to be a different kind of community powered by a different kind of authority.” Unless there is “some form of equalization among its authorized leadership,” the careerist pattern “tends to create an economic elite” and an effective underclass of those often discriminated against.

(4) The church’s own ordering of economics “is important as a sign in the world.” The church needs to repent its way away from satiation to be spiritually able to risk, and if the church does start serious sharing, it will have much more for mission and “the common good of the church” (Calvin, Institutes, Bk. III).

Together, Brueggemann sees these four steps toward a beneficial “economic disestablishment” that then can be missiologically connected to need but economically disconnected from dependence. For ministers, this would mean a break from meritocracy for “other forms of discipline,” ways of nurture and accountability not dependent on pay scale to reward productivity and “starve out the ‘incompetent.’” Can such forms of candor and cushion move people to perform at their best? Some level of salary equalization also would be a “break between present income and future security.” While a new ethos of sharing and accountability to the community will be hard to achieve, it is better than our context: “our economic institutions and habits are dysfunctional and seem to be disintegrative.” The paper concludes with 2 Corinthians 8:9’s translation of Jesus mission into economics: “though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, so that by his poverty you might become rich.”

1. Answers from the Past: Work and Compensation

Led by the insights of John Calvin, followers of the Reformed tradition honor God’s Creation by living faithfully in the world, even while acknowledging its messiness and the sinfulness of its inhabitants. Living faithfully has always included seeing work as God’s gift, but a gift that is exercised justly in relation to others and with concern for others. Responding to this reality, the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors have spoken to the church and the world about the nature of work, its impact on both individuals and the entire community, and the importance of care for all who labor and for those who cannot. In our monetized, capitalistic society, compensation is a key to how we treat each other, to the relation of employee to employer, unemployed to employed, neighbor-to-neighbor, even family members to each other. But compensation comes from the workplace. How we consider the work, the vocation, of each person affects our view of the compensation that is the result of the work we do.

The 207th General Assembly (1995) approved a policy statement, God’s Work in Our Hands: Employment, Community, and Christian Vocation, understanding work and compensation as a result of work as a sacred calling performed in a flawed world. The church’s own struggles to discern its faithful response to issues of compensation needs to be seen in the context of its policies related to the Reformed understanding of work and employment more generally. God’s Work in Our Hands, therefore, was approved as a response to large economic trends, such as the development of a global workforce, the shift from manufacturing jobs to service sector jobs in the United States, the decline or stagnation in the wages of most workers, and the increased necessity for two adult wage earners in order to provide adequate support for a family.

When work is understood as vocation, as a way to serve God and neighbor, the conditions of work must ensure that vocation is fair, sustaining, and participatory. Therefore, the General Assembly called for “the strictest scrutiny” of inequalities in compensation and working conditions, and for the “employment at a level of compensation that allows people to live in dignity and security.” Moreover, compensation should so sustain individuals, households, and families that the “social cohesiveness of communities” is nurtured.

God’s Work in Our Hands approved a number of recommendations, requesting action of church bodies as well as encouragement to the secular society. Among items directed to its own entities, the General Assembly called for the General Assembly Council (now called the General Assembly Mission Council or GAMC) to “include and implement the 1988 churchwide compensation policy guidelines that call for establishing salary ranges and ratios between highest-paid and lowest-paid church employees, both salaried and non-salaried.” Our findings in conversation with the entities of the GAMC indicate that currently this directive is implemented only in part.

The question for this paper is whether that policy is still relevant, useful, and applicable to a twenty-first century world. If it is not, policies need to be modified. If we still believe these policies are those we in the church are called upon to live by, we all need to be aware of and affirm them again. As church members, we must understand these policies through our faith heritage, as interpreted by Scripture and expressed theologically. And we must also see that our own church house is in order as we seek to change society.

As Christian believers of the Reformed tradition, we understand ourselves to be of the realm of our God; created in the image of the Holy One; living in and fully a part of the world that God created and stated was good; a world in which God sent Jesus the Christ, designated as Son, to us as model and sign of who we are and whose we are. Because of all these gifts given by the Creator God, we do not and cannot reject the world in which we live.

Because we are heirs of the entire biblical tradition, however, we also cannot escape the knowledge that we live in and participate in the sin that permeates the world as it permeates the being of each of us individually. We have a singular task: to be faithful to the dictates of our God and the example of Jesus the Christ, while heeding the guidance of the Holy Spirit. We live out that task in many ways, in answer to the gifts given to each, in response to the Word and the words put in our hearts by a loving God. For at a long ago time, there was a new covenant forged by our forbears and reported by Jeremiah, “… this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel … I will put my law within them, and I will write it on their hearts; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people” (Jer. 31:33). Therefore, God’s Word and God’s Spirit are as close to us as the air we breathe, pulsating through us with every heartbeat. We live our lives in and of the world, yet conscious always of being a part of the realm and reign of God through Jesus Christ in the power of the Holy Spirit.

We have chosen to be members of the body of Christ through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), defining our life together as a denomination. We have stated what we understand the nature of our bond to be, as well as the power and authority of our corporate statements and actions. As the General Assembly said in 1927:

The Presbyterian Church is not a unity in the sense that it consists of an undivided oneness without distinguishable parts; neither is it a group of smaller bodies with common history and tradition which find it advantageous to work together in close harmony for the accomplishment of purposes common to all of them. Our Church is an organism. Its unity is not a unity of articulation, part touching part, like the bones of a skeleton, but the unity of life, the parts united by vital bonds, thus constituting a living whole and that whole imparting impulse and strength and order to the several parts, as the body to its members. …The different parts of the organization are bound into each other so that one cannot subsist without the others. (Minutes, PCUSA, 1927, Part I, p. 57ff.)

The recognition that our corporate actions may not be the desire of each individual was understood by Paul, who stated in 1 Cor. 12:27 (and similarly in Rom. 12:5), “Now you are the body of Christ and individually members of it.” We are individuals with individual gifts, individual understandings, brought up in many different places with many different experiences that form our understanding of the world, both religious and secular. In its wisdom, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has adopted formally and honored in practice the statement from the Westminster Confession that “God alone is Lord of the Conscience” (Book of Order, G-1.0301(1)(a) and The Book of Confessions, 6.109). We recognize the ambiguity present in being at once a body of believers and individuals with strong beliefs. From that tension may come conflict, but in facing that conflict together, we also strive to be faithful to our Lord and Savior.
Our responsibility, our privilege, our goal, therefore, is to respond to God’s gifts and God’s presence in our lives through faithful living. Faithful living includes all of life, not just that which occupies us when we are attending church services or functioning in church settings. We recognize the difficulty of understanding exactly what faithful living means to and for each one of us, individually and corporately. We have long recognized, as did Paul in 1 Corinthians 12, that we are part of one body—that is, that we have a corporate identity, corporate activities in which to participate, and corporate responsibilities. Because we are corporate, we act together. Because we are also individuals, each of us does not always agree individually with corporate actions. In order to effect our corporate will, we have relied on meetings of groups of believers acting in an orderly fashion (1 Cor. 14:40), hearing the concerns of individuals, but acting as a body by a majority vote (G-4.0301e) even while recognizing that this decision may not reflect the conscientious understanding of each individual voter.

As a denomination, we have chosen to work together, to speak in concert, but also to affirm Paul’s insight that corporate life involves accepting the tension between individual beliefs and the action of the entire church community. As the Reverend James Andrews wrote as a preface to numerous policy statements during his tenure as General Assembly Stated Clerk:

General Assembly statements and policies do not claim to express the opinions, nor to bind the consciences, of individual Presbyterians. Such policy statements, however, do require the careful consideration of the entire membership of the denomination, and represent the best judgment of the denomination’s highest deliberative body.

In this study document we present to the church in 2010 our best understanding of compensation theories and practices found in both the church and in society. This paper attempts to provide a means for each of us to view every action of our lives in terms of faithfulness to our God, the church, our neighbors, and ourselves.

2. Biblical Resources

The Bible challenges us at many points, not the least of which is to recognize the difficulty for each of us to apply the truth of an ancient text to a modern world, a world that was not imaginable when the canon was determined. Yet the wisdom of the text is applicable when viewed as a whole. Biblical themes of love, justice, covenant living, sin, concern for everyone and particularly for the poor and least favored are striking in their constancy. From these overarching themes come application to specific problems or issues of daily living—dealing with addictions, the nature of Christian ethics, sin, coping with change, living in the past or solely for the future. These themes apply to individuals who struggle to understand their personal sense of vocation. These same themes, however, apply to corporate bodies, whether of church or secular society, as individuals seek to understand the talents and gifts they have been given and how to use those gifts for others as well as for themselves.

It is a theme of the Reformed tradition that God is Lord over all of life. As Ps. 24:1 states, “The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it.” It is therefore both appropriate and necessary for the church to comment to the culture as well as to its own members when it perceives that issues in either church or society are amiss. We are in the midst of a time of economic uncertainty and confusion when members of the church can see anomalies in both church and society; a time when the church has a responsibility to its members, as well as others, to provide guidance for future action, both as individuals and to the church administrative leadership. To be true to its calling, the church must ground that guidance in its biblical understanding and its theological heritage.

The Bible provides direction for living. A familiar statement, Deut. 6:5, has been called the cornerstone of the Hebrew Scriptures; “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might.” By the time of Jesus, the Hebrew understanding had expanded, been clarified, codified, and compressed in the “Great Commandment” as found in the gospel of Luke (10:25–28), where Jesus affirms a lawyer’s recitation: “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your strength, and with all your mind, and your neighbor as yourself.” God does not require us to forget ourselves, forgo all worldly desires or needs, and live only for others. Loving God wholly is an end in itself, occupying our entire being. But in loving God, we demonstrate that love by the way we treat the other children of God, those with whom we share God’s creation, treating all as well as we treat ourselves.

a. The Bible and Justice

Our actions, when seen through a biblical lens, must include just behavior, personally and as a people. Justice is a value that permeates all others, clearly a major theological and ethical concept in the Bible. Jesus, of course, was well acquainted with the whole of what we call the Hebrew Bible, or the Old Testament, where we find many of the themes of his teaching. The centrality of justice in the life of God’s people is clear throughout the entire Bible. Very often justice refers to economic justice with a special emphasis on the needs of the poorest and most marginalized in the community. Leviticus 25 and Exodus 23 describes the Jubilee when freedom is restored to people whose poverty pushed them to the extreme of selling themselves into slavery; when family lands that had been sold were restored to those who originally worked it; when the land itself was given rest. Even if there was never a full observance of the practice of Jubilee, it remains as a key part of the vision of justice that guided God’s people from early times, and guides us still. But there are many other expressions of God’s requirement of justice. We offer only a brief sample:
Micah 6:8 is familiar to many: “He has told you, O mortal, what is good; and what does the Lord require of you but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God?”

Amos 5:11 announces that the rich who have taken property unjustly from the poor will not enjoy the fruit of their injustice: “Therefore, because you trample on the poor and take from them levies of grain, you have built houses of hewn stone, but you shall not live in them; you have planted pleasant vineyards, but you shall not drink their wine.”

Isaiah 3:14–15 announces God’s judgment on the wealthy that have abused and further impoverished the poor: “It is you who have devoured the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in your houses. What do you mean by crushing my people, by grinding the face of the poor? Says the Lord God of hosts.”

It is important to remember, as well, that the concern for the well being of all people, including economic well being, was extended to strangers, aliens, and foreigners. See Exodus 23: 1–9, for example.

God is defined as just, and justice is identified with God (Isa. 30:18), God’s ways (Isa.5:16), and God’s reign (Isa. 9:7). The meaning of this justice is tied up with the well being of widows and orphans and aliens (Deut. 10:17–19). It is connected to the well being of the poor (Deut. 24:10–22, Lk. 4:18, Isaiah 58), and of the least powerful (Matthew 25, Lk. 6:20–26, Lk. 1:46–55). Justice is defined by action, not inaction; by doing something positive, not merely refraining from doing something negative: to “… do justice, … love [mercy] …” (Mic. 6:8); to “open one’s hands to” (Deut. 15:11); to live a life in response to those in need (Job 29:12–20).

The result of the action of justice is the elimination of need among the people in the community, as in Deut. 15:4, Acts 4, and Matthew 25. It is also described by Hannah, Mary, and Jesus as a total reversal of social hierarchy with the first last and the last first (1 Sam. 2:3–5, Lk. 1:46–55, Lk. 4:18–19). Therefore, the existence of poverty, of want in the midst of plenty, and the lack of adequate access to the resources necessary for human development are evidences of unjust practices in the social and economic arrangements of the powerful:

If any of your kin fall into difficulty and become dependent on you, you shall support them; they shall live with you as though resident aliens. Do not take interest … . You shall not lend them your money at interest … or provide them food at a profit. I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt … to be your God (Lev.25:35–38).

The private ownership of property is acknowledged, but only with restraints and caveats, for ultimately all possessions come from and belong to God, and exist to support the common good of society because “The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it …” (Ps. 24:1–2). Even when need was a result of circumstances beyond anyone’s control or the result of failures leading to bankruptcy, even when gain had been legitimate and legal, the type of community envisioned in early Hebrew tribal society called for redistribution in the Sabbath and Jubilee years—to restore equity to community by returning to the poor the resources they needed to be productive on their own behalf (Leviticus 25). In later monarchies, the prophets of Israel denounced the inequality between rich and poor as the result of the idolatry of the rich, which results in the death of the poor (Am. 5:21–24, Isa. 1:14–17, Isa. 3:14–15).

The economic arrangements of society, and therefore of the Church that lives in that society, are integral to loving and serving God and loving and serving neighbor.

Justice is not achieved through blind impartiality but through empathy for the least as modeled by genuine love of God and neighbor (and alien and enemy).

Well-being is not a reward for merit but the intended condition of all in God’s realm.

Inequality of economic well-being is unjust when it undermines the conditions necessary for the development of the human capabilities of each.

Inequality of economic well-being is unjust when it undermines the conditions necessary for the effective participation of all in the ordering of society.

Just actions, given life through social policies, are those that will raise and restore the least to self-sufficiency, provide equal opportunity for human development, and empower the voices of those most marginalized in the decision-making processes of society’s institutions.

There are no exclusions, no exceptions, and no excuses. Justice, including economic justice, is required by God of God’s people.

b. The Bible: Need or Want—Coping with Inequality

Another biblical model is found in Exodus. Even in the barren wilderness, God provided amply for the Hebrew people. There was a sufficiency of food available, both manna and quails, and “those who gathered much had nothing over, and those who gathered little had no shortage; they gathered as much as each of them needed” (Ex. 16:18). It is important to remember that neither the manna nor the quails could be stored up except as necessary to honor the Sabbath observances. Further, it was impossible to hoard manna, which “bred worms and became foul” if they tried to keep more than they needed (Ex. 16:20).

The question of need and surplus is also raised by the life of the early church recorded in Acts 4, a record of living in community that has been attempted many times in many eras: “Now the whole group of those who believed were of one heart and soul, and no one claimed private ownership of any possessions, but everything they owned was held in common” (Acts 4:32). Participants in this community sold all they had, gave it to the apostles, who shared the proceeds, “distributed to each as any had need,” with the result that “there was not a needy person among them” (Acts 4:34–35). This is a demonstration of an ideal covenant community, yet the Bible witnesses to the fact that it failed because of the sinfulness of some members of that community. Throughout the centuries, many have tried to recreate this model of community and have failed. Yet Acts 4 still points to a vision of what community could and should be.

After that brief time described in Acts 4, inequalities have persisted among human beings. Given that reality, what is the reasonable and proper response to disparity in terms of assets? The issues of need and want, equality and equity, sufficiency and sustainability remain as key components in a discussion about compensation in both the church and in society.

Paul addressed these issues in his letters to churches as he traveled and attempted to raise funds for the church in Jerusalem. In 2 Cor. 8:12–15, Paul then speaks of different abilities to give in light of the need of others:

> For if the eagerness is there, the gift is acceptable according to what one has—not according to what one does not have. I do not mean that there should be relief for others and pressure on you, but it is a question of a fair balance between your present abundance and their need, so that their abundance may be for your need … . As it is written, “The one who had much did not have too much, and the one who had little did not have too little.”

The understanding that we live with different economic circumstances is echoed elsewhere in the Bible, as is the admonition to use our abundance for the sake of others. John’s epistles speak of love and of God’s love for us in the gift of Jesus the Christ. The proper response to that love and the result of that love will be shown in the way we treat each other. “How does God’s love abide in anyone who has the world’s goods and sees a brother or sister in need and yet refuses help?” (1 Jn. 3:17).

c. The Bible: Money—Hoarding or Sharing

Popular culture may say that “money is the root of all evil,” but 1Tim. 6:10 is far more subtle. In the midst of a discussion concerning teaching and truth, Timothy refutes a notion that godliness itself is a means of worldly gain. Gain, he says, can be found in combining godliness with contentment, “for we brought nothing into the world, so that we can take nothing out of it” (1 Tim. 6:7). And addressing directly those who believe that material gain is a reasonable and sufficient goal for life, Timothy continues, “… those who want to be rich fall into temptation and are trapped by many senseless and harmful desires that plunge people into ruin and destruction” (1 Tim. 6:9). Clearly, the pursuit of wealth is not to be desired, but Timothy does not say that money itself is evil. Instead, he says that its pursuit may bring pain and suffering to those who are eager to be rich, for it is “the love of money” that “is a root of all kinds of evil” (1 Tim. 6:10).

Money in our culture is used as a measure of value, of self-esteem, of comparative worth. Money or its lack can cause envy and contention between individuals, in families, among co-workers. Its possession is often seen as a goal in and of itself, a way to bring peace of mind and spirit in a frightening world. The love of money and all that it brings becomes a primary reason for being, blocking out all else. Rather, in dealing with wealth, Timothy admonishes his hearers to pursue “faith, love, endurance, gentleness.” The rich should not be “haughty,” but instead should be prepared to share what they have, being generous and finding their riches in doing good works.

Sharing and its rewards is also the theme of Paul in 2 Corinthians, especially Chapter 9, verses 6 through 15. To give is a blessing, not only to the recipient, but also to the one who receives. God provides for each one, and in turn, the receiver of God’s gifts shares with others. Sharing is from the abundance that God provides, in order that each person have enough. “And God is able to provide you with every blessing in abundance, so that by always having enough of everything, you may share abundantly in every good work” (2 Cor. 9:8).

These passages deal implicitly with the problem of inequalities in wealth, perhaps from direct compensation, perhaps from inheritance. There is an acknowledgement of disparity, however it is obtained. Within the understanding that differences occur, however, is found one response to that difference, the sharing of assets, of abundance. Asked to participate in a family dispute, Luke quotes Jesus as saying, “Take care! Be on your guard against all kinds of greed; for one’s life does not consist in the abundance of possessions” (Lk. 12:15). Guidance with regard to wealth as well as all other aspects of living is found elsewhere in Luke. Familiar to almost everyone and understood by little children as well as wise adults, the Golden Rule is foundational for personal relationships and larger ethical concerns of all kinds, and certainly for consideration of issues related to compensation. This teaching of Jesus is frequently quoted by Calvin, “Do to others as you would have them do to you” (Lk. 6:31).
3. Theology

Theology is a discipline that often is perceived to be the purview and privilege of the ordained ministers of the church. This perception is too limited, for theology belongs to us all. It is the way in which we, imperfectly, understand the world and our place in it. It is the way we articulate our faith and interpret biblical insights and mandates for our lives and our relationships to our neighbors.

The contrast between tangible and intangible wealth has long been a concern of the faithful. In the word and the Word of God, there is consideration of the spiritual and the venal, the mysterious and the everyday, the God-centered and the person-centered worlds. It is not in accord with the Reformed tradition to live solely in one world or the other, but rather we are always in the anomaly of the tension and ambiguity of living in both. John Calvin, often identified as the founding theologian of the Reformed tradition and the Presbyterian church, has been identified with economics, and the way in which a religious people view money, its uses (particularly usury), and the rise of capitalism. This perceived close relationship with Calvin makes close attention to his theology all the more relevant for Presbyterians.

a. Calvin and Capitalism

The most famous connection of Calvin and the economic systems was the argument of scholar Max Weber in the early 20th century that Calvinism led to capitalism, with the adoption of a “Protestant work ethic,” based upon the theology of election, and the resulting impetus to demonstrate one’s salvation by diligence and success in this world. To Weber the Protestant spirit provided religious legitimation to the emerging rationalization of the economy necessary for the success of modern capitalism. Scholars, of course, disagree as to the correctness of this view, but acknowledge that Calvin’s willingness to allow interest to be charged, and his reasonable understanding of commerce and its benefits for all, probably led to a spirit that encouraged the development of capitalism. Ideas leading to the development of capitalism were already present in 16th century thought, but were being hampered by certain religious notions and practices. However, “Calvinism did not (like other religions) obstruct the development of capitalism.”

Capitalism and a rationale for its existence are not the focus of this paper. Calvin’s attitudes concerning money and its uses are relevant, however, as we seek to understand and place in a context the wisdom that has informed and shaped the background for our faith. Just as we do not live apart from God, Calvin stated that, “God has created man so that man may be a creature of fellowship,” recognizing that we do not live in isolation from each other. As we have accepted Christ, we become a part of Christ’s body, a body that contains others. Calvin emphasizes this in saying that those who are united in the body are also “united among themselves in brotherly love to the end that they communicate together for their mutual progress … mutually exchanging among themselves the gifts conferred to them by God.”

b. Calvin: Love and Mutuality

Emphatic in Calvin’s thought is mutuality in both word and deed, in thought and action. Thus in both the Bible and the theology of Calvin is the clear understanding that we live in communion with God and with our fellow human beings. Calvin also stated that we creatures were sinful, and would take care of ourselves first, noting “he lives the best and holiest life who lives and strives for himself as little as he can, and that no one lives in a worse or more evil manner than he who lives and strives for himself alone, and thinks about and seeks only his own advantage.” Positively, Calvin also says, “… we ought to embrace the whole human race without exception in a single feeling of love …”

c. Calvin: Neighborliness and Lending

In a short and undated letter, written in French to “one of his friends,” Calvin speaks particularly of usury. His method of dealing with this topic is informative, exposing his attitude toward the topic of money. First, and unsurprisingly, Calvin looks to the Bible. Citing Luke 6:35 on lending and charging interest, he denies that these are the focus of the passage, but rather to how we treat others, particularly those who are on the margins of society and could not be expected to repay any money that was loaned to them. Our call is to be concerned for the least among us.

In his discussion of the question of usury, Calvin then references Deut. 23:19, another passage that, on the surface, is concerned with the specific topic of charging interest on loans. Calvin notes the generality found in this passage, which is “quite diplomatic, restraining us to act only within the bounds of equity and reason.” And regardless of activity in a specific instance, Calvin calls on us to use our actions “for the common good.” Other passages follow, in which Calvin speaks of Hebrew derivations for words, of greed, illicit license, cruelty, fraudulent activities. None of them prohibit the charging of interest, but require that in such practice the Christian must be mindful of his/her motivation and of the effect of the action upon both parties. Finally, he says, “I am unwilling to condemn it, so long as it is practiced with equity and charity.” As Calvin continues, he notes as exemplary several instances that are “in accordance with the principle of equity.” The discussion is completed by stating that all must be in accord with Mt. 7:12 (or Lk. 6:31), in which Jesus says, “In everything do to others as you would have them do to you; for this is the law and the prophets.”
Calvin, in good pedagogical fashion, reiterates in the form of a list what he has said before. Don’t take advantage of someone in need; don’t focus on personal gain to the neglect of your responsibility to others; follow “natural equity,” considering others as we are found in Mt. 7:12, which is “applicable every time”; base your actions on God’s word, not what is common or worldly practice; always keep in mind the common good; and act in accord to the laws of the country in which you live. Calvin ends his letter saying, “Rather than valuing my own opinion over yours, I desire only that you act in a way that nothing more be said on the matter.” This reasonable, diplomatic, restrained way of considering a topic fraught with difficulty for those of the 16th century is both typical of Calvin and instructive for Presbyterians in the 21st century. The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in its most foundational statements, follows Calvin’s guidance by stating that we must obey Christ’s will for the church if that will is “set forth in Scripture.” If Scripture is not specific, however, then “matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (G-1.0100c).29

d. Calvin Looks at Money

Calvin and today’s church both honor and rely on the capacity of the Christian to understand and apply biblical principles of justice and equity in dealing with matters in church and society. Andre Bieler, a French Calvin scholar, calls this understanding of Calvin’s teaching “social personalism,” an attitude that embraced theology with a belief in humanism. That is, Calvin combines a consideration of both the individual and personal of everyone’s life together with a thorough involvement in the social, political life of the world as seen through the lens of Scripture. As for money, Bieler states that Calvin found money not to be evil, but that God has provided it to us as a gift, which is therefore a “sign of God’s providence.”30 It has a utilitarian and a spiritual purpose, in that it is used for God’s mission.

Conversely, money can also be a sign of sin when it is misused, or not acknowledged as a gift from God. “I did it on my own. I earned it, and am entitled to use it as I wish and to feel proud of myself as its sole owner and earner.” These statements, according to Calvin, would be problematic and lead to sin. Bieler notes that for Calvin, ownership of a good is not absolute.24 Calvin points to the Hebrew Scriptures in which there are jubilee years and other times when there is a redistribution of goods, a return of land and goods to another, even though “owned” for many years. If a tangible asset cannot be owned, how much less can something as ephemeral as money be possessed.

Nor can it become a measure of worth. Calvin saw money and wealth as a gift from God and as belonging to God. Any wealth we can amass is due to the providence of God, and is given in order that we can live in an organized and responsible way, neither outrageously wealthy nor in abject poverty. As Bieler states, “In the scale of values according to God, there is no kind of correspondence between the spiritual and moral worth of a man, and his wealth or poverty.”33 Calvin commented on Luke 17:7 by saying, “It is by [God’s] own undeserved favor, and not by the value of our work, that God is induced to reward it.”

With regard to money, Calvin believed that what should guide our actions is a law of love. Commenting on 2 Cor. 8:8, in which Paul says he is “testing the genuineness of your love,” Calvin said:

God everywhere charges us to help the necessities of our brethren, but he nowhere specifies the sum, that, after making a calculation, we might divide between ourselves and the poor. He nowhere binds us to circumstances of times, or persons, but calls us to take the rule of love as our guide.

And continuing in that vein in commenting on 2 Cor. 8:15, Calvin specifies how one should use wealth, whether gotten by circumstance or by hard work, “Let those, then that have riches, whether they have been left by inheritance, or procured by industry and efforts, consider that their abundance was not intended to be laid out in intemperance or excess, but in relieving the necessities of the brethren.”

e. Revolutionary Thoughts?

Another scholar, W. Fred Graham, has written about Calvin as a “constructive revolutionary” revolutionary in the sense that he would change the societal understanding of work, relations between employer and employee, money and remuneration for labor, even clarifying that material possessions and wealth were not inherently evil, but permissible for the faithful Christian. Calvin posits a life neither of asceticism or amassing wealth, but a constant balance between accumulation and poverty.

f. Calvin, the State, and the Economy

Graham’s assessment agrees with Bieler, however, in stating that Calvin believes “social order can be had only in a constant equilibrium between personal economic responsibility and state control.”35 Bieler quotes Calvin, “In order to feed men in friendship and peace, it is required that each man possess what is his, that there be sales and purchases, that heirs succeed to those whom they must, that donations take place, and that each man may become rich according to his industriousness, vigor, dexterity, or other means. In sum, government requires that each may enjoy what belongs to him.”
The purpose of government was to assure that economic transactions could be made and could be trusted. Graham summarizes his understanding of Calvin’s attitudes toward money by saying: “[Calvin] was not a legalist in any Roman or biblical sense, but regarded the rule of love as the Christian norm and human laws as attempts to regulate with some measure of justice sinful men in their social existence.”

g. Employer-Employee Relations

Having understood money to be God’s gift to us, a spiritual presence in our lives, Calvin does not neglect discussing in various commentaries on scriptural passages what proper relationships should be between workers and employers, how workers should be paid, and what the responsibilities an employer has for the welfare of the employee. Calvin did not see salary as determined solely by objective criteria, but was to take needs into account. Calvin said in his commentary on 2 Cor. 8:13–14, “God wills that there be proportion and equality among us, that is, each man is to provide for the needy according to the extent of his means so that no man has too much and no man has too little.” In commenting on Deut. 24:6, Calvin said:

> God prohibits taking as security all that is necessary to the poor to gain their livelihood and to maintain themselves … . The one, then, who takes as security that which sustains the life of a poor man is cruel. It is as if he grabbed the bread from a starving man, and his life itself which is, as it were, cut off in denying the means of maintaining himself.”

Clearly, there are issues of justice involved in decisions about pay, who pays it and how much is given. It is Christ who is the final master and is the ultimate authority over the life of another. The position of the employer is therefore in tension, becoming at once a peer of the worker, while also having authority over the conditions of employment and compensation for work performed. Calvin’s commentary on Deut. 15:11–15 is:

> A master will have a servant; but if he draws from him all the labor that he is able without having any concern for him, he shows himself to be cruel. If he says, “But I feed him and pay him his salary.” Indeed, but it is necessary to have regard also for his capacity and the service which we are able to receive from that and especially that we regard that natural equity of not doing so to another what we would not wish to be done to us. When, thus, a man has someone in his service, he ought to ask himself; “If I were in his place, how would I want to be treated? I would want to be supported.” When it is a question of our profit or loss, we are very able judges; but when it is a question of others’, we are blind.

h. Compensation: God’s Gift!

In Calvin’s understanding, we are given by God all that we need for life, a salary that we have not and cannot earn. Our labor for the Lord is rewarded, as we humans also are responsible for rewarding those who work for us. The salary therefore becomes a sacred trust, one in which both parties are partners, as Bieler says, “… the human salary granted to our work is … the tangible expression of the gratuitous and unmerited salary with which God honors our labor.”

Calvin even considered the issue of paying wages even when it would be possible to pay less:

> For behold what the rich often do, they spy for occasions and opportunities to cut down by half the wages of poor people who need employment. “This man is completely destitute,” the rich murmurs at seeing a poor unemployed; “I will have him for a morsel of bread because, in spite of his opposition, he shall have to put himself at my mercy. I will give him half-wages, and he shall have to be contented with it.” When we use such hardness, even though we do not retain his salary, we are truly cruel and we defraud a poor man.”

The just wage, the fair wage, was not the lowest possible wage that the employer could persuade the worker to agree to. Calvin commented on Deut. 24:14 (“You shall not withhold the wages of poor and needy laborers, whether other Israelites or aliens who reside in your land in one of your towns,” by reacting angrily that the rich act unjustly, and that with regard to wages the worker has a right to have enough. Calvin’s commentary on Deut. 15:11–15 is:

> The just wage, the fair wage, was not the lowest possible wage that the employer could persuade the worker to agree to. Calvin commented on Deut. 24:14 (“You shall not withhold the wages of poor and needy laborers, whether other Israelites or aliens who reside in your land in one of your towns,” by reacting angrily that the rich act unjustly, and that with regard to wages the worker has a right to have enough. Calvin continues,

> When the poor whom you have employed at work, and who put their work, their sweat, and their blood for you, have not been paid as is right, when you do not give them comfort and support; if they demand vengeance from God against you; who will be your lawyer, or your advocate, so that you will be able to escape? 46

i. Safeguards: the Contract

Even when considering Calvin as a revolutionary, Graham states that Calvin understood that people were not always going to be just, and so was in favor of contracts to protect both sides. In his commentary on Gen.29:14, Calvin says:

> God has engraven in man’s nature a law of equity … so men seldom err in general principles, and therefore, with one mouth, confess that every man ought to receive what is his due; but as soon as they descend to their own affairs, perverse self-love blinds them, or at least envelops them in such clouds that they are carried in an opposite direction. … For whence arises so many legal broils except that every one is more liberal toward himself and more niggardly toward others than he ought to be? Therefore, for the purpose of cherishing concord, firm compacts are necessary which may prevent injustice on one side or the other. 41

Generally, Calvin condemned abuse. Now we need to determine for ourselves and with others what constitutes abuse, and many seem to think instinctively that outrageously high compensation fits that definition.

4. The World

Henry Mintzberg of McGill University calls the executive pay system a form of legalized corruption that cannot be reformed (Toronto Star).
As we began this paper with headlines from the press, so this section on the secular marketplace begins with a headline, notably not neutral in tone. It states that excessive pay can be corrupt—the giving of compensation that is out-size, outrageous, beyond anyone’s possible needs. The sense of outrage combines with a sense that the largest organizations are setting the tone, are exemplary to smaller institutions, resulting in lives, communities, and even the very institutions being destroyed. The AFL-CIO, in a recent Internet report, stated that compensation of chief executive officers actually declined 2 percent in 2008 from 2007. However, that decline was from an average salary of $11.16 million in 2007 to $10.9 million in 2008. A similar charting of salaries from 1995 to 2005 by the consumerist.com website states that “while CEO pay rose 298.2 percent by 2005, and corporate profits by 106.7 percent, the average worker pay has only risen by 4.3 percent.” The complexity of the economic world, the ways in which it has developed in recent years, makes this a difficult topic to comprehend, much less to solve.

a. Analysis by Insiders

In seeking a fuller understanding of the secular market place, the study group consulted business leaders, CEO’s, and lawyers who are serving in business and government, human resource professionals and medical providers. Discussions were also initiated with some in the academic community whose fields include philosophy, business ethics, and even specialties in salaries of high-level business professionals, as well as more traditional economics. The material that follows reflects their views on the secular world in which they live and work as people living in consonance with values, and with a sense of personal integrity.

One major issue is that top management, especially the chief operating officers, are acquiring great wealth at the expense of the whole work force that has made that wealth possible. The call from the public is to pass a law that will limit the differential created between workers and top management. Yet, each time Congress puts a rule in place, the creativity of those impacted by the rule means that business will comply, but will work to find ways around the rule. If the rules place a cap on the salary of top management, and particularly on a single officer, but don’t cover a change in the underlying incentives, ways will be found to avoid that cap.

As an example, Congress passed a law in the early 1990s saying that any compensation beyond $1,000,000 would not be a deductible business expense for taxes unless it was performance-based. As a result, companies started to award comparatively low base salaries, enhanced by awarding stock options. Stock options, however, could be (and were) leveraged, providing a number of options for one share of stock. If the stock rose in value, the options would deliver more value.

As a result, companies, particularly those in the new technology business, moved to CEO pay combining relatively low cash and high leveraged stock options, thus causing the CEO to attempt to drive the price of the stock higher, thus leading to a larger pay-out for the CEO at vesting time. This had the effect of encouraging riskier behavior on the part of the CEO, focusing on short-term rewards and aggressive growth tactics. It also led to shortening the tenure of CEO’s, thereby removing from the workplace the factors of experience, intimate knowledge of the product and the company, and replacing loyalty based on expectation of longevity with the expectation of personal gain. This moved the incentive to a hedonistic individualism rather than concern for the larger good of the entire firm. The desire of Congress in passing the rule capping chief executive compensation was to achieve a moral-ethical goal. Instead, the rule caused actions that created significant unintended consequences.

The CEO’s do not operate in a vacuum, however. They are responsible to and work with boards of directors. In earlier times, these boards tended to be filled by those who had been successful in business and who served without pay except for expenses. Because of the responsibilities being placed on boards, there is a strong movement to compensating the directors, and even to requiring directors to own stock in the company. Directors have the task to consider the entire company, to ensure that it is successful and growing. Especially in the case of the huge enterprises that have resulted from the combining of companies, directors feel the need to find very talented people to put in charge of those companies. There has been some research about the skills and qualities that are needed for successful CEO’s, leading directors to believe that those who qualify for the position are relatively few in number, and so they use money as the incentive to attract the best, and compare what they will offer to compensation offered by other companies.

b. Business Provides Its Principles

Some of this research has resulted in a set of “Guiding Principles” being recommended by the Conference Board’s Task Force on Executive Compensation.43 These guiding principles are presented as an effort to “restore corporate credibility … and trust in executive compensation pay processes and oversight.” In the Foreword to the document, the hope is also expressed that, if followed, the principles can lead to a healing of the breach in the public trust in the economic institutions of our nation, both profit and not-for-profit. Those principles are summarized by the Conference Board as follows:
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL JUSTICE ISSUES—A: THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL RIGHTEOUSNESS

(1) Principle One—Paying for the Right Things and Paying for Performance

Compensation programs should be designed to drive a company’s business strategy and objectives and create shareholder value, consistent with an acceptable risk profile and through legal and ethical means. To that end, a significant portion of pay should be incentive compensation, with payouts demonstrably tied to performance and paid only when performance can be reasonably assessed.

(2) Principle Two—The “Right” Total Compensation

Total compensation should be attractive to executives, affordable for the company, proportional to the executive’s contribution, and fair to shareholders and employees, while providing payouts clearly aligned with actual performance.

(3) Principle Three—Avoid Controversial Pay Practices

Companies should avoid controversial pay practices, unless special justification is present.

(4) Principle Four—Credible Board Oversight of Executive Compensation

Compensation committees should demonstrate credible oversight of executive compensation. To effectively fulfill this role, compensation committees should be independent, experienced, and knowledgeable about the company’s business.

(5) Principle Five—Transparent Communications and Increased Dialogue with Shareholders

Compensation should be transparent, understandable, and effectively communicated to shareholders. When questions arise, boards and shareholders should have meaningful dialogue about executive compensation.

Commendable as this effort is, major drawbacks are evident, primarily in the definition of terms, the tentativeness of the recommendations, and the evident availability of exceptions to the recommendations that could grow out of the principles.

For the public that may be affected by these principles, a focus on money occurs because, among other things, it is easy—easy to understand and quantifiable. Our discussions with those in top management positions spoke of the types of information, rationales, and values that informed their hiring processes. They said that intangibles, such as new challenges and the capacity to exercise new ideas, can enter into hiring decisions, but are hard to identify or to quantify. Directors, being risk-averse and composed of those who themselves are leaders in other companies, also want people who are passionate, excited by the company and possibilities for its future, but do not want to push their leaders into behaviors that are counterproductive. Psychologically, top jobs are presumed to be very stressful and the new leader needs to have a positive self-image. Because money is used to compare oneself to peers, to others who have similar responsibilities, the directors believe that a large salary will help the hiree to focus on success in the job, not on compensation. Further, these are extremely large companies, ones having budgets in the billions of dollars, and for these huge enterprises, the amount of money paid to the top executive is trivial compared to the volume of the company and the possible earnings at risk.

c. New Business Models

The business world, however, is not composed solely of profit-making companies. A fairly new phenomenon is the “low-profit limited liability corporation” or L3C, a corporation that expects to make a modest profit, while it also seeks to “offer significant social benefits.” According to Daniel Pink, such a company is exemplified by TOMS shoes, based in Santa Monica, California, which gives a pair of shoes to a child in a developing country with each pair of shoes sold to a paying customer. This company is neither a charity, nor the traditional company that we have experienced, and is currently legal in only five states and two Native American Tribal bodies. TOMS and other companies like it, exemplify new ventures, profit-making companies with a social conscience. The laws of various states and the nation have had to adjust in order to encourage their development without stultifying such entrepreneurship.

As a nation, we are more familiar with fully not-for-profit companies. Nonprofit enterprises carry both similarities and differences when compared to large companies of the economy. As in the for-profit world, most members of nonprofit boards of directors will come from the business community. Unlike most large companies, however, nonprofit directors are unlikely to be paid for their service. The purpose of the nonprofit is to answer some recognized community need as efficiently as possible in consonance with a mission statement. As a result, the compensation of the CEO’s of nonprofits is frequently lower than similar businesses. There are exceptions, however, as has been noted in the media attention given to salaries of the presidents of large colleges, or salaries paid to the CEO’s of large medical establishments.

Confusing the issue somewhat is the presence of both nonprofit and for-profit companies that serve the same needs, including schools, nursing homes, and hospitals among others. Laws, taxation, and oversight are different for the profit-making and the nonprofit enterprises. Societal expectations seem to be different for each, as well as employees’ expectation of compensation. There is confusion and concern about how to evaluate success, about what sort of metrics are to be used to judge appropriate performance, and therefore to give fair compensation.

5. Church Business

Churches in general, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in particular, offer yet another model, a model different in several ways from those already mentioned. Denominations can be similar to large, nonprofit corporations, though some individual churches may be larger than other denominations. Churches are formed around a mission, which can be simply to worship, to provide support to members, to operate specific projects that assist those outside the church community, or all of the above. Each congregation will have an explicit or implicit vision of its mission. Unlike corporations that often have very short-term goals and expectations, however, a church is an organization with very long-term visions. Its expectation (though rarely its reality) is that it will last forever, that its mission is timeless. It has no competitors in the usual sense, though many churches may feel in competition for members with other congregations.

Professional management is not universally found in churches. Secular standards of success are not the desired measure of functioning. Standards may be subjective and changeable, and applied only to one congregation in its unique context. In providing ministers for churches of all sizes, presbyteries are required to state what a minimum level of compensation is to be for the entire geographic area, an area that may encompass cities, suburbs, towns, and rural communities with very different standards of living and congregations with very different capacities to compensate their pastors. Yet the financial sacrifices that are often required of ministers can occur in many congregations, sacrifice that involves the pastors’ families as well.

Because presbyteries must approve all changes in terms of call for pastors, including their salaries, it is obvious to all members of the presbytery when differences in pay occur. Congregations and presbyteries struggle with concerns over minimum standards of compensation, which may be unfair or even impossible for some churches to attain. The situation is further complicated by large salary packages given to ministers in situations where the church and its members have the means to do so, and wish to compensate their pastor at the same level as that of the leadership and members of the congregation.

a. Church Structure and Compensation Practice

Complicating the issue of compensation in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is the reality of the several levels of structure and therefore of compensation. Local congregations, presbyteries and synods, and the General Assembly are parts of the same institution, but have quite different structures, vary in size and complexity, and have differing capacities to pay salaries. Except for trust funds and endowment income, local congregational giving ultimately supports the finances of all the church. Congregations vary widely in size and congregational health, reflected in their financial stability and capacity, though most seem to face the same challenges that have affected the rest of the United States. Presbyteries vary greatly in geographic size, but generally have been designed to be large enough to sustain permanent and professional staff to resource and support the churches of their region. Synods are composed of presbyteries in a region as well, but their function, size, and health varies widely, and currently is under question as to future viability. The General Assembly structure that functions between legislative General Assemblies is the largest institution of the church, and has much in common with a small or mid-size secular corporation. And beyond the General Assembly itself are several independent agencies, formed by the General Assembly, supported by it either financially or by the provision of members of the boards of directors, yet independent in structure and activity, and more importantly, also legally independent. This independent-dependent relationship leads to confusion and frustration in terms of authority and power, though it may be necessary and has worked well in practice.

It is not surprising that these differing parts of the church view compensation and their part in it very differently. Yet, all are part of the same church and its understanding of community, money, work, and vocation as found in biblical witness and theological understanding of God’s sovereignty over everything in the world. Considering the various structures and varying context of each area of the church has brought differing practices to light, as well as a sense that there is a disconnect between what our compensation practices should be and what they are in reality.

b. Compensation and Congregations

In considering staff compensation in congregations, even in small congregations, there are at least two separate patterns of compensation. Decisions about ministers’ salaries are the responsibility of the session, and of the congregation for installed pastors, although no agreement is final until reviewed by the presbytery’s committee on ministry and approved by action of the presbytery. While the presbytery may have policies or guidelines and may approve the compensation of the various temporary supply pastoral arrangements, the session of the congregation is largely responsible in these instances. Lay people who are employed by the congregation for various functions in the church do not have the oversight of the presbytery, however, and compensation practices vary widely. Often lay staff members do not have benefits, are part-time, and do not participate in the minimum compensation packages that are set by the presbyteries and are constitutionally mandated for ministers.
The research concerning compensation at the congregational level displayed a wide variety of responses, both anecdotal and through random sampling of ministers. A majority (60 percent) of the sampled responses said that economic factors had influenced their calls. In addition 65 percent said that they were aware that others had incomes that were “inadequate.” Individual responses reflected an understanding of biblical or theological grounds for compensation. However, the realities of living in today’s world, particularly with the responsibility of caring for the needs of a family, was very important to the respondents. An even larger proportion (85 percent) of respondents were in favor of the constitutionally mandated practice of a presbytery-mandated minimum terms of call, including cash salaries. Some ministers felt these minimums were fair; others felt their minimums were woefully low; and others that minimums put many on the edge of poverty. Secular market assumptions were felt to have influence on compensation; 76 percent saying that the influence was either extensive or a “fair amount.” More universal was the feeling that the entire church had a responsibility to do something to “respond to the compensation needs” of local parish pastors.

Suggestions about how the church should respond, however, varied widely. Some believed that there should be a single salary standard for all ministers, while others desired a return to the practices of Acts 4:32–35, holding all things in common and providing each person what that person needed. Others feared that such a practice would be required, and would resist it as socialistic or even communistic. Most responses reflected a sense of vocation, of calling to the ministry that was not influenced by money, despite the constant struggle to provide adequately for all those for whom the minister was responsible. For a group that is required to have at least seven years of higher education in order to function as a minister, the lack of ability to provide this type of education for their children rankles.

Equally clear, however, was the ministers’ understanding that this is a difficult time for churches, particularly small and marginal congregations. Heavily endowed congregations, or those with generous and wealthy members that are able to pay larger salaries cause jealous reactions in some instances, as the tasks to be performed and the work required is very similar, even with differences in scale taken into account. Expressed by several was the loss of community that may and does occur in presbyteries over extreme differences in terms of call for the pastors. Anger is often evident at the time when the presbytery approves the annual terms of call. Transparency does not lead to peace, though the practice may be commendable, lessening the power we give to money by practices of secrecy.

Ways in which congregations provide for pastoral assistance through the use of part-time and temporary calls to ministers, which are largely not covered by constitutional mandates, complicate and put even more pressure on salaries. The use of commissioned lay pastors is perceived by some to undermine the educational requirements and therefore the motivation for ministers to be fully seminary trained. This puts many at odds with their sense of call and understanding of vocation, as it becomes a seriously complicating factor, not only for the minister but also for the life and health of the congregation and even of the presbytery. Most married ministers are dependent upon their spouses’ provision of a second income or feel they themselves must take a second job in order to provide. Some described low salaries as “personnel abuse” and themselves as enablers of the abuse by accepting their part of this system. Many others were clear about having a strong sense of vocation, a calling to ministry that was not dependent upon finances alone, a sense that God desired their gifts to be exercised in ministry to and with God’s people coupled with a desire to work through the financial difficulties with God’s help.

c. General Assembly Entities

Leaders of the agencies of the General Assembly were gracious in giving of their time to speak to the members of the study group. The following material reflects the information that was shared by those staff members.

Discussing matters of staff compensation at the level of the General Assembly and its agencies was both interesting and surprising. We were able to consult with the bodies that are related to the General Assembly, provide vital services to the church, but that are independent corporations. These included the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program (PILP), the Presbyterian Foundation (FDN), the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPL), and the Board of Pensions (BOP), as well as several areas within the General Assembly Mission Council, including World Mission and Research Services. Several staff members from the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) also spoke with the group. There was great variety in the ways in which salaries were approached. Within any given entity, there was little difference between ordained ministers and lay people (both Presbyterian and non-Presbyterian) in compensation, though lay people sometimes received additional cash salary to compensate for the federal housing allowance tax relief granted by the federal government. The General Assembly is able to mandate certain practices and procedures for its own structure. For other entities, salaries and benefits are determined by specialized bodies within each corporation, though there are discussions and influences of the policies passed by the General Assembly, and practices mandated or suggested by internal personnel policies.

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) functions through a human resources department, headed by a lay human resources professional, who is aware of functioning within a church, but is guided by secular professional standards and best practices, rather than by theological or biblical understanding. The study group was told that gender, racial, or ethnic salary differentiation is not an issue.
One part of the GAMC structure, however, the World Mission area, has a very different salary structure. All missionaries are paid the same base salary, though differences occur due to circumstances that include living expenses, and size of family among others. This body is unusual in its clear articulation of theology and biblical influence in its compensation decisions, and its willingness to be countercultural as its members exercise their vocation. Even its director insists on being compensated at the level of other missionaries, rather than at the level set by the GAMC personnel policies.

Salaries offered by other entities show an awareness of market realities, with most consciously placing themselves at or below median salaries for similar positions in the secular marketplace. Several expressed an understanding that people who choose to work for a church entity do not expect to be earning top dollar, but have motivations that include dedication, perhaps a faith commitment or a desire to use their competencies for the church. The Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program (PILP), a financial operation, uses incentives to motivate employees and finds this a successful incentive to productive work.

The Presbyterian Foundation (FDN) is also an independent financial institution, operated professionally according to best practices in similar bodies in the industry. The exception is that bonuses are not paid, and their employees are compensated at no higher rate than the market median. While realizing that staff could make higher salaries in the secular marketplace, there is satisfaction in working for a specific mission of the church. The working atmosphere is family-oriented, flexible, and emphasis is placed on good relations in the workplace, although there is no discussion of or emphasis on theology in compensation decisions.

The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) occasionally uses bonuses as incentives to good work, but gives the bonuses to all employees in this small firm. Salaries are based generally upon those in the Louisville area, and raises are given through use of a pooled amount. No particular theology is followed, although the practice is to abide by the policies of the General Assembly. The generosity of the benefits given to each employee mitigates the somewhat lower salaries, again as does the sense of working for the church.

The largest and most independent entity of the General Assembly is the Board of Pensions (BOP), founded by the General Assembly but not under its control due to its legal and fiduciary responsibilities. This has caused concerns, as its responsibilities impact so many in the denomination. As the study group was informed, compensation for employees and officers of this entity are much higher than those of any other body, due to the competition for the special skills needed by its employees. While its own employees do not fit into the same financial levels as other employees of the General Assembly and its entities, employees’ maximum salaries are at the industry median, which is similar to the other quasi-independent agencies. Though the top leadership has exempted itself from the salary levels of the other employees, the ratios between their salaries remains lower than 10 to one. While the Board of Pensions cannot by law be forced to follow the dictates of the General Assembly, their practice is to listen, understand, and negotiate, and generally to “be good partners” of their sister body.

Though the Board of Pensions does not conform with its own employees to all GAMC standards, it is commendable in its understanding and exercising of community values in fulfilling its mission of providing pensions and benefits for the ministers of the PC(USA). Pensions are defined benefits, a rarity in the world today, while the medical plan for retired ministers, which is linked to Medicare, provides sufficient access so that its members do not have to have additional drug coverage. Ministers who have labored for small churches throughout their lives often find that their pensions are more generous than their salaries had been. Medical benefits for active members provide family coverage without additional cost to the employing agency and generally do not disqualify for “pre-existing conditions” at the same level as commercial insurance policies. Coverage for pension and medical expenses is paid by churches or other qualified church organizations at the rate of the declared median ministers’ salaries, a practice that requires congregations to pay nearly a third more in addition to the declared cash salary, which many find extremely difficult. There is much expressed concern over the expense of these benefits, though the coverage expresses the theological value of caring for one’s neighbor.

The Office of the General Assembly (OGA), the body that covers the Stated Clerk and his staff, has a separate salary structure designed to be as egalitarian as possible. The Director of the Office of the Stated Clerk stated that she works closely with the GAMC, and follows the personnel policies of the latter. Their practice is to keep staff salary ratios one to five, trying to keep the gap between lowest and highest salaries as close as possible. Knowing that they are dependent upon shrinking resources and are in a time of financial difficulties for everyone, this office attempts to stay flexible and aware always of the nature of their mission. They particularly emphasize a Christian understanding of employment, not only in compensation but also in opportunities and training offered to employees.

d. General Assembly and Compensation

The General Assembly has been concerned with issues of compensation over many years, and has developed policies that were relevant to their times. The amount to be paid to the leader, whether a pastor or the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council, has differed and been expressed by the ideal of varying ratios to be paid, but it has often been the subject of controversy.

Blending two or more systems of compensation at the time of reunions in the church has been one of the most difficult tasks. Prior to the 1983 reunion, the practice of the PCUS at the General Assembly was somewhat more egalitarian than the UPCUSA, though there was not churchwide compliance with a single standard. The UPCUSA functioned on a denomination-wide financial system in which all the judicatories or governing bodies, regardless of wealth or assets, paid into a large fund, which was disbursed following consultation with all bodies. The effect of this activity was that each body was both taken from and given to. While the current system may be simpler to understand, it also tends to diminish the sense of community that is so vital to the covenantal nature of the church. We do not expect to return to a system suitable to a former time. However, it is important to find a new way to move to a greater sense of community solidarity than we are currently experiencing.

The increasing professionalization of the structure and organization of the church has led to weakening the theological underpinnings of its finances and an increased secular business standard of business. One suggestion to alleviate perceived and real differences is for presbyteries to declare a maximum in addition to their minimum terms of call. The maximum would not be absolute, that is the congregation could pay whatever they felt called to pay, but for each dollar above the maximum, the congregation would give an equal sum to the presbytery to be placed in a fund to assist struggling churches. In a similar vein, presbytery minimum salaries may be leading involuntarily to church closings or to ministers having to reduce their calls to part-time. Rather than a single minimum for a large geographic area encompassed by a presbytery, the suggestion is that the presbytery have minimums that reflect the actual cost of living in the various parts of the presbytery.

e. Compensation and Call

It is possible to research and discuss what it is that is done in both the church and the secular economic world concerning compensation. Rarely, however, does either body step back to consider why a certain action is taken. Much of the rhetoric spoken in business decisions seems to be concerned with “best practices” that involve considering what other similar firms are doing; with comparing gifts or talents needed in leaders and evaluating the compensation to be offered in competition with other firms for a limited pool of leadership talent; and in providing incentives beyond a specific cash salary in accord with the best practices and the competitive arena. This leads to a spiraling of the “need” to accommodate to the perceived demands of the market in order to procure the best talent, the need to pay the leader ever increasing amounts in compensation.

This presents a contrast with the call of the parish pastor. Left with considerable freedom in which to exercise ministry, the pastor studies for competence/mastery, has much autonomy, and yet is in a constant relationship to the church leadership in the session and boards of deacons and trustees, as well as to all the members of the congregation. The ministry model sees workers (pastors and other employees) as partners, not as resources, and as players, rather than pawns. The story found in Luke 10, as Jesus recruits and sends seventy people out to begin the mission of the church, speaks of ministry as it began. Jesus, the pastoral leader, gives advice and counsel, but does not accompany the evangelists. Upon their return, he rejoices with them over the success of their mission. Yet each must have found different circumstances, different ways to accomplish the task given them—a task that was not quantified precisely, but told through parabolic language, “The harvest is plentiful, but the laborers are few.”

B. Secular Assumptions

In studying the issues of compensation in the church, it has become very apparent that secular market assumptions do influence the church. The influence is felt in the ways that pastors think of themselves as servants of God and yet as part of their civic communities, that church members consider their witness in the church and in society, that session members make decisions on terms of call for their pastors. The power of money is felt by many, either consciously or unconsciously, in self-worth or measuring themselves against others. But financial considerations have a power not only on individuals, but also on our corporate life.

Some of the secular attitudes about money that we heard echoed in the church are:

1. Accumulation of power and wealth are the real source of authority, and demonstrate God’s favor.
2. Real success is measured in accumulation of money, and with it comes power.
3. Money is considered to be the primary motivator and is used as an incentive for attracting talent.
4. Incentives and motivations of the secular world are based on self-interest and expressed by the accumulation of wealth, making a god of riches and leading to sin.
5. Deference is owed to wealth, both in expectation and in reality.
6. Implications of the statement, “You are entitled to what you pay for … and only what you pay for,” leads to personal and professional devaluing of other attributes.

7. Monetary rewards or equivalents are used as motivation to good work.

8. The employee is a resource to be used rather than a partner in ministry.

9. It is assumed that work in ministry is harder for the pastor of a large church than for the small church pastor and thus justifies great disparity in compensation, as the CEO of a large company is justified in an incredibly large salary compared to the company’s employees.

10. Market benchmarks and medians are used as the primary basis for establishing compensation schedules.

11. Needs of the employee are not allowed to be an appropriate consideration in compensation decisions.

12. Dependency is dishonorable and shameful.

14. Mental work is thought to have more value than manual work and deserves greater compensation.

15. That only certain people have the power to be creative, which is recognized in terms of compensation.

This list is not exhaustive, as the influence of money, wealth, riches by whatever name it is called is pervasive in our society, in our decision-making, and therefore in the way we form relationships in our communities—in the way we think of others and ourselves.

C. Conclusions: A Common Bond

In the appended surveys of pastoral opinion on compensation gathered by the Presbyterian Panel, there is evidence of lively debate within the church on compensation. Clearly many pastors and search committees have reflected deeply on the role of money in their lives, as motivation and as benchmark. The guidance of this study for us all as members and church workers is above all to affirm the common bond of membership within the church, while also affirming that the church should not be conformed to the secular expectations of individual success, wealth, and hierarchy. Compensation is only part of the internal culture and conversation of the church, ideally a form of God’s communicating care. The spiritual consequences of inequality impact the whole of human life. Sometimes it is even possible to accept overwhelming inequality with a fatalistic conclusion that whatever is, is right. That is not the message of God as we hear it through the biblical witness or Reformed theology.

Social location influences how any suggestions for regulations and rules are heard. Presbyterians may disagree on what our faith teaches about progressive taxation or windfall taxes on bonuses. We believe that any economy at its best exists to produce and distribute the necessities of life and balance excesses and shortfalls. But we trust that the biblical and Reformed message on the economy is clear: it is not to be demoralized, separated from moral judgment and efforts at reform, from within the system or without. Our understanding of the responsibility of stewardship for the world given to us all by God makes it necessary for us to speak to the Church and to the world when we see practices that prevent God’s plan and desire for all to be put into effect.

The economic crisis of 2008 and 2009 has reaffirmed the constructive and necessary role of government in advanced economies, yet the rhetoric of idolizing freedom above all continues to obscure government’s responsibility to promote and preserve the common welfare as well as defend the people against enemies within and without. It is beyond this paper’s purview to consider economic recommendations for government policies in any detail, beyond general positions on the fair accountability of those who most set the secular tone itself. In broad terms, this paper affirms the statement of the World Council of Churches’ study of ecological debt: that the era of unlimited consumption and unlimited compensation is over. It is and was unsustainable and had moral side-effects on the coherence of communities.

Fear and the Biblical Task: Repentance and Reformation

In this time of economic stress, worldwide concern over terrorism and war, and pervasive fears—fears that we will never be safe, that we will not have sufficient means to support our basic needs, that the world is moving into chaos beyond our control—at this time we look for signs that God is still with us, that we can manage our anxieties, that we can do something to bring peace to a fractured world. The message of the Bible is clear. It is a message of persistence in the face of danger, that success is not our goal, but faithfulness to God’s call is and will be. In addition, the message is that we are each important, for we are the Body of Christ and individually members of it.
As we consider the issues of justice and equity that concern us about compensation in the church and in the secular world, we can be overwhelmed, for they seem so great and intransigent. Yet we also affirm that compensation is part of the exchange of gifts within the economy of God that should be most guided by God’s call to each, our vocation. Secure in the knowledge of God’s grace and loving concern for God-created mortals, however, we understand that discouragement and inaction are not given to us as options. Rather we believe that, with God’s help and the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we can begin to make a difference, to repent of our movement away from God’s plan for equity and justice for all. This is the beginning of true reformation, the reformation we espouse but often are severely challenged to accept and put into practice. We know that radical change will likely not be accomplished in our lifetime. Yet, we also know that nothing can be or will be accomplished without a first step, small as that might be. Our hope is that presenting this paper for your study and consideration may lead to change, change that will happen one step at a time under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

D. The Committee’s Work

This study paper, resolution, and recommendations grew out of an action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) directing “That the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Theology, Worship and Education Ministry Area and the Office of Vocation, update the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s 1983 “Theology of Compensation” report (Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 82, 116, 689–704) to provide theological guidance to church and society with regard particularly to the impact of secular market assumptions on the compensation practices of the PC(USA).”

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy appointed a study group to prepare a draft statement, the members of which were: The Reverend Deborah Fortel, chair; the Reverend Dr. Gloria Albrecht; Dr. Ruy Costa; the Reverend John Fife; and the Reverend Dr. Peter Reynen. The Reverend Dr. Johnny Hill and Thomas Urbaniak contributed insights to the group. The Reverend Dr. Catherine Borchert served as consultant, together with staff resourcing by the Reverend Dr. Christian Iosso. The Reverend Kevin Park of the Theology and Worship Office also contributed to the group’s work.

The study group met three times, gathering twice in Louisville and once in Philadelphia. At its first meeting in Louisville, the group consulted concerning compensation practices and policies with representatives of the General Assembly Mission Council, the Office of the General Assembly, and all the agencies of the PC(USA), except the Board of Pensions. Also at this first meeting, the group consulted with the Reverend Vernon Broyles concerning the history of compensation in both denominations prior to the reunion in 1983, and met with PC(USA) Research Services concerning past surveys of compensation practices. It was decided to have a short survey of a randomly selected group of pastors asked to consider the ways that compensation has affected their acceptance of calls, and their perceptions of the ways that compensation and its adequacy or inadequacy is visible in their lives or the lives of other ministers they know. The complete response is attached to this report as an appendix.

At the second meeting in Philadelphia, a portion of the group met with the Board of Pensions leadership, which provided information concerning its own structure, as well as valuable insight into the community nature of the pension plan. Also during this meeting, the group consulted with two professors of economics from Temple University: Dr. Lynne Andersson, who specializes in business, society, and ethics, and Dr. Michael Bognanno, whose specialties are labor economics and the compensation of chief executive officers (CEO’s) and met at the presbytery office with a group of pastors to hear from them their concerns about compensation.

Between meetings, individual members of the study group met with groups of presbyters and church members, asking them to share their perceptions of the influences of compensation in the life of the church. Separately, as well as communally, the group engaged in Bible study, in the study of various documents, mutual instruction, and sharing of drafted portions via the Internet. As a consultant, Catherine Borchert wrote and guided the writing of the report, but the entire study group participated in writing sections of the report and editing the whole.

Appendix A

Themes in the Theology of Compensation of the Presbyterian Church

Introduction:

This summary looks briefly at the historical setting for ministerial compensation and then at the approaches of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S., and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. that were brought together in the Reunion of 1983. Professionalization of the ministry within denominational structures included providing retirement security and affordable medical care, but the development of explicit theologies of compensation only emerges in the 1970s with attempts to address continuing inequities and differences between mission board and congregation-based models.

The current theology of compensation is a partly aspirational compromise between merit-based and egalitarian approaches. It encompasses a rationale for regionally varied minimum salaries, non-binding ratios for minimum to maximum salaries in national agencies, a pension system that redistributes retirement income upward for pastors of lower pre-retirement income, and a market-based system of pastoral compensation that reflects differences in ability, experience, background, and congregational resources. Most clearly in the Board of Pensions and Presbyterian Foundation, the agencies of the General Assembly operate pay scales that are increasingly hierarchical and several multiples of average pastors salaries. Yet even lower pastor’s salaries are increasingly unaffordable by many congregations that use commissioned lay pastors and bi-vocational or “tent-making” ministers, or go without specialized pastoral care.

Historical Background:

Compensation in the Christian Church has had many implicit theologies, most based on the concepts of vocation, stewardship, and the still-influential model of voluntary poverty derived from the Roman Catholic priesthood. This last model is also termed, the “forgoer,” as those following this model of support take only what is necessary for a life of service to God and others.

The Reformation doctrine of calling, applied to all persons, influenced and was influenced by the shift away from feudalism and to the city-based market economies of early modernity. Ministers were expected to have families and their communities or congregations were expected to support them, usually above the subsistence level but infrequently at a level of wealth. Rationales for pastoral support have often drawn from Old Testament models of the Levitical priesthood supported by the tithe and the management of sacrificial offerings, as well as the relatively few New Testament stipulations, such as “a worker is worthy of his [her] hire” and Paul’s justification for support (even as he was himself forgoing it; see 1 Corinthians 9 and 2 Corinthians 11). The clearest reference to compensation in the The Book of Confessions comes in the Second Helvetic (1561): “All faithful ministers, as good workmen, are also worthy of their reward, and do not sin when they receive a stipend, and all things that be necessary for themselves and their family. For the apostle shows in I Cor., ch. 9, and in I Tim., ch. 5, and elsewhere that these things may rightly be given by the Church and received by ministers. The Anabaptists, who condemn and defame ministers who live from their ministry are also refuted by the apostolic teaching” (5.168).

This survey focuses on the last forty or so of the almost five hundred years since the Reformation, but it also lifts up the way salaries or compensation in the church have often been influenced by prevailing economic patterns. Presbyterian social witness policy has also, for more than one hundred years, addressed the need of all workers for decent wages, safe working conditions, medical care, adequate support in old age, time for families and a Sabbath for worship (see the Social Creed of 1908 and subsequent support for unionization). Presbyterians led in the influential National Council of Churches study project on ethics and economic life in the 1950s and 1960s, while also originating our own statements on Christian vocation, minimum wages, full employment, and equal employment opportunity.

In its concern for the well-being of its ministers, the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. developed a pension fund for all ministers in 1927 (of the unit benefit type) and added major medical coverage in 1959. The practice of supplementing “inadequate pensions” over an earlier minimum began in 1956.

The post World War II period of prosperity was accompanied by growth in the Presbyterian and most other churches. The Great Depression of the 1930s had hit the churches, like the population at large, quite hard: church historian Robert Handy refers to the “Great Depression in the churches.” Churches with endowments and wealthy congregations had usually paid better than poorer congregations and mission efforts, whether overseas or in “home” or “national” missions. The Presbyterians and several other denominations had pension funds from relatively early in their development. The importance of a secure retirement led to funds for impoverished ministers, continuing into the 1983 Reunion with the “Joy offering” for the 10 percent of retired PCUS pastors living below the poverty line. Since 1987, the Board of Pensions (BOP) has provided ministers who had served at low salaries with pensions pegged at the median, a limited step toward equalization but a significant policy of solidarity for the ministry as a whole.

While World Mission, a part of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), continues to support mission co-workers on a common salary scale with differences for number of children and location, compensation policies for General Assembly boards and agencies and for synods and presbyteries came to contain salary ranges. In the offices of the General Assembly agencies these policies have set the upper and lower boundaries for salaries on an expanding ratio. In the UPCUSA in the 1970s and in the PCUS General Assembly Mission Board up to Reunion in 1983, no one could make more than three times the salary of the lowest paid exempt employee. At Reunion, the scale widened to allow a five to one ratio. It is now a nine to one ratio in the General Assembly Mission Council, with wider ranges in the Board of Pensions (BOP) and Presbyterian Foundation (FDN) and the most compact range in the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America Theology of Compensation:

Beginning in 1972, in response to presbytery overtures, the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (UPCUSA) General Assembly established a Committee on Compensation that worked from 1973–75, through a period of national board reorganization, to prepare a 1976 Compensation Plan for General Assembly agencies and for presbyteries and their congregations. This comprehensive approach reflected new thinking about the mission and ministry of the church (including The Confession of 1967 and the “Model for Ministry” study), churchwide survey efforts, consultation with advocacy bodies, and testing of “how-to” recommendations for “factoring” position descriptions. It reflected learning from corporate personnel practices and proposed objective, regularized approaches to evaluation and advancement. The committee also early in its work realized that it would have to address the tension between egalitarian and “meritarian” approaches on a theological basis.

The Committee on Compensation’s 1975 report, mailed to all congregations “identified two main issues which required sustained theological examination: ‘(1) the grounds for and extent of the differences between the highest and lowest levels of compensation within the system; and (2) the general level of the system as a whole in comparison with other systems.’ The first issues involve the basis for and degree of allowable inequities …while the second involves the degree to which church salaries should be related to those paid in other sectors of society (Report to 187th General Assembly, p. 10). While the committee examined most relevant individual biblical texts, biblical themes were found to give better guidance to an overall policy framework. And within these themes, “the committee took special note of the biblical concern to preserve human community against the threat posed by economic inequalities and exploitation.”
The initial conclusion voiced by the committee in 1974 and 1975 and echoed in the final policy of 1976, was that “fidelity to the biblical witness requires us to adopt a certain measure of skepticism regarding the necessity for vast discrepancies in compensation, to develop a more active and effective system of sharing our total resources for the sake of the more poorly compensated employees of the church, and to insist that certain very definite limits should be set on the range of acceptable compensation within the church” (1975: p. 11; 1976: p. 10). Both the preliminary and final reports are tentative in claiming too much authority for their theologies: “there can be no final and absolute ‘theology of compensation’ anymore than there can be a final and absolute compensation plan” (1975); “it would be pretentious to say that a ‘theology of compensation’ has been formulated” (1976).

After a review of primary biblical passages, including the outlier 2 Thessalonians 3:10 (“Anyone unwilling to work should not eat”), and noting the many passages that call for the poor wage-earner to be protected, the 1976 report points to the structural as well as personal approaches to justice: the jubilee “laws of release” and Paul’s address to the whole church in 2 Cor. 8:13–14. “I do not mean that there should be relief for others and pressure on you, but it is a question of a fair balance between your present abundance and their need … that there may be a fair balance.”

The 1976 report lifts up three biblical themes:

1. Creation, understood to be God’s provision of enough for all, so that poverty is not the goal, and work can be understood not as “an evil to be accepted as part of humanity’s fallen state, but … as … a positive expression of the image of God in persons.”

2. Sin, in both individual “sloth, dishonesty, and lack of charity,” and “institutional patterns of discrimination and oppression.”

3. Church, as community of service and as institution within society, living in some tension between redemptive difference and social conformity, with compensation for ministers less a distinct pattern than “an instance of the larger issues of economic justice.”

By locating the issue of compensation within the church in the sphere of justice, and invoking the constitutional promise from the Book of Order that congregations make to their ministers to pay them “fairly,” the report then looks at the philosophic choice between egalitarian forms of justice that focus on need and shared humanity and “meritarian” forms that give each individual what is “due” them based on achievement or contribution. The report chooses to balance the two approaches. Needs will be addressed by minimums based on the objective data of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, “rather than create a paternalistic compensation bureaucracy.” An egalitarian approach might also remove “certain incentives which serve to attract talented persons … and … might create strain between pastor and congregation by placing the former under a pay system utterly unlike the latter’s.” On the meritarian hand, the “difficulty of honestly rewarding merit in actual practice … seems to be the basic problem with this tradition.” The church must take care that “any system of supposed merit might in fact turn out to be biased in favor of already affluent, prestigious and powerful, and applied with discrimination against minority persons and women.”

The report then reiterated six “basic principles” of compensation initially approved by the General Assembly in 1974. These six, summarized, are:

1. Compensation should be related to “job weight:” the training required, inherent difficulty, and “impact of the position on the work of the church,” based on careful factoring.

2. Compensation should be performance linked, based on regular review, while discounting “competitive zeal” or equating unpopular actions with improper or unsatisfactory ones.

3. “To guarantee that a merit oriented system based on the first two principles not serve to create excessive difference between the highest and lowest paid ministers, there must be a fixed formula which keeps the maximum permissible salary within the church in a proportionate relationship with the minimum permissible salary.”

4. “Our system … should … neither impose … an involuntary poverty nor … the level of pay characteristic of the more highly paid professions, but should rather serve to ensure to all the clergy a moderate standard of living.”

5. Since there is a “legacy of discrimination against minority persons and women,” there shall be “a vigorous program of affirmative action.”

6. In order to achieve such a “truly adequate compensation policy,” congregations and judicatories need to support the “church’s whole ministry.” “This will require … wealthier segments of the church take a new degree of responsibility for supporting the ministry of the poorer and discriminated against sections of the church.” Presbyteries should also “be alert to other forms of ministerial compensation.”

With these principles reaffirmed, the 1976 policy presented a plan that included methods for “factoring” pastoral responsibilities and suggests mechanisms for distributing “salary supplement funds across synod lines,” an overall responsibility of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The “job weighting” of position descriptions for solo, senior, associate, and assistant pastors was to be done within “salary ranges” that provide a “moderate level of living,” acknowledging “the communal nature of the church requires that differences in compensation be limited.” Perhaps the clearest statement of the results that were anticipated was that: “The maximum salary payable to the clergy person serving full-time in the pastoral position having the highest possible job weight will not be more than three times the minimum salary … having the lowest possible job weight.”

Salaries for laypersons in professional positions were to have some equalization for the effects of ministers’ housing allowances (approximately 20 percent of salary, estimated to be the rental value of a manse). Other laypersons in clerical, service, support, and craft positions were to be paid more on an hourly basis appropriate to region and responsibilities. Congregations wishing to pay their pastors...
above the maximum (3:1) ratio were urged to contribute a compensatory dollar per extra salary dollar into a salary supplement fund. The average church, however, was estimated to need to pay 2 percent of its budget into such a fund. A study guide was included to help relate the concrete guidelines to the theological balance between merit and equality.

It should be noted that a program of “circulating funds” did exist for approximately ten years and that subsequent distribution of funds among synods continued after Reunion. In 1982 the Vocation Agency of the UPCUSA established a “Task Force on the United Presbyterian Compensation Plan” that reviewed the plan going into Reunion, reporting to the 1983 General Assembly (Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 499–501). Their brief report basically affirmed the UPC plan, though it clarified the six principles into twelve more operational principles.

The Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) Compensation Policy

In response to a 1980 resolution calling for “equalization of the retirement plan,” the General Assembly Mission Board was instructed to “… develop a Theology of Compensation for pastors, with particular attention to current disparities in salaries and retirement benefits, and the financial problems this poses for free movement of pastors from large to small churches” (Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, p. 116). The board made its report in 1983 in two sections, a review of compensation disparities and recommendations, and a study paper, A Theology of Compensation, prepared by Walter Brueggemann, an Old Testament theologian and member of the United Church of Christ. By way of comparison with the United Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the smaller, Atlanta-based General Assembly Mission Board had a lower and more egalitarian salary structure while the range of salaries in the pastorate was wider, partly due to voluntary pension enrollment and lack of minimums in one third of presbyteries.

In surveying the employment situation of the PCUS, the 1983 report concluded that most church compensation practice was based on “the values of the American work place and view the ministry as a professional function.” By those measures, the report cited a study confirming that the “clergy is losing ground.” The prescription of the study paper was partly to compensate for the lack of theological rationale for the substantial salary disparities. The report also noted that many lay employees were paid near (and in some cases) below minimum wage and were without retirement benefits, so it made recommendations for better practices in this area. The report reviewed the UPCUSA compensation and pension plan and made some recommendations for parallel practices by the Board of Annuities and Relief. Later, that board was basically merged with the Board of Pensions in Philadelphia (as the much smaller national investment fund of the former PCUS was combined with the United Presbyterian Foundation).

In preparation for the recommendations of the compensation report, the PCUS commissioned the Reverend Dr. Walter Brueggemann of Columbia Seminary to prepare an extensive paper on the theology of compensation. The paper was approved for study and circulated in the PCUS. The effects of Brueggemann’s paper on the reuniting church are perhaps hard to discern. Certainly salaries in the South improved relative to the North, partly due to population shifts and partly due to the relatively successful combination of pension plans and institutions.

In practical terms, the set of principles coming from the United Presbyterian plan became elaborated into fourteen guidelines in the united denomination. The initial 3:1 ratio, held more firmly in the former PCUS, became a 4:1 ratio by 1988, and was confirmed again in 1991. In 1998, despite Advice and Counsel opposition from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), joined in by the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), and from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, a compensation review eliminated the numerical ratio for General Assembly agencies.

The Language Changes Are as Follows (Emphasis Added):

• The 1988/1991 language: “Since the church recognizes the value of all varieties of service and since it seeks to temper the values and rewards of the secular world, the salary range for the highest level position within each governing body should be no more than approximately four times the salary range of the lowest position (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 796).

• The 1999 language: “the Church recognizes the value of all varieties of service and seeks to temper the values and rewards of the marketplace. A reasonable relationship between the highest and the lowest salaries paid all church employees honors the principle of shared community” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 183).

In response to the advisory committee, and perhaps implicitly responding to the Presbytery of Albany, which had overtured for a maximum salary framework (Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp. 35, 689), the Task Force on Compensation stated: “The task force discussed the objectives of wage equity principles and formula guidelines. The task force concluded that formula guidelines would be too restrictive and therefore inappropriate” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 185). In a secondary action, the task force recommended the formation of an Advisory Committee on Churchwide Compensation, composed mainly of persons with practical involvement designated by the six agencies of the assembly. This group reported in 2001, confirming the lack of specific ratios in the guidelines while tacitly accepting that the various agencies would determine their own compensation policies with relatively little influence from consultation with the advisory committee itself.

In the years of the new century, the de facto ratio of highest salaries to lowest has grown to be approximately 8:1 in the General Assembly Mission Council, lower in the Office of the General Assembly, and higher in the four quasi-independent agencies. The implications of this de facto theology suggest that the values of business compensation predominate over a sense of distinctive vocation for the church. The current study underway by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy thus seems timely, even though the inequalities in church agency and pastoral compensation pale in contrast to the Goldman Sachs firm, widely criticized for its $16.7 billion bonus pool for 2009.

7. This citation from 1 Tim. 6:10 has been the subject of discussion among biblical scholars, as to whether the love of money is “a” root or “the” root of all kinds of evil. It is also possible that this phrase can (and should) be translated as “for the love of money is the root of all kinds of evil.” The grammatical and exegetical groundings for this translation (with the definitive article “the” before “root” instead of the indefinite article “a” as in the NRSV) stem from the following: The Greek phrase is a nominal phrase. That means that both the subject and the object of the verb are in the nominative case, given that the verb “to be” takes both the grammatical subject and object in the nominative case. One simple principle of Greek grammar states that predicate nominatives generally do not take determinative articles (they are anarthrous) that is, the subject of a verb “to be” (in this case, “the love of money”) usually has an article, but the predicate nominative (in this case, “root”) does not, especially when it precedes the verb. A similar grammatical construction is in 1 Cor 12:27 and it is translated with the article “the body of Christ” in the NRSV.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

Item 10-10 recommends—in order to strengthen Presbyterian unity, mission, and solidarity in ministry—that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the churchwide study and action on the theology of compensation.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 10-10 be approved.

Rationale

Establish timelines for the review of compensation practices in other denominations and nonprofits.

In consultation with presbyteries, form a task group to develop a comprehensive compensation plan that would provide a more adequate and equal compensation in mission and small churches.

In consultation with Board of Pensions and presbyteries develop a more adequate compensation plan for ministers in retirement and in relation to medical benefits.
Racial ethnic churches are affected because of size, social economic status, and the cultural differences of its members.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises approval of Item 10-10 with the following amendment to Recommendation 2.i.(5): [Text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“(5) Report the [disaggregated] results of all of the above to the Office of the General Assembly through the annual statistical report questionnaire sent to the stated clerks of presbyteries. [Categories to be reported are: gender, age ranges, race/ethnicity, clergy/lay.]”

Rationale

In order to analyze data regarding information collected, it is important to increase the categories of information so that determinations can be made regarding ways to overcome the deficiencies discovered. The ACWC has been calling for disaggregated information to be gathered in many areas of its work, including the Women of Color Consultation Task Force (2008), and the proposed design for research on the status of women.

Since women receive less than 80 percent of the pay men receive for the same work in society, it is not unlikely that the same applies to the church. For this reason, then, it is important to collect data using a disaggregated model.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-10

Comment on Item 10-10—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) requests that the 219th General Assembly (2010) not approve recommendations 2.c.(1) and 2.c.(2).

The GAMC is in compliance with all current General Assembly policy regarding compensation. The current Churchwide Compensation Policy Guidelines were reviewed and revised by the General Assembly in 1999, and were affirmed in 2002. The Guidelines are applicable to agencies of the General Assembly and advisory to other governing bodies and Presbyterian related institutions.

Recommendation 2.c.(1) from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy calls on the GAMC to implement an older directive from the 1995 and 1988 General Assemblies, rather than the most recent policy.

The 211th General Assembly (1999) thoroughly addressed the matter of compensation in adopting the recommendations of the Task Force to Review the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Churchwide Compensation Policy Guidelines. Those recommendations include fourteen principles of compensation, including but not limited to the following:

Principle Two—Mission

The fulfillment of the church’s mission calls for effective and competent staff throughout the church and appropriate compensation to attract and retain them.

Principle Three—Equity and Accountability

The compensation plans should be equitable, consistent with the Presbyterian form of government …

Principle Five—Basis

Factors to be considered when setting compensation should include the nature, purpose, scope, and responsibility of the position, the experience, knowledge, and skills required …

Principle Seven—Compensation Plan Reviews

Each employer should review its compensation plan on an annual basis …

Principle Ten—Recruiting

… Employees recruited regionally or nationally should be paid within salary ranges related to average salaries regionally or nationally paid by employers for comparable portions in comparable organizations requiring similar skills and experience, modified to reflect the cost of living in the locale where the work is done.
Principle Eleven—Salary Relationships/Stewardship

The Church is one Body with various gifts, and each person’s contribution to its mission is important. The Church recognizes the value of all varieties of service and seeks to temper the values and rewards of the marketplace. A reasonable relationship between the highest and lowest salaries paid to all church employees honors the principle of shared community and call. (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 182–183)

The task force was charged explicitly to review formula guidelines regarding salary ranges (such as the 5:1 ratio proposed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy). “… The task force discussed the objectives of wage equity principles and formula guidelines. The task force concluded that formula guidelines would be too restrictive and therefore inappropriate…” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 185).

The 211th General Assembly (1999) also established an Advisory Committee on Churchwide Compensation to provide oversight and coordination of compensation management related to the Churchwide Compensation Policy Guidelines. In 2002, the General Assembly reaffirmed the Churchwide Compensation Policy Guidelines, and dissolved the Advisory Committee on Churchwide Compensation recognizing that the oversight for compensation is the responsibility of the boards of each agency and that the General Assembly agency review process includes review for the agencies’ fidelity to the policies of the General Assembly, including the policy of compensation guidelines (Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 460).

The Churchwide Compensation Policy Guidelines have served the General Assembly agencies well. Crucial to the General Assembly Mission Council, as to each General Assembly agency, is its ability to attract, retain, and fairly compensate qualified, skilled, and committed persons to enable the agency to fulfill its responsibilities, and to abide by the principles of compensation in the church as articulated in the Guidelines.

The GAMC therefore requests that the 219th General Assembly (2010) not approve recommendations 2.c.(1) and 2.c.(2) of Item 10-10.

Loving Our Neighbors: Equity and Quality in Public Education (K–12)—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in partnership with the Office of Child Advocacy, recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

1. Approve the report, Loving Our Neighbors: Equity and Quality in Public Education (K–12)—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

2. Receive the background rationale and appendixes (to be included in the Minutes).

3. Affirm the long-standing commitment of the PC(USA) to public education as an essential institution contributing to the common good in a democratic society by its commitment to equip all children to be effective citizens, capable of living full and meaningful lives and contributing to their society.

4. Approve the following measures to provide greater fairness and quality in public education:

For greater fairness in public education:

a. Recommits the PC(USA) to the principle of equal educational opportunity for all children in the United States, [regardless of race, abilities and disabilities, gender, language or socioeconomic status] [different as each child may be], and affirms them all as our children, neighbors in our care.

b. Calls upon our elected state and local officials to reform the way that public education is currently financed from an approach based largely on property taxes, which perpetuates and exacerbates class and/or racial disparities in poor, urban and rural school districts, to an approach that provides an equitable allocation of moneys to school systems according to the financial needs that schools require in order to attain agreed minimum standards in the provision of instructional inputs, qualified teachers, and physical facilities.

c. Encourages Presbyterians and other citizens to assess how the trend toward re-segregation and socioeconomic class separation may impact their communities and to support measures that would reverse this trend, which disadvantages more than one-third of U.S. public school students, as documented in the achievement gaps that are associated with economic and racial segregation patterns.
d. Opposes educational reforms that address achievement gaps by high-stakes testing and school restructuring without addressing underlying economic disparities in funding.

e. Expresses our deep concern about the wide disparity between the percentage of racial ethnic students in public schools and the percentage of racial ethnic educational leaders and teachers, which deprives these students of positive role models and cultural intermediaries.

f. Recognizes that while some families can choose alternatives such as home schooling, charter, and private schools, the vast majority (82 percent) of our children will, for the foreseeable future, continue to be educated in public schools. The privilege to choose an alternative for one’s own child (and the privilege of exercising this right based on one’s own resources) does not absolve anyone from the obligation to support financially the public schools that educate the majority of our society’s members.

g. Encourages Presbyterians to evaluate existing and proposed charter schools in their communities to ensure that they do not violate workplace rights of staff and educators, and that they serve the same population as regular public schools, including English language learners and students of all abilities and disabilities; be subject to the same audits, teacher-certifications, and disclosure requirements as regular public schools, and not be run on a for-profit basis.

h. Urges school boards, legislatures, and charter schools to ensure that charter schools fulfill their original purpose of developing innovative and effective teaching for all students and to share such knowledge with public school systems in order to assure equity in education and advance the quality of education for all.

i. Affirms that justice requires all social institutions in our society, whether private or public, to honor the right of all persons, including public school educators, to organize to participate actively in decision-making that affects them.

j. Encourages school systems (and related libraries, recreational, and other developmental programs) to provide age-appropriate opportunities for student involvement in institutional governance as part of teaching-by-example of democratic values, so that students can participate constructively in decision-making that affects them.

For greater quality in public education:

k. Supports reforms consistent with the social fairness and holistic vision of human development that public education is to serve, understanding “quality” in part to mean exposure to art, music, sport, and humanities for all students (not simply those bound for college), to encourage critical thinking and moral development and not only test-determined proficiency in a restricted set of subjects.

l. Calls for and supports the enactment of legislation that addresses the documented opportunity gaps in education by ensuring that all children have a similar chance for good quality early childhood education, fully qualified teachers, equitable allocation of instructional resources, and a curriculum that will prepare them for further study, employment, and community service (including Head Start and pre-Head Start in light of their demonstrated benefits for student enrollment and attendance).

m. Maintains that in an increasingly pluralistic and multicultural environment a basic understanding of religion’s cultural richness and historic importance should not be omitted from or slighted in the curriculum even as the difference between learning “about” religion and teaching faith is respected, and even when religious and cultural elements have been traditionally intertwined;

[n. That books and resources in school and classroom libraries reflect said multiculturalism in content to ensure fair representation and encourage cross-cultural understanding.]

[a.] [o.] Supports the development and retention of qualified and skilled teachers through competitive salary levels, continuing education opportunities, cultural orientation, disciplinary back-up, encouragement for creativity, and participation in administrative decision-making (including through union representation) that may affect their interests.

5. Call upon Presbyterians to support public education through the following measures:

a. To take an active role in supporting public education institutions and organizations partnering with these schools in order to make sure that all children have an equal educational opportunity;

b. To honor the service of countless Presbyterian members, elders, and ministers on school boards and as school teachers and administrators;
c. To urge congregations to set aside a Sunday at the beginning of the school year to celebrate public education, especially teachers, and to recognize students entering and/or returning to school; and

d. To continue cooperation in research and witness with ecumenical partners whose positions are consistent with our church’s position that all children have the right to an opportunity to access to a quality and affordable public education.

[e. To affirm the importance of the active participation of families in the education and development of children in their care.]

6. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the appropriate ministry areas of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to do the following:

a. Post this resolution on the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) website, and provide copies of this resolution electronically and in limited publication for distribution to public and school officials as well as to church study classes;

b. Develop and/or provide appropriate study materials for individual and congregational use to stimulate dialogue and action on the concerns identified in Loving Our Neighbors: Equity and Quality in Public Education (K-12);

c. Urge the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to include an emphasis on public education in the Presbyterian Planning Calendar;

7. Direct the Presbyterian Washington Office (PWO) and other appropriate entities of the General Assembly to communicate to the president of the United States and members of the U.S. Congress that:

a. the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) considers education to be a basic human right (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 532);

b. the 219th General Assembly (2010) declares its support for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution that affirms access to a quality public education (K–12) as a basic human right essential to human development because it enhances capacities, improves opportunities, and widens the range of choices; and

c. the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supports the speedy ratification of the U.N. Convention on the Rights of the Child.

8. Direct the Presbyterian United Nations Office and other appropriate General Assembly entities to communicate to the United Nations and other international bodies the concurrence of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with the UN Declaration on Human Rights that declares education to be a basic human right essential to human development because it enhances capacities, improves opportunities, and widens the range of choices.

[Comment: The Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues (A) advises that the assembly address issues of systemic factors that undermine children’s education. These include:

• The destructive impact of generations of poverty that diminish expectations of success.

• The debilitating impact of socioeconomic conditions such as lead-paint poisoning, fetal alcohol syndrome, drug dependency, and nutritional deficiency.

• The lack of support for families trying to be involved in their children's education.

• The inapplicability of curriculum to the life-settings of those children.]

Rationale

I. Introduction

This report and its recommendations are in response to the following referral: Item 09-06. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) Recommends That the 218th General Assembly (2008) Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in Partnership with the Office of Child Advocacy and in Consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, to Create a Resolution Team to Study the Church’s Policies on Public Education in Relationship to the Issues of Desegregation, Affirmative Action, Faith-Based Initiatives, Home Schooling, Charter Schools, and the No Child Left Behind Law, with Attention to Class as well as Race; Making Appropriate Recommendations That Would Be Presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010), and, if Appropriate, Subsequently Preparing a Study Guide for Individual and Congregational Use (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 53, 55, 865).
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in partnership with the Office of Child Advocacy and in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACRE), appointed a Public Education Work Group to draft a report responding to this referral. This group was asked to present its report at the committee’s meeting in January 2010. The work group was composed of the following: a retired public elementary teacher; college and university professors; persons with expertise in the areas of affirmative action, immigration, cultural competence, No Child Left Behind law; ordained and lay; and persons from diverse racial and ethnic and gender backgrounds. The members appointed to the group included: Alan A. Aja, David R. Brown, Christine M. Darden, Esperanza Guajardo, E. Magalene McClarrin, Jeffrey D. Swain, Ivy Yee-Sakamoto, Jenny Thagard, and Josefina Tinajero. Thagard and Tinajero withdrew from the committee because of other commitments.

Belinda M. Curry, associate for Policy Development and Interpretation for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), and Martha Bettis Gee, associate for Child Advocacy of the Compassion Peace, and Justice ministry area, provided staff support to the group.

II. Biblical and Theological Context in Support of Public Education

Loving Our Neighbors: Equity and Quality in Public Education (K-12)

“Which commandment of the law is greatest?” The gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke all record the account of this question being posed to Jesus (Mt. 22:34–40; Mk. 12:28–34; Lk. 10:25–28, NRSV). While the context of the question is slightly different in each gospel, Jesus does not back away from the challenge. In two cases, he responds with what we now know as the two great commandments: “‘You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.’ … ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself’ (Mt. 22:37, NRSV). In Luke, the lawyer who is testing him offers the two great commandments and Jesus affirms the lawyer’s wise response.

The two great commandments are the standard against which everything is measured. The biblical text is unequivocal about their importance. In Matthew, Jesus says that “on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets” (Mt. 22:40, NRSV). In Mark, Jesus says, “There is no other commandment greater than these” (Mk. 12:31b). Luke’s account moves from the authority of these commandments to how they impact those who hear them and do what they say: “[If you] do this … you will live” (Lk. 10:28). Jesus connects these two commandments inextricably. Why? We cannot love God and mistreat those we see every day. Loving one’s neighbor—with all its ramifications—is a reflection of our love for the Lord. In the context of daily life, we must exercise our faith in our actions toward our neighbors. To put it bluntly, the mandate to love trumps everything.

Love must be acted out without bias and with the sole thought that such behavior pleases the Lord. When one analyzes, for example, the parable of the Good Samaritan in Luke 10:30–37, it is clear that loving our neighbors as ourselves must take us out of our comfort zone and even into the realm of risking ourselves to help others. This parable above all others demonstrates that we are to called commit ourselves and our resources to helping our neighbors, for we are to consider their needs as important as we consider our own.

A. Remembering the Least of These

Who is our neighbor? Jesus clearly calls us to see everyone as neighbor, and to act as neighbor to all. The gospel also directs our attention in a particular way to those on the margins of society. Jesus challenges his followers to have a special concern for those he calls “the least of these” (Mt. 25:40, 45). We are called to recognize the image of God in marginalized persons and groups, those who are often invisible or left behind—to recognize the image of God in the faces of the homeless, the recent immigrant, the undocumented worker, and in those who are wounded and beaten back by systemic patterns of racism, classism, and sexism. The call to love our neighbor as ourselves challenges us to confront the evidence of racism and inequality in our public schools. We are called to be a voice for those with no voice, those left behind by certain education reforms and by the privatization of public schools.

B. All the Heart and Mind

The first of the two great commandments is a call to love God with heart, soul, strength, and mind. Mind in this text has a particular meaning. It does not mean the seat of the personality or the whole person as it often does in biblical texts. The word translated as mind means thinking or reflecting, a more specifically intellectual activity than we find elsewhere. Learning and intellectual activity are ways we love God. Some people of faith are concerned that public education in our increasingly secular context may undermine faith. Some seek to alter curriculum to reflect their religious worldview. But any attempt to use public education to teach one particular religious worldview is a failure to love and respect the neighbor who has a different religious viewpoint or who has rejected any religious viewpoint. Teaching a religious world view as normative is the work of faith communities, not public institutions.
C. It Is Good

In the opening words of the Hebrew Bible, God looked out at all that was created and called it good. The words of the psalmist echo the affirmation that “the earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it” (Ps. 24:1). The continued growth of human knowledge does not diminish a sense of wonder at the goodness of creation. Indeed, education helps the human creature to appreciate the wonder and intricacy of the created world. Too often the goals of educational reform are focused on economic realities, on teaching toward employment, and as training for the work force. Quality public schools are essential to our society’s efforts to overcome poverty and address social inequality, but education is about more than vocational training. Quality public schools offer a holistic education, one that equips our children to live both meaningful and productive lives. A quality public school that allows students to develop their potential is a place where they learn to think critically and become effective citizens, where they gain an appreciation for the sweep of human history and for the arts. Public schools are one place where children and young people can learn about their own bodies, how to be healthy and stay fit.

In inviting students to consider the world they inherit and their place in it, a quality public education is a form of stewardship. Such educational experiences invite the participant to a sense of wonder and accomplishment, empowering the student to make a difference in the world, to shape a life of meaning and purpose and to look at the heavens and earth and echo the words spoken at the end of creation, “it [is] good” (Gen.1:25).

D. Our Reformed Heritage

Beginning with John Calvin’s support of free schools, people of the Reformed tradition have always affirmed the value of education and its potential to transform lives and systems. The Reformers considered public education essential—first of all, so that the populace might be literate and thus able to read the Bible (leading to support for primary education); and, secondly, that persons might read Scripture with understanding (and thus the Reformers’ support for higher education). Our Reformed tradition further asserts that “… privatism, which seeks exemption from the conditions prevailing in a society and refuses to participate in a creative way in the social milieu, is incompatible with God’s intention for our lives. [Our tradition] affirms that growth toward self-determining, responsible, committed persons, concerned for the freedom and stability of their society, is best fostered in the pluralistic and ideologically open setting of public education. This role of the public schools must be consistently maintained and openly defended when necessary by citizens and by school personnel” (A Call to Church Involvement in the Renewal of Public Education, Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 481).

III. Recent History of General Assembly Actions

Jesus’ vision of an abundant life (Jn. 10:10) is for all God’s children. Quality public schools give us the best chance to empower the most students to embrace an abundant life in community. Historically, Presbyterians have affirmed access to a free public education as one key component in the inclusion of all in the abundant life.

A. The Church and Children

With the approval of a Commissioners’ Resolution: On Children’s Rights in (1990), the PC(USA) adopted a rights-based approach to looking at the needs of the most vulnerable of the vulnerable, children. The Convention on the Rights of the Child, one of the most widely accepted of the human rights conventions, posits a free public education as not just desirable for the few, but a basic human right of all children. Later the General Assembly reaffirmed the church’s commitment to the ratification of the convention in its Resolution on Children (Minutes, 1997, Part I, pp. 44, 534–48); and in its Resolution on the United Nations Assembly on the Child: The Future of the Child in the 21st Century (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 56, 288–92).

A landmark action of the 205th General Assembly (1993) was the approval of A Vision for Children and the Church. As the statement affirms, “all children have the right to be children; and all children are not just tomorrow, they are today” (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 644). By extension, the church affirms that children have the right to be educated today in order to reach their full potential tomorrow. Other key actions on behalf of children were the designation of 2000–2001 as The Year of the Child and 2001–2011 as the Decade of the Child.

In an overture On Supporting Efforts to Ensure the Health, Education, and Well-Being of Every Child in This Nation called upon Presbyterians “to support … efforts to ensure that every child in this rich nation of ours has … access to an adequate public education that will allow the full expression of each child’s gifts” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 467).

B. The Church and Public Education

In 1987, the reunited church adopted A Call to Church Involvement in the Renewal of Public Education calling Presbyterians “to join others in their communities—to provide public schools that will secure for all children an education that develops their capacities to serve as creative and responsible persons in the common life and—to mobilize the resources available in each community—home, church, community organizations (both public and private)—that will support public schools and share in achieving the necessary education of children and youth (Minutes, 1987, Part I, pp. 479–80).

The 204th General Assembly (1992) reaffirmed the church’s commitment to public education for all, not just for an elite few and its “vigorous support of and commitment to the American system of public education available to all children” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 886).

By General Assembly action, 1998 was designated as The Year of Emphasis on Education (Minutes, 1994, Part I, pp. 45, 296), calling for a broad range of initiatives and actions related to several forms of education, including public education. The 207th General Assembly (1995) underscored our historic commitment as articulated in A Call to Church Involvement in the Renewal of Public Education, reaffirming “the church’s position to support a public education of high quality for all children; encourage[ing] Presbyterians to learn more about their public schools … to pray for our schools and encourage learning and dialogue about public education … (Minutes, 1995, Part I, p. 60).

Through its approval of the policy on Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development, the 208th General Assembly (1996) affirmed once again a rights-based approach to education for all. That assembly declared “Education is a basic human right and is essential to human development because it enhances human capacities, improves opportunities, and widens the range of choices’ (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 532). The 210th General Assembly (1998) underscored our commitment “… to an educational ministry to those children placed most at risk in our society, specifically, urban inner-city [children]” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 652).

General Assemblies through the years have also spoken to the impact of alternatives to public education. Assemblies in both former streams opposed tuition tax credits. The General Assembly has voiced concern for evaluating the effect on witness to society of government faith-based initiatives. The 217th General Assembly (2006) directed staff to “assess the effects on Christian witness to society of government faith-based initiatives and other vehicles by which Presbyterian churches … closely affiliated with congregations accept moneys from government bodies, with particular attention to contracts affecting public education …” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 878).

C. Disparities in the Culture and in Public Education

Dating from the time of the Brown v Board of Education U.S. Supreme Court Decision in 1954, many General Assemblies of the predecessor bodies have sought to be a faithful witness in the face of the intractable realities that arise out of racism and classism, speaking out in support of desegregation and busing to achieve racially integrated education and in opposition to racial discrimination and tokenism in the public schools. In 1971, the General Assembly declared itself disturbed by the “number of private academies established primarily to circumvent compliance with federal laws regarding a unified public school system … [and called on Presbyterians] to support and strengthen in every way possible the unified, racially inclusive public school systems …” (Minutes, PCUS, 1971, Part I, p. 95).

The 207th General Assembly (1995) called for the church to “reaffirm its commitment to affirmative action as a means of … undoing historical and institutional effects of discrimination based on age, disability, marital status, race, or gender” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, p. 55).

The 211th General Assembly (1999) of the reunited church approved a resolution recommending “that all governing bodies of the PC(USA) support … the work of … entities fighting for quality, desegregated education for Black children and everyone else, throughout these United States …” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 77). The 211th General Assembly (1999) also approved the policy on Building Community Among Strangers calling on the church “to cross barriers that divide people and build bridges to connect people within the church and insociety” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 414).

In its action On Improved Education for African American and Other Students Placed At-Risk for an Excellent Education, the 216th General Assembly (2004) affirmed “That Presbyterians be called upon to confront the stubborn continuance of racial prejudice, particularly the persistence of societal attitudes that discourage academic achievement among economically disadvantaged and children of color students and others at risk” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 43).

In A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century and the Recognition of the Centennial of the “Social Creed of the Churches 1908, the 218th General Assembly (2008) challenged Presbyterians to live by a universal list of social, economic, and environmental tenets, including calling them to work for “High quality public education for all …” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 925).

IV. The History of Public Education

In the 1830s, the push for public education gained momentum when reformers like Horace Mann promoted the notion of the common school, publicly funded, locally governed, and offering a common curriculum to all students. From the early days of the nation, public education has played a vital role in American democratic society. In addition to preparing young people for productive work and fulfilling lives, public education has also been expected to accomplish certain collective missions aimed at promoting the common good. These include, among others, preparing youth to become responsible citizens, forging a common culture from a nation of immigrants, and reducing inequalities in American society.

Although access to public schools had become universal by the early twentieth century, the education provided by these schools was far from equal. Schools for African American children were segregated and generally substandard. Schools serving the urban and rural poor often operated in dilapidated facilities with underqualified teachers, overcrowded classrooms, and limited resources. Faced with these realities, reformers turned their attention from access to equity. The 1954 Brown v. Board of Education U.S. Supreme Court ruling declared that separate schools were inherently unequal, initiating thirty years of efforts to integrate schools so that all children would receive a quality education.

Proactive initiatives to implement court-ordered school integration in order to improve the performance of racial ethnic students have diminished considerably since the late 1980s, when Supreme Court decisions began to release communities from these requirements, ruling that cross-district plans were unlawful. Some school systems across the nation have begun using socioeconomic status to balance school enrollments. The rise of school choice, charter schools, and urban school districts with 100 percent racial ethnic school populations have resulted in few options for affirmative action to integrate many of these schools.

As this brief history suggests, American public schools have been expected to fulfill certain public missions that go beyond the purely academic purposes. These public missions can be characterized by six main themes:

- to provide universal access to free education;
- to guarantee equal opportunities for all children;
- to unify a diverse population;
- to prepare people for citizenship in a democratic society;
- to prepare people to become economically self-sufficient; and
- to improve social conditions.

In recent years, however, some of these public-spirited missions of education have been neglected and are in danger of being abandoned. Most current efforts to reform public education have focused on increasing students’ academic achievement—without a doubt, a central purpose of schooling. But the reasons given for improving achievement often stress individual or private economic benefits (such as preparing youth for good jobs in a global economy), rather than public benefits (such as preparing youth for active citizenship in a healthy democratic society).

V. The Current Context of Public Education

In the second decade of the twenty-first century, many challenges in the current context impact public education.

A. Demographic Trends

1. Trends in the Nation

The United States is experiencing the second largest flow of immigration since the European waves of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century. Beginning with the Hart-Cellar Act of 1965 that eliminated immigration quotas favoring those of European origin and replaced them with family and skill-based preferences, the law unintentionally led to an influx of mostly Latin American and Asian immigrants, as well as those from lesser-developed regions of the world. While Latino and Asian groups have a history that goes back to the inception of the country, their populations in the U.S. are now increasing as a result of rising birth and immigration rates. Although discussions of demographics in the U.S. have long overemphasized the relationships between Whites and Blacks, despite significant demographic diversity from the nation’s earliest days, this is no longer possible in a context of substantial and growing cultural and linguistic diversity.

As highlighted in Table 1, demographic shifts reveal an exponential increase in U.S. racial ethnic populations over time, with African Americans/Black (non-Latinos), Hispanic Latinos (of any race), and Asian-Pacific Islander groups growing, while the population of Whites continues to decline gradually. Demographic predictions are that not only will Whites no longer be the majority population in the United States by 2042, but in several states the Latino population will surpass the White population much sooner. In a growing number of states, Latinos are the largest racial ethnic group, recently surpassing the number of African Americans in states such as Iowa in the midwest and Maine in the northeast and in far western Washington and Oregon. This statistical trend must be viewed with caution given that Latinos can be of any “race” depending on the group’s African, European, Indigenous, or even occasionally Asian roots. For instance, it is unclear how many Black Latinos (Latin Americans with either visible or known African ancestry) are in the United States, nor are demographers clear about the racial identity of those who self-report as “Other.”

The Asian population is also growing exponentially. The latest figures illustrate that Asians compromise 11 percent of the U.S. population and 66.2 percent are immigrants (foreign-born). However, it must be noted that much like Hispanic or Latino, the term Asian refers to individuals whose origin could be one of a long list of countries representing many cultures and languages divided by thousands of miles of geography. While all Asian countries are represented in the colorful U.S. mosaic, immigration policy often favors immigrants from select countries. Contrary to popular belief and much like Latin American immigrants, Asian groups have differing needs, concerns, and educational levels, depending on their histories, context of arrival, skills, and other factors. New demographic trends also show an increase in minority populations in regions like the south and central United States, where Latinos are among the fastest growing minority groups. A 2004 study showed increases anywhere from 200–500 percent in the Latino population in states like North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Georgia since 1990.

Trends Among School-aged Children

Public education is the primary means by which we educate the majority of children. No other institution is presently capable of providing an educational experience for the majority of our children. According to the 2007 figures, elementary and secondary school enrollment in the United States is estimated at approximately 51 million, with approximately 1.5 million (2.9 percent) involved in home schooling; 5.9 million (11 percent) enrolled in private schools; and about 1.5 million (2.9 percent) enrolled in charter schools. Forty-two percent of the students in public education are from racial ethnic backgrounds, many from economically challenged homes. As Table 2 illustrates, the demographic trends in the nation are also reflected in public school enrollment figures.

2. The Impact of Diversity

Today, at least one in five students has one foreign-born parent. Conventional wisdom with respect to European immigrants was that students, including the second generation, struggled socially in school in comparison with the third generation, but over time were expected to catch up. There is debate about the extent of social adaptation among immigrant students, with the growing consensus being that there is no monolithic path to full integration. Successful adaptation as measured via educational outcomes may depend largely on the context of the reception of one’s parents on their arrival, whether they belong to a historically oppressed group and what kinds of structural barriers exist, as well as what kinds of programs are in place.

3. Linguistic Diversity

The linguistic diversity of the United States is also reflected in our schools. From 1979 to 2007 the number of children and youth between the ages of five and seventeen who spoke a language other than English at home increased from 3.8 to 10.8 million, from 9 percent to 20.4 percent of the population in this age range. Of the population of English learners, 75 percent spoke Spanish, 12 percent spoke an Asian or Pacific Islander language, 10 percent spoke another Indo-European language, and 3 percent spoke a language categorized as “other.” The total number of English language learners represents more than 350 languages.

Many interrelated out-of-school factors will shape the academic performance of English learners, including parental education levels, family income, parents’ English-language proficiency, mother’s marital status at the time of birth, and whether there are one or two parents in the home. In addition to the risk factors for academic underachievement, there are strengths and assets the English learner can bring to achieve academic success. For instance, children of immigrants may have greater support from two parents, siblings, and a grandparent or other relative than native English-speaking peers.

Effective strategies for teaching English learners have been well researched and documented. However, there is an implementation gap between what works and what is commonly done in classrooms across the United States. The growing population of English learners often suffers in school districts that either ignore their needs or provide inadequate support; meanwhile, they engage in double the work of native English speakers. Simply put, the technology exists for teachers to teach English learners effectively, but the fact that most teachers do not perceive a need to adapt their teaching practices to meet the needs of their English learners decreases the likelihood that the academic achievement of these students will improve.

4. Socioeconomic Diversity

The majority of racial ethnic students who attend public schools in urban centers, as well as students in rural areas, are affected by the socioeconomic status into which they were born. After WWII, the U.S. industrial base that had been located in cities of the northeast and Midwest began to disperse into suburban and rural areas with the help of federal highway construction. Since the 1970s the U.S. has seen many of its manufacturing jobs move to foreign shores leaving closed factories throughout the U.S. landscape. Less educated workers in all areas who once were able to support families on manufacturing wages can no longer find such employment. Once flourishing cities have been left bereft of a sufficient tax base, from either income or property, by which to support necessary social services as city populations experience high unemployment and grow ever more poor and in need of such services. Of the one hundred largest cities in the U.S. in 2007, fourteen had a poverty rate over 30 percent and another forty-eight had a poverty rate between 20 percent and 30 percent—depression level figures.

Scholars agree that poverty is one of the most intractable problems facing public education: the higher the rate of poverty, the lower the level of student achievement. The correlation between the socioeconomic level of students’ families and their academic achievement has been documented since the 1960s. In fact, according to Gary Orfield, a U.C.L.A. education professor, and Susan Eaton, a research director at Harvard Law, the powerful effect of the socioeconomic makeup of a student body on academic achievement has become “one of the most consistent findings in research on education.” All low-income students fare worse in academic achievement when they attend schools populated primarily by other low-income students. The evidence has led some school districts to try income-based integration. Since the publication of his seminal work Savage Inequalities (1991), Jonathan Kozol, and many others, have challenged the nation to acknowledge that poverty must be addressed if education is to become equal.

5. Religious Diversity

In a survey conducted by the Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life, more that 75 percent of respondents identified themselves as Christian. However, a large percentage of respondents (28 percent) no longer belong to the religion in which they were raised, illustrating the high level of fluidity in affiliations. Newly arriving immigrants bring with them the diversity of the world’s religions, especially Buddhism, Islam, and Hinduism. Many cultures do not separate their cultural and religious experiences but see them as one and the same. The public education system is challenged to be more sensitive to the notion that just as we have many languages, we also have many religious points of view. Respect for the richness of these traditions requires a review and reordering of teaching practices, historical points of view, and curricula to broaden the worldview of students to match the growing complexity of U.S. and global populations.

B. Desegregation and Re-Segregation

In Schools More Separate: Consequences of a Decade of Resegregation (2001), one of the most comprehensive studies of re-segregation, Gary Orfield of The Civil Rights Project asserts that desegregation was never fully achieved. Orfield observes that in the 1980s urban schools became largely minority, non-White, poor, and highly segregated; he attributes this to the U.S. Supreme Court’s decision in Milliken v. Bradley (1974), which rejected busing from cities to suburbs. School integration reached its peak in areas of the south that were under court order to desegregate. Maximum integration occurred in small towns, rural areas, and where city and suburban schools were combined into a single district. Since several U.S. Supreme Court rulings were followed by the rapid exit of Whites into suburban areas, public schools in cities all over the country have a student population that is overwhelmingly racial ethnic and low-income. By 2007, 44 percent of public school students were considered to be part of a racial or ethnic minority group. Many areas have aggressively pursued dismissal of their integration orders and today only three hundred school districts operate under mandatory desegregation orders.
A limited number of the nation’s school districts, roughly one thousand, employ voluntary integration efforts to curb re-segregation, considering race when assigning students to schools. A major road block to this approach was erected by the U.S. Supreme Court in their 2007 decision of Parents Involved in Community Schools vs. Seattle School District No. 1. Voluntary school integration plans in Seattle and Jefferson County, Kentucky, were struck down because they were partly race based and judged to violate the Equal Protection clause of the United States Constitution. Several districts are now establishing school assignment plans based on socioeconomic status in the expectation that racial integration will also occur. Some (i.e. Wake County, North Carolina; and Jefferson County, Kentucky) have implemented volunteer school assignment programs that limit the percentage of free or reduced lunch students (a metric relating to family income). This approach brings about both socioeconomic integration as well as racial ethnic integration. At the same time, it avoids violating the U.S. Supreme Court ruling that school assignments cannot be made on the basis of race. If integration should be revived as a goal to bring about educational equity, legal scholars believe that the barrier of law could be overcome, but that the real issue would be the attitude of parents and families toward integration.

The reversal of the trend of increased integration coincides closely with the reversal of the trend of increasing scores for Black students in math and reading (as reported by the National Association for Educational Progress (NAEP)). Many studies have shown that Black students perform better in integrated environments, possibly because of better teachers and more parental involvement.

C. Accountability and High-Stakes Testing

There is nearly unanimous agreement that the public school system is in need of reform, yet the debate about reform generally centers on accountability as measured by test scores, the single aspect on which current reform efforts are most clearly focused.

The most notable contribution to high stakes testing is the 2001 reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, usually referred to as the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLB). This federal legislation is built on the assumption that the culture of the educational system needs to be changed to address educational inadequacies. The act calls for each state to set minimum standards of academic achievement, to measure student progress against those standards, and to hold students accountable for meeting them.

Every state has developed or adopted its own testing program in reading and mathematics and must show continual progress on its test scores until 2014 when every student is expected to show proficiency at his or her grade level. Schools that do not show progress each year (average yearly progress, or AYP) are labeled as failing, eventually being sanctioned, with a variety of remedies put in place. Sanctions progress as the school continues to fail to achieve AYP, ending with schools subject to a restructuring (which could include replacing staff, instituting new curriculum, regulating the facility directly through the state, and even closing the school and reopening it as a charter school). Schools not only must report the progress of each of their subgroups, but each group must show continual progress.

The law’s supporters point to what they call the “soft bigotry of low expectations.” They assert that by disaggregating test scores for the subgroups in a school, for example, those of racial ethnic groups, various income levels, English language learners, or those with disabilities, for perhaps the first time, attention is focused on those children in underserved populations who can get lost when a school’s average score is the only number reported.

The law’s goals are laudatory, designed to address the inequities experienced by the most vulnerable children. The underlying assumptions on which NCLB rests are also exemplary: that all children can learn, that as citizens we have a moral responsibility to attend to a quality education for all, and that standards need to be put in place and systems held accountable. But the assumption that accountability to high standards can be adequately measured using one mechanism, primarily a standardized test, bears more examination. Most educators agree that standardized tests do indeed provide one reliable measure of achievement—but only one. When the stakes are as high as they are in NCLB, the use of one measure, however good, becomes problematic. A second difficulty with NCLB is that the law does not address the profound educational funding inequalities that plague our nation.

Test scores alone are a limited criterion for measuring the success of education. In his book Why Schools?, Mike Rose argues that we have strayed from the original purpose of schools—that from the beginning we have expected our schools to teach more than skills and subject matter, notably a sense of civic duty and moral behavior. Rose argues that during this century, society has turned to public schools to address many needs that in the past were met by families, churches, employers, and volunteer groups. “Schools are even called on to address broad social and economic problems that the country has not addressed … deindustrialization, immigration, chronic poverty—and now increased globalized economy.” Rose asserts that the economic drive for performance has led to policies that are “thin on the ethical, social and imaginative dimensions of human experience.” We have forgotten that we are not just economic beings, but civic and moral beings as well.
According to New York Times columnist David Brooks, economists think of human capital as the skills and knowledge that people need to get jobs to drive the economy. Brooks argues that educational reform has failed because it has failed to address the other underlying components of human capital. Other forms of capital—cultural, social, moral, cognitive, and aspirational—have been ignored. These dimensions of human capacity may not be measured with standardized tests.

Other voices stress that our democracy depends on civic participation. In Democracy at Risk: The Need for a New Federal Policy in Education, the authors stress that our country’s “civic participation gap” mirrors the “education gap”—therefore putting our very form of government at risk. They assert that federal engagement in educational policy on a large scale was premised on the democratic agenda that our public schools were to fulfill—that every child would be given the tools necessary to make equal participation in our society more than just a promise.

D. Achievement Gap or Opportunity Gap?

Since April 2009, the Department of Education’s National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) has released several reports assessing the state of educational achievement in the United States. The federal legislation included a requirement that all fourth and eighth graders be assessed by the National Assessment for Educational Progress (NAEP) test in mathematics, reading, and science to measure progress in improving achievement levels and in closing achievement gaps between races. There are additional reports that the nation’s prekindergarten students are not ready for school and discouraging indications that the United States is falling further and further behind other nations, both developed and developing, in student achievement, even as we spend more resources than virtually any other nation.

Yet there is a growing movement to refocus the debate on educational reform. Beneath the achievement gap as measured by tests that has captured the nation’s attention is a pervasive opportunity gap caused by the inequitable distribution of resources. To address this gap, the Schott Foundation calls for Congress to ensure that all children have an opportunity to learn that includes a quality early childhood education, highly qualified teachers, a curriculum that will prepare them for college, work and community, and equitable instructional resources.

E. Quality Early Childhood Education

There is wide consensus that school readiness leads to school success. Research suggests that children’s outcomes in school are remarkably stable after the first few years of school and that interventions are most successful when they are early in a child’s school career. Many studies point to the success of the transition to school as a critical factor in success. A quality preschool or child-care experience predicts the ease of adjustment to kindergarten, enhances competencies, strengthens social and self-regulatory skills, and reduces the likelihood of negative outcomes like grade retention. Yet according to the Children’s Defense Fund, only about 3 percent of eligible children are enrolled in Early Head Start, and only one-half to one-third of children eligible for Head Start are enrolled. All children need access to high quality early childhood education.

F. Highly Qualified Teachers

Teacher quality is critical to the success of students in public education. A teacher’s knowledge, teaching skills, and dedication dramatically affect students’ achievement and very often their future. Under often difficult circumstances, teachers are doing extraordinary work to open the doors to lifelong learning. But the complex and difficult context of today’s public schools exacts a heavy toll on many teachers.

While there are many dedicated, hardworking teachers working to instill skills and a love for learning in their students, there is an alarming rate of teacher attrition with growing shortages in the content areas of mathematics, science, counseling, reading, and special education. During the 2003–04 school year, 8 percent of teachers changed professions and 8 percent changed schools. Teachers named a variety of factors contributing to attrition or job changes, including testing and accountability mandates in NCLB, too little support, student discipline, under-funded programs, lack of influence and respect, and insufficient pay.

Today, far too many young teachers are leaving the field within their first five years. Teachers in content-specific areas like mathematics and science are lured to higher-paying positions in corporate America and government. Teacher attrition costs the education system approximately $7 billion every year to recruit, employ, and prepare replacement teachers. Each year, large percentages of out-of-field teachers are hired to teach classes in mathematics, science, language arts, reading, special education, and English for speakers of other languages. In many cases, students taught by out-of-field teachers do not progress as they should in the required subject area.

Experienced teachers and teachers with higher degrees often are attracted to newer schools in the suburbs where they are offered higher salaries and have more support from parents and more resources. Inexperienced and out-of-field teachers are frequently placed in urban schools with racial ethnic or low-income students where conditions are challenging and resources limited. Such schools often employ scripted learning systems where teachers are told what to say and when to say it with every lesson. Often based on military training systems, these rote lessons are directed to those areas that will be tested in the end-of-year standardized tests. Such scripted learning systems stifle the creativity of the highly qualified teachers urban schools need and are an additional factor that pushes them into transfers.

Teach for America is a program where young graduates from top universities teach for two to three years in urban situations where finding quality teachers has been difficult. Teach for America teachers work in thirty cities across the United States. School systems like New Orleans, where more than half of the schools are charter schools, rely heavily on Teach for America to supply teachers every year. Though these teachers are generally very bright, they undergo only a short program for learning to teach and work with students. By their third or fourth year, many leave teaching for other careers or go into administration.

With the increasingly diverse student population, the ratio of racial ethnic educators and educational leaders is also an issue. In 2004, a national summit on diversity in our nation’s teaching force voiced concern about the demographic disparity between educators and their students and the negative impact on the quality of education for all children. African American teachers account for the lowest percentage of the U.S. teacher workforce since 1971. In addition, only 25 percent of that workforce is male.

G. A Curriculum That Prepares Students for College, Work, and Community

All students need a rigorous, wide-ranging curriculum that covers more than just the basic skills in order to prepare them for college. Yet despite the emphasis on math and reading, Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) data released in the summer of 2009 showed overall average scores in mathematics and reading dropping, with the worst reading score since 1994, and an increasing gap between scores of lower performing racial ethnic students and white or Asian students. Scores of Asian students in mathematics continue to rise, a finding that does not appear to correlate with family income levels. Overall, as with other standardized national tests, SAT scores increased as family income increased and as family education level increased. But fewer than half of the 2009 high school graduates take the SAT. A second study released by the Iowa-based ACT test, reported that only one quarter of the students who took the ACT had the skills to succeed in college. Though some of these results perhaps point to a growing diversity of students taking these college admission tests, many feel that preparation in school is certainly a factor in the test scores that result.

Test results are not the only indicator of the level of preparation of high school graduates. But if these results point to deficiencies in higher-achieving college bound students, they also call into question how prepared all high school students are for the work and community involvement that contribute to a meaningful life. Access to a high quality curriculum is the right of all children. Students in low-income areas need access to higher-level coursework, such as AP courses as well as courses in the arts and humanities, and school counselors who encourage them to aspire to further education beyond high school.

H. Equitable Resources

Currently, all fifty states have constitutional provisions for free public education. The primary source of school funding is local property taxes, with some funds provided by the states and a small amount of designated federal funds. This funding mechanism has resulted in high property taxes and low funding-per-student in areas that have low property values and lower tax rates and high funding-per-student in areas with high property values. This has led to vast disparities in per-pupil-funding between states and between districts within states. The inequity in per-pupil funding within states led to a 1971 California Supreme Court ruling that use of local property taxes to finance primary education was a violation of the equal protection clause of the state constitution. Since 1971, advocates in almost all of the fifty states have filed suit claiming that unequal financing of public schools violates various state constitutions. Equity in funding suits continued in 2009 around the United States. In 1973 in its decision on Rodriguez v. San Antonio Schools, the U.S. Supreme Court rejected the concept that education was a right guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution. Because many cases filed on the basis of equity have failed, suits are now based on educational adequacy.

States generally focus on two aspects of equity: vertical equity and adequacy equity. Vertical equity recognizes that legitimate differences occur among children and that some need additional educational services. Districts base funding decisions on assigning a greater weight to those students. Adequacy equity is funding adequate to allow each student to achieve a minimum level of achievement. States have also sought to compensate for the differences in districts’ abilities to raise the revenue for schools. A foundation program sets an expenditure per pupil that allows a minimum quality education for each pupil. This formula, used by many states, results in targeting more state education funds on a per pupil basis while taking into account the taxable wealth of each locality. Some states such as Virginia, however, do not penalize those districts choosing to make an extra local effort to go beyond the basics. A 2004 analysis of the support of public education for all states by the Education Trust showed state education support percentages ranging from 83.9 percent for New Mexico to 38.2 percent for Nebraska. Analysis showed that states providing the lowest percentage toward education funding had the largest per-pupil funding gaps between their high-poverty and low-poverty districts. The 2009 Superintendent’s Annual Report for Virginia shows that Arlington County, a suburb of Washington, D.C., spent $18,449 per student, while Amelia County in the rural part of Virginia spent $8,583 per student.
The annual output for public education is approximately $543 billion. If we are to address the problems of public education, we cannot ignore that many of the decisions affecting it are driven by money. Low-income and racial ethnic children receive fewer dollars than do their white and/or lower income counterparts. The Education Trust reported that in most states, districts with high numbers of low-income and racial ethnic students receive substantially fewer state and local dollars per pupil that districts with fewer such students. While the funding gap between high and low poverty districts has narrowed somewhat over the past several years in the nation as a whole, it has increased in nine states. In most cases, districts with high numbers of racial ethnic students also receive substantially fewer state and local dollars per pupil than do their counterparts with fewer racial ethnic students.

What this generally means is that racial ethnic students, particularly those who have high rates of poverty, receive insufficient funding to address their academic and social needs. Because they recognize that some children simply need more resources to be successful, critics of the state funding formulas fight for equity rather than equality.

I. Alternative Approaches

For a variety of reasons, families throughout the United States have sought alternative schooling choices. The two most prominent alternative options are charter schools and home schooling. Private schools are also an option available to some.

J. Charter Schools

A charter school is an independent, publicly funded school that typically operates separately from the district board of education. In effect, a charter school is a one-school public school district. A group of people—educators, parents, community leaders, educational entrepreneurs, or others—write the charter plan describing the school’s guiding principles, governance structure, and applicable accountability measures. If the state (or approving agency) approves the charter, the charter is funded on a per pupil basis. In most cases charter schools operate under an agreement between the approving body and the school.

The charter school movement has roots in a number of other education reform ideas, from alternative schools, to site-based management, magnet schools, public school choice, privatization, and community-parental empowerment. The term “charter” may have originated in the 1970s in New England. Albert Shanker, former president of the American Federation of Teachers (AFT), publicized the idea by suggesting that local boards could “charter” an entire school with union and teacher approval. In the late 1980s Philadelphia started a number of schools-within-schools and called them “charters.” Some of them were schools of choice. The idea was further refined in Minnesota where charter schools were developed according to three basic values: opportunity, choice, and responsibility for results.

Forty states plus the District of Columbia currently have charter laws. New Orleans schools include the largest percentage of charter schools with 54 percent.

The movement owes its impetus to dissatisfaction with traditional public schools. Families with children of various special interests and needs, low income and minority families, those with limited English proficiency, and those in certain cultural enclaves sought out such schools in response to what they believed was indifference to the needs of their children or an inability of public schools to make tough decisions that would improve the educational opportunities for their children. In the case of some parents who are dissatisfied with the educational quality of their schools, improved educational opportunities such as smaller classes, higher standards and safety for their children take precedence over diversity.

Many of the concerns surrounding charter schools center on the fear that traditional public schools will suffer as children, teachers, and dollars flow out of traditional public schools and into charters. There are also concerns about which students are leaving and what that means for those left behind, the education received by the students enrolled in the 12.5 percent of charter schools that have failed and the 37 percent of charter schools that are performing significantly worse than their comparable public schools.

The charter school debate generally centers on one of three themes:

- Equity: Will charters alter access of all students to equal education opportunity?
- Quality: Will charters improve public education?
- Policy: Will differences between charters and public schools impact how we govern education?

Public purpose/public ownership and the formation of an educated citizenry are additional themes articulated by many respected educators.

In the first widespread, systematic study of charter school performance results, findings are that 17 percent of charter schools are providing a superior education, 50 percent produce results no different than public schools, and 37 percent are providing an education significantly worse than public schools. There are significant state-by-state differences in the findings.
Private Schools

There are also concerns about whether some charters are in fact accessible to all students. Some schools require an application and an interview or a written parental agreement, enabling a student to be rejected either initially or later in the year. Some schools even require an admissions examination as opposed to an open lottery. Some charter schools have an open admission policy through the September-enrollment-count-date, after which students can be sent back to traditional public schools for various reasons. This enables the school to receive funds for the student, show a high enrollment for racial ethnic and free or reduced lunch students for the year, yet include only the remaining students in the performance test scores. Even the highly lauded SEED boarding charter school in Washington, D.C., which initially reported 100 percent college acceptance for its graduates, had failed to report that until recently the school had a 20 percent attrition rate each year—mostly black boys. A seventh grade class enrollment of seventy at SEED had dwindled to a senior class of twenty by graduation.53

Clearly, state charter laws and state monitoring of charter schools are very unequal. There is a need to ensure that charter schools are required to serve the same populations as regular public schools, including English language learners and students with disabilities. As some charter schools employ teachers who do not have access to union protection, many are paid substandard wages. Charters should be required to address equity in their treatment of teachers and to be subject to the same audits and disclosure requirements as public schools.

In her “Witness for Justice Message” on October 26, 2009, Jan Ressger, minister for education for the United Church of Christ, observed:

Clearly there are many children, particularly urban and rural children, who have not been well served by their public schools. In a democracy like ours, whether the public schools can better serve all children is up to citizens. Can we, many of us living in the suburbs, find the political will adequately to fund public schools in poor communities?

And when alternatives like charters are proposed to help us Race to the Top, we need to ask ourselves as citizens whether we have a better chance of reaching the most vulnerable children through privatized management, or whether we are responsible for improving traditional public schools. The political philosopher Benjamin Barber makes the public choice: “Inequality is built into the market system ... Inequality is not incidental to privatization, it is its very premise.”54

K. Private Schools

Private schools are those that receive tuition. Sixty-eight percent of private schools are religiously affiliated. These enroll almost 80 percent of private school students. Almost half are Roman Catholic and another 20 percent are of other religious traditions. More than three-fourths of private school students are white.55 In 2003–2004, the average tuition for parochial K–12 schools was $5,700. The average tuition for non-sectarian K–12 schools was $13,000.56 Many families choose parochial schools because they desire their children to be educated in an explicitly religious context. Others are attracted to private schooling because they perceive that their children can receive a superior education there. While private and parochial schools can be a viable choice for some who have the financial resources to pay tuition, for many families, especially for families who are poor, this choice remains out of reach. Private choices do not, however, absolve anyone in the church from responsibility to support and protect the right of all children to education, and for most, that will mean public education. Our call is to love our neighbor as ourselves—to act in such a way that all our neighbors’ children have the same access to a quality education as that we desire for our own.

L. Faith-Based Initiatives

Faith-based initiatives refer to social service or mission programs for which churches accept government funding. Although the designation “faith-based initiatives” (FBI) is relatively new, in reality the practice has been in place for many years for such projects as homeless shelters and feeding programs. In the past these partnerships between government and faith communities have often served the common good. But such funding took on new significance with the launching by the Bush administration of a new emphasis called Faith-based and Community Initiatives. The Obama administration is continuing the initiative with Faith- Based and Neighborhood Partnership programs in a number of government agencies, including the Department of Education.57

There are significant issues around the relationship between church and state that need careful exploration. In the 1988 policy on God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience, the General Assembly observed that religious programs and agencies should not be excluded from receiving such funds provided that conditions related to access, safety and licensure be met; that the service is administered without religious emphasis or content or religious preference or other discrimination in employment or purchase of services; and no public funds are used by religiously controlled organizations to acquire permanent title to real property. For a Presbyterian school to apply for “FBI” funding, for example, it would need to assess the impact of accepting these potential constraints on its core missions.

Churches can provide a multitude of services to support and extend the education of children, particularly those who are made most vulnerable by poverty, such as tutoring programs or one-on one mentoring. Congregations should consider carefully both the positive and negative aspects of such partnerships. The overarching principles must be what contribute most to the health and wholeness of the children and families such programs are intended to serve and what is a faithful response to the God who calls us.

VI. Conclusion

The call to love our neighbor as ourselves is central to Christian faith and discipleship. Providing for a high quality public education for all children is a concrete expression of this love. When we allow public schools to fail, we turn away from the mandate to love our neighbor.

Acting as neighbor means ensuring that all children have the opportunity to go to school in the kind of positive and healthy environment that promotes learning and growth. It means making sure that all children have access to up-to-date textbooks and well-equipped computer labs, to high-quality teachers who know and address their needs, to curricula that educate in the arts as well as language arts, in social sciences as well as science, in health and physical education as well as math. Acting as neighbor means attending school board and PTSA meetings, volunteering to tutor and mentor, and paying attention to the stories in the news about public education. When we act as neighbor, we not only speak up for adequate funding, but we demonstrate a willingness to back up our words with action. Loving our neighbor as ourselves means that we view all children as a gift of God, one for which we are called to be good stewards.

In the twenty-first century, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can partner with others to transform the public education (K–12) system. As a church that has been committed to public education for decades, we only need to vigorously rededicate ourselves to what we have confessed and believed.

Books:

Delpit, Lisa. Other People’s Children: Cultural Conflict in the Classroom. New York: New Press, Update Edition 2006. This book is a seminal text in how modern education lacks diversity in its teaching force. Delpit explains that non-minority teachers must make a conscious effort to understand the culture of their students that are sometimes vastly different from their own. Every culture has its own language; therefore, communication rather than a lack of intelligence in students is often responsible for the achievement gap. She explains that this cultural gap severely affects teaching and learning.

Kohn, Alfie. What Does it Mean to be Well Educated? And Other Essays on Standards, Grading, and Other Follies. Boston: Beacon Press, 2004. In this collection of essays Kohn takes on some of the most important topics in education in recent years. His central focus is on the real goals of schooling—a topic, he argues, that we systematically ignore while lavishing attention on misguided models of learning and motivation. From the title essay’s challenge to conventional definitions of a good education to essays on testing and grading that tally the severe educational costs of overemphasizing a narrow conception of achievement, Kohn boldly builds on his earlier work and writes for a wide audience. He explores topics ranging from the destructiveness of praise to the inadequacy of American high schools, shows how traditional educational practices can spoil the value of newer and better approaches, and offers a provocative reflection on what 9/11 and its aftermath can mean for schools.

Noguera, Pedro A. City Schools and the American Dream. New York: Teachers College Press, 2003. Noguera studies several urban school district and points to poverty, powerlessness, and cultural disparity as reasons why minority-majority school districts perform poorly. Above all, he shows that communities without money lack access to people of power who can affect change; therefore, those schools tend not to improve.

Thernstrom, Abigail and Stephan Thernstrom. No Excuses: Closing the Racial Gap in Learning New York: Simon & Schuster, 2003. The racial gap in academic performance between whites and Achians, on the one hand, and Latinos and blacks, on the other hand, is America’s most urgent educational problem. Unequal skills and knowledge are the main sources of ongoing racial inequality, and racial inequality is America’s great unfinished business. There are no good excuses for the perpetuation of long-standing inequalities, the Thernstroms argue. The problem can be solved, but conventional strategies will not work. Fundamental educational reform is needed. Carefully researched, accessibly written, and powerfully persuasive, this book offers both a close analysis of the current landscape and a blueprint for essential and overdue change.

Put differently, individuals who may be perceived and treated as “black” by greater U.S. society may not self-report as Black in important questionnaires like census surveys, skewing the reality.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The ACREC advises that Item 10-11 be approved and encourages the commissioners and appropriate bodies of the General Assembly to continue to give careful attention to issues affecting public schools, racial ethnic students, families, and communities in relation to the rising numbers of charter schools, private schools, and home-schooling families, in order to help the church assess the impacts of these changes.
Item 10-12

[The assembly approved Item 10-12 with amendment. See pp. 34, 38.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Ending Violence with Impunity Against Women and Girls.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) does the following:

1. Renews its commitment to the goals of Turn Mourning into Dancing! A Policy Statement on Healing Domestic Violence developed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy of the General Assembly Mission Council, approved by the 213th General Assembly (2001): “We will hear the voices of victims and survivors and respond to their calls with the following goals: first, to protect the victims from further abuse; second, stop the abuser’s violence and hold the abusers accountable; and third, restore the family relationship if possible or mourn the loss of relationship” (page 8).

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations, presbyteries, and synods are encouraged to do likewise.

2. Commits to [no longer responding with impunity when violence against women and girls occurs, whether clergy or laity perpetrates violence, and to first hold the perpetrator accountable rather than rush to forgiveness] [holding perpetrators, whether clergy or laity, responsible for violence against women and girls, rather than rushing to forgiveness,] and encourages Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations, presbyteries, synods, and governing bodies to do likewise.

3. Declares the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) a ‘Violence Free Zone for Women and Girls,’ and directs PC(USA) congregations, presbyteries, synods, and governing bodies to refer to domestic physical acts of violence against women and girls as ‘aggravated assault’ rather than ‘domestic violence.’

4. Directs the Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Washington Office (PWO), the Presbyterian United Nations Office, and other appropriate General Assembly entities to urge the president of the United States and the U.S. Congress to proceed without further delay in the ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW).

5. Directs the General Assembly Mission Council’s (GAMC’s) Compassion, Peace and Justice ministry area, through the Presbyterians Against Domestic Violence Network (PADVN), the Peacemaking Program, the Presbyterian United Nations Office, and other entities working on gender justice issues to join with the World Mission ministry area in engaging and collaborating with ecumenical and global partner churches to establish guidelines for relationships that encourage equal participation of both men and women in ministry and leadership, making it clear that impunity from violence and abuse is not acceptable within related Reformed communities.

6. Directs all PC(USA) congregations, presbyteries, synods, governing bodies, and agencies to take action to end all practices based on the dominance of male authority (patriarchy).

Rationale

This resolution evolves from the historical work of the Presbyterian church and builds on the current work of PC(USA) entities, including the Presbyterians Against Domestic Violence Network (PADVN), <www.pcusa.org/phewa/padvn>, and the PC(USA)’s policies regarding domestic violence, and focuses attention on the following ongoing critical issues:

1. Violence Against Women and Girls

All forms of violence against women and girls are morally and legally wrong and are a violation of their rights as human beings. Such violence ranges from verbal to physical. In the United States, “a woman is raped every six minutes; a woman is battered every fifteen seconds” (Violence Against Women: A Fact Sheet, 2010, Amnesty International, www.amnestyusa.org). Globally, violence against the bodies of women and girls as a primary war tactic is increasing. Rape has become a common weapon of war and of genocide. Girls are forced to serve as soldiers and as sex slaves to combatants. Statistics are provided on the PC(USA) web site at www.pcusa.org/womensadvocacy/issues/violenceagainstwomen/stats.htm.

In addition, violence against women and girls still occurs within the church in spite of sexual misconduct policies across the church. “Overall, 3.1% of women who attend religious services at least monthly reported that at some time during their adult life, they had been the object of a sexual advance by a clergyperson or religious leader in their own congregation … one in thirty-three women has been the object of a sexual advance” (Diana R. Garland and Christen Argueta, 2009, “How Clergy...

According to the Los Angeles Police Department fact sheet, aggravated assault is “an unlawful attack by one person upon another for the purpose of inflicting severe or aggravated bodily injury. This type of assault usually is accompanied by the use of a weapon or by means likely to produce death or great bodily harm” (www.lapdcrimemaps.org/information/factsheet).

This resolution supports Item 10-06: “A Resolution to Study Violence Against Women and Children on the Mexico-U.S. Border.”

2. CEDAW

Since adoption in 1979 by the UN General Assembly of the United Nations, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) has been described as an international bill of rights for women and has been formally recognized by nearly all members of the United Nations.

The convention elevates women’s rights to the status of a global human rights issue and draws international attention to the issue of equal rights of women. Substantively, it sets up machinery for reviewing progress reports from governments. It provides the legal basis for promoting progress in one more area of human rights and thus complements the earlier conventions drafted at the United Nations.

The United States is one of a small group of nations (Iran, Qatar, Brunei Darussalam, Nauru, Palau, Tonga, Somalia, Sudan) that has not ratified CEDAW (information from the Working Group for Ratification of CEDAW; President Carter signed the treaty on behalf of the United States in 1980, but Congress has yet to ratify it). More than fourteen years ago, through its approval of Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development, the 208th General Assembly (1996), “urge[d] the United States Senate to proceed without further delay to the review and ratification of … (b) the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women …” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 107, 109, 529). Continued pressure for ratification is critical.

This resolution supports ACWC recommendation, Item 10-08: “A Resolution Supporting the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women.

3. Patriarchy

For centuries, patriarchal practices, including language of churches, have been used to support, justify, and excuse violence against women and girls. At the beginning of the twenty-first century, it is time to act to improve the quality of life for men and women not only in the PC(USA) but worldwide. In church relations around the world, mission co-workers witness ongoing patriarchal behavior in global partner churches. By leaving behind the patriarchy of the church historically rather than supporting the ongoing practice now and into the future, the church everywhere can model principles of inclusion, equality, and justice.

As believers in our triune God, it is imperative that we witness to the promise, and work toward the realization of God’s realm here on earth. The fact that patriarchy continues to be embedded in the Reformed family of churches fosters and maintains attitudes that obstruct the understanding, recognition, and acceptance of the essential need and value of having proportional numbers of women and men serving and working at leadership positions throughout this denomination and others with whom the PC(USA) relates.

This resolution is submitted on behalf of the 2010 Presbyterian Women (PW) Delegation to the 54th session of the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women (UNCSW).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 10-12 be approved with the following clarifications and Rationale.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) agrees that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) needs to make a renewed commitment to working toward eliminating violence against women and girls. As Item 10-12 states, too often within the church, more attention and energy is put toward the healing of the perpetrator of the violence and his reconciliation with the church than to the healing and reconciliation of the victim. An explicit commitment to holding the perpetrator accountable for his actions needs to be a clear piece of the PC(USA)’s sexual misconduct policy.

In addition to number 5 of Item 10-12, the ACWC would draw attention to Item 08-10, being brought to the 219th
General Assembly (2010), which asks for full participation with Christian Churches Together (CCT), in spite of their failure to support and promote gender and racial equality. Were the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to establish guidelines for ecumenical relationships that encouraged equal participation of women and men in ministry and leadership and overtly condemned violence and abuse, such a partnership would not even be considered.

Finally, ACWC would recommend a reworking of number 6 of Item 10-12, and call for the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to revitalize the effort put forth by Turn Mourning into Dancing, <https://www.pcusa.org/resource/turn-mourning-dancing/>, approved by the 213th General Assembly (2001), which has served as an educational tool highlighting the reality of the implications of overt and covert male violence toward women. As this tool is currently available for no cost online, the ACWC would ask that the 219th GA (2010) direct the GAMC to send out an electronic communication to synods and presbyteries including the link to Turn Mourning into Dancing, and a strong courage to presbyteries and synods to provide and require harassment training for all clergy.

Item 10-13

[The assembly approved Item 10-13 with amendment. See pp. 34, 38.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Renewing the Commitment to the Use of Inclusive and Expansive Language for God and the People of God.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) directs the [Office of Theology Worship and Education, the] Compassion, Peace and Justice ministry area[,] and the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area to renew efforts throughout the denomination to promote the use of inclusive and expansive language for God and the people of God and to ensure distribution, electronically or otherwise, of the brochure, “Well Chosen Words: Inclusive Language with Reference to the People of God—Expansive Language with Reference to God” (PDS #72-700-99-003).

Rationale

Continued practices within the PC(USA) include the persistent failure in both word and song to use inclusive and expansive language when referring to God. This practice defines only one aspect of God. Such practices can often appear to mean women are excluded, or can in fact actually result in the exclusion of women. A Brief Statement of Faith, written in response to a mandate of the General Assembly of the reunited Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (1983) and approved for inclusion in The Book of Confessions by the presbyteries in 1991, states: “In sovereign love God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community” (10.3, lines 29–32).

As believers in our triune God, it is imperative that we witness to the promise, and work toward the realization of God’s realm here on earth. The fact that patriarchy continues to be embedded in the Reformed family of churches fosters and maintains attitudes that obstruct the understanding, recognition, and acceptance of the essential need and value of having proportional numbers of women and men serving and working at leadership positions throughout this denomination and others with whom the PC(USA) relates.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises the 219th General Assembly that Item 10-13 be approved with the following changes and Rationale.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that the office of Theology Worship and Education be included in the directive.
The use of inclusive language for the people of God and expansive language for God was affirmed by the 196th General Assembly (1984). Again, the 197th General Assembly (1985) adopted Definitions and Guidelines on Inclusive Language (PDS 70420-01-003). The use of inclusive and expansive language has been trivialized in recent years. Renewing commitment to the use of inclusive and expansive language is important at this time in the life of the church. Language for God and people needs to be inclusive of not only women, but people of various racial and ethnic backgrounds and cultures. To be stuck on any one image of God is to not only grossly oversimplify the nature of the Creator in whose image we all are made, but also to ultimately create idols in our own image or in the image of our creation.

Further, ACWC would note that what is necessary is not only ensuring that proportional numbers of women and men serve and work in leadership positions throughout the denomination, but challenging the pervasive and systemic understanding and speaking of God as male, which serves to exclude at least half of those created in God’s image. Simply ensuring a certain number of women in leadership does not necessarily promote an expansive understanding of who God is.

Item 10-14

[The assembly approved Item 10-14 with amendment. See pp. 34, 37–38.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Usury.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) calls upon the PC(USA) and its corporate financial entities (Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Board of Pensions, Funds of the General Assembly Mission Council, Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., Stated Clerk's Office), [synods, presbyteries,] its local congregations, and members to be a counter voice to usurious practices, and to prayerfully consider moving money out of the [large] financial institutions who exploit consumers and into [community banks] [financial institutions] that practice responsible consumer lending practices. We call upon MRTI to report on their evaluation of this strategy to the 220th General Assembly (2012). We believe that the standards for moving money include

- clearly defined [interest|consumer credit] rate ceilings or caps (pegged to inflation, unemployment, and other factors, already agreed to, in principle, by one major financial institution);
- reasonable and fully transparent limits on [credit card fees and charges] [financial products and services];
- no involvement, direct or indirect, in the pay-day-lending industry;
- no involvement, direct or indirect, in the predatory lending industry; and
- no involvement, direct or indirect, in the rapid tax refund industry.

Rationale

Millions of Americans are now paying interest rates as high as 30 percent on credit cards and even higher rates on other consumer-lending products. In a one-year period between 2007–2008, credit card issuers raised interest rates on nearly one quarter of cardholder accounts, costing consumers a minimum of $10 billion in extra interest payments that year alone. The new so-called “credit card reform” law doesn’t impose a limit on interest—it merely requires the financial institution to provide notification forty-five days prior to raising interest rates.

In 2009, the profits earned by the biggest banks were astounding: JP Morgan Chase swelled to $11.7 billion; Wells Fargo broke records, earning m $20 billion; and Bank of America earned $6.3 billion. While these banks accepted billions in assistance and earned billions in profits, they have left our families struggling to simply make ends meet.

Many American families, who live paycheck to paycheck, find the need for a small, short-term loan to cover necessary expenses that arise between paychecks. Payday loans, generally, are offered on a two-week basis and are in the range of $100–$500. Typical fees for a payday loan are $15 per $100 two-week loan. The annual percentage rate (APR) on these loans is at least 390 percent, though many consumers have been charged rates of 1,300 percent to 7,300 percent. The large national financial institutions including Wells Fargo, US Bank, and Bank of America, provide more than $1 billion in financing to payday lenders, enabling their exploitive lending practices.

A 10 percent interest rate tied to inflation is enough to allow credit to flow to all appropriate borrowers. It is enough to allow bankers their fair share of profit. It is enough to protect families from permanent indebtedness.

The Bible, our Reformed heritage, and General Assembly policy has clearly and forcefully prohibited usury as an economic practice:

The Heidelberg Catechism of The Book of Confessions interprets the eighth commandment to mean that it is unlawful to gain our neighbor’s goods through “trickery,” “deceptive advertising or merchandising,” or charging “exorbitant interest” (4.110). The commandment also requires us to deal justly in our financial transactions with one another.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) of the PC(USA) adopted policy (“A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the Twenty-First Century, Item 09-08, Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 804ff”) to support more just lending practices. The aim of this policy was to educate debtors and those seeking credit as well as to reform current lending practices and make available low-interest loans for those with greatest need. The policy statement calls on the church to “support efforts to provide more effective and less costly financial services to people who are now forced to utilize high-cost alternative financial resources (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 804).”

The treasurer of the State of Massachusetts and The Missouri Synod Lutherans are moving their money out of banks that charge usurious interest and fees on consumer loans.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-14

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-14—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 10-14, as it is consistent with the General Assembly’s established policies on usury. However, ACSWP notes that the commissioners may wish do so in conjunction with their response to Item 10-03, which also addresses usury in credit card practices. Specifically, ACSWP suggests that this resolution’s proposal to ask church agencies and members to consider moving their funds into banks that demonstrate responsible lending practices might be incorporated into an amended Item 10-03 to create a unified PC(USA) response to the issue of credit and usury.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-14

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The ACREC advises that Item 10-14 be approved.

Rationale

The 217th General Assembly (2006) received and approved a report entitled “A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the Twenty-First Century.” That report called upon Presbyterians and PC(USA) entities to educate themselves, in order to understand more fully the impact of the growing pay-day loan institution industry on communities and families, particularly in low-income areas. Additionally, a bill as been introduced before the U.S. Congress, entitled “Payday Lending Limitation Act of 2010.” This is in response to the continued growth of this industry, indicating a continued need and increased urgency for Presbyterians to act at this time.

Because this issue particularly impacts and preys upon families in low-income areas, many of whom are in communities served by racial ethnic congregations and ministries, ACREC thanks commissioners for bringing this important issue again before the General Assembly, and encourages its approval.

Item 10-Info

A. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns Agency Summary

The committee is composed of twelve regular members representing African Americans, Native Americans, Latina/o Americans, Asian Americans, Middle Eastern Americans, and European Americans.

The 2008–10 membership of the committee is as follows: Carroll Jenkins, chairperson, National Black Presbyterian Caucus; Patricia Morse, vice chairperson, African American, at-large; Jean Kim, secretary, Korean American, at-large; Cynthia Holder Rich, chair, Resource and Referral Subcommittee, European American, at-large; Noushin Framke, chair, Study and Comment Subcommittee, Middle Eastern American, at-large; Cecilia Casal, Hispanic/Latino/a, at-large, liaison to Advisory Committee for Women’s Concerns; Mauricio Chacón, National Hispanic/Latino/a Caucus; Ruth-Aimee Belonni-Rosario, liaison from Racial Ethnic Young Women Together (REYWT), Hispanic/Latino/a; Aida Faris, National Middle Eastern Caucus; Esperanza Guajardo, liaison from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), Hispanic/Latina; Aleida Jernigan, liaison from the General Assembly Mission Council, Hispanic/Latina; Stephen Hsieh, National Asian Caucus, liaison to Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP); Buddy Monahan, Native American Consulting Committee; Belinda Rice, liaison from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, African American.

The committee was staffed on an interim basis by Curtis A. Kearns, Executive Administrator, General Assembly Mission Council, and is staffed on a regular basis by Sherri Pettway, Administrative Assistant, General Assembly Mission Council.

As of December 2009, the committee had one vacancy.

1. Assigned Functions

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) works to fulfill its General Assembly mandate to provide advocacy and monitoring on issues of concern to people of color in both church and society. The committee evaluates social trends in church and society, and provides advice and counsel to the General Assembly (GA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The committee addresses issues, including civil rights, racial justice, environmental justice, economic justice, public education, law enforcement, health care, employment, and housing, as they impact communities of color. The committee also monitors the implementation of programs and policies approved by the church that impact the participation and quality of life for people of color within the church. The committee works in close cooperation with other agencies and entities within the church, including the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to fulfill its responsibilities. The ACREC’s assigned functions, as stated in the GAMC Manual of Operations include:

a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council, or on its own initiative.

b. Advise the General Assembly Mission Council on matters of racial ethnic concerns including statements concerning pressing issues that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of racial ethnic concern.

d. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

e. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.

f. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs relative to racial ethnic concerns.

g. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concern (GAMC Manual, p. 23).

The work of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) is coordinated through the Office of the General Assembly Mission Council by the Executive Administrator of the General Assembly Mission Council. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly and its chair has corresponding member status with the General Assembly Mission Council and with the General Assembly.

2. Accomplishments

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns used its regularly scheduled meetings to explore a wide range of topics of special interest to the committee and its work. In 2008, following the 218th General Assembly (2008), the committee met as follows:

a. August 28–30, 2008 in Tacoma, Washington. The committee welcomed an unusually large number of new members at this meeting and dedicated a sizeable portion of its agenda to orientation activities exploring the committee’s history, roles, responsibilities, liaisons, relationships, structure, and work plan for the coming cycle of work and activities. The committee also explored issues affecting the Native American community both locally, with the work of the Tahoma Indian Center and the Church of the Indian Fellowship, and nationally. The committee had an opportunity to say goodbye and thanks to Teresa Chavez Sauceda who served with distinction as its staff person for a number of years.

b. November 20–22, 2008 in Louisville, Kentucky. At this meeting, the committee began to organize its work for the 2008–10 work cycle. It surveyed the state of the Presbyterian racial ethnic enterprise, interviewing representatives from the Racial Ethnic Caucuses, staff from the GAMC offices of Congregational Enhancement, Multicultural Ministries, New Immigrant Group Ministries, Cultural Proficiency, Peacemaking, and the Presbyterian Washington Office, as well as staff from the Office of the General Assembly’s Committee on Representation.

To help understand the changing racial climate in the United States the committee discussed the book Racial Paranoia by John L. Jackson, Jr. reflecting on the evolving role of race in America. According to Jackson the racial context has moved from de jure racism (according to the law); to de facto racism (in reality or fact), i.e., from a racism steeped in the law to a racism that perpetuated itself without the same degree of explicit recourse to the legal justice system: and finally, to de cardio racism, a kind of hidden or cloaked racism of euphemism and innuendo, not heels-dug-in pronouncements of innate racial inferiority. In Jackson’s opinion, the United States is currently characterized by de facto racism and this in turn causes those affected to exhibit racial paranoia. It is within this new racial context that the committee is asked to serve.

In 2009, the committee continued its work with the following schedule of meetings and content summaries:

- March 15–18, 2009 Newark, New Jersey. The committee reviewed the issues raised by the globalization of the U.S. economy—with special regard to its implication on immigrant workers. The Presbytery of Elizabeth, aided by the Seaman’s Church Institute, led a tour of the Port of New York (Newark, NJ) and a visit to an immigrant detention center. This was an important opportunity to observe the effects on the environment, the unjust treatment of women and racial ethnic people in the work force, and the impact on families and family life near and around the Port of New York. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) members also met with ACREC as it began to consider a joint study with possible recommendations.

  In its concern about the church’s steady decline in mission funding, the committee voted to recommend to the General Assembly that a study of mission funding in the changing church be done, and furthermore asked all of its representatives to request that their congregations give extra dollars to mission funding in 2009 and to increase mission support for 2010. After studying the document “Rebuilding the Presbyterian Establishment” the committee recommended that the church do an Ecclesiology Study—a vision of what the church should look like in 2025 in order to help set straight some of the controversies claims raised in that paper. The rationale would include a study of the confessional documents of the church.

- July 23–25, 2009 Louisville, Kentucky. The committee received a presentation from the Presbyterian Foundation on the history and status of the Church’s Creative Investment Fund. The committee continues to be interested in how the amounts available can be increased and a closer working relationship established with Racial Ethnic Ministry allowing for greater use for rebuilding in the Racial Ethnic community.

The committee had a special presentation and discussion with J. Kameron Carter, author of Race: A Theological Account, about theology and its use as a tool of mastery and dominance with the intent of producing docile and compliant slaves. “God disrupts this logic of mastery and constructs a theological account that produces Community and [persons who are] equals.”

The committee was interviewed by the representatives of the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee, a special committee created by action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) to review the work of the advisory and advocacy committees. The information supplied by ACREC helped the review committee formulate its report. Staffing, restructuring, and job responsibilities were a part of the discussion as the committee worked towards securing staffing appropriate to accomplish its work.

- October 22–24, 2009 New Orleans, Louisiana. The committee chose to meet in New Orleans so that it could look at the remaining impact of Hurricane Katrina. ACREC sent a report with recommendations to the 218th General Assembly (2008) and wanted to update its knowledge and awareness of the situation some four years after the hurricane and subsequent events.

The Reverend Jean Marie Peacock, associate, South Louisiana Presbytery, briefed the committee and spoke of the many volunteers, AmeriCorps and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, who had served in the aftermath of the hurricane. The committee also met with volunteers at the Covenant Presbyterian Urban Institute which, in partnership with the Berea Presbyterian Church, is very active in center city of New Orleans. Many excellent social programs are available through the Urban Institute. As the paper, Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future, sent to the 218th GA (2008) by ACREC, demonstrated, racism complicates issues in areas like education, health care, and housing where services are markedly different for the African-American Community. Areas in these largely black communities around the levees that were breached, are still substantially underdeveloped. When and if this situation will be resolved is still unclear. ACREC was offered these suggestions for how the church can continue to help in this situation: continue to send volunteers, encourage investment through programs like Creative Investment, and encourage members to be more sensitive to the issues involved.
In addition, at this meeting the committee met with the Committee on Representation and heard their concerns for diversity in many areas of the life of the church—including staff and committees. Greater and more consistent interaction will be sought with COR in the future. Also, the committee listened to concerns about the dearth of Hispanic/Latino staff at our seminaries and forwarded a letter expressing this concern to the Committee on Theological Education.

3. Items of Business for the 219th General Assembly (2010)

The ACREC’s January 2010 meeting was dedicated to finalizing its report and recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The committee has accomplished a significant amount of work and sends the General Assembly several substantive issues for its consideration and action. It accomplished this work while going through an organizational transitional in which the committee operated under a new staffing rationale. In this new configuration, the advocacy committees are asked to share a single full-time person who will support each of the committees on a half-time basis. The committees are not yet certain this new approach will suffice given the distinctive skills and experiences required for each committee, but they will continue to examine and discuss the issue with the General Assembly Mission Council.

The following items were sent to the 219th General Assembly (2010):

a. 2010 Creating a Climate for Change, report and recommendations. Every two years ACREC interviews and receives reports from the chief executives of the six General Assembly agencies in order to ascertain the status of the “Creating a Climate for Change” recommendations approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004).

b. Racial Ethnic, New Immigrant Group Church Growth, a recommendation. Based on Racial Ethnic Church Growth goals set by the 208th General Assembly (1996) the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s Racial Ethnic membership was to be 20 percent of the total for the denomination by the year 2010. The current percentage is around 9 percent. ACREC is proposing action to help determine what caused the church to fall short of its goal and to consider what its new goal should be.

c. Updated Nomenclature, a recommendation. The 208th General Assembly (1996) was asked to substitute the term “Emerging Majorities” for “Racial Ethnic.” The assembly referred this recommendation back to ACREC for reconsideration. Upon further examination, the committee found it to be exceedingly complex with lots of potential ramifications. The committee is recommending a method for concluding the issue.

d. Nature of the Church for the Twenty-first Century, a recommendation. No serious study has been undertaken on the nature of the church since 1993. With the new century; the Form of Government undergoing serious consideration for revision; and a tremendous need to integrate an increasingly diverse group of Presbyterians into the church and its leadership; the ACREC is proposing that the church undertake a study on the nature of the church to remedy this situation.

e. Mission Funding, a recommendation. The church’s mission council and its ministries, and indeed all church agencies, are under increasing pressure to do more with less as giving patterns change. A new funding plan and strategy with varied methods, philosophies, and material would be helpful in order to increase giving in this increasingly diverse church community.

4. Officers for 2010–11

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns re-elected Carroll Jenkins as chair and Patricia Morse as vice chair. Stephen Hsieh was chosen to serve as secretary. Cynthia Holder Rich was elected chair of the Resource and Referral Subcommittee, and Aida Faris was elected chair of the Study and Comment Subcommittee.

B. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) Agency Summary

“The [Holy One] is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble” (Ps. 9:9)

“The Spirit told me to go with them and not to make a distinction between them and us.” (Acts 11:12)

“…[Be] doers of the word, and not merely hearers …” (Jas. 1:22)

1. Introduction

The context of women’s advocacy is a human situation where women experience injustice because they are women. Grounded in communal faith in “God [who] liberated the people of Israel from oppression … [and] covenanted with Israel … that they might do justice …” (Book of Order, G-3.0101b) and motivated by painful recognition of sexism within and without, the Presbyterian church explicitly articulated in the “Articles of Agreement” its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is a contemporary fulfillment of this promise.
Created by the mandate of the 205th General Assembly (1993) at the recommendation of the Report of the Task Force on Shape and Form, ACWC is charged with the responsibility of assisting the church to ... give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 ... monitor[ing] and evaluat[ing] policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church ... and advocate[ing] for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society [as a whole]. (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 262)

2. Assigned Responsibilities

The ACWC’s assigned functions are delineated in the GAMC Manual of Operations (Appendix 1, Section VII.C.4.), and they include:

a. Prepar[ing] policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and Advice and counsel memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council, or on its own initiative.

b. Advis[ing] the General Assembly Mission Council on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

c. Provid[ing] advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns.

d. Assist[ing] the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women’s concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

e. Provid[ing] the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women’s concerns.

f. Monitor[ing] the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns.

g. Through advocacy maintain[ing] a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s concerns.

The ACWC is housed in the Office of the Executive Director, General Assembly Mission Council. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly. ACWC has organized itself with a leadership team of three co-chairs: two serve as corresponding members to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council respectively. A member of ACWC is a voting member of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI). There are twelve members of the committee; ten members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly. They are chosen based on their individual qualifications and do not represent any constituencies. Members who left the committee in June 2008 were Karen Breckenridge, Nancy Neal, Manley Olsen (GAMC), Louise Davidson (PW). Members who joined the committee in June 2008 were Darcy Lynn Metcalfe, N’Yisrela Watts Afriyie, Chris Wolfe (PW), and Jan Martin (GAMC). Sarah Colwill resigned at the close of General Assembly 2008 due to family obligations. Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty was elected to complete her two year term.

3. Accomplishments

a. 2009–10: ACWC Met Four Times

(1) March 13–16, 2009, in New York, New York

- The committee met at the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) United Nations Office just following the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women meeting. Joel Hanisek, U.N. Representative for the PC(USA) hosted the group.

- Dr. Serene Jones, President of Union Theological Seminary, spoke to ACWC about women as political agents within religious contexts.

- Catherine Bordeau, intern with Ecumenical Women at the United Nations, spoke to the group about faith at the U.N. and gender in the church.

- Sister Marie Bernard Alima Mbalula, Secretary, Democratic Republic of the Congo, addressed the committee on the use of rape as a weapon of war in the DRC.

- Committee member, Dr. Gay L. Byron, Professor of New Testament and Christian Origins at Colgate Rochester Crozer Divinity School, spoke with ACWC about Womanist Theology and her latest academic work.

- Linda Valentine, GAMC Executive Director and Michael Kruse, GAMC Vice-chair, had a conversation with the group in response to the most recent GAMC restructuring.
• The committee had the opportunity to travel to Newark for a port tour and visitation of the Elizabeth, New Jersey Immigrant Detention Center.

(2) July 16–18, 2009, in Louisville, Kentucky

• The committee discussed the GAMC Employee Handbook changes at length.

• The committee spent extensive amounts of time responding to inquiries from the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee.

• The Health, Sexuality, and Faith work group of ACWC met with Martha Bettis Gee, GAMC Associate for Child Advocacy, to discuss pornography and its connections with human trafficking.

• The Thea-ologies work group of ACWC met with Dr. Johanna van Wijk-Bos and Dr. Lee Hinson-Hasty to discuss women’s theologies being taught in Presbyterian seminaries.

• Marissa Castellanos, Project Manager, Kentucky Rescue and Restore Victims of Human Trafficking, spoke to the entire committee about human trafficking.

• Pat Hendrix, GAMC Sexual Misconduct Ombudsperson, informed ACWC about the sexual misconduct policy in the PC(USA).

• Valerie Small, Office of the General Assembly Manager of General Assembly Nominations and Moderatorial Staff Services, explained the nomination process for members of ACWC.

• Curtis Kearns, GAMC Executive Administrator, addressed the new ACWC staff position description with the committee.

• The committee had a conversation with two representatives from the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee, Doug Megill and Sylvia Washer.

(3) October 29–31, 2009, in Pasadena, California

• The committee had the opportunity to hear from Dr. Kate Ott of the Religious Institute, who spoke to them about the study she directed, entitled, Sex and the Seminary, looking at what seminaries are doing to cultivate sexually healthy religious professionals.

• The group continued discussion with Curtis Kearns, GAMC Executive Administrator, about their new staff person.

• Marsha Fowler and Ann Hayman educated ACWC about the PC(USA) report on HIV/AIDS.

• Ron Kernaghan, Chair, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), informed ACWC of what ACSWP is taking to General Assembly this year.

• Rev. Carol Tomkins led the group in a discussion on the new Form of Government.

(4) January 21–23, 2010, in Louisville, Kentucky

• The ACWC member, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, spoke to the group about the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee’s final report.

• The work groups finalized what they will take to the General Assembly.

• The ACWC met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and ACSWP.

• Julia Thorne, Attorney in the Office of Immigration Issues, OGA, spoke to the group about immigration and detention and her work with the PC(USA).

• The ACWC elected a new leadership team that will take over after the 219th General Assembly (2010) in Minneapolis.

• The ACWC, along with ACREC, had the opportunity to meet with Michael Kruse, GAMC Vice-chair, and Sue Ezell, GAMC Justice Mission Committee Chair, over dinner and discussed the relationship between the advocacy committees and the GAMC.
• Laurie Griffith, Manager of Judicial Process, OGA, addressed the group on sexual misconduct, particularly in the context of clergy and internet pornography.

• Cynthia Holder Rich from ACREC had a discussion with the group about the Belhar Confession.

• Curtis Kearns, GAMC Executive Administrator, gave the group some GAMC updates.

4. Highlights

a. Women of Color Joint Working Group

The 217th General Assembly (2006) recommended the creation of a Task Force on the Women of Color Consultation. Made up of seven persons, this task force was launched in October 2006, completing its work and reporting to the 218th General Assembly (2008) in a separate report. Constituted jointly by ACWC and ACREC, in consultation with Presbyterian Women and the National Cross Caucus, the task force studied the recommendations, which came from the Women of Color Consultation in 2004. In addition to analyzing and determining what progress had been made, the task force designed and recommended a mechanism for monitoring future progress by the denomination. The Women of Color Joint Working Group was created by the 218th General Assembly (2008) as a permanent monitoring committee. The Women of Color Joint Working Group, a combined committee of ACREC and ACWC, continues to work to monitor all General Assembly referrals assigned to them pertaining to concerns of women of color in the PC(USA). ACWC will bring some of their recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

b. Status of Women Task Force

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved ACWC’s recommendation to study the status of women at all levels of the church, calling for the creation of the Status of Women Task Force. While restructuring slowed the initiation of this group and its work, the Status of Women Task Force has been created and met once in January 2010. The task force will continue its assigned function and report back to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

c. Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus

The Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus contacted ACWC in September 2009 asking for assistance in advocating on behalf of the women of Ciudad Juarez, Mexico. In conjunction with the caucus, ACWC wrote a letter to the Stated Clerk and Moderator of the General Assembly requesting they send a letter to the president of Mexico and the governor of Chihuahua asking them to tend to the violence being done against women and their families. Beyond this, ACWC will bring a recommendation to the 219th General Assembly (2010) to form a study group on the situation in Juarez and provide bilingual study materials to churches on the border.

d. Youth, Technology, and Pornography

The Health, Sexuality, and Faith work group of ACWC spent much of its time working in conjunction with Martha Bettis Gee, Associate for Child Advocacy, GAMC, on issues of pornography and youth. They are currently examining the need for updates to the 1983 report on pornography which contains no relevant discussion of the impact of technology on the pornography industry. Included in the group’s discussion have been the issues of clergy abuse of pornography and pornography as a vehicle for the trafficking of children. The work group intends to keep this issue at the fore of its work.

e. Sex and the Seminary

During the October 2009 meeting of ACWC in Pasadena, California, the group had the opportunity to hear from Dr. Kate Ott of the Religious Institute and director of the study, Sex and the Seminary. Dr. Ott presented the group with some of her work regarding the importance of religious professionals having been educated in sex and sexuality. The Theologies work group of ACWC is continuing to work with Dr. Ott and consider ways in which the PC(USA) might improve the sex/sexuality education of those preparing to lead the denomination.

f. Rachel Sabbath Initiative

During their October 2009 meeting, ACWC also learned from Dr. Kate Ott about the Rachel Sabbath Initiative. Through this initiative, the Religious Institute is calling denominations and congregations to raise awareness and support the U.N.’s goals of reducing maternal mortality rates and improving access to reproductive health care around the globe. As more than half a million women in the world die each year and more than one million children are left motherless because of the lack of proper health care for pregnant women, ACWC hopes to connect the PC(USA) with this project in the near future, see <http://www.religiousinstitute.org/initiative/rachel-sabbath-initiative-saving-womens-lives-0> for more information.
g.  A Time of Transition

The great majority of time the past two years has been focused on internal matters for ACWC—restructure and review. In November, 2008, three positions in the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW Area were eliminated as a result of restructuring in that ministry area. The positions eliminated were: Office of Women’s Advocacy, Office of the National Network of Presbyterian College Women, and the Office of Racial Ethnic and Young Women Together. The women were terminated from their positions and escorted out the same day. This greatly impacted the work of ACWC, particularly since the October 2008 meeting had been cancelled due to budget restrictions. There was no opportunity for consultation regarding the status of projects, nor, after working with staff for three years, any closure allowed.

The ACWC requested time on the agenda of the General Assembly Council at its March meeting to discuss the manner in which staff was dismissed, and the restructuring. Earlier in March, however, Executive Director Linda Valentine and Michael Kruse, Vice-chair of the General Assembly Mission Council, came to the ACWC meeting for that purpose. One conclusion resulted in ACWC participating in a discussion about the rewrite of the GAMC Personnel Policies. This is being done with ACREC and ACSWP, and is continuing. Although GAMC approved the personnel policies at their September 2009 meeting, assurance has been given to the three committees that changes can be made following further consultation. The primary issue for ACWC is that of same-day separations.

After the restructuring, ACWC was no longer connected in any way with Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW. There is no longer an Office of Women’s Advocacy (OWA) within REWM/PW. The senior administrative assistant for OWA and ACWC was promoted to another position within REWM/PW, eliminating any staff support for ACWC. A temporary, part-time staff was hired February 15, 2009. Her one-year contract has been extended through General Assembly of this year.

h.  Actions of the Committee for Consideration by the 219th General Assembly (2010)

Resolution to Study Violence Against Women and Children on the Mexico-U.S. Border

Resolution to Reaffirm Support for the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW)

Resolution to Ensure Staffing for Women’s Advocacy in the PC(USA)

Resolution to Explore the Intersection of Gender and Race

Resolution to Adapt the Session Annual Statistical Report (SASR)

Response to Referral Item 09 -12 with Recommendation to Extend the Work of the Status of Women Task Force

C.  General Assembly Committee on Representation Agency Summary

“Now there are varieties of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are varieties of services, but the same Lord; and there are varieties of activities, but it is the same God who activates all of them in everyone” (1Cor. 12:4–6).

1.  Assigned Responsibilities

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR), in its constitutional mandate, shall advise, advocate, resource, review, recommend, and consult with the General Assembly and its committees, councils, and entities to ensure that the principles of inclusiveness are implemented. The GACOR advocates for full participation in decision making and representation. Its main function shall be to advise the governing bodies with respect to their membership and to that of their committees, boards, agencies, and other units in implementing the principles of participation and inclusiveness to ensure fair and effective representation in the decision making of the church. The committee advises the General Assembly and its entities on the employment of personnel, reviews and consults the implementation plans in conformity with the Churchwide Plan for Affirmative Action and Equal Employment Opportunity, and when necessary, suggests corrective actions in order to fulfill the PC(USA) commitments to inclusiveness and participation articulated in G-4.0403 and G-9.0105. The GACOR regularly consults with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC), and one member attends General Assembly Mission Council meetings to monitor actions and advise that body.

2. Accomplishments

The GACOR has the responsibility to assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to realize that it needs its diverse membership to participate fully in leadership and that their contribution is important and must be sought out and acknowledged. The GACOR acts in some ways as a conscience for the system, intentionally paying attention to who is involved and how decisions are made. God gives abundantly to the church and we seek to live into that diversity of gifts to realize our ministries together more fully—to do that most faithfully, we need to have the widest inclusiveness.

The GACOR quickly and thoroughly orients new members to the committee. This is accomplished by setting aside time in the first meeting after a General Assembly for extended orientation for new members and discussion, directed by the Executive Committee and staff. The GACOR is committed to providing regular training for Synod COR leaders. Biennially, a training event is held.

Ongoing professional development for GACOR members was accomplished during 2008–09 meetings by inviting speakers and facilitators to full committee meetings, consulting with partners, and putting members in learning opportunities in conferences and meetings of constituency groups. The 2009 Synod Training Event, titled “Connecting the Dots: Discovering a Community of One,” was centered on the story of Pentecost and the gift of abundant difference. The workshops focused on particular aspects of involving members in decision making and addressing institutional and generational barriers.

Analysis of synod reports and representation data is a regular feature of GACOR work. Synods receive annual feedback from the committee on their reports. From time to time this work is included in advice and counsel memoranda to entities, councils, and committees. Data analysis during the last two years contributed to a recommendation being presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

As part of its efforts to promote equal employment opportunity and affirmative action, GACOR continues to raise awareness of job postings, and circulates them to under-represented constituencies to reach out to a more inclusive pool. Stimulating discussion of these topics and examining the challenges to living more fully into the Kingdom vision of who the church is to be is part of the common work GACOR has. The GACOR continues to assign its members to serve as liaisons to, and attend meetings and conferences of, the recognized protected constituencies including the racial ethnic caucuses and councils and Presbyterians for Disability Concerns (PDC).

The GACOR, in order to do its work, organizes itself in three subcommittees: Program, Planning and Strategy, and Training.

The Program Subcommittee interprets data on representation and participation, presents issues needing action, and recommends specific communication and action for the GACOR to take with synods and committees, commissions and entities of the national church. In 2008, the GACOR Program Subcommittee evaluated COR reports from eleven synods, down from the previous year, which may be an indication of the interest and concern at the synod level for the principles of inclusiveness and participation. At the same time several presbyteries have indicated a renewed interest in reviving the work of the committee on representation in their body, requesting resources and training. There are instances where synods still need to pay closer attention to their makeup and methods for ensuring participation and representation, but on a whole there is gradual improvement in areas across the church. The Synods of Rocky Mountains, Pacific, Puerto Rico, Northeast and South Atlantic did not submit a report to GACOR in 2008. This is not the first time for Rocky Mountains in particular. The committee is looking into what has affected this change in the trend toward increasing compliance. Filling out the report is one thing, connecting those numbers to actions is the challenge. Feedback to synods included suggested corrective actions to improve their reported representation.

Technology and Reporting: The GACOR continues to work with OGA staff to make the synod annual report form more user friendly on the PC(USA) website, adding capability for interactive report submission and downloading. The major website redesign currently in motion has delayed our efforts to roll out this new capacity for respondents to enter data directly on the Web. The form is still available in Word format that can be sent electronically to synods upon request. The committee is also expanding the technologies it uses to meet and discuss materials between meetings and will continue to seek ways to do so.
Best practices for synod CORs include increasing the interface with their respective presbyteries by sponsoring training opportunities and demonstrating heightened representation. In the last two years, there have been modest increases of synod COR representation on synod nominating committees. We have seen increased requests for instructional materials that support presbyteries in enhancing the revitalization of the work of their own committees on representation.

The Planning and Strategy Subcommittee is looking at ways that it can strengthen communication with presbytery and synod staff and discerning how best the GACOR can assist them as they look at issues of diversity, inclusiveness, and representation. The subcommittee looks at the big picture of GACOR work and charts strategy for improving inclusiveness at the national level. This group is reviewing Affirmative Action/Equal Employment Opportunity procedures for the various entities. In consultation with the Climate for Change Task Force, it may bring recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012). Their work also includes a review, already underway, of the GACOR Manual.

The Training Subcommittee guides both training and continuing development opportunities for GACOR members and, biennially, synod COR members and staff. In October 2009, GACOR sponsored the biennial training event for synod COR staff and chairpersons in Louisville, Kentucky. Thirty synod leaders attended and thirteen synods were represented. The theme of the training was “Connecting the Dots: Discovering a Community of One.” The purpose of plenary meetings and workshops was to equip and challenge synod CORs to more effectively work for diversity and inclusiveness in their synods and share those methods with their presbyteries. Leadership included:

- The Reverend Dr. Clifton Kirkpatrick, President of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and former Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was the keynote speaker.
- The Reverend Tony Aja, Mid-Kentucky Presbytery, was the worship leader.
- Elder Valerie Small, Manager of General Assembly Committee on Nominations, who highlighted the nominating process and the need for CORs and nominating committees to work together.

Workshops at the event included those on improving youth and young adult involvement, the new Form of Government and how CORs are affected, the languages of diversity, deepened participant understanding of specific COR issues, and tasks at governing body levels.

Analysis of the evaluation forms from the training event revealed that a significant majority of those attending valued their participation and the content of the training. With a 90 percent response rate, consistently elements of the training were rated as very helpful or helpful, generally varying between 84 to 96 percent, the lowest score was 71 percent. When you add in the category of slightly helpful this number increases even more. On the overall evaluation question, 93 percent rated the training excellent or good. One participant added “energy level of participants grew over the training, discussions went deep.” Many commented that the training provided new ways to work with colleagues on synod and presbytery CORs.

Currently the GACOR is reviewing data on GA Commissioners to past assemblies since 2003 and compiling a report. We will share this preliminary evaluation of representation at those assemblies at the 219th General Assembly (2010). COR will be evaluating this data and bringing possible advice to the next assembly. The 218th General Assembly (2008) directed entities reporting data to strive to report it in disaggregated ways. Disaggregated data more accurately expresses how diversity is experienced in life—persons are not identified merely by one variable at a time, but rather data is reported in a way that you can find out how many racial-ethnic women clergy are present who are under thirty-five (for example). The previous way often described these descriptors separately—how many women clergy, how many racial-ethnic clergy, how many clergy under thirty-five. Reporting data in this way, we will better understand who we are as a gathered community. COR has made suggestions in how demographic data on GA commissioners is collected and reported to reflect this more complex approach.

The GACOR staff and synod liaisons provide training opportunities in presbyteries and synods throughout the year. Among those in 2009 were events in the Synods of Mid-Atlantic and Trinity.

Staffing changes: The GACOR had a transition in their staff support triggered in May 2009 with the retirement of Elder Joan E. Richardson, who served as the Manager of the General Assembly Committee on Representation and Inclusiveness Services for seventeen years. We give thanks to God for her faithful service in the work of representation and full participation. In July 2009, the Rev. Molly Casteel became the Interim Manager.

Business before this assembly: A special task group of GACOR reviewed the final report of the Form of Government Task Force and their recommendations to amend the Book of Order in 2010. The task group determined that the language regarding diversity and inclusiveness was not strong enough in the proposed document and that the sections describing the entities responsible for representation and participation and nominations needed reinforcement, that synods, in particular, were reduced in their abilities to adjust to reach representational goals; therefore the committee is sending comments advising the assembly to take action to amend the document. While the proposed Foundational Principles allow for more flexibility in presbyteries, the GACOR feels that church’s commitment to diversity, inclusiveness, representation, equal employment opportunity, and affirmative action is diminished in the documents as proposed and that adjustments in F-10403 in particular need to be made. Please refer to the comment the committee made on these items of business for more details.

Through training, worship, study, consultation, developing strategies, and sharing, the GACOR equips and challenges the General Assembly, its entities, commissions, committees, and synod CORs to achieve, accomplish, realize, endorse, and preserve the commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to inclusiveness and diversity.

3. Membership

The GACOR’s commitment to inclusiveness is reflected in the diversity of its membership from the sixteen synods. In late 2009 there were several resignations due to changes in life and work circumstances. The following persons were serving on GACOR at the time this report was written in January 2010:

- Alaska-Northwest, Elder Alma-jean Marion, African American (SA) *see legend at end of report
- Covenant, Elder Deborah Fair, African American (SA)
- Lakes and Prairies, Layperson Cindy Ray, White (A) (D)
- Living Waters, Rev. John A.T. Gulden, White (YA)
- Mid-America, Elder William W. Gardner, White (SA)
- Mid-Atlantic, Elder Angela Battle, African American (A)
- Northeast, Elder Yung Suk Park, Korean (A)
- Pacific, Layperson Megan D. Acedo, White (Y)
- Puerto Rico, Elder Eliud Serrano Arroyo, Hispanic (YA)
- Southwest, Elder Glenn Bezuyen, White (A)
- Trinity, Rev. Stanley Bhasker, Asian ((A)

These persons have served on the committee since the last General Assembly and we thank them for their service:

- Lincoln Trails, Rev. M. Coleman Gilchrist, African American (A)
- Rocky Mountains, Elder Alda Bighorn, Native American (A)
- South Atlantic, Rev. Alice Ridgill, African American (YA)
- Southern California and Hawaii, Elder J. Stafford Fredericks, White (SA)
- Sun, Elder Randel Bohanon, Native American (SA)

The moderator of GACOR is Glenn Bezuyen; vice-moderator, Cindy Ray; members of the executive committee and chairpersons of GACOR subcommittees are Angela Battle, Stanley Bhasker, and Cindy Ray.

On Lifting up the “Call to Restore the Creation” — From the Presbytery of Charlotte.

The Presbytery of Charlotte overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Lift up the “Call to Restore the Creation,” originally adopted as part of Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice by the 202nd General Assembly (1990) in recognition of its continuing importance, and the crucial work remaining on its 20th anniversary.

“Call to Restore the Creation

“Creation cries out in this time of ecological crisis.

“—Abuse of nature and injustice to people place the future in grave jeopardy.
“—Population triples in this century.
“—Biological systems suffer diminished capacity to renew themselves.
“—Finite minerals are mined and pumped as if inexhaustible.
“—Peasants are forced onto marginal lands, and soil erodes.
“—The rich-poor gap grows wider.
“—Wastes and poisons exceed nature's capacity to absorb them.
“—Greenhouse gases pose threat of global warming.

“Therefore, God calls the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to “—respond to the cry of creation, human and non-human;

“—engage in the effort to make the 1990s the “turnaround decade,” not only for reasons of prudence or survival, but because the endangered planet is God’s creation; and “—draw upon all the resources of biblical faith and the Reformed tradition for empowerment and guidance in this adventure.

“The church has powerful reason for engagement in restoring God’s creation:

“—God’s works in creation are too wonderful, too ancient, too beautiful, too good to be desecrated.
“—Restoring creation is God's own work in our time, in which God comes both to judge and to restore.
“—The Creator-Redeemer calls faithful people to become engaged with God in keeping and healing the creation, human and nonhuman.
“—Human life and well-being depend upon the flourishing of other life and the integrity of the life-supporting processes that God has ordained.
“—The love of neighbor, particularly “the least” of Christ’s brothers and sisters, requires action to stop the poisoning, the erosion, the wastefulness that are causing suffering and death.
“—The future of our children and their children and all who come after is at stake.
“—In this critical time of transition to a new era, God’s new doing may be discerned as a call to earth-keeping, to justice, and to community.

“Therefore, the 202nd General Assembly [(1990)] affirms that:

“—Response to God’s call requires a new faithfulness, for which guidance may be found in norms that illuminate the contemporary meaning of God’s steadfast love for the world.
“—Earth-keeping today means insisting on sustainability—the ongoing capacity of natural and social systems to thrive together—which requires human beings to practice wise, humble, responsible stewardship, after the model of servanthood that we have in Jesus.
“—Justice today requires participation, the inclusion of all members of the human family in obtaining and enjoying the Creator’s gifts for sustenance.

“—Justice also means sufficiency, a standard upholding the claim of all to have enough—to be met through equitable sharing and organized efforts to achieve that end.

“—Community in our time requires the nurture of solidarity, leading to steadfastness in standing with companions, victims, and allies, and to the realization of the church’s potential as a community of support for adventurous faithfulness.

“On the basis of these findings and affirmations the 202nd General Assembly (1990) “—recognizes and accepts restoring creation as a central concern of the church, to be incorporated into its life and mission at every level;

“—understands this to be a new focus for initiative in mission program and a concern with major implications for infusion into theological work, evangelism, education, justice and peacemaking, worship and liturgy, public witness, global mission, and congregational service and action at the local community level;

“—recognizes that restoring creation is not a short-term concern to be handled in a few years, but a continuing task to which the nation and the world must give attention and commitment, and which has profound implications for the life, work, and witness of Christian people and church agencies;

“—approaches the task with covenant seriousness—‘If you obey the commandments of the Lord your God ... then you shall live’ (Deut. 30:16)—and with practical awareness that cherishing God’s creation enhances the ability of the church to achieve its other goals.” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 646–47)

2. Commend the faithful congregations, Presbyterian church-related institutions, and church members who have responded to God’s call to cherish and protect God’s creation, and urge perseverance in the tasks of restoring God’s creation.

3. Urge congregations, Presbyterian church-related institutions, and church members to adopt institutional and individual lifestyles reflecting greater stewardship of resources, particularly in energy consumption.

[4. Affirm that concern for God's creation is, for every Christian, an essential way of living faithfully in Christ’s world that will necessitate personal study of, attention to, and engagement with emerging and new environmental concerns that are persistent, acute, and pressing.

[5. Affirm that the best available science should inform our care for God’s creation, shaping the direction of responsible programming and policy, especially with respect to public witness concerning emergent environmental issues such as global climate change, desertification, and access to potable water, and wetlands/coastal erosion.

[6. Affirm that all living creatures require potable water to live; that water, being essential to life, is a human right that must be accessible to all people.]

Rationale

Twenty years ago, the 202nd General Assembly (1990) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) overwhelmingly adopted the comprehensive policy Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice. This policy built upon the historic General Assembly policy base reflecting the determination that the protection of the environment is an essential part of the Christian faith. Subsequent General Assemblies provided additional guidance in environmental education and advocacy efforts for all councils and offices of the church.

The Book of Order (W-7.5001) states that “God calls the Church in the power of the Holy Spirit to participate in God’s work of creation and preservation...” In W.-7.5003, it reminds us that we are “… stewards of God’s creation who hold the earth in trust...”

Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice called the 1990s the “turn-around decade,” and indeed generated new and renewed efforts by the church at all levels to respond to the ecological crisis and its impact upon the poor and vulnerable with focused strategies, deeper theological and ethical reflection, and institutional and individual commitment. Yet, more work needs to be done. On the 20th anniversary of the General Assembly’s adoption of this comprehensive policy, it is fitting to reaffirm its findings, celebrate what it has spawned in the life of the church, and recommit ourselves to the calling that remains as valid and necessary today as it was in 1990.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-01—from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-01, from the Presbytery of Charlotte, overtures the 219th General Assembly on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the adoption of “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice,” to lift up the “Call to Restore Creation,” seriously affirming that this commitment constitutes a new and enduring framework for all of the church’s thought and action; to commend those church entities that have responded to this call; and to urge all church entities and members to adopt practices that result in greater stewardship of earth resources.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-01 be approved with the following additional recommendations:

“[4. Affirm that concern for God’s creation is, for every Christian, an essential way of living faithfully in Christ’s world that will necessitate personal study of, attention to and engagement with emerging and new environmental concerns that are persistent, acute, and pressing.

“[5. Affirm that the best available science should inform our care for God’s creation, shaping the direction of responsible programming and policy, especially with respect to public witness concerning emergent environmental issues such as global climate change, desertification and access to potable water, and wetlands/coastal erosion.

“[6. Affirm that all living creatures require potable water to live; that water, being essential to life, is a human right that must be accessible to all people, and that plans for urban growth, suburban sprawl, and rural development should all be conditional on the wise stewardship of water.”]

Rationale

On approval: Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice is and has been an important call in the life of the church. Informing environmental justice ministries and Presbyterians for Restoring Creation (now Presbyterians for Creation Care), this “Call to Restore Creation” continues to guide our understanding of what it means to be in relationship with God’s creation. This call has been reaffirmed by other assemblies, including the 208th General Assembly (2008) that, in Hope for a Global Future, appeals to the 1990 “Call to Restore Creation,” affirming that “human life and well-being depend upon the flourishing of other life and the integrity of the life-supporting processes that God has ordained” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 534)

On Recommendation 4: Environmental concern is necessarily a whole-world and whole-church commitment as well as a personal commitment incumbent upon all Christians as a means of living faithfully in God’s shared creation. The interrelatedness of elements of the biosphere demands a holistic attention to the environment that reaffirms the Presbyterian environmental policy commitment to “sustainability, sufficiency, participation, and solidarity” in addressing the ethics of ecology and justice. Environmental commitment is also confronted by the reality of new environmental issues that unfold as humankind inhabits the earth and explores the universe.

On Recommendation 5: Several environmental issues have arisen or become more acute since the 1990 adoption of “Restoring Creation.” While the concerns of “Restoring Creation” remain continuing commitments, these “new” environmental issues have expanded our awareness of a continuing and enlarged need for attention and commitment to the environment. For instance, since 1990, previous General Assemblies have repeatedly called on the United States and the global community to join together in order to mitigate and prevent the worst effects of global climate change. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved“The Power to Change: U.S. Energy and Global Warming” in which it called for measures to create more sustainable and just energy consumption at all levels of the church—individuals and families; councils, governing bodies, consistent with agencies; and the church’s social responsibility regarding U.S. energy policy (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 934–37).

For its recommendations on climate change policy, the 2008 document drew specifically on the recommendations of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC)’s fourth Assessment Report, which contained scientific recommendations based on the most recent scientific data available. Such data and scientific recommendations have since been updated, leaving the recommendations of the 218th General Assembly (2008) behind the most current data. Urging that responses to climate change be commensurate with the best available science will allow the statement of the 218th General Assembly (2008) to grow with new learnings and understandings (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 935–37).

On Recommendation 6: Water, one of five areas of social policy focus in the 1990 “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” deserves more focused attention as we enter the second decade of the twenty-first century. The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved the “Report and Recommendations on Limited Water Resources and Takings with Study Guide” that addressed, in abbreviated form, the balance of water usage (agricultural, industrial, urban) necessary for water justice. As drought continues in southwestern states, and desertification has increased in all regions of the world, and as the issue of water rights grows increasingly contentious within the U.S., the General Assembly may affirm that clean water is a human right for all persons whether living in the developing world or in the United States. Within the U.S., disputes over sources of water among states and municipalities create political controversy. In addition, the increasing commodification of water, through bottled drinking water and other ways in which water rights are bought and sold, puts in danger the common availability of clean water to all people residing in the United States as well as increasing the burden on the environment through the use of nondegradable disposable containers.

[The assembly approved Item 11-02. See pp. 39, 41.]

On Endorsing “The Charter for Compassion”—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to affirm the Charter of Compassion and direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate that support to all congregations.

“Charter for Compassion

“The principle of compassion lies at the heart of all religious, ethical and spiritual traditions, calling us always to treat all others as we wish to be treated ourselves. Compassion impels us to work tirelessly to alleviate the suffering of our fellow creatures, to dethrone ourselves from the centre of our world and put another there, and to honour the inviolable sanctity of every single human being, treating everybody, without exception, with absolute justice, equity and respect.

“It is also necessary in both public and private life to refrain consistently and empathically from inflicting pain. To act or speak violently out of spite, chauvinism, or self-interest, to impoverish, exploit or deny basic rights to anybody, and to incite hatred by denigrating others—even our enemies—is a denial of our common humanity. We acknowledge that we have failed to live compassionately and that some have even increased the sum of human misery in the name of religion.

“We therefore call upon all men and women ~ to restore compassion to the centre of morality and religion ~ to return to the ancient principle that any interpretation of scripture that breeds violence, hatred or disdain is illegitimate ~ to ensure that youth are given accurate and respectful information about other traditions, religions and cultures ~ to encourage a positive appreciation of cultural and religious diversity ~ to cultivate an informed empathy with the suffering of all human beings—even those regarded as enemies.

“We urgently need to make compassion a clear, luminous and dynamic force in our polarized world. Rooted in a principled determination to transcend selfishness, compassion can break down political, dogmatic, ideological and religious boundaries. Born of our deep interdependence, compassion is essential to human relationships and to a fulfilled humanity. It is the path to enlightenment, and indispensible to the creation of a just economy and a peaceful global community.” (www.charterforcompassion.org, created November 12, 2009)

Rationale

We know that: “… In daily life, Jesus took ordinary acts of human compassion—healing the sick, feeding the hungry, washing feet—and translated them into ways of serving God.” (Book of Order, W-1.2004)

“God sends the church in the power of the Holy Spirit to exercise compassion in the world,

“a. feeding the hungry,

“b. comforting the grieving,

“c. caring for the sick,

808 219TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2010)
“d. visiting the prisoners,
“e. freeing the captives,
“f. sheltering the homeless,
“g. befriending the lonely.” (Book of Order, W-7.3001)

“… Concern for the world may be enacted in prayer and ministries of compassion, justice, peacemaking, and witness.” (Book of Order, W-3.5302)

“Discipleship may be expressed … beyond the church cooperating with all who work for compassion and reconciliation.” (Book of Order, W-4.3002)

We also know that 150,000 people of the Abrahamic faiths and beyond, from more than 180 countries, have contributed to the Charter for Compassion including the Interfaith Conference of metropolitan Washington through its thirtieth anniversary interfaith concert. The National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. has also endorsed the Charter for Compassion.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-02 from the Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) “to endorse the Charter of Compassion and communicate that support to all congregations in the PC(USA).”

The Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-02 be approved.

Rationale

The Charter for Compassion is the product of a multi-faith, web-based collaboration in response to growing misunderstandings, misrepresentations, and, thus, increased hostility between religious traditions. This process is described at http://charterforcompassion.org/. The charter calls for treating each human person with “justice, equity and respect” out of deep compassion for each; teaching appreciation for cultural and religious differences; and nurturing “informed empathy” with those who suffer.

The charter’s emphasis on the role of compassion in motivating response to the suffering of any others is fully consistent with the biblical tradition and Reformed theology, as indicated in the overture. Its call for a positive response to religious and cultural differences is supported by the long tradition of the PC(USA) to support basic human rights, including the right to determine one’s own beliefs and participate in the religious community of one’s choosing. In 1949, the General Assembly of the PCUSA endorsed the UN Declaration of Human Rights¹, beginning an on-going series of declarations by assemblies in the area of human rights, including religious rights, that continues to this day.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 11-02 be approved.

Rationale

As the demographics of our church and our country are changing rapidly, ACREC believes that it is important to be aware of our place as Christians in the broader world and how we relate to people of other faiths. Therefore, we believe that a more diverse and open teaching of biblical and church history is needed in order to broaden the embrace of our neighbors.

Today’s youth and young adults are living in a different and nontraditional environment. In order to keep the church relevant in their lives, ACREC believes we need to provide

- a broader understanding of religions and beliefs;
- a relational understanding of Christianity, Judaism, and Islam and how they all relate to The Charter of Compassion;

On Making Resources Available Regarding Destruction and Loss of Coastal Wetlands—From the Presbytery of South Louisiana.

The Presbytery of South Louisiana respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Environmental Ministries office, to make educational resources available concerning coastal land loss.

2. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Congregational Ministries Publishing, to work in conjunction with the Presbytery of South Louisiana to develop [curriculum] [resources] on the implications of coastal wetlands loss for God’s creation and God’s community.

3. Establish financial support for a theological wetlands education center in the Presbytery of South Louisiana for Presbyterians of all ages to learn to be stewards of the wetlands and proactive in their repair.

4. Direct the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to examine the role of corporations and institutions in the destruction [and restoration] of the wetlands and report back to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

5. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Washington Office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to advocate with members of the United States Congress to take measures to restore land lost due to coastal erosion in southern deltaic regions of Louisiana.

[Financial Implication: (2010) $0; (2011) $28,100; (2012) $53,100 (GAMC)]

Rationale

“The earth is the LORD’s and all that is in it” (Ps 24:1).

Hurricane Katrina (2005) and other recent hurricanes have exposed the vulnerability of New Orleans and other communities to flooding and destruction because of the loss of wetlands. Coastal erosion is happening in south Louisiana at a faster rate than anywhere else on earth and this massive coastal loss has negative spiritual, cultural, environmental, and economic implications.

• A land mass equivalent to the size of the state of Delaware has been lost from the Louisiana coastline in the last seventy years due mainly to human-caused factors.

• South Louisiana is home to a unique blend of cultures including people of Native American, Creole, Vietnamese American, and Cajun descent and is a habitat for a variety of species whose continuing existence is threatened by coastal land loss.

• South Louisiana’s natural resources, such as petroleum and seafood, are vital to the U.S. economy.

• Hurricanes are at their strongest when they make landfall. The wetlands of South Louisiana have historically served as a buffer zone that protected inland communities and estuaries from storm surge and strong winds.

• An increasing amount of damage in terms of suffering and property loss is expected due to the disappearance of this buffer zone unless action is taken to restore the coast.

• The 202nd General Assembly (1990) passed the resolution “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice,” that called for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take stronger action on environmental matters.

• Ezekiel 47:8–12 depicts the ecological richness of coastal wetlands, a special piece of God’s creation:

He said to me, “This water flows toward the eastern region and goes down into the Arabah; and when it enters the sea, the sea of stagnant waters, the water there will become fresh. Wherever the river goes, every living creature that swarms will live, and there will be very many fish, once these waters reach there. It will become fresh; and everything will live where the river goes. People will stand fishing beside the sea from En-gedi to En-eglaim; it will be a place for the spreading of nets; its fish will be of a great many kinds, like the fish of the Great Sea. But its swamps and marshes will not become fresh; they are to be left for salt. On the banks, on both sides of the river, there will grow all kinds of trees for food. Their leaves will not wither nor their fruit fail, but they will bear fresh fruit every month, because the water for them flows from the sanctuary. Their fruit will be for food, and their leaves for healing.”

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-03, from the Presbytery of South Louisiana, overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) regarding coastal erosion and the loss of coastal wetlands through human activity as well as hurricane flooding and destruction.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-03 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with underline; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with underline.]

“5. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Washington Office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to advocate with members of the United States Congress to take measures to [restore land lost due to coastal erosion in southern deltaic regions of Louisiana] [halt human activities that contribute to coastal erosion and contamination and the loss of wetlands].

“6. In light of the recent environmental catastrophe in the Gulf Coast, the largest oil spill in history now encroaching on the shoreline, reaffirm the church’s continuing concern about the United States’ ever-increasing use of energy produced by fossil fuels that endanger our shorelines through off-shore drilling, and our commitment to change our lifestyle to be more sustainable, in keeping with the ‘Call to Restore Creation’ and ‘The Power to Change’ (218th General Assembly (2008)).

“[7. Reaffirm the church’s commitment to support the development of clean, more sustainable sources of energy.

“[8. Call on Congress and the president to stop offshore oil drilling and exploration in the Gulf Coast region until the full range of human, environmental and economic costs and benefits can be understood.

“[9. Call on Congress and the president to commit to long-term clean-up and restoration of the Gulf Coast shoreline.]”

Rationale

The swamps and marshes of coastal Louisiana are among the Nation’s most fragile and valuable wetlands, vital not only to recreational and agricultural interests but also the State’s more than $1 billion per year seafood industry. The staggering annual losses of wetlands in Louisiana are caused by human activity as well as natural processes. U.S. Geological Survey scientists are conducting important studies that are helping planners to understand the life cycle of wetlands by detailing the geologic processes that shape them and the coast, and by providing geologic input to models for mitigation strategies. (S. Jeffress Williams, retired, U.S. Geological Survey, http://marine.usgs.gov/fact-sheets/LAwetlands/lawetlands.html)

While land eroded by hurricane and flood cannot be restored, further erosion and habitat destruction caused by human activity can be halted and at least a scientifically based partial restoration of wetlands effected so that the collateral restorative processes of creation active in the wetlands might “heal itself” of human-caused damage.

The recent oil-well eruption of approximately five million gallons of oil off the Gulf Coast has endangered coastal communities, coastal habitat, the fishing industry, and more all along the Gulf Coast. Even now, twenty years after the Exxon Valdez oil spill of a finite 10.8 million gallons of oil, oil continues to reach the shores of Prince William Sound. This recent escape of oil is potentially limitless and will affect the entire Gulf Coast for decades to come. A long-term commitment to clean-up and restoration is necessary as is a renewed and redoubled effort to develop and implement new sources of sustainable, clean, and affordable energy.

Following the Exxon-Valdez oil spill, the 201st General Assembly (1989) adopted Commissioners’ Resolution 89-8 that called for “a moratorium on oil drilling in Bristol Bay and oil exploration or drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge until assurances of preventive measures and contingency cleanup and recovery operations can be agreed upon by appropriate agencies in order to protect fully these sensitive ecosystems” (Minutes, 1989, Part I, p. 642). Further, the 213th General Assembly (2001) adopted Overture 01-60 to preserve biodiversity and halt mass extinction. The recommendations include a “call on the U.S. and other governments, on U.S. and international development and lending agencies, and on national and multinational corporations and banks to desist from large-scale projects, such as old-growth timber cutting and forest fragmentation, megadam construction, and oil exploration and drilling in vulnerable regions, that devastate ecosystems, threaten wildlife survival, and displace indigenous people” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 56, 474). The scope of the present catastrophe exceeds even that of the Exxon-Valdez spill and fully warrants our call for and support of cessation of offshore oil drilling and exploration until the full range of human, ecosystemic, environmental, and economic costs and benefits can be determined.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-03

Comment on Item 11-03—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

Recommendation 2 “[d]irects the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Congregational Ministries Publishing, to work in conjunction with the Presbytery of South Louisiana to develop curriculum on the implications of coastal wetlands loss for God’s creation and God’s community” (Item 11-03).

The role of the General Assembly Mission Council is changing in response to trends in mission engagement and funding throughout the denomination. The focus of the ministry is to inspire, equip and connect Presbyterians as they engage in ministry.

The GAMC is moving away from:

• creating offices at the denominational level to coordinate every area of specialized ministry, and
• producing its own resources where good resources exist from other sources.

This ministry focus for the GAMC is consistent with the available funding streams and the broad range of ministry support that Presbyterians expect.

We invite Presbyterians with a passion for specialized ministries to form ministry networks for collaboration and coordination. The PC(USA) Web site provides tools for these networks to form and for synergies to emerge. New features are being added to the Web site to improve that capability. These varied ministries are vital for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the GAMC will continue to seek ways to foster connections and collaboration to join in expanding partnership in God’s mission and to grow Christ’s church deep and wide.

[The assembly approved Item 11-04. See pp. 39, 41.]

Human Rights Update 2010—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) bring to the attention of the church significant trends and developments in human rights, particularly in the areas of trafficking, detention of immigrants, and the continuing problem of torture, by:

1. Directing the Stated Clerk to post on-line this “Human Rights Update 2010,” include it in the General Assembly social witness policy CD, and encourage its study and use in advocacy on matters of Christian ethical concern and General Assembly action;

2. Requesting that “Human Rights Day,” December 10, be included in the program calendar, liturgical resources, web-postings, and public witness activities of appropriate General Assembly Mission Council offices; and

3. Encouraging members, sessions, and other councils of the church to pray for all victims of human rights violations, and for those who persecute them, while also finding ways to act on behalf of those victims.

Rationale

I. Introduction

These recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

Presbyterian General Assemblies have spoken on aspects of human rights since before the passage of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights—which the churches helped bring into being—in 1948. The practice of receiving reports at each General Assembly goes back twenty-two years. As in past years, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy coordinates contributions from staff persons in other parts of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly, in this case the Fair Food campaign and the Immigration Office, with additional help from a theologian who is also an expert on the ethics of torture. We thus thank the Reverend Noelle Damico, Julia Thorne, Esq., and Professor George Hunsinger for their contributions. We then look at other developments for consideration by readers.

To speak directly to this third referral, in the case of this General Assembly, the most substantial discussion of Muslim, Jewish, and Christian interreligious incidents is in the historical perspective appendix to the Middle East report. They cite the U.S. State Department Religious Liberty report on Israel and the Occupied Territories, finding discrimination against both Muslims and Christians and neglect of their holy sites. The nature of church/state or religion/state issues differs, of course, in Muslim majority countries and Israel. The instances of torture discussed in the third section of this update largely include Muslim detainees, and certainly religiously linked extremism is affecting the conditions of Christian minorities in certain conflict areas. We expect to do more with this referral in the future.

In previous years, prior to the Internet posting of human rights violations, this update included surveys of human rights situations from each of the World Mission regional liaison offices. The Washington Office provided a brief survey of domestic U.S. criminal justice issues, such as prison overcrowding or needed rehabilitation. And a section from the United Nations Office contained information on significant new treaties or “conventions,” part of the continued construction of moral structures and expectations for the international social order. We continue that practice in the “For Future Consideration” section.

Because of the on-line availability of up-to-date information on human rights abuses, the advisory committee’s current approach to the Human Rights Update focuses on trends. In 2006, this was the acceptance of torture by the United States government, along with indefinite detention without due process and new forms of government surveillance. Five presbyteries also asked for action on this matter and called for an investigation by an independent counsel and possible prosecution by the Department of Justice. In 2008, the committee responded to a referral on human rights in the Philippines that also looked at the use of the “war on terror” as a justification for human rights violations. The General Assembly used part of that report to create an additional short resolution on human rights in Colombia, where similar dynamics are documented. In all such cases, we consulted with indigenous church partners. The Latin America regional office, the Peacemaking Program, and the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship have also continued to monitor the situation in Colombia, and both mission co-workers, volunteers, and notably the Reverend Larry Emery of Walnut Grove (Calif.) Presbyterian Church monitor the Philippine situation.

In the case of human trafficking, we would note that several representatives of the advisory committee visited five “rescue” and rehabilitation programs for women who had been victims of trafficking in Thailand. The concern for “sex tourism,” sometimes involving children, has been addressed by international organizing and then by international law, partly through the leadership of Presbyterian Women and other church groups starting in the 1970s. Representatives of the ACSWP, including a mission co-worker and one of the committee’s co-chairs, visited the Bangkok offices of World Vision, met with a researcher and consultant with the United Nations, and worshiped in a new church that includes many women free from involvement in prostitution (only some of whom were trafficked). As the reader may find, however, trafficking involves many other dimensions of coerced labor. The advisory committee has also met with human rights and immigration reform experts and activists at its regular meetings, but the anti-trafficking visits were part of the hands-on involvement of the committee in this calling to human liberation and justice.

As we turn to the specifics in the several trends that are the focus of this year’s report, we acknowledge that the scope of human rights is broad—as broad as what The Confession of 1967 calls “one universal [human] family” (The Book of Confessions, 9.44). Strong policy statements by the 1974 (UPC) and 1978 (PCUS) on human rights undergird our application of confessional commitments to respect human conscience and to prevent the violation of human personhood, created in the
II. Human Trafficking: A Human Rights Crisis

A. The Scope and Definition of Trafficking

From boys sold into the fishing industry on Lake Volta in Ghana, to girls trafficked into the brothels of Thailand, to domestic workers enslaved and tortured by a husband and wife in their Long Island home or farmworkers locked in a box truck, chained, beaten and forced to harvest tomatoes in Florida fields, slavery is alive and well in a new form in the twenty-first century. Poverty, gender discrimination, violence, and conflict create the breeding ground for this phenomenon, which is complex, global, vicious, and profitable.

Human trafficking is a form of modern-day slavery that victimizes vulnerable children, women, and men both in the United States and around the world. The International Labour Organization (ILO) estimates that 12.3 million people are being trafficked for forced labor, bonded labor, forced child labor, and sexual servitude at any given time, 56 percent of these are women and girls. The U.S. Department of State notes that other estimates range from 4 million to 27 million. It is estimated that 1.2 million children are trafficked within and across borders.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been urged by its General Assemblies to become informed about human trafficking, to advocate for the elimination of all forms of human trafficking, and to witness to the fullness of life that God desires for all people. The General Assembly Mission Council has convened a Human Trafficking Roundtable to assist the church in these efforts.

Human trafficking is the recruitment, harboring, transporting, providing, or obtaining, by any means, any person for forced labor, slavery, or servitude in any industry or site such as agriculture, construction, prostitution, manufacturing, begging, domestic service, or marriage. Recent trends have also shown persons trafficked for organs and body parts.

While much of the public focus on human trafficking has been on the trafficking of children and women for sexual purposes, the International Labour Organization (ILO) asserts that the majority of human trafficking in the world takes the form of forced labor. Forced labor or involuntary servitude affects men, women, and children alike. Of course many are often subjected to sexual exploitation as well. Forced labor can be far harder to identify than sex trafficking because it may not involve the same kinds of criminal networks but rather individuals in domestic work, smaller scale businesses like nail salons, or landscaping. Forced labor also happens at the base of corporate supply chains by employers in factories, mines, and fields. Further its products may be sitting right on our kitchen tables (tomatoes, coffee, fish, and chocolate) or imbedded in the wedding band or necklace we are wearing (gold).

The use of the legal term “human trafficking” can mislead the public into thinking that the phenomenon is principally about the transport of persons for profit. It is much more than that. It involves all aspects of this exploitative process from recruitment to forcing a person through violence or threat of violence to labor against their will. Also the media often wrongly equates human trafficking with smuggling, where a person consents to be moved across an international border. “The critical additional factor that distinguishes trafficking from migrant smuggling is the presence of force, coercion, and/or deception throughout or at some stage in the process—such deception, force, or coercion being used for the purpose of exploitation” explains the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

It is imperative to understand that trafficked persons can be citizens of their country as well as either authorized migrants or unauthorized migrants. Neither the country in which a person resides nor a person’s residential status are litmus tests for whether they are a trafficked person. The central component of human-trafficking is the total control exercised over all aspects of people’s lives, that is solidified through coercion, threat, and violence. The U.S. Department of State is clear, “Human trafficking is, in essence, a modern-day form of slavery.”

Modern-day slavery is neither an exaggeration nor a metaphor. It is, as the name suggests, a new form of slavery that involves the complete control of one person by another through the use of physical or psychological violence, hard labor for little or no pay, all for the purpose of profit for the slaveholder. Such servitude is illegal under U.S. and international law. Depending on the form of servitude, there are others who profit as well: corporations and employers who benefit from the artificially low cost of labor and consumers who have access to cheap goods.

Human trafficking is a grave violation of human rights, most obviously the right to liberty and not to be held in involuntary servitude. But trafficking is related to a range of violations of other human rights including the right to be free from cruel and inhumane treatment and the right to health. The violation of human rights is both a cause and a consequence of trafficking. The widespread lack of basic economic rights like the right to food, to housing, to sustainable-wage jobs, and the right to safe migration all foster an environment ripe for slavery. Women and children are particularly vulnerable because of the multiple violations of economic, civil, cultural, and social rights that they experience.
Furthermore the human rights of trafficked persons are often violated in the very acts of investigating, identifying, freeing, and assisting them and prosecuting their traffickers. Migrants are at particularly high risk of misidentification, inappropriate detention, lack of translation and legal services, and deportation even in nations, such as the U.S., that place a high priority on combating human trafficking. Women who have been trafficked into prostitution have been misidentified as prostitutes and released on bail back to their traffickers or imprisoned for the crime of prostitution without having access to necessary social or legal services they deserve as trafficking victims. Children trafficked for sexual purposes have too often been returned to a family member who may have been the very adult who sold them into sexual servitude.

1. Legal Standards

Human trafficking is a violation of the 13th Amendment of the Constitution. The U.S. Department of Justice Civil Rights Division has prosecuted cases in the U.S. either under laws forbidding peonage and indentured servitude passed just after the American Civil War during Reconstruction (18 U.S.C. Sections 1581-9) or under the 2000 Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act (TVPA), which was subsequently reauthorized in 2003, 2005, and 2008.\(^{12}\)

Human trafficking is also prohibited under international law. The Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime came into force on 25 December 2003. Referred to as the “Palermo Protocol,” it is the main legal and normative framework to combat human trafficking. As of September 2008, 119 nations have ratified the Palermo Protocol. Many, like the United States, have passed their own human trafficking/modern-day slavery laws. Numerous regions and subregions have also passed their own instruments. From South Asia to the African Union, Europe, and the Americas, specific regional initiatives strengthen and instantiate the principles imbedded in the Palermo Protocol.\(^{11}\)

Human trafficking is a twenty-first century human rights crisis requiring cooperation and collaboration among all sectors of our society—governments, judiciary, law enforcement, religious bodies, nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), corporations, and international organizations—if we are to successfully put an end to this brutal crime that violates human rights and devastates lives.

2. Who Are Trafficked Persons?

Trafficked persons may be women and men, children and adults, citizens and migrants; all are people whose human rights have been fundamentally violated.

Children are often trafficked for sexual purposes as well as for labor in domestic service, fishing, mining, agricultural work, child soldiering, and the drug trade. Both boys and girls are affected.\(^{14}\) One new area in which the trafficking and sexual exploitation of boys is occurring is in sports, reports Joy Ngozi Ezielo, the UN Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons. The UNICEF notes boys have been trafficked to labor as camel jockeys.\(^{15}\) Women and girls are trafficked into forced marriage, domestic service, the agricultural and mining industries, as well as forced prostitution and other forms of sexual exploitation. Ngozi adds that though little attention has been paid to men who are trafficked, that it is “becoming rampant,” particularly in the agricultural, mining, and fishing industries.\(^{16}\)

People can be trafficked within their country of origin, across national borders, or across multiple national borders until they reach their final destination. Citizens and both authorized and undocumented migrants, are trafficked both here in the U.S. and around the world.\(^{17}\) Some examples: Jamaican men brought to New Hampshire under the H2 guestworker program to cut trees were enslaved, Ugandan boys kidnapped by militia and forced to train as child soldiers and torture and kill others, children from Mali trafficked to work in gold mines in Cote D’Ivoire, young women abducted in Azerbaijan and forced into prostitution in Turkey, homeless African American men who are U.S. citizens trafficked within Florida and to North Carolina to harvest produce.

B. A Human-Rights Based Approach to Addressing Human Trafficking

Modern-day slavery is the extreme point on a continuum of the degradation of rights among groups of people or in the workplace itself. Jesus Christ came that we might have life and have it abundantly. Scripture witnesses to God’s intention that our world be characterized by shalom, the just, harmonious well-being of all. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has joined the United States and the United Nations in affirming that modern-day slavery is first and foremost a violation of human rights.

Adopting a human rights-based approach to addressing human trafficking means that upholding the human rights of trafficked persons is at the center of all our efforts. Therefore, any process of identifying or assisting trafficked persons that violates their human rights must be ceased or revised.

The human rights of trafficked persons can be violated during government interventions to stop trafficking. For example, many governments still prosecute trafficked people for crimes they were forced to commit while being trafficked, such as... prostitution or drug dealing. In other instances governments simply consider trafficked people criminals if they are undocumented and summarily deport them. Here in the U.S., federal law provides for T visas for trafficked noncitizens that allow them to remain in the U.S. (if they so choose) and U visas for noncitizens that have been forced to commit crimes. However to qualify for a T or U visa, trafficked persons must cooperate with law enforcement in the prosecution of their traffickers. The Special Rapporteur for Human Trafficking explains trafficked persons are not given sufficient time for reflection or counseling before they have to agree to cooperate. “It is very wrong to have this condition. Countries must avoid that.”

Some organizations advocate buying people out of slavery, which may sound good because it removes a person from a situation of enslavement. But the questions are: remove them how and to what? Buying people out of slavery does not ensure that trafficked persons will receive needed services, that their choices will be respected by those who have just bought them, or that slavers will be prosecuted. Further it perpetuates the slave economy; other vulnerable people will take the place of the person who is “rescued.”

Even in assisting trafficked persons after they’ve been freed, governments and NGOs must take great care not to again violate trafficked persons human rights. Persons who have been enslaved have been under extreme control of others. Yet trafficked persons are too often kept in jails and locked shelters under constant watch. Such conditions replicate conditions of slavery. If such immediate shelter is all that is available, trafficked persons must be moved as quickly as possible to other safe locations where they can exercise control over their “assistance” including their desire to leave if that should be the case.

C. Preventing Human Trafficking: Examples of Tourism with MRTI and Agriculture with Fair Food

Identifying trafficked persons, assisting them, and prosecuting their traffickers is really dealing with modern-day slavery after the fact; after lives have been devastated, rights have been violated, and profits have been made. While the church has an important role to play within a broader community-based response to help identify and assist trafficked persons, Holy Scripture testifies to God’s covenant vision of well-being for our world and the confessions of the PC(USA) demand that we also adopt human rights based efforts to eliminate the conditions in which slavery flourishes. Here are two ways that the PC(USA) General Assembly has been working to address the causes and demand for trafficked persons.

Along with ecumenical partners, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through its Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), has worked to promote corporate social responsibility in the travel and tourism industry. Hotel chains, airlines, and cruise lines are urged to adopt The Code (www.thecode.org) committing to develop a corporate policy against child sex trafficking, train their employees on how to recognize problematic situations and what to do, educate customers, and report on corporate performance.

In the United States, few companies have signed The Code (an exception is Carlson, a company that has been exemplary in promoting responsible tourism), but some have implemented aspects of it following dialogues with religious investors. Continental Airlines and U.S. Airways have adopted policy statements, and worked to educate their customers. The MRTI worked hard to get Hilton Hotels to respond to the issue without much success. The company declined to meet about the issue, but finally said it would include a reference to its opposition to child sex trafficking in its operations manual. Following the sale of Hilton to The Blackstone Group, no further communication was received. With ECPAT-USA (End Child Prostitution and Trafficking), MRTI will continue to promote The Code, and encourage consumers to patronize responsible tourism companies.

Since 2002 the PC(USA) has worked in partnership with the Coalition of Immokalee Workers (CIW) through the Campaign for Fair Food to address modern-day slavery in U.S. agriculture by insisting the major retail food corporations work with the community-based farmworker organization to establish codes of conduct with a zero-tolerance policy for modern-day slavery in their suppliers’ fields. When a case of slavery occurred and was successfully prosecuted in November 2008, six corporations either cut or suspended their purchasing from the two growers in whose fields enslaved farmworkers harvested. This is the first time the U.S. agricultural industry has faced market consequences for turning a blind eye to human trafficking.

In addition to addressing particular cases, the Fair Food Codes of Conduct also require retail food corporations to pay an increase per pound of tomatoes purchased, directly to farmworkers to improve their wages. This is to correct the downward pressure the companies’ high-volume/low-cost purchasing contracts have had on workers’ wage—they’ve been stagnant for thirty years. Consumer action together with farmworkers has ensured that farmworkers themselves are establishing and ensuring their own human rights together with other necessary partners in the food industry.

D. The Complexity of Addressing Human Trafficking: Testing the Helpers, Too

Human trafficking is a highly complex phenomenon demanding rigor and care from the church as it endeavors to understand its dimensions, assist trafficked persons, and eliminate the conditions that produce it. For the purposes of this report, many aspects of human trafficking have necessarily received abbreviated treatment and some are not discussed at all. But here is a glimpse of the complexity involved in identifying and assisting persons who have been trafficked as well as working to end modern-day slavery.

Pastors are often on the front lines of meeting trafficked persons; one place traffickers will bring their slaves is to church. Most pastors aren’t looking for trafficked persons, and few know the signs for which to look. Traditional pastoral care approaches coupled with the desire to help can endanger the trafficked person and complicate possibilities for assisting them and prosecuting of their traffickers. This is why the General Assembly is partnering with presbyteries to sponsor Human Trafficking Awareness training events where clergy and other religious leaders are trained together with professionals from the U.S. Department of Justice, U.S. Department of Labor, law enforcement, FBI, social services, medical professionals, and others to promote a collaborative, effective response.

A further example, some organizations unhelpfully conflate adult prostitution with human trafficking. But it is imperative to distinguish between adult prostitution and adults who are trafficked into prostitution if we are to be effective in identifying and assisting victims here in the U.S. and around the world. While all child prostitution is human trafficking, all adult prostitution is not human trafficking. For various reasons some women (and men) want to remain in prostitution and some trafficked persons once coerced into that trade may return to prostitution after being rescued. Sex workers have been instrumental in leading investigators to women, children, and men who have been trafficked into prostitution.

A final consideration; with the rise of public awareness around human trafficking, many NGOs have sprung up making many different sorts of claims about how to end human trafficking and offering projects and advocacy to assist people who have been trafficked. We urge individuals and congregations to carefully assess groups, their claims and their work. A central question must always be, do these efforts put the human-rights of trafficked persons first and foremost? For example, there are dizzying array of charities that offer jobs to people who have been trafficked. While employment is needed by people who have been trafficked, it is important to ask if trafficked persons are paid a living wage for their labor (according to the country), if they are able to leave this place of employment if they desire, if they have to pay for their housing, whether a reliable party other than the employer guarantees the fair and safe treatment of workers among other questions. Many NGOs are trying hard with little resources to make a difference, but we must make sure that at base, the partners with whom we choose to work put the human rights of trafficked persons first. The General Assembly Roundtable on Human Trafficking is preparing materials to assist congregations in discerning with whom and how to partner.

E. Conclusion

The PC(USA) congregations, presbyteries, organizations, mission partners, and the General Assembly have been actively seeking a greater understanding of human trafficking, its causes, and how we can best work to ensure the human rights of trafficked persons. Simultaneously our global society is endeavoring to better identify, address, and prevent human trafficking. As the church, may we continue to witness to the creation of humanity in God’s image by upholding human rights and ending human trafficking. III. Immigrant Detention and Human Rights

A. Overview

Responding to the request of the 218th General Assembly (2008) cited in I. Introduction, this survey supplements the most recent Presbyterian immigration policy approved in 2004, the Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the U.S.A., particular presenting concern was the break-up of families and in some cases the detention of minor children in the detention system. After noting late nineteenth and early twentieth century immigration detention history, this report focuses on the period after 1980 and particularly the period since 1996, and then describes the human rights issues present in this large-scale detention and deportation bureaucracy. The workings of the detention system are outlined, as are the related processes and costs of this enforcement, including local law-enforcement and short-term detention. The role of for-profit prisons is also noted, as this is a concern of the assembly’s 2003 Resolution on the Abolition of For-Profit Private Prisons. In terms of context, the economic downturn has reportedly led to a decline in the numbers of undocumented immigrants but the new administration has also begun a reform process and indicated plans to return to immigration reform efforts in the coming year.

B. Historical Background and the Rapidly-Expanding Detention System

The detention of immigrants pending the resolution of their legal status and potential deportation was not always the norm. Immigrants were not detained at all until the 1890s when the United States opened its first federal immigration detention center in Ellis Island, New York. A shift in immigration policy occurred in 1952 when Congress passed the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA), which eliminated detention except in cases in which an individual was a flight risk or posed a serious risk to society. Ellis Island subsequently closed.
While the U.S. government suspended the widespread use of immigration detention between the 1950s and 1980s, the country has a long history of immigration restrictions and quotas that spans the detention and exile of Native Americans since colonial times to detentions at Ellis and Angel Islands in New York and California in the early twentieth century. Health concerns were very real, as were concerns for various classes of immigrant (more well-to-do immigrants did not go through Ellis Island).

The 1980s saw the beginnings of a shift in detention policy, largely influenced by Cuban, Haitian, and Central American refugees. The Presbyterian church and others, concerned that many Central Americans were fleeing massive human rights violations in their countries that were unrecognized by the U.S. immigration process of that time, supported a “Sanctuary Movement” that protected those fleeing repression in churches. Churches have also supported fairness in the treatment of Haitian would-be immigrants, whose welcome is very different than that of Cubans.

In the 1990s, the United States made a monumental shift in immigration policy, using detention as a primary means of enforcing immigration law, regardless of whether or not the individual was a flight risk or serious risk to society. In 1996, the United States enacted legislation that dramatically expanded the use of detention. The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act (AEDPA) and the Illegal Immigrant Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act (IIRIRA) expanded mandatory detention without bond to large categories of noncitizens, including those convicted of crimes, including misdemeanors, and all applicants for asylum. These immigrants are not entitled to a bond hearing (as criminal defendants are) to determine whether they are actual flight risks.

The drastic expansion of mandatory detention has resulted in the rapidly increasing number of individuals detained since the 1990s. In 2001, the U.S. detained approximately 95,000 individuals. By 2009, the Department of Homeland Security is estimated to have detained 369,483. The average daily population of detained immigrants has grown from approximately 5,000 in 1994, to 19,000 in 2001, and to 32,000 by the end of 2008. In 2004, Congress authorized the creation of 40,000 new detention beds by 2010, which will bring detention capacity close to 62,000.

The 1996 laws also established a new procedure called Expedited Removal that allows immigration inspectors to summarily remove immigrants arriving at a U.S. border or airport without proper documentation. This is done without a hearing, and detention is mandated for the time it takes to remove that person from the United States. The U.S. government maintains that detention is the only way to ensure that immigrants appear for their immigration court proceedings. The government considers immigrants to be “flight risk,” and labels others a “danger” to their communities if they have previous criminal records, without any individualized assessment.

C. Detention Is a Human Rights Issue

International law prohibits arbitrary detention. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), art. 9, requires that anyone who is deprived of liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings before a court, in order that the court may decide without delay on the lawfulness of the detention and order release if the detention is not lawful. This right is guaranteed regardless of national origin. International law also requires that anyone deprived of liberty must be treated with humanity and respect for the inherent dignity of the person (ICCPR, art. 10.).

Detention places extreme financial and emotional burdens on families by separating children, parents, siblings, and spouses from one another. As many as a fifth of American families are of “mixed” status with U.S. citizens, legal permanent residents, and undocumented family members in one household. When someone is detained it impacts families and local communities—children become parentless and families lose their breadwinners. International law requires that the United States protect the family as the natural and fundamental group unit of society (ICCPR, art. 23.).

Being in violation of immigration laws is not a crime. It is a civil violation for which immigrants go through a process to see whether they have a right to stay in the United States. Immigrants detained during this process are in noncriminal custody. The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) is the agency responsible for detaining immigrants through its subagency for Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). Yet the obstacles for immigrants seeking a fair process are daunting.

Detention and deportation are themselves extreme and punitive measures for individuals going through a civil administrative process. The very act of detention attaches the stigma of criminalization to immigrants and enmeshes them in the U.S. criminal justice system. Immigration detention facilities look, feel, and operate like jails—which many are. The human rights abuses that sometimes occur in these environments, such as a lack of access to proper nutrition and exercise, medical care, legal and educational materials, phones, and visitation, are exacerbated in cases where immigration detainees are held for long periods of time in facilities designed for short-term detention. Reports of physical and sexual abuse, sleep deprivation, and isolation are common.

The detention system is virtually invisible. Many detention centers have few markings and are in remote and isolated locations. As a result, the public is generally unaware of the high numbers of immigrants that are detained across the nation and in their local communities. The detention system is vast, ever-changing, and shrouded in secrecy. The ICE frequently refuses to share information or allow visits to facilities, resulting in the public having little knowledge of harsh conditions and rights abuses within the system while U.S. immigration agencies remain unaccountable.\textsuperscript{27}

Just as incarceration in our jails and prisons is thought to influence criminal behavior, detention is used to deter immigrants from coming to the United States. United States policymakers have seen detention and deportation as a politically acceptable “quick fix” to broken immigration policies and to the complex issues of global and regional poverty and instability. Instead of recognizing and addressing larger economic and political structures that cause people to migrate, politicians focus on interior and border enforcement as a way to repel people from migrating.\textsuperscript{28}

The reputation of the detention and deportation system prompts many immigrants in the U.S. to go into hiding and live in fear. Undocumented persons—as many as twelve million is the common estimate—often do not seek help in emergencies or report crimes for fear of exposing themselves to immigration authorities, making communities more unsafe. Those escaping persecution in their home countries may also be deterred from applying for asylum, putting them at grave risk.

D. The U. S. Detention System

Immigrants in detention include families, both undocumented and documented immigrants, many who have been in the U.S. for years and are now facing exile, survivors of torture, asylum seekers, and other vulnerable groups including pregnant women, the elderly, children, and individuals who are seriously ill without proper medication or care.\textsuperscript{29}

Although DHS owns and operates its own detention centers, it also “buys” bed space from more than 312 county and city prisons nationwide to hold the majority of those who are detained (more than 67 percent). Immigrants detained in these local jails are mixed in with the local prison population, sometimes in considerable danger. Well under half of all immigrants held in detention have no criminal record at all. The rest may have committed some crime in their past, but they have already paid their debt to society. They are being detained for immigration purposes only.\textsuperscript{30} Torture survivors, applicants for asylum, victims of human trafficking, and other vulnerable groups can be detained for months or even years, further aggravating their isolation, depression, and other mental health problems associated with their past trauma.\textsuperscript{31}

E. Immigration Customs and Enforcement

1. ICE Enforcement—An Overview of Current Structure and Operations

Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) is part of The Department of Homeland Security. It is the second largest law-enforcement agency in the country with vast resources and infrastructure, including as many guns as the FBI. The ICE is in charge of the investigations, arrests, detention, and deportation of noncitizens both at the border and throughout the interior of the country. Because immigration policies already enmeshed people in the criminal justice system, and the 1996 immigration laws already involved concern for terrorism (from the first World Trade Center bombing, Oklahoma Federal Building, etc.), the concern that detention and deportation would be considered part of the “war on terror” was heightened by the amalgamation of federal agencies.

- March 2003—Department of Homeland Security Act: This act dismantled the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) and transferred its responsibilities to a Department of Homeland Security (DHS), with three bureaus: Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP), and Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS).
- March 2004—Operation Endgame: This strategic plan from DHS’s Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) set out a ten-year goal to “remove all removable aliens” from the United States.
- August 2006—DHS Secretary Michael Chertoff announced the replacement of ICE’s practice of “catch and release,” in which non-Mexican immigrants who were apprehended along the border were eligible to be released on bond, with a policy of mandatory detention for anyone apprehended within one hundred miles of the border within fourteen days of entry into the U.S. This policy shift greatly added to the accelerating use of detention.\textsuperscript{32}

2. The Impact of Enforcement

The recent impact of ICE enforcement includes:

- The average length of detention is currently 30.49 days.
- More than 349,000 immigrants were deported in 2008, a record for the agency and a 20 percent increase over the previous year.
- The DHS has spent more than $2.8 billion on efforts to deport immigrants since the creation of ICE in 2003.
In total, 2.2 million immigrants have been deported since 1994.

- A twelve-fold increase in worksite arrests between 2002 and 2008. A trend was to use “identify theft” charges to put immigrants in the category of “criminal alien” to make it easier to deport them.

- More than 100 “Fugitive Operations Teams” and the development of other specialized operations. The ICE claims these are focused on specific groups but they are often used as a pretext for wide-scale arrests in apartment complexes, workplaces, and public spaces.

- 67 percent of ICE detainees are housed in local and county jail facilities, 17 percent in contract detention facilities, 13 percent in ICE-owned facilities, and 3 percent in other facilities such as those run by the Bureau of Prisons.

- The government holds more detainees a night than Clarion Hotels have guests, operates nearly as many vehicles as Greyhound has buses and flies more people each day than do many small U.S. airlines.53

3. Transfer of Detainees

The DHS’s practice of regularly transferring immigration detainees from one jail to another, often far from where they were initially arrested, have a devastating effect on a person’s ability to retain counsel and maintain an attorney-client relationship, present a defense to deportation, and obtain release from detention. Recently revealed statistics show that more than half of all people detained by DHS are transferred from one detention center or jail to another. In 2008, one out of every four detainees was transferred multiple times. Ten years ago the government transferred only one in every five detainees.34

Although the government does not appoint a lawyer for people facing removal proceedings, some people are able to retain their own lawyer. When they are transferred to a jail hundreds or thousands of miles away, attorney-client communication and adequate case preparation are severely compromised. Typically, there is no advance notice that the person is being moved, and after the transfer, lawyers often are unable to locate their clients. Moreover, even if a lawyer is willing and able to maintain long-distance representation, the immigration courts often are not accommodating. Some immigration judges preclude lawyers from appearing by phone or video, and many detainees simply cannot afford to pay for their attorney to travel to the new location. For individuals who are unrepresented, transfers hinder their ability to retain a lawyer. Not only are they far from families and friends who could have assisted these efforts, but there are far fewer lawyers and pro bono resources in many of the remote locations where DHS transfers detainees.

4. Costs of Enforcement

In 1996, before enactment of mandatory detention laws, the budget of the entire Immigration and Naturalization Service was $2.6 billion. This included not only the functions now carried out by Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), but also the immigration services sector (now DHS’s Citizenship and Immigration Services), and border enforcement (now DHS’s Customs and Border Protection), which at that time fell under the INS umbrella.

In 2009, the United States is expected to have spent nearly $6 billion on ICE operations alone. Government funding for ICE continues to increase almost exponentially. The total budget for ICE in the 2008 fiscal year is $5.58 billion and $5.93 billion for 2009. The average cost of detaining an immigrant is $95 per person/per day. Alternatives to detention, which generally include a combination of reporting and electronic monitoring, are effective and significantly cheaper, with some programs costing as little as $12 per day. These alternatives to detention still yield an estimated 93 percent appearance rate before the immigration courts.35

5. Local Law Enforcement Collaboration with ICE

The ICE embarked on a trend of collaborating with local law enforcement through its ICE Agreements of Cooperation in Communities to Enhance Safety and Security (ACCESS) program. Authorized through INA, Section 287(g) allows local law enforcement to arrest and detain anyone suspected of violating federal immigration laws. The DHS has also expanded a program called Secure Communities, started by the Bush administration, which requires local police to check the immigration status of everyone booked into a local jail, matching fingerprints to other data.36 Undocumented immigrants can eventually be deported, regardless of whether they are convicted on criminal charges. Those convicted are deported after serving their sentences. The DHS, which recently received $200 million to expand Secure Communities, has estimated that “tens of thousands” more immigrants will be deported under the Secure Communities program next year.27

In addition to the ACCESS program, a recent proliferation of state and local laws barring undocumented immigrants from working, obtaining housing, or using public benefits has created a disturbing intrusion into what has historically been a federal responsibility and has created widespread fear and disruption in communities. On the enforcement side, local agencies often do not have the resources to exercise this dual unfunded mandate and find that it suppresses crime reporting by immigrants as well as alerts to emergency situations. It can also further politicize local immigration debates.
F. Related Issues: Border Enforcement, Short-Term Detention, and Community Impacts

1. Border Enforcement

Since 1994, the U.S. government has spent an estimated $35 billion to “secure” the U.S.-Mexico border. From 1993 to 2008, the number of Border Patrol agents has exploded from approximately 4,000 to 18,049 and the amount of spending on border enforcement has increased tenfold from $1 to $10.2 billion per year. The U.S. Border Patrol’s annual budget for 2009 has risen to $2.7 billion from $326 million in 1992. United States Customs and Border Protection (CBP) is now the largest arms-bearing branch of the U.S. government, excluding the military. Militarization of the U.S. border continues to accelerate. Instead of providing effective measures to ensure safety, recent enforcement trends utilized by CBP tend to further the linkage between immigration enforcement and human rights abuses. 38

Despite exponential increases in enforcement spending and the number of border agents in recent years, there is no evidence that increased CBP funding has limited the number of unauthorized migrants entering the U.S. According to new data from the Center for American Progress, a think-tank, the cost of apprehending immigrants is rising. In fact, the number of migrants crossing the border has more than doubled since 1993, from 400,000 a year to almost one million..Apprehensions have not increased, either. There were 1,031,668 border apprehensions in 1993, 931,557 in 2003, and 1,020,438 in 2008 at a cost of just over $3,000 for each arrest. 39

Building fences along the border merely channels migration to other places, usually more remote and dangerous terrain, and results in increased deaths and cases of human smuggling. For example, after triple-fencing was constructed in San Diego, arrests of undocumented immigrants there dropped 300 percent between 1994–2002, but arrests in the Tucson, Arizona, sector increased 342 percent during this same period. Some have claimed victory for reducing unlawful immigration in San Diego when, in reality, it appears to have moved elsewhere. Between 1994 and 2006, more than 4,000 people have died trying to cross the U.S. border. This is fifteen times more lives than the Berlin Wall claimed in its twenty-eight years of existence.

2. Short-Term Detention, Dangers of Abuse

Border militarization hurts the 11.8 million people living along the border. Border communities experience what some report as systematic harassment, racial profiling, and human and civil rights violations by CBP agents and armed civilian vigilante groups that were alleged to operate with impunity. Individuals held in short-term custody (under seventy-two hours) by CBP for immediate deportation are most vulnerable to harsh conditions, forced exercise, and abuse, without safeguards assuring them food, water, or basic medical care during their detention. 40

3. Community Impacts

As this study approaches its close, the testimony of church groups and others speaks to needed shifts in emphasis. Communities are more secure when border enforcement policies focus on criminal activities going in both directions. Community security is an integral part of national and border security, but this would put the emphasis on dangerous criminals, traffickers, and exploiters rather than immigrants per se. Communities themselves could benefit from greater involvement and oversight of border enforcement activity and encourage improved human rights training of officers, strengthened complaint procedures, and measures to end racial profiling in the borderlands.

Communities are literally divided by the devastating impact of the border wall. The construction of the border wall has overwhelming social, environmental, and legal impacts. Just from a cost-effectiveness standpoint, the current border wall and fencing projects have not proven successful in stopping immigration flows, while construction costs have nearly doubled from $4.5 million per mile to $7.5 million per mile. 41

4. Economic Interests and Detention Policies

The detention and deportation of immigrants is a multibillion dollar industry. Many private prison corporations and state and county governments profit from detention. By contracting out detention bed space, the government maintains it is able to save money. However, the regular reports of poor detention conditions and other abuses indicate that facility operators may be cutting financial corners at the expense of immigrants’ well-being. These are concerns identified in the General Assembly’s recent policy statement, Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Prisons (2003).

Of the approximately 400 facilities used by the Department of Homeland Security to detain immigrants, only eight of these are ICE-owned and operated. In addition, as noted, ICE contracts with more than 300 local or county facilities through intergovernmental agreements, private prison corporations, and the Federal Bureau of Prisons. Two examples: The Corrections Corporation of America (CCA) is number one in America for detention contracts, and has made record profits every year since 2003. The CCA boasts being the sixth largest corrections system in the U.S., behind only four states and the federal government. The CCA operates sixty-five facilities in nineteen states and the District of Columbia with more than 75,000 beds and nearly 17,000 employees. Twelve of CCA’s facilities are used to hold immigration detainees. In 2007, CCA earned $1.5 billion in revenue with a net income of $133 million.\(^\text{42}\) Then comes GEO Group, one of the largest security firms in the world and the nation’s second largest for-profit prison operator. The GEO operates fifty facilities in sixteen states and one in Guantanamo Bay. In 2007, GEO Group earned $1.02 billion in U.S. revenue with a net income of $41.8 million.\(^\text{43}\)

Similarly, border security has historically been considered the sole responsibility of the federal government. But as part of the government’s “Secure Border Initiative,” it awarded The Boeing Company a $2.5 billion contract in 2006 to build a new security system along the U.S.-Mexico border. Boeing’s contract bid included plans to build 1,800 towers along the northern and southern borders equipped with radar, cameras, and infrared sensors to detect border crossings at night. The privatization of border security operations provides incentives for the continued build-up of securitization.

The delegation of the federal task of detention to private and local facilities has its origins in the 1980s during a time of accelerated privatization in all sectors. The government’s contracting out of detention management is rationalized as more efficient and cost-effective. However, detention and deportation have numerous human costs:

- Detention contracting creates an additional layer of opaqueness in an already complex and impenetrable detention system, making oversight of detention standards and securing of detainee rights even more difficult.
- Private companies and local governments vie for contracts to expand ICE detention bed space at an average price of $95 a day per bed in a process that both lines corporate pockets with taxpayer money and turns human beings into commodities.
- Detention contracting allows both the federal government and contract facilities to cut financial corners in providing immigrants with adequate care and basic necessities, resulting in regular reports of egregious detention conditions that violate U.S. and international human rights laws.

5. Conclusion: The Need for Reform of Detention Practices

Reform of the detention and deportation systems are clearly related to the larger need for immigration reform. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has joined many others in supporting proposals to give immigrants a fair path to citizenship and has recognized the social costs, including the costs in depressed wage levels and exploitation of vulnerable workers. The church has also recognized a legitimate need for security focused on areas of real risk. The Office of Immigration Issues, located in the Office of the General Assembly, provides resources for congregations and individuals, working closely with immigrant fellowships and justice organizations, as well as advising presbyteries and the church’s Washington Office.\(^\text{44}\)

Yet it is important to recognize that some changes are being made and that there is hope of more. Speaking at the Migration Policy Institute on January 25, 2010, John Morton, assistant secretary of Homeland Security for Immigration and Customs Enforcement, noted the creation of a new Office of Detention Policy and Planning, discussed the investigation and prevention of death and abuse in federal custody, and outlined several reforms:

- An effort to centralize immigration detention facilities in specific hubs where access to legal counsel, families, and medical treatment would be plentiful. In addition, these facilities would be managed at the top by federal employees subject to clear, transparent, and fully implemented detention standards.
- Medical treatment will be helped along by a planned classification system that all detainees would go through upon intake, as well as “regional case managers” who will be responsible for serious medical issues in detention.
- Reducing the number of detention facilities. The ICE detains 32,000 people per day and around 380,000 per year. Morton stressed the importance of keeping the system compact and organized
- An online detainee locator system, which is expected to be launched in June. Morton also mentioned reducing dependence on contractors, but was quick to say that they would never completely eliminate contractors.
- The ICE’s preference to detain only criminal immigrants. A desire for smart, cost-effective alternatives to detention in order to ensure court appearances for noncriminal immigrants who pose a flight risk. Morton revealed that the Executive Office for Immigration Review is conducting a pilot program for alternatives to detention, and that after testing is complete there could be 16,000–17,000 slots available for immigrants to be placed in these programs.\(^\text{45}\)

It will be important for the church and other stakeholders to continue to review progress and to defend the rights of asylum seekers and other immigrants, despite even good promises of assistant secretaries to good Washington think tanks. In all the complexity of international migration and economic inequality, we welcome the stranger because we may see in him or her, not a danger, but a fellow agent of God’s redeeming grace.
IV. Torture and the Need for Truth

A. Overview

Valuing human rights means opposing torture. This brief report focuses on an ugly piece of unfinished business that remains before our nation and other nations, the task of seeing that this violation of the person is effectively abolished. We review the action against torture taken by the 217th General Assembly (2006), which was in two parts, and which includes the following:

1. That an independent inquiry be conducted into whether any official or officer of the United States government bears direct or command responsibility for having ordered or participated in violations of ... law in the mistreatment of persons detained by the ... United States at Guantanamo Bay, Abu Ghraib Prison, or elsewhere, or in transporting persons into detention in nations with known records of brutality and torture, and that the findings of such inquiry be entered into the public record.

2. That violations of law in the mistreatment of persons detained by the government of the United States or transported by it [into] detention in nations with known records of brutality and torture cease, and be prosecuted and punished regardless of the rank and station of the offender.

The two requests above have not been fulfilled, and although an investigator was appointed by a new administration’s attorney general, neither a special prosecutor nor a commission of inquiry has been authorized at the level necessary to pursue the truth, much less prosecute more than the few low-level soldiers who were caught on film. And without justice and real disclosure, there can be no restitution or compensation for the innocent or resolution for their families far away. The chief facility for indefinite detention without trial, Guantanamo Bay prison, has not been closed despite a very public promise by a new president. It’s very “extraterritorial” location was intentionally extra-constitutional; undoing the damage in a credible way involves the Department of Justice, the U.S. military, the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), Congressional oversight committees, special intelligence courts, concern for national and international prosecution, decisions between civilian and military “tribunals.” Thus, this section of the Human Rights Update is a summary of some of the developments that have come to light, and a sharpening of the many questions that remain unanswered.

As the 217th General Assembly (2006)’s Resolution Against Torture states: “... the purpose of torture is not actually to extract intelligence but to break the sense of self; it is a form of intimate, humiliating terror, a crime against the human spirit and God’s image in us. Neither does such torture prevent terrorism ...” Yet we know that our nation’s agents engaged in torture since early in 2002 through sometime in 2005—or do we still torture people, or have them tortured for us overseas? One prisoner in Guantanamo, previously held in a secret prison or “black site,” Khalid Sheikh Muhammad, was waterboarded 183 times, and allegedly provided information of value sometime in that process. Perhaps the most decisive action that the Obama Administration has made was to release four memoranda written by the Justice Department’s Office of Legal Counsel in 2002 and 2005 to immunize the CIA and its contractors. These memos detail specific techniques for which permission is given by the lawyers Jay S. Bybee, John Yoo, and Steven G. Bradbury, whose actions have been critically evaluated by the Office of Professional Responsibility though without prosecution.

Since the 2006 statement of the General Assembly, there have been a number of books published, much data retrieved, and key testimony given in several venues both nationally and internationally. The difficulties in assessing the “facts” may be seen in one investigation based on some 1,700 pages of documents from a report by the U.S. Naval Criminal Investigative Service, obtained by Seton Hall University researchers under the Freedom of Information Act. This is the case of three alleged suicides that occurred in the same night, June 9, 2006, which were referred to by the commander of Guantanamo, Rear Admiral Harry Harris, as “asymmetrical warfare waged against us,” presumably to de-legitimate the facility. While much of the documents remains “blackened out,” the official reconstruction of events that would allow three tightly supervised men time and concealment to tie themselves up as well as rig nooses through mesh cell fronts has been challenged by four members of the Military Intelligence unit who were on guard that night. “All four soldiers say they were ordered by their commanding officer not to speak out, and all four soldiers provide evidence that the authorities initiated a cover-up within hours of the prisoners’ deaths.” Clearly, these are claims that can only be properly considered in a court of law, but one of the questions is precisely what kind of court, and where? Rules of court procedure, evidence, access to lawyers, and chain of command are very different in the military tribunals from civilian courts, as has been seen in the resignations of military prosecutors and volunteer defense lawyers working with Guantanamo detainees.

National security and the dangers of terrorism are the chief justifications for torture, and public opinion polls show considerable support for torture, even among church members. There is a 20 percent point difference, however, between “mainline” and self-described “evangelical” Protestants in the acceptance of torture, with 53 percent of mainline Protestants generally opposing it while only 33 percent of evangelicals do. There is no specific claim here for the influence of public statements of church leaders like the Stated Clerk, organizations like No2Torture and the National Religious Campaign Against Torture (NRCAT), and even policies like the 2006 statement quoted above, which came from an overture from five presbyteries. Yet the significance of theological position and frequency of church attendance are relevant factors as people assess the arguments for and against this practice.
In terms of update, given the 217th General Assembly (2006)’s clear position in favor of investigation and accountability, it is significant that on June 11, 2010, eight heads of faith groups and other religious institutions will join with the NRCA to calling for a Commission of Inquiry on Torture. A clear set of questions on this comes from George Hunsinger, professor of Theology at Princeton Seminary and founder of the National Religious Campaign Against Torture.

B. Torture: A Compelling Need for the Truth

Here are some of the questions that a commission needs to pursue.

1. Who authorized the torture program? When? Were the first Justice Department Office of Legal Counsel opinions authorizing it actually written after the fact? A complete timeline of the official documents authorizing torture needs to be established. Once the torture program was in operation, was the flow of information and decision-making about how it was going? Did information and decisions go all the way up to the Oval Office—or the vice president’s office—and back down again? Furthermore, how many personnel implicated in the torture program still hold positions, sometimes in very high places, in the government? What does their presence say about our ability to flush torture out of our system?

2. Who were the prisoners? Col. Lawrence Wilkerson, former chief of staff in the State Department under Colin Powell, has claimed that “no meaningful attempt” was made to vet the detainees. He added that “the U.S. leadership became aware of this lack of proper vetting very early on and, thus, of the reality that many of the detainees were innocent of any substantial wrongdoing, had little intelligence value, and should be immediately released.” The U.S. military reported in 2008 that 2,500 youths under the age of eighteen had been detained, almost all in Iraq, for periods up to a year since 2002. Was their treatment in accord with the Geneva Conventions and the Convention on the Rights of a Child? Was rape ever documented during interrogation, authorized or not? How many female detainees were killed in detention (many are listed as having “died”)? What exactly was done to women and children by U.S. interrogators at Abu Ghraib?

At one point there were believed to be more than one hundred prisoners at black sites. By the time President Bush announced that the high-value detainees were being moved to Guantanamo, there were believed to be thirty-four. Fourteen were moved to Guantanamo. What happened to the rest? Did any of them die?

3. What happened to the on-site torturers employed by the U.S.? From past experience it is known that many become an ongoing threat to society, and that, among other things, they all need as much healing as the victims. According to researchers Fred Grunfeld and Alette Smeulers, “Some continue to deny or minimize their roles. Others feel guilt, shame, remorse, some suffer nightmares, depression or post traumatic stress disorder. Others can't live with the reality of what they have done.” Others will commit suicide. Some will find new avenues to continue in their ways.

4. What use has been made of the information taken in torture? It is illegal to use information derived from torture in a judicial proceeding. On what authority was it used? How many prisoners have been detained or convicted based on information derived from torture by the U.S. or any collaborating government? Are the highly publicized but authoritatively challenged allegations true that terrorist plots were divulged and prevented because of torture?

5. What are the loopholes that need to be closed so that the U.S. never resorts to torture again? The history of U.S. involvement in torture is the history of loopholes. How do we rid our system of the torturebacillus lurking in the shadows of our permanent government? How do we get rid of the loopholes inserted into the Army Field Manual (especially Appendix M) and in the Military Commissions Act? What are the funding lines, overt and hidden, in the national budget that continue to make torture possible? How can we cut them off?

6. What kind of example have we set? What are the costs of allowing torture regimes all over the world to legitimate themselves by our example? Consider Thailand. According to Journalist Shawn W. Crispin, “Rights advocates monitoring southern Thailand’s conflict note a striking similarity between the torture techniques U.S. agents are known to have used … with those now in practice by Thai security forces against suspected Thai Muslim militants.” An increasing number of brutal regimes, including China, have defended their use of torture by citing the U.S. example.

7. What compensation should be provided to the torture victims? It seems clear that many of them were guilty of no crime. Isn’t an official apology and significant monetary compensation the least that could be done for all who were tortured, especially those known to be innocent, and who will suffer untold trauma for the rest of their lives? Monetary compensation, apologies, explanations of why they were tortured, and details of what was done—all these allow the voices of the victims to be heard and provide hope for their treatment and rehabilitation.

In the aftermath of resorting to torture, America is faced with a compelling need for the truth. An increasing number of religious, political, and military leaders agree that a commission of inquiry is indispensable to ensure that this wrongdoing is never sanctioned again. As General Ricardo Sanchez, the former top coalition commander in Iraq, has stated: “If we do not find out what happened, we are doomed to repeat it.”
The conclusion from another statement by Hunsinger may properly close this section. After recalling the Pew Research data cited above, noting where it calculates higher acceptance of torture by those who attend church more regularly of whatever designation, he tells a brief story: In 1948, in the immediate aftermath of the crisis years in Europe, Albert Camus, the French existentialist philosopher, was invited to speak at a Dominican monastery. The friars wanted him to address them about how an “unbeliever” viewed Christians in the light of the era that had just passed.

What the world needs today, Camus told them, are “Christians who remain Christians.” He continued, describing his own loss of faith for moral reasons. Camus then issued an unforgettable appeal:

What the world expects of Christians is that Christians should speak out, loud and clear, and that they should voice their condemnation in such a way that never a doubt, never the slightest doubt, could rise in the heart of the simplest man. That they should get away from abstraction and confront the blood-stained face history has taken on today.

What Camus voiced more than sixty years ago has lost none of its urgency today. The crisis of our national descent into torture is, for our churches, supremely a crisis of faith. If Camus was right about what the world expects of Christians, then how much more must be expected of them, and not just by the world, today?61

V. Conclusion: For Future Consideration

The recommendation of an impartial “Truth Commission” to bring clarity, accountability, and potential compensation to the victims of torture is one of a number of actions that would help the United States regain its place of leadership in human rights. Cooperation with the International Criminal Court (to which the U.S. now sends observers), steady work to improve the still new UN Human Rights Council (since June 2007, replacing a more-compromised body), quiet and public diplomacy to challenge dictatorial regimes, alternatives to the “militarization” of foreign policy: these are areas where Kenneth Roth, executive director of Human Rights Watch, has identified mixed progress by the Obama Administration.62 Roth notes with disappointment “Washington’s strong criticism” of the report by South African jurist Richard Goldstone “that accused Israel (as well as Hamas) of war crimes during its December 2008–January 2009 invasion of the Gaza Strip and called for the perpetrators to be brought to justice.”63

Roth notes two treaties supported by past General Assemblies that have not yet been put before Congress for ratification: the Convention on All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (only U.S., Iran, Somalia, Sudan, Tonga, and Nauru have not joined), the Convention on the Rights of the Child (only U.S. and Somalia), as well as the 1997 treaty banning antipersonnel land mines and the 2008 Convention on Cluster Munitions.64 This is the area where human rights can reshape foreign policy and the standing of the United States in the world. In the words of the Social Creed approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supports “Peacemaking through multilateral diplomacy rather than unilateral force, the abolition of torture, and a strengthening of the United Nations and the rule of international law.”65

The role of the church at every level is to be at least part of the conscience of society. The basis for our daring to hold Amos’ plumb line of justice is our understanding that the prophetic role is willing to challenge those in power, kings of Israel then, governments today. The Human Rights Update has always recognized the global scope of God’s justice and honored all of the organizations and individuals who work to bring cruel practices to light and open prison doors. We see God’s spirit leading and calling in the countless acts of conscience to which brief reports can only point. With that awareness, we acknowledge one particular area of concern for renewed witness and ministry by our church and others: reform of the criminal justice system of the United States and the laws and lack of rehabilitation that currently put one in 133 of our citizens in prison, the highest proportion in the world today.66 Other international treaties could be mentioned, and domestic initiatives with human trafficking and immigration reform could be lifted up. But the great cost of the prison system in lives stunted and perhaps made more violent, the cycles of broken families and hurt children, the sick tolerance of sexual abuse in the prisons, the cost in tax moneys put to unproductive use, combined with the actual decline in crime in many areas even in a severe recession: all of these call for the church’s heart of conscience and ministry here at home.67 May God hold us accountable even as we seek to hold others accountable, and may Christ give us steadfastness and energy as we remember the cross and claim the power of redemption.

2004 estimated that 14,500 to 17,500 people were trafficked into the U.S. every year, but the data upon which this estimation was founded have been seriously questioned. While we know that the problem of human trafficking is global and victimizes millions of people, the data on human trafficking is limited and varies widely. Both the use of different data gathering methodologies as well as different foci make it difficult to reconcile and integrate the data we have. A top priority articulated by the UN Special Rapporteur on human trafficking is to develop a system for coordinated data management and gathering.

6. The major forms of human trafficking are: forced labor, bonded labor, debt-bondage, involuntary domestic servitude, forced child labor, child soldiers, sex trafficking, and child sex trafficking and related abuses. To read more on these forms see the Trafficking in Persons Report, U.S. Department of State, 2009 at http://www.state.gov/g/tip/rls/tiprpt/2009/123126.htm.

11. It should be noted however that a low or high retail price of a good is not necessarily an accurate reflection of whether it has been produced by slave labor. For example, designer clothing may be sewn in a factory by slaves but sold to consumers at very high prices. The UN’s Office on Crime and Drugs, which published its second global trends in trafficking in persons report in February 2009, said that the worldwide rise in modern-day slavery is a result of growing demand for cheap goods and services. They expect the impact of the financial crisis to push more business underground to avoid taxes and unionized labor. And they anticipate increasing use of forced, cheap, and child labor by multinational companies strapped by financial struggles. See the report above as well as a discussion of the impact of the financial crisis in the U.S. Department of State, Trafficking in Persons Report, 2009, p. 37.

12. The TVPA defines what constitutes trafficking, makes provisions for T and U visas for noncitizens who have been trafficked and who cooperate with law enforcement, allowing them to remain in the U.S. if they so choose, mandates the U.S. Department of State produce an annual Trafficking in Persons report (TIP) assessing countries’ efforts to combat human trafficking worldwide and ranking them in tiers, mandates the U.S. Department of Labor produce a report on goods it has reason to believe were produced with child or forced labor, and establishes grants to NGOs working with trafficked persons. 17. Guestworkers here in the U.S. and abroad are vulnerable because guestworker programs typically do not provide portability—the ability for a worker to change employers once they are in the country. Further the employer is also responsible for the workers’ housing and transportation, giving the employer many points of control from which to exert both coercion and force.

There are a number of measures designed to enhance Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) presence and enforcement at the border. The 96 Act undertakes a comprehensive reorganization of the process of removal for inadmissible and deportable aliens, including a provision for the expedited removal of inadmissible aliens arriving at ports of entry. The 96 Act requires the conducting of three types of employment authorization verification pilot programs. It includes restrictions on the eligibility of aliens for public benefits and imposes new requirements on sponsors of alien relatives for immigration.” (The INS has been renamed, Immigration and Customs Enforcement, or ICE.) This entire act is an amendment to the Immigration Nationality Act and it includes a section deputizing local law enforcement to enforce immigration law.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

Item 11-04 requests the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the Stated Clerk to post on line the Human Rights Update 2010 report, to request that Human Rights Day—December 10—be included in the program calendar, liturgical resources, and web-postings, and to encourage various bodies of the church to pray for all victims of human rights violations and their persecutors.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 11-04 be approved.

Rationale

Human trafficking, immigrant detention, and torture are serious human rights concerns of our society today. In March 2009, members of ACREC toured an immigration detention facility near Newark, New Jersey, and witnessed firsthand an out-of-the-way detention facility, long-term detention of immigrants, and the resultant separation of families and lack of adequate legal counsel. We are encouraged by some of the reforms being proposed by the Obama administration, but recognize that much more needs to be done to expose the plight of detained immigrants and to prevent any human rights abuses.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture.

Rationale

The ACWC advises approving the Human Rights Update 2010 as a document that upholds the commitments of the PC(USA) to the treatment of all people as image-bearers of the Creator and to the respect of all of humankind as beings worthy of basic respect and humane treatment. As a document that draws attention to the most vulnerable in our world, ACWC supports the update, especially in those places where it lifts up the experiences of women, who in our world always find themselves most vulnerable to exploitation and abuse. In light of this, ACWC would highlight more specifically the experiences of women in situations of trafficking and detention in particular.

Though the report states and repeatedly highlights that there has been an increase in the number of men being trafficked, as a whole, women are still the most vulnerable to being exploited in this way. The report itself cites the United Nations Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (The Palermo Protocol), and notes that women and children are indeed most susceptible to trafficking. Yet the report repeatedly draws attention to the experiences of trafficked men, particularly in the context of forced labor. While forced labor is indeed becoming the most prevalent form of trafficking of both women and men, the report fails to appropriately emphasize the fact that women, according to the International Labor Organization (ILO) are the majority of people subjected to forced labor or trafficked for sexual exploitation.

Exploitative employers prefer to use trafficked women—traditionally seen as submissive, cheap, and pliable—for simple and repetitive tasks in agriculture, food processing, labor-intensive manufacturing and domestic servitude.1

The Human Rights Update (2010) unfortunately insinuates that men are the larger group trafficked for labor purposes.

The ACWC recommends that the report is approved, but with the advice to those who study the report to explore more fully the experiences of women in particular.

Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Mobilizing in Response to God’s Call—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), recognizing the need for a new approach to the plague of gun violence, recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following:

To awaken members and communities to the faith dimensions of our on-going tragedy:

1. Encourage the church at every level—from individual member to congregation, presbytery, synod, and national church—to become informed and active in preventing gun violence, to provide pastoral care for victims of gun violence, and to seek a spiritual response of grief and repentance, grace and courage to resist that violence and celebrate the Lord and Giver of Life. [This proposal does not preclude the legal use of personal firearms for hunting or sports-related purposes.]

2. That the church take responsibility to build public awareness of gun violence and the epidemic of preventable gun-related deaths, totaling more than 620,000 over the past twenty years, with hundreds of thousands more wounded. Even while taking the focused and urgent efforts below to achieve practical solutions, that the councils and congregations welcome discussion from all viewpoints, and that the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy review and summarize responses for the 220th General Assembly (2012).

3. That congregations address the temptation to gun suicide and murder-suicide among both old and young people, and that pastors especially present practical theologies of peace as alternatives to fantasies of power, idolatries of force, strategies of vengeance, and the gravitational pull of nihilism or depression.

4. That the church liturgies not only call for periodic preaching on gun violence but also contain prayers for the victims and perpetrators of gun violence and confession of our own complicity in the perpetuation and toleration of violence in all its forms in the culture.
To assist congregations and members in supporting focused local and state initiatives:

5. That, to embody its spiritual awakening in response to this tragic devaluing of life, the church work to build a movement of urban-suburban ecumenical partnerships in order to better understand the problem of gun violence and take more effective action.

6. That local congregations lead or join in ecumenical gatherings for public prayer at sites where gun violence has occurred and to support, or assist with, appropriate law-enforcement guidance, “ceasefire,” and other urban gang intervention strategies based on the public health model of addressing the most vulnerable populations.

7. That the church, particularly in its congregations, work with local law-enforcement agencies and community groups to identify gun shops that engage in retail practices designed to circumvent laws on gun sales and ownership, encourage full legal compliance, and support higher marketing standards, and if necessary, take nonviolent action against gun shops and gun shows that are known to sell guns that end up in crime, using the faith-based campaign of Heeding God’s Call, a group active in Pennsylvania as an example.

8. That the church at presbytery, synod, and General Assembly levels, and in cooperation with colleges, universities, and seminaries, sponsor regular educational and summer conference events on gun violence and its prevention, in order to raise the awareness of the faith community and call it to informed action.

9. Due to the recent expanded provisions in concealed carry laws in many states that now allow guns to be carried openly, including into houses of worship, we recommend that churches and other entities prominently display signs that prohibit carrying guns onto their property.

10. That the church encourage citizens, hunters, and law-enforcement officials who regularly handle weapons properly to be wise examples in reducing risks and teaching how to prevent the misuse of deadly force.

11. That the church direct and support its Washington office and other advocacy bodies to continue to advocate for the policies previously approved by PC(USA) General Assemblies and that can receive wide public support to
   a. limit legal personal gun acquisition to one handgun a month;
   b. require licensing, registration, and waiting periods to allow comprehensive background checks, and cooling-off periods, for all guns sold;
   c. close the “gun show loophole” by requiring background checks for all gun buyers;
   d. ban semiautomatic assault weapons, armor piercing handgun ammunition, and .50 caliber sniper rifles;
   e. advocate for new technologies to aid law-enforcement agencies to trace crime guns and promote public safety;
   f. raise the age for handgun ownership to the [legal drinking] age [of twenty-one]; and”
   g. eliminate the Tiahrt Amendment to annual appropriations for the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives (ATF) [that forbids local law-enforcement agencies from receiving any information from gun traces, and to keep data on background checks for at least ninety days for comparative purposes and assist enforcement of ‘11.a.’ above] [that impedes local law enforcement agencies in their use of gun traces and requires the Justice Department to destroy within two hours the record of a buyer whose NICS (National Instant Criminal Background Check System) check was approved].

12. Following the recommendations of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, to support laws to “require judges and law enforcement to remove guns from situations of domestic violence, as well as from people whose adjudicated mental illness, drug use, or previous criminal record suggests the possibility of violence,” and to increase police training in nonviolent proactive intervention.

13. To urge the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to develop a corporate engagement strategy for working with corporations in which the church may be invested that are producers or distributors of weapons that do not comply with its policies on gun violence prevention, recommending shareholder proposals and divestment actions appropriate to the integrity and effectiveness the church seeks.

14. That the Compassion, Peace, and Justice and Racial Ethnic Ministries areas include in their ongoing strategic reflection means through which church-wide faithfulness to these commitments can be monitored, supported, encouraged, and resourced, in order to strengthen especially those congregations most exposed to gun violence, and that appropriate resources continue to be made available to help in worship, pastoral care, and public policy work.
15. That councils of the church seek to partner with other faith institutions to create and sustain a national, activist faith-based social movement to save thousands of lives yearly.

16. That the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly be directed to post this report on-line, distribute it through the social witness CD, and print it in limited quantity for councils, congregations, and other educational and advocacy use.

Rationale

I. Introduction

This resolution is in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 09-05. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to Prepare a Comprehensive Study on Gun Violence—From the 218th General Assembly (2008) (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 860).

This directive read as follows:

a. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Office of Theology and Worship, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, the Presbyterian United Nations Office, and the Presbyterian Washington Office, to prepare for the larger church a comprehensive study on the concerns raised in this overture [on gun violence]. The study should articulate a Reformed Theology of proactive, constructive nonviolence way of life and tactical method for bringing God’s justice and peace to our communities and around the world; assess the social and economic costs of gun violence; explore how gun violence fits into a larger national culture of violence, and identify ways that the church can effectively address gun violence issues domestically and internationally, and to report these findings along with proposed action items to the 219th General Assembly (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 860).

Gun violence in America has escalated to persistently astonishing levels, consistently about 30,000 deaths per year. We are shocked but increasingly not surprised by the tragedies that bleed into the news and into our neighborhoods, towns, and cities. “Shoot outs” once associated with the Wild West or romanticized gangsters now occur in spaces long considered safe havens: high school cafeterias, college campuses, malls, community centers, playgrounds, gym clubs, even church sanctuaries and our homes. Time and distance are no longer buffers from gun violence. Everyone is at some risk, and the phenomenon of multiple or mass shootings appears to be growing. Currently there are about 270 million privately owned firearms in the United States. If they were evenly distributed, almost every woman, man, and child in the entire population would possess a gun. We are, as a country, armed and dangerous—to ourselves.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been concerned about this frightening phenomenon, and has consistently spoken out about it for three decades, as have our sisters and brothers in virtually every other faith tradition. This report does not advocate more controls than the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has asked for in the past, yet it is clear that our voices have not been persuasive in themselves and our actions too limited to stem the tide of gun violence. There are too many places in America where it is difficult to hear the gospel over the persistent retort of gunfire. We continue to be convinced that God calls us to protect the lives of all within the human community, as each is loved by our Creator. In order to be faithful to our vocation to seek God’s shalom, we need to seek new and active ways of effectively bringing life-saving change. We can no longer tolerate such a preventable exile from God’s peaceable kingdom or reign. It is time to discuss these deadly social outcomes in our congregations. We believe there is much common ground within society for both responsible gun ownership and real reduction of gun violence. Yet we also know the way the dangers of accident, the prevalence of suicide by gun, and the high rates of homicide in the U.S., are in direct relationship to the accessibility to and possession of guns. We need to be willing to ask ourselves whether we should voluntarily limit our ownership of guns so that we may become more faithful stewards of the gospel. Presbyterians are called to be agents of change in the world, to be reconcilers because we ourselves have been reconciled. Therefore, we are calling upon the church, in the power of the Holy Spirit, to help build an effective spiritual and social awakening that says “No” to the prevalence of gun violence in this country.

What might this look like? At the Bryn Mawr Presbyterian Church, a group of members gathers in the parking lot for prayer before heading from the suburbs into a neighborhood of Philadelphia, where they meet up with a racially diverse and ecumenically mixed group of representatives from local communities of faith. Their focus: a gun shop linked to hundreds of illegal gun sales to “straw purchasers,” that is, people without criminal records who buy weapons to be sold on the underground market. First, they seek to persuade the owner to comply with a code of conduct, a set of business practices designed to diminish “straw purchasing.” If that fails, they hold peaceful, public protests. Increasingly in Philadelphia, this suburban-urban partnership, based in the churches, is seeing results—gun shops engaging in this illegal practice are being forced to close, and other shops are getting the message and complying. Some of those involved in the protests are hunters themselves (as are several of this study group’s members) and they recognize the alternative to inaction is simply more death. This organization and others like it are not just engaging in legal debates with gun lobbyists. They are putting their bodies where their faith is.

Alongside this locally based and practically focused approach, which may bring to mind the local chapters that helped create the “Million Mom March” on Mother’s Day, May 14, 2000, the focus of “Heeding God’s Call” reflects the application of “public health” approaches to the problem of gun violence. This approach builds on “two of the principles that help define the discipline of public health ... (1) preventing damage to humans by injury and disease is preferable to repairing damage after it has occurred; and (2) prevention is best accomplished by protection that is provided automatically on a population basis and does not require each individual to always act carefully. ... Applying this approach to the area of gun violence, it is considered more effective and therefore preferable to address the design [and marketing] of guns before they get into the hands of millions of people rather than rely upon our ability to control the behaviors of those millions. ...” Authors Mair, Teret, and Frattaroli recommend design changes in weapons to increase their safety, but acknowledge that approximately 40 percent of guns are sold in the “largely unregulated secondary market,” and that half of guns sold are secondhand. Thus the authors cite data on the willingness (as of 2001) of varying percentages of the 64,000 licensed gun shop owners to sell to “straw” (or proxy) buyers and urge changes in marketing practices, noting areas of higher gun violence risk. Thus the public health approach to “vectors” by which illegal or simply unregulated weapons end up in the hands of dangerous or immature persons.

At the same time, Mair, Teret, and Frattaroli note opposition to regulation in all industries being regulated; auto companies resist seatbelt laws and better mileage requirements, tobacco and alcohol companies resist advertising limits, and strong lobbies are linked to these interests. Thus public education and legislation become the chief areas for change, as enforcement can be weakened by laws that prevent effective data collection and sharing and tort litigation (aimed at product liability) can be blocked by laws that prevent damage claims for individuals or groups. This points to the need for effective community standard-setting on a regional basis, precisely the work of creative ecumenical coalitions. It is such groups that can help society as a whole implement a consensus that is arguably present in current polling data: widespread acceptance of “gun rights” (responsible personal gun ownership as supported by the Supreme Court’s recent decision) combined with high support for commonsense violence prevention. As this resolution is completed, the Supreme Court is seen as likely to extend the application of its decision preventing the outright banning of firearms in Washington, D.C. (the “Heller” decision); presumably this would still allow for laws regulating the kinds and conditions under which firearms could be sold in states, cities, and municipalities.

Christian gospel values challenge gun violence in order to protect human life from unnecessary tragedy. The public health approach and predominant law-enforcement approach focused on individual perpetrators. Both need a public consensus rooted in moral conviction, hope, and trust. The spirit-awakening and movement-supporting approach of this resolution builds on previous Presbyterian emphases on legislation and education and is reflected in this report’s recommendations and in the structure of this rationale. Just because a social need is urgent does not mean that the moral climate will easily change. Thus a study of five elements of successful social movements provides a lens for analysis. Our understanding of the fullness of God’s peace is larger than definitions of freedom that focus on the possession of weapons; we affirm a social bond with grassroots movements that is rooted in our identity as Christians. We are already part of the movement of God’s people through history toward the promised realm of peace.

Our church can and should lead the way in the broader faith community to the creation of a broad-based social movement to prevent gun violence, beginning with and led by an opening to the Holy Spirit, and drawing its strength from the grassroots, especially people in the pews. Such a coalition of congregations and other faith communities can take practical direct action on local levels while generating critical change in cultural norms and attitudes toward guns, their possession, distribution, and use. In this way our church, the faith community, and the movement they can lead, will heed God’s call to protect more of God’s children.

II. Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Study Rationale for a Social Movement Strategy on Gun Violence

A. Introduction

As Presbyterians, we know God’s call becomes clear to us only when we are paying careful attention. But paying attention becomes more difficult in times and cultures as complex as ours. The cacophony of messages can drown out God’s call on our lives as believers and as a community of faith. Real anxiety about change meets reflexive ideology. Then, too often, slogans replace thought. In this context, the church is called to give steady support to prevention and protection despite political paralysis and powerful interests. We must pay attention as well to those sources that have always fed our understanding of God’s calling—our biblical and theological tradition, the commitments of people of faith, and the signs of the times. Together, they create a kairos moment when God’s time intersects our time and human history is changed. But first we need to pay attention and respond to the call. We need to heed.

We need to pay attention to the disconnects between what our faith, values, and common sense tell us about the realities of gun violence and what groups opposing reasonable public protection would want us to believe. Even after the massacres at Columbine High School, Northern Illinois University, and Virginia Tech, pro-gun advocates called for allowing guns on our campuses. Even though many have died by assault weapons since the ban was allowed to expire in 2004, lobbyists have argued that to restrict access to such military-style weapons is an attack on personal rights. Despite the fact that workplaces which permit employees to carry guns are five to seven times more likely to be the site of workplace homicide, the pro-gun
The Episcopal Church passed eight resolutions between 1976 and 2000 advocating for greater regulation of handguns. As people of faith, Theology and Political Responsibility

The United Church of Christ passed resolutions in 1969, 1995, and 1999 that specifically called for the denomination to be involved in education and advocacy at the federal, state, and community level to prevent gun violence. These were backed up with strong educational curricula in 1991 and 1996 as well as comprehensive strategies for advocacy especially at the national level. The General Assembly resolution in 1990 called on the U.S. government to establish meaningful and effective federal legislation to regulate the importation, manufacture, sale and possession of guns and ammunition by the general public. Such legislation should include provisions for the registration and licensing of gun purchasers and owners, appropriate background investigations and waiting periods prior to gun purchase, and regulation of subsequent sale.

Little change has been seen in the policies enumerated, and these same calls can and should be echoed today.

Presbyterians have a significant but by no means unique witness within the wider church in speaking out against gun violence:

- The United Methodist Church passed similar resolutions in 1976, 1988, and 2000 calling for education and advocacy to reduce the availability of guns and regulating their sale and possession.

- The United Church of Christ passed resolutions in 1969, 1995, and 1999 that specifically called for the denomination to negotiate directly with the National Rifle Association and endorsed policies of one handgun a month, banning assault weapons, and regulation of gun dealers.

- The Episcopal Church passed eight resolutions between 1976 and 2000 advocating for greater regulation of handguns, including banning assault weapons and prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons.

- The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops issued policy statements in 1995 and most recently in 2005 advocating for the reinstatement of the ban on assault weapons and supporting “measures that control the sale and use of firearms and make them safer … and we reiterate our call for sensible regulation of handguns.”

- The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America passed a message to the church on Community Violence in 1994, reaffirmed in 2008, which called on the church to “stem the proliferation of guns in our streets, schools and homes,” and to “build strong anti-violence coalitions in our neighborhoods and communities.”

- The National Council of Churches has given voice to the ecumenical community’s appeal through the Interfaith Call to End Gun Violence (2000) which then-General Secretary Robert Edgar reiterated in speaking out against the tragic killings at Virginia Tech University (2007)

Clearly, a diverse national faith community has been clear, outspoken, and consistent over the last twenty years about the crisis of gun-related deaths in the U.S. and around the world. Regrettably, beyond general agreement, those who have heeded these calls to study and action are the exception, rather than the norm.

B. Theology and Political Responsibility

In the 1990 Resolution on Gun Violence, the 202nd General Assembly (1990) refers to the “peaceable kingdom—a society where God’s justice reigns, where reconciliation replaces anger, where an open hand and a turned cheek replace retaliate...
tion, where love of enemies is as important as love of neighbor.” Based on the vision presented in Isaiah 65 of “new heavens and a new earth … [where] the wolf and the lamb shall feed together,” the idyllic image has become the soft focus sentiment of Christmas cards. It has been robbed of its power. The people of God must continue to hold sacred the visions recorded in Scripture of the Creator’s intentions for humankind. Such visions provide the basis of critique, so that we can see how far, in fact, we have strayed from God’s will for us. Visions also compel us to action, giving us moral clarity and courage. Truly, without vision the people will perish.

for I am about to create Jerusalem as a joy, and its people as a delight. I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and delight in my people; no more shall the sound of weeping be heard in it, or the cry of distress. No more shall there be in it an infant that lives but a few days, or an old person who does not live out a lifetime; For one who dies at a hundred years will be considered a youth … 21

Here is a radically different vision of human community, where parents do not have to worry about letting their children play in the neighborhood and adults do not have to fear walking down the street at night. Remembering this vision stirs our longing for a different society, built on solidarity and trust, and not on terror. It is in the context of the community, especially the community of faith, that the full value of human life is honored and celebrated. We therefore constantly seek to remove double standards and differing expectations between God’s intentions for those inside and outside the church. Those within the Reformed tradition continue to be instructed by Calvin’s sense of the “peace of Christ,” which is distinctive in nature and uncompromising in facing evil and its violence.

For Calvin, biblical principles also had direct applicability in the ordering of civil society. So in his commentary on the Sixth Commandment, “You shall not kill,” Calvin expressed a theological perspective on the ordering of society that is based on the value each human life as loved and redeemed by God and therefore in need of protection.

The purpose of this commandment is, that since the Lord has bound the whole human race by a kind of unity, the safety of all ought to be considered as entrusted to each. In general, therefore, all violence and injustice, and every kind of harm from which our neighbor’s body suffers, is prohibited. Accordingly, we are required faithfully to do what in us lies to defend the life of our neighbor, to promote whatever tends to his tranquility, to be vigilant in warding off harm, and when danger comes, to assist in removing it.22

It is not only the church that is knit together as a body of interdependent parts (1 Corinthians 12). Our Reformed tradition affirms that indeed the whole human community is meant to reflect the very unity of the triune God who created us. We creatures of the Living God have organized government structures that enable us to provide protection for all members of society. Our governments, then, most closely reflect the image and intentions of the Creator when they “defend the lives of all our neighbors,” build community or “tranquility,” and protect our citizens from harm. When we, instead, allow individuals to arm themselves without regulation at the price of the safety of innocent victims, the good of the whole is threatened.

Thus, in the Reformed Christian approach, we link value of individual life with the democratic respect for the individual that is the basis of our governmental system. We Presbyterians are also not a lawless people: laws are not simply forms of social control; they can be “guides to the elect,” rooted in our trust in God’s good purposes and helping structure the bearing of burdens of social life. The two approaches to government can clearly be seen in the public debate around guns—one nurtures fear and one safety. We advocate a government role that protects its citizens and raises the standards for responsible gun ownership, which we support with careful protections for the safety and freedom of all.

The United States Supreme Court ruled for the first time on June 26, 2008, in District of Columbia v. Heller that the Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution is not a collective right for a militia, but rather that individuals have a right to possess handguns in their homes for self-defense. Since this five-to-four decision was made, it has been taken as affirmation by those who advocate guns for self-defense, even against the U.S. government. The fear of government tyranny has been clearly voiced and an “open carry” movement has led to a highly visible and sometimes intimidating presence of armed individuals at public meetings, demonstrations, and even children’s sporting events and worship services. At its extreme points, legal scholars Horwitz and Casey argue that this concern for individual freedoms at the expense of the public good aligns itself with a secessionist or insurrectionist philosophy.”23

Such thinking runs counter not only to that of the Framers but to the instruction of Reformed theology on the role of government. John Calvin believed that God worked through established governments to order society and prevent it from devolving into anarchy. He considered civil authorities, including law-enforcement officials, to be ordained by God to protect the innocent public against the terror of mob rule or individual rapacity. For Calvin, the public trust of government was the structure through which biblical principles were made real, including the principle of freedom.
For those who subscribe to insurrectionist thinking, “guns are both the symbols and tools of freedom.” Wayne LaPierre, the CEO of the National Rifle Association famously declared, “Those with the guns make the rules.” He does not speak for all members of the NRA, but he does reflect a particular view of individual freedom that is gaining a disturbing amount of momentum as we enter the second decade of the new millennium. However, the Scriptures give another perspective on freedom. Peter exhorts his friends to live with respect for human authorities and for all people: “As servants of God, live as free people, yet do not use your freedom as a pretext for evil. Honor everyone. Love the family of believers. Fear God. Honor the emperor” (1 Pet. 2:16–17). Freedom, in the biblical sense, is never considered for an individual apart from community, but is linked to the responsibility we have for one another in our life together. Martin Luther defined the Christian as “the most free lord of all, and the most duty bound slave of all” (The Freedom of a Christian).

These conflicting perspectives on freedom do not represent an abstract difference of theological perspective or even political world views, but a clash of commitments that has serious consequences. The National Rifle Association and other gun lobbyists have been working persistently (and successfully) to thwart any limitation on the freedom of individuals to acquire any kind of gun, at any time, and in any quantity. The NRA lobbyists are ubiquitous at the United Nations, as well as in the Capital, where they encourage representatives from around the world to include a “Second Amendment provision” in their national constitutions. The mantra is that “self-defense, via arms, is a God-given right.” It is the partial result of their efforts that not only our nation but countries around the world see large-scale weapons availability for use in conflicts. These matters are addressed more fully in the General Assembly’s 2001 Resolution on Small Arms (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 274–78).

C. Cultural Analysis: Behind the Trigger: Dimensions of Violence in Our Culture

The American culture of the 21st century is pervaded with violence. Our language itself reflects how thoroughly, and comfortably, we have accommodated violence as a dominant paradigm: “Stick to your guns!,” “Bite the bullet!,” and “pull the trigger,” are unconscious figures of speech, among literally hundreds of others (See Appendix A). Through media, video games, and toys our children have been fed a diet of violence so that by young adulthood we are not shocked by violent images, but sometimes numbed and sometimes stimulated by them. Bullying sometimes leads to deadly reprisals. Despite our national identity as a peace-loving people, violence, and particularly gun violence, is woven deeply into our national identity. Legal scholar Allen Rostron points to the duality in how Americans view guns:

> The dual nature of guns is reflected in the very different feelings that people have about them. For many Americans, guns have overwhelmingly positive associations. To them, guns are about families and traditions, about growing up and spending time learning how to shoot and to hunt, and about each generation passing something on to the next. For many other Americans, guns have completely different connotations. For example, to a young person in an inner city, guns may be associated with only bad things, like being scared, having grandparents afraid to go outside, or knowing someone who was shot…

Some of the violence in U.S. culture is often linked to our national narrative, including the periods of settlement and slavery, or to a regional and ethnic subculture influential on the frontier. The justly fought wars in our nation’s story may also have become distorted into a glorification of violence as a way of resolving conflict. Some theologians maintain that we have incorporated the myth of redemptive violence into our framing of conflict. Therefore, at times our foreign policy has looked too quickly toward military solutions rather than negotiations or mediation. For too many people, gun power is not a problem, but a solution. Armed force undergirds our civil order but also permeates it, especially where that civil order is most frayed.

However, the myth of redemptive violence has not inoculated veterans from depression that can exacerbate or create despair years after their military service. Recent research has shown that suicide in men is more likely among older white veterans in states with higher accessibility to guns. These are predominantly not men who have had a long history of depression, problems with alcohol, or suicidal attempts. Similarly, women who end their lives by gun are older, white, married women, also disproportionately veterans, who have not necessarily been on a suicide watch. The profile that emerges is that when despair reaches a critical point, an available gun too often offers a quick and final resolution to psychological pain.

There is a somewhat different dynamic in urban cultures, where guns are woven into the social fabric of many neighborhoods. Religious historian James Noel writes about the ways violence becomes racially coded in urban African American settings, drawing partly on his years of church involvement in Oakland, California.

> There is a somewhat different dynamic in urban cultures, where guns are woven into the social fabric of many neighborhoods. Religious historian James Noel writes about the ways violence becomes racially coded in urban African American settings, drawing partly on his years of church involvement in Oakland, California.

The issue of social trust and community deterioration is not a theoretical concern, though theory helps understand what the statistics underline: an enormous amount of gun violence occurs in inner cities, even though these numbers have gone down from highs in the 1980’s (high point, 1993). But the predictably higher percentages of African-American and Hispanic young men involved in gun violence reflect a long-term exposure of these minority communities to physical and structural violence, patterns reinforced by limited opportunities and by the criminal justice system itself… the violence that has become such a dominant feature of the urban poor must be seen as operating consequentially and reciprocally to the violence that structures and permeates the space they are forced to inhabit. In other words, historical and contemporaneous forces and variables conspire to subject the so-called offenders to unrecognized forms of “violation” that are not punished by society because the inner city IS one of its components. Robert Johnson and Paul Leighton make the following observation in their discussion of black on black crime:
In America, at least, poverty rarely kills directly. Few people drop dead in the streets from hunger or exposure to the elements. But poverty does produce a range of physical and psychological stresses, and some reactions to these stresses are expressed in behaviors that destroy life. Members of the victim group may contribute to their own victimization through adaptations to bleak life conditions that include violence directed at self or others (e.g. suicide or homicide) as well as self-destructive lifestyles (notably drugs and alcohol).34

Johnson and Leighton admit that the causal connection between the larger social structures and “social pathology” in the inner city is very hard to demonstrate. “The larger society is quite removed from the grim life circumstances and daily degradations experienced by poor blacks, and hence the average American has little real feeling for the forces that shape their lives.” They point out that most of the destruction of black life occurs right within the ghetto itself and therefore—in agreement with Wacquant—they say: “these environments are … the functional equivalent to prison.”35

The irony here is that black and other minority communities are those most able to argue historically that they might need weapons to protect themselves from tyranny from the majority population. This study cannot provide a full analysis of the lure of violence in relation to such phenomena as powerlessness or gang life. The public health approach, particularly developed by the Johns Hopkins University gun violence program, addresses cultural factors but is also highly practical in the targeted policies it recommends to reduce the armed conflict in urban areas, many of which are reflected in the recommendations of this report.36

There are signs of hope in urban communities, areas where public health and law enforcement approaches have joined in proactive interventions that have decreased gang violence and increased trust between black communities and largely white police forces. An article on the C.I.R.V. (Cincinnati Initiative to Reduce Violence) describes the approach of David Kennedy: “Ceasefire, as Kennedy’s program is sometimes known, begins with the fact, commonly recognized by criminologists, that a small number of hardened criminals commit hugely disproportionate numbers of serious violent crimes. Often, much of the violence is caused by gang dynamics: score settling, vendettas, and turf issues. … Arresting the shooters doesn’t generally stop the killing; nor does threatening them with long prison sentences. But one thing does work, Kennedy had discovered: telling them to stop.”37 By using the public health approach to focus on social networks (or transmission), and adding to the criminal justice skills of the police alternative modes of deterrence (observation and inoculation), gang members would be gathered in a social space and given a forthright moral appeal, often by ex-gang members and church and community leaders. Survivors of shootings would sometimes show their wounds and discuss their hardships at these “call outs.” The results: “homicides in Cincinnati in 2007 were down 24 percent from 2006. The trend continued into 2008—by April, there had been a 50 percent reduction in gang-related homicides.”38

Racial meanings run deep in American society. The election of the first African American president at the crest of the economic recession tapped into fears among many. At a later point, we note the hope that was embodied in the change in administrations, but realism prompts us to consider the reaction that has also appeared and the role guns play in it. Soon after the election, gun and ammunition sales rose, indicating a rise in fear and a decline in trust in government and in neighbor. Threatening public display of weapons became part of rallies during the summer of 2009, prompting memories of the assassinations in U.S. history. Though the causes for these partly populist displays of anger are still being debated, and free speech rights are always deserving of respect, these events did not celebrate the social trust that is the glue of a civil society.39 With the erosion of trust comes the deterioration of healthy social interaction; eventually civil society can be undermined. The proposal to reverse this defensive pattern is precisely an effort to build solidarity and bridge the racial and economic divides in our society.

D. Toward a Strategy That Counts the Costs

While Presbyterians and other communities of faith were issuing statements against gun violence over the past twenty years, however, the violence continued at consistent rates, resulting in more than 620,000 Americans killed and 1.4 million injured by guns during this period.40 It is time, therefore, for the church to pay attention not just to the faithfulness of our spoken word, but the effectiveness of our action in stopping the preventable deaths of so many of our sons and daughters, parents and siblings, friends and neighbors. It is time to enact God’s “No.” It is time to recover a constructive moral outrage of the prophets and the moral courage of the great cloud of witnesses who have gone before. It is time to repent of our tolerance of that which is unacceptable.

If the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), along with our ecumenical partners in peacemaking, are to be effective in facilitating social change, which is deeply grounded in our faith, we need to be smart and intentional about how to generate that change. The church’s primary calling is to help prepare people for the possibility of a real spiritual awakening that can instigate a social movement. A social movement is broad based in its organization, drawing much of its energy from the grassroots, rather than from a small group of leaders. It seeks to change not just laws, but the cultural norms and ways of thinking about a social problem, be it drunk driving, tobacco usage, or gun violence.

Social scientists have long studied the phenomena of social movements, not only those that are effective in bringing about change, but also those that never gain traction or simply dissipate, despite having a compelling cause. Such has been the case with gun policy. Despite waves of outrage over assassinations and the strength of the Million Mom March, there has not been a sustained, effective, grassroots movement in this country to control access to firearms.41 A relatively small number of gun control advocates have worked for years, with limited resources, within a limited sphere of legislative change, primarily focused on federal policy. They have been faithful in their efforts but not as effective in developing and sustaining a movement needed for change that is deep, wide, and lasting.

Scholars of social movements have shown that there have to be a number of coexisting conditions for the mobilization of people seeking change to take place. Each condition is vital to an effective social movement, but taken individually cannot spark and sustain an effective movement. First, having a clear cause or grievance is necessary for change to be desired, but will not spark an awakening. Like the proverbial frog in a kettle, we can adapt ourselves to rising levels of suffering and injustice. This is abundantly clear in our tolerance of gun violence. Second, moral arguments, prophetic sermons, and hard data about a social problem may fuel an awakening, but in and of themselves do not create a social movement, much to our disappointment. Third, some expect “sparking events” (or “shifts in political opportunities”) to create tipping points, and unleash pent up frustration into a coherent movement for change. But such large media events have exploded onto our national radar screen only to fade without provoking or sustaining a social movement for change. Fourth, a focus on resources—both human and capital—has shown that they are an essential component for any successful social movement. But in isolation, an abundance of funding, connections, or even leadership does not mobilize people for social change. Even Sarah Brady, with her credibility and connections, has not built a grassroots movement. Social theorist Doug McAdam of Stanford University has identified a fifth critical condition that needs to be present in combination with all four of the other variables in order for an effective social movement to take place: a sense of viability. This is the belief that, in fact, our actions can bring real change that sustains movements for social change. What we do matters, both in the immediate and in the transcendent understandings of time. This is what people of faith call hope.

These five variables are not mutually exclusive. For example, we cannot frame an issue in moral or theological terms independent of there being a problem to begin with. But when all five are aligned, “perfect storm” conditions exist that can spark and sustain an effective social movement:

- a critical understanding of the problem, or high sense of grievance;
- a living connection to the commitments from our tradition for moral action, or a strong moral imperative;
- an informed perspective on the shifts in political, cultural, and social realities that open up new opportunities for collective action;
- an appreciation of the abundance of resources we bring to our effort;
- a sense of hope, that by pursuing our vocation and in the power of the Holy Spirit, change is indeed possible.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness policy and its gun violence study team believe that the time is right for transformation in this society’s treatment of gun violence—in part because of the Supreme Court’s assurance that personal ownership of guns is secure for the foreseeable future. We make no determination here on Second Amendment interpretation. But in a time when social costs of all kinds are being reassessed, we call on the whole church to look realistically at our context, and to commit itself to study and action to stop the unnecessary killing of so many of God’s dear children. We now suggest how the five elements of analysis above may guide us today.

1. The Grievance of Gun Violence
   a. The Loss of Human Life

   The numbers are so overwhelming as to be numbing. Consider: every day in the U.S. 85 people die from guns and 191 are injured.43 Over the course of a typical year, about 30,000 will be killed through gun-related murder, suicide, accident, or police intervention. Approximately 70,000 will survive gun injuries, only to have their lives and those of their families forever changed. Most tragically, almost 21,000 of the victims are American children and teens (ages 0–19). More than 3,000 kids killed—that’s 9 children a day—and 2,225 of these children were murdered. Almost 800 children pick up guns and end their own young lives each year. All told, every year is 9/11 for our children. Statistics can make our eyes glaze over, but understanding the pain involved for each of these families can only lead us, to grieve like Rachel,

   A voice is heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping.
   Rachel is weeping for her children;
   she refuses to be comforted for her children, because they are no more.44

   b. The Economic Burden

   It is, of course, impossible to calculate the worth of a human life, for each one is of inestimable value to God. But we are, as a human community, related to one another as we participate in the oikoumene of the Creator. We particularly experience our interdependence through the economy. Clearly, when one hurts, all are impacted. Ten years ago Jens Ludwig and Philip
J. Cook tried to calculate the financial burden created by gun violence and shouldered by the American taxpayer. Taking into consideration the health-care costs of its victims, the additional security costs of prevention, and the judicial and penal costs of processing its perpetrators, they estimated that the already strapped American economy takes on an additional $100 billion per year.45

c. The Spiritual Malaise

Even if we are not physically affected by gun violence, the preventable deaths and injuries of so many impacts us all in ways other than economic. Our commonwealth is diminished when lives are unnecessarily cut short, their contribution to the human community never known, their children not born. But most fundamentally, the cost has been spiritual: we have come to accept what is unacceptable to the Creator. We, like Rachel, should be inconsolable, yet we find ourselves numbed and passively tolerating higher levels of violence in our communities, in our television and movies, video games, and in our streets. Where is our grief at the loss of life and the loss of conscience? How have we gotten to this point of passive acceptance of gun violence?

Ours must not be a grief that immobilizes us or is expressed only in sympathy to victims. Ours must be, instead, a godly grief that calls us to transformation. As Paul wrote to the church in Corinth, “Now I rejoice, not because you were grieved, but because your grief led to repentance; for you felt a godly grief. For godly grief produces a repentance that leads to salvation and brings no regret, but worldly grief produces death” (2 Cor. 7:9–10).

d. The Intersection of Widespread Gun Ownership and Fear in the Culture

With the constant depictions of violence, a narrative justifying conflict resolution through force, and powerful guns easily available, a dangerous cocktail is being stirred. Add to that the national and international data showing a high correlation between the percentage of households with firearms and the rate of gun-related homicide, suicide and accident.46 That is to say, whether comparing communities, states, or countries, where there are more guns, there is more gun violence. Consider:

• With almost half of American households legally owning guns, there are about eleven gun deaths per 100,000 population. In England very few households are armed (less than 5 percent). In 2006 there were 159 gun deaths there, or .31 per 100,000. Japan prohibits handguns and long guns are highly regulated. There were 96 gun deaths in 2006 or .08 per 100,000.

• More than half of gun deaths are suicide.47 Studies of suicide survivors show that 70 percent contemplated killing themselves for less than an hour. While there was no difference in the rate of non-gun related suicides in states with high or low rates of gun ownership, the picture changed drastically when looking at suicides by gun—there were almost four times the number of successful suicides by gun in those states with higher rates of gun ownership.48 If guns are accessible, they will be used in moments of depression.

• The African American community is the hardest hit by gun violence, as we have suggested earlier. The deterioration of social trust and the consolidation of poverty in inner-city neighborhoods has spawned a culture of violence in which guns have become the “symbols and tools” not so much of freedom as survival. The result: the firearm death rate for African Americans is twice what it is for white Americans. Although African American males only make up 6 percent of the population, they account for 47 percent of gun homicides. Young African American men (aged 15–34) are more likely to die by bullet than disease, accident, or suicide. This is not true for any other demographic group.49 Tragically, most of these homicides are the result of black-on-black violence, an extreme expression of what Cornel West has labeled a culture of nihilism.50

• United States guns have been documented to fuel the heightened levels of gun violence in Northern Mexico related to the drug trade. Limited enforcement of existing laws, use of “straw buyers” without criminal records, and other forms of cross-border trafficking have all contributed to a widespread availability of guns.51 On August 5, 2009, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) received a letter from Mexico:

The National Presbyterian Church of Mexico is worried due to the high percentage of violence that we are living within our country today. Kidnapping and murders are everywhere, especially in cities such as Tijuana, Monterrey, Juarez, Morelia, Acapulco, just to mention those with the highest percentage of insecurity. This is why we come to you, brothers and sisters in Christ, so that you may help us … in transmitting our concerns to those in charge of selling guns to Mexican people … (which kill) in many cases … innocent people. So, as leaders of the National Presbyterian Church of Mexico, we have come to the conclusion that we have to raise our voices against violence; and together with you all, we might share the same feeling, so that our presidents may work hard to make stability a reality in our countries.52

• Despite some restrictive legislation in the 1990s that prohibited those with prior history of domestic violence to get a gun, their accessibility continues to turn family fights into deadly confrontations. A recent study showed that having one or more guns in the home made a woman 7.2 times more likely to be the victim of gun homicide.53

Clearly, if there is a gun easily within reach in one’s pocket (or cupboard, garage, or glove compartment) a moment of rage or despair can become tragic. Ironically, one of the primary arguments for gun ownership is self protection. But a recent study from the University of Pennsylvania confirms the correlation between gun ownership and becoming a victim of gun violence. The study found that those with guns were 4.5 times more likely to be shot in an assault than those not possessing a gun. If guns did in fact protect us from violence, the U.S. would be the safest country on earth. Instead, we are the most at-risk for gun violence among developed countries. And the costs are most visible in our urban hospital emergency rooms, backlogged courtrooms, and still growing prison population.

The international dimension of our context is not only in globally popular Internet games or the specific gun fight the army of Mexico is having with the drug cartels whose arms are more powerful than those of the army. Dependence on force has not only been a dominant paradigm in foreign policy, it is also reflected in lucrative exports. Currently, the United States is the number one supplier of small arms to the developing world; many of these guns are sold illegally. One of the consequences of the “war on terror” has been a sense of insecurity that fosters violence and ironically spreads it across borders. This fear of terror is certainly not the reign of shalom that God wills for our beloved human community.

2. The Gospel Imperative

Jesus went further in naming the idols that become the foundation of an unredeemed society. He reprimanded Peter for first grabbing a weapon in his defense. “Those who live by the sword will die by it,” Jesus clearly put it. If weapons become the basis of your social relations, they will kill you. If preserving your guns has become more important than the safety of thousands of other people, then weapons have become your idol, in diametric opposition to the vision of a city that is a joy, where children and old people live out their years, and the weeping of grief-stricken mothers is no longer heard.

It is not enough to have a social critique, however. The first letter of John challenges us “not (to) love in word or speech but in deed and in truth.” We must struggle with how to implement the vision, a challenge that was taken up by John Calvin as well. At the very core of his theology was an understanding that the intentions of God should be implemented on earth.

Let us be clear: this is not a call to arms but to community. There is a direct connection, as we have seen, between God’s intentions, the prophets’ visions, Jesus’ teaching, and the implications for our own actions. If God commands that we not kill and that we work for a future when former enemies work together as friends, then the injunction extends beyond our own individual choices, as important as they are. We are compelled to work for policies, or ways of ordering society, which “defend,” “promote tranquility,” “ward off harm,” and remove harm. How we love the stranger is not through our good feelings or individual acts of charity but through advocating for policies that will extend protection to the greatest number of people.

Confronting the crisis of gun violence in the U.S. and indeed around the world, we are called to advocate policies—and to act upon them—which will defend and protect the public, not only from external threats, but too often from itself. The church is not as disturbed with the legitimate possession and use of hunting rifles, shotguns, and sport shooting guns, but we are categorically opposed to the poor regulation and easy flow of guns that are manufactured to efficiently kill human beings. We must exert special efforts to stop unlicensed sellers peddling guns at our country’s thousands of gun shows with “no questions asked,” and to stop unscrupulous licensed dealers from selling to straw purchasers who then turn guns over to traffickers. Too often, this easy access results in harm to self or others that could have been prevented.

3. If Not Now, When? (A Shift in Political and Social Opportunity)

Critical to any effective movement for social change is the capacity to read the signs of the times … not only to be able to recognize and name a crisis, but to identify those shifts in opportunity that introduce brief windows of time in which change becomes possible.

Clearly as we conclude the first decade of the 21st century we are in such a time. On January 20, 2009, the nation celebrated the inauguration of Barack Obama, who was swept into office on a wave of hope for change. The stunning political moment expressed the frustrations of a public who would not accept the trends of war, violence, and economic instability as deterministic trajectories. While unclear of the policy implications, there was a consensus that change was needed. Concurrent with the recession, Americans were also experiencing the need to make changes in their personal lives and family budgets. The sea was changing.

Paradigm shifts occur in different ways besides political and economic changes. There was also a sense of uncertainty about the future that was stirred up by the political transition. Many whose jobs and economic stability was fragile experienced a new wave of fear. Perhaps related to this, a number of gun-related tragedies occurred in 2009—the murder of a doctor who had performed abortions while he was at Sunday worship, the killing of an abortion protester, the massacre of dedicated staff people at a community center for new immigrants, the murder of three police officers in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and four in Oakland, California, and the killings of women at a fitness center, among them. Tragedies such as these become a moment when we can publicly lament and bitterly weep like Rachel, but also cry out “No more!” If guns were less accessible and more carefully monitored with licensing and waiting periods, if policies for carefully following disturbed and threatening individuals were in place and enforced, then these lives might have been spared. But the first step is to pay careful attention to what is happening—to shifts in social opportunities that make change possible—and to make sure that we do not become inured to the tragic and preventable loss of life. To honor the silenced voices we must pay attention, speak out, and give wit-ness to God’s “No” to gun violence.

4. Resources Available

Significant social change is possible only when there are resources available to support movements that address policies, structures, and cultural values. Financial resources are of course important to make advocacy efforts possible. Americans still give more to their communities of faith than to any other charity or cause. Certainly the stewardship of our treasure will need to reflect the commitments of our hearts in supporting efforts to prevent gun violence.

But capital comes in many other forms as well—social, cultural, and spiritual. Prayer and worship cannot be undervalued as the most powerful resource of the church. In worship we can give voice to the suffering caused by gun violence and join in prayer to align our hearts with God’s intentions through the Holy Spirit. The church also brings many kinds of “social capital” to the table. We are part of a connectional system and a larger ecumenical community representing millions of people. We have the capacity to train leaders and educate ourselves on the issues. We have spaces for meetings and can have credibility as moral leaders.

An underutilized resource is public opinion. Currently three out of four Americans believe that gun laws should be “stricter, making it harder for people to purchase guns.” Looking more closely at the respondents, there is a large consensus across Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish perspectives. Those who attend worship weekly, monthly, or yearly do not differ significantly in their perspectives. Even political ideology does not make that much of a difference: about 71 percent of self-defined political conservatives favor stricter laws compared to 79 percent of those who consider themselves liberals. Over the past thirty years, in fact, there has been a steady increase in the proportion of Americans who want more regulation of guns:

- Those supporting police permits to carry guns increased from 70 percent to 79 percent.
- 85 percent now support limiting sales of high power/50 caliber rifles.
- 82 percent want to limit sales of semiautomatic assault weapons.
- 80 percent now support mandatory criminal background checks for private gun sales.

This common sense is a resource that needs to find its collective voice. In this we agree with Allen Rostron’s paper, “Cease Fire: A ‘Win-Win’ Strategy on Gun Policy for the Obama Administration” with its sense of practical possibility and claim that despite the shrill voices, there is a massive desire in our culture to make some progress again.

5. A Sense of Viability in Change: the Christian Hope

Even with a compelling grievance, strong moral imperative, shift in political opportunities, and an abundance of re-sources, social change cannot take place without the most important ingredient—a sense of viability that change is, indeed, possible. For Reformed Christians we claim the hope that God is active in the world and that there is hope in this world, as well as the next, that God’s glory can be manifest. As sinful as humans are, individually and collectively, the Good News is that God does not give up on us. Ever. Transformation is possible and God’s “Yes” in Jesus Christ confirms for us every day that we are worth the effort.

As people of faith, we need to embrace and celebrate this hope, which continues to be incarnated in history:

- Who would have imagined that a Baptist preacher and determined people of faith could have successfully challenged the unjust laws and practices of segregation?
- When the world expected a bloody resolution to the struggle against the iron fist of apartheid in South Africa, who knew that local and global resistance movements could bring about a peaceful transition to a democratic, racially inclusive society?
- Who would have predicted that a country addicted to cigarettes and the power of the Big Tobacco could be trans-formed?
- Who would have imagined that the mobilized grief of mothers who had lost their children to drunk drivers could change cultural values, social practices, and legal accountability around drunk driving?
- Despite the protestations from the ubiquitous gun lobby, we know that increased regulation of guns does work. The six states with the lowest per capita rates of gun death (Hawaii, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey) are all considered to have strong gun laws.
God’s work in the world through people of faith needs to be lifted up. We must repent of our lack of faith, which laments that nothing can change. Our hope must be nurtured, informed, and celebrated with a resolve in our faith communities to resist those who cry, “‘Peace, peace,’ when there is no peace” (Jer. 6:14). Let us study and act to heed God’s call to prevent gun violence.

E. The Call to Action

God has provided us with the elements to be agents of change in the world. The change needs to be comprehensive: we need to address the idolatry of guns, the violence that permeates our culture, our obsessions with personal rights over public responsibility, the practices of widespread and indiscriminate sale of military style weapons, as well as the legislation necessary to regulate the accessibility and sale of military weapons disguised as “sporting guns.” We must keep our “eyes on the prize,” of preventing gun violence and the unnecessary deaths and injuries that result. Enough blood has been spilled. We affirm that through good organizational effort, animated by the passion for justice that comes to the people of God through the Holy Spirit, gun violence can be dramatically reduced.

May our Church re-dedicate itself to this crucial task.

[Note: The Gun Violence Study Group met twice in addition to a September 2008 conference that initially brought together three of the group members and staff. The team was chaired by Bryan Miller, director of Cease-Fire, NJ, formerly in international sales; James Atwood, a retired pastor and former mission co-worker in Japan; Catherine Snyder, a campus minister at Virginia Tech; Deborah Brincivalli, executive presbyter, Presbytery of West Jersey, formerly a pastor and police officer; Vernon Carroll, National Parks administrator and former rancher; James Noel, professor at San Francisco Theological Seminary; and John Knapp, university professor of ethics at Samford University who was also liaison member from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP). Julio Medina, also appointed, was unable to serve. Professor Katie Day, Lutheran Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, served as consultant writer, with Christian Iosso, ACSWP coordinator, serving as staff. The report’s title comes from the title of the September 2008 conference co-sponsored by ACSWP, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, and the Stony Point Conference Center, which hosted the event. The team’s meetings in Philadelphia and Washington, D.C., included meetings with experts in the field with different views on strategy and message.]

The study suggests that repeated exposure to violent images heightens our readiness to take action even as it suppresses the region of the brain that modulates aggression.” The director of this study, Joy Hirsch, does not argue causal linkages between exposure to imagery and specific acts of violence, but use of the new brain-scanning technology has changed a debate that has been going on for fifty years and has involved a range of behavior-affecting drugs. It is beyond the scope of this resolution to describe all elements in the culture related to violence. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives (ATF) says more than 90 percent of the guns seized in Mexico that can be traced, originated in the U.S. In 2008, the Mexican government sent the ATF 11,000 arms for tracing. According to an ATF spokesman, all were successfully traced (testimony of March 24, 2008, by Agent William Newell) … Guns sold illegally in Mexico reportedly are bought legally in US gun stores along the border by so-called ‘straw purchasers,’ such as those employed by (trafficker named) Hernandez in San Antonio.”

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-06

Comment on 11-06—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women (RE&WM/PW) ministry area works with congregations in the areas of racial ethnic and new immigrant church growth and transformation, leadership development, networking with women, and assuring that the church is inclusive, expansive, and racially just. The RE&WM/PW ministry area would be able to support and encourage church-wide faithfulness to these commitments. However, the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry Area of the General Assembly Mission Council is the more appropriate entity to continue to provide resources on gun violence to Presbyterians.

The Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry area concurs with this comment.
Item 11-07

[The assembly disapproved Item 11-07 with comment. See pp. 39, 42.]

[Comment: With thanksgiving for the diligence and hard work of the authors of the study paper, On Living a Human Life Before God, the original paper, The Nature and Value of Human Life (1981), is in many ways superior as a tool for moral discourse. Moreover, the concerns of the overture approved by the 212th General Assembly (2000), Overture 00-95: On Gun Violence, are more adequately addressed by Item 11-06 of this year’s report: “Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Mobilizing in Response to God’s Call.”]

On Living a Human Life Before God—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) do the following:

1. Recognizing that God calls Presbyterian congregations to become communities of moral discourse, approves the study paper, “On Living a Human Life Before God,” as a resource and directs the Stated Clerk to have it posted on-line, distributed to congregations in the social witness policy CD, and printed in limited quantity.

2. Directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Theology, Worship & Education ministry area, to develop resources that will aid congregations in identifying and developing practices of ethical reflection as communities of covenantal responsibility seeking to hear the voice of God and the voices of others in the context of serious and complex issues.

Rationale

On Living a Human Life Before God

Abstract

This request was subsequently referred to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP). The 1981 report followed a 1975 request for “a theology of life true to the Scriptures.” The primary concerns at that time were abortion, euthanasia, war, and capital punishment (all issues that involve the taking of human life).

The study paper, The Nature and Value of Human Life, or NVHL, provides clear guidance and continues to be helpful to members of the PC(USA) in pastoral counseling as well as in defining the denominational stance. It has since been supplemented by other related documents, but thirty years after the adoption of the NHVL, new opportunities and questions face us in areas including violence, genetics, climate change, human rights, pollution of water and air, and the management of resources needed to sustain human life.

In light of these changes, we invite congregations to reflect anew on what it means to live a human life before God at the beginning of the 21st century. What is our proper relation to God’s other creatures and to the ecological systems of which we are a part? How can we manage and distribute food, fuel, and water in a way that reflects God’s desire for justice?

This study paper sets forth a scripturally based, globally grounded responsibility ethic for the 21st century.

Blessing is the fundamental fact of our existence. Genesis 1 describes our creation on an abundant earth with two unique gifts: being “in God’s image” and having “dominion over.” We are to be responsible, both sharing in and promoting the blessings God gives. In the covenants with Noah and his family, Abraham and Sarah, Hagar and Ishmael, God’s blessing and call to responsibility are further clarified. When God chooses to become present on earth in human form, we receive additional blessing and responsibility.

This paper outlines the history of Reformed perspectives on social responsibility and concludes with a call to congregations to form a “community of moral discourse”—that is, a group committed to reflect together on our values and how we can respond to specific challenges we face in this century.
A. Introduction

In 1975, the PCUS General Assembly directed its Council on Theology and Culture to prepare a statement “setting forth a theology of life true to the Scriptures.” The primary concerns at that time were abortion, euthanasia, war, and capital punishment (all issues that involve the taking of human life).

The resulting 1981 paper begins with a statement of the proper valuing of human life as found in Scripture. Using Ex. 20:13 and Ps. 8, the argument repeatedly sets forth an ethic of “doing no harm” and “acting to prevent harm.” In any particular case of conflict between these principles, the document recommends the course of action “most consistent” with valuing human life as Scripture does. Next it provides a theological analysis of the nature of human life, followed by issue studies on abortion, euthanasia, human medical experimentation, capital punishment, war, and suicide. The NVHL provides clear guidance and continues to be helpful to members of the PC(USA) in pastoral counseling as well as in defining the denominational stance.

It has since been supplemented by other related documents, such as:

- The Covenant of Life and the Caring Community adopted by the UPCUSA General Assembly in 1983.
- Covenant and Creation: Theological Reflections on Contraception and Abortion also adopted by the UPCUSA General Assembly in 1983.
- Genetics, Health and Personhood produced by the UPCUSA task force and published in Church & Society 73:1, September–October, 1982.
- Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion, PC(USA), 2003; revised 2006.
- Resolution on Violence, Religion and Terrorism, PC(USA), 2004.
- Transforming Families, PC(USA), 2004.
- Living into the Body of Christ: Towards Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities, PC(USA), 2006.

Some of these publications were approved by the General Assembly; others were only received for study. Together they represent a body of research and reflection worth remembering at this time. Regarding the six issues addressed in the 1981 paper and in subsequent documents, there is little fundamentally new to be said; our church remains divided over many of them.

Thirty years after the adoption of the NVHL, new opportunities and questions face us. The earth now produces enough food to end hunger, so justice in management and distribution of food has become an important issue. Human pollution of water and air are major problems. Climate change has become a concern worldwide, as well as the need to move toward renewable sources of fuel. In addition, science and technology have given us new ways to fight disease and to understand the genetic blueprint that defines each of us. The threat of violence, however, haunts our lives, from our city streets to terrorist attacks and the possibility of nuclear warfare.

In light of these changes and pressures, we invite congregations to reflect anew on what it means to live a human life before God at the beginning of the 21st century.

Our human nature and our ultimate value are rooted in God’s fidelity in the past, as recorded in the Bible and in the lives of God’s servants. They are also rooted in the Spirit’s present activity in, among, and through us, and in our eschatological hope for the fullness of salvation in Jesus Christ for all of creation.

Along with Jews and Muslims, we trust in the covenants God has made with us, recorded throughout God’s Word, first in Genesis and Exodus, then in the words of the prophets. As Christians, we share in a renewed covenant centered in God’s act of redemption on the cross. We take Jesus as the model of what it means to be truly human and as the One who transforms us by the Spirit so that we too may learn to love and live justly in this world, trusting in the goodness and power of the Creator.
In this paper, we invite groups within churches to become intentional communities of moral discourse, that is, groups committed to reflect together on who we are, what our values are, and how we can respond to specific challenges we face in this century.

Genesis 1:26–28 presents stewardship as a defining aspect of our human nature: the earth and all its beings are gifts from God for our responsible use and care. Many of the problems facing the human race in 2010 are related to our unwise use of these resources. How can we manage and distribute food, fuel, and water in a way that reflects God’s desire for justice? Violence has been used to capture and control resources since the beginning of civilization. As a church, can we begin to understand and decrease the violence in our homes, streets, and international relations? What is structural violence, and how do we participate in it?

What is our proper relation to God’s other creatures and to the ecological systems of which we are a part? How can we decrease our impact on what these beings need to sustain their families and communities? How can we manage human genetic knowledge to benefit—not harm—our generation and future generations? These are questions that humanity faces at the beginning of the 21st century.

The scriptural, theological, and ethical traditions of Reformed thought provide abundant resources to guide us as we work through these moral issues. When we read Scripture and the founders of Reformed tradition, blessing and covenant emerge as central themes. Along with blessing comes responsibility, often expressed as part of a covenant.

Thus our study brings us to a scripturally based, globally grounded responsibility ethic, in which we acknowledge and live out appropriate human choices among possible courses of action.

In our conversations as a community of moral discourse, we may disagree on specific choices and ways of being responsible before God. But perhaps our greatest task is simply to reflect God’s image by listening to each other and communicating honestly—not retreating into separate corners and condemning our brothers and sisters in Christ.

B. God’s Blessing in Creation and Our Response

We are blessed: this is the fundamental fact of our existence. We walk in beauty on a green planet nourished by water and sunlight, surrounded by plants and animals of astounding variety. Starry skies, ocean depths, and mountain heights fill us with curiosity and awe; they speak to us of a Creator, who also reaches out to us through prophets and Scriptures, even taking on our human form.

The first chapter of Genesis repeats the chorus, “And God saw that it was good,” seven times. God blesses “swarms of living creatures” brought forth from the waters, as well as blessing humankind and the day of rest.

We learn from this account that God gave humans a unique blessing and role: “Let us make humankind in our image, according to our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the wild animals of the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps upon the earth” (Gen. 1:26). These words define both the nature and the value of humanity.

Many have debated what it means to be “in God’s image” and to “have dominion over,” but it is clear that image and dominion are linked. Our position in relation to the rest of creation is to be like that of God: caring and providing, as God nurtures and delights in creation. We are to be responsible, both sharing in and promoting the blessings God gives.

God’s creative power and grace have from the beginning been at work in the world. Blessing is thus grounded in what Reformed Christians have called common grace. It is there for all human beings and always has been. The message of God’s benevolent presence can be read in each sunrise and sunset by anyone with ears to hear and eyes to see. In short, all humans have been blessed and can become agents of God’s blessing—these two facts alone express the value to God of human life. They also define the core of human nature.

The pattern of God’s blessing conferring human responsibility recurs throughout Scripture. This special bond of trust and expectation between creature and Creator is given the name covenant in Gen. 9:9, when God blesses Noah and his family after the flood. In fact, this covenant encompasses not only humans but “every living creature that is with you, the birds, the domestic animals, and every animal of the earth with you.” All creation is good and welcomed into this covenant—even the earth itself: “I have set my bow in the clouds, and it shall be a sign of the covenant between me and the earth” (Gen. 13).

C. Blessing in Jesus Christ

We who have been made new in Jesus Christ experience another kind of blessing: awareness of God in Christ, “reconciling the world to himself” (2 Cor. 5:19). Our lives become an expression of the work of redeeming grace in us. As we drink in God’s blessing, we accept a responsibility to be blessing to others, even to humankind as a whole. As individuals, as a church, and as members of the social order, we can make tangible God’s intention for human life.

Being blessed means carrying God’s gift of deep well-being with us in all we do and say, and ministering that well-being to the lives of others. By being in Jesus Christ, we can be channels of the gift of blessing, not only to people we know but to all human beings and to other creatures on this planet.

We believe that the Creator of the universe entered into solidarity with human reality in Jesus Christ. God’s choice to become present on earth in human form—in our quarrelsome, violent species—reveals profound confidence in who we are and who we can become. Thus incarnation was a gift, and one whereby we receive a tremendous responsibility. “Follow me,” Jesus said (Mk. 1:17; Lk. 18:22). “Rejoice always, pray without ceasing, give thanks in all circumstances,” wrote Paul (1 Thess. 5:16–18).

In addition to our personal walk with Jesus, we are to love our neighbor and to “have dominion”—to care about God’s promises to all life on earth. We are not responsible for bringing about the promise of God’s reign on earth (that would be works righteousness), but we are responsible to that promise. We must live in hope, accountable before God, who desires that every tear be wiped away.

1 Peter 3:15 is instructive here: “Always be ready to make your defense to anyone who demands from you an accounting for the hope that is in you.” This passage is usually interpreted to mean being ready to use persuasive words in explaining or defending one’s faith, but it may also mean to be accountable for how we have used the hope given to us. We are called to witness to a fear-filled world that God will not abandon God’s own creation.

D. God’s Call to Do Justice

By faith in “Jesus Christ, the Word of God incarnate,” we receive and obey the Bible as “the word of God written” (The Book of Confessions 9:27). Our Scriptures are among the most profound and complex moral narratives to have been produced in the developmental history of the human species.

God’s Word to us begins with blessing and calls us to response. Each story of the people of Israel and the disciples of Jesus refines our sense of what it means to be in covenant with a loving but righteous Creator. Moses learns that his life is not his own to spend tending sheep in Midian. He is called to return to Egypt and be God’s instrument in freeing the Hebrew people from slavery. Then at Mt. Sinai the Creator reveals to Moses both God’s nature and human responsibility in the Ten Commandments: “I, YHWH, your God, am a jealous God, inflicting punishment … for wickedness … but bestowing mercy…” (Ex. 20:5–6).

God continues to speak through Moses and to call the people of Israel not only to obedience but to love, in the great Shema Israel: “Hear, O Israel: The LORD is our God, the LORD alone. You shall love the LORD your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might” (Deut. 6:4–5). In addition to this preeminent commandment, God presents through Moses many specific ways of being responsible to God: details of sacrifice and prayer and priestly dress; laws regarding slaves, property damage, and loans; offerings for the expiation of various sins.

When the nations of Israel and Judah ignore God’s mandates, prophets arise to call them to repentance. In each case, God reminds the people of the great blessings they have received and calls them to respond accordingly. One memorable restatement of God’s call comes from the prophet Micah: “... and what does the LORD require of you, but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God?” (Mic. 6:8).

Hundreds of years later when someone asks how to inherit eternal life, Jesus answers, “What is written in the law?” and approves the man’s answer quoting the Shema: “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your strength, and with all your mind; and your neighbor as yourself” (Lk. 10:25–28; cf. Deut. 6:4–5).

In the 21st century it sometimes puzzles us that the same Scriptures speaking these profound truths also contain passages in which customs such as genocide, slavery, and the subordination of women are taken for granted. The Bible contains many voices with differing perspectives. There are “justificatory narratives” that legitimate privilege and power, but there are other voices in the Bible that raise prophetic challenge to privilege.

To include God’s voice in our community of moral discourse, we must stay grounded in study of the Bible. If we search Scripture, we will learn more about blessing and responsibility. We will find that blessing must not be equated with comfort or privilege. The call to responsibility is not license for condescending instruction to the less privileged. Regardless of our socioeconomic status, we are blessed with God’s image and have the capacity to seek God’s face (Ps.27:8), as well as the responsibility to carry blessing to others.

Both blessing and responsibility are grounded in our fundamental relation to our Creator; they increase when we grow in faith and experience of God’s grace in Jesus Christ.
Human history in Genesis begins with creation and a blessing that connects us to responsibility for living creatures and for the earth. In later chapters of Genesis and other books of the Hebrew Scriptures, we find historical accounts, psalms, prophecy, and poetry that clarify what it means to live as humans carrying God’s image.

1. Abraham, Sarah, and Hagar

We see both blessing and responsibility in Gen. 12:1–3, the call to Abram to decamp from Mesopotamia (the territory now called Iraq) and travel to Canaan (now called Palestine).

Now the Lord said to Abram, “Go from your country and your kindred and your father’s house to the land that I will show you. I will make of you a great nation, and I will bless you, and make your name great, so that you will be a blessing. I will bless those who bless you, and the one who curses you I will curse; and in you all the families of the earth shall be blessed.” [An alternate translation, “by you all the families of the earth shall bless themselves,” gives other nations an active role as they honor Abraham’s great blessing and wish a similar one for themselves.]

In any case, God calls Abram to accept new responsibilities, no longer as a nomad chieftain but as a world-historical religious figure. Abram in himself and through his descendants will become a blessing, a source of abundant life. Those who curse him will find that abundance withdrawn.

Note that the promise does not come to fruition immediately. Many points of tension unfold: a famine in the land of promise, a sojourn in Egypt, a prophecy of slavery for four hundred years.

Furthermore, God’s offer of blessing comes to a man who is far from perfect. He secures his well-being at the expense of Sarai when he makes her sexually available to Pharaoh and to King Abimelech: “at every place to which we come, say of me, He is my brother” (Gen. 12: 11–20; 20:13). He and Sarah send Hagar and Ishmael into the desert. He calculates how to enrich himself at the expense of the peoples of the world for whom he is supposed to be some sort of blessing. In fact, his blessing is a call to grow into God’s promise, neither a sign of moral stature nor a license to exploit.

As Abram struggles and grows, he learns that he and Sarai are equal partners in the blessing. God tells him twice, “I will bless her.” He learns that the ambiguous earlier promise, “I will make of you a great nation,” included Sarai from the beginning: “… she shall give rise to nations” (Gen. 17:16). Both are renamed to reflect blessing.

Their earlier plan to help God out by having a son through Hagar had left no role for Sarah. As the years passed, she recognized “the wrong done to me” (Gen. 16:5). No longer the cooperative wife, she called on God to hold Abram accountable and to “judge between you and me.” At this point the blessing was imperiled by conflict between the two primary actors in the drama.

In addition, the slave woman Hagar was abused by both Sarah and Abraham. Twice she and her son Ishmael were abandoned in the wilderness to die. Powerless and in despair, Hagar asked only, “Do not let me look on the death of the child” (Gen. 21:16). Then she “lifted up her voice and wept.”

God intervenes at this point to correct the wrong done to Hagar and Ishmael by Abraham and Sarah, the two bearers of blessing. The first single parent and the first person in the Bible to flee oppression, Hagar becomes also “the first person whom a messenger of God visits; the first woman to receive an annunciation; the only woman to receive a divine promise of descendants,” as Phyllis Trible notes in Hagar, Sarah, and Their Children (2006). (Sarah’s promise is mediated through Abraham.) Hagar’s and Sarah’s sons will each become fathers of “a great nation.” Thus Hagar also is blessed by God, not just Abraham and not just Abraham and Sarah.

God intervenes at this point to correct the wrong done to Hagar and Ishmael by Abraham and Sarah, the two bearers of blessing. The first single parent and the first person in the Bible to flee oppression, Hagar becomes also “the first person whom a messenger of God visits; the first woman to receive an annunciation; the only woman to receive a divine promise of descendants,” as Phyllis Trible notes in Hagar, Sarah, and Their Children (2006). (Sarah’s promise is mediated through Abraham.) Hagar’s and Sarah’s sons will each become fathers of “a great nation.” Thus Hagar also is blessed by God, not just Abraham and not just Abraham and Sarah.

Though both Abraham and Sarah wanted to take their blessing as a sign of privilege, God corrected them, saying in essence “You are part of my plan, but the powerless are also included in the sweep of my blessing. I hear their voices.” We learn that living a human life before God requires being like God in the world. The privileged are to care about each person, including those who work for them and those who face injustice. Those with less social standing are also to care and reflect God’s image, calling for justice and God’s intervention.

The lines of tension in this story—patriarchy and women, slaves and abuse—point toward prophetic analysis of power and social corruption. In later passages of Scripture, faithfulness is not just a matter of worshipping God or keeping the Ten Commandments. The prophets care deeply about the plight of the poor and disenfranchised on the margins of the covenant community. They should be our model as we organize a community of moral discourse in our congregation. We need to make special efforts to listen to people who are most disadvantaged or impacted by injustice. Giving greater weight to the voices of persons economically disadvantaged is called “the preferential option for the poor.”

Through this study of Genesis, we can conclude that blessing means a conferral, by God or on behalf of God, of both deep well-being and a specific vocation of responsibility in the world. Abraham and Sarah also pass down to us a responsibility to be instruments by whom all are blessed and to learn from their mistakes of misusing and disrespecting Hagar. When we live properly empowered by blessing, God and God’s name are blessed in return.

In succeeding generations of the life of Israel, much goes wrong with implementing the promise given to Abraham and repeated to Moses. God’s blessings come to be considered as possessions—of land and crops and wives and children—rather than as responsibilities to a promise of blessing for all earth’s families. Israel’s kings try to be like those of the nations around them, obsessed with grandeur and military power, rather than carrying out their responsibility to be a blessing. Conflicts follow between monarchical Israel and other nations; prophets repeatedly call Israel back to the global responsibilities of the covenant and foresee a messiah who will put things right and renew the original blessing of Gen. 1:28.

As Christians, we believe that the coming of Jesus, the Messiah, is the beginning of fulfillment of the promise in Genesis 1 to which we are called to be responsible. The promise remains real though we live out a history of distorted attempts to achieve it. God renews the promise in Revelations 21, which speaks of the coming Holy City of God and an end to the suffering begun in Genesis 3. Finally, Rev. 22:7 reinstates for us the original blessings of Genesis: “Blessed is the one who keeps the words of the prophecy of this book.”

2. Elizabeth, Mary, and Jesus

Jesus Christ is the One who fulfills the covenant promise, who heals creation by taking on himself all the wounds of a fallen world.

In the Gospel according to Matthew, Jesus is the teacher describing what all humans need to do as sharers in the covenant with Abraham: “in you all the families of the earth shall be blessed” (Gen. 12:3). Many of his parables challenge customs regarding agricultural economics and the debt system of Palestine in the first century, so ruinous to the poor. Jesus is concerned with the well-being of humans, asking those around him to be responsible to God’s blessing.

Jesus’ life as recorded in the Gospels is our foremost model for what it is to live a human life before God, and in Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John we find the repeated theme of blessing followed by responsibility. Jesus’ birth is heralded by Elizabeth, who prophesies to Mary “with a loud cry,” in Lk. 1:42–45:

Blessed are you among women, and blessed is the fruit of your womb . . . For as soon as I heard the sound of your greeting, the child in my womb leaped for joy. And blessed is she who believed that there would be a fulfillment of what was spoken to her by the Lord.

Two women in a small town in the Roman-controlled province of Judea experience blessing physically, in their pregnant bodies, with questions, wonder, and acceptance of the responsibility that lies ahead. In this passage we are reminded that God blesses and uses the poor and illiterate. Indeed, these two were chosen to reveal God and call us all to responsible living.

Mary responds to Elizabeth’s blessing with a profound sense of the call to which blessing leads. She moves from praise to prophecy, affirming that from the first covenant with Abraham, the Creator’s intent has been mercy and justice. Mary realizes that her life and that of her child will bring fulfillment of promise. God has acted for those who are hungry, lowly, and God-fearing. Although Mary does not specifically mention Sarah or the covenants with Noah, Hagar, and Ishmael, we understand Sarah to be an equal partner in that first covenant with the Hebrew people and all these covenants to be expressions of the one covenant of grace.

The most well-known record of Jesus’ preaching begins, “Blessed are you who are poor, for yours is the kingdom of God,” and continues with “you who are hungry,” “you who weep,” (Lk. 6:20–26), and in Matthew “the meek,” “the merciful,” etc. (Mt: 5:3–13) These statements may be acts of blessing, conferring well-being, or they may be primarily gifts of responsibility to be what these words say. Alternatively, they may be expressions of recognition that blessings are already at work in these types of persons.

In any case, being educated, powerful, or wealthy is not necessary for being blessed or for extending blessing to others. In fact, this status may be a hindrance as Luke explains: “But woe to you who are rich … Woe to you when all speak well of you” (Lk. 6:24, 26). These people are aligned with Israel’s false prophets, not with those who called for justice. It is the poor and disenfranchised who are blessings to the rest of us, witnessing to injustices in our society and in our own lives that we would prefer not to see. If we are willing to learn how our choices may be tied to conditions that perpetuate hunger, we begin to be blessed by the poor. We may become close to a poor family and learn from its members about generosity and radical trust in God.

3. Parable of the Sheep and Goats

The final parable in Matthew’s gospel is often seen as summing up Jesus’ teaching (Mt. 25:31–46). We are familiar with the comparison to a shepherd separating sheep and goats, but here the “Son of Man” on the throne of glory separates “the nations” (ethne meaning “peoples, tribes”) not individuals.
Actually, this is a parable about blessing. The issue is whether the peoples practice social justice, ordering their lives around the responsibility of bringing blessing to the least privileged of the families of the earth. The words “Come, you that are blessed by my Father” clearly refer to those whose lives with one another have fulfilled the responsibility toward others laid on them by having received God’s blessing.

Jesus here places great value on the just organization of society, based on love for each person, especially those most vulnerable. He cares about the social contexts necessary for humans to develop their capacity to be a blessing to others.

This parable reflects Jesus’ mode of presence in the world, expressed by deeds such as eating with sinners, honoring a Samaritan, and commending the widow who gave a mite. We find Jesus when we share in his solidarity with those most excluded from prosperity and from having a voice.

Many more New Testament passages describe human life before God in terms of blessing. To understand further the connection between Jesus and the ancient promise “in you all the families of the earth shall be blessed,” we will now briefly survey Reformed understandings of social responsibility.

F. Reformed Perspectives on Social Responsibility

The PC(USA)’s stance on social responsibility is grounded in Reformed tradition and is affirmed in resolutions and statements approved by the General Assembly or received for study over the past thirty years. See, for example, those listed in the introduction to this document. The church has expressed responsibility in areas such as peacemaking, global economics, sustainable development, violence, contraception, and abortion. What we know today as the Reformed tradition began, and has continued, as one strand in the long history of biblical interpretation. Luther, Calvin, and other leaders of the Reformation implemented a re-reading and re-interpretation of Scripture, one among many in the history of the church.

“Reformed tradition” is actually a complex history of many voices. The term designates the broad theological and ecclesiastical vision characteristic of Reformation churches in such places as Switzerland, France, Hungary, Scotland, the Netherlands, northwestern Germany, New England, and the Middle Atlantic states. Already in the 16th century there were many divisions within the Reformed tradition, both geographic and theological, most of which have been handed down within denominations that still exist today. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a long history within this tradition, and many younger Reformed churches developed as Protestant Christianity spread from Europe to other parts of the world.

One writer at the 1991 Seoul General Council of the World Association of Reformed Churches (WARC) spoke of the “many cultures” of Reformed Christianity, ranging from orthodox Calvinism to American evangelicalism and to the “witness of peace” churches. Though Reformed tradition can be viewed generally as a set of attitudes toward Scripture interpretation, theological reflection, and life together in church and world, to be Reformed today is not to hold certain identifiable views. It is to be in the conversation among these various voices.

One thing is sure: our Reformed forebears developed scriptural ways of answering—for their time—questions similar to those we are asking today. They asked how the redeemed sinner is to know what kind of responsibility she or he bears in the world. Despite disagreement on other issues, there is surprising continuity in Reformed thinking concerning the nature of human responsibility to God’s promises.

Here are some of the milestones in the history of Reformed thought on social responsibility:

- Calvin’s understanding of sanctification and his “third use of the law” concept,
- His view of public office as a form of ministry,
- “Covenant of works” theology, rooted in the “federal theology” of Heinrich Bullinger,
- Influences on the political philosophy of John Locke (1623–1704),
- “Common grace” in the thinking of Abraham Kuyper and Richard Mouw,
- Reformed liberation theologies such as the work of James H. Cone and Justo Gonzalez.

In the last forty years, liberation theologians have raised important questions for Reformed thinking on social responsibility. Their method begins with human experience and brings insights from that experience to the task of thinking about God and about human responsibility. For example, Catholic theologian Ada Maria Isasi-Díaz reports on the struggle of Latina women to be recognized as fully responsible moral agents. Their struggle for liberation begins with naming, confronting, and overcoming the barriers to exercising responsibility. Isasi-Díaz calls for greater accountability from those with power in social, political, and economic systems, while liberating the Latina/o community to engage in changing the quality of their lives. For more discussion, see PC(USA) booklets on subjects such as mujerista theology, feminist theology, womanist theology, and Asian American women’s theology.

The World Alliance of Reformed Churches has welcomed insights from liberation theology, particularly in Ottawa (1982), Debrecen, Hungary (1997), and Accra, Ghana (2004). The Reformed tradition today represents established social and economic powers less than it did in Calvin’s time and throughout much of its history. From a position closer to the margins, the Reformed churches may begin to learn solidarity with those whose lives have been devastated by the economic and military choices of others.

In short, both the “responsible society” ethic and the “fight injustice” ethic are needed in the world today. Reformed churches must hear the call to bring down unjust global economic structures, even while striving for the order of a responsible society.

G. Reflecting God’s Image Through Moral Discourse

Both Scripture and our Reformed tradition teach us that acceptance of blessing and enactment of responsibility are central to living a human life before God.

One way to figure out how to be responsible is to share our ideas and insights together, while also studying the facts of a particular problem. By gathering, speaking honestly about our ideas and experiences, and respecting each other in dialogue, we reflect God’s image.

Thus starting a community of moral discourse helps to fulfill those two uniquely human tasks—bearing God’s image and having “dominion.” Together in a nonjudgmental group we can ask:

- How do blessing and responsibility shape our own personal conduct?
- What do we stand for as a denomination, and how should we express it?
- How can we participate in building social structures in which all may live responsibly as citizens?

We can explore answers through study and prayer, talking honestly together. (One conclusion is not necessarily to be expected in this conversation.)

1. Ingredients for Successful Moral Discourse

Let us now look at three aspects of the conversation in an intentional community of moral discourse.

- Gathering the facts of whatever particular situation you are examining. In addition to finding information, statistics, and history, ask, “How does this situation look to persons who are silenced or marginalized by social structures or by our typical ways of thinking?” Seek out such persons, whether within your congregation, on the other side of town, or on another continent, listening to them with patience and humility, questioning your assumptions, and acknowledging your own standpoint (the particular set of ethnic, gender, age, educational, economic and other circumstances that frame your perspective).

- Being open to God’s Holy Spirit as you consider information being gathered. When you begin to define the broad situation, the Spirit may lay on your hearts a particular course of action that could make a difference. On the other hand, God’s Spirit may simply bless you by healing divisions and giving you greater understanding of your neighbors through this process of moral discourse.

- Identifying the source of your group’s moral passion. Where in Scripture, liturgy, or theology do you hear the call to responsibility for the well-being of others? Perhaps you will choose the command to love in Luke 10:27, or you may choose to expand it by defining your neighbor to include future generations or all living creatures on the planet. Lines from a favorite hymn may express your motivating principles. Your group may decide to list several relevant principles that surface and demand your attention, even if they seem to conflict.

As your conversation continues, you may from time to time gather additional information, redefine the principles that motivate you, or again seek the direction of the Holy Spirit. There are many resources for guidance in forming a community of moral discourse. For example, see The Church as Moral Community by Lewis Mudge (1998) and other resources listed at the end of this document.

2. Growing as a Community

A church that commits to developing as a community of moral discourse will notice growth in the following areas.

a. Positioning

Initially the congregation will consider its social location within the larger community. What is its make-up by age, ethnicity, socioeconomic level, and other criteria? Based on this composition, what insights can it bring to city councils, to community organizing, or to the PC(USA)? Whether the church is poor or privileged, it has gifts to use so that the prayer “Thy will be done on earth” may be fulfilled. On the other hand, what does this congregation need to learn? A congregation with social power will need to listen to those on the margins.

Theologically, the classic Reformed position of church in society is as follows: we do not see ourselves as somehow above the problems of our world, nor do we see ourselves as outside agents bringing in a revolutionary solution. Neither do we live as a radically separate alternative community, though we can learn from Christians positioned in other ways. Instead, we strive to be close to the centers of creativity and vision from which transformative forces within society are likely to arise. By accepting the call to be involved in civil society through schools, unions, local government, service clubs, nonprofit organizations, etc., members of a congregation can both listen and serve.

b. Continuous Analysis

Jesus taught us to consider our actions toward those who are hungry, thirsty, sick, or in prison—“the least of these” who are members of the human family. A community of moral discourse will seek to understand what is happening to persons who live on the margins, including members of its own congregation such as seniors, unemployed, and persons with disabilities. Rather than learning about poverty or racism or prisons in statistical terms only, we will listen to individuals themselves, seeking to become conscious of how systematic social disadvantage is actually experienced, both in the global south and in our own neighborhoods.

Participating in a community organization already doing service is a good way to learn, whether it be a literacy campaign or a group working with children to give them alternatives to gang affiliation. If the church rents space for a soup kitchen or meetings of a nonprofit group such as Alcoholics Anonymous, members could get involved and learn. Others could meet with community leaders, peace activists, or local professors to learn more about structural oppression and how to avoid participating in it. With practice, analysis of things we take for granted will become a habit.

c. Committed Engagement

Once we see and hear these things better, we can be moved to act more meaningfully and profoundly. Our moral discourse should be not only informative but also self-implicating. We begin to see how our own lives are tied up with conditions that degrade life’s meaning and value for so many others.

d. Carrying the Story

Informed and engaged, members of a congregation can together become bearers of moral narratives needed in a fallen world. We can “tell the old, old story of Jesus and his love,” both in words and in our actions.

Each congregation and denomination, as well as the church in general, tells and retells stories about itself that serve to reinforce the perception that it is doing good in the world, resisting evil, and reflecting the gospel of Jesus Christ. However, we must question our own self-understandings and constituting stories. Only by grace can any congregation be, without self-deception, a social space of genuine moral questioning in the world.

Not by human power alone but in Jesus we can become agents of social change and reconciliation. When we begin to engage in moral discourse, we become the story itself, the good news of God’s presence in a fallen world.

To sum up this report on living a human life before God, we offer an example of a statement of first principles that could be useful to a congregation forming a new community of moral discourse. It is designed to speak to our position early in the 21st century.

An ethic of covenantal responsibility to God’s blessing, as affirmed by the Gospel:

Because our Creator has placed us on this green earth, bearing God’s likeness, we are called to be agents of blessing. Because that One has come to us in the person of Jesus, we are set free from fear and sin. Because we are created and awakened in community by the Spirit, we bear each other’s burdens as members of one body. We carry this message: God is with us and will not abandon us. We follow God into the future, and we act faithfully when we live within God’s covenant.

Item 11-08

[The assembly approved Item 11-08. See pp. 39, 42.]

On a National Moratorium on the Imposition of the Death Penalty—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta respectfully urges the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:
1. Affirm the positions of the 171st (1959), 177th (1965), and the 189th (1977) General Assemblies of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the 106th General Assembly (1966) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and the 197th General Assembly (1985) and 212th General Assembly (2000) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on capital punishment, and declare its continuing opposition to capital punishment.

2. Call for an immediate moratorium on all executions in all jurisdictions that impose capital punishment.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate the call for an immediate moratorium and the PC(USA) continuing opposition to capital punishment to the President of the United States, Congressional representatives, as well as the governors and legislators of the thirty-six states with persons incarcerated and awaiting execution.

Rationale

This is the tenth anniversary of the last resolution of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding capital punishment. As Christians, and as citizens of the United States of America, we believe that one of the greatest tragedies that can occur is the execution of an innocent person by the state; yet we know that this has occurred repeatedly throughout history. Numerous authoritative sources recognize that the death penalty has been imposed in a racially discriminatory manner. Additionally, no state yet has met standards developed by the American Bar Association for appointment, performance, and compensation of counsel for indigent prisoners.

We recognize that the death penalty is a moral issue that demands paramount discernment by legislative and judicial bodies. Between 1973 and November 20, 2009, 139 people have been released from death row with evidence of their innocence, fifty-five since 2000. (Staff Report, House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, October 1993, with updates from Death Penalty Information Center.) From 1973–99, there were 3.1 exonerations per year on average, nationally. From 2000–2007, the average increased to five exonerations per year, nationally. It is then a reasonable assumption that such errors will continue to be made by juries and judges in future death penalty cases. Such errors are not morally defensible.

The legal system, as presently structured, cannot provide any assurance that innocent persons may not be subjected to the death penalty. In recent years, prisoner appeals have actually been curtailed, increasing the risk of the execution of innocent people. “… In 1996, new legislation drastically limited federal court review of death penalty appeals and gutted public funding of legal aid services for death row prisoners …” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 477).

Further, human judgment is flawed and influenced by human sinfulness. For example, in 1990, the United States General Accounting Office reported a pattern of evidence indicating racial disparities in charging, sentencing, and imposition of the death penalty:

In 82 percent of their studies, race of the victim was found to influence the likelihood of being charged with capital murder or receiving a death sentence, i.e. those who murdered whites were found to be more likely to be sentenced to death than those who murdered blacks. This finding was remarkably consistent across data sets, states, data collection methods, and analytic techniques. The finding held for high, medium, and low quality studies. (U.S. General Accounting Office, Report GGD-90-57, “Death Penalty Sentencing: Research Indicates Pattern of Racial Disparities,” February 26, 1990, p. 5, emphasis added.)

A comprehensive study of the death penalty in North Carolina found that the odds of receiving a death sentence rose by 3.5 times among those defendants whose victims were white (Prof. Jack Boger and Dr. Isaac Unah, University of North Carolina, 2001). A study in California found that those who killed whites were over three times more likely to be sentenced to death than those who killed blacks and over four times more likely than those who killed Latinos (Pierce and Radelet, Santa Clara Law Review, 2005). Among the 1206 people who have been executed in the United States since 1977, 259 have been executed for interracial murders. Of these fifteen involved white defendants and black victims and 244 involved black defendants and white victims (Death Penalty Information Center, “Facts about the Death Penalty,” updated May 14, 2010).

Our legal system does not currently assure those accused of crimes of full economic justice. The right to effective counsel is recognized as one of our most fundamental rights, and one of our most important protections against wrongful convictions. About 90 percent of those persons facing capital charges cannot afford their own attorney.

As Christians, we recognize God as sovereign in all spheres of human life, including the political sphere. We declare that God’s law: “Thou shall not kill,” is still good law. We follow a Lord who taught us to go beyond “an eye for an eye.” We believe that human individuals and institutions are sinful and make mistakes. However, as humans we lack any power to correct our errors if we wrongly execute.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 11-08 be approved.
Rationale

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) concurs with the Rationale of Item 11-08, which points out the long-standing position of the PC(USA) in opposing capital punishment when other effective means of assuring public safety are available to a society—such as life imprisonment. And while the church’s decision was not made, and should not be made, on the grounds of economic efficiency, various studies have shown that prosecuting a capital punishment case is actually more costly in financial terms than is life imprisonment.\(^1\)

In addition, Item 11-08’s rationale also raises up a variety of concerns the church has expressed about the quality of justice possible in capital punishment cases given the documented impacts on the criminal justice processes of economic inequality and disparities in the treatment of racial/ethnic minorities. ACSWP further advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that the church’s mission of justice and compassion to a wounded world calls it to challenge the social and economic forces in our society that give rise to communities isolated from economic opportunity, unable to provide high quality public education or family sustaining jobs, often racially segregated, and with few public or private resources necessary to nurture a sense of community and trust. Today, no less than fifty years ago, the church continues to hold that “… capital punishment cannot be condoned by an interpretation of the Bible based upon the revelation of God’s love in Jesus Christ…” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1959, Part I, p. 384) and is “… an expression of vengeance which contradicts the justice of God on the cross…” (Minutes, PCUS, 1978, p. 200) (reaffirmed position in Minutes, 1985, Part I, p. 84).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns concurs with this Item 11-08.

Rationale

There is indeed strong evidence that the death penalty has been applied in a racist manner in the past and an equally strong possibility that the same will be true in the future. The only way to ensure this is not the case is by declaring an immediate moratorium on all executions in all jurisdictions that impose capital punishment.

Item 11-09

The assembly approved Item 11-09 with amendment. See pp. 39, 42.]

A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

In order to ensure significant change in the area of Cultural Proficiency (CP), and to continue consultations between the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the executive officers of the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly (GA)—General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), formerly known as General Assembly Council (GAC); Office the General Assembly (OGA); Presbyterian Board of Pensions (BOP); Presbyterian Foundation (FDN); Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program (PILP), Inc; and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC)—the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following actions:

1. Continue to support the work of the Climate for Change Task Force as it examines and moves toward formulating final recommendations for the 220th General Assembly (2012) for the church’s Affirmative Action/Equal Employment Opportunity, Cultural Proficiency, and minority vendor policies.

2. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) to revise the cultural proficiency assessment tool, with consultation from human resource directors of each entity and from the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment (formerly the associate for Cultural Proficiency).

3. Direct that the “Standards for Review of General Assembly Agencies” include the preparation, review, and evaluation of a written, six-year plan for the implementation of cultural proficiency or comparable approach to organizational change with each of the six entities of the General Assembly.
a. The ACREC will write the portion of the Agency Review Manual dealing with the assessment and review of cultural proficiency or a comparable approach of the six agencies.

b. The six-year plan pertaining to cultural proficiency or a comparable approach and its implementation will be reviewed and monitored by ACREC on an ongoing basis, with statistical results and updates from each agency reviewed by ACREC biennially.

c. At the first meeting of each of the agency review committees, a member of ACREC will be invited to brief the committee on the importance of “Creating a Climate for Change” and cultural proficiency. In addition, each agency review committee will consult with ACREC, through the participation of an ACREC member, regarding the six-year plan for cultural proficiency for each agency under review. Greater participation by ACREC on the agency review committee will be permitted if needed or requested.

4. Request that the six entities of the General Assembly work with the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment in developing their six-year plan, to help implement cultural proficiency policy at all levels, and to develop training and cultural-sensitivity programs. This six-year plan should include:

a. a commitment to Book of Order, G-4.0403:

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its merging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions (married, single, widowed, or divorced) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church.

b. a stated policy for increasing diversity, which should be developed in consultation with the Cultural Proficiency Task Force to ensure consistency with the task force’s final recommendations;

c. measurable targets and goals that integrate cultural proficiency policy, training and cultural sensitivity programs in areas of education for purposes of mobility and advancement, performance, recruitment, hiring, mentoring, and retention;

d. production of biennial reports giving employment profile (salaries, occupations, separations, new hires, promotions, in terms of race, ethnicity, gender, and disabilities).

5. Encourage the entities to support and utilize the National Persons of Color Network database, to strengthen and make it effective.

6. Direct all entities to keep annual statistics demonstrating compliance with the church’s Minority Vendor Policy.

7. [Direct][E][e]ach entity [must][to] demonstrate affirmative efforts to increase racial ethnic and female employee representation in the senior management categories. When filling vacancies at this level, there must be a racial ethnic person and a female among the final candidates. If they are not among the final candidates, the entity must explain why they were not considered.

Rationale

I. Introduction and Overview

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)) stands committed to its call to “be responsive to diversity in both the church and the world,” and as such “will display a rich variety of form, practice, language, program, nurture, and service to suit culture and need” (Book of Order, G-4.0401). Diversity and inclusiveness are critical to the mission of the denomination and deemed essential as to how the church as a whole, and its agencies, carries out its work.

The denomination’s form of government outlines that the PC(USA) “give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life” (Book of Order, G-4.0403). Ultimately, the hope is that the church’s intentional actions will elicit effective multiracial and multicultural ministry.

Cultural proficiency (CP), which provides standards to assess healthy and nonproductive policies, practices, and behaviors, is one of the key ways in which the denomination’s General Assembly (GA) expects its agencies to carry out the church’s overall mandate. Cultural proficiency acknowledges that change does not happen overnight, that people and organizations move on a continuum from highly exclusive and oppressive organizations and behaviors to highly inclusive organizations and behaviors.
It is built on a foundation that aligns the principles of inclusivity in diversity with the core values and mission of the organization. Cultural proficiency also acknowledges that organizations are resistant to change, and that the causes of resistance must be taken into account and addressed openly in order to bring about cultural transformation within an organization.

The ACREC report, Creating a Climate for Change within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004), directed the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly to utilize the tools of cultural proficiency, or other comparable processes, to develop and sustain healthy organizational cultures that support diverse workforces. The benchmark of obtaining 20 percent racial ethnic employment was established in the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action that was approved by the General Assembly in 1985. The other major benchmark is the Minority Vendor Policy. Approved in 1984, it established that church agencies purchase at least 10 percent of goods and services from minority-owned businesses.

The ACREC’s subsequent report, approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), built upon those themes in an effort to continue achieving cultural proficiency goals, including the recruitment, hiring, and promotion of a diverse workforce; the nurturing and sustaining of the gifts and strengths of diversity; and a constructive response to the challenges of diversity. Included in this report was a call for

- the six entities to prepare a written plan for the continuing implementation of cultural proficiency or comparable approach to organizational change;
- the ACREC to develop a report format and timeline for regular, reoccurring consultations with the entities;
- the creation of a Climate for Change Task Force that would, among other things, update the denomination’s Affirmative Action (AA)/Equal Employment Opportunities (EEO) policies to be in line with cultural proficiency.

In the two years since the 2008 report was approved, ACREC has conducted the required agency consultations in order to analyze whether cultural proficiency mandates directed by the General Assembly have been met. The committee’s findings are outlined below.

The ACREC was recently asked by OGA to consider integrating ACREC’s cultural proficiency review process within the overall agency review that is conducted by the General Assembly every six years. The ACREC was advised that it could write the section for the Standards for Review of the General Assembly Agencies pertaining to the implementation and assessment of cultural proficiency and that the ACREC would continue to review and monitor the implementation of cultural proficiency. The ACREC believes that this opportunity elevates the importance of cultural proficiency and will help institutionalize cultural proficiency throughout the church.

II. Summary of Findings

While much work has been done to advance the aims of cultural proficiency, there remains a failure to institutionalize cultural proficiency and its tenants into the fabric of the six General Assembly entities.

Cultural proficiency in some of the six entities did not appear to be a priority, and there was an uneven use of the standardized assessment tool created by ACREC. There are a number of factors that may have caused these results including change in leadership and staff, economic downturn, difficulties with recruitment and retention, limited training, small organizational structures, and preference for other systems already in place.

As such, ACREC has offered several recommendations to assist the denomination in moving toward long-term change. Chief among the recommendations is a proposal for each entity to develop a six-year plan for continued implementation of cultural proficiency or a comparable approach to organization. The development of such a plan will act as an outline for how cultural proficiency will be infused over time into the fabric of each entity.

The creation of individual plans will enable each entity to formulate a structure suitable to its size and unique circumstances, while also recognizing the importance of cultural proficiency in fulfilling the aims and mission of the denomination. As the entities continue consultations with ACREC on the rollout of their plans, ways to share resources and strategies across the entities will evolve.

The development of best practices, standardized minority vendor policies, and training modules used across departments and offices are just some of the positive outcomes that could result. The hope, too, is that the accomplishment of measureable goals will result in greater racial ethnic representation in senior management, identified as top-tier executives by each entity, more effective recruitment and retention methods, and the development of healthy organizational environments that support diverse workforces.
A subcommittee of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns spent three days—May 18, 2009, and June 23–24, 2009—in consultations with the executive leadership and human resource directors of the six corporate entities of the General Assembly in order to gain an awareness of the organizations’ current work around the issue of cultural proficiency and the implementation of those policies. In May, consultations were held at the Board of Pensions’ headquarters in Philadelphia. The June consultations were held with the Presbyterian and Investment Loan Program, Inc., (PILP), Office of the General Assembly (OGA), Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC), General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) (formerly known as the General Assembly Council), and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (FDN). These meetings took place at the PC(USA) national office in Louisville, Kentucky, and the Foundation office in Jeffersonville, Indiana. The meetings were conducted in an atmosphere of open dialogue and active listening. Below is a brief summary of the information obtained during consultations and written submissions by each entity.

A. General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC)

1. Cultural Proficiency

The GAMC, through its associate for Cultural Proficiency (now known as the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education and Recruitment (AODER)), and in partnership with other General Assembly entities, has launched the National Persons of Color Recruiting Network to develop a recruiting network and an active database of racial ethnic candidates for leadership positions within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The ACREC applauds this development and sees this as a strategic step in identifying viable racial ethnic candidates for leadership positions.

The GAMC also established a cultural advisory team, which works with the associate for Cultural Proficiency (ACP) (not AODER) on ways to improve implementation of the cultural proficiency program. The GAMC also has added cultural proficiency as a performance standard that must be assessed for all employees.

A new employee handbook is forthcoming and cultural proficiency will be incorporated. Employee training sessions being revamped also will include cultural proficiency. In the past, GAMC required employees to attend a slate of trainings, including sessions on diversity, antiracism, cultural proficiency, sexual harassment, and ethics. This occurred at times on staff educational training days. The GAMC recognizes that it needs to provide more training and has indicated that these programs will be re instituted.

2. Employment Profile

As of Dec. 31, 2008, GAMC had 408 employees, of whom 29 percent were racial ethnic and 72 percent were female. In the senior management category, there are eleven employees, of whom 64 percent were female and 9 percent racial ethnic. This is a lower percentage of racial ethnic representation since the last review cycle because two additional white employees were hired. During the June consultation, GAMC reported that it was greatly affected by the downturn in the economy since December 2008 and “significant adjustments” were made to reduce the budget. Those adjustments resulted in eliminating positions through reductions in force, vacant positions that were not filled, and voluntary separations. The number of employees was reduced by 100 less than the 408 employees reported in December 2008. As of January 2010, there is a vacancy in one of the deputy executive director positions.

The ACREC strongly encourages GAMC to include a racial ethnic candidate among its final pool of candidates for this position and for any other vacancy that may occur in senior management.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

The GAMC, through its purchasing agent, used minority vendors for 14.93 percent of its purchases of goods and services in 2008. As of June 2009, GAMC reported it was reviewing bids by six companies, four of which were minority vendors, to provide travel services. Efforts are constantly made to network with potential minority vendors worldwide, especially using professional networking sites on the Web.

The ACREC notes and applauds the addition of two new categories for data collection—the disabled and Middle Eastern vendors. The ACREC also commends the efforts of GAMC staff to successfully reach and exceed the 10 percent minority vending policy goal for the past two reporting cycles. The GAMC also purchases goods and services for other entities such as the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP). It would be very helpful if, in future reports on minority vendor services, GAMC would delineate the services provided for those entities.

B. Office of the General Assembly (OGA)

1. Cultural Proficiency

The OGA’s efforts to promote cultural proficiency include adding cultural proficiency organizational values to the OGA personnel manual. The OGA also noted it is working to make its Web page multilingual in Spanish, Korean, and English.
The page would be written by people fluent in those languages. During the June consultation, OGA reported hiring an Asian American male to coordinate its Web page. The OGA is aggressive in using various avenues to attract racial ethnic candidates. The OGA also is working closely with the GAMC and the other entities on the development of the National Persons of Color Recruiting Network. Other efforts by OGA include their annual leadership training program, a tuition reimbursement program, the establishment of a communications staff team, and a creative process in searching for candidates to fill vacancies. The ACREC applauds these programs, recognizing that they would have greater impact if they are institutionalized. The OGA also recognized the need to provide more cultural proficiency and racial sensitivity training.

2. Employment Profile

As of Dec. 31, 2008, OGA had 77 employees, 23 percent were racial ethnic and 74 percent were women. Of OGA’s ten senior managers, 20 percent were racial ethnic and 50 percent women. During the June 2009 consultations, OGA reported that because of the downturn in the economy and recent downsizing, it had since lost six female employees, three of whom were racial ethnic persons. Only three of those positions will be replaced or filled. The OGA’s normal turnover is described as very low. When there is a vacancy, OGA reported that it is difficult to recruit racial ethnic candidates: Louisville is not viewed as a culturally diverse city, and there is a stigma associated with working at the PC(USA) national offices in light of ongoing downsizing.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

The OGA did not produce any statistics on use of minority vendors because it uses the purchasing services offered by the General Assembly Mission Council. The OGA did report, however, that when it engages hotels for church activities, the hotels must agree to a nondiscrimination provision in OGA contracts.

C. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc (PILP)

1. Cultural Proficiency

The PILP indicated it participates in all-staff meetings and trainings, and that it takes part in relevant denomination-wide conferences and celebrations such as the annual multicultural conference. The PILP’s Asian American employee, who serves as a development specialist, has been instrumental in helping the agency better understand and be more sensitive to cultural practices of PILP’s Asian churches, particularly those in the Korean community. The PILP’s board of directors also was lifted up as an area of strong diversity, highlighting their overnight meeting in July as a specific time when wisdom is shared from various contexts.

2. Employment Profile

The PILP is continually challenged in the area of workforce diversity, citing extremely low turnover to its small staff of fourteen, as of Dec. 31, 2008. The PILP has not achieved the 20 percent employment goal of racial ethnic persons: 14 percent were racial ethnic and 71 percent were female. The PILP’s senior management staff is three in number and consists of three white males. The PILP has one potential retirement in the management team that may occur in December 2010. Recognizing the lack of diversity at the executive level, PILP plans to recruit a racial ethnic person if possible. The PILP also may expand employment in the marketing area. The PILP is working with the other General Assembly entities on the National Persons of Color Recruiting Network. The downturn in the economy did not result in any layoffs. In fact, PILP has had a “bumper year” because churches are coming to PILP for loans as banks aren’t loaning money to churches. More training in cultural proficiency and racial sensitivity is needed.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

The PILP had very little to report in terms of its use of minority vendors, and indicated that the overwhelming majority of its purchases are done through the GAMC. The PILP’s human resources and accounting services also are contracted through the GAMC.

D. Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC)

1. Cultural Proficiency

The PPC reinstated its Robert W. Bohl Racial Ethnic Internship, a ten-week program that provides a racial ethnic seminary student with an opportunity to explore religious publishing as a possible ministry option. The PPC also points heavily to its cache of books published and the diverse authors behind them as an indication of its work around cultural proficiency. In 2008, the PPC began work on a new hymnal for the denomination and has been intentional about including racial ethnic diversity throughout the process. Fifteen people serve on the hymnal committee, including three racial ethnic persons. The committee also will have racial ethnic advisory and world music advisory teams. The PPC offers a tuition reimbursement program. The PPC attended meetings in 2007 and 2009 to help develop a National Persons of Color Recruitment Network. Employees of PPC are “eligible” to attend workshops and meetings on cultural proficiency offered by other PC(USA) agencies and staff. The PPC acknowledged that it needs to do more on cultural awareness.

During consultations in June 2009, PPC reported that 20 percent of works acquired by PPC in 2009 are from racial ethnic authors, up from 7 percent in 2007. The PPC also is developing a list of needs for Hispanic congregations and considering how to produce those resources. The PPC reported that it was also considering providing resources for pastors of Korean churches.

The ACREC applauds PPC’s reinstitution of its internship program and its decision to publish a greater number of racial ethnic and women writers. In order to bring about cultural transformation within an organization, however, more is needed. For example, more cultural proficiency and racial sensitivity/cultural awareness training is needed among PPC’s employees.

2. Employment Profile

As of Dec. 31, 2008, PPC reported thirty-three employees, 15 percent of whom were racial ethnic and 46 percent of whom were women. Senior management, which consists of five employees, is 20 percent racial ethnic and 20 percent female. The PPC indicated there had been consolidation in its ranks since its last report, and that one racial ethnic person had been hired and another had taken on a more professional role. The PPC recently reported that as of December 2009, it had hired a Hispanic woman and a Korean woman to serve as customer service representatives.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

The PPC has a separate vendor policy. Because it does not currently keep statistics, no data is available.

E. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions (BOP)

1. Cultural Proficiency

Among the highlights particularly relevant to ACREC and its assessment of BOP’s record on cultural proficiency were:

- The establishment of an on-site Learning Center opened in January 2008. The center has as its three pillars leadership development, learning resources, and staff development.
- The hiring of a director for organizational development. The director’s purpose is to partner with senior leadership to create a “positive culture, effective leadership, employee engagement and team effectiveness.”
- The continued availability when enrollment is sufficient of an on-site educational program for employees, and tuition assistance for those wishing to attend school off-site. In 2008, the BOP spent $52,489 on tuition reimbursement, 52 percent of which went to racial ethnic employees. Fifty-six percent of those who received tuition reimbursement were racial ethnic employees.

2. Employment Profile

The BOP reported that racial ethnic employees comprised 34 percent and women comprised 65 percent of the BOP’s workforce of 192 employees in 2008, meeting the 20 percent goal of racial ethnic employees. Of its twelve senior managers reported, only 8 percent of the employees were racial ethnic.

The BOP leadership pointed out that efforts were being made to recruit younger talent, and that leadership and training programs were helping to identify staff with the potential to be promoted. It also was noted that in higher-grade, professional staff positions, recruitment of racial ethnic persons becomes more difficult against the backdrop of higher-wage, for-profit corporations, who are interested in recruiting these same persons.

The BOP has developed a succession management program designed to ensure, among other things, the “planned, orderly development and preparation of highly qualified and talented staff to be candidates for key leadership positions.” Coupled with this effort was an online leadership assessments for all members of the BOP leadership group conducted in the spring of 2008. Individual development plans were created from this assessment process.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

The Board of Pensions reported, as it has in previous years, that it does not maintain statistical data on its vendors.
F. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (FDN)

1. Cultural Proficiency

The FDN has a full range of training for its employees, including areas of leadership, professional development, and sexual harassment. Collaborative Learning Week, which will continue, is a time set aside “to identify means of collaboration while creating opportunities for relationship building and training through a better understanding of employee roles within the Foundation.” In September 2008, the FDN also hosted the National Persons of Color Recruiting Network meeting. Tuition reimbursement for employees also was highlighted, and in 2008 data showed that 60 percent of those who took part in the program were racial ethnic employees.

2. Employment Profile

December 2008 figures showed 91 employees, of which 21 percent were racial ethnic persons, and 62.6 percent female. Of the nine senior managers, 11.1 percent of the employees were racial ethnic. The percentage of racial ethnic persons in senior management has gone up from 9 percent from the previous cycle. Employees in this category decreased from eleven to nine while the number of racial ethnic employees stayed the same. There were five promotions, including one racial ethnic who advanced to a management position. As a result of the 2008 economic downturn, the overall number of employees decreased to seventy-six by the end of the first quarter of 2009 due to workforce cuts (e.g., through early retirement incentive packages, involuntary reductions in staff, and unfilled vacant positions).

The FDN has fourteen development staff scattered all over the United States, and there always is a struggle to pull minority candidates into those positions. The FDN does try to identify racial ethnic persons with development experience as openings occur, but it can be challenging when the candidate also has to be Presbyterian.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

Foundation officials say they have included in their “Culture for Excellence” vendor management program explicit consideration of racial ethnic and minority representation. The Foundation acknowledged it does not meet the 10 percent benchmark for minority vendor utilization, but continues to be proactive in obtaining this goal.

The ACREC recognizes that the FDN has commendable programs, but more training is needed in the area of cultural proficiency. Greater representation of racial ethnic persons also is needed in the senior management positions.

IV. Conclusion

While recognizing there has been some progress by the six entities in working toward cultural proficiency, not much has changed from the last assessment period. The ACREC lauds various programs implemented by the entities. Of note are the on-site learning center and the succession management program established by the BOP, the cultural proficiency training and education programs (which should be mandatory) previously implemented by GAMC, and the innovative programs established by OGA. It is hoped that all of the entities will examine these programs and determine if they can use them in their respective organizations in bringing about cultural proficiency.

Despite the fact that most of the entities have achieved the goal of 20 percent employment of racial ethnic persons, many of these employees are in the lower pay scale categories. Representation in senior management level positions remains low. Intentional efforts are needed to ensure that racial ethnic persons and women are being seriously considered and subsequently hired for these positions. Making sure that the final candidate pool includes at least one racial ethnic person and one woman demonstrates the intentionality in creating change. More importantly, cultural proficiency policies and programs need to be institutionalized, so that changes in leadership or staff do not affect implementation of these policies.

For this assessment cycle, ACREC used a new assessment tool to capture information involving measurable goals, target dates for accomplishing these goals, and plans for the future. The ACREC recognizes that there may be a better way to obtain the desired information and is therefore asking each entity’s human resource director or representatives from that office along with the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment, to collaborate with ACREC to revise the assessment tool. The ACREC also suggests that new categories of data collection be added, such as employment of Middle Eastern persons or new immigrants, to adjust to our ever-changing world.

Very few entities provided information about plans for the future. By requiring the entities to submit a six-year plan, it is anticipated they will develop their own plan with measurable goals for each year that would be monitored by ACREC. In their attempts to develop and sustain healthy organizational environments that support diverse workforces, it is further hoped that the entities will use the resources available at PC(USA) including the ACP and the evolving National Persons of Color Recruiting Network database.
Further, the entities need to provide data regarding the use of minority vendors. For those entities that rely upon GAMC to provide these services, both the entity and the GAMC should be able to provide this information.

Finally, integrating the cultural proficiency assessment within the larger assessment by the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) is a move toward institutionalizing the church’s commitment to “greater inclusiveness” and “full participation and access to representation in the decision making” by the diverse membership of our church.

APPENDIX A: STATISTICAL DATA

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 11-09 deals with a review of efforts regarding cultural proficiency and creating a climate for change in the PC(USA).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with Item 11-09.

Rationale

Recommendation 7 in Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies, the report of the Women of Color Consultation Task Force of the 218th General Assembly (2008), urged all entities in the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to be mindful of the critical importance of utilizing culturally proficient communication tools and strategies and to be intentional in working to communicate with the whole church to convey the vision of being diverse and inclusive with equity. The ACWC requests that Communications and Funds Development (CFD), in partnership with the Office of Cultural Proficiency equip OGA and GAMC staff with culturally proficient communication tools.

The Women of Color Consultation Task Force, approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), focused a major portion of its recommendations on cultural proficiency and working toward a more inclusive church. Knowing that cultural proficiency development is a long-term, ongoing process, review of existing efforts would result in developing additional skills and moving closer to the goal of becoming a fully inclusive church.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 11-09

Comment on Item 11-09—From the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A).

Recommendation 3

Item 11-09 from the Advocacy Committee on Racial-Ethic Concerns (ACREC) would, in Recommendation 3, direct each of the six corporate entities, including the Board of Pensions (“the Board”), to “prepare a written, four-year plan for continued implementation of cultural proficiency or comparable approach to organizational change that will be monitored by ACREC” (Item 11-09).

The Board advises amending Recommendation 3 by adding the following sentence to clarify the use of alternative models whose principles and programs are similar to cultural proficiency: [Text to be added is shown with brackets and in italic.]

“3. Direct the six corporate entities to prepare a written, four-year plan for continued implementation of cultural proficiency or comparable approach to organizational change that will be monitored by ACREC. [Entities with successful, alternative programs that have been found to be comparable and acceptable by the ACREC are encouraged to continue their efforts to support the principles of cultural proficiency.]”

Rationale

The Board has been and continues to be committed to a diverse workplace where staff of all backgrounds can feel comfortable, grow professionally and personally, and be effective in serving the church.

The Board has always been and will continue to be supportive of the principles of cultural proficiency, although our operating model has been a successful alternative. As a result of prior meetings with ACREC, the Board:

• incorporated the principles into its Board and Human Resources Mission Statements, Values, and Personnel Policies and Procedures;
• created a Learning Center which provides equal opportunity for professional and personal development to all employees at all levels;
• has mentoring, talent development and tuition reimbursement programs, and support of external workshops, seminars, and memberships in professional organizations; all of which enjoy broad participation from its diverse population;
• performs an anonymous employee opinion survey; the results of which continue to point out that the staff feel that the Board has done a very good job at being sensitive to cultural and diversity issues in the workplace;
• has employee demographics that indicate a strong representation by both females and minorities in its work population; and
• has an annual compliance education calendar that includes diversity training.

In discussing its approach with respective church committees, their responses have been favorable to the Board’s efforts to model the values of cultural proficiency.

Recommendation 6:

The Advocacy Committee on Racial-Ethic Concerns would, in Recommendation 6, direct each of the six corporate entities, including the Board of Pensions (“the Board”), to “keep annual statistics demonstrating compliance with the church’s Minority Vendor Policy.”

In previous responses to this request, the Board has and continues to cite its interest in selecting and working with minority vendors, although it is unable to identify and keep statistics regarding the minority status of the many local, regional, and national vendors with which it does business.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 11-09

Comment on Item 11-09—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) agrees with the intent of Item 11-09, noting its similarity to Item 03-24. The GACOR respectfully refers the General Assembly to its comment and amendments offered to Item 03-24.

The GACOR wishes to direct the attention of the General Assembly to a parallel action before the assembly that affects the review standards: Item 03-24, from the Committee of the Office of the General Assembly.

The methods suggested in Item 11-09 with regard to the cultural proficiency review are sound and may suggest a model for dealing with the GACOR consultation process regarding each entity’s implementation plan and action steps in response to their constitutional responsibilities and “A Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action.”

Item 11-10

[The assembly approved Item 11-10 with amendment. See pp. 39, 42–43.]

[As the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) becomes an increasingly diverse and culturally rich membership,] [T]he Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct the Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to appoint a committee of [nine] [eleven] persons to study the Nature of the Church for the 21st Century. [The intent of this study shall be to seek to increase understanding of the church from a Reformed and Presbyterian perspective and assist current and new members in forming faithful plans for our common future.]

The committee would be staffed by representative from the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and include representation from

• Theology, Worship, Education (TWE)
• The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)
• The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)
• The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)
• The Office of the General Assembly (OGA)
• [Four] [Six] persons at-large

The committee would be charged with bringing a report and making the appropriate recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012), and, if appropriate, preparing [a study guide] [practical resources] for individual and congregational use.

Rationale

The 201st General Assembly (1989) formed a special committee to study “The Nature of the Church and the Practice of Governance,” which reported to the 205th General Assembly (1993) (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 95, 355ff). That committee found, ten years after reunion, that the church suffered from a lack of identity and had no clear and comprehensive strategy for the future of the denomination. Particularly noted were diverse biblical and theological interpretations and life experiences leading to different understandings of where the mission priorities of the church should be. The committee’s study indicated that while the church held stated values for racial, ethnic, and theological diversity and inclusiveness, the church had chosen to serve those values by requiring participation on committees and in governing bodies, rather than committing to learning the diverse cultural, racial, and theological values included in the body, so to incorporate these diverse perspectives into our operative understanding of the church, and to plan for the future.

Today, the situation mirrors much of what the special committee found in 1993, except that in many ways the diversity of opinion has led to increased polarization and a more serious lack of communal identity. This has occurred in a time when demographic projections move us to look deeply at where the PC(USA) is in our membership, evangelism, and stewardship strategies, as the world changes around us. Goals we have set for ourselves on increasing racial ethnic and new immigrant membership by 2010 will not be achieved. Further, no serious study has been undertaken of the nature of the church since 1993, in a time when the Form of Government is undergoing serious consideration for revision.

Now, in a new century, with efforts to integrate an increasingly diverse group of Presbyterians into the church and its leadership, the time for a new study has come. Our hope is that this study will help to increase understanding of the church from a Reformed and Presbyterian perspective and assist current and new members in forming faithful plans for our common future.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 11-10 deals with forming a special committee to study the nature of the church for the twenty-first century.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with Item 11-10 with the following comment:

Consideration for representation in the makeup of this committee from the Women of Color Joint Working Group should be considered.

Rationale

The Women of Color Joint Working Group, formed in 2009 to monitor the recommendations from the Women of Color Consultation report, intentionally focuses on the intersectionality of race and gender. The participation of a member of the Joint Working Group will ensure at least some representation of the voices of women of color in the church for the twenty-first century.

Item 11-11

[The assembly approved Item 11-11 with amendment. See pp. 39, 40, 43.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. Regarding a Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians in Their Hour of Need.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directs the PC(USA) to

1. Refrain from holding national meetings [at hotels or non-PC(USA) conference centers] in those states where travel by immigrant Presbyterians or Presbyterians of color or Hispanic ancestry might subject them to harassment due to legislation similar to Arizona Law SB 1070/HB2162.

   [a. If individual congregations and camp & conference facilities deem it necessary, the PC(USA) and its staff will offer nonfinancial support for the creation of accompaniment programs to support persons of color who feel that they are at risk when attending church-sponsored worship or programs.

   [b. If such laws are passed in states where the PC(USA) camp & conference centers are located, the 219th General Assembly (2010) encourages those centers to develop ‘sanctuary’ responses that would create safe places for all participants, allowing the denomination to continue to support its own conference centers, and encourages the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program of the General Assembly Mission Council to offer support to partners across the denomination as they develop a process to train volunteers to document abuses and collect data on those abuses to share with the broader church.]

2. [Direct the Office of Immigration to] [D][d]evelop resources that educate Presbyterians about the history of [immigrant policies, the beneficial aspects of immigration in the United States as well as] official anti-immigration conduct [in-the United States], [including, but not limited to] [such as] the Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882 that was not repealed until 1943; the forced migration of persons of Mexican descent from California between 1929 and 1939, 60 percent of whom were U.S. citizens; and the forced relocation of Japanese Americans to detention camps during World War II.

3. [Direct the Office of Immigration to] [Direct the Office of Immigration to develop resources that educate Presbyterians about the origins of this most recent legislation, with a special focus on those states that are considering enactment of copycat legislation.

4. Instruct the Washington Office to advocate vigorously for comprehensive immigration reform that includes a path to citizenship and recognizes the critical role that immigrants play in the health of the U.S. economy as well as border stabilization.

5. Empower the Immigration Office of the PC(USA) to [legally] [provide a legal resource to] PC(USA) congregations in states experiencing the introduction of SB 1070 copycat legislation.

6. Direct the Stated Clerk to ask the National Council of Churches to request the churches of North America to join our sister churches in Europe in a common day of prayer to commemorate those migrants who have died on their journey.

[Financial Implication: (2010) $2,000; (2011) $4,000; (2012) $4,000 (OGA-Per Capita)]

Rationale

The newly enacted Arizona law, known as SB 1070/HB 2162, neither secures the southern border of the United States nor advances the goal of comprehensive immigration reform but unfairly targets an entire class of people as potential violators of immigration law.

Credible reports have already begun to surface about SB 1070/HB2162 being implemented despite it not being scheduled to go into effect until July 29, 2010.

Many Presbyterian faith communities in Arizona include immigrant families whose family integrity is threatened by this newly enacted law.

As of June 23, 2010, seventeen states are in the process of enacting copycat legislation.

Arizona’s Senate Bill 1070 was originally drafted by persons associated with the Immigration Reform Law Institute, the legal arm of Federation for American Immigration Reform (FAIR), an organization designated as a hate group by the Southern Poverty Law Center, based on its association with white nationalist organizations.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-11-0—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 11-11 with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [directs the PC(USA) to] [shall]:

1. Refrain from holding national [and synodical] meetings in those states where travel by immigrant Presbyterians or Presbyterians of color or Hispanic ancestry might subject them to harassment due to legislation similar to Arizona Law SB 1070/HB2162.

2. [Direct the Office of Immigration to develop] [Develop] resources that educate Presbyterians about the history of official anti-immigrant conduct in the United States, including but not limited to the Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882 that was not repealed until 1943; the forced migration of persons of Mexican descent from California between 1929 and 1939, 60 percent of whom were U.S. citizens; and the forced relocation of Japanese Americans to detention camps during World War II.

3. [Direct the Office of Immigration to develop] [Develop] resources that educate Presbyterians about the origins of this most recent legislation, with a special focus on those states that are considering enactment of copycat [similar] legislation.
“4. Instruct the Washington Office to advocate vigorously for comprehensive immigration reform that includes a path to citizenship and recognizes the critical role that immigrants play in the health of the U.S. economy as well as border stabilization.

“5. [Empower] [Affirm and support] the Immigration Office of the PC(USA) to legally resource PC(USA) congregations in states experiencing the introduction of SB 1070 copycat legislation.”

Rationale

This resolution is consistent with policies on immigration and immigration reform approved by previous General Assemblies. It also reflects the concerns raised by the Human Rights report before this assembly highlighting systemic problems with current immigration detention programs throughout the United States of America.

Furthermore, the call for national and synodical agencies of the PC(USA) to refrain from holding meetings in states where travel by immigrant Presbyterians of color or Hispanic ancestry might subject them to harassment is compatible with criteria developed by past General Assemblies for redressing corporate practices that work at cross purposes to the church’s social witness.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The ACREC advises that Item 11-11 be approved.

Rationale

The ACREC believes that passage of legislation like Arizona SB1070/HB2162 fosters racism and gives foundation and rationale for racist acts in our society. It exposes people to threats and risks based on their physical appearance. It increases the risk of family separations. The passage of this law has had negative impact on congregational ministries in Arizona: many people who have been active ministry participants have gone into hiding because of fear of being targeted by the police. Finally, ACREC sees this legislation as a response to the wrong question—how can we curb illegal immigration—when a better question would be, “why is the rate of this immigration so high”? Arizona SB1070 does not address other relevant justice issues such as the drug trade, where the U.S. market depends on product from south of our border, nor the economic inequity between many residents of the U.S. and many residents of countries outside the U.S.

Arizona SB1070/HB2162 was passed in order to engender action on the national level. In approving Item 11-11, the 219th General Assembly (2010) can empower and equip Presbyterians to join in developing a more equitable and just immigration policy.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved a policy statement, entitled “Advocacy and Welcome for all Immigrants.” The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved an additional policy statement, entitled “Detention, Enforcement, and Human Trafficking.” Both of these policy statements encourage Presbyterians to work against legislation like Arizona’s new law. Additionally, approximately twenty states, encouraged by the passage of SB1070/HB2162 in Arizona, are now considering comparable legislation. The ACREC believes this increases the urgent need for Presbyterians to act now.

[The assembly approved Item 11-NB with comment.]

In response to the Deep Water Horizon Oil disaster, the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues—B: The Exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the World respectfully recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) take the following actions:

1. Direct the Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to send condolences to each of the families of the workers who lost their lives from the Deep Water Horizon oil rig explosion.

2. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to work in partnership with local impacted communities, and to initiate and support an ecumenical, long-term response to the Deep Water Horizon oil disaster. This response may include a. developing sustainable subsistence food supplies;

b. developing a peer-to-peer counseling program;

c. equipping community members with the knowledge and technology to monitor water, air, and soil quality and water currents;

d. cross-country monitoring of the effects on migratory birds that fly through the Gulf Coast during their migration;

e. supporting the creation of sustainable green jobs for those who have lost their livelihoods due to the oil disaster; and

f. supporting an ecumenical, locally based series of summits to discuss issues of dislocation, relocation, and resettlement as a result of communities becoming uninhabitable due to toxins in the environment.

3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to make a one-time, special fundraising appeal to support the long-term recovery of communities impacted by the Deep Water Horizon oil disaster.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to write a letter to the chief executive officer of BP, urging BP to ensure the safety of all workers, including oil industry workers and oil cleanup workers, through training, equipping, and monitoring of safety guidelines in compliance with OSHA.

5. Direct the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) to communicate with oil and natural gas companies engaged in offshore exploration, drilling, and production urging them to conduct a thorough review of their operations to make certain that they are in compliance with their own health, safety, and environmental standards and all governmental regulatory requirements so that the general public can be assured that similar disasters will be prevented.

6. Direct the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., to:

a. Communicate with Congress and the Executive Branch the need to reconstitute a robust program of oversight and compliance to ensure that health, safety, and environmental standards are followed to protect workers, communities, and the environment.

b. Urge Congress and the Executive Branch to hold BP and other responsible parties morally and financially accountable for this disaster and for the socioeconomic and environmental recovery.

Comment: It is impossible to express adequately the outrage felt by Presbyterians and others at the enduring tragedy unfolding in the Gulf of Mexico region today. While the long-term socioeconomic and spiritual effects of the Deep Water Horizon oil disaster are yet to be determined, urgent action by the PC(USA) is our Christian responsibility.
Item 12-01

On Affirming the Biblical Teaching on the Topic of Marriage—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to “joyfully affirm the historic, biblical, and Christological teaching of the Church on the topic of marriage as a gift from God to bless humankind. As God created man and woman, so does God call some men and women to live together as husband and wife. God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.”

Rationale

The intent of the overture is reflected by its language. The institution of marriage was given by God to humanity. It is given by God as a gift to some men and women who are called to marriage while others are called to remain single and celibate. Marriage as given by God is defined by God’s word in Scripture, by God’s word lived out in the history of the PC(USA), and principally by God’s word made flesh in Jesus Christ.

All three of these witnesses agree that in marriage “a man shall leave his father and mother and cleave to his wife and the two shall become one flesh.” Because of this, although civil marriage as defined by the state from time to time and place may differ from the institution of marriage as given by God, we believe God’s people are called to joyfully affirm and live out their trust in God and the truth that God defines for us.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 12-01

Advice on Item 12-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) on Items 12-01, 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-05, 12-06, 12-07, 12-08, 12-09, 12-10, 12-11 below:

If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Item 12-01, the Advisory on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to answer it with an action that takes into account the concerns identified in the Rationale below.

Rationale

Overview of Business before the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the Definition of Marriage

1. Introduction on Marriage Items

These eleven items of business come to the 219th General Assembly (2010) seeking some modification or interpretation of marriage, as defined in W-4.9000. These overtures range in effect from proposed amendments that would change the definition of marriage to include same-sex couples, to overtures asking for a reaffirmation of the definition of marriage as it currently exists, to a group of overtures seeking an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 to allow ministers of the Word and Sacrament and Commissioned Lay Pastors to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 218th General Assembly (2008) saying the following:

The understanding of Christian marriage is set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies three distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is received, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response. First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.” Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.” These three sentences require interpretation: Does the second sentence (civil contract) describe a subset of the first (gift to all humankind), or is it a description of how the gift is conferred? Does the second sentence (civil contract) control and subsume the third (Christian marriage)?

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overture, and which divide the church as to its understanding of what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. While the church can always define marriage more narrowly than the state, and restrict marriage in the church by enforcing its own limits and conditions, if the gift of marriage to the church were independent of the state and not fully subsumed by the civil contract definition, then it would have a basis for performing marriages as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow.

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community.

However, the church, on the basis of its historic interpretation of the standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-sex unions, which it has permitted within the church, and homosexual marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

...since a Christian marriage performed in accordance with the Directory for Worship can only involve a covenant between a woman and a man, it would not be proper for a minister of the Word and Sacrament to perform a same sex union ceremony that the minister determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony. (Minutes, 1991, Part I, pp. 55, 57, 395)

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-sex unions and marriages:

A determinative distinction between a permissible same-sex ceremony and a marriage ceremony is that the latter confers a new status whereas the former blesses an existing relationship. The Book of Order makes this theological distinction concerning marriage in W-4.9004: “In the name of the triune God the minister shall declare publicly that the woman and the man are now joined in marriage.” This and similar pronouncements declaring a new status are to be reserved for services of marriage. (loc. cit.)

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has not extended to its own liturgical practice and theological understanding of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253–254)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that questions about W-4.9000 and its relationship to same-sex couples have been addressed to the General Assembly since 1991. Increasing societal acceptance of same-sex couples, laws enacted by some states allowing marriage by same-sex couples, and our own denomination’s struggles over ordination standards have all contributed to the increase of items before the General Assembly seeking change, definition, or interpretation. The church’s concern for the pastoral care of its members also contributes to the frequency and urgency of these questions. The appointment of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage is an indicator of the urgency of these matters.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. Although the Report of the Special Committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and makes no recommendations with Constitutional implications, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the Report of the Special Committee may be very helpful as an overview of the issues.

“The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

• The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1–30:24);

• Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);

• Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and

• A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4)” (Item 12-12, Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage, Section II.A.).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “… a civil contract between a woman and a man.…” (Book of Order, W-4.9001) reflects language from the Westminster Confession, but noting that the particular problem which was being addressed was polygamy, not same-sex relationships. [Item 12-12, Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage, Section II.C.2.)]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was an issue of concern for the Westminster divines: “Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “… ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy

In addition to the Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage, there are ten items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s response to it before the 219th General Assembly (2010). These items may be easily grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

a. Take no constitutional action. The adoption of the Report of the Special Committee with its recommendations would make no change to the current constitutional standards.

b. Strengthen and limit current Directory for Worship language. Items 12-01, 12-05 and 12-11 ask the General Assembly to reaffirm the meaning of “marriage” as it is now found in the Directory for Worship.

c. Provide pastoral discretion and responsibility. Items 12-06, 12-08 and 12-09 propose an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 which would allow ministers of the Word and Sacrament and Commissioned Lay Pastors, when authorized to perform marriages, to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies.

d. Amend the Book of Order. Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-07 propose amending four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship which define or describe marriage: W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. Two more overtures, Items 12-04 and 12-10, seek the same or similar changes to the group above, but also include an amendment to D-14.0202, stipulating that the “two people” in a marriage cannot be required to testify against each other. The amendment to the Rules of Discipline in this manner may be considered with or without amendment to the Directory for Worship.

Each of these groups, and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly to consider each of these items of business within the context of all of them and the complex background from which they arise.

2. Strengthening and Limiting Current Language of W-4.9001

Three of the overtures which concern the church’s understanding of marriage do not seek amendment of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001 but explicitly request that the General Assembly “affirm” or “reaffirm” approval of one of three closely similar interpretations of that paragraph so as to define marriage as including only heterosexual couples legally wed.

Item 12-01, Item 12-05, and Item 12-11 reference the first sentence of W-4.9001 which speaks of marriage as a gift from God to humankind. They also indicate that the provision’s third sentence controls the weight of meaning of the previous two sentences, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.” (Book of Order, W-4.9001)

All three overtures acknowledge and affirm only heterosexual marriage, the sole form of legal marriage in all fifty states until 2004, and they do not provide that the state has a continuing authority to define marriage. An interpretation of W-4.9001 according to Item 12-01 would say that “… God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.” Item 12-05 interprets as not being “… within the will of God …” those same-sex unions legally established where the civil authority has amended its marriage and partnership laws to include same-sex couples, and it places in that category all sexual unions of any sort which are outside the bonds of legal heterosexual marriage, including those protected by civil statute. None of the three overtures explicitly addresses the point raised by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution in 2008, that “… if the gift of marriage to the church were independent of the state and not fully subsumed by the civil contract definition, then it would have a basis for performing marriages as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253). In fact, each can be read as requesting interpretation of W-4.9001 as witness against civil definitions deemed too broad.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the concept of celibacy does not appear in the current Book of Order. To introduce by an authoritative interpretation the concept of celibacy in order to constitutionally interpret “marriage” as presented in W-4.9001 would effectively be to amend that paragraph without bringing the proposed amendment before the presbyteries for their approval or disapproval.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Item 12-01, Item 12-05, and Item 12-11 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to respond under G-13.0103p, and bear public witness that Christian marriage can only be between one man and one woman and that no sexual relationship except heterosexual marriage is within the will of God.
Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 12-01 (Overture 010) would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

Item 12-05

See advice on Item 12-01, Part 2 of ACC Overview on Marriage.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the concept of celibacy does not appear in the current Book of Order. To introduce by an authoritative interpretation the concept of celibacy in order to constitutionally interpret “marriage” as presented in W-4.9001 would effectively be to amend that paragraph without bringing the proposed amendment before the presbyteries for their approval or disapproval.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Item 12-01, Item 12-05, and Item 12-11 is appropriate to respond under G-13.0103p, and bear public witness that Christian marriage can only be between one man and one woman and that no sexual relationship except heterosexual marriage is within the will of God.

Item 12-11

See advice on Item 12-01, Part 2 of ACC Overview on Marriage.

Item 12-11 would introduce into the interpretation of W-4.9001 the concept of celibacy as a personal calling. It pairs a call from God to “… some men and women to live together as husband and wife” with God’s call to others “to live a life of celibacy,” so as to more clearly describe or define “marriage” in terms of what it is and also in contrast to what it is not. Item 12-11 implicitly emphasizes the importance of the discernment of a person’s call to either marriage or celibacy, but without incorporating into that discernment a specific role for the community of faith that would finally validate that personal call by means of a marriage ceremony. It also raises such questions for the church’s constitutional ordering of its pastoral care and discipline as “What is the meaning of ‘to live together as husband and wife’?” “Are ‘all others’ or perhaps only ‘some others’ called to celibacy?” and “Does this interpretation of W-4.9001 referring to God’s call to marriage imply that Christians are not to divorce?”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the concept of celibacy does not appear in the current Book of Order. To introduce by an authoritative interpretation the concept of celibacy in order to constitutionally interpret “marriage” as presented in W-4.9001 would effectively be to amend that paragraph without bringing the proposed amendment before the presbyteries for their approval or disapproval.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Item 12-01, Item 12-05, and Item 12-11 is appropriate, to respond under G-13.0103p, and bear public witness that Christian marriage can only be between one man and one woman and that no sexual relationship except heterosexual marriage is within the will of God.

3. Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

Item 12-06

The third group of business before the General Assembly seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow ministers of the Word and Sacrament and Commissioned Lay Pastors, when authorized to perform marriages, to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are Item 12-06, Item 12-08, and Item 12-09.

The church has defined marriage, first, as “… a civil contract between a woman and a man” (Book of Order, W-4.9001). In 1991, the General Assembly adopted an authoritative interpretation that said, “… since a Christian marriage performed in accordance with the Directory for Worship can only involve a covenant between a woman and a man, it would not be proper for a minister of the Word and Sacrament to perform a same sex union ceremony that the minister determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony” (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395).

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008 “The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community…” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008. “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors…” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254). There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same sex couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The enactment of laws which make it possible for same sex couples to enter into a civil contract raises the question then whether the key to the performance of marriage ceremonies, authorized by sessions, to be held in a church, and conducted by ministers or Commissioned Lay Pastors, is the civil contract or the gender of the parties. The traditional distinctions held by the PC(USA) are no longer as clear.

Benton, et al. v Presbytery of Hudson River; Presbytery of the Redwoods v Jane Adams Spahr, and the previously mentioned 1991 authoritative interpretation rested on the following distinctions:

- ceremonies for same sex couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage;
- ministers or CLPs were not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony; and
- pastoral care for same sex couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “… [celebrate] a loving, caring, and committed relationship…” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 588) such as civil unions for same sex couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

Each of the overtures seeking an authoritative interpretation has some inconsistency with previous constitutional interpretation. All of them are premised on a rationale that the language in the description of marriage is “simply descriptive.” Item 12-09 posits that since there is no mandatory language (“shall,” “is to be,” or “are to be”) in sentences describing a couple as a man and a woman, it is not mandated that the couple be a man and a woman. It is clear, however, that previous authoritative interpretations do not consider the language “simply descriptive” and are based on very literal interpretation of the phrase “between a woman and a man.” In addition, Item 12-09 proposes an authoritative interpretation which does not interpret any specific provision of the Book of Order.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that ministers of the Word and Sacrament and Commissioned Lay Pastors who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such ceremonies for same sex couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that Sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that, of the three overtures presented, the language of Item 12-06 is most compatible with provisions of the Constitution.

4. Amend the Book of Order

Item 12-02 On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage, from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 12-02 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship; W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, which would redefine or redescribe marriage or Christian marriage. This overture takes essentially the same approach as Items 12-03 and 12-07, differing only in word choices, primarily in the use of “two people” or “couple” to replace the current language of “a man and a woman” and in the widely varying rationales. In addition, Item 12-04 and Item 12-10 join the group above, but add an amendment to D-14.0202, stipulating that a “married person” cannot be compelled to testify against his or her spouse.

Among Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07, and 12-10, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes Item 12-04 best represents all issues addressed in the other four overtures. Thus, if the General Assembly desires to achieve the rationale offered by these five overtures, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s advice for Item 12-04 should be considered.
Item 12-03 On Amending W-4.9000, Regarding Marriage, from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 12-03 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship; W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, which would redefine or redescribe marriage or Christian marriage. This overture takes essentially the same approach as Items 12-02 and 12-07, differing only in word choices (primarily the use of “two people” or “couple” to replace the current language of “a man and a woman”) and in the widely varying rationales. In addition, Item 12-04 and Item 12-10 join the group above but with an additional amendment to D-14.0202 that stipulates that the “married persons” cannot be compelled to testify against each other. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendments in Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07, and 12-10 be changed to “two people” to allow the intent of the wording to be clearly translated into other languages. Among Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07, and 12-10, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes Item 12-04 best represents all issues addressed in the other four overtures. Thus, if the General Assembly desires to achieve the rationale recited by these five overtures, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s advice for Item 12-04 should be considered.

Item 12-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006—which would redefine or redescribe Christian marriage. It would also amend D-14.0202, which stipulates that a “married person” cannot be compelled to testify against his or her spouse. This overture takes essentially the same approach as Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-07, and 12-10 differing only in word choice, primarily in the use of “two people” or “couple” to replace the current language of “a man and a woman” and in the widely varying rationales. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the word “couple” in the proposed amendments Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07, 12-10 be changed to “two people” to allow the intent of the wording to be clearly translated into other languages.

Regardless of any action in amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) adopt the part of Item 12-04 that seeks to amend D-14.0202 by stipulating that a “married person” cannot be compelled to testify against his or her spouse. The proposed new language “married person” in D-14.0202 does not alter the intent of the Rules of Discipline or affect the marriage definition in W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. Thus, it should be treated as a separate action from the overtures amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. Currently same-gender marriage is legal in five states in the United States, and those people who are legally married in those five states should have equal protection in the Rules of Discipline as heterosexually married persons as long as the marriage is recognized by state law.

Item 12-07 On Amending W-4.9000 to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage—from the Presbytery of East Iowa.

This overture takes essentially the same approach as Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, and 12-10, differing only in word choice, primarily in the use of “two people” or “couple” to replace the current language of “a man and a woman” and in the widely varied rationales. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the word “couple” in the proposed amendments from Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07 and 12-10 be changed to “two people” to allow the intent of the wording to be clearly translated into other languages. If the General Assembly desires to achieve the rationale offered by this overture, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s advice for Item 12-04 would accomplish that intent.

Item 12-10 would also amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship; W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, which would redefine or redescribe Christian marriage, and would amend D-14.0202, stipulating that a “married person” cannot be compelled to testify against his or her spouse. This overture takes essentially the same approach as Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04 and 12-07 differing only in word choice, primarily in the use of “two people” or “couple” to replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” and in the widely varying rationales.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the word “couple” in the amendments proposed by Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07 and 12-10 be changed to “two people” to allow the intent of the wording to be clearly translated into other languages.

If the General Assembly desires to achieve the rationale offered by this overture, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s advice for Item 12-04 would accomplish that intent.
Items 12-01, 12-05, and 12-11 would each overture the 219th General Assembly (2010) to reaffirm that marriage is a gift from God designed to be between a man and a woman. In addition, Items 12-05 and 12-11 overture the 219th General Assembly (2010) to reaffirm a standard of sexual behavior that limits sexual activity to married relationships.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 12-01, and Items 12-05 and 12-11 be disapproved.

Rationale

Items 12-01, 12-05, and 12-11 share an interpretation of W-4.9001 in which the statement that marriage is God’s gift to all humankind and for the wellbeing of the entire human family is further and more narrowly circumscribed by the subsequent sentences stating that marriage is a civil contract and a covenant between a man and a woman.

Items 12-11 and 12-05 go further, asking the General Assembly to declare that all appropriate sexual behavior should exist only within the institution of heterosexual marriage, and those not married are to be celibate. Item 12-05 overtures the General Assembly to declare that any sexual relationships outside the bounds of marriage are sinful, “not within the will of God,” and disapproved by the church.

While the church understands and proclaims that marriage between a woman and a man is a basic and good form of family, it has also recognized, especially in recent decades, that other forms of family life also demonstrate and nurture God’s intentions for family life: nurturing children, deepening love, providing material support, caring for the young and the sick and the aged, and creating a context for growth in faith. There is recognition that creating a family by marriage is not simply a way to regulate sexual behavior. It is much more than that, as it establishes a deeply good form of family, but not the only form of good family. As the church stated in the policy Transforming Families:

> We envision a church and society that welcomes and nurtures all persons, regardless of their family circumstances. Both single persons and married persons should be respected and honored, in the community and in the family of God. We look toward a society in which all members of the family are valued equally, with special attention to children and others who are more vulnerable. The church rejects attitudes or practices that value some more highly than others—based on gender, age, class, ability, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any outward condition. (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 757)

Without abandoning the deep value with which the church holds marriage, the church has also recognized that there are conditions in today’s complex world that may cause good people to cohabitate: for example, elderly couples who must consider the effect of marriage on Social Security or pension benefits and young people who strive for a level of financial and educational achievement before marriage (see entire policy Transforming Families, Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 724–795). The actual realities of life may make the imposition of rigid rules without exceptions seem lacking in compassion.

For similar reasons, the church has made a commitment to support equal civil rights for same-sex couples. Equality under the law is one principle. But, in addition, the church recognizes the importance of these protections and rights to the capacity of such families to do what good families do. Similarly, the church has understood that same-sex couples, and homosexual persons, have the same need and desire for the pastoral care of the church. Thus, it offers the blessing of the church on same-sex unions and committed itself to the wellbeing of children in same-sex unions as it has to all children (Transforming Families, Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 56, 775–776).

While unintended, Items 12-01, 12-05, and 12-11 may convey to many people a harsh spirit that belies the compassion, pastoral care, and discernment with which the church actually shares its faith and practices.

On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend W-4.9000 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“W-4.9001

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract covenant between a woman and a man two people and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman two people are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other between two people, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

“W-4.9002

“a. In preparation for the marriage service, the minister shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman two people concerning …

[The rest of W-4.9002–9003 remains the same.]

“W-4.9004

“The service begins with the scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman two people shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. The service includes appropriate passages of Scripture, which may be interpreted in various forms of proclamation. Prayers shall be offered for the couple, for the communities which support them in this new dimension of discipleship, and for all who seek to live in faithfulness. In the name of the triune God the minister shall declare publicly that the woman and the man two people are now joined in marriage. …

[The rest of W-4.9004–9005 remains the same.]

“W-4.9006

“A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage or civil union and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of vows by the husband and wife couple, and the public declaration by the minister reflect the fact that the woman and man two people are already married to one another united according to the laws of the state.”

Rationale

I. Marriage: Sharing God’s Gift Equitably in the Church:

Rationale for an Act of Pastoral Ministry

The Directory for Worship defines marriage as “… a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family” (W-4.9001). A gift conferred by God can only be denied by God the giver of the gift.

God’s gift of marriage within the Church is an act of pastoral care by “… which Christians offer [support to] one another in daily living and at times of need and of crisis in personal and communal life. …” (W-6.1003). Pastoral care is a ministry of the whole Church. But it is especially incumbent upon elders, deacons, and ministers of the Word and Sacrament, as a duty and responsibility which they are bound to perform by Christ’s law of love, that they share the gift of pastoral care equitably with all people within the Church (W-6.1003, W-6.3002, G-6.0304, G-6.0402, G-6.0202).

Currently in our churches and communities, same gender couples are living together in loving, committed, monogamous relationships. They are raising children, caring for aging parents, and making positive contributions to their communities. These couples include new and long-time members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Their relationships are equivalent to a marriage in every way but formal recognition by the church and by most states in which they live, though some states are recognizing their relationships as marriages or civil unions.
By changing the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship we would recognize committed, lifelong relationships that are already being lived out by our members. We would honor and support the love and commitment they practice in their lives every day. We would bear witness to the love of God as it is expressed between these couples and as we offer that love to them on behalf of the church.

In addition, as the legal recognition of same-gender relationships goes through transitions throughout the country, PC(USA) clergy and sessions are faced with complex decisions regarding ecclesiastical authority and property use. Ministers of the Word and Sacrament currently can face ecclesiastical charges if they follow the mandate of their office to provide pastoral care equitably in the church and thus perform marriage ceremonies or civil unions that may be legal in their state. Ruling elders who follow the mandate of their office to extend the pastoral ministry of the church to all members face a similar liability by authorizing the use of church property for such marriages. Same-gender couples who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can come to their minister and request that minister to perform their marriage as an agent of the state, only to be denied that important time of pastoral care and ministry because of church law. Broadening the language to offer marriage to any two people removes the religious barriers faced by ministers, sessions, church members, and other Christians while continuing to honor the laws of each state. Changing the language in this way emphasizes that the Directory for Worship defines marriage within the bounds of our denomination and does not determine what is legal or illegal in civil law.

For the good of loving, monogamous same-gender couples in our church and for the community and for the greater ministry of our clergy, sessions, and churches, we propose these changes to the Directory for Worship.

II. Biblical and Theological Rationale

A search of marriage in the Scripture reveals a broad spectrum of historical marriage practice, some of which we consider foreign today, including: Solomon’s many wives and concubines (1 Kings 11:3), levirate marriage (Deut. 25:5–6 and Matt. 22:23–32), wives sharing female servants with their husband to increase progeny (Gen. 29–30), divorce and remarriage as equal to adultery (Mark 10:12), and women being commanded to remain silent in church and only ask their husbands for instruction at home (1 Cor. 14:33–36).

We believe the central passage about marriage in the Bible is also the central passage of the Bible as a whole, though it does not mention the word “marriage.” It is Matt. 22:37–38: “He said to him, ‘You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.’ This is the greatest and first commandment. And a second is like it: ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’ On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.” In addition, we are reminded of the centrality of love in all our decisions in 1 John 4:16b: “God is love, and those who abide in love abide in God, and God abides in them.” Other meaningful and relevant passages about love that apply to marriage are John 13:34: “I give you a new commandment, that you love one another. Just as I have loved you, you also should love one another. By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another” and Romans 12:10: “love one another with mutual affection; outdo one another in showing honor.” Then Paul reminds us in Galatians 3:28 that in Christ so many of the boundary lines we draw between one another are erased. “There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus.”

With passages like these firmly in our hearts and minds, we work to interpret the whole message of Scripture through the lens of Christ. We strive to discern the love, grace, and salvation of God as revealed in the historical and social context in which the Scriptures were written. Then we ask how we may live out that love, grace, and salvation in our own historical and social context.

This mode of biblical interpretation is at the heart of our Reformed tradition. It is an essential of Reformed faith that the seat of ultimate authority in the church, inclusive of the church’s understanding of the witness of Scripture and the Confessions, is Jesus Christ.

“… Obedience to Jesus Christ alone identifies the one universal church and supplies the continuity of its tradition. …” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.03).

“… the church, in obedience to Jesus Christ, is open to the reform of its standards of doctrine as well as of governance. …” (Book of Order, G-2.0200).

“… When controversy arises about the right understanding of any passage or sentence of Scripture, or for the reformation of any abuse within the Kirk of God, we ought not so much to ask what [men] have said or done before us, as what the Holy Ghost uniformly speaks within the body of the Scriptures and what Christ Jesus himself did and commanded. …” (The Book of Confessions, The Scots Confession, 3.18; see also The Second Helvetic Confession, 5.010 and The Confession of 1967, 9.29–9.30).

Some of the more helpful passages that speak specifically of marriage remind us that the purpose of marriage in a Christian context is that two people support each other as disciples of Jesus Christ. Paul warns of the entanglements of marriage for life as a disciple as well as the benefits it provides for those who do not have the gift of celibacy (1 Cor. 7). Jesus uses... strong rhetoric to warn against the way marriage may pull us away from our devotion to God: “Whoever comes to me and does not hate father and mother, wife and children, brothers and sisters, yes and even life itself, cannot be my disciple” (Luke 14:26). But, when marriage does empower two people to live lives of service, self-sacrifice, simplicity, and sharing God’s love in Christ, then the marriage is fulfilling the spirit of Christ as proclaimed in Scripture. It is our conviction and experience that loving, monogamous, homosexual relationships enable gay and lesbian people to find support and empowerment to live as more faithful disciples of Jesus Christ.

But, perhaps the most meaningful word related to marriage in the Bible is from Galatians 6:2: “Bear one another’s burdens, and in this way you will fulfill the law of Christ.” In addition to being a definition of servanthood and discipleship, this could be read as a definition of marriage. In our churches today there are Christian men and women bearing one another’s burdens in the context of lifelong, loving, monogamous homosexual relationships. They are raising children, caring for parents, contributing to their neighborhoods, communities, and churches. We find no biblical warrant for denying them full access to “… a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family” (Book of Order, W-4.9001). Again we assert that a gift conferred by God can only be denied by God the giver of the gift.

The communal story of the early Church clearly demonstrates that the Church led by God’s grace in Jesus Christ grasped new understandings of the expansiveness of the distribution of God’s gifts to all humankind and changed its beliefs and actions accordingly. Philip’s encounter with the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:26, 27, 35, 38) and Peter’s visions in which God taught him that nothing God created was common or unclean (Acts 10:15, 19, 20a, 23b, 28, 29a, 47) show that the Church was pressed to change its entire perspective on how God worked in the world and was challenged to dismantle understandings that had been accepted for centuries, e.g., that Jews have nothing to do with unclean gentiles.

The proper pastoral response to the neighbor in need (Lk. 10:25–37) is to break through any social, legal, or religious taboos that cause us to see another human being in need as less than ourselves and unworthy of God's gifts freely given. The rule of love (Deut. 6:5; Lk. 10:27, 37b) will not permit us to withhold the performance of the duties of pastoral care on the basis of our judging another person common or unclean.

In the Church today, loving committed same-gender couples who hear the good news of God’s grace in Jesus Christ that enables them to give themselves in covenant to one another are saying, “Look, here is our love. What is to prevent us from receiving God’s gift of marriage—God’s gift to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family?”

The proposed changes to the Directory for Worship regarding marriage ensure that God’s gift of marriage shall be shared equitably in the church in fulfillment of the church’s pastoral ministry and its communal story as the Body of Christ.

Concurrence to Item 12-02 from the Presbytery of New York City.

Concurrence to Item 12-02 from the Presbytery of Albany (with Additional Rationale).

Currently in our churches and communities, same-gender couples are living together in loving, committed, monogamous relationships. They are raising children, caring for aging parents, and making positive contributions to their communities. These couples include new and long-time members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Their relationships are equivalent to a marriage in every way but formal recognition by the church and by most states in which they live, though some states are recognizing their relationships as marriages or civil unions.

By changing the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship, we would recognize committed, lifelong relationships that are already being lived out by our members. We would honor and support the love and commitment they practice in their lives every day. We would bear witness to the love of God as it is expressed between these couples and as we offer that love to them on behalf of the church.

In addition, as the legal recognition of same-gender relationships goes through transitions throughout the country, PC(USA) clergy and sessions are faced with complex decisions regarding ecclesiastical authority and property use. Ministers of Word and Sacrament currently can face ecclesiastical charges if they perform marriage ceremonies or civil unions that may be legal in their state. Same-gender couples who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can come to their minister and request that minister to perform their marriage as an agent of the state, only to be denied that important time of pastoral care and ministry because of church law.

Broadening the language to offer marriage to any two people removes the religious barriers faced by ministers, sessions, church members, and other Christians while continuing to honor the laws of each state. Changing the language in this way emphasizes that the Directory for Worship defines marriage within the bounds of our denomination and does not determine what is legal or illegal in civil law.

For the good of loving, monogamous same-gender couples in our church and for the community and for the greater ministry of our clergy, sessions, and churches, we propose these changes to the Directory for Worship.
Concurrence to Item 12-02 from the Presbytery of the Redwoods (with Additional Rationale).

[Rationale is similar to the first section of the rationale from the Presbytery of Albany]

Currently in our churches and communities, same-gender couples are living together in loving, committed, monogamous relationships. They are raising children, caring for aging parents, and making positive contributions to their communities. These couples include new and long-time members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Their relationships are equivalent to a marriage in every way but formal recognition by the church and by most states in which they live, though some states are recognizing their relationships as marriages or civil unions.

By changing the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship, we would recognize committed, lifelong relationships that are already being lived out by our members. We would honor and support the love and commitment they practice in their lives every day. We would bear witness to the love of God as it is expressed between these couples and as we offer that love to them on behalf of the church.

In addition, as the legal recognition of same-gender relationships goes through transitions throughout the country, PC(USA) clergy and sessions are faced with complex decisions regarding ecclesiastical authority and property use. Ministers of Word and Sacrament currently can face ecclesiastical charges if they perform marriage ceremonies or civil unions that may be legal in their state. Same-gender couples who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can come to their minister and request that minister to perform their marriage as an agent of the state, only to be denied that important time of pastoral care and ministry because of church law. Broadening the language to offer marriage to any two people removes the religious barriers faced by ministers, sessions, church members, and other Christians while continuing to honor the laws of each state. Changing the language in this way emphasizes that the Directory for Worship defines marriage within the bounds of our denomination and does not determine what is legal or illegal in civil law. This overture recognizes that the civil, legal definition of marriage is in transition within and among the states. This overture honors the dignity of all same-gender couples and their families throughout the PC(USA).

For the good of loving, monogamous, same-gender couples in our church and for the community and for the greater ministry of our clergy, sessions, and churches, we propose these changes to the Directory for Worship.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 12-02

Advice on Item 12-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07, and 12-10 present similar issues. The ACC response to these issues can be found in the Overview posted at Item 12-01. If the 219th General Assembly (2010) would like to achieve the intent of these five items, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that its intent can be best accomplished by approval of Item 12-04.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 12-02 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

For clarity, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy has grouped Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07 and 12-10 together. These items overture the 219th General Assembly (2010) to send to the presbyteries a proposed amendment to the Book of Order, W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006, that would replace references to women and men with gender neutral language. Item 12-07 would also delete reference to marriage as a civil contract.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the assembly to consider the following:

The 208th General Assembly (1996) approved the following: “Affirming the Presbyterian church’s historic definition of marriage as a civil contract between a man and a woman, yet recognizing that committed same-sex partners seek equal civil liberties in a contractual relationship with all the civil rights of married couples, we urge the Office of the Stated Clerk to explore the feasibility of entering friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation in favor of giving civil rights to same-sex partners” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p.122). This quotation represents the significant and long-standing commitment of the PC(USA) to equal civil rights for same-sex couples.

In 2004, the 216th General Assembly (2004) adopted the policy Transforming Families to address the many changes and challenges facing individuals and families as they strive to form and sustain families. In its historical analysis, the policy points out that Scripture contains “… several forms of marital and family relationships, none of which is a precise equivalent of contemporary marriage and family life” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 750). It notes that the development of monogamous marriage took place over time in Hebrew (and other) societies. And it points out that “… the Reformed tradition embraced marriage as a good for all in society, Christian or not” (Ibid.). As the Book of Order states, “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well being of the entire human family” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

Transforming Families goes on to state that while the marital-biological family is a basic form of family, it is “… neither exhaustive nor exclusive …” as a family form, and “… it does not fully exemplify God’s ordering of interpersonal life” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 751, C.2.). Moreover, the policy recognizes that the forms and purposes of families have evolved as God’s ordering of equal gender relationships has become clearer. In these ways, the church has acknowledged that forms of marriage and family are products of historical and cultural development. Today we would find some of these previous forms and some of the interpersonal relationships that they embodied falling short of our understanding of God’s will for humankind and human well being.

Having said this, this policy did not address specifically the question of same-sex marriage and family. It assumed without comment the previous policies of the church that called for civil rights for same-sex families that are equal to those of married heterosexual families, but that did not explicitly include same-sex couples in the church’s understanding of marriage.

The policy ends with a vision of a church and society that “… welcomes and nurtures all persons regardless of their family circumstances” and a church that rejects “… attitudes or practices that value some more highly than others—based on gender, age, class, ability, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any outward condition…” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 757).

The intent of Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07, and 12-10 is to embody in the church itself an equal recognition of same-sex faithful and committed relationships as included in the gift of marriage God intends for humankind. These items would create in the church the same equality for same-sex committed relationships as the church has repeatedly advocated in civil society.

On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage—From the Presbytery of Hudson River.

The Presbytery of Hudson River overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall W-4.9000 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“W-4.9001

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man two people (“the couple”) and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman the couple are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other the couple, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

“W-4.9002

“a. In preparation for the marriage service, the minister shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman the couple concerning

[The rest of W-4.9002–.9003 remains the same.]
“W-4.9004

“The service begins with the scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman couple shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. The service includes appropriate passages of Scripture, which may be interpreted in various forms of proclamation. Prayers shall be offered for the couple, for the communities which support them in this new dimension of discipleship, and for all who seek to live in faithfulness. In the name of the triune God the minister shall declare publicly that the woman and the man couple are now joined in marriage.

[The rest of W-4.9004–.9005 remains the same.]

“W-4.9006

“A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage or civil union and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of vows by the husband and wife couple, and the public declaration by the minister reflect the fact that the woman and man couple are already married to one another united according to the laws of the state.”

Rationale

Marriage is beyond gender. It refers to the commitment of two people to live beside each other with a love expressed as tenderness and justice. It refers to the deep promise to live together through the thick and thin of their journey together through the years. It refers to the mystery in which the love of God meets, is joined to and made manifest in the love of two people whose hearts are a home place to each other. The notion of marriage is demeaned by any lesser definition. Recognizing this, some states are already ahead of the church in moving the legal definition of marriage beyond gender.

Changing the definition of marriage in the Directory of Worship would allow the church and its officers the option of also recognizing the lifelong, same-gender commitments that many of our members are now choosing to make. It would make it possible for the church to celebrate the love of God as it is embodied in their love for each other. In a state that already permits same-gender marriages or civil union, ministers and ruling elders would be relieved of the fear of ecclesiastical charges and would be able to respond equitably and pastorally to marriage requests by all, not just some, members of their congregations and to do so without fear of charges being filed in ecclesiastical court. Changing the Directory of Worship in this way would move the church away from fear and reprisal and closer to its own teaching on the hospitality of God and the welcome and care which that implies.

The proposed change allows us to step more fully in line with the Bible and The Book of Confessions and to be the church that both our Scripture and our Constitution have continually imagined, a church open to changes that support love of God and one another (Mark 12:28–34; Luke 10:25–37). We join those in the early church by stepping into line behind people like Philip, who, in his encounter with the Ethiopian eunuch, was moved to overturn his previously narrow perceptions and prejudices and make the circle of God’s family much wider than his previous religious upbringing had allowed him to imagine (Acts 8:26–38) and Peter, who was given a vision that the lines he had previously drawn between clean and unclean were too narrow and had to be abandoned to embody God’s loving way (Acts 10:9–22). And we join those who, throughout the history of our denomination, have recognized the need to move away from previous barriers in the direction of love and care.

… In [God’s] reconciling love, [God] overcomes the barriers between brothers [and sisters] and breaks down every form of discrimination … The church is called to bring all men [and women] to receive and uphold one another as persons in all relationships of life: in employment, housing, education, leisure, marriage, family, church, and the exercise of political rights. … Congregations, individuals, or groups of Christians who exclude, dominate, or patronize their fellowmen, however subtly, resist the Spirit of God and bring contempt on the faith which they profess. (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9:44, emphasis added)

The proposed changes would grant all loving couples the right to have their marriages performed in our congregations, strengthening all our communities and families, gay and straight, since they allow us to recognize the love of two hearts declaring themselves to be a home to each other, before God, with gratitude.

5. Shall D-14.0202 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A husband or wife married person, otherwise competent to testify, may be a witness for or against the other his or her spouse, but neither shall be compelled to testify against the other.”

Rationale

By the time the General Assembly meets, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts will have allowed same-gender couples to marry for more than six years. Many of these couples are members of PC(USA) churches and come to the church to celebrate the gift of marriage in worship. Some of our pastors, when they receive such a request, will decline, as it would run counter to their conscience to officiate. Others, however, are put in an untenable position, caught between their sense of pastoral responsibility and the threat of prosecution. The proposed changes respond to and reflect this changed reality.

Equal Rights

The 218th General Assembly (2008) voted overwhelmingly (516 to 151) to “request the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Council, and other representatives of the PC(USA) to urge state legislatures and the federal government to apply the principle of equal protection to same-gender couples and their children.” In the same vote they determined to “support congregations, sessions, and ministers of Word and Sacrament who are seeking to extend pastoral care as well as outreach and evangelism to same-gender couples and their nontraditional families who are more and more our neighbors on our streets and our fellow members in our pews.” In states where the equal protection principle includes marriage for same-gender couples, it would run counter to the direction mandated by the 218th General Assembly (2008) if the state were to provide more protection than the church is willing to extend to its own members.

Pastoral Aspects

In a state where same-gender marriage is recognized under the law, it is pastorally unconscionable to apply exclusionary principles to certain members of the congregation by declining to perform their marriage. In practical terms, what this means is that pastors in those congregations have to make the choice between failing in their pastoral responsibilities and running the risk of prosecution by the church. Such prosecutions have placed a formidable financial and spiritual burden on presbyteries already, threatening the peace and unity of the church.

Historical Relation Between Church and State

Dating back to John Calvin, the church and the state have shared responsibility for marriages, and the church has recognized the state’s right to define the legal parameters of marriage. The state determines who is eligible to be married in broad categories, while the church has always maintained the right to determine the wisdom of a particular marriage (W-4.9002b). It would break a tradition of nearly five hundred years if the church would at this time decide to recognize some, but not all, marriages sanctioned by the state. The church would effectively deny the state’s right to set those legal parameters.

Additional Rationale from the Presbytery of Baltimore

We wholeheartedly concur with and affirm the rationale that was provided by the Presbytery of Baltimore in Item 12-02.

On Marriage—From the Presbytery of Prospect Hill.

The Presbytery of Prospect Hill, recognizing that sexual sin is so serious and the teaching of Christian marriage so important in our time, overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to do the following:

1. Affirm that marriage between a man and a woman is “a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

2. Declare, therefore, that no sexual union outside the bonds of marriage, such as in co-habitation, adulterous affairs, domestic partnerships, or same-sex unions, is within the will of God or approved by this body.

3. Urge congregations to provide loving and consistent teaching in this area and to call erring members and leaders to repentance.

4. Direct our national and international offices to uphold and urge this historic understanding of marriage in their communications with both church and society.

Rationale

For the church’s witness to have integrity and effect in our culture, we must examine our own teaching and living, reforming our lives to become consistent with God’s intentions for us. Although some in society seek to redefine marriage, marriage is a relationship instituted and defined by God and we are not free to change it. We believe that God’s revealed intent must be the basis for our life and witness. Our culture needs the consistent witness of the church in order to resist pressures that would distort the meaning of marriage.

The following examples show God’s revealed intent for and affirmation of the marriage union, as well as God’s disapproval of a sexual relationship outside the bonds of marriage between a man and a woman:

Genesis 1:26, 27: “Then God said, ‘Let us make humankind in our image, according to our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the air, and over the cattle, and over every creeping thing that creeps upon the earth.’ So God created humankind in his image, in the image of God he created them; male and female he created them.”

Genesis 2:20–24: “... but for the man there was not found a helper as his partner. So the LORD God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then he took one of his ribs and closed up its place with flesh. And the rib that the LORD God had taken from the man he made into a woman and brought her to the man. Then the man said, ‘This at last is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh; this one shall be called Woman, for out of Man this one was taken.’ Therefore a man leaves his father and his mother and clings to his wife, and they become one flesh.”

Exodus 20:14: “You shall not commit adultery.”

Lev. 18:22: “You shall not lie with a male as with a woman; it is an abomination.”

Matt. 19:4–6: “... ‘Have you not read that the one who made them at the beginning “made them male and female,” and said, “For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh?”’ So they are no longer two, but one flesh. Therefore what God has joined together, let no one separate.’”
Romans 1:26–27: “For this reason God gave them up to degrading passions. Their women exchanged natural intercourse for unnatural, and in the same way also the men, giving up natural intercourse with women, were consumed with passion for one another. Men committed shameless acts with men and received in their own persons the due penalty for their error.”

Eph. 5:31–32: “For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two will become one flesh. This is a great mystery, and I am applying it to Christ and the church.”

Hebrews 13:4: “Let marriage be held in honor by all, and let the marriage bed kept undefiled; for God will judge fornicators and adulterers.”

1 Cor. 6:9–11: “Do you not know that wrongdoers will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived! Fornicators, idolaters, adulterers, male prostitutes, sodomites, thieves, the greedy, drunkards, revilers, robbers—none of these will inherit the kingdom of God. And this is what some of you used to be. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God.”

1 Cor. 6:18–20: “Shun fornication! Every sin that a person commits is outside the body; but the fornicator sins against the body itself. Or do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, which you have from God, and that you are not your own. Foy you were bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body.”

The PC(USA) constitutional position affirms marriage while disallowing sexual relationships outside the marriage of a man and a woman.

The Westminster Confession of Faith: “Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133).

The Directory for Worship (Book of Order, W-4.9001): “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.”

The Larger Catechism interprets the Seventh Commandment as forbidding “adultery, fornication, rape, incest, sodomy, and all unnatural lusts; all unclean imaginations, thoughts, purposes, and affections … and all other provocations to, or acts of, uncleanness either in ourselves or others” (The Book of Confessions, 7.249)

The Book of Order stated more succinctly, among “the historic confessional standards of the church,” the “requirement to live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman (W-4.9001), or chastity in singleness” (Book of Order, G-6.0106b).

In 1978 the United Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) adopted a policy statement on “The Church and Homosexuality.” According to that policy statement, “We conclude that homosexuality is not God’s wish for humanity, … Even where the homosexual orientation has not been consciously sought or chosen, it is neither a gift from God or a state nor a condition like race; it is a result of our living in a fallen world.” Reviewing biblical passages related to sexuality, the statement found: “… that homosexuality is a contradiction of God’s wise and beautiful pattern for human sexual relationships revealed in Scripture and affirmed in God’s ongoing will for our life in the Spirit of Christ. It is a confusion of sexual roles that mirrors the tragic inversion in which men and women worship the creature instead of the Creator.”

The PC(USA) has at various times and in a variety of documents and policies declared its position on marriage and sexual relationships outside marriage. However, on some occasions the message from our church to the culture has been unclear. In this time of sexual confusion, so prevalent in our society and in the church, including occasions in which some in the church seek to challenge the teaching, it is proper for our General Assembly to reassert itself succinctly on this matter as a means of clarifying its teaching and making it indisputable that such teaching applies to our own time.

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000—From the Presbytery of Albany.

The Presbytery of Albany overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000:

“Ministers of Word and Sacrament and commissioned lay pastors authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may exercise pastoral discretion when asked to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license, and sessions may permit the use of church property for such services. Ministers of Word and Sacrament and commissioned lay pastors may refuse to conduct such services, and sessions may refuse to permit the use of church property for such purposes.”

Rationale
In long-standing Christian tradition, civil authority has played a primary role in the regulation of marriage. Reformed Christians view marriage not as a sacrament mediated by the church but as a blessing that the couple seeks on a contract they are entering under auspices of the state. This blessing is a moment of great joy in the church and in the lives of those on whom it is conferred, but Christian marriage does not change the status of the couple. Marriages that are not blessed by the church are nevertheless recognized in Presbyterian churches, and, as the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage has pointed out in its preliminary report, civil approval is required before a Christian service of marriage can be performed: “Presbyterian marriages are required to fulfill the requirements of legal marriage.”

Because of the integral connection between civil and Christian marriage, the church must contend with the fact that states are now passing legislation or operating under judicial rulings that make legal marriage equality an option for same-gender couples. Long-committed, same-gender couples (including Presbyterians whose civil unions may have been blessed by their Presbyterian pastors in their Presbyterian congregations) are choosing to take on the additional commitments and responsibilities of marriage. In these situations, pastors and sessions find themselves facing urgent pastoral decisions about how to provide the same ministry to them that is offered to other members. The issue comes to a head in the decision about whether ministers of Word and Sacrament will officiate at marriage ceremonies of legally-licensed couples and whether the session will permit the use of church property for such ceremonies.

The issue is critical because worship is the central context of pastoral care for Christians:
“The worship of God in the Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care as well as for the ministry of nurture in the faith” (Book of Order, W-6.4000).

“All Christians are called to care for one another in daily living, sharing joys and sorrows, supporting in times of stress and need, offering mutual forgiveness and reconciliation. This care is primarily offered as the community of faith worships together….” (Book of Order, W-6.3002).

“The church recognizes transitions which bring joy and sorrow in human life:

- a. children are born, grow up, become independent, find their aging parents becoming dependent upon them;
- b. people begin work, change jobs, retire;
- c. households are established, move to new locations, gain and lose members;
- d. people are empowered, restored, make new commitments.

“The ministries of pastoral care support people in recognizing, accepting, and celebrating these and other such times of adjustment, assisting them in working toward a new role in life and affirming their identity through transition” (Book of Order, W-6.3010).

Pastors and sessions need the General Assembly’s assurance of their freedom and discretion to provide the pastoral care that their members require. This freedom is based on the same principle as W-4.9002b, which provides that pastors are free, as their judgment dictates, not to officiate at marriages their members and others are contracting. In the absence of mandatory language in the Book of Order that would prohibit a service of Christian marriage for any couple that is legally permitted to marry, the assembly should give such assurance in the form of the proposed authoritative interpretation. The authoritative interpretation will prevent deep grief to church members who might otherwise be denied the pastoral care of the church; it will protect pastors and sessions from judicial challenge for exercising their pastoral responsibilities; in the spirit of mutual forbearance widely urged in recent years by General Assemblies and their task forces, it will promote the peace, unity, and purity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Concurrence to Item 12-06 from the Presbytery of Chicago (with Additional Rationale)

Gay and lesbian Christians are members of our families and congregations, no different from all members of the Body of Christ in being full participants in the Christian community by God’s grace. The church is called to provide wholehearted support that fosters the well-being of all families.

Gay and lesbian persons in committed same-gender partnerships stand in the same relation to God as all other persons. Therefore, the church should extend to them the same pastoral care it offers to other couples and families, helping them to work out their discipleship in the context of their relationships, not apart from them.

The church blesses heterosexual marriages contracted under civil law because for centuries marriage partners have testified that their bond is a means of grace. When same-gender partners testify that their committed relationships have the same benefit, they should receive the same blessing.

While the Book of Order currently provides that marriage, in the Presbyterian context, is “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) that is no longer factually correct in a number of regions of the United States and Canada and is changing on an almost annual basis. Currently civil marriage between same-sex couples is legal in Iowa, Connecticut, Vermont, and Massachusetts. In New Hampshire, same-sex marriages will be legalized beginning January 1, 2010.

Ministers of Word and Sacrament currently serve in a dual capacity when they perform marriage ceremonies in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.): as agents of the state and as agents of the church. As agents of the state, clergy serve as the officer who administers oaths and promises that create the civil contract of marriage and then certifies that those oaths and promises have been undertaken. As agents of the church, clergy are agents of uniting the civil marriage contract with the biblical concept of Covenants with and before God.

On a number of occasions, the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been interpreted to prohibit same-sex marriage ceremonies from being conducted in Presbyterian churches and by Presbyterian clergy. See, e.g. the questions addressed by the General Assembly in 1991 (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395), and General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission decisions in Remedial Case 212-11, Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586) and Disciplinary Case 218-12, Spahr v. Pby of Redwoods.

Spahr specifically holds that “… officers of the PC(USA) authorized to perform marriages shall not state, imply, or represent that a same sex ceremony is a marriage.” Nevertheless, at no time has the church interpreted its Constitution to prohibit the blessing or other memorialization of same-sex civil marriages that have already been formalized through the civil marriage process. Therefore, the proposed authoritative interpretation does not run afoul of any current General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) or General Assembly interpretations of the Constitution.
Advice on Item 12-06—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 12-06 presents issues that the assembly should consider. These can be found in the ACC Overview posted at Item 12-01. If the 219th General Assembly (2010) believes that the intent of Item 12-06 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the overture is clear and consistent with the stated intent.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 12-06 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

For clarity, the ACSWP has considered Items 12-06, 12-08 and 12-09 together. These items overture the 219th General Assembly (2010) to issue an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 allowing pastors in states that have legalized same-sex marriage to exercise pastoral discretion when asked to officiate at such weddings.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) counsels the following considerations:

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently called for equal civil rights for homosexual persons, including the same rights for same-sex couples as are enjoyed by heterosexual married couples. Thus, the church has supported civil unions as one means of achieving this equality. Within its own membership, the church has offered pastoral care to same-sex couples by blessing these unions in a service of worship. However, it has maintained a distinction between marriage that conferred a new status on the couple, marriage, and the blessing of a civil union that existed prior to the blessing.

Because, in fact, civil unions have not guaranteed same-sex couples equal civil rights, the demand for civil marriage for same-sex couples has continued. The legalization of same-sex marriage in five states now blurs the distinction the church has maintained. Church members in same-sex committed relationships turn to their churches and pastors to receive the same gift of marriage that the church has said “God gives to all humankind” (W-4.9001). Items 12-06, 12-08, and 12-09 support the church’s commitment to civil equality and nondiscrimination. They emphasize the new importance of expressing and extending that equality into the church’s worship and pastoral care in those states that have legislated marital equality. None of these items would compel pastors to officiate at same-sex marriages. And none of these items would apply to states that have not legalized same-sex marriage.

Items 12-06, 12-08, and 12-09 challenge the church to permit, but not require, an extension of the church’s current level of pastoral response to include the service of Christian Marriage for same-sex couples where the state has so defined marriage. Should the General Assembly choose to permit this discretion, The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) concurs with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s recommendation that the language of Item 12-06 is preferred.

On Amending W-4.9000 to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage—From the Presbytery of East Iowa.

The Presbytery of East Iowa respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:
1. Amend W-4.9001 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman two people are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man the couple to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.”

2. Amend W-4.9002a as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. In preparation for the marriage service, the minister shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman couple concerning …”

3. Amend W-4.9004 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The service begins with scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman couple shall declare their the intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. ... In the name of the triune God the minister shall declare publicly that the woman and the man two are now joined in marriage. …”

4. Amend W-4.9006 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of the vows by the husband and wife, and the public declaration by the minister reflect the fact that the woman and man are couple is already married to one another according to the laws of the state.”

Rationale

In the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures, covenants between persons of faith are commonplace and blessed by God. The prophets and Jesus Christ our Lord affirmed that justice, mercy, and faith constitute our core as people of faith. As people of faith, in covenant relationship as proclaimed in Scripture and affirmed by our church’s Constitution, we affirm that all persons are created in the image of God and called to partake fully in the covenantal relationships that God has provided for all persons.

The practice of pastoral care honors our core covenantal responsibility to care for one another. The Book of Order declares that pastoral care is an imperative responsibility for the whole church; and has recognized that worship is an important context for the exercise of pastoral care: “All Christians are called to care for one another in daily living, sharing joys and sorrows, supporting in times of stress and need, offering mutual forgiveness and reconciliation. This care is primarily offered as the community of faith worships together. …” (W-6.3002).

Pastoral care is specifically mentioned as being important for Christians during major life events such as loss and death, healing the effects of broken relationships, and life transitions:

The church recognizes transitions which bring joy and sorrow in human life:

a. children are born, grow up …

b. people begin work, change jobs, …

c. households are established, …

d. people are empowered, restored, make new commitments.

The ministries of pastoral care support people in recognizing, accepting, and celebrating these and other such times of adjustment, assisting them in working toward a new role in life and affirming their identity through transition. [W-6.3010]

To exclude an entire population of the church, namely same-gender couples, from the privilege of Christian marriage denies these persons the pastoral care they desire for fulfilling their service to God. While it has always been the case that persons authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may not be required to marry a couple against their conscience and better judgment (Book of Order, W-4.9002b), to bind the conscience of ministers and commissioned lay pastors by forbidding them to conduct a legal marriage that they have prayerfully considered would be an unjustified interference in the exercise of pastoral care. Excluding same-gender couples from the privilege of Christian marriage where it is legally authorized undermines the peace, unity, and purity of the church. Section W-4.9000 was written and adopted before any state created the possibility of marriage between two persons of the same gender. The call of the prophets and the Word of God summon us to declare the holiness of the gift of marriage for all faithful couples, regardless of gender.

Advice on Item 12-07—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07, and 12-10 present similar issues. These can be found in the Overview posted at Item 12-01. If the 219th General Assembly (2010) would like to achieve the intent of these five items, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that its intent can be best accomplished by approval of Item 12-04.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture.

Rationale

The practice of excluding people who are gay and lesbian from marriage has its roots in the persistence of patriarchal standards for the lives of women and men. The notion that men and maleness is superior dictates that men and women behave in particular ways that abide by the rules their sex dictates. For this reason, same-gender loving women and men are perceived as a direct threat to the norms that patriarchy lays out, as they, in their loving, challenge the models of prescribed masculinity and femininity that patriarchy determines. Gay men are a threat as they are perceived as “too feminine,” and lesbian women are perceived as “too masculine.”

In withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding this patriarchal standard for humanity. As a group committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates that same-gender loving women and men be allowed to participate in the commitment of marriage. The ACWC draws particular attention to the vulnerability of lesbian women in this exclusion, as these particular members of the body of Christ find themselves excluded and marginalized both for their gender identity and sexual orientation.

Item 12-08

On Approving an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000 to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility and Accountability for Worship—From the Presbytery of Des Moines.

The Presbytery of Des Moines respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 of the Book of Order:

“Persons authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may exercise pastoral discretion when asked to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license, and sessions may permit the use of church property for such services. Ministers of Word and Sacrament and commissioned lay pastors have the right to refuse to officiate at any marriage that they deem unwise or that would violate their conscience (W-4.9002b).”

Rationale

It is the joy and responsibility of pastors to provide pastoral care to members of their congregations; and the church has recognized that worship is an important context for the exercise of pastoral care:
All Christians are called to care for one another in daily living, sharing joys and sorrows, supporting in times of stress and need, offering mutual forgiveness and reconciliation. This care is primarily offered as the community of faith worships together. … (Book of Order, W-6.3002)

… The ministries of pastoral care support people in recognizing, accepting, and celebrating … times of adjustment, assisting them in working toward a new role in life and affirming their identity through transition. (Book of Order, W-6.3010)

The worship of God in the Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care as well as for the ministry of nurture in the faith. (Book of Order, W-6.4000)

While it has always been the case that persons authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may not be required to marry a couple against their conscience and better judgment (Book of Order, W-4.9002b), to bind the conscience of ministers and commissioned lay pastors by forbidding them to conduct a legal marriage that they have prayerfully considered would be an unjustified interference in the exercise of pastoral care. Forcing pastors to violate their own consciences out of fear of judicial action causes grief to pastors, couples, and congregations, and undermines the peace, unity, and purity of the church.

Section W-4.9000 was written and adopted before any state created the possibility of marriage between two persons of the same gender. There is no mandatory language in the Book of Order that would prohibit a service of Christian marriage for persons who are legally permitted to marry. The Directory for Worship specifically states, “In addition to the terms defined in the Preface to the Book of Order, this directory also uses language about worship which is simply descriptive” (Book of Order, Preface, Directory for Worship, b). The proposed authoritative interpretation would affirm the descriptive nature of references to “a woman and a man” in The Directory for Worship.

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation Regarding Marriage—From the Presbytery of Heartland.

The Presbytery of Heartland overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to issue the following authoritative interpretation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitution:

“Since several states have recognized that marriage is a fundamental right for all persons, and since the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship can be interpreted as descriptive and therefore does not mandate that a marriage contract must be only between a man and a woman, the 219th General Assembly (2010) declares that in the states which authorize same-gender marriage, pastors may officiate at such marriages in the context of Christian worship.”

Rationale

Constitutional Language

The preface to the Book of Order defines the wording of mandatory language as sentences that contain “shall,” “is to be,” or “are to be.” The Preface to the Directory for Worship (clause b) states that the Directory also “uses language about worship which is simply descriptive.” Accordingly, there is no mandatory language in the definition of Christian marriage found in W-4.9001. There is mandatory language in other parts of W-4.9000 (W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004), but in all instances the mandatory language that is used refers to the actions to be performed, not to the couple.

It is therefore reasonable to interpret W-4.9001’s definition of Christian marriage as descriptive and not as a statement that mandates the exclusion of same-gender couples from Christian marriage.

Recognizing that Presbyterians differ in their interpretation of W-4.9001, we are asking the General Assembly to affirm this as a legitimate interpretation, though not necessarily the only valid one. It must be remembered that pastors will continue to have the right to refuse to officiate at any marriage they deem unwise or which goes against their conscience (W-4.9002b).

Equal Rights

The 218th General Assembly (2008) voted overwhelmingly (516 to 151) to “request the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Council, and other representatives of the PC(USA) to urge state legislatures and the federal government to apply the principle of equal protection to same-gender couples and their children” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 259, Item 04-13; http://www.pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=1601). In the same vote they determined to “support congregations, sessions, and ministers of Word and Sacrament who are seeking to extend pastoral care as well as outreach and evangelism to same-gender couples and their nontraditional families who are more and more our neighbors on our streets and our fellow members in our pews” (Ibid.). In states where the equal protection principle includes marriage for same-gender couples, it would run counter to the direction mandated by the 218th General Assembly (2008) if the state were to provide more protection than the church is willing to extend to its own members.

Pastoral Aspects

In a state where same-gender marriage is recognized under the law, it is pastorally unconscionable to apply exclusionary principles to certain members of the congregation by declining to perform their marriage. In practical terms, what this means is that pastors in those congregations have to make the choice between failing in their pastoral responsibilities and running the risk of prosecution by the church. Such prosecutions have placed a formidable financial and spiritual burden on presbyteries already, threatening the peace and unity of the church.

Historical Relation between Church and State

Dating back to John Calvin, the church and the state have shared responsibility for marriages, and the church has recognized the state’s right to define the legal parameters of marriage. The state determines who is eligible to be married in broad categories, while the church has always maintained the right to determine the wisdom of a particular marriage (W-4.9002b). It would break a tradition of nearly five hundred years if the church would at this time decide to recognize some, but not all, marriages sanctioned by the state. The church would effectively deny the state’s right to set those legal parameters.

Item 12-10

[The assembly answered Item 12-10 by the action taken on Item 12-12. See pp. 45, 46.]

The Presbytery of National Capital respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall Book of Order provisions W-4.9001–.9006 and D-14.0200 be amended so that all references to marriage between a man and woman change to marriage between “two people” or “couple” as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strikethrough; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

In W-4.9001:

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man two people. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman two people are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man two people to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

“a. In preparation for the marriage service, the minister shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman couple to be married concerning …

[W-4.9004]“The service begins with scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman couple to be married shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness…

[W-4.9006]“A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of vows by the husband and wife couple, and the public declaration by the minister reflect the fact that the woman and the man two people are already married to one another according to the laws of the state.”

In D-14.0202:

“A husband or wife married person, otherwise competent to testify, may be a witness for or against the other his or her spouse, but neither shall be compelled to testify against the other.”

Rationale

God is love, and love is God’s gift for everyone. In the story of creation, God declares that it is not good for human beings to be alone. In marriage, two people discover the depth of God’s gift of one another. God has given us the capacity to love one another. The ability of two people to enter into relationships, form families, and care for them is an expression of God’s gift. It is holy and good. This gift is not limited to heterosexual couples and the blessing of the church should not be limited either.

Moreover, civil law in numerous states allows for the civil marriage of same sex couples. Many of these couples are members of our congregations and are coming to the church to celebrate the gift of marriage in services of worship. These proposed changes to the Directory for Worship and Rules of Discipline reflect this reality.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 12-10

Advice on Item 12-10—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Items 12-02, 12-03, 12-04, 12-07 and 12-10 present similar issues. ACC background and discussion of these items can be found in the ACC overview posted at Item 12-01. If the 219th General Assembly (2010) would like to achieve the intent of these five items, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that its intent can be best accomplished by adoption of Item 12-04.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 12-10 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

On Reaffirming the Historic Teaching of the Church on the Topic of Marriage—From the Presbytery of Central Washington.

The Presbytery of Central Washington overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to joyfully reaffirm the historic, biblical, and Christological teaching of the church on the topic of marriage as a gift from God to bless humankind. As God created man and woman, so does God call some men and women to live together as husband and wife, while others are called to live a life of celibacy. God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Rationale

We at the Presbytery of Central Washington join our brothers and sisters at First Presbyterian of Kingwood, Texas, and New Covenant Presbytery in adding our voice to their overture to the 219th General Assembly (2010), with the following addition: “As God created man and woman, so does God call some men and women to live together as husband and wife, and calls others into celibacy.”

We believe we understand the heart of the overture made by Presbytery of New Covenant and don’t take exception to their intent. We do wish to make clarification with respect to the wording to include God’s call on the lives of some into celibacy. We all have a vocational calling—some to marriage—others to celibacy. We don’t wish to leave any room for misinterpretation at the General Assembly level. We perceive that those with a different perspective may wrongly interpret wording used in the New Covenant overture to read that only some are called into a marriage between a man and a woman. This may leave room for some to conclude that others are called into different unions other than marriage between a man and woman.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 12-11

Advice on Item 12-11—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that its Overview of the issues raised in this and other overtures may be found at Item 12-01. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Item 12-01, Item 12-05, and Item 12-11 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to respond under G-13.0103p, and bear public witness that Christian marriage can only be between one man and one woman and that no sexual relationship except heterosexual marriage is within the will of God.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 12-11 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

For clarity, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy has grouped Items 12-01, 12-05, and 12-11 together. Its complete advice and counsel and Rationale are at Item 12-01.
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 12-11 (and Items 12-01 and 12-05) be disapproved.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) disapprove this overture.

Rationale

Item 12-12

[The assembly approved Item 12-12 with amendment. See pp. 44-45.]

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

[Note: See also Item 12-13, Minority Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).]

1. The Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010):
   a. commend the committee’s report [and the minority report from the committee] to sessions and presbyteries, and urge them to engage in study of the issues presented in the report; and
   b. commend to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) the covenant “Those Whom God Has Joined Together, Let No One Separate” (see at V.C. below) as a guide by which we broken and hurting people, seeking to be faithful, might come together to discuss issues about which we disagree.

2. The Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010):
   a. affirm the church’s call to extend Christ’s compassion to all; and
   b. encourage presbyteries and sessions to be diligent in their exercise of care in all the transitions of life, confessing our common brokenness and our unique individual expressions of that brokenness (W-6.3009, W-6.3010).

3. The Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010):
   a. encourage all presbyteries and sessions to provide resources consonant with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding use of church facilities administered by said governing bodies for marriages and blessing ceremonies; and
   b. encourage all presbyteries to provide resources consonant with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding clergy participation in marriages and/or same-sex union ceremonies. Such resources should include guidance on fulfilling the requirements for solemnizing of marriages within the civil jurisdiction or jurisdictions within which the presbytery is located.

4. The Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Office of Theology Worship and Education, and the Office of the General Assembly’s Department of Constitutional Services, to provide updated guidelines and resources addressing the difference between a ceremony of Christian marriage and a same-sex union ceremony.

5. The Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010):
   a. encourage all sessions to engage in study of issues of biblical interpretation using the General Assembly papers, “Presbyterian Understanding and Use of Holy Scripture” and “Biblical Authority and Interpretation”;
b. direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Office of Theology Worship and Education, to develop and distribute a study guide for use with the General Assembly papers, “Presbyterian Understanding and Use of Holy Scripture” and “Biblical Authority and Interpretation” that will help sessions engage in issues of civil unions and Christian marriage in light of the principles contained within those papers; and

c. commend to sessions the use of additional resources related to biblical interpretation, specifically the video segment Biblical Authority and Interpretation, with its accompanying study guide, that was developed by the Theological Task Force on Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Rationale

These recommendations and report are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 04-13. On Equal Rights for Families of Same-Gender Partners, Recommendation 2. Direct the Moderator to Appoint a Special Committee, Representing the Broad Diversity and Theological Balance of the PC(USA) to Study History of Laws Governing Marriage and Civil Union, How Theology and Practice of Marriage Have Developed in Reformed and Broader Christian Tradition, Relationship Between Civil Union and Christian Marriage, Effects of Current Laws on Same-Gender Partners and Their Children, and Place of Covenanted Same-Gender Partnerships in Christian Community—From the Presbytery of Denver (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 258–60).

I. Introduction

So then you are no longer strangers and aliens, but you are citizens with the saints and also members of the household of God, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, with Christ Jesus himself as the cornerstone. In him the whole structure is joined together and grows into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom you also are built together spiritually into a dwelling place for God. (Eph. 2:19–22)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is wrestling with the issue of same-gender marriage. Responding to this struggle, the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directed the Moderator … to appoint a special committee, representing the broad diversity and theological balance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to study the following, … including any policy recommendations growing out of the study:

- a. The history of the laws governing marriage and civil union, including current policy debates.
- b. How the theology and practice of marriage have developed in the Reformed and broader Christian tradition.
- c. The relationship between civil union and Christian marriage.
- d. The effects of current laws on same-gender partners and their children.
- e. The place of covenanted same-gender partnerships in the Christian community. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 259)

As members of Christ’s church, we differ profoundly; but can we see that those who disagree with us are seeking to love one another with God’s grace, advance the gospel in all its far-reaching inclusiveness, and promote greater faithfulness to the Triune God under the authority of Scripture and guided by the confessions? Though we reach very different conclusions, we can rejoice that our church is willing to wrestle together prayerfully with the question: How do we extend the grace of God to all, calling all persons to repentance, transformation, and discipleship—regardless of sexual orientation—so that all will experience God’s gracious intention for humanity?

In many ways, life in the body of Christ is not unlike a marriage: In the course of our life together, we have good days and bad days, good times and challenging times, great joy and wrenching pain. We talk, we laugh, we cry. We agree and disagree. Occasionally, we get angry and are tempted to walk away. But like Christian marriage, in the body of Christ we know that the One who holds us together is more important than the arguments that threaten to tear us apart. That One is Jesus Christ, who said, “I give you a new commandment, that you love one another. Just as I have loved you, you also should love one another. By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another” (Jn. 13:34–35). [Included in the mandate of this special committee was a directive that the PC(USA) constitutional definition of Christian marriage not be changed. In our confessions, marriage is consistently defined as a lifelong covenant between God, a man and a woman, and the community of faith.]

II. Biblical and Historical Summary

The one sufficient revelation of God is Jesus Christ, the Word of God incarnate, to whom the Holy Spirit bears unique and authoritative witness through the Holy Scriptures, which are received and obeyed as the word of God written. …

In matters of faith and practice, the church turns to Scripture to hear the testimony of the Holy Spirit, acknowledging that it comes to us in human words, conditioned by the times in which they were written, times different from our own. Guided by literary and historical understanding, we study Scripture, so that we might follow the Word of God incarnate in our changing world.
In our study, considerable differences became apparent in understanding what the words of the Bible and the confessions say. Our committee’s differences reflect similar differences within the denomination. The General Assembly has approved documents that detail the different ways Presbyterians approach Scripture.2

A. Old Testament

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The Torah contains many laws regulating marriage and divorce. These include Ex. 20:14, 17; Deut. 5:18, 21; Lev. 18:6–18; 20:10; Num. 5:11–31; Deut. 22:13–21; 24:1–5; and 25:5–10.

Marriage is used often by the prophets as a symbol of God’s relationship to Israel. Usually, it represents the exclusive attachment of Israel to God, who is referred to as Israel’s husband. The repeated history of the Israelites worshiping gods of the people around them is likened to adultery:3

- Hosea marries a prostitute, symbolizing God’s gracious love for Israel as Hosea forgives her.
- God restores God’s forsaken wife, Israel (Isa. 54:1–8, 62:1–5).
- Jeremiah speaks to Israel as a young bride (Jer. 2:2), while in 3:6–10 he represents the faithlessness of Israel as adultery.
- Ezekiel depicts Israel’s disobedience as the adultery of an unfaithful wife (Ezekiel 16).

Since God is consistently represented as the husband of Israel, the exclusively female images of the unfaithful partner flow from the imagery. With Judah (Gen. 38:26) and David (1 Sam. 12:1–15), Scripture censures male infidelity, as well.

B. New Testament

Jesus’ public ministry begins at a wedding feast in Cana, where he performs his first miracle (Jn. 2:1–11). Throughout his ministry, Jesus makes significant statements about marriage:

- Jesus addresses a question about a hypothetical widow of seven husbands, indicating that marriage is not part of life in the resurrection (Mt. 22:23–33, as well as Mk. 12:18–27, and Lk. 20:27–40).
- Jesus condemns divorce, restricting it further than provided by Jewish law (Mt. 19:3–9 and Mk. 10:2–12).4
- Jesus seems to indicate a preference for celibacy in his comment about eunuchs, while acknowledging this may not be best for everyone (Mt. 19:10–12).
- Jesus uses marriage as an illustration in several parables (Mt. 22:1–14; Mt. 25:1–13; and Lk. 12:35–38).

In the first-century church, marriage was an issue because of the expected imminent coming of the kingdom of God and because the diverse marriage practices in the Greco-Roman culture posed a challenge to good order in the Christian community.

- Paul writes of the divine gift of marriage as an antidote against porneia, a Greek term originally meaning “prostitution,” but later broadened to cover a range of sexual misconduct (1 Cor. 7:2–6).5
- Paul writes against divorce (1 Cor. 7:7–9, 32–40).
- Paul indicates his preference of celibacy over marriage (1 Cor. 7:7–9, 32–40).
- An analogy is drawn elsewhere between the marriage of husband and wife and the union of Christ with his church (Eph. 5:25–27; Rev. 19:6–8; and Rev. 21:9–10).

Toward the end of the first century, as the expectation of an imminent arrival of God’s kingdom faded and the church prepared itself to be a continuing human institution, several trends emerged, as mentioned in 1 Timothy:
Qualifications for church leaders (ministers) included being married, but only to one wife (3:2).

Some parties within the church promoted celibacy as an ideal, even as a requirement for faithful Christians, but this was rejected by the orthodox leaders (4:1–6).

Young widows were encouraged to remarry for economic support, procreation, and to avoid immorality and scandal (5:14).

C. Historical Summary

1. The Early Interplay of Church and State

The institution of marriage appears not only on the pages of Scripture but also in the ancient world. In ancient Rome, a couple was considered legally married if they agreed that marriage was the intent behind their cohabitation. Because marriage alliances in the ancient world were based on money and power, they could be revoked as quickly as they were invoked if another marital alliance offered more of either.

Early Christians understood themselves as set apart and distinct from the culture around them. In Ephesians and elsewhere, the ideas of mutual submission and love distinguished Christian marriage from the absolute rule of the paterfamilias characteristic of Graeco-Roman marriage.

The early Christian church was an underground and often persecuted movement with little ability to influence official policies in the Roman Empire on matters like marriage. Nevertheless, theologians showed a vital interest in the understanding and practice of marriage in the early Christian community. When Christianity became a religion of the Roman Empire in 313, laws enacted under Constantine and his successors began to reflect the influence of Christian views about marriage. Augustine expounded upon the three “goods” of marriage—offspring, exclusive fidelity, and the unbreakable bond between husband and wife.

By the mid-fifth century, legal codes enacted after Constantine included many statutes on marriage:

- Restrictions on divorce and remarriage,
- Prohibition of same-sex marriage, and
- Proscription of clergy to marry, though married men could become clergy.

After the disintegration of the Roman Empire in the West, and for the next several hundred years, marriage was regulated at a local level. The church was involved, but not in a regulatory capacity. Gradually, local customs were combined with biblical interpretations and developed into canon law. Beginning about 800, the church increasingly asserted its authority over marriage.

In 1215, the Fourth Lateran Council decreed the absolute prohibition of “clandestine weddings” — the longstanding practice that if two people had privately consented to marry, it was a valid marriage. By so doing, the church claimed jurisdiction over marriage by insisting that all marriages be held in the church building and before a priest.

During the Middle Ages, the Roman Catholic Church developed further canon law governing marriage, including proscriptions against incest, polygamy, bestiality, and sodomy. Provisions were made for the annulment of marriages formed through duress or fraud, as well as those between persons related by blood of family ties; the church also claimed the power to declare valid marriage bonds indissoluble. By the early sixteenth century, the church’s canon law was the predominant law governing marriage in the West.

Thus, on the eve of the Reformation, in the Roman Catholic Church:

- Celibacy was the norm for clerical and monastic life;
- Marriage, although less holy than celibacy, was a sacrament and “means of grace”; and
- The church regulated marriage law.

2. The Protestant Reformation

In the sixteenth century, the Protestant Reformers insisted that Scripture alone be the basis of authority in the church, and re-examined marriage and canon law in light of biblical teaching. In Protestant churches:

- Marriage became a Christian vocation and was considered good, but no longer a sacrament, and
- Celibacy was no longer required of clergy.
However, Protestant views on the theology and regulation of marriage differed:

- Martin Luther (1483–1546) promoted the state’s role in the regulation of marriage. For Luther, civil magistrates acted as God’s vice-regents in the governance of marriage. Civil marriage codes replaced canon law, although many of the principles of canon law (consent, publicity, proscription of prohibited relationships) continued in force. Church leaders were expected to counsel civil authorities in the administration of marriage law.

- King Henry VIII (1491–1547) broke with the Roman Catholic Church to obtain a divorce. He placed church authority under the monarchy, thus beginning the English Reformation. Henry regulated the church, and the church retained control of marriage. The family was seen as a “little commonwealth” and the fundamental institution undergirding society.

- John Calvin (1509–1564) brought his legal background to his theology. He stressed marriage as a covenant between individuals, God, and the community. Calvin’s three reasons for marriage were mutual love and support, the birth and nurture of children, and protection from sexual sin. Regulation of marriage in Calvin’s Geneva was shared between church and state.

Some radical reformers extended the principle of “Scripture alone” to justify polygamy using the example of the Patriarchs and Old Testament laws. Others understood Christ’s redemptive act as freeing true believers from sin, so that nothing done in Christian love was sinful. Reformed church leaders distanced themselves from such unorthodox beliefs and unruly behaviors.

The Reformed understanding of and concerns about marriage were made evident throughout the Reformation-era confessions. The Second Helvetic Confession cautioned against making celibacy a mark of spiritual merit and explicitly condemned polygamy. The Heidelberg Catechism urged Christians to “live chaste and disciplined lives, whether in holy wedlock or in single life.”

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was an issue of concern for the Westminster divines: “Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleanness.”

3. Early America

Immigrants from Lutheran, Reformed, Anglican, and Roman Catholic traditions brought their own assumptions and practices of marriage to the American colonies, making understandings of marriage complex. Enlightenment thinking introduced a fifth pattern—marriage as a social contract. The Enlightenment was an eighteenth-century philosophical movement that held human reason as applicable to all areas of life, including biblical studies. It stressed ideals of freedom, equality, and individual rights, and found fertile ground in the American colonies. Over time, this emphasis resulted in marriage becoming more focused upon personal happiness and self-fulfillment and being seen increasingly as a bilateral personal contract.

In America, states regulated these personal contracts. Marriages were required to be registered with civil authorities. While courts routinely ruled that public cohabitation was sufficient evidence of a valid marriage, by the latter part of the nineteenth century, states began to nullify such “common-law” marriages. They exerted more control over who was allowed to marry, including the prohibition of bigamy and a subsequent series of federal laws designed to prohibit the practice of polygamy. States prohibited marriages on the basis of a variety of conditions, including alcoholism, drug addiction, prior marriage, or lack of mental capacity. Significant among these prohibitions were interracial relationships during Jim Crow segregation.

4. Recent Developments in Marriage Law

As societal attitudes about marriage began to change, so did the government’s assertion of its authority to regulate marriage. The U.S. Supreme Court’s 1967 ruling in Loving v. Virginia eradicated state laws prohibiting interracial marriage. The court ruled that Virginia’s prohibition of interracial marriage violated the Fourteenth Amendment:

Marriage is one of the “basic civil rights of man [sic],” fundamental to our very existence and survival…. To deny this fundamental freedom on so unsupportable a basis as the racial classifications embodied in these statutes … is surely to deprive all the State’s citizens of liberty without due process of law.

With this ruling, the court granted all adults the right to marry without consideration of race, citing constitutional principles of equal protection and due process in limiting the state’s power to regulate marriage.

With the Supreme Court having declared marriage a fundamental civil right, both church and nation began to struggle with whether the principles voiced in Loving extended to persons barred from marriage on the basis of their gender.
In 1996, Congress passed the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA), defining marriage as a legal union between one man and one woman for purposes of all federal laws, and including the provision that states in which same-gender marriage is not legal do not have to recognize a same-gender marriage from another state. To date, thirty-seven states have approved their own DOMAs, thirty-one of which have state constitutional amendments defining marriage as between one man and one woman.

Opponents to DOMA have questioned the constitutionality of the act based on the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution (“Full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state”). This clause generally mandates that states must recognize marriages solemnized in any other.

Concerned with potential court challenges to DOMA, advocates introduced legislation calling for a Federal Marriage Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which would preclude any constitutional challenge to DOMA. The amendment has been introduced unsuccessfully four times in Congress since 2003.

In 2004, Massachusetts became the first state to expand civil marriage to same-gender couples. At the time of this writing, four additional states (New Hampshire, Vermont, Iowa, and Connecticut) and the District of Columbia have done likewise. Several others, including California, New Jersey, Washington, and Oregon, allow civil unions or domestic partnerships that provide same-gender couples some rights and privileges of marriage under state law.

5. Marriage in the PC(USA)

Changing societal views on marriage over the last two centuries have affected the church in general and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in particular. In examining Scripture and the cultural assumptions about marriage in biblical times, the church has come to embrace marriage as an equal partnership between husband and wife. In the 1950s, the church also re-examined the issue of divorce in light of the full sweep of Jesus’ teaching and modern experience, and loosened doctrinal restrictions by amending The Westminster Confession of Faith.

The Confession of 1967 lifts up “anarchy in sexual relationships” as one of four issues of particular concern in the church at that time. The confession enumerates the positive benefits of marriage as a remedy for the “perennial confusion about the meaning of sex.”

Since the late 1970s, issues related to homosexuality have been debated in the PC(USA) and its predecessor denominations. People of deep faith and commitment are struggling to discern how the church can respond in theological and biblical integrity and love to the changing patterns of marriage and sexual practice in American culture.

6. Mirroring the Civil Disagreement in the Church

Since 1991, the PC(USA) has wrestled with the question of same-sex union and Christian marriage. The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) has declared that any same-sex ceremony “considered to be the equivalent of a marriage ceremony…would not be sanctioned under the Book of Order.” As such, it has instructed ministers of the Word and Sacrament not to “state, imply, or represent that a same-sex ceremony is a marriage,” and has instructed sessions against the use of church facilities in any same-sex ceremony deemed to be the equivalent of a marriage.

In Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River (2000) the GAPJC did allow for individual ministers and sessions to conduct a same-sex ceremony that “celebrates a loving, caring and committed relationship” that does not “confer a new status” but “blesses an existing relationship.” These services are not to be confused with Christian marriage or civil marriage, “do not constitute a marriage ceremony,” and “should not be construed as an endorsement of homosexual conjugal practice proscribed by the General Assembly.”

Thus, the GAPJC decision permitted ecclesiastical rites for same-sex couples that allow those couples to receive a public benediction, but do not confer a new status to these couples or their families within the community of faith.

Just as with same-sex unions, some view public rituals of blessing for same-sex couples, without a change of status, as socially indeterminate. Others find it to be a helpful compromise. Finally, others believe that the blessing of same-gender relationships may implicitly, if not explicitly, condone and/or encourage behaviors that they believe to be biblically inappropriate.

7. Where Other Christian Traditions Currently Stand

Several Christian denominations and traditions are confronting the issues raised by same-gender marriage.

The three bodies with whom the PC(USA) is in full communion have taken differing positions to date:

- The United Church of Christ (UCC) recognizes same-sex marriage: “We … affirm that all humans are made in the image and likeness of God, including people of all sexual orientations, and God has bestowed upon each one the gift of human sexuality. Further, we recognize and affirm that, as created in God’s image and gifted by God with human sexuality, all people have the right to lead lives that express love, justice, mutuality, commitment, consent and pleasure.”

- The Reformed Church in America (RCA) restricts marriage to “the union of one man and one woman, to the exclusion of all others.” In 1996, the RCA entered into a dialogue with the UCC, “encouraging the UCC to move toward a more biblically faithful understanding of human sexuality and a repeal of all policies condoning homosexual behavior.” While neither denomination changed its views, better understanding resulted from the dialogue. In recent years, the RCA held three years of dialogue after which they affirmed their position on marriage.

- The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA) affirms “marriage is a covenant of mutual promises, commitment and hope authorized legally by the state and blessed by God. The historic Christian tradition and the Lutheran confessions have recognized marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman…” Currently, the ELCA “lacks consensus” on the matter of “lifelong monogamous same-gender relationships,” and “encourages all people to live out the faith in the local and global community of the baptized with profound respect for the conscience-bound belief of the neighbor.” Its church-wide assembly voted in 2009 to “commit itself to finding ways to allow congregations that choose to do so to recognize, support and hold publicly accountable life-long, monogamous, same-gender relationships.”

The Roman Catholic Church holds to its sacramental view of marriage, continuing to refuse to countenance divorce.
“The matrimonial covenant, by which a man and a woman establish between themselves a partnership of the whole of life and which is ordered by its nature to the good of the spouses and the procreation and education of offspring, has been raised by Christ the Lord to the dignity of a sacrament between the baptized.”

Standing outside the Western tradition, the Orthodox Church in America maintains its ancient, sacramental understanding of marriage between a man and a woman as a “Holy Mystery.” It is not a juridical contract and is not entered with vows or oaths. It is, in essence, the “baptizing and confirming” of human love in God by Christ in the Holy Spirit. The Orthodox Church recognizes as a Christian sacrament only those marriages entered into by baptized communicant members.

The Episcopal Church views marriage as a “sacramental rite.” “Holy Matrimony is Christian marriage, in which the woman and man enter into a life-long union, make their vows before God and the Church, and receive the grace and blessing of God to help them fulfill their vows.” There is great ferment and disagreement within the Episcopal Church over the issue of same-gender marriage.

The United Methodist Church, an offshoot from the Anglican tradition, appears to have adopted an understanding of marriage as a contract. “We affirm the sanctity of the marriage covenant that is expressed in love, mutual support, personal commitment and shared fidelity between a man and a woman.”

The Universal Fellowship of Metropolitan Community Churches, “the world’s first church group with a primary, positive ministry to gays, lesbians, bisexual and transgender persons,” strongly supports “marriage equality.”

The Southern Baptist Convention teaches: “Marriage is the uniting of one man and one woman in covenant commitment for a lifetime. It is God’s unique gift to reveal the union between Christ and His church and to provide for the man and the woman in marriage the framework for intimate companionship, the channel of sexual expression according to biblical standards, and the means for procreation of the human race.”

This report has not considered the positions of many other denominations and independent Christian bodies, both in the United States and around the world. Given their wide variety of theological views, cultural contexts, and ways of understanding and interpreting Scripture, similar diversity in their views of marriage, divorce, and same-gender relationships can be expected. As we seek understanding around these issues within the PC(USA), we also strive to maintain communion with our brothers and sisters in the global church, a goal that is made more complex because of that diversity.

III. The Relationship Between Civil Union and Christian Marriage

The PC(USA) Book of Order states that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marbrriage, a lifelong commitment is made by a man and a woman, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith” (W-4.9001).

As noted above, [I][I]included in the mandate of this special committee was a directive that we were not to change the Book of Order’s definition of marriage. Because there are distinct differences in the way terms like marriage, civil union, and domestic partnership are understood, and because those terms are interpreted differently in various civil jurisdictions, the chart below outlines our understanding and identifies the way these terms will be used in this study.
A. The Difference Between Civil Marriage and Christian Marriage

Noting the difference between civil marriage and Christian marriage is important to understanding the relationship between civil unions and Christian marriage. Civil marriage, whether or not it is redefined, is a state-licensed contract between two consenting adults. Christian marriage is a covenant through which “a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Civil marriage occurs through a state-licensed contract granted to parties who meet particular criteria, which may include residency, identification, premarital counseling, evidence that neither party is currently in a civil marriage, medical testing, lack of consanguinity, and age. In most states, difference in gender is a state-required criterion; in some, people of the same sex may be licensed to marry.

Civil marriage determines the delineation of the household and a person’s next-of-kin, primary parental rights and responsibilities, and other benefits granted by states to those in licensed civil marriages (e.g., filing taxes together, joint homeownership). Civil marriage is a necessary, but not sufficient, criterion of Christian marriage in the PC(USA).

In Christian marriage, a couple’s covenant to live out their discipleship together in lifelong commitment must accompany civil marriage. A couple must demonstrate sufficient “Christian understanding” to be able to enter into the covenant of Christian marriage. Thus, while every state empowers ministers of the Word and Sacrament to officiate on its behalf in civil marriage, the Book of Order instructs them not to conduct any covenant ceremony of Christian marriage that they feel is “unwise.” This covenant is so important that the Book of Order provides an opportunity for a civilly married couple to enter into it.

B. A Comparison of Civil Union and Marriage

Marriage, whether civil or Christian, represents more than a mechanism to gain state and/or federal benefits. Both constitute the creation of a social unit, household, source of meaning, and identity.

Institutions like marriage and parenthood are not simply mechanisms to fulfill individual needs and aspirations. They are also thick, multi-layered realities that speak to the needs for meaning and identity within human community.
Since civil unions do not share a connection to this social dimension of marriage, some think that such unions cannot adequately substitute for marriage, fearing that the socially indeterminate nature of civil unions may even encourage impermanence among such couples. Others see it as a helpful compromise in a polarized and polarizing debate.

While there may be significant, small populations for whom a civil union is a useful contract, civil unions, as qualitatively different from marriage, cannot fully make peace between those who view homosexual practice differently.

IV. The Effects of Current Laws on Same-Gender Partners and Their Children

God gave us marriage for the well-being of human society, for the ordering of family life, and for the birth and nurture of children.

Scripture and the confessions recognize marriage as creating a basic unit of ordered human society. The family provides a structure for the birth and nurture of children, essential for the continuation of the human race. Marriage is held up as “an expression of hope and confidence in God’s providential care.”

As the body of Christ and as people of God, we have a responsibility for the “shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God” and a responsibility to the culture around us for “the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world.” While we hold differing interpretations of Scripture regarding same-gender relationships, we still have an obligation to understand and respond to the social implications of the situation in the society around us for families of same-gender partners.

Laws are the result of a political process, which is an “allocation of public values,” and therefore will always differ according to value outlook. Among those differing perspectives are:

Perspective 1: Laws that fail to give benefits equal to marriage to same-gender couples and their families violate the standards of social justice and equality. The differences in benefits result in legal, financial, and social hardships that create social justice issues that may affect children. Using the Equal Protection clause of the U.S. Constitution, there should be no difference made between relationships based on gender. From a biblical perspective, it is important to note the different cultural settings between modern and biblical times, especially in the role of the extended family structure in the latter. From a sociological direction, there is no clear evidence whether children from same-gender parent families are at a developmental disadvantage.

Perspective 2: Same-gender relationships are of low importance in comparison to other more pressing societal issues. While the concerns of those who oppose same-gender marriage may be understandable, when it comes to matters of faith, it is God’s place, not the place of human beings to determine the appropriateness of a relationship. Under no circumstances should children of same-gender couples be treated any differently under the law because of their parents’ relationship. Same-gender couples and their families should receive fair treatment by society and the church.

Perspective 3: It does not violate social justice or equal protection to offer different benefits to same-gender couples from those offered to a man and a woman who are married. Every relationship or contract does not have to be accorded the same value, protection, or benefit. Marriage between one man and one woman is foundational to the stability of society and is the best possible context for the nurture and flourishing of children. In controlled studies, children separated from one or more biological parent fare less well. All children should be supported regardless of their family situations; however, public policy should not grant the same favor to relationships in which children are separated from at least one biological parent, such as same-gender partnerships. To promote social stability and justice for children, the law should encourage relationships that are optimal by granting particular benefits to a woman and a man who marry.

Perspective 4: Opposing the acceptance of same-gender marriage rises beyond a sociopolitical argument to an issue of conscience. All sexual activity outside of marriage between a man and a woman is unacceptable. Behavior that is explicitly proscribed by Scripture cannot be encouraged. Providing legal benefits equal to marriage for same-gender couples makes society complicit in encouraging this behavior.

A. Census Figures

Determining the size of the populations involved is not a straightforward task because information on same-gender partners has not been collected in past decennial census reports. However, information collected on same-gender couples by the U.S. Census Bureau’s 2008 American Community Survey indicated a total of 564,743 same-gender couple households in this country. Approximately one-fifth (115,421) of those households included children.

For purposes of comparison, the survey showed around thirty-eight million households with children under the age of eighteen. Of those, twenty-six million households were “male-female parent” households, married and unmarried, and twelve million households were single-parent households. So, while the number of same-gender partner households with children under the age of eighteen, 115,421, is statistically small (0.30 percent), the number of households is still significant.
B. Federal Laws

Since the federal government has adopted the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) and does not currently recognize same-gender relationships, same-gender couples do not enjoy the federal benefits that are afforded to married heterosexual couples. A 1997 Government Accounting Office report found 1,049 federal laws in which “marital status is a factor,” and a 2004 update found 1,138 “federal statutory provisions” in which “marital status is a factor in determining or receiving benefits, rights, and privileges.” The extension of some benefits to same-gender partners of federal employees in June 2009 marks one of the few significant federal recognitions of these relationships. Other extensions are being considered.

Areas most significantly affected by federal laws, principally DOMA, are:

- Tax code: Given the complexity of the federal tax code, the benefits, or penalties, of a married filing status depends on a household’s financial situation; still, low- to moderate-income couples who can file as married pay less federal tax than couples that cannot file as married. The tax code offers other benefits to married couples. For example, the premiums paid for health insurance for a spouse and children are exempt from federal taxes, while premiums paid for a domestic partner are not.

- Social Security and federal retirement benefits: These programs provide benefits to the spouse of a deceased or disabled plan member. Spousal benefits are limited to a spouse of the opposite sex. A domestic partner or same-gender spouse is not eligible for these benefits.

- Immigration: A same-gender spouse of a U.S. citizen is not eligible for legal permanent resident status (“green card”) or work visa based on marital status. If the individual is in the country without current immigration documents, he or she may be subject to deportation. This applies equally to same-gender couples legally married in the U.S. or in another country.

- Recognition of same-gender marriage across state lines: A provision of the federal DOMA declares that states need not recognize other states’ same-gender marriages. While this has withstood several challenges in lower courts, the U.S. Supreme Court has yet to hear an appeal of these cases.

C. Varieties of State Laws

States can be divided into five general configurations.

Some of the states that recognize civil unions/domestic partnerships have granted benefits that are arguably equivalent to the benefits granted through marriage. These benefits fall into several broad categories:

- Parental: Without the recognition of a civil marriage/domestic partnership, many parental rights may be denied to one member of a same-gender couple. These include joint or co-parent adoption and recognition of a child’s relationship to both parents, as well as eligibility for foster parenting. This lack of a recognized relationship can have implications for the ability to direct medical care for a child, custody of a child on the death of the biological parent, eligibility for public housing or subsidy programs, and ability to extend the nonbiological parent’s employer health insurance to the children.

- Partner: The rights and benefits not available to an unmarried partner are even more numerous. They include the lack of health insurance and Medicare benefits, as well as the inability to direct medical care and receive survivor benefits. They extend into many economic and commercial areas that married couples take for granted, including the ability to have joint credit, and to own property with special tax benefits and legal protections for a married couple. A number of legal benefits and processes are also unavailable—protection against being forced to testify against a spouse in court; the ability to structure a dissolution of the relationship through a court-supervised divorce, including child custody and visitation rights; and the right to sue for wrongful death of a partner.
Family medical leave is also a concern.

Our Current Situation

As one article states:

Factors such as small sample size, children originally born into a heterosexual parental relationship, investigator bias, and community attitudes are still present in some current research.

In addition, the effect of the laws and the developmental differences of children in same-gender parent families are difficult to determine because cultural attitudes are not static. As community attitudes change and same-gender marriage finds greater acceptance, outcomes in current and future studies of children being raised in such families can be expected to differ from earlier studies. As one article states:

...whether same-sex marriage would prove socially beneficial, socially harmful, or trivial is an empirical question that cannot be settled by any amount of armchair theorizing. There are plausible arguments on all sides of the issue, and as yet there is no evidence sufficient to settle them.

V. What Is the Place of Covenanted Same-Gender Partnerships in the Christian Community?

But now in Christ Jesus you who once were far off have been brought near by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace; in his flesh he has made both groups into one and has broken down the dividing wall, that is, the hostility between us. ... So then you are no longer strangers and aliens, but you are citizens with the saints and also members of the household of God, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, with Christ Jesus himself as the cornerstone. In him the whole structure is joined together and grows into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom you also are built together spiritually into a dwelling place for God. (Eph. 2:13–22)

“We belong to one another only through and in Jesus Christ,” Dietrich Bonhoeffer writes:

What does this mean? It means, first, that a Christian needs others because of Jesus Christ. It means, second, that a Christian comes to others only through Jesus Christ. It means, third, that in Jesus Christ we have been chosen from eternity, accepted in time, and united for eternity.

We all come to Christ as sinners, as strangers, whether we are in worship the week we are born or come to know Christ in our youth or old age. But once in Christ, we are inextricably linked to one another—not by affinity, comfort, or culture, but because we belong to Christ. It is Christ who sets a place for us at the table; it is Christ alone who calls.

With Christ’s call comes the forming of Christ’s mind in each believer. In Christ, no matter who we are or what our condition, we come to understand our own and others’ essential humanity, which Christ redeems from the shadows of sin. Because Christ alone knows us, it is through the mind of Christ alone that we truly come to know others.

Christ is the center of our lives, individually and together. Christ calls us to leave behind our lives bound by sin and alienated from self, others, and God, and to enter into fellowship with people we did not and might not have chosen. As Bonhoeffer states, “When Christ calls a man [sic], he bids him come and die.” We are not our own. We have been bought with a price.

A. Our Current Situation

The Presbytery of Denver’s overture to the 218th General Assembly (2008), which commissioned this study, envisioned an emerging compromise that might cool the conflict over homosexual practice to the point that both sides could disagree in peace without impinging on one another’s liberties of action or conscience. This two-tiered form of recognition of committed relationship (one being civil union or domestic partnership and the other civil marriage, defined as between one man and one woman) has not found hoped-for acceptance. In church and society, the conflict over homosexuality and the definition of marriage has hardened and deepened.

This seemingly insoluble conflict mocks the hopes and prayers of our brothers and sisters who first reported to the 190th General Assembly (1978) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America that:
the church’s grappling with the issue of homosexuality has already energized its membership in a remarkable awakening of prayer and theological study. Our study should continue with the aim of reaching harmony in our diverging positions on homosexuality and other critical issues. Our prayer should now be concentrated upon this process of internal reconciliation ….

History’s trajectory during the thirty years since the expression of those hopes and prayers has not been a gradual harmony, but an increasingly strident and rigid disharmony that threatens once more to tear the church asunder. But the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not our possession; it belongs to Christ.

What is the place of covenanted same-gender partnerships in the Christian community? The members of the PC(USA) cannot agree. We affirm that individuals in same-gender relationships, no differently from any persons in the Christian community, are to be welcomed by the church and—who differently from any other persons in the Christian community—are called to be transformed by the radical and redeeming love of Jesus Christ. Still, some believe acceptance of same-gender partnerships to be tantamount to approving homosexual practice, which they find at odds with Scripture and our confessions. Others have no difficulty accepting same-gender partnerships, pointing to biblical principles of love and justice.

But “when Christ calls a man [sic], he bids him come and die.” The PC(USA) is not ours, and our unity in Christ does not depend on our agreement. We did not choose Christ; Christ has chosen us and appointed us—each and every one—to go and bear fruit that will last in this part of Christ’s vineyard. We believe that it is our Christ-given calling to stay in relationship with one another, especially when we disagree.

B. Resources of Our Tradition

We are Presbyterians. Our polity, our way of living and working together in faithfulness, relies not on hierarchical human authority to compel or enforce, but upon God’s Spirit to form the mind of Christ in each believer. We trust that the Spirit is working—even when we cannot see it clearly—to reshape and reform us according to God’s word.

Our historic principles of church order begin with words from The Westminster Confession of Faith:

God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men [sic] which are in anything contrary to his Word, or beside it in matters of faith or worship.

With this radical freedom comes a radical responsibility. We are held accountable to Christ before the God of history for how we act, how we live, how we love. We hold:

that truth is in order to goodness … we are persuaded that there is an inseparable connection between faith and practice, truth and duty.

The tension between our freedom and our responsibility has meant that our life together is often marked by disagreement, a sign of how seriously we take the gospel and the consequences of our actions. So, we believe:

that there are truths and forms with respect to which men [sic] of good characters and principles may differ. And in all these we think it the duty both of private Christians and societies to exercise mutual forbearance toward each other.

It is to this principle of mutual forbearance that we appeal. Recognizing that Christ is our peace, we must love, support, and trust each other as together we search for Christ’s truth. This is how we model what it means to be the body of Christ for each other and for the world.

But if we come to see our brothers and sisters with whom we disagree as our—or worse yet, Christ’s—enemies, we have denied the unifying power of Christ’s redeeming, reconciling love. We must seek a way to live together as the body of Christ, not through peaceable uniformity, but by exercising mutual tolerance and forbearance in those areas where people of good faith differ. The sacrifice required to do this should be evenly distributed and shared across the whole body until Christ the Head brings clarity, which may not come quickly. And even when clarity does come, we must understand and accept that it will sooner or later be followed by yet another conflict.

C. Our Covenant

“Baptism is the sign and seal of incorporation into Christ. … The body of Christ is one, and Baptism is the bond of unity in Christ.” Thus, we all have been brought into a covenant relationship with one another, perhaps expressed by a new commitment to an age-old declaration: Those whom God has joined together, let no one separate.

Throughout our time of prayerful deliberation—and sometimes difficult disagreement—the members of the PC(USA) Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage have been blessed and challenged by a profound sense of our unity in Christ. Because of that, our time together has been marked by a remarkable degree of mutual respect, commitment to one another, and Christian love. We can only attribute these gifts to the living presence of Christ among us and to the transforming power of the Holy Spirit.

From the gifts of unity, respect, commitment, and love that we have received, we commend to our brothers and sisters in the PC(USA) the following covenant, particularly when governing bodies meet together to discuss divisive issues.
We acknowledge and confess that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) displays the marks of the true Church (the gospel is rightly preached and heard, the sacraments are rightly administered, and ecclesiastical discipline is uprightly ministered). Christ has chosen each one of us here, and has called us to this place. Those whom God has joined together, let no one separate.

By the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, with the love of God, and in the communion of the Holy Spirit, we covenant together to:

- Honor the truth that Christ has called and God works through each member;
- Listen to one another with openness and respect;
- Support and pray for each other and for one another’s ministries;
- Earnestly seek and carefully listen to each person’s discernment of God’s will found in Scripture;
- Struggle together with perseverance to find God’s will for us even when the way is difficult;
- Love one another even when we disagree, and to commit ourselves to the reconciliation of any broken relationships we have with one another;
- Honor who we are as Presbyterians by respecting the fallible discernment of the body, bearing in mind that individual conscience, held captive to the word of God, cannot be thus bound.

D. Steps Toward Mutual Forbearance

Exercising the mutual forbearance to which we are called:

1. We agree that Christ calls all persons into fellowship with him, regardless of race, sex, occupation, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any other worldly condition, and that congregations are to welcome all persons who respond in trust and obedience to God’s grace in Jesus Christ and who desire to become part of the membership and mission of Christ’s church.

2. We confess that we are brothers and sisters bound together in Christ, and that while these conversations are difficult and intense, our disagreements do not negate our unity. Threats of departure or coercive ways of achieving uniformity are ultimately unhelpful and do little more than draw lines and force us to become more deeply entrenched in our positions and prejudices.

3. We recognize that our interpretations of Scripture lead us to different conclusions regarding homosexual behavior and same-gender partnerships. We hold that the Christian life is one of sanctification, and we confess that Scripture holds out a transforming hope of radical change in Jesus Christ that requires us to be dead to sin and alive to all that is good. For some of us, that means same-gender couples should be encouraged to abstain from sexual relations; for others of us, that means that same-gender couples should be encouraged to enter into faithful, covenanted, lifelong partnerships.

4. We agree that Christian marriage is not a “right” conferred upon anyone, but a gift given to us by God to nurture and form human beings into the kind of sacrificial, self-giving love that we see in Jesus Christ.

5. We recognize the organic nature of the Presbyterian church’s polity, where responsibility and accountability for ministry and governance is assigned at all levels of the church. Questions of marriage and civil union are already being addressed at congregational and presbytery levels, where the issues have human faces, concrete circumstances, and real consequences. Any successful resolution must begin with individual sessions and presbyteries. In this time of flux, all voices are needed in this conversation.

6. We acknowledge that current law, in which clergy act as agents of the state, is a source of confusion. Some argue that the church should relinquish its state-sanctioned power to marry. Others feel that, even in confusion, it should be retained to further the cause of the gospel.

7. We affirm that the church is called to offer pastoral care to all members of the church family experiencing times of special need and crisis. Recognizing our common brokenness and our unique individual expressions of that brokenness, we encourage presbyteries and sessions to extend appropriate pastoral care to all experiencing the joys and sorrow of human life in all of its manifestations.

8. We acknowledge the presence of same-gender partners in our communities and congregations. Together, we are members of the body of Christ and joined by the reconciling work of Christ. As the body of Christ, we affirm the call of the church, in its ministry and mission, to offer to all persons God’s gracious provision of redemption and forgiveness, calling all persons into loving obedience to God’s will.

VI. Conclusion

A struggle continues in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—a struggle mirrored by the members of our committee.

- We find that our church is united in our gratitude for God’s word that is authoritative for us and for the theological heritage that has formed and informed us. Yet our different ways of interpreting the Bible and other foundational texts have left us deeply divided about the conclusions we draw from these sources of guidance. We have honest and sincere disagreements, but also a conviction that we should not caricature or condemn our sisters and brothers with whom we disagree.

- We see great diversity in the laws around this issue, and these laws have changed even as we have embarked on this study. We have reached no consensus on a faithful response to the changing nature of civil marriage.

- We find that there are a significant number of children in same-gender households, and the reported numbers will likely increase in the next U.S. Census. Our responses as a church to the questions raised have real consequences in the lives of these children.

- We find that the compromise suggestion of civil unions/domestic partnerships offers no true solution to the struggle around same-gender partnerships. Civil unions/domestic partnerships provide neither the state-sanctioned benefits nor the societal acceptance that marriage (redefined or not) offers.

A struggle continues in the PC(USA), but important points of unity are also present—unity mirrored by the members of our committee.

- The church is not ours; it belongs to Christ. We are part of the church solely by the grace of God. Thus, it is inappropriate for us to seek to define “the place” for any of our sisters and brothers in Christ within Christ’s church. Rather we confess that, apart from anything we have done, Christ has prepared a place for every one of us.

- Every one of us is called to mutual forbearance and mutual accountability in how we practice our lives of faith together.

- We are the body of Christ, called to live into our Christ-reconciled life together, acting in a manner that lives out our covenant, “Those whom God has joined together, let no one separate.”

We now offer to the church the work we have done together in two forms—a report and a call to covenant. Far more than commending our work, we entreat the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to affirm the covenant relationship into which Christ calls all of us by praying for and seeking to live into the covenant life that Christ provides for us, a covenant life marked by reconciliation.

In truth, this is only the most current in a long series of disagreements and differences of opinion that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has had to and will have to confront. The nature of our polity predisposes us to debate and struggle with each other, always striving to discern the mind of Christ for our life together. We have weathered these debates before and we will face them again in years to come.

The question before us is not what issue will define us at any given moment, but whether the PC(USA) can confess that our unity in Christ supersedes any other claim or argument that vies for our attention. Our hope and prayer is that this current debate provides an opportunity to reflect upon and renew our relationships in the body of Christ and our call to ministry together.

Whatever actions the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) takes, we commend to you this covenant as a way to remember that it is Christ who calls us, Christ who redeems us, and Christ who reconciles us to one another in covenant faithfulness.

Those whom God has joined together, let no one separate.

We the undersigned, a minority of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage, recommend that the 219th General Assembly (2010):

1. Approve the minority report (I. Introduction; II. What is the Place of Covenanted Same-Gender Partnerships in the Christian Community?; and III. Conclusion) and provide the section Rationale/Commentary as commentary to, and rationale for the minority report.

2. Commend this report to sessions and presbyteries, urging them to engage in study of the issues presented in this report.

3. Commend to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) the covenant, found at II.G. in this report, as a guide for a broken and hurting people, seeking to be faithful, that they might come together to discuss issues about which they disagree.

These recommendations and report are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 04-13. On Equal Rights for Families of Same-Gender Partners, Recommendation 2. Direct the Moderator to Appoint a Special Committee, Representing the Broad Diversity and Theological Balance of the PC(USA) to Study History of Laws Governing Marriage and Civil Union, How Theology and Practice of Marriage Have Developed in Reformed and Broader Christian Tradition, Relationship Between Civil Union and Christian Marriage, Effects of Current Laws on Same-Gender Partners and Their Children, and Place of Covenanted Same-Gender Partnerships in Christian Community—From the Presbytery of Denver (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 258–60).

I. Introduction

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is wrestling with the issue of same-gender marriage. Responding to this struggle, the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directed the Moderator

… to appoint a special committee, representing the broad diversity and theological balance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to study the following, … including any policy recommendations growing out of the study:

a. The history of the laws governing marriage and civil union, including current policy debates;

b. How the theology and practice of marriage have developed in the Reformed and broader Christian tradition;

c. The relationship between civil union and Christian marriage;

d. The effects of current laws on same-gender partners and their children; and

e. The place of covenanted same-gender partnerships in the Christian community. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 259)

The members of the special committee reached different conclusions—reflective of the divide in the larger church—over the nature and meaning of Christian marriage and therefore the place of covenanted same-gender partnerships in the Christian community.

It is the intent of this report to represent the church’s biblical, historic, and confessional position that, among all varieties of sexual relationships, only marriage between a man and a woman is ordained by God and blessed by our Lord Jesus Christ.

Our Starting Place

Included in the mandate of this special committee was a directive that the PC(USA) constitutional definition of Christian marriage not be changed. In our confessions, marriage is consistently defined as a lifelong covenant between God, a man and a woman, and the community of faith.
The PC(USA) Book of Order states:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith. (W-4.9001)

II. What Is the Place of Covenanted Same-Gender Partnerships in the Christian Community?

So then you are no longer strangers and aliens, but you are citizens with the saints and also members of the household of God, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, with Christ Jesus himself as the cornerstone. In him the whole structure is joined together and grows into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom you also are built together spiritually into a dwelling place for God. (Eph.2:19–22)

When Christ calls a man [sic], he bids him come and die.¹

A. Our Current Disconnect

The Presbytery of Denver’s overture to the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is part of the larger struggle that our denomination has had over homosexual practice for the past three decades.

The 190th General Assembly (1978) of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. issued a report on homosexual practice that found the following: (1) “homosexuality is a contradiction of God’s wise and beautiful pattern for human sexual relationships revealed in Scripture …”; (2) “unrepentant homosexual practice does not accord with the requirements for ordination”; (3) “Persons who manifest homosexual behavior must be treated with the profound respect and pastoral tenderness due all people of God” as they “strive toward God’s revealed will in this area of their lives and make use of all the resources of grace”; (4) “There is no legal, social, or moral justification for denying homosexual persons access to the basic requirements of human existence” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1978, Part I, pp. 261–66) The authoritative interpretation on ordination (point 2 above) was set aside by the 218th General Assembly (2008) (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 373).

This same 1978 report asserted that the church’s grappling with the issue of homosexuality has already energized its membership in a remarkable reawakening of prayer and theological study. Our study should continue with the aim of reaching harmony in our diverging positions on homosexuality and other critical issues. Our prayer should now be concentrated upon this process of internal reconciliation…. (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1978, Part I, pp. 261–66)

History’s trajectory, looking at the thirty years that separate us from those hopes and prayers, has not been a gradual harmony, but an increasingly strident and rigid disharmony that threatens to once more tear the PC(USA) asunder.

Two reasons for this continued discord are: (1) disconnect between the theological/pastoral and advocacy strands of the 1978 report on homosexuality and (2) divergent readings of Scripture. Because these are foundational principles, the special committee could not reach consensus.

Over the past three decades, General Assemblies have agreed to pursue advocacy for the homosexual person. During the same time, in presbytery votes, the theological standards have been upheld, particularly in regard to the sexual behavior of those seeking ordination. Recent General Assemblies have begun to advocate for rights for same-gendered couples instead of the individual person.

Most recently, the 218th General Assembly (2008) acted to “renew and strengthen the long-standing Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) commitment to equal protection under the law for lesbian and gay persons and the 216th General Assembly (2004)’s affirmation of the right of same-gender persons to civil union and, thereby, to all the benefits, privileges, and responsibilities of civil union” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 259). This action did not define what the “benefits, privileges, and responsibilities of civil union” should be or how they might relate to the privileges and responsibilities of civil marriage or Christian marriage.

The difficulty is this: Whereas one could advocate for civil rights of the person while continuing to uphold the theological standard cited above and providing pastoral care that worked toward conformity with this theological position, when the General Assembly began to move toward advocacy for the couple, the strands became disconnected for many members in the PC(USA). It seemed contradictory to encourage public favor and subsidy for a behavior that the church had found to be outside of God’s design. Or, from the other perspective, it seemed contradictory to demand equality in society that was denied within the church.

B. Variant Interpretations

Second, there truly exist variant interpretations of Scripture that in turn dictate different pastoral models and advocacy models. The variant interpretations of Scripture are the foundational reason that the 1978 theological/pastoral/advocacy strands have unraveled. The ongoing controversy around this issue and others will not be resolved until consensus is reached.
on the interpretation of Scripture. Unity cannot be reached through polity inventions. Unity will only be reached through common affirmation of truth.

There are at least two larger approaches to biblical interpretation at play in these debates. One tends to call itself “liberal” or “progressive.” The other is variously labeled as “evangelical,” “conservative,” “orthodox,” or “traditional.” Admitting that the terms and descriptions are oversimplified and miss many nuances, it is still useful to compare the two perspectives.

Both approaches appeal to Scripture, although they read it differently. Both refer to history and biological and social sciences. Both see their approach as compassionate toward lesbians and gays, although they understand the requirements of compassion quite differently.

Traditionalists tend to focus on specific biblical commandments that appear to prohibit same-sex relations categorically. Progressives tend to focus on broader principles of love and justice that they regard as more important than the specific commandments.

Traditionalists tend to emphasize a core meaning of marriage established by God in creation. They see the near universality of marriage in almost all known cultures as confirmation of God’s design in creation. They think it unwise for either church or society to alter the core meaning of marriage. Progressives tend to emphasize the variability of marriage across human history and around the world. They are reluctant to fix a core meaning. They view further evolution of the institution as natural and necessary.

Traditionalists tend to see the biblical writers, and the church through its history, as elaborating a fairly consistent strand of teaching on marriage, under divine inspiration. They believe that the church can apply that teaching directly today, despite the differences and even injustices of the societies in which it was formed. Progressives tend to stress contradictions between various biblical passages and church attitudes toward marriage over the years. They view the biblical authors as captives of limited cultural perspectives prevalent in societies deformed by patriarchy and other injustices. They are reluctant to apply sexuality standards originating in the ancient Near East to a modern society that has more scientific knowledge about sexuality.

Traditionalists tend to view the two sexes, male and female, as an important part of God’s providence in creation. They therefore regard marriage, the institution joining the two sexes, as of unique social importance. Although they recognize how sin has distorted relationships between the sexes, and how the grace of Jesus Christ may open new possibilities for just relationships between men and women, they do not believe that God’s grace in Christ nullifies God’s earlier grace in making two complementary sexes to be joined together. Progressives tend to be wary of any purported distinctions between the sexes, in which they suspect the taint of past patriarchal attitudes. They take Paul’s declaration that in Christ “there is no longer male and female” (Gal. 3:28) as a mandate for reconfiguring institutions, such as traditional marriage, that take account of sex differences. For them the biological or social gender identity of a spouse should be an irrelevant factor.

Traditionalists tend to see God’s commands as offering clear choices between limited options. For them, marriage is the single norm for human sexual expression. The ways to God’s blessing are two: either fidelity in marriage or chastity in singleness. Progressives tend to be open to other kinds of covenanted sexual relationships.

Traditionalists draw out biblical themes of purity, emphasizing the calling of Christians to keep their bodies as “the temple of the Holy Spirit.” They speak against specific sexual acts—homosexual acts, or any sex outside of marriage—that they understand to violate that purity. Progressives tend to regard this emphasis on purity as outdated and unhelpful. They are more concerned about the emotional content of a relationship—the love, trust, and commitment between individuals—than about the form of the relationship or the bodily acts by which it is expressed.

Traditionalists acknowledge that sexual desires may be deep-seated; however, they emphasize the choices that individuals have in how to act on their desires. They affirm that, by God’s grace, the behaviors—and even sometimes the desires—can be transformed. Progressives tend to view sexual orientation as a fundamental, indelible part of an individual’s personality. They stress the likelihood that persons will act on their desires and the unlikelihood that the desires can be redirected.

Traditionalists acknowledge that the church has changed its mind previously on issues such as slavery, divorce, and women’s ordination. But they believe those revisions of doctrine came about because of fresh insight into the Scriptures—not merely out of a desire to conform to social trends. They do not see the issue of homosexuality as analogous, because the biblical texts on that topic are much less ambiguous. Progressives believe that sometimes God moves first in society to bring about greater justice and then pulls the church along behind. They believe that changes in teaching on slavery, divorce, and women’s ordination do set a valid precedent for a possible change in teaching on sexuality.

The pastoral model for traditionalists is: Compassion toward practicing homosexual persons means calling them, with all heterosexuals who have departed from God’s intentions, to repentance and restoration. The advocacy model is to call society away from its destructive “anarchy in sexual relationships” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.47). For progressives the pastoral model is: Compassion means affirmation of everyone’s sexual orientation and encouragement to use it responsibly in covenanted relationships. The advocacy model is to seek the dissolution of distinctions between marriage and same-gender relationships.

C. A Question for the Church

The 2008 overture that mandated the formation of this special committee recognized this disconnect. The overture recognized that there are same-gendered partners in the PC(USA). It asked the special committee to state the place of such partnered couples within the Christian community. The overture further asked the committee to explore marriage from a historical, sociological, and political (legal) perspective. The committee has attempted to do this exploration in an accurate, descriptive manner.

Discerning the place of same-gender partnerships in the Christian community, however, requires us to move beyond description and affirm an understanding of the nature of Christian community. First, the Christian community is found in the church. The church is for “the gathering and perfecting of the saints” (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.142). We are sealed by baptism into this community. But baptism signifies “forgiveness of sins” (The Book of Confessions, The Nicene Creed, 1.3), “walk[ing] in newness of life” (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.154), “an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord’s” (The Book of Confessions, The Larger Catechism, 7.275), “dying with Christ and a joyful rising with him to new life” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.51), “present[ing] [our] bodies to be living sacrifices to God” (Book of Order, W-1.3033).

Therefore the question must be addressed from the perspective of the church as a place to gather and perfect the saints. Ultimately, we find the answer in the person and work of Jesus Christ, as known in Scripture, affirmed in the confessions, and operationalized through the Book of Order. It is only by looking at this question as one of discipleship, of sanctification, that we can ensure that the PC(USA) bears the marks of a true church: “first, the true preaching of the Word of God …; secondly, the right administration of the sacraments of Christ Jesus …; and lastly, ecclesiastical discipline uprightly administered, as God’s Word prescribes …” (The Book of Confessions, The Scots Confession, 3.18). It is only when we find our unity in the purity of the Word of God that we fulfill our connectional responsibilities to each other.

Based on the above-outlined diversity in views of Scripture and resulting pastoral and advocacy models, the special committee could not develop consensus on the question about same-gender partnerships. The special committee believes there is also significant disagreement among members and officers of the church regarding this question.

D. Historic Principles

In this situation of disagreement, we do well to return to the “Historic Principles of Church Order” expounded in Chapter I of the PC(USA) Form of Government: “God alone is Lord of the conscience,” it declares, “and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men [sic] which are in anything contrary to his Word, or beside it, in matters of faith or worship” (G-1.0301). So our consciences are not free in every respect, but rather we are called to bring them into captivity to God’s Word. It is only when confronted with demands that are “contrary to his Word, or beside it,” that we may claim freedom of conscience.

Regarding such scripturally undetermined matters, the historic principles state that “there are truths and forms with respect to which men of good characters and principles may differ.” They advise that “in all these we think it the duty both of private Christians and societies to exercise mutual forbearance toward each other” (Book of Order, G-1.0305). On the other hand, where Scripture does determine a question, “it is incumbent upon these officers, and upon the whole Church, in whose name they act, to censure or cast out the erroneous and scandalous, observing, in all cases, the rules contained in the Word of God” (Book of Order, G-1.0303).

The issue before us is whether this question of covenanted same-gender partnerships is determined by the Word of God or not. The fact that equal sisters and brothers in Christ have differing convictions does not imply that all those convictions have equal standing in the church. The historic principles maintain that “no opinion can be … more pernicious or more absurd than that which brings truth and falsehood upon a level, and represents it as of no consequence what a man’s opinions are. On the contrary, we are persuaded that there is an inseparable connection between faith and practice, truth and duty” (Book of Order, G-1.0304).

E. The Constitution Holds

As we work through our disagreements, we recognize that church teaching and church policy are still set by the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Members of the special committee may not agree on civil unions and Christian marriage; however, the Constitution has authoritative provisions that bear on these questions. Until such time as the church’s understanding of marriage is changed in The Book of Confessions and the Book of Order, those provisions remain in force. The burden of proof rests on those who would change the teaching.
Since decisions relating to marriage are made by ministers and sessions, it is well to review the obligations of those officers. All church officers vow to “be instructed and led by those confessions as [they] lead the people of God.” They also pledge to “be governed by our church’s polity” and “abide by its discipline” (Book of Order, W-4.4003c, e).

“So far as may be possible without serious departure from these standards [of the Reformed faith and polity as expressed in The Book of Confessions and the Form of Government], without infringing on the rights and views of others, and without obstructing the constitutional governance of the church,” officers have “freedom of conscience with respect to the interpretation of Scripture.” But “in becoming a candidate or officers of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) one chooses to exercise freedom of conscience within certain bounds. His or her conscience is captive to the Word of God as interpreted in the standards of the church so long as he or she continues to seek or hold office in that body” (Book of Order, G-6.0108a–b).

Regarding marriage, the Constitution consistently declares that:

- Marriage “was instituted by the Lord God himself” (The Book of Confessions, 5.246; also 6.131, 6.133, 7.130, 9.47, and Book of Order, W-4.9001);
- Marriage is a “spiritual and physical union [of] one man and one woman” (The Book of Confessions, 6.131; also 5.246, 6.133);
- Marriage is “designed of God to last as long as they both [husband and wife] shall live” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133; also 6.131, 6.137, 9.47 and Book of Order, W-4.9001);
- “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family” (Book of Order, W-4.9001; also The Book of Confessions, 6.131);
- Marriage serves purposes including “the mutual help of husband and wife; … the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; … the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.134; also 6.131);
- “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” (Book of Order, W-4.9001);
- “For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001);
- Christian marriages are to be “publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith” (Book of Order, W-4.9001);
- Christians are called to continence in single life or “complete love and concord” in marriage (The Book of Confessions, 5.245–246; also 4.108, 7.248–249).

Authoritative interpretations of the Constitution have established that:

- “Officers of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) who are authorized to perform marriages shall not state, imply, or represent that a same-sex ceremony is a marriage because under W-4.9001 a same-sex ceremony is not and cannot be a marriage” (Spahr case, Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 331, 333).
- Sessions “should not allow the use of the church facilities for a same sex union ceremony that the session determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony” (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395).
- Ministers and churches may celebrate a “loving, caring, and committed relationship” between persons of the same sex. But such a ceremony should not “appropriate specific liturgical forms from services of Christian marriage,” nor should it “confer a new status” upon the persons being blessed. It should not be “construed as an endorsement of homosexual conjugal practice.” Same-sex couples should be instructed “that the service to be conducted does not constitute a marriage ceremony” (Benton case, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 588).

F. A Faithful Answer

God calls us into relationship with God and then with others. In fact, the call to love one’s neighbor is a command. In fulfilling this command for relationship with others, we must act in conformity with the first relationship to God that we have through Jesus Christ. Then in this life of discipleship to Christ, we are called to become his bond servant: body, soul, and mind. Our bodies are the dwelling place of the Holy Spirit. We must use our bodies within God’s design. Because God’s design is rooted in creation, this design is not just for the believer but for humanity. Therefore, friendships, whether of same or opposite gender, which do not violate God’s boundaries of sexual expression as defined in Scripture, the confessions, and the Book of Order can be honored and encouraged. However, those relationships, whether same or opposite gendered, that although committed and caring, which are outside of God’s design of sexual expression, cannot be encouraged or blessed. Pastoral care must be extended to all people within the body of Christ. Such care should always conform to the standards of the confessions as the church works to “gather and perfect” the saints.

For over three decades, the PC(USA) has wrestled with questions of human sexuality. When presbyteries have been asked to depart from the historic teaching of the church, they have declined. The Book of Order has been amended to make clear that chastity outside of marriage and monogamy within marriage, with marriage being defined as one man, one woman is a requirement for ordination. If this standard is considered serious enough to bar ordination, then the church in good conscience cannot encourage behavior or relationships that violate this standard. The Benton and subsequent decisions make it clear that in blessing same-sex couples, such blessings cannot be seen as marriage and cannot be construed as blessing sexual activity within these relationships.

This answer to the question about the place of covenanted same-gender partnerships may not be the answer that the Presbytery of Denver expected or desired. Others, too, may be disappointed. But this is the most faithful answer that we can give, within the faith that we have received and to which we have pledged ourselves.

G. Our Covenant

Throughout our time of prayerful deliberation—and sometimes difficult disagreement—the members of the PC(USA) Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage have been blessed by a remarkable degree of mutual respect, commitment to one another, and Christian love.

From the gifts of unity, respect, commitment, and love that we have received, we commend to our brothers and sisters in the PC(USA) the following covenant.

By the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, with the love of God, and in the communion of the Holy Spirit, we covenant together to:

- Honor the truth that Christ has called and God works through each member;
- Listen to one another with openness and respect;
- Support and pray for each other and for one another’s ministries;
- Earnestly seek and carefully listen to each person’s discernment of God’s will found in Scripture;
- Struggle together with perseverance to find God’s will for us even when the way is difficult;
- Love one another even when we disagree, and to commit ourselves to the reconciliation of any broken relationships we have with one another.

III. Conclusion

In conclusion, the question of the place of covenanted same-gender partnerships in the Christian community lifts up only one segment of our community. However, in Ephesians 2, we remember Jesus Christ came to reconcile all of us to God. Therefore, we call the church to a radical inclusivity that invites all people to be transformed by the radical redeeming love of Jesus Christ. We boldly proclaim the power of Jesus Christ to be our peace and to deliver us from all activities and passions that Scripture and our confessions call sin. We challenge the PC(USA) to gather around the cross of Christ and to rejoice that sin and death have no power over the Christian. We call all within our church to repent of whatever sin binds them.

Ephesians 2 talks of growing into a “holy temple in the Lord” (Eph. 2:21) and becoming a “dwelling place for God” (Eph. 2:22). As persons within whom the Spirit of God dwells, we are to pay particular attention to the ways we use our bodies. Our bodies are precious to God. Even the hairs on our head are numbered by our good and glorious God. We believe our bodies will be resurrected one day from dust, ashes, and decay. The way we conduct ourselves sexually is therefore extremely important, and God in God’s mercy has given us a perfect plan for this.

In Genesis God says it is not good for man to be alone. A woman is made who completes Adam and the two of them become one flesh. Adam’s joy knows no bounds as he embraces Eve and cries out, “This at last is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh” (Gen. 2:23). God’s gracious intent for our sexuality is that we would find the one who completes us. Our bodies are carefully designed by the Creator to belong to the one created for us before the foundation of the world was laid. Any sexual activity outside of marriage violates this beautiful intention of God.

Humanity is created male and female, and the sexes complete and complement each other. When creation is so marred, God destroys it with a flood, and it is restored by those who enter the ark two by two, male and female. Jesus mentions the two becoming one flesh as he speaks against divorce and polygamy. “The one who made them ay the beginning ‘made them male and female’ … and two shall become one flesh” (Mt. 19:4, 6; cf. Mk. 10:6, 8). We are to be celibate until marriage and to not violate our marriage vows.

Too often in our hedonistic culture, sex is seen as a liberating act. We falsely believe that there is freedom in doing what feels good and what we want. But like all sin, sexual sins have consequences. God’s beautiful gift of sex wrongly used causes terrible emotional and physical carnage. As the church, we should call our young people to the empowering liberation and freedom of knowing they are far too precious not to wait for the one God designed for them. We should see celibacy as a gift as Paul did and support and encourage single people.

The Christian life is one of sanctification. We are to be dead to sin and alive to all that is good. We are to transform our culture and offer to all the joy, grace, and freedom that come from striving daily to be obedient to God’s Word. We are to proclaim without exception the all-encompassing power of Jesus Christ to deliver us from any sin with which we struggle. This journey will have times of difficulties, and we will all fail, but the church should be a place of grace, repentance, and restoration, as we seek to be molded into the image of Christ.

The Confession of 1967 says,

The relationship between man and woman exemplifies in a basic way God’s ordering of the interpersonal life for which he created mankind. Anarchy in sexual relationships is a symptom of man’s alienation from God, his neighbor, and himself. … The church, as the household of God, is called to lead all out of this alienation into the responsible freedom of the new life in Christ. Reconciled to God, each person has joy in and respect for his own humanity and that of other persons; a man and woman are enabled to marry, to commit themselves to a mutually shared life, and to respond to each other in sensitive and lifelong concern; parents receive the grace to care for children in love and to nurture their individuality. The church comes under the judgment of God and invites rejection by man when it fails to lead men and women into the full meaning of life together, or withholds the compassion of Christ from those caught in the moral confusion of our time (The Book of Confessions, 9.47).

We are called to offer the Gospel’s grace to a hurting world full of people who desperately need to know God loves them and they can be freed of the things of this world that so easily enslave us. Love is never about license and, for too many years, the PC(USA) has been silent as the carnage of sexual hedonism engulfs our culture. Let us boldly proclaim that God has a place for sex: It is within marriage between a man and woman and that commitment is for life. Let us work to support, encourage, and nurture those who are not married and help them know that God’s plan for them is just as important as God’s plan for married people. Let us honor celibacy and those who practice it as engaging in a profitable spiritual discipline that may be lifelong or for a season of life.

Holding us all to the same biblical standard will help strengthen the peace, unity, and purity of the PC(USA) and help us all grow in the grace of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

To God alone be the glory!

Rationale/Commentary

A. Biblical and Historical Summary

The one sufficient revelation of God is Jesus Christ, the Word of God incarnate, to whom the Holy Spirit bears unique and authoritative witness through the Holy Scriptures, which are received and obeyed as the word of God written. In matters of faith and practice, the church turns to Scripture to hear the testimony of the Holy Spirit, so that we might follow the Word of God incarnate in our changing world. A review of Scripture, the confessions, and the history of marriage in the church presents a consistent view of the most foundational aspect of the nature of marriage: that it unites a man and a woman.

Therefore a man leaves his father and his mother and clings to his wife, and they become one flesh (Gen. 2:24).

[Jesus] answered, “Have you not read that the one who made them at the beginning, ‘made them male and female,’ and said, ‘For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh’? So they are no longer two, but one flesh. Therefore what God has joined together, let no one separate” (Mt. 19:4–6).

Christian marriage is an institution ordained of God, blessed by our Lord Jesus Christ, established and sanctified for the happiness and welfare of mankind, into which spiritual and physical union one man and one woman enter, cherishing a mutual esteem and love, bearing with each other’s infirmities and weaknesses, comforting each other in trouble, providing in honesty and industry for each other and for their household, praying for each other, and living together the length of their days as heirs of the grace of life (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131).

1. Old Testament

Genesis 2:18–24 tells how God gives humanity the gift of marriage. The Old Testament presents marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of society. Marriage provides:

• Complementary completeness for man and woman: Genesis 1–2;
• The birth and nurture of children: Gen. 1:28, 9:1 (creation, after the flood), 15:1–6, 21:1–7 (Abraham and Sarah);
Companionship, mutual support, and affection: Gen. 2:18–24 (Adam and Eve) and 1 Sam. 1:1–28 (Hannah);

Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family: Prov. 31:10–31 (the virtuous wife).

Marriages were also used as political tools to form alliances: 1 Sam. 18:17–27, 19:11–17, 25:44, 2 Sam. 3:13–15, 6:16–23 (Saul’s daughter, Micah, and David), and 1 Kings 11:1–4 (Solomon and his wives).

The Torah contains many laws regulating marriage and divorce. These include Ex. 20:14, 17; Deut. 5:18, 21 (the Ten Commandments); Lev. 18:6–18; 20:10; Deut. 24:1–5 (divorce and no military service).

Marriage is used by the prophets as a symbol of the exclusive attachment of Israel to God, who is referred to as Israel’s husband. Worshiping other gods is likened to adultery.

• Hosea marries a prostitute, symbolizing God’s gracious love for Israel as Hosea forgives her.

• God restores God’s forsaken wife, Israel (Isa. 54:1–8, 62:1–5).

• Ezekiel depicts Israel’s disobedience as the adultery of an unfaithful wife (Ezekiel 16).

Scripture censures male infidelity, as well (Judah—Gen. 38:26; David—2 Sam. 12:1–15). The exclusively female images above flow from the imagery of God as the husband of Israel. These images are transformed in the New Testament where the church (the new Israel) becomes the bride of Christ.

2. New Testament

Jesus’ public ministry begins at a wedding feast in Cana, where he performs his first miracle (Jn. 2:1–11). Throughout his ministry, Jesus makes significant statements about marriage:

• In addressing a question on divorce, Jesus defines marriage (Mt. 19:4–6; Mk. 10:6–9). In this definition Jesus wipes away generations of misused tradition (divorce, polygamy) and brings humankind back to God’s design in Gen. 2:24.

• Jesus addresses a question about a hypothetical widow of seven husbands, indicating that marriage is not part of life in the resurrection (Mt. 22:23–33, as well as Mk. 12:18–27 and Lk. 20:27–40).

• Jesus seems to indicate a preference for celibacy in his comment about eunuchs, while acknowledging this may not be best for everyone (Mt. 19:10–12).

• Jesus uses marriage as an illustration in several parables (Mt. 22:1–14; Mt. 25:1–13; and Lk. 12:35–38).

In the first-century church, marriage was an issue because of the expected imminent coming of the kingdom of God and because the diverse marriage practices in the Greco-Roman culture posed a challenge to good order in the Christian community.

• Paul writes of the divine gift of marriage as an antidote against porneia, a Greek term originally meaning “prostitution,” but later broadened to cover a range of sexual misconduct (1 Cor. 7:2–6).

• Paul writes against divorce (1 Cor. 7:7–9, 32–40).

• Paul indicates his preference of celibacy over marriage (1 Cor. 7:7–9, 32–40).

• Marriage is used as a metaphor for the union of Christ with his bride, the Church (Eph. 5:25–27; Rev. 19:6–8; and Rev. 21:9–10).

Toward the end of the first century, as the expectation of an imminent arrival of God’s kingdom faded, several trends emerged, as mentioned in 1 Timothy:

• Qualifications for church leaders (ministers) included that those who were married have only one wife (3:2).

• Some parties within the church promoted celibacy as an ideal, even as a requirement for faithful Christians, but this was rejected by the orthodox leaders (4:1–6).

• Young widows were encouraged to remarry for economic support, procreation, and to avoid immorality and scandal (5:14).
3. The Early Interplay of Church and State

Marriage, in varied forms, is almost universal among human societies. It appears as an already existing institution in the earliest records of civilization. Early Christians understood themselves as set apart and distinct from the culture around them. In Ephesians and elsewhere, the ideas of mutual submission and love distinguished Christian marriage from the absolute rule of the paterfamilias characteristic of Greco-Roman marriage. Christians also distinguished themselves from pagan cultures in confining full sexual expression to marriage between a man and a woman.

The early Christian church was an underground and often persecuted movement with little ability to influence official policies in the Roman Empire on matters like marriage. Nevertheless, theologians (John Chrysostom, Tertullian, etc.) showed interest in the understanding and practice of marriage in the early Christian community. When Christianity became the official religion of the Roman Empire in 313, laws enacted under Constantine and his successors began to reflect the influence of Christian views about marriage and chastity. The writings of Augustine (354–430) were a primary source for Christian understandings of marriage. Augustine expounded upon the three “goods” of marriage—offspring, exclusive fidelity, and the unbreakable bond between husband and wife.

By the mid-fifth century, legal codes enacted after Constantine included many statutes on marriage:

- Restrictions on divorce and remarriage,
- Prohibition of same-sex marriage,
- Proscription of clergy to marry, though married men could become clergy.

After the disintegration of the Roman Empire in the West, marriage was regulated at a local level. The church was involved, but not in a regulatory capacity. Gradually, local customs were combined with biblical interpretations and developed into canon law. Beginning about 800, the church increasingly asserted its authority over marriage.

By the early sixteenth century, the Roman Catholic canon law of marriage was predominant in the West. It included proscriptions against incest, polygamy, bestiality, and sodomy. Provisions were made for the annulment of marriages formed through duress or fraud; the church claimed the power to declare valid marriage bonds indissoluble. Celibacy was the norm for clerical and monastic life. Marriage, although seen as less holy than celibacy, was a sacrament and “means of grace.”

4. The Protestant Reformation

In the sixteenth century, the Protestant reformers insisted that Scripture alone be the basis of authority in the church, and re-examined marriage and canon law in light of biblical teaching. In Protestant churches:

- Marriage became a Christian vocation and was considered good, but no longer a sacrament.
- Celibacy was no longer required of clergy.

However, Protestant views on marriage differed:

- Martin Luther (1483–1546) promoted the state’s role in the regulation of marriage. In Luther’s doctrine of the earthly and heavenly kingdoms, civil magistrates acted as God’s vice-regents in the governance of marriage. Civil marriage codes replaced canon law, although many of the principles of canon law continued in force.
- King Henry VIII (1491–1547) broke with the Roman Catholic Church to obtain a divorce. He placed church authority under the monarchy, while the church retained control of marriage. The family was seen as a “little commonwealth” and the fundamental institution undergirding society.
- John Calvin (1509–1564) stressed marriage as a covenant between individuals, God, and the community. Calvin’s three reasons for marriage were mutual love and support, the birth and nurture of children, and protection from sexual sin. Regulation of marriage in Calvin’s Geneva was shared between church and state.

The Reformed understanding of marriage was made evident throughout the Reformation-era confessions. The Second Helvetic Confession cautioned against making celibacy a mark of spiritual merit and condemned polygamy. The Heidelberg Catechism urged Christians to “live chaste and disciplined lives, whether in holy wedlock or in single life.”

The Westminster Confession in the original 1647 version stated: “Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time” (The Book of Confessions, 6.131). “Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord.”
Although the reformers viewed the sacramental nature of marriage differently from the Roman Catholic Church, and although the reformers took varying views on the role of the state in marriage, all never wavered in their view of the basic nature of marriage as a union of man and woman.

5. Marriage Laws in America

Immigrants from Lutheran, Reformed, Anglican, and Roman Catholic traditions brought their traditions of marriage to America. Enlightenment thinking introduced a fifth pattern—marriage as a social contract. The Enlightenment was an eighteenth-century philosophical movement that held human reason as applicable to all areas of life. It stressed ideals of freedom, equality, and individual rights. During this time, neither laws nor church teachings questioned the nature of marriage as a union of man and woman.

Marriages were required to be registered with civil authorities. States imposed various limitations on each person’s choice of possible marriage partners, excluding categories such as close blood relatives, minors, persons deemed legally incompetent, and persons already married. Significant among these prohibitions were interracial relationships during Jim Crow segregation.

As societal attitudes about interracial marriage began to change, the federal government intervened. The U.S. Supreme Court’s 1967 ruling in Loving v. Virginia eradicated state laws barring interracial marriage. The court ruled:

> Marriage is one of the “basic civil rights of man [sic],” fundamental to our very existence and survival.... To deny this fundamental freedom on so un-supportable a basis as the racial classifications embodied in these statutes ... is surely to deprive all the State’s citizens of liberty without due process of law.\(^14\)

The court concluded that race was an extraneous feature having nothing to do with the essence of marriage, and therefore states lacked the power to limit the choice of possible marriage partners to members of the same race. But within these national constitutional parameters, states still retained the ability to regulate marriage.

Proponents of same-sex marriage later tried to extend the reasoning in Loving to their cause. They suggested that biological sex, like race, might be an extraneous feature having nothing to do with the essence of marriage, and therefore states might lack the power to limit a person’s choice of potential marriage partners to members of the opposite sex. Several states rejected this reasoning. An example is Baker v. Nelson, a case in which the Minnesota Supreme Court ruled that Minnesota law “does not authorize marriage between persons of the same sex and that such marriages are accordingly prohibited” and that this limitation did not violate the U.S. Constitution. The plaintiffs appealed, and the U.S. Supreme Court dismissed the appeal “for want of a substantial federal question.”\(^15\)

In 1996, Congress passed the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA), defining marriage as a legal union between one man and one woman for purposes of all federal laws, and including the provision that states in which same-gender marriage is not legal do not have to recognize a same-gender marriage from another state. To date, thirty-seven states have approved their own DOMAs, thirty-one of which have state constitutional amendments defining marriage as between one man and one woman.

Opponents of DOMA have questioned the constitutionality of the act based on the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution (“Full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state”). This clause generally mandates that states must recognize marriages solemnized in any other.

In 1996, Congress passed the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA), defining marriage as a legal union between one man and one woman for purposes of all federal laws, and including the provision that states in which same-gender marriage is not legal do not have to recognize a same-gender marriage from another state. To date, thirty-seven states have approved their own DOMAs, thirty-one of which have state constitutional amendments defining marriage as between one man and one woman.

In 2004, Massachusetts became the first state to redefine civil marriage to include same-gender couples, a year after its state’s highest court ruled that a ban on gay marriage was unconstitutional.\(^16\) At the time of this writing, four additional states (New Hampshire, Vermont, Iowa, and Connecticut) and the District of Columbia have done likewise. Several others, including California, New Jersey, Washington, and Oregon, allow civil unions or domestic partnerships that provide same-gender couples some rights and privileges of marriage under state law. Legislative and judicial efforts to redefine marriage in Maine and California have failed in public referenda.

6. Marriage in the PC(USA)

The PC(USA), in careful study of Scripture and its application to current culture, has come to embrace marriage as an equal partnership between husband and wife. The church has also amended The Westminster Confession of Faith concerning divorce, calling it a result of sin but allowing remarriage after repentance.\(^17\)

The Confession of 1967 lifts up “anarchy in sexual relationships” as one of four issues of particular concern in the church. The confession enumerates the positive benefits of marriage\(^18\) as a remedy for the “perennial confusion about the meaning of sex.” This confession clearly defines marriage as between a man and a woman.
Since the late 1970s, issues related to homosexuality have been debated in the PC(USA) and its predecessor denominations. People of deep faith and commitment are struggling to discern how the church can bring God’s redemptive grace to a culture experiencing what The Confession of 1967 refers to as sexual “anarchy.”

In 1991, the General Assembly responded to a request for constitutional interpretation by declaring that any same-sex ceremony “considered to be the equivalent of a marriage ceremony … would not be sanctioned under the Book of Order” (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395). It advised sessions against the use of church facilities in any same-sex ceremony deemed to be the equivalent of a marriage. A more recent General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) decision instructed ministers of the Word and Sacrament not to “state, imply, or represent that a same-sex ceremony is a marriage.”

In 1996, the Book of Order was amended to require that those being ordained “lead a life in obedience to Scripture and in conformity to the historic confessional standards of the church. Among these standards is the requirement to live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman (W-4.9001), or chastity in singleness.” All attempts to delete this section from the Book of Order have failed to be ratified by a majority of presbyteries.

In Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River (2000) the GAPJC did allow for individual ministers and sessions to conduct a same-sex ceremony that “celebrates a loving, caring and committed relationship.” Such a ceremony does not “confer a new status” but “blesses an existing relationship.” These services “do not constitute a marriage ceremony” and “should not be construed as an endorsement of homosexual conjugal practice proscribed by the General Assembly.”

7. Other Christian Traditions and Marriage

The three bodies with which the PC(USA) is in full communion have taken differing positions:

- The United Church of Christ (UCC): “We … affirm that all humans are made in the image and likeness of God, including people of all sexual orientations, and God has bestowed upon each one the gift of human sexuality. Further, we recognize and affirm that, as created in God’s image and gifted by God with human sexuality, all people have the right to lead lives that express love, justice, mutuality, commitment, consent and pleasure.”

- The Reformed Church in America (RCA) restricts marriage to “the union of one man and one woman, to the exclusion of all others.” In 1996, the RCA encouraged “the UCC to move toward a more biblically faithful understanding of human sexuality and a repeal of all policies condoning homosexual behavior.”

- The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA): “[M]arriage is a covenant of mutual promises, commitment and hope authorized legally by the state and blessed by God. The historic Christian tradition and the Lutheran confessions have recognized marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman.” In 2009, its churchwide assembly voted to “commit itself to finding ways to allow congregations that choose to do so to recognize, support and hold publicly accountable lifelong, monogamous, same-gender relationships.”

The Roman Catholic Church holds to its sacramental view of life-long marriage. “The matrimonial covenant, by which a man and a woman establish between themselves a partnership of the whole of life and which is ordered by its nature to the good of the spouses and the procreation and education of offspring, has been raised by Christ the Lord to the dignity of a sacrament between the baptized.”

The Orthodox Church in America maintains its ancient, sacramental understanding of marriage between a man and a woman as a “Holy Mystery.” It is not a juridical contract and is not entered with vows or oaths. It is the “baptizing and confirming” of human love in God by Christ in the Holy Spirit.

The Episcopal Church views marriage as a “sacramental rite.” “Holy Matrimony is Christian marriage, in which the woman and man enter into a life-long union, make their vows before God and the Church, and receive the grace and blessing of God to help them fulfill their vows.” There is great disagreement over the issue of same-gender marriage.

The United Methodist Church: “We affirm the sanctity of the marriage covenant that is expressed in love, mutual support, personal commitment and shared fidelity between a man and a woman.”

The Universal Fellowship of Metropolitan Community Churches, “the world’s first church group with a primary, positive ministry to gays, lesbians, bisexual and transgender persons,” strongly supports “marriage equality.”

The Southern Baptist Convention: “Marriage is the uniting of one man and one woman in covenant commitment for a lifetime. It is God’s unique gift to reveal the union between Christ and His church and to provide for the man and the woman in marriage the framework for intimate companionship, the channel of sexual expression according to biblical standards, and the means for procreation of the human race.”

Other church bodies in the United States, Canada, and Europe are wrestling with issues similar to those our special committee was charged with considering. It is important to note, however, that the vast majority of churches in developing nations view these debates negatively and even threaten to break communion with churches that would deviate from traditional views of marriage. This is seen in the current debates within the Anglican Communion. Most Pentecostals, Church of God in Christ, nondenominational, and charismatic churches also hold a more traditional view of marriage.

B. The Relationship Between Civil Union and Christian Marriage

There are distinct differences in the way terms like marriage, civil union, and domestic partnership are understood, and because those terms are interpreted differently in various civil jurisdictions, the chart below outlines our understanding and identifies the way these terms will be used in this study.

Civil marriage in forty-five states is a state-licensed contract between a man and a woman. In five states and the District of Columbia, marriage has been redefined as a state-licensed contract between two consenting adults. Christian marriage is a covenant through which “a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Civil marriage occurs through a state-licensed contract granted to parties who meet particular criteria, which may include residency, identification, premarital counseling, evidence that neither party is currently in a civil marriage, medical testing, lack of consanguinity, and age. In the vast majority of states, difference in gender is a state-required criterion; in a small minority, people of the same sex may be licensed to marry.

Civil marriage determines the delineation of the household and a person’s next-of-kin, primary parental rights and responsibilities, and other benefits granted by states to those in licensed civil marriages (e.g., filing taxes together, joint homeownership). Civil marriage is a necessary, but not sufficient, criterion of Christian marriage in the PC(USA).

In Christian marriage, a man and a woman’s covenant to live out their discipleship together in lifelong commitment must accompany civil marriage. The man and woman must demonstrate sufficient “Christian understanding” to be able to enter... into the covenant of Christian marriage. Thus, while every state empowers ministers of the Word and Sacrament to officiate on its behalf in civil marriage, the Book of Order instructs them not to conduct any covenant ceremony of Christian marriage that they feel is “unwise.”

Marriage, whether civil or Christian, represents more than a mechanism to meet the needs of individuals and gain state and/or federal benefits. Both constitute the creation of a social unit, a source of meaning and identity.

Since civil unions do not share this social dimension of marriage, some think that such unions cannot adequately substitute for marriage, fearing that the socially indeterminate nature of civil unions may even encourage impermanence among such couples. Others see such unions as a helpful compromise in a polarized and polarizing debate. In any case, civil unions cannot fully make peace between those who view homosexual practice differently.

C. The Effects of Current Laws on Same-Gender Partners and Their Children

Scripture and the confessions recognize marriage between a man and a woman as creating a basic unit of ordered human society. “The birth and nurture of children are essential for the continuation of the human race and are an expression of hope and confidence in God’s providential care.”

Laws are the result of a political process, which is an “allocation of public values.” Our view of the beneficial or detrimental effect of any legal proposal will be dependent upon our value outlook. Among those differing perspectives which are represented within the PC(USA) are:

Perspective 1: Laws that fail to give benefits equal to marriage to same-gender couples and their families violate the standards of social justice and equality. The differences in benefits result in legal, financial, and social hardships that may affect children. Using the Equal Protection clause of the U.S. Constitution, there should be no difference made between relationships based on gender. From a biblical perspective, it is important to note the different cultural settings between modern and biblical times, especially in the role of the extended family structure in the latter. From a sociological direction, there is no clear evidence whether children from same-gender parent families are at a developmental disadvantage.

Perspective 2: Same-gender relationships are of low importance in comparison to other more pressing societal issues. While the concerns of those who oppose same-gender marriage may be understandable, when it comes to matters of faith, it is God’s place, not the place of human beings to determine the appropriateness of a relationship. Under no circumstances should children of same-gender couples be treated any differently under the law because of their parents’ relationship. Same-gender couples and their families should receive fair treatment by society and the church.

Perspective 3: It does not violate social justice or equal protection to offer different benefits to same-gender couples from those offered to a man and a woman who are married. Every relationship or contract does not have to be accorded the same value, protection, or benefit. Marriage between one man and one woman is foundational to the stability of society and is the best possible context for the nurture and flourishing of children. In controlled studies, children separated from one or more biological parent fare less well. All children should be supported regardless of their family situations; however, public policy should not grant the same favor to relationships in which children are separated from at least one biological parent, such as same-gender partnerships. To promote social stability and justice for children, the law should encourage relationships that are optimal by granting particular benefits to a woman and a man who marry.

Perspective 4: Opposing the acceptance of same-gender marriage rises beyond a sociopolitical argument to an issue of conscience. All sexual activity outside of marriage between a man and a woman is unacceptable. Behavior that is explicitly proscribed by Scripture cannot be encouraged. Providing legal benefits equal to marriage for same-gender couples makes society complicit in encouraging this behavior.

1. Census Figures

Determining the size of the populations involved is not a straightforward task because information on same-gender partners has not been collected in past census reports. However, information collected on same-gender couples by the U.S. Census Bureau’s 2008 American Community Survey indicated a total of 564,743 same-gender couple households in this country. Approximately one-fifth (115,421) of those households included children. The vast majority of these children are from previous heterosexual relationships. The number of same-gender couple households with children represents .3 percent of around 38 million total households with children under the age of eighteen.

2. Federal Laws

In 1997, the General Accounting Office (GAO) reported there were 1,049 laws (updated to 1,138 in 2004) in which “marital status” was a “factor … even though some of these laws may not directly create benefits, rights, or privileges” (for example, this includes some laws that apply to American Civil War widows). The GAO cautioned:

[No conclusions can be drawn, from our identification of a law as one in which marital status is a factor, concerning the effect of the law on married people versus single people. A particular law may create either advantages or disadvantages for those who are married, or may apply to both married and single people. For example, those who are unmarried fare better than their married counterparts under the so-called marriage penalty provision of the tax laws, while married couples enjoy estate tax benefits not available to the unmarried.32

Areas most significantly affected by federal laws, principally DOMA, are:

- Tax code: Given the complexity of the federal tax code, the benefits, or penalties, of a married filing status depend on a household’s financial situation.

The tax code offers other benefits to married couples. For example, the premiums paid for health insurance are exempt from federal taxes, while premiums paid for a domestic partner are not.

- Social Security and federal retirement benefits: These programs provide benefits to the spouse of a deceased or disabled plan member. Spousal benefits are limited to a spouse of the opposite sex. A domestic partner or same-gender spouse is not eligible for these benefits.

- Immigration: A same-gender spouse of a U.S. citizen is not eligible for legal permanent resident status (“green card”) or work visa based on marital status. This applies equally to same-gender couples legally married in the U.S. or in another country.

- Recognition of same-gender marriage across state lines: A provision of the federal DOMA declares that states need not recognize other states’ same-gender marriages. The U.S. Supreme Court has yet to hear an appeal of these cases.53

Some states that recognize civil unions/domestic partnerships have granted benefits that are arguably equivalent to the benefits granted through marriage.55 These fall into several broad categories:

- Parental: Without the recognition of a civil marriage/domestic partnership, many parental rights may be denied to one member of a same-gender couple. These include joint or co-parent adoption, recognition of a child’s relationship to both parents, and eligibility for foster parenting. This can have implications for the ability to direct medical care for a child, custody of a child on the death of the biological parent, eligibility for public housing or subsidy programs, and ability to extend the nonbiological parent’s employer health insurance to the children. However, as previously noted, the vast majority of children residing in same-gender households are from previous heterosexual relationships. Differences described in this section may not apply to these children.

- Partner: Rights and benefits not available to an unmarried partner include health insurance and Medicare benefits, and the ability to direct medical care and receive survivor benefits. They extend into many economic and commercial areas that married couples take for granted, including the ability to have joint credit, and to own property with special tax benefits and legal protections. A number of legal benefits are also unavailable—protection against being forced to testify against a spouse in court; the ability to structure a dissolution of the relationship through a court-supervised divorce, including child custody and visitation rights; and the right to sue for wrongful death of a partner.

- Tax code: State and local tax codes vary too widely to draw general conclusions about the benefits or penalties of marriage. State tax laws are roughly parallel to federal laws.
4. Current Research

While it is possible to describe the differences in the law regarding same-gender relationships, it is still difficult to make definitive statements on the sociological effects of these laws on same-gender families and their children. Research on this specific topic encounters significant challenges.

The journal of the American Academy of Pediatrics offers a comprehensive review of the literature related to the psychosocial aspects of same-gender parents and their children. Challenges such as small sample size, children originally born into a heterosexual parental relationship, investigator bias, and community attitudes are present in current research.

The effect of the laws and the developmental differences of children in same-gender parent families are difficult to determine because cultural attitudes are not static. As one article states:

“... whether same-sex marriage would prove socially beneficial, socially harmful, or trivial is an empirical question that cannot be settled by any amount of armchair theorizing. There are plausible arguments on all sides of the issue, and as yet there is no evidence sufficient to settle them.”

Item 13-01

[The assembly answered Item 13-01 by the action taken on Item 13-02. See pp. 65, 67.]

On the War in Afghanistan—From the Presbytery of Hudson River.

The Presbytery of Hudson River overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) to do the following:

1. Declare itself in opposition to further military operations by the United States in Afghanistan.

2. Call upon the United States government to engage in a responsible withdrawal plan, including a. taking noncombative actions, and only those, in vigorous pursuit of stability, prosperity, and peace in Afghanistan and in the region;
   b. cooperating with the United Nations and Afghanistan neighbors in the stabilization process;
   c. cooperating with the United Nations in providing and overseeing greatly expanded aid to Afghanistan for the delivery of humanitarian services and economic development assistance.

3. Direct the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council, in conjunction with ecumenical partners, to take the following actions, where appropriate assigning responsibilities to the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, the Presbyterian Washington and UN Offices, or other entities, to
   a. communicate to the United States president and Congress the position of this assembly as set forth in Recommendation 2 above;
   b. urge the president and Congress to commit the United States government to the use of peaceful means for the making of peace and for the pursuit of national interests, concentrating upon diplomacy, international collaboration, and material aid for education, the reduction of poverty, and the broadening of political enfranchisement in Afghanistan and elsewhere;
   c. encourage congregations and individual Presbyterians to pray for the people of Afghanistan and all fighting forces there, those on all sides who have been wounded and families who have lost loved ones, and to engage in advocacy and actions for peace;
   d. call upon the United States government to provide adequate healthcare and rehabilitation, including psychiatric care, trauma therapy, and substance abuse programs for members and veterans of its armed forces;
   e. ask the United States government to tabulate Afghanistan war casualties among all parties, civilian and military, and make a general inventory of destruction so that the human and material costs of the war may be assessed and the moral obligations of reconstruction and restitution be kept before the conscience of the nation;
   f. provide congregations and presbyteries with materials appropriate for studying the effects of the present war in Afghanistan and of noncombative actions the United States might take in pursuit of the region’s stability, prosperity, and peace;
   g. direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Peacemaking Program and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to convene a seminary- and college-wide review of peace studies, including peacemaking opportunities appropriate to the need to demilitarize U.S. international relations, and to report the results of this study to the 221st General Assembly (2014); and
   h. call for the federal government to make a public report on the spoils of war, asking to make transparent the contracts, figures, and contract duration involving American companies participating in the war efforts and its aftermath.

Rationale

To date none of the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has addressed the war in Afghanistan [which has been ongoing for more than eight years]. Consequently, not only has there been no directive to the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program to develop informational and study materials regarding the conflict, the voice of the church has been silent in a world anticipating its religious bodies to speak out. This overture brings the war in Afghanistan to the table of the 219th General Assembly (2010) for discussion and action. It is time for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be heard.

Afghanistan is frequently called the graveyard of empires. Today it has become an illustration of Jesus saying that those who take the sword will perish by the sword (Matt. 26:52). There is widespread opinion, in military as well as civilian circles, that the war cannot be won on the battlefield. Whether any modern war can truly be won is debatable, but there is scant reason to think the United States can find military victory where so many empires of the past have failed.1

The war being conducted in Afghanistan by United States forces does not have the support of most Afghans. Such support as there has been is declining.2 This works to the long-range advantage of the Taliban and Al Qaeda, whose defeat is the apparent aim of the United States government. This war, like most, is counterproductive.

Although the war in Afghanistan is by no means the largest in recent times, its human costs are immense. At least 18,000 Afghans have been killed3 and tens of thousands more have been injured, mostly noncombatants since the U.S.-led international intervention began in 2001. As of late 2009, Operation Enduring Freedom, as it is called, had cost the United States some 800 fatalities plus more than 2,500 seriously wounded.4 There is also a rising and alarming rate of drug and alcohol usage by our fighting forces, doubtless a reaction to stress, and perhaps related to ambivalence about the mission they are being asked to pursue.5

The war’s financial costs are also huge: more than $273 billion, according to the Center for Defense Information.6 To bring about peace, stability, and the reduction of terrorism, such a sum would produce far better results if spent on goods and services of benefit to the people of Afghanistan and its neighbors: education, health care, economic development, food security, poverty reduction, and the like. The Rand Corporation has determined that political work, local law enforcement, and peacekeeping would be more effective than increases in military force.7

The current situation in Afghanistan provides an opportunity to shift American resources and strategy in a far more productive direction than at present. It is too costly and breeds too much resentment. The long-range interests of the United States require less reliance on military strategies for spreading democracy, reducing terrorism, and providing for our own safety. The root of war, especially in our time, is injustice, usually expressed as severe economic inequity. Hunger and desperation do not nourish peace.

Jesus’ warning that one cannot serve two masters is highly relevant in international affairs. A nation cannot pursue peace while waging war, nor justice through militarism. The centuries-long attempt by many churches and Christians to justify war as a strategy of peace is coming apart in our time. Wars such as the one in Afghanistan increasingly result in the rape and killing of civilians, the destruction of their homes, and the devastation of lands, economies, and social structures.

The gospel of and about Jesus Christ is a gospel of peace and peacemaking. There is no more appropriate time for a church to proclaim the peace of Christ and to pursue its mandates than when a country and its government are pursuing the horrors and futility of a misbegotten war.

It is not the province of a church to devise a template of government strategies; we are not a political party. But it is our responsibility to call the nation and the world to the way of peace and to resist the logic of war. That is at the heart of the biblical vision and the gospel of Christ. “For God’s foolishness is wiser than human wisdom, and God’s weakness is stronger than human strength (1 Cor. 1:25, NRSV).

5. “… figures shows that by the end 2005 of the 104,000 who had sought medical help after serving in the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, 32,010 were suffering from post traumatic stress disorder, depression, drug addiction, or alcoholism. … Proportionally, that’s three times as many as those who returned from Vietnam. … A Pentagon health study found that the rate of binge drinking in the Army shot up by 30 percent from 2002 to 2005 and, they concluded, that it may signal an increasing pattern of heavy alcohol use in the Army. … 3,057 veterans of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars were diagnosed with potential drug dependency from 2005 to 2007, according the Veteran Health Authority. From 2002 through 2004 only 277 veterans were diagnosed with a drug dependency.” Center on Conscience and War, Reporter, Vol. 66, No. 2 (2009), p. 3.

6. Precise figures are not available. According to the Congressional Research service, almost $143 billion had been appropriated for Operation Enduring Freedom by the end of 2008. OEF principally refers to Afghanistan, while including some operations in the Horn of Africa, the Philippines, and “elsewhere.” See the Center for Defense Information, http://www.cdi.org/friendlyversion/printversion.cfm?documentID=4072 .
Outlays increased considerably with the increase in troop strength in 2009, although the amount is not available at the date of writing this overture. In May 2009, the Department of Defense announced that in 2010 the cost of running the war in Afghanistan would exceed the cost of the conflict in Iraq. It requested $130 billion for “overseas contingency operations,” mostly for Afghanistan. See “Sign of the Times: Afghanistan War Costs Higher Than Iraq,” By Nathan Hodge, May 7, 2009. URL: http://www.wired.com/dangerroom/2009/05/sign-of-the-times-afghanistan-war-costs-higher-than-iraq/

Taken together, these figures suggest that the cost of waging war in Afghanistan has been at least $273 billion, not counting whatever was spent in 2009.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 13-01 calls for the 219th General Assembly (2010) to take a series of actions related to the war in Afghanistan.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly that Item 13-01 be answered by the General Assembly’s action regarding Item 13-02, and that recommendation 3g be answered by its action on Item 13-11.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns supports this and all resolutions requesting support for peacemaking, as women civilians always find themselves in the most vulnerable position in situations of violence and war. The ACWC would draw particular attention to this fact, and recommend that any and all future resolutions and reports written in response to violence and war around the globe incorporate information on the particularly precarious situation of women in these contexts. Citing a concern from the United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 (adopted in 2000), ACWC notes that amongst civilians, women and children “account for the vast majority of those affected by armed conflict.”

Further, ACWC would encourage future reports and resolutions to include an affirmation of the essential role that women play in peacemaking, in much the same way that the UN Security Council Resolution 1325 cites the importance of Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, and stressing the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution.

Unfortunately, this and all other resolutions to the 219th General Assembly (2010) regarding war, violence, and a call for peace have left out the particular plight and specific gifts of the women in these various situations. All of the resolutions also fail to highlight the vulnerability of women and girls to gender-based violence, particularly rape used as a weapon of war, another specific point made by the UN Security Resolution 1325. Given the pervasiveness of this atrocity, it must not be left out of any report on war and violence.

The ACWC encourages those writing future resolutions to incorporate these essential points in order to capture a more comprehensive understanding of war, violence, and peacemaking processes that includes the experiences of women.

Item 13-02

[The assembly approved Item 13-02 with amendment. See pp. 65, 66-67.]

On the War in Afghanistan—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

[We of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have deep appreciation for the patriotic loyalty of our nation’s citizens and service personnel for the extreme sacrifice they paid and will continue to pay to support our effort to achieve peace and stability in Iraq and Afghanistan, and to protect the citizens of our nation. However, we believe further sacrifices and services will not serve the purposes for which we have been engaged. Therefore, the Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010)]

1. Call upon the United States government to
   a. [take only non-combative actions in vigorous pursuit of] [pursue non-combat actions that will support] stability, prosperity, and peace in Afghanistan and [in the surrounding region];
   b. cease direct combat operations, except those to protect coalition troops remaining, Afghani security force troops, and humanitarian efforts;
   c. cooperate with the United Nations and the neighbors of Afghanistan in the stabilization process;
   d. cooperate with the United Nations in providing and overseeing greatly expanded aid to Afghanistan for the delivery of humanitarian and economic development assistance;
   e. engage directly with and among the Afghani people in a process of peacemaking by
      1. creating a multilevel, participatory, consensus building process that seeks input from every sector and level of society and does not exclude from participation any group of stakeholders;
      2. building a broad base of civil support that makes peacemaking cost-effective;
      3. engaging in a public process involving consultation with leaders of civil society, a representative process, and open media communication among the populace;
