Rationale

Afghanistan is frequently called “the graveyard of empires” (see Milton Bearden, Council on Foreign Relations, “Afghanistan, Graveyard of Empires,” November/December 2001). Today it has become an illustration of Jesus’ saying that “… all who take the sword will perish by the sword” (Mt. 26:52). There is widespread opinion, in military as well as civilian circles, that the war cannot be won on the battlefield.²

The war being conducted in Afghanistan as a NATO operation with major participation by United States forces does not have the support of most Afghans and such support as there has been is declining.³ This works to the long-range advantage of the Taliban and Al Qaeda, whose defeat is the apparent aim of the United States government. Thus, the war is becoming counterproductive to U.S. interests.

Although the war in Afghanistan is by no means the largest in recent times, its human costs are immense. At least 18,000 Afghans have been killed⁴ and tens of thousands more have been injured—mostly noncombatants—since the U.S.-led international intervention began in 2001. As of late 2009, Operation Enduring Freedom, as it is called, had cost the United States some 933 fatalities plus more than 2,500 seriously wounded.⁵ There is also a rising and alarming rate of drug and alcohol usage by our fighting forces, doubtless a reaction to stress.⁶

The war’s financial costs are also huge: more than $287 billion, according to the Center for Defense Information.⁷ To bring about peace, stability, and the reduction of terrorism, such a sum would produce far better results if spent on goods and services of benefit to the people of Afghanistan and its neighbors through education, health care, economic development, food security, poverty reduction, and the like. The Rand Corporation has determined “ … that political, local law enforcement, and peacekeeping solutions are a more effective alternative to increases in foreign military force.”⁸

The current situation in Afghanistan provides an opportunity to shift American resources and strategy in a far more productive direction than at present. The present war is too costly and breeds too much resentment. The long-range interests of the United States require less reliance on military strategies for spreading democracy, reducing terrorism, and providing for our own safety. The roots of war, especially in our time, are injustice and severe economic inequity. Hunger and desperation do not nourish peace.

Jesus’ warning that one cannot serve two masters is highly relevant in international affairs. A nation cannot pursue peace while waging war, nor justice through militarism. Wars such as the one in Afghanistan increasingly result in the rape and killing of civilians, the destruction of their homes, and the devastation of lands, economies, and social structures.

The gospel of and about Jesus Christ is a gospel of peace and peacemaking. There is no more appropriate time for a church to proclaim the peace of Christ and to pursue its mandates than when a country and its government are pursuing the horrors and futility of a misbegotten war. It is not the province of a church to devise a template of government strategies; we are not a political party. But it is our responsibility to call the nation and the world to the way of peace and to resist the logic of war. That is at the heart of the biblical vision and the gospel of Christ. “For God’s foolishness is wiser than human wisdom, and God’s weakness is stronger than human strength” (1 Cor. 1:25).

OEF principally refers to Afghanistan, and includes some operations in the Horn of Africa, the Philippines, and “elsewhere.” For more information, check with the Center for Defense Information, <http://www.cdi.org/friendlyversion/printversion.cfm?documentID=4072>.

Taken together, these figures suggest that the cost of waging war in Afghanistan has been at least $287 billion and climbing.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly that Item 13-02, Recommendation 2.g. be answered by its action on Item 13-11, and that with that exception, Item 13-02 be approved with the following addition to Recommendation 1: [Text to be added is shown in brackets and an underline.]

“[d. engage directly with and among the Afghani people in a process of peacemaking by:

“[(1)] creating a multilevel, participatory, consensus building process that seeks input from every sector and level of society and does not exclude from participation any group of stakeholders;

“[(2)] building a broad base of civil support that makes peacemaking cost-effective;

“[(3)] engaging in a public process involving consultation with leaders of civil society, a representative process, and open media communication among the populace;

“[(4)] incentivizing peace by focusing on security, economic stability and justice, political access and participation, and identity associated with territory through both culturally identified internal and external incentives;

“[(5)] practicing consistent and intensive diplomatic engagement at multiple levels that is culturally knowledgeable and sensitive, language fluent, and skilled in mediation; and

“[(6)] allocating resources that link mediation with implementation.]”

Rationale

The process of establishing a stable peace in a nation or region requires the coordinated and comprehensive, direct, open, and genuine engagement of all the people or groups of stakeholders. Peacemaking is a process that must be built methodically and comprehensively in a manner that is culturally knowledgeable and sensitive, adequately resourced, and committed for the duration of the process. Item 13-02 requires greater methodological specificity in its peacemaking process that acknowledges the necessity of buy-in and participation by the Afghani people as a whole and groups of stakeholders within that nation.

As of early May 2010, there are indications that some level of negotiation with the Taliban is being considered by both US and Afghan government representatives. Very little continued presence of Al Qaeda is assumed to exist but Taliban forces return to most areas after US forces leave the area. Considerable moral debate is growing over the use of unmanned drones to target bombs on alleged terrorists, partly as it can be a form of assassination, and partly because collateral damage—civilian deaths—is counter-productive. The principles ACSWP recommends adding would involve internationalizing a peace process and shifting some international roles to the United Nations from NATO, many of whose European governments have effectively withdrawn support for the venture. At the same time, we recognize the concern of those who focus on the legitimacy of the government of President Karzai, given both election fraud and persistent corruption. Those who favor the reconstruction approach point to many more children, including girls, in school and some success at building infrastructure. Others feel there is a growing partnership with Pakistan that is weakening Taliban and other resistance groups.

In light of nine years of Soviet occupation in the past, and the nine year campaign of the US and NATO forces (thus far), the overtures under consideration seem wise in their overall critique of an overly-military dependent approach. Whether cultural and religious barriers can in fact be surmounted at this time remains an open question, answered in the negative by hardliners of various kinds. Thus there is a realism as well as idealism in the overture’s plan (which bears some similarities to House Resolution 11, calling for more rapid withdrawal of combat forces).

On the War in Afghanistan—From the Presbytery of Scioto Valley.

The Presbytery of Scioto Valley overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Declare itself in opposition to the further pursuit of a military solution to the situation in Afghanistan.

2. Call upon the United States government to:
   a. cease active combat operations, except those to protect soldiers, and only pursue non-combative actions in vigorous pursuit of stability, prosperity, and peace in Afghanistan and the region;
   b. work with the Afghanistan government and other appropriate governments to stabilize the area and provide for humanitarian aid and economic development of Afghanistan;
   c. cooperate with the United Nations in providing and overseeing greatly expanded aid to Afghanistan for the delivery of humanitarian services and economic development assistance.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk, through the Office of the General Assembly and in conjunction with ecumenical partners, to take the following actions, where appropriate working with the General Assembly Mission Council to assign responsibilities to the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, the Presbyterian Washington and UN Offices, or other entities of the General Assembly Mission Council:
Furthermore, there is widespread corruption among Afghan leaders, often related to the opium trade; this works to the long-range advantage of the Taliban and Al Qaeda, whose defeat is the apparent aim of the United States government. This war, like most, is counterproductive. Jesus’ warning that one cannot serve two masters is highly relevant in international affairs. A nation cannot pursue peace while waging war, nor justice through militarism. The centuries-long attempt by many churches and Christians to justify war as a strategy of peace is coming apart in our time. Wars such as the one in Afghanistan increasingly result in the rape and killing of civilians, the destruction of their homes, and the devastation of lands, economies, and social structures.

Afghanistan is frequently called “the graveyard of empires” (see Milton Bearden, Council on Foreign Relations, “Afghanistan, Graveyard of Empires,” November/December 2001). Today it has become an illustration of Jesus’ saying that “… ‘all who take the sword will perish by the sword’” (Mt. 26:52). There is widespread opinion, in military as well as civilian circles, that the war cannot be won on the battlefield. Whether any modern war can truly be won is debatable, but there is scant reason to think the United States can find military victory where so many empires of the past have failed.1

The current situation in Afghanistan provides an opportunity to shift American resources and strategy in a far more productive direction than at present. War is too costly and breeds too much resentment. The long-range interests of the United States require less reliance on military strategies for spreading democracy, reducing terrorism, and providing for our own security and the pursuit of national interests, concentrating upon diplomacy, international collaboration, and material aid for education, the reduction of poverty, and political enfranchisement in Afghanistan and elsewhere; and the use of peaceful means for spreading democracy, reducing terrorism, and providing for our own security and the pursuit of national interests, concentrating upon diplomacy, international collaboration, and material aid for education, the reduction of poverty, and political enfranchisement in Afghanistan and elsewhere; and to engage in advocacy and actions for peace.

f. provide congregations and presbyteries with materials appropriate for studying the effects of the present war in Afghanistan and of non-combative actions the United States might take in pursuit of the region’s stability, prosperity, and peace;

g. and direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Peacemaking Program and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to convene a seminary- and college-wide review of peace studies in order to understand more about peacemaking opportunities appropriate to the need to demilitarize U.S. international relations, and to report the results of this study to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Rationale

The gospel of and about Jesus Christ is a gospel of peace and peacemaking. There is no more appropriate time for a church to proclaim the peace of Christ and to pursue its mandates than when a country and its government are pursuing the horrors and futility of a misbegotten war.

Jesus’ warning that one cannot serve two masters is highly relevant in international affairs. A nation cannot pursue peace while waging war, nor justice through militarism. The centuries-long attempt by many churches and Christians to justify war as a strategy of peace is coming apart in our time. The war being conducted in Afghanistan by United States forces does not have the support of most Afghans. Such support as there has been is declining.2 This works to the long-range advantage of the Taliban and Al Qaeda, whose defeat is the apparent aim of the United States government. This war, like most, is counterproductive.

Although the war in Afghanistan is by no means the largest in recent times, its human costs are immense. At least 18,000 Afghans have been killed3 and tens of thousands more have been injured—mostly non-combatants—since the U.S.-led international intervention began in 2001. The use of unmanned drones by the United States has accounted for many civilian casualties and has led to increased resentment among Afghans.

The war’s financial costs are also huge: more than $273 billion, according to the Center for Defense Information.6 To bring about peace, stability, and the reduction of terrorism, such a sum would produce far better results if spent on goods and services of benefit to the people of Afghanistan and its neighbors: education, health care, economic development, food security, poverty reduction, and the like. Outlays increased considerably with the increase in troop strength in 2009, although the amount is not available at the date of writing this overture. In May, 2009, the Department of Defense announced that in 2010 the cost of running the war in Afghanistan would exceed the cost of the conflict in Iraq. It requested $130 billion for “overseas contingency operations,” mostly for Afghanistan. See Nathan Hodge, the-times-afghanistan-war-costs-higher-than-iraq/>.

Taken together, these figures suggest that the cost of waging war in Afghanistan has been at least $287 billion and climbing.

On Partnering for Peace in Sudan—From the Presbytery of Trinity.

The Presbytery of Trinity overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) to show that working toward a just and lasting peace for all of Sudan is a high priority in keeping with the Great Ends of the Church (Book of Order, G-1.0200) by approving the following objectives:

1. Support intercessory prayer and advocacy by the churches regarding (a) renewed international commitment to the full and timely implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement of 2005 (CPA), including international protection in Southern Sudan for the referendum on whether to secede; (b) increased private investment for the economic development of Southern Sudan and other areas affected by conflict; (c) increased development assistance by the United States government, including assistance in restoring security for the citizens of Southern Sudan and other areas affected by violence and proliferation of arms; and (d) renewed efforts by all parties to end hostilities in Darfur and elsewhere in Sudan, including full access by humanitarian organizations to provide care and resettlement assistance to refugees and the internally displaced, all for the purposes of the shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God and the promotion of social righteousness.”

2. Support the formation of new covenant-based partnerships by PC(USA) presbyteries with presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church of Sudan (PCOS) or the Sudan Presbyterian Evangelical Church (SPEC), making arrangements through the PC(USA) [Sudan Mission Network] [General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), World Mission ministry area], with presbyteries reporting results to the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council by July 1, 2011, for review by the General Assembly Mission Council and thereafter, publication on appropriate web sites, all for the purposes of the proclamation of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ for the salvation of humankind, the preservation of the truth, and the maintenance of divine worship.

3. Designate, after consultation with other interested denominations, a period of several weeks in 2010 as an ecumenical “Season of Prayer for Peace in Sudan,” urging the churches to include prayers for peace in Sudan in regular worship services, culminating in a “National Day of Prayer for Peace in Sudan,” including the celebration of partnering relationships by PC(USA) presbyteries with PCOS and SPEC for the purpose of the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world.

Rationale

The CPA was executed on January 9, 2005, after years of persistence by international negotiating teams in the face of resistance by the government of Sudan, thereby establishing a Government of National Unity (GOUN) for an interim period of six years during which Southern Sudan is at once a participant in the GOUN and semi-autonomously governed.

The CPA set deadlines for a national census, elections based on the census results, and, at the end of the Interim Period (i.e. January 9, 2011), a referendum for self-determination for the people of Southern Sudan. However, the census results are in dispute, the date for elections has been postponed twice, and adoption of a referendum law is still pending, in large part due to continual undermining, manipulations, and delays imposed by the GOUN’s majority party based in Khartoum; as a result, the CPA, the best hope ever for improved governance in Sudan, is in imminent danger of failure.

The Sudan Council of Churches, at its 17th General Assembly in 2009, made an urgent appeal to all parties to the CPA to reinvigorate their efforts and fulfill commitments agreed to in the CPA.

We, who have been richly blessed, have connections and resources to pray for our brothers and sisters in Sudan and advocate on their behalf with our government, and also to partner with them, presbytery to presbytery, accompanying them as they labor to rebuild their lives and communities and integrate returnees.

The time has come to expand the number, commitment, and scope of our partnerships with Presbyterians in Sudan to assuage the acute needs they are experiencing in the ongoing process of governmental transition and regional reconstruction.

To the extent that peace and reconciliation in Sudan has been achieved, it is due to God’s mercy and the ecumenical Church in Sudan, the voice for the voiceless, which works through community-based networks to advocate for the advancement of civil society.

The Church in Sudan, though mighty in faith, faces tremendous challenges, including limited resources and lack of security to engage in capacity building as it seeks to educate people who never before have participated in an election process. Thus an ecumenical “Season of Prayer for Peace in Sudan” as an exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world will be a special encouragement to the Church in Sudan, in particular, our sister denominations the PCOS and SPEC.
Similar resolutions to the objectives stated hereinabove were adopted by The Episcopal Church at its 76th Convention, July 8–14, 2009.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly that Item 13-04 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through, text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“1. Support intercessory prayer and advocacy by the churches regarding (a) renewed international commitment to the full and timely implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement of 2005 (CPA) [including international protection in Southern Sudan for the referendum on whether to secede, scheduled for January 2011]; (b) increased private investment …

“2. Support the formation of new covenant-based partnerships by PC(USA) presbyteries with presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church of Sudan (PCOS) or the Sudan Presbyterian Evangelical Church (SPEC), making arrangements through the PC(USA) [Sudan Mission Network] [World Mission ministry area of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC)], with presbyteries reporting results to the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) by July 1, 2011….”

Rationale

Over the past seventeen years, the General Assembly has repeatedly approved PC(USA) statements seeking to achieve peace in Sudan. These actions include:

Commissioners’ Resolution 93-15, On Expressing Concern for the People of Sudan (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 938–9)

Commissioners’ Resolution 94-6, On the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Supporting Mission Efforts in the Sudan (Minutes, 1994, Part I, pp. 70–74, 570–3)

Overture 97-75, On the Situation in the Sudan and Our Response to That Situation—From the Presbytery of Shenango (Minutes, 1997, Part I, p. 721)

Commissioners’ Resolution 01-12. On the Civil War in Sudan (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 491–2

Prayer and advocacy are important expressions of church witness and they should be reaffirmed in the case of Sudan. In view of the limited progress towards peace that these actions have achieved to date, and the danger of renewed large scale warfare involved in potentially dividing the country, it is appropriate to experiment with more direct demonstrations of solidarity with fellow Presbyterians in the Sudan such as the presbytery partnerships now proposed, and to share the results with interested parties.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) affirms the work of the Sudan Mission Network (SMN) in keeping issues regarding Sudan before the church. However, given the complexity of the issues in the Sudan region, ACSWP believes the World Mission ministry area of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is the most appropriate entity to facilitate partnerships between the PC(USA) presbyteries and our Sudan partner churches.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 13-04

Comment on Item 13-04—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

World Mission welcomes this overture that again brings to the attention of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) the need for us to walk with our sisters and brothers in Sudan—particularly those of our two partner churches: the Presbyterian Church of Sudan (PCOS) and the Sudan Presbyterian Evangelical Church (SPEC)—as they face the continuing challenges within their country. This overture highlights the important concerns that the PC(USA) has had as we have listened to our partners in Sudan. It is of particular concern at this time as we approach the end of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement that brings to the people a referendum to decide the future of Sudan. Voting on this referendum has the potential of resulting in increased conflict thereby further disrupting the opportunities for development of the country and peace for her people.

World Mission concurs with the three points of the overture, and adds the following comments for completion and clarification.

1. The call for prayer and advocacy is in line with previous actions of the PC(USA) General Assemblies. Statements such as this are bound by the time in which they are written. With the volatile situation in Sudan, it is important to hear what further needs for prayer and advocacy may have developed that may not have been captured in this overture. An example of this is the need to encourage the U.S. Government to advocate for the provision of security and effective monitoring to ensure a free, fair, and peaceful referendum voting process.

2. World Mission understands the interest expressed by this point to increase the number of presbyteries in the PC(USA) that are in partnership with PC(USA) partners in Sudan. The Sudan Mission Network does serve an important role as we join together in ministry with our partners in Sudan. In terms of the language of “making arrangements through the Sudan Mission Network,” this point seeks to connect other Presbyterians to Sudan. The Sudan Mission Network is a good place to do this. However, the work of facilitating partnerships between PC(USA) presbyteries and our partner churches in Sudan has historically, and continues to be the work of World Mission, which has developed much experience and expertise in this area. The people of the Sudan Mission Network serve well to strengthen our work and ability to engage in effective and faithful witness as we join together in communities of mission practice.

3. A period of prayer for Sudan highlights the grave nature of the situation in Sudan. The culmination in a day of prayer will draw people to a new awareness. We welcome the celebration of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ministry in Sudan, which dates from 1900, and encompasses the commitment of PC(USA) mission personnel who have given themselves to the people of Sudan, as well as the many Presbyterians, congregations, presbyteries, and GAMC staff who have responded to God’s call to bring God’s perfect peace to the people of Sudan.

On [Protecting Christians in the Muslim World] [the Protection of Religious Minorities]—From the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia.

The Presbytery of Eastern Virginia overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010), through its proper offices singly, or in conjunction with other denominations and faiths, through our appeal to them, to jointly encourage the United Nations to use its valuable influence, and through its diplomatic channels, to exhort the religious and political leaders of [Muslim nations] [nations with Christian and other religious minorities] to moderate extreme behavior and protect its religious minorities from such harm, and encourage [mutual respect and forbearance] [brotherly harmony between each other].
Rationale

There is a significant population of Christians in the Muslim world with Pakistan, alone, having a minority population of some 3 percent of its total, and almost three million being fellow Presbyterians. The Peacemaking Committee of the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia has been in constant contact with the Executive Office of the Presbyterian Church in Pakistan, as the result of recent interfaith efforts with them, we have learned through their correspondence, and through a recent news release by the United Methodist Church, of violent attacks on Christians in the village of Gojra near Faisalabad, a nearby major city, in which 9 persons were killed, some 175 injured, and more than 100 homes looted and destroyed, as well as many other such acts that have been regularly confirmed by world news agencies.

There are also examples of unfairly enforced violations of Islamic law on religious minorities in the country, such as a young Christian man, accused of violating their Blasphemy Laws, being murdered while in jail, awaiting trial in which the police claimed his death was a suicide, though circumstances suggest otherwise.

Sister and brother Christians, as well as other religious minorities, have been subjected to persecution, bodily harm, and property deprivation by extreme elements of Muslim world, specifically including Pakistan, Afghanistan, and Iraq.

The above knowledge came from the testimony of our fellow Pakistani Presbyterians, as well as our friends, the United Methodists.

ACS WP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACS WP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACS WP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 13-05 with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strikethrough; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

1. Revise the title to read, “On Protecting Christians [in the Muslim World] [and Other Religious Minorities in Pakistan].”

2. “The Presbytery of Eastern Virginia overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010), through its proper offices singly, or in conjunction with other denominations and faiths, through our appeal to them, to jointly encourage the United Nations to use its valuable influence, and through its diplomatic channels, [to exhort the religious and political leaders of Muslim nations to moderate extreme behavior and protect its religious minorities from such harm, and encourage brotherly harmony between each other] [to urge the religious and political leaders of Pakistan to protect all its religious minorities from harm].”

Rationale

This will make the recommendation consistent with the Rationale, which speaks only of Pakistan. The original wording makes an unnecessary sweeping statement about all nations where Muslims are the majority population.

The ACS WP further advises consideration of the following:

1. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved Item 07-01, On Calling for Tolerance and Peaceful Relations Between the Christian and Muslim Communities, stating that “… though we hold differing understandings of how God has been revealed to humankind, the PC(USA) affirms that, as children of this loving God, we share the commandments of love for God and neighbor …” and should work together to “… promote peace, resolve conflict; ensure human rights, prevent discrimination; develop dialogue, emphasize commonality; recognize differences, celebrate diversity; advocate justice, oppose bias…” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 507).

2. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved item 07-07, On Peaceful Relations between Christian and Muslim Communities, that affirmed “… the PC(USA)’s commitment to and call for understanding, mutual respect, and peaceful relations between the Christian and Muslim communities…” and called for efforts to “… improve good relations between Presbyterians and Muslims at the level of national and international dialogue in order to promote peace, enhance mutual understanding, counteract bias and discrimination, recognize commonality, and celebrate diversity…” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 526).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 13-05 be disapproved.

Rationale

There is no context in this item for the situation of the Christians in Pakistan who have come to represent “The West” where they live. In all the countries mentioned, the U.S. has been at war in the area and any mention of this fact is glaringly absent. Christians have become a proxy representative of “The West” and even of America. The attacks on Christians are also an attack on the American presence and war in their region.

The call from this item only puts the Christian minorities in these countries at greater danger as it underlines the fact that these minorities do indeed have “guardian angels” in the West, which makes them unwelcome members of their own Eastern communities and turns them into outsiders.

On Entering a Six-Year Term of Discernment to Seek Clarity on Whether God Is Calling the Church to Embrace Nonviolence as Its Response to War and Terror—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to affirm the following actions:

1. To direct appropriate General Assembly Mission Council staff, and to call on all congregations to enter into a six-year “time of discernment” seeking clarity on whether God is calling the church, at this historic moment, to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to war and terror.

During this season of discernment, the entire church will be invited to study Scripture and the history of the Christian church’s response to violence, to engage in faithful direct action against violence, and to pray and labor with one another faithfully to develop a theology of nonviolence to guide it as it responds to the challenges of violence, terror, and war in the twenty-first century. Specific activities would include, but not be limited to, the following:

a. Call all Presbyterians to pray and study Scripture for guidance about how to respond faithfully to Jesus’ call to be peacemakers.

b. Direct the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program to develop and identify appropriate resources for congregational study about the history of Christian responses to violence, and to disseminate those resources across the church.

c. Invite the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship to work collegially with and support the efforts of the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program and other General Assembly Mission Council programs as they carry out the directives of this overture.

d. Invite Presbyterian congregations into a time of study and reflection on root causes of violence and responses to violence that honor the gospel, the history of the church, and the movement of the Holy Spirit as Christ’s church attempts to live out His command to love its enemies.

e. Invite and equip individual congregations to respond through prayer, direct action, and advocacy to prevent and respond to violence on the local level (e.g., action and advocacy concerning gang violence, gun violence, family violence), the national level (e.g., action and advocacy on budget priorities, decisions about investments, concerns about the military-industrial complex and its effect on the lives of Christians), and the international level (e.g., action and advocacy on issues of war and peace).

2. To create a broadly representative national committee (appointed by the current Moderator in consultation with the two prior Moderators) to study the issue of nonviolence and report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly in 2014, allowing the entire church to reflect on their report before taking final action in 2016. The committee would be asked to pay particular attention to and bring forth recommendations on the following questions:

a. Is Just War Theory a relevant and faithful response to violence in our time?
b. How are the denomination, judicatories, congregations, and members affected by U.S. participation in the military-industrial complex?

c. What can we learn from the history of the use of principled nonviolence?

d. In what ways might the church effectively reduce and even eliminate dependence on violence, military options, and war as a response to the challenges of this age?

e. What are the implications for the church of embracing nonviolence in its responses to immediate and emergency situations of genocide and terrorism?

f. How can the church most faithfully provide pastoral support to its members who are working in the U.S. military, in industries that support the military, or that benefit financially from a war economy?

Rationale

Christian Scripture is replete with examples of the gospel call to nonviolence:

- Jesus calls his disciples to love, pray for, and not retaliate against one’s enemies (Matt. 5:38–48) and thus sets a guide line for living into the prophetic visions of a day when swords are beaten into plowshares and nations study war no more (Isa. 2:4; Micah 4:3).

- Peter, Paul, and the whole of the apostolic witness in Scripture explicitly call for Christians to adopt a new behavior toward those who do harm to them (Rom. 12:14–21; 1 Pet. 3:9–19; James 3:13–4:3).

- The presumption of the New Testament is that suffering for the faith is a material aspect of what it means to be a follower of Jesus Christ and not something to be dodged or otherwise avoided, but rather embraced (Mark 13:9–13; Matt. 10:17–21, 24:9–14; Luke 21:12–19). This presumption echoes the call of the Old Testament prophets to endure the refiner’s fire and the fuller’s soap (Mal. 3:2) along the path to justice and shalom.

The history of the Christian response to violence tells a compelling story of the initial embrace of the nonviolent witness of Jesus. From the withdrawal into the countryside of the first-century Jerusalem church in response to the invasion of its homeland (Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History, 5.3) to the refusal of early Christians in Rome to engage in any violence because they trusted that their love for fellow citizens would point people to the new day dawning in Jesus Christ (Justin Martyr, First Apology, 14.3; Origen, Against Celsus, 8.68, 75; Arnobius, Against the Nations, 1.6), the first Christians embraced and lived according to that nonviolent witness of Jesus.

Moreover, early Christian theologians asserted that the coming of the Messiah, taking with utmost seriousness the Hebrew prophets, Micah and Isaiah, had obviated the need for members of the beloved community to do anything other than beat their swords into plowshares when it came to matters of violence (Justin Martyr, Dialogue with Trypho, 110; Origen, Against Celsus, 5.33; Tertullian, An Answer to the Jews, 5; cf. also Cyprian, On the Advantage of Patience, 14).

Indeed, there exists not a single affirmation of killing or war anywhere in the writings of the pastors and theologians of the early church, nor is there anywhere the idea that Christians making war would make the world a better or safer place. The early writings are replete with prohibitions against killing of any sort, some of which even carried the explicit sanction of forbidding admission to the Eucharist directed at persons engaged in such acts (Canons of the Synod of Illiberis, 56; Hippolytus, Apostolic Tradition, Canon 16; Lactantius, Divine Institutes, 6.20.16–17). The early Christians would not watch killings either by observing the carrying out of legal death sentences or by attending the gladiatorial games (Minucius Felix, Octavius 30.6, 31.6; Athenagoras, A Plea for the Christians, 35).

The history of the Christian response to violence changed abruptly in the fourth century. At that time the church took up arms on behalf of the Roman Empire, after being offered inducements and blandishments of money, property, and power. The change was such that while in 300 CE it was forbidden for Christians to serve in the military, by the middle of the next century only Christians were allowed to serve.

The Christian participation in the wars of the Roman Empire led to the establishment of the so-called Just War Doctrine or Theory, developed primarily by Bishop Augustine of Hippo. The Just War Theory established the ground rules under which a Christian might be understood to be acting morally when killing another human being.

Even Augustine, though believing that protecting the innocent made killing justifiable, nevertheless taught that a Christian killing in self-defense was immoral. After Augustine, the justification for killing on the part of Christians expanded to include self-defense and even further, to the killing of other Christians. This practice has continued until our own times.

The practice of granting exceptions and exclusions to the basic principles of the Just War Theory has resulted in an ever expanding re-definition of the concept of “just war.” Each new exception becomes the new standard, which then gets broadened to embrace the next exception. The result is that Just War now seems to mean that the government may do what it wants to do militarily, including the use of atomic weapons and the manufacturing of thousands of weapons of mass destruction. This happens in a country wherein the majority profess to be followers of Jesus Christ.

It has become ordinary for the country to stockpile thousands of nuclear weapons that have the capacity to destroy all life on the planet, with scarcely a ripple in the pews or a sound from the pulpits.

Nevertheless, the General Assembly has spoken consistently over the last thirty years about its opposition to war, particularly with the following actions:

- “Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling,” was adopted by the 192nd General Assembly (1980) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America
- Resolution on Just Peacemaking and the Call for International Intervention for Humanitarian Rescue approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
- Resolution on Violence, Religion, and Terrorism approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
- The endorsement of “… the research and development of a ‘global nonviolent peace force’ as recommended by the People’s Millennium Forum at the United Nations, May 2000, in order to create and maintain a highly trained group of active and reserve specialists in conflict resolution, nonviolent strategies, negotiation skills, civil social development, and confidence building” by the 213th General Assembly (2001). (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 55)

The church must lead the nations of the world into a new understanding of how to respond to violence in our time. The church is called by the Scriptures to be a counter-cultural community, much like it was in its first three centuries, pointing the world to God’s coming reign in Jesus Christ as its only hope.

The mission of the church in any generation is to be found in “sharing with Christ in the establishing of his just, peaceable, and loving rule in the world” (G-3.0300c(3)(e)) “… even at the risk of losing its life, trusting in God alone as the author and giver of life, sharing the gospel, and doing those deeds in the world that point beyond themselves to the new reality in Christ” (G-3.0400).

Beyond the history of the church, two striking and contradictory twentieth century developments point increasingly toward the simple necessity of developing practical alternatives to violence:

1. Prior to World War I, civilian deaths were less than 10 percent of war casualties. In the wars of the latter part of the twentieth century, more than 90 percent of the casualties are civilians. This reversal undermines classic Just War Theory for the conduct of war. Just War Theory requires that acts of war be directed towards enemy combatants, and not towards non-combatants or civilians caught in circumstances they did not create. Actions that would be prohibited under classic Just War Theory include: bombing civilian residential areas that include no military targets, committing acts of terrorism, reprisals against ordinary civilians, and weapons that cause inordinate civilian casualties. Unfortunately changes in weapons and tactics in contemporary warfare make such actions common, and thus make fighting a so-called “just war” all but impossible.

2. At the same time, there is a growing and compelling history of successes in nonviolent resistance. From independence in India to the American Civil Rights Movement, from the “velvet revolution” in Eastern Europe to the Peace and Reconciliation work in post-Apartheid South Africa, there are examples of the use of nonviolence to produce massive, nonviolent change. This can inform the church as we struggle to find effective, nonviolent means of responding to crises in the world.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 13-06

Comment on Item 13-06—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

Recommendation 1.b. “[d]irects the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program to develop and identify appropriate resources for congregational study about the history of Christian responses to violence, and to disseminate those resources across the church” (Item 13-06).
The General Assembly Mission Council reminds the assembly that the GAMC is changing in response to trends in mission engagement and funding throughout the denomination. The focus of this ministry is to inspire, equip, and connect Presbyterians as they engage in ministry.

The GAMC is moving away from:

- creating offices at the denominational level to coordinate every area of specialized ministry, and
- producing PC(USA) resources where good resources exist from other sources.

This ministry focus for the GAMC is consistent with the available funding streams and the broad range of ministry support that Presbyterians expect.

We invite Presbyterians with a passion for specialized ministries to form ministry networks for collaboration and coordination. The PC(USA) Web site provides tools for these networks to form and for synergies to emerge. New features are being added to the Web site to improve that capability. These varied ministries are vital for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and we will continue to seek ways to foster connections and collaboration to join in expanding partnership in God’s mission and to grow Christ’s church deep and wide.

Twenty-first Century Peacemaking and Seminaries, Colleges, and Congregations—From the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley.

The Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to work with the PC(USA)-related seminaries and colleges, ecumenical partners, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and through the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, World Mission, and any other appropriate units of the GAMC:

1. to investigate the possibility of instituting comprehensive study and education programs dealing with peacemaking, as described in Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and other related documents, and the twenty-first century challenges threatening or preventing peace, including:
   a. the “wars” in which the United States has engaged, whether wars in the Middle East or in “the global war on terror” and “war on drugs,” and how these affect the world-wide mission of the PC(USA) and efforts to promote peacemaking;
   b. globalization and pluralism as they impact international relations and affect the worldwide mission of the PC(USA) and efforts to promote peacemaking;
   c. the implications of U.S. foreign policy and funding patterns on developing nations as they affect the world-wide mission of the PC(USA), and promotion of peacemaking;
   d. the pressures of climate-change and the increasing competition for natural resources by developing nations as they affect the world-wide mission of the church and promotion of peacemaking.

2. to make a preliminary report back to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Rationale

It is difficult for congregations and the pastors leading them to understand how to embrace the prophetic vision of peace and Jesus’ words about loving enemies in the complex socio-political and economic realities of the twenty-first century. Churches know that our country has now been actively engaged in foreign wars for a longer time than World War II; that extreme measures to build physical barricades on the southern borders of the country and to crack down on illegal immigration has not resolved migration issues; that wars on terrorism and drugs seem to be endless and escalating; that global markets can affect not only the prices at home but the livelihoods of populations far away; and that experiences of changed and extreme weather patterns are part of what scientists have named Climate Change.

Looking through our own lens of faith and through the eyes of the connectional church, we aren’t educated enough or prepared enough to know how to respond to some of these pressures. The life and mission of the church exist not just in a local context, but in a global context that church members may not understand.
The connectional church and the local church alike need opportunities to deal with the real issues impacting people and the planet through faith. What are some distinctive insights from the Reformed Tradition that can guide our study and action? Can church leaders learn new approaches to help churches face global realities of the twenty-first century? How can seminaries and colleges provide more opportunities for students and others for short-term courses or seminars?

How can seminaries help churches taking part in mission trips to understand the greater social and economic pressures that have led to the need for mission help? The denomination and its ecumenical partners could also provide an analysis of global challenges and sensitivity with regard to multiculturalism that could help educate and inform church leaders.

On Assisting with a Process for Negotiation of a Peace Accord in Colombia—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take the following actions:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to write the administration of President Barack Obama and the Congress of the United States of America seeking the permanent suspension of the U.S. military use of seven Colombian bases initiated in 2009, given that this expanded U.S. military presence in Colombia will:
   - increase violence and displacement within Colombia, and be perceived by many Colombians as a violation of Colombia’s national sovereignty; and
   - sow distrust among nearby Andean nations which perceive the expanded U.S. military presence in South America to be a threat to their national security.

2. [Request that] [Direct] the Stated Clerk [ask] [to request] President Barack Obama and the Congress to assist with a process for the negotiation of a peace accord in Colombia [instead,] in order to end Colombia’s internal armed conflict which has lasted more than fifty years and which is a threat to the entire Andean region.

3. Call on the church to strengthen initiatives of prayer and action in PC(USA) congregations and by PC(USA) leaders in order to broaden and support the movement of citizens toward peace in Colombia.

4. Encourage Presbyterian churches, as part of these undertakings of prayer and action, to visit Colombia in order to monitor the Colombian bases and their impact—so long as the United States maintains a presence in them.

5. [Direct appropriate offices of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to work with ecumenical partners to monitor and post periodic updates on the impact of United States military use of seven military bases in Colombia.]

Rationale

History and Call of the Presbyterian Churches of Colombia and the United States to Work for Peace

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has had a long relationship with Colombia, both in spreading the gospel message of God’s peace and in strengthening its democracy. The first Presbyterian missionaries established schools that have educated generations of respected citizens with an open and democratic mindset that strengthens Colombian society.

The PC(USA) continues a 154-year relationship and honors the testimony of education, evangelism, and service of the Presbyterian Church of Colombia (IPC), by answering the call to help them in their ministry of accompaniment to the displaced population and the most impoverished communities, and the search for peace as the fruit of justice.

Given the armed conflict that Colombia has lived for more than fifty years, the IPC has advised us of the damages of Plan Colombia (the common term for U.S. legislation aimed at curbing drug smuggling and insurgency, also used by Colombia’s leaders) and the grave consequences of the approval of a free trade agreement for wide sectors of the Colombian populace. We have witnessed that pastors and members of the churches frequently put their lives at risk to the point that some have been martyred for being witnesses and remaining faithful to the requirements of the Gospel to serve those most in need and those who have been victims of the violence.

In the 210th, 213th, 216th, and 218th General Assemblies, the PC(USA) has responded to the call of the IPC, rejecting this circle of violence. Today, several presbyteries in the PC(USA) have partnerships with presbyteries of the IPC that make up a network of mission and solidarity with Colombia. The PC(USA) has also created the Accompaniment Program to provide a physical presence by citizens of the United States giving protection to threatened communities and to the church whose leaders and pastors involved in human rights protection have been victims of surveillance and threats.

While it is appropriate to recognize and remember our past and present contributions to the troubled country of Colombia, it is essential that we focus on the responsibilities and opportunities we have as U.S. citizens who are followers of Christ. We must work in religious and political spheres and with social networks in our own country to contribute to a future of peace with more justice and equality for all of the Colombian people.

We have learned from the IPC that the election of President Barack Obama generated hope in Colombia that the United States would strengthen the search for peace and a greater respect for human rights. This has not been the case. In September 2009, the government of the United States certified the Colombian government in human rights even with the revelation of a high number of extra-judicial killings of youth—everyday citizens—whom the army tried to pass off as guerrilla members killed in combat, murders known as “false positives.” It was also made public that the Colombian intelligence agency, which depends directly on President Uribe, was used to keep illegal surveillance on leaders of the opposition, human rights defenders, and church leaders, threatening them because of their work for peace.

In these times, the hopes for peace in Colombia seem far away. Rather than supporting initiatives toward a peace accord, the government of President Obama has instead made an accord with the Colombian government for the U.S. military to use seven military bases within Colombia. The IPC in the 65th General Assembly of the Synod, a biennial assembly (Feb 10–12, 2010), expressed its concern:

… that the democratic security promoted by the [Colombian] government, the increased military costs, and the growth of the army have not shown us the prospect of peace even though they have reduced the actions of illegal armed groups. It is evident that there is a resurgence or strengthening of former armed groups. Furthermore, there are tensions with Colombia’s neighbors—Ecuador, Venezuela, and throughout the region because of the announcement of the U.S. Army’s use of Colombian military bases (Public Pastoral Declaration from Iglesia Presbiteriana de Colombia, Bogotá: February 12, 2010, translated by the church).

For this reason the IPC has called on the PC(USA) to join them in making stronger efforts (initiatives) toward peace in Colombia. As Christians we are obligated to respond to injustices, wherever they may be—haling the sick, feeding the poor, denouncing injustice, and ministering to those in need—with the values that we have in union with the words and actions of Jesus Christ. A great many people in Colombia suffer injustice caused by war, indifference, and the greed of their own government in collaboration with powerful global economic interests. This suffering has been aggravated by the good intentioned but often counter-productive politics of the United States. It is time to develop more visible means to help the work of Presbyterians in the United States and in Colombia who are working to create a more just and peaceful society, as the gospel exhorts us to do.

Plan Colombia and the Use of Military Bases in Colombia by the United States Military

Colombia has been identified by the government of the United States as a key strategic ally in the Western Hemisphere. The external politics of the United States have had an important, yet adverse, impact in the evolution of the armed conflict that exists in Colombia. In 2000, a policy called “Plan Colombia” was developed by the governments of the United States and Colombia with the purpose of eradicating coca crops to reduce exports of cocaine to the United States as well as the unstated desire to undermine the guerrilla forces that controlled around 40 percent of the country. The plan has been financed by the United States, which has given more than $7 billion—80 percent destined for military aid and the eradication of coca, 20 percent for alternative development, human rights, help to displaced persons, and judicial reform.

This well-intentioned goal has failed either to diminish the cultivation of coca or the export of cocaine to the United States. It has had grave unforeseen consequences for the situation in Colombia. The aerial fumigations directed at the eradication of the coca crop have caused an ecological crisis and medical harm to the civilian population. It has caused massive displacement. The fifty-year-old Colombian conflict has become even more deeply entrenched with the military aid offered by the United States. Paramilitary groups directly linked to the Colombian military, developed with the help of large landowners, are responsible for 70 percent of the violations of human rights. The guerrillas, far from beaten, have continued their actions of war. The FARC (Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarios de Colombia, or the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia) guerrillas have kidnapped and hold close to thirty military personnel, some for more than ten years. They seek prisoner swaps with their members held in jails in both Colombia and the United States. All of these efforts have effectively had the opposite result of U.S. goals. (See: “Bases, Bullets, and Ballots: The Effect of U.S. Military Aid on Political Conflict in Colombia,” Working Paper 197, by Oeindrila Dube and Suresh Naidu, Center for Global Development, January 2010, available at: <http://www.cgdev.org/content/publications/detail/1423498/>), pp. 26–27.)
During the span of Plan Colombia there have been more than two million people displaced from their land. Added to those that already existed, more than four million people have been displaced, making Colombia the country with the second-highest rate of internal displacement rate in the world. These uprooted people look for refuge in neighboring countries and in poor neighborhoods that encircle the large cities of Colombia. The most recent available annual report for the Colombia Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights identifies “continuous growth” in the numbers of internally displaced persons, with more than a quarter of a million new displaced persons recorded in the first half of 2008 alone, and a “disproportionate effect on communities located in regions where the armed conflict is fiercest.” (See: Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Colombia, March 2009, p.22, available at <http://ap.ohchr.org/documents/alldocs.aspx?doc_id=15200>.)

In this context, the announcement that the United States military will use seven Colombian bases makes aspirations for peace in Colombia become ever more distant. The guerilla groups have announced their intent to fight together against the presence of the U.S. Army in Colombia. In addition, there have been tensions with border countries and in the region because of this base agreement. The most significant tension is with Venezuela and the government of Hugo Chavez, who sees the presence of the U.S. military in Colombia as a threat and the preparation for military aggression against his country.

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 13-08 from the Presbytery of Chicago asks the General Assembly to call for the suspension of a pact authorizing the use of seven military bases in Colombia by military personnel from the United States of America.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 13-08 be approved with amendments to recommendations 1 and 2 (no changes to 3 and 4). “1. Rationale

The origin of this overture is a pastoral letter from the Presbyterian Church in Colombia. The General Assembly of the Synod of the Presbyterian Church in Colombia has sought to discern a path toward a peaceful future through prayer, Bible study, and corporate worship. Their process of discernment produced a letter addressed to all the Presbyterian congregations in Colombia and their sister churches throughout the world, urging a united response to the violence that continues to plague Colombia. This letter calls for the suspension of an agreement that permits U.S. troops to operate in Latin America from seven bases established in Colombia.

The United States and Colombia, however, have already renewed the agreement authorizing the use of these military bases for ten more years. The Washington Office of the PC(USA) comments, “This appears to be an agreement without borders, potentially allowing the U.S. military to conduct virtually any mission against virtually any perceived threat.” The Presbyterian Washington Office further notes that, despite the declared intention not to operate beyond Colombia’s borders, intentions often change over the life of an agreement. Other nations in the Latin America have expressed concerns about the purportedly limited scope of military activity in light of the history of U.S. military intervention in the region (Washington Office Legislative Action: November 25, 2009, Washington, D.C.).

The opportunity to suspend the joint use agreement may have passed, but the potential for damage to the environment, U.S. relationships in Latin America, and the PC(USA)’s relationship to the Presbyterian Church in Colombia remains as long as this pact stands. Therefore, ACSWP recommends that Presbyterian World Mission and the Compassion, Peace and Justice programs of the PC(USA) monitor the use and impact of these bases in cooperation with the Presbyterian Church of Colom-

On the War in Afghanistan—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Declare itself in opposition to further military operations by the United States in Afghanistan.
2. Call upon the United States government to:
   a. take non-combative actions, and only those, in vigorous pursuit of stability, prosperity, and peace in Afghanistan and in the region;
   b. cooperate with the United Nations and Afghanistan’s neighbors in the stabilization process; and
   c. cooperate with the United Nations in providing and overseeing greatly expanded aid to Afghanistan for the delivery of humanitarian services and economic development assistance.
3. Direct the Stated Clerk, through the Office of the General Assembly, in conjunction with ecumenical partners, to take the following actions, where appropriate working with the General Assembly Mission Council to assign responsibilities to the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, the Presbyterian Washington and UN Offices, or other entities of the General Assembly Mission Council:
   a. communicate to the United States president and Congress the position of this assembly as set forth in recommendation 2 above;
   b. further urge the president and Congress to commit the United States government to the use of peaceful means for security and the pursuit of national interests, concentrating upon diplomacy, international collaboration, and material aid for education, the reduction of poverty, and the broadening of political enfranchisement in Afghanistan and elsewhere;
   c. encourage congregations and individual Presbyterians to thank our soldiers and their families for their sacrifices, to pray for the people of Afghanistan and all fighting forces there, particularly those who have been wounded or who have lost loved ones; and to engage in advocacy and actions for peace;
   d. call upon the United States government to provide adequate healthcare and rehabilitation, including psychiatric care, trauma therapy, and substance abuse programs for members and veterans of its armed forces;
   e. ask the United States government to tabulate Afghanistan war casualties among all parties, civilian and military, and make a general inventory of destruction so that the human and material costs of the war may be assessed and the moral obligations of reconstruction and restitution be kept before the conscience of the nation;
   f. make available to congregations and presbyteries materials appropriate for studying the effects of the present war in Afghanistan and of non-combative actions the United States might take in pursuit of the region’s stability, prosperity, and peace; and
   g. direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Peacemaking Program and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to convene a seminary- and college-wide review of peace studies, including peacemaking opportunities appropriate to the need to demilitarize U.S. international relations, and to report the results of this study to the 221st General Assembly (2014).
Rationale

Afghanistan is frequently called “the graveyard of empires” (see Milton Bearden, Council on Foreign Relations, “Afghanistan, Graveyard of Empires,” November/December 2001). Today it has become an illustration of Jesus’ saying that “… ‘all who take the sword will perish by the sword’” (Mt. 26:52). There is widespread opinion, in military as well as civilian circles, that the war cannot be won on the battlefield. Whether any modern war can truly be won is debatable, but there is scant reason to think the United States can find military victory where so many empires of the past have failed.1

The war being conducted in Afghanistan is a NATO operation with major participation by United States forces, but it does not have the support of most Afghans. Such support as there has been is declining.2 This works to the long-range advantage of the Taliban and Al Qaeda, whose defeat is the apparent aim of the United States government. This war, like most, is counterproductive.

Although the war in Afghanistan is by no means the largest in recent times, its human costs are immense. At least 18,000 Afghans have been killed3 and tens of thousands more have been injured—mostly non-combatants—since the U.S.-led international intervention began in 2001. As of late 2009, Operation Enduring Freedom, as it is called, had cost the United States some 933 fatalities, plus more than 2,500 seriously wounded.4 There is also a rising and alarming rate of drug and alcohol usage by our fighting forces, doubtless a reaction to stress, and perhaps related to ambivalence about the mission they are being asked to pursue.5 Furthermore, there is widespread corruption among Afghan leaders, often related to the opium trade; and the August 2009 election was marred by voting fraud. The use of unmanned drones by the United States has accounted for many civilian casualties and has led to increased resentment among Afghans.

The war’s financial costs are also huge: more than $273 billion, according to the Center for Defense Information.6 To bring about peace, stability, and the reduction of terrorism, such a sum would produce far better results if spent on goods and services of benefit to the people of Afghanistan and its neighbors: education, health care, economic development, food security, poverty reduction, and the like. The Rand Corporation has determined “… that political work, local law enforcement, and peacekeeping are a more effective alternative to increases in military force.”7

The current situation in Afghanistan provides an opportunity to shift American resources and strategy in a far more productive direction than at present. It is too costly and breeds too much resentment. The long-range interests of the United States require less reliance on military strategies for spreading democracy, reducing terrorism, and providing for our own safety. The root of war, especially in our time, is injustice, usually expressed as severe economic inequity. Hunger and desperation do not nourish peace.

Jesus’ warning that one cannot serve two masters is highly relevant in international affairs. A nation cannot pursue peace while waging war, nor justice through militarism. The centuries-long attempt by many churches and Christians to justify war as a strategy of peace is coming apart in our time. Wars such as the one in Afghanistan increasingly result in the rape and killing of civilians, the destruction of their homes, and the devastation of lands, economies, and social structures.

The gospel of and about Jesus Christ is a gospel of peace and peacemaking. There is no more appropriate time for a church to proclaim the peace of Christ and to pursue its mandates than when a country and its government are pursuing the horrors and futility of a misbegotten war.

It is not the province of a church to devise a template of government strategies; we are not a political party. But it is our responsibility to call the nation and the world to the way of peace and to resist the logic of war. That is at the heart of the biblical vision and the gospel of Christ. “For God’s foolishness is wiser than human wisdom, and God’s weakness is stronger than human strength” (1 Cor. 1:25).

Endnotes

1. Powerful armies that met defeat in Afghanistan include those of Alexander the Great in the fourth century BCE, the British in the nineteenth century CE, and the Soviet Union in the twentieth century.

5. “… figures [show] that by the end 2005, of the 104,000 who had sought medical help after serving in the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, 32,010 were suffering from post traumatic stress disorder, depression, drug addiction, or alcoholism... Proportionally, that’s three times as many as those who returned from Vietnam... A Pentagon health study found that the rate of binge drinking in the Army shot up by 30 percent from 2002 to 2005, and, they concluded, that ‘may signal an increasing pattern of heavy alcohol use in the Army’... 3,057 veterans of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars were diagnosed with potential drug dependency from 2005 to 2007, according to the Veteran Health Authority. From 2002 through 2004 only 277 veterans were diagnosed with a drug dependency.” Matt Kennard, “Drug Abuse and Alcoholism Rises within Military,” Reporter for Conscience’ Sake from the Center on Conscience and War, Vol. 66, No. 2 (Summer 2009), p. 2.

6. While precise figures are not available for the cost of the Afghan War, according to the Congressional Research service, over $157 billion had been appropriated for Operation Enduring Freedom (OEF) by the end of 2008. OEF principally refers to Afghanistan, and includes some operations in the Horn of Africa, the Philippines, and “elsewhere.” See the Center for Defense Information, <http://www.cdi.org/friendlyversion/printversion.cfm?documentID=4072>.

Outlays increased considerably with the increase in troop strength in 2009, although the amount is not available at the date of writing this overture. In May, 2009, the Department of Defense announced that in 2010 the cost of running the war in Afghanistan would exceed the cost of the conflict in Iraq. It requested $130 billion for “overseas contingency operations,” mostly for Afghanistan. See Nathan Hodge, “Sign of the Times: Afghanistan War Costs Higher than Iraq,” Wired, May 7, 2009, http://www.wired.com/dangerroom/2009/05/sign-of-the-times-afghanistan-war-costs-higher-than-iraq/.

Taken together, these figures suggest that the cost of waging war in Afghanistan has been at least $287 billion and climbing.

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-09 Section 3g—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that recommendation 3g of Item 13-09 be answered by approval of the Advice and Counsel memorandum (and substitute text) at Item 13-11.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture.

Rationale

See ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-01.

[The assembly approved Item 13-10. See p. 65.]

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the report on the “Commitment to Peacemaking”:

1. Commends those sessions, presbyteries, synods, and other entities that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

2. Recognizes that the office of the Stated Clerk sends a certificate of commendation to the stated clerk of the presbytery in which the congregation is located for presentation at a stated meeting of presbytery for those sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

3. Requests stated clerks of presbyteries who receive the certificates for sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” to present them at a stated meeting of presbytery in such a way as to adequately commend the congregation for this achievement.

4. Urges presbyteries to find ways to share and celebrate the experiences of congregations where sessions have adopted and implemented the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

5. Urges presbyteries and synods also to consider adopting the “Commitment to Peacemaking” in forms appropriate to those governing bodies and commends those governing bodies that have done so.
6. Commends the sixty-three presbyteries and six synods that have 50 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

7. Commends the four presbyteries that have 75 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

8. Urges peacemaking committees of the presbyteries to contact the sessions in their presbytery that have not adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” to express the importance of this commitment and to urge their adoption of it.

9. Recognizing that the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program maintains a list of those sessions, presbyteries, synods, and other entities that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” in order to serve them in their peacemaking efforts, requests that a report be made to the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the number of sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

10. Requests the 219th General Assembly (2010) to commend publicly those presbyteries that have actively incorporated peacemaking into their ministry; including acknowledging and supporting those congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

11. As requested by the 218th General Assembly (2008), the 219th General Assembly (2010) honors those presbyteries that have reached 50 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” since the 218th General Assembly (2008).

This recommendation is in response to the following referral:

The “Commitment to Peacemaking” is a tool that Presbyterians use to plan, implement, and evaluate ministries that seek peace and pursue justice. In the words of the General Assembly Mission Work Plan, the “Commitment to Peacemaking” helps Presbyterians “join God in transforming societies to reflect God’s intention for a just, peaceful, and compassionate world.”

The “Commitment to Peacemaking” has been made by 4,521 congregations as of March 5, 2010.

This information will be updated and reported to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues.

On Strengthening the Peacemaking Program—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

[The Presbytery of Pittsburgh respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to strengthen the Peacemaking Program by the following actions:

1. Recognize and celebrate the 30th anniversary of Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and the Peacemaking Program.

2. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACWSP) to create a nine-person task force (as specified below) to

   a. Review Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and its action recommendations and report the results to the 220th General Assembly (2012), with the intent of updating the engagement of Presbyterians in peacemaking; and

   b. Prepare a resolution for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to forward to the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the dangers of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction (WMD) and responses to this proliferation in light of Christian ethics, the impact of ongoing wars, and previous General Assembly policies.

3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, with the advice of the Peacemaking Program and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to create an advisory committee of six expert persons to meet quarterly to counsel the Peacemaking Program on issues regarding weapons of mass destruction (WMD) and other emerging issues.

4. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Peacemaking Program and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to convene a seminary and college-wide review of peace studies and peacemaking opportunities appropriate to the major shifts in the approach of the United States international relations and to report the results of the study to the 220th General Assembly (2012). The goal of the review is to engage students in active peacemaking and to share the wisdom of faculty among our church-related educational institutions.

Lifting the example of Jesus as the model of our behavior and beliefs in love and peacemaking exemplified in Luke 6: 27–38 as our policy for Presbyterians now and in the future, the 219th General Assembly (2010) directs the General Assembly Mission Council, through the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Peacemaking Program, to appoint a five-person steering team, at least one of whom shall be a college student or other young adult, to work with ACSWP and Peacemaking Program representatives to design and implement a broadly participatory four-year process to do the following:

1. Seek clarity as to God’s call to the church to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to the challenges of violence, terror, and war;

2. Identify, explore, and nurture new approaches to active peacemaking and nonviolence, reporting to the 221st General Assembly (2014) with recommendations for policy and action. This process shall include the following elements:

(1988), “Just Peacemaking and the Call for Intervention for Humanitarian Rescue” (1998), and other policies related to just war, just peacemaking, and nonviolent principles and issues of peace and justice approved by past General Assemblies, culminating in updated policies on nonviolence and peacemaking.

[b. The steering team is encouraged to consult with ministries of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), particularly Compassion, Peace and Justice, World Mission, and Presbyterian Women; Office of the General Assembly; college chaplains and campus ministers; middle governing body staff; and the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship in the design and implementation of the proposed policies and process.

[c. The steering team is encouraged to consult with national and international ecumenical and interfaith partners and draw on the experience and learnings from the International Ecumenical Peacemaking Convocation of the World Council of Churches (2011), and other initiatives of the broader Christian and interfaith community.

[d. The process shall help Presbyterians on all levels of the church to recognize and focus upon updated policies and actions that

[1] consider the new realities, challenges, and opportunities for working for peace and seeking justice, including the dangers currently posed by weapons of mass destruction, globalization, pluralism, the implications of U.S. foreign policy (including two current wars), impact of climate change, and an increasing competition for natural resources by developing nations as they affect the worldwide mission of the church and promotion of peacemaking;

[2] explore new thinking on nonviolence, reconciliation (including the role of truth-telling, forgiveness, confession, and public apology), human rights, security strategies, genocide and terrorism prevention, economic conversion, development, and the violence of poverty;

[3] explore new models for engaging in active peacemaking and working for justice, including new technology for advocacy and organizing, communication and decision-making, accompaniment, conflict-resolution, artistic expressions, church-based community organizing, and nonviolent direct action;

[4] respond to and prevent violence on the local level (e.g., action and advocacy concerning gang vi-olece, gun violence, and family violence), the national level (e.g., action and advocacy on budget priorities, and decisions about investments in dependent industries), and the international level (e.g., action and advocacy on issues of war and peace) through prayer, direct action, and advocacy; and [5] address sexism, racism, and other patterns of oppression as tasks of peacemaking and justice seeking.

“[e. The steering team shall

[1] consider at least two gatherings of individuals who are engaged in action and reflection on peacemaking and justice seeking, including faculty and students from Presbyterian colleges, universities, and seminaries (“… to engage students in active peacemaking and to share the wisdom of faculty among our church-related educational institions”), activists, individuals engaged in nonviolent witness, grassroots persons working for justice and peace, and others engaged in peacemaking in congregations, middle governing bodies, Presbyterian Women, and other Presbyterian-related entities:

(2) invite Presbyterians, individually and corporately, across the church into a time of study and reflection on the root causes of violence and responses to it, and on peace, justice, and ministries of peacemaking and justice—seeking that honor the gospel, the history of the church, and the movement of the Holy Spirit as the church attempts to live out Christ’s command to love one another, even those we call our enemies; and

(3) create new resources or identify existing resources, working ecumenically when appropriate, that will help Presbyterians pray and study Scripture for guidance about how to respond faithfully to Jesus’ call to be peacemakers in this time.

f. The steering team, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and Presbyterian Peacemaking Program staff, would recruit additional writer(s) or team members as necessary to help create a report with recommendations to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

g. An interim report shall be made to the 220th General Assembly (2012). The interim report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) will include specific recommendations of strategy and policy to invite the broader church into the time of discernment, framing the conversation, naming the best partners, and laying out a process to help our congregations to wrestle with these important ethical questions.

h. The steering team will offer its recommendation for action to the 221st General Assembly (2014), asking for that assembly to receive the report for a two-year period of study before final action in 2016.

[Comment: The committee advises that the funding of Item 13-11 be shared equally between the GAMC and the per capita budgets. This action also answers Items 13-01 (Recommendation 3.g.), 13-02 (Recommendation 2.g.), 13-03 (Recommendation 3.g.), 13-06, 13-07, and 13-09 (Recommendation 3.g. [now 3.h.]).]

Rationale

Thirty years ago the 192nd General Assembly (1980) issued a call to the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America to give priority to peacemaking and to create a Peacemaking Program. The biblical and theological ethics of Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling have served the church well. The Peacemaking Program has educated the church with excellent programs, educational materials, international visitors, study tours, and conferences. At this time, however, the mission of this program deserves careful review, both in terms of current challenges to peace and commitment of the church’s resources for this witness. Some funds designated for the program in the past have been spent down, and other related education and action programs (such as Church & Society magazine) have been ended. The United Nations’ Office has also seen its funding reduced, at a time when the needs and opportunities for theologically informed international witness substantially increased.

The introduction to Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling said that

This request of the General Assembly was a product of its times

—born in part from the United States’ defeat in Southeast Asia and the loss of prestige and power in the changing world situation;

—born in part from the unwillingness of the emerging nations to accept the continued domination of the developed nations;

—born in part from the increasing insecurity over the perilous nuclear weapons stalemate in which any miscalculation could annihilate humanity;

—born in part from concern for the hungry and oppressed of the world. (Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling, p. 1)

However, the times have changed:

—The United States regained its prestige and new powers prior to 9/11, playing the role of “superpower” and “indispensable nation” in the eyes of many.

—The cold war was concluded.
—New wars have broken out and threaten to break out over disputes about weapons of mass destruction (WMD). Weapons of mass destruction (WMD) have become a major issue at the United Nations.

—The phenomenon of globalization has been recognized and to many it represents Americanization of the finances of the world. The credit crisis and global recession have weakened the capacity and credibility of the United States’ global leadership.

—Religions of the world are now widely recognized to be major influences in wars, peacemaking, and international decision making.

—The rise of Muslim influence and militancy was not considered as a factor in the 1980 policy.

These new factors interrelate to make very timely a review of Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and the peacemaking work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Arms control, expenditures, and threats of war over the non-proliferation questions require work beyond the 1988 policy, Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age. There is now fear that terrorists are seeking weapons of mass destruction (WMD) capacity. The U.S. and its supporters apply economic sanctions to countries suspected of developing weapons of mass destruction (WMD) and consider war against certain countries obtaining weapons of mass destruction (WMD) capacity. The issue of weapons of mass destruction (WMD) capacity was one of the motivating factors for the second war in Iraq.

Peacemaking work deserves the counsel and expertise of the church to address these issues. This need could be met by a committee of Presbyterian experts in the fields of disarmament, social ethics, weapons, war and peace studies, the United Nations, development, and human rights. These experts should be drawn from previous task forces, resolution teams, or outstanding peace leaders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) who have in-depth understanding of both church and international relations. Six persons consulting quarterly should be sufficient. This same pool of persons, including those with military experience, would provide nominees for the review task force and college and seminary consultations.

Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling recommended actions vis-à-vis higher education, and new priorities and funding for this work can be based on a study of opportunities of peacemaking in these institutions. The whole panoply of tasks around peacemaking work deserves review if a prudent selection of work to be energized and funded is to be considered. This is particularly true for coordinating peacemaking work in seminaries and colleges of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). There is much energy and expertise in the Presbyterian higher education world that the church should encourage and relate to its peacemaking work. Not only is peacemaking part of our evangelism on college campuses, new forms of joint work can be cost-effective with cyber networking technology.

Since 1946, General Assemblies have called for the negotiated abolition of nuclear weapons, based on the immorality of relying upon weapons of mass destruction (WMD) for security. Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age (1988) warned against the numbing acquiescence to nuclear weapons. The church is in danger of learning to live with weapons of mass destruction (WMD) until they are used.

Energy and commitment inspired by Jesus Christ’s peacemaking needs to be ignited in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to face new issues not discussed in 1980.

“[a. consider the new realities, challenges, and opportunities for working for peace and seeking justice including the dangers currently posed by weapons of mass destruction, globalization, pluralism, the implications of U.S. foreign policy (including two current wars), impact of climate change, and an increasing competition for natural resources by developing nations as they affect the worldwide mission of the church and promotion of peacemaking;

“[b. explore new thinking on nonviolence, reconciliation (including the role of truth-telling, forgiveness, confession, and public apology), human rights, security strategies, genocide and terrorism prevention, economic conversion, development, and the violence of poverty;

“[c. explore new models for engaging in active peacemaking and working for justice, including new technology for advocacy and organizing, accompaniment, conflict-resolution, artistic expressions, church-based community organizing, and nonviolent direct action;

“[d. respond to and prevent violence on the local level (e.g., action and advocacy concerning gang violence, gun violence, and family violence), the national level (e.g., action and advocacy on budget priorities, and decisions about investments in dependent industries), and the international level (e.g., action and advocacy on issues of war and peace) through prayer, direct action, and advocacy; and “[e. address sexism, racism, and other patterns of oppression as tasks of peacemaking and justice seeking.

“[5. The steering team shall:

“[a. convene at least two gatherings of individuals who are engaged in action and reflection on peacemaking and justice seeking, including faculty and students from Presbyterian colleges, universities, and seminaries (“… to engage students in active peacemaking and to share the wisdom of faculty among our church-related educational instituactivists, individuals engaged in nonviolent witness, grassroots persons working for justice and peace, and others engaged in peacemaking in congregations, middle governing bodies, Presbyterian Women, and other Presbyterian-related entities:

“[b. invite Presbyterians individually and corporately across the church into a time of study and reflection on the root causes of violence and responses to it, and on peace, justice, and ministries of peacemaking and justice-seeking that honor the gospel, the history of the church, and the movement of the Holy Spirit as the church attempts to live out Christ’s command to love one another, even those we call our enemies; and

“[c. create new resources or identify existing resources, working ecumenically when appropriate, that will help Presbyterians pray and study Scripture for guidance about how to respond faithfully to Jesus’ call to be peacemakers in this time.

“[6. The steering team, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and Presbyterian Peacemaking Program staff, would recruit additional writer(s) or team members as necessary to help create a report with recommendations to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

“[7. An interim report shall be made to the 220th General Assembly (2012).]”

Rationale

Summary of overtures

Item 13-11 is one of a number of overtures, or sections of overtures—Item 13-01 (section 3g), Item 13-02 (section 2g), Item 13-03 (section 3g), Item 13-06, Item 13-07, and Item 13-09 (section 3g)—that seek to strengthen the peace witness and peacemaking efforts of Presbyterians and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Together these overtures reflect the role of General Assembly commissioners in providing vision and guiding policy for the short- and long-term ministries of the church at all levels. All build on existing policy and call the church to explore new ways of thinking about peacemaking and new ways of engaging in ministries seeking peace and pursuing justice.

The items considered all reflect the current policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), of which we cite two statements. The 192th General Assembly of the UPCUSA (1980) accepted the report, Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling, as the church’s guiding policy on issues of war, violence, and injustice. It stated unequivocally:

1. The church is faithful to Christ when it is engaged in peacemaking…. (Minutes, 1980, Part I, p. 202)

3. The church bears witness to Christ when it nourishes the moral life of the nation for the sake of peace in our world. The church’s faithful obedience to its calling means active participation in the formation of the values and beliefs of our society…. By God’s grace we are members of a world community and can bring our global insights and peacemaking to our particular settings. By God’s grace we are free to work with all people who strive for peace and justice and to serve as signposts for God’s love in our broken world. To deny our calling is a disservice to the church and the world…. (Minutes, 1980, Part I, p. 203)

In 1988, the 200th General Assembly (1988) adopted a major policy statement entitled Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age. The statement followed an inquiry into the basic question of the morality of war, with the added dilemma of whether the nature of war—given nuclear weapons—had been qualitatively changed. The policy approved by the General Assembly determined that nuclear war could not be justified on traditional “just war” grounds, and analyzed non-violent conscientious objection by individuals and the Christian community.

Reviewing the specific overtures, Item 13-11 is a comprehensive overture that recommends authorizing a task force with expertise to review the foundational 1980 policy, Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling, with the intent of updating the engagement of Presbyterians in peacemaking, and to prepare a shorter resolution on recent concerns not addressed by the assembly: ongoing dangers of WMD (weapons of mass destruction), the effects of on-going Iraq and Afghan wars, and more. It calls for the creation of a new advisory committee to work with the Peacemaking Program on issues of WMD. It calls for convening Presbyterian seminary and college/university thinkers to bring new ideas before the church on the dangers facing us thirty years after Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and “to engage students in active peacemaking.” There would be a report to the 220th General Assembly (2012). While the ACSWP appreciates the scope of this overture, this response drops the potentially costly role of an advisory committee for the Peacemaking Program, intending the process here recommended to draw upon such experts in the field.

Items 13-01 (section 3g), 13-02 (section 2g), 13-03 (section 3g), and 13-09 (section 3g) call for convening a seminary-and college-wide review of peace studies with an emphasis on “peacemaking opportunities appropriate to the need to demilitarize U.S. international relations” (Item 13-09). There would be a report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Item 13-06 calls for the church “… to enter into a six-year ‘time of discernment’ seeking clarity on whether God is calling the church, at this historic moment, to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to war and terror.” It lays out a range of elements to guide the church through that discernment process. It calls for the creation of “a broadly representative committee (appointed by the current Moderator in consultation with the two prior Moderators) to study the issue of nonviolence and report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly in 2014, allowing the entire church to reflect on their report before taking final action in 2016.” It also identifies questions for the committee to address with recommendations. While sharing the overture’s conviction that Jesus calls us to be faithful peacemakers and endorsing a number of its elements, this response focuses more intentionally on younger persons and shortens the timeline. Using a smaller committee, and existing staff and committee members should be less costly than the use of a special committee.

Item 13-07 calls for the exploration of the possibility of instituting study and education programs dealing with peacemaking and contemporary challenges to peace and justice. This exploration would involve the PC(USA)-related seminaries and colleges, ecumenical partners, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, World Mission, and any other appropriate units of the GAMC. There would be a “preliminary report” to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Each overture represents a deep commitment to engage in careful theology and prayerful action for peace and justice. Each overture builds on existing policy and seeks to strengthen the peacemaking and justice-seeking witness of Presbyterians and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In their different ways, these overtures testify to the importance of the social witness policy, Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling, in the life of the church, honor the effective work of the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, and recognize the need for new thinking, action, and spiritual discipline if the church is to embody nonviolent peacemaking and justice seeking in the years ahead.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) concurs with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s (ACSWP) Advice and Counsel on Item 13-11.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 13-11

Comment on 13-11—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The recommendations in this overture have significant financial implications. The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) hopes that the intent of the overture can be fulfilled in a more cost effective manner than currently suggested.

The GAMC welcomes the opportunity to recognize and celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the adoption of Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling (commended to congregations and governing bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), by the 175th General Assembly (1980) of the UPCUSA). It also encourages the assembly to lift up and celebrate the work of the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program. This program has nurtured and equipped the PC(USA)’s commitment to peacemaking as followers of Jesus in individual lives, families, congregations, communities, the nation, the global community, and with God’s creation, for thirty years.

The GAMC notes that, for example, since its creation in 1980, the Peacemaking Program has helped Presbyterians across the church address the danger of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction (WMD). There is significant General Assembly policy that provides adequate guidance and background support enabling the Peacemaking Program to address concerns about WMD. In this moment when world leaders are promoting the PC(USA)’s longstanding vision for a world free of nuclear weapons, the Peacemaking Program is providing information and resources to help Presbyterians to engage in advocacy on things such as the new START treaty between the U.S. and Russia, and the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty.

The GAMC is also aware that the Peacemaking Program routinely seeks out expert advice from leaders across the church, the ecumenical community, and faith-based organizations on a wide range of peacemaking issues. The program currently works with a number of Presbyterian and ecumenical partners on issues related to WMD. An advisory committee of experts focused on WMD and related issues would limit the Peacemaking Program’s ability to be flexible in its response to the broader peacemaking concerns of the church and the world.

The GAMC appreciates the intent of a seminary and college-wide review of peace studies and peacemaking opportunities; especially one that would focus on young adults and strengthening their commitment to peacemaking and service as disciples in the global community.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On the Restoration of Sustainable Agriculture in Haiti.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. [Call upon the leadership of the church and particularly on] [Direct] the Stated Clerk and [on] the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to write

[a.] to the administrator of [the] United States Agency for International Development (USAID) to convey the [concerns] [reservations] of Presbyterians regarding the [vision and initiatives of] [strategy adopted by] USAID [in relation with plans for the restoration of sustainability] [to restore sustainable] agriculture in Haiti, and to request that USAID (i) involve hired Haitian horticultural students, Haitian farmers, and small farmer associations in the planning of local agricultural projects; and (ii) prioritize support to grassroots farmers’ associations, including women’s associations, designed to establish a sustainable small farm agriculture in preference to the introduction of commercial and/or industrial farming practices;

[2.] [b.] [Call upon the leadership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to contact] [to] former President Bill Clinton [and Prime Minister Jean-Max Bellerive] to request that the Interim Commission for the Reconstruction of Haiti (ICRH) adopt more transparent [and accountable] processes [and greater accountability] [in relation] to the people of Haiti; and that the Haitian people deserve no less than to be consulted systematically before developing], [including systematic consultation with the Haitian people regarding development plans that will affect their lives and the future of [the] [their] country.

[3.] Call upon the leadership of PC(USA) to request from USAID that support be given to efforts by grassroots farmers associations towards strengthening sustainable agriculture in the context of subsistence farming instead of focusing principally on introducing commercial and/or industrial farming practices to Haiti.

[4.] [2.] [Alert] [Inform] the PC(USA) membership and the leadership of the church to the [potentially] problematic nature of agro-business initiatives [aimed at using] [being planned for] Haitian land, including so-called marginal land, [in] [based on] bio-fuel production schemes, especially [those] relying on foreign hybrid and/or GMO seeds[,] [and] [or] the [unproven] industrial plantation of Jatropha [or any other agro-business export schemes].

[5.] [3.] [Urge] [Request] the Executive Director of the GAMC to [commit Presbyterian responses to post-earthquake reconstruction in Haiti not only to emergency assistance but also to] [solicit supplemental funds to complement emergency assistance by supporting] medium and long-term development [assistance] [efforts] to strengthen Haitian nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) and grassroots farmers’ groups [and enable them to] [so that they can implement and manage rehabilitation programs of their own conception and design, including small scale, sustainable [agriculture] [agricultural] activities, and to provide them with short- and long-term technical assistance [in the form of mission personnel] to help them upon request.

[6.] [4.] [Commit] [Direct] the PC(USA) to work collaboratively with other [churches] [denominations] and ecumenical institutions [in ensuring] [to ensure] that

a. Haiti is [increasingly] able to feed itself [first];

[b.] the value of reinstating tariffs as transitional protection for recovering local agriculture is given due consideration;

[b.] [c.] exports are secondary to creating viable food economies for Haitians;[and]

[d. emergency food aid to Haiti is monitored and managed in such a way that it provides incentives (and not disincentives) for local food production;]

[e.] [c.] [platforms are secured] [mechanisms are created] for Haitian farmers to [get] [make] their voices heard as they advocate [before] [for themselves to] the Haitian government, the ICRH, USAID, and other international organizations [that are directly involved in the Haitian reconstruction].

Rationale

Haiti’s production of food commodities was severely jeopardized in recent years by the unfair competition of cheap imports of U.S. subsidized rice, corn, and beans, encouraged by the lifting of import tariffs on commodity imports mandated by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Trade Organization (WTO) with the support of the U.S. government, a fact acknowledged by former President Bill Clinton.

Haiti’s agricultural economy has been near collapse in recent times and is in dire need of a boost to restore its capacity to feed its population.

The Bible states: “And they will say, ‘This land that was desolate has become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined towns are now inhabited and fortified’” (Ezek. 36:35). And “I will restore the fortunes of my people Israel, and they shall rebuild the ruined cities and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and drink their wine, and they shall make gardens and eat their fruit” (Am. 9:14).

The Hope for a Global Future policy document, approved by the 208th General Assembly (1996), states the following:

• “The challenge for agriculture policymakers in all food-producing regions of the world is to maintain the viability of farming for small-scale landholders, to restore land to the many people who have been displaced, and to identify and promote systems that stabilize quality yields above the subsistence level while ensuring the integrity and productivity of agro-ecosystems”

• “Calls upon the Worldwide Ministries Division (including all personnel involved in mission in developing countries, those involved in the Presbyterian Hunger Program, and persons working with the Self-Development of People) to encourage partners to give high priority to agricultural sustainability and sufficiency, increased food self-reliance within each region or country, fairer distribution of land, and the viability of small farms and community-based programs for sustainable agriculture.”

• “Urges the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and the United States government in all its policies that relate to development around the world to give high priority to research, promotion, and assistance to increase agricultural yields, to the sustainability of agriculture, and to increased food sufficiency within each region or country, fairer distribution of land, and the viability of small farms and community-based programs for sustainable agriculture.”

The earthquake of January 12, 2010, brought the Haitian government to its knees and led to the virtual surrendering of Haiti’s sovereignty to international institutions and particularly to the Interim Commission for the Reconstruction of Haiti (ICRH) headed by former President Bill Clinton and the Haitian Prime Minister, a commission that is not accountable to the Haitian parliament or to the Haitian people in general.

There are serious concerns in various sectors of Haitian society that there is no significant consultation by U.S. and Haitian decision-makers with direct stakeholders regarding reconstruction plans for all sectors of the country and in particular with the agricultural sector, in contradiction with the first guiding principle of the new U.S. government “Feed the Future Initiative” to “Invest in country-owned plans that support results-based programs and partnerships, so that assistance is tailored to the needs of individual countries through consultative processes …”

It is rumored that the Haitian government and the ICRH are considering applying the law of eminent domain to most areas of Port au Prince affected by the earthquake to expropriate people of their land and/or damaged buildings in order to proceed freely with reconstruction plans developed without their knowledge or participation.

According to the website of the WINNER project under the Peasant, Private, Public, Partnership (PPPP) principle, the purpose and intent of the WINNER Project in Haiti is to restore the country’s agriculture and to move it from subsistence farming to commercial agriculture and then to industrial agriculture. This is in direct opposition to the aspirations of organized small farmers in Haiti, as reflected in the statement by a Haitian peasant leader who said: “For Haitian peasants the choice is for family oriented ecological agriculture for the production of food to support their community, instead of for commercial or industrial agriculture to create wealth for agro-businesses and multi-nationals, an agriculture that is a threat to the environment and to the very existence of the peasant social class in Haiti. For us peasants, this is a choice between life and death” (C. Jean Baptiste, June 14, 2010).

Advice and Counsel on Item13-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 13-12 with the following amendments:[Text to be deleted is shown in brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]
“The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

“1. [Call upon the leadership of the church and particularly on] [Direct] the Stated Clerk and [on] the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to write

[or any other agro-business export schemes].

“[5-] [3.][Urge] [Request] the Executive Director of the GAMC to [commit Presbyterian responses to post-earthquake reconstruction in Haiti not only to emergency assistance but also to] [solicit supplemental funds to complement emergency assistance by supporting] medium and long-term development [assistance] [efforts] to strengthen Haitian nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) and grassroots farmers’ groups [and enable them] [so that they can] implement and manage rehabilitation programs [of their own conception and] [that they have helped to] design, including small scale sustainable agricultural activities, and to provide them with short- and long-term technical assistance [in the form of mission personnel] to help them upon request.

“[6-] [4.][Commit] [Direct] the PC(USA) to work collaboratively with other [churches] [denominations] and ecumenical institutions [in ensuring] [to ensure] that:

“a. Haiti is [increasingly] able to feed itself [first];

“b. [the value of reinstating tariffs as transitional protection for recovering local agriculture is given due consideration];

“[b.][c.] [exports are secondary to creating viable food economies for Haitians; and]

“[e.][c.][platforms are secured] [mechanisms are created] for Haitian farmers to [get][make] their voices heard as they advocate [before][for themselves to] the Haitian government, the ICHR, USAID, and other international organizations [that are directly involved in the Haitian reconstruction]."

Rationale

This proposed resolution is highly consistent with policies approved by previous General Assemblies. In essence, it speaks to the need for transparency, accountability, and participation in decision-making processes that affect the lives of disempowered persons such as the rural poor in Haiti. The cited Hope for a Global Future (1996) adopts these terms as indicative of human rights principles that should guide international development efforts. Moreover, this document also emphasizes that “Women’s rights require special consideration because the evaluation of development often ignores the international feminization of poverty, and because effective development strategies must be directed to the particular roles and needs of women.”

These themes were revisited and reaffirmed in the policy paper of 2006, approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006), entitled Just Globalization: Justice, Ownership, and Accountability. Subsequently, the 218th General Assembly (2008) addressed the aftermath of a natural disaster on our own shores—a situation not unlike that currently prevailing in Haiti following its earthquake—when it approved the recommendations and study entitled, Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future. Many of its observations are relevant for Haiti’s reconstruction efforts. For example, Recommendation 2 underscores “the Reformed Tradition’s understanding of the role of government as the arm of a whole people acting to maintain the common good.”

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 13-12

Comment on Item 13-12—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) affirms the item’s intent of uplifting and supporting the people of Haiti after the devastating earthquake. More than $10.5 million has been given through Presbyterian Disaster Assistance to enable a significant response for relief and recovery efforts related to the earthquake in Haiti. These funds supplement the initial One Great Hour of Sharing disbursement to provide for immediate assistance and long-term recovery.

Much of what is requested in recommendation 5 of this item would require alternative funds as these activities extend beyond the original donor restriction of gifts to Presbyterian Disaster Assistance.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Appealing for Peace and Reconciliation in Korea.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

1. Expresses its solidarity with the people of Korea in their search for peace, reconciliation, and reunification on the Korean peninsula.

2. Renew its commitment to pray and work for peace, justice, and reconciliation in Korea for the well-being of all Koreans.

3. Urge the governments of South and North Korea to reopen communications with each other and to engage in genuine dialogue that reduces tensions on the peninsula, and leads to concrete steps toward peace and reconciliation.

4. Calls for an end to inflammatory rhetoric by all parties and any suggestion that the conflicts can be resolved by a resort to military action.

5. Supports strongly the replacement of the present armistice agreement with a just and lasting peace treaty between North and South Korea, brokered by the United Nations, and endorsed by the United States and other powers with interests in the region.

6. Prays for the day when the people of Korea will live as one family in a reunified, free, and peaceful nation.

[7. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to convey our convictions to the president of the United States, the Congress, the United Nations, the governments of North and South Korea, the Presbyterian Churches of Korea, and our ecumenical partners.]

Rationale

Jesus Christ came into the world as the Prince of Peace, and Jesus calls us to be peacemakers.

The people in North and South Korean have suffered more than sixty years of division, tension, separation, and alienation since the devastating war of 1950–53.

We are deeply concerned about the precarious situation in the Korean Peninsula following the recent hostilities and the decision of South and North Korea to cut off all communications links.

Korea remains in a state of war, and the current crisis of confrontation between North and South Korea carries the great potential to ignite a major conflagration on the Korean peninsula and beyond.

In order to bring a lasting resolution to the fundamental issues on the Korean peninsula, the present armistice agreement on Korea (the truce signed in 1953) should be replaced with a peace agreement that brings an end to the Korean War and provides a foundation for lasting peace on the Korean peninsula.
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) partner churches in South and North Korea and ecumenical bodies support strongly the peace and reconciliation of the Korean peninsula.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 13-13 be approved.

Rationale

Item 13-13 is written in response to the prayers of Korean and Korean American members of the PC(USA). The ACREC stands with these brothers and sisters, and prays with them for the increase of peace, and an eventual peace agreement that brings an end to the Korean War.

[The assembly approved Item 13-14 with amendment. See pp. 65, 71.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Restoration of Democracy in Madagascar and Honduras.

The 219th General Assembly (2010), concerned that U.S. foreign policy better reflect Christian and democratic standards and honor human rights, and particularly concerned about threats to church leaders and other pro-democracy groups in Madagascar and Honduras following coups in both countries, calls for the following actions of both General Assembly agencies and other councils, congregations, and members:

1. Directs the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Mission Council, and the Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to communicate to the president of the United States and appropriate congressional leaders the need to support democracies by

   a. not recognizing military or other “coup d’etats”;

   b. supporting regional treaties designed to restrain powerful interests from attempting such illegitimate government take-overs, such as those occurring in Madagascar and Honduras in 2009;

   c. suspending recognition, aid, and military assistance to resulting coup governments so as not to reward perpetrators;

   d. supporting consistent application of international law and coordinated peacemaking action by the United Nations and member countries;

   e. encouraging processes of reconciliation with justice involving violence-prevention, truth-seeking, mutual understanding, accountability, and forgiveness wherever possible;

   f. strengthening U.S. diplomacy and development assistance rather than military capacities for addressing potential conflicts and tensions in countries with weak governance systems and vulnerability to climate and other disruptions.

2. Directs the Washington Office and the Presbyterian United Nations Office to

   a. advocate for consistent monitoring of human rights/civil liberties standards and of laws designed to limit financial or other interference in the affairs of other nations by private interests, and to support independent judiciaries and other parties seeking transparency, anti-corruption measures, and protection or restoration of freedom of speech and association, including labor organization;

   b. identify opportunities for Presbyterians to advocate on behalf of democracy and on behalf of our sisters and brothers in Honduras and Madagascar.

3. With regard to Madagascar, the 219th General Assembly (2010) directs the Stated Clerk and appropriate programs of the General Assembly Mission Council to call upon the president of the United States and leaders of the Foreign Affairs and Foreign Relations Committees to

   a. appeal to both the de facto government and to the United Nations to ensure the security of pastors and members of the Church of Jesus Christ in Madagascar (FJKM) and to protect religious liberty and freedom of association, including free speech;
b. support multilateral dispute resolution procedures initiated by regional bodies (such as SADC and the AU) and by the United Nations, and to engage with France and China to secure the restoration of civil freedoms and environmental protection;

c. press for the release of political prisoners; the end of intimidation, harassment, and violence against opponents of the new regime; and the free use of airwaves by church-related and other radio stations. [(The FJKM radio station, Radio Fahazavana, was closed and key staff arrested.)]

4. With regard to Honduras, the 219th General Assembly (2010) directs the Stated Clerk and appropriate programs of the General Assembly Mission Council to call upon the president of the United States and leaders of the Foreign Affairs and Foreign Relations Committees to

a. work to suspend the current policy of supporting the coup government despite opposition from most other countries in the region;

b. urge the Organization of American States, the United Nations, and nongovernmental organizations to push for the restoration of protection for opposition political leaders, labor leaders, journalists, and church leaders supporting democracy and protesting the expansion of privileges for economic elites;

c. urge a review of the U.S. policy direction in Honduras and Latin America from a human rights and economic justice standpoint.

5. In the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and ecumenically, the 219th General Assembly (2010) encourages congregations and individual Presbyterians to

a. pray for and with the people of Madagascar and Honduras;

b. learn about the history and current realities faced by the people of Madagascar and Honduras;

c. reflect carefully on mission opportunities in Honduras, Madagascar, and elsewhere in light of the policies of coup governments;

d. continue to stand for a priority on universal human rights, rule of law and protection of conscience in relations with other nations and peoples, and to study the biblical and confessional bases for these stances; and

e. advocate personally with representatives on the need for U.S. foreign policy to support democracy and encourage lawful transitions and fair constitutions.

6. Directs the Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010), the Stated Clerk, the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council, and the appropriate staff members in World Mission to communicate with our church partners in Honduras and Madagascar and with our mission coworkers serving in those countries,

a. giving thanks for them as our sisters and brothers in Christ and for their ministries;

b. expressing our concern for them and for their country in the situation they face;

c. informing them of our ongoing prayers on behalf of them and their country;

d. sharing this action with them; and

e. reaffirming our commitment to their ministries.

Rationale

Subversion of democracy usually occurs top-down, when elections are stolen, militaries depose elected leaders, or neighboring countries invade. Corruption accompanies repression, inequality grows, and, in most cases, cultures stagnate. Exploitation of labor and destruction of environments increase. In such climates of desperation, justice is denied, morality is debased, and faith is weakened, affecting the church’s witness in profound ways. Fear and hostility to minorities or perceived enemies can be spread and violence can follow. Democracy and elections are not magic antidotes to these tragic patterns, but they are avenues for hope and the possibility of positive change. The United States has symbolized the value of democracy in the past; the measures recommended here would shift the U.S. role more toward support of democratic values, particularly in the two countries of specific concern. This is not to imply that many other countries are not currently dictatorships or experiencing some measure of one-party rule, but part of coup-prevention and democracy-restoration is responsible international action before takeovers can be “normalized.”

In 2008, the General Assembly approved a resolution focused on the U.S. political process, “Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 977ff). Among the biblical, theological, and ethical foundations affirmed are the convictions that “power is held in trust for the common good”(Ibid, p. 984) and that power can also magnify sin. Hence, “we affirm that fundamental basis for checks and balances of power, and the awareness of our ultimate accountability to God and not to other human beings and groups (Peter: ‘we must obey God rather than men’). Along-
Aside the awareness of human fallibility is the strength that God gives us: “God alone is lord of the conscience and has set it free from the doctrines or rules of men (human doctrines or rules), or anything contrary to scripture” (Ibid).

Madagascar’s crisis flared in late January 2009 when Andry Rajoelina, the mayor of the capital city, Antananarivo, called for the removal of the country’s democratically-elected president, Marc Ravalomanana. Rajoelina attempted to form a parallel government, known as the High Authority of the Transition (HAT), but made little headway until mutinous army officers precipitated a coup d’état on 17 March 2009, handing power to Rajoelina. Ravalomanana fled the country, and Rajoelina consolidated his power by closing parliament and “packing” the High Constitutional Court. African organizations, such as the African Union (AU) and the Southern African Development Community (SADC), quickly condemned the coup and called on Madagascar’s political leaders to restore democracy. The SADC brokered multilateral talks involving supporters of Rajoelina and Ravalomanana, as well as two previous presidents, Didier Ratsirika and Albert Zafy. In late 2009, these negotiations twice reached agreement on steps to resolve the political impasse, only to have the HAT government take unilateral actions that violated and wrecked the accords. This prompted the AU and European Union to impose targeted economic and travel sanctions on key HAT officials earlier this year. The government has suppressed press freedom, arresting a number of journalists and closing down Radio Fahazavana, the station operated by the PC(USA)’s partner, the four million strong Church of Jesus Christ in Madagascar (FJKM). On May 20, 2010, soldiers attacked an ecumenical group of pastors who were trying to hold a worship service to pray for peace in the nation; one FJKM pastor was killed and another was badly beaten and detained. The United States initially condemned the coup (during which the U.S. ambassador was also assaulted) and has terminated economic assistance to Madagascar’s government, but it has failed to condemn publicly the human rights abuses perpetrated by the HAT government.

In Honduras, on June 28, 2009, a coup removed President Manuel Zelaya early in the morning on the day he planned to hold a nonbinding referendum to see if the population was in favor of having a constitutional assembly that would propose changes to the constitution. Military officers, including those trained at the School of the Americas (WHINSEC), deported Zelaya to Costa Rica. After initially condemning the coup, the Obama Administration accepted a quick election to confirm the coup leadership. That election was widely boycotted; the Carter Center and the United Nations declined to send observers. Only one other nation in the Organization of American States has recognized the new government. A pro-democracy coalition of labor, peasant, and other groups has been severely repressed; seven journalists have also been killed so far in 2010, and four judges were fired in May for denying the legitimacy of the coup. Labor rights gained over time in the Maquiladoras (assembly factories in the free trade zone) have been lost. All of these developments bring back sad memories of casual U.S. attitudes towards “banana republics” and support for the very forces of inequality that drive continued immigration northward.

Repairing the social fabric in Madagascar and Honduras and rebuilding trust in democratic institutions will take years, underlining how shortsighted it is to recognize coup governments. A wise Christian faith understands how God’s justice transcends human justice but also does not give up on the democratic project, knowing that God has planted the hope of freedom in every person.

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-14—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) concurs with this resolution and advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 13-14. The resolution is consistent with PC(USA) policy and concern for human rights.

[The assembly answered Item 14-01 with the action taken on Item 14-03. See pp. 50, 52.]

On Divestment from Caterpillar, Inc.—From the Presbytery of Newark.

The Presbytery of Newark, overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (USA) to do the following:

1. Commend the Church of England and Hampshire College for their conscientious and courageous stands in choosing to divest their assets from Caterpillar, Inc.

2. Instruct the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to begin the process of disinvestment from Caterpillar, Inc. and to not reinvest in this corporation unless the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is fully satisfied that Caterpillar, Inc. no longer engages in the selling of equipment to Israel that is used to build illegal Israeli settlements, construct walls that illegally encroach upon Palestinian lands cutting Palestinians off from their own property and natural resources, destroy Palestinian life and property, and otherwise continue to support the occupation of Palestinian territories.

3. Communicate to all other PC(USA) judicatories and entities this action, and by its witness invite and strongly encourage any of these groups and organizations that may hold assets in Caterpillar, Inc. to divest as well.

4. Inform our ecumenical partners of this action, national, global, and especially within Israel and Palestine, encouraging them to hear our witness and follow our lead.

Rationale

In July 2004, the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), meeting in Richmond, Virginia, took the ecumenical world by storm in its decision to begin the process of engaging in selective divestment from U.S. corporations that provide support, technology, and military equipment to the Israeli government for the purposes of sustaining the occupation and destruction of life and property in the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT).

At the 217th General Assembly (2006) in Birmingham, Alabama, with new overtures for divestment coming before the assembly, the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) of the PC(USA) reported that corporate engagement with Caterpillar and four other corporations was ongoing and yielding positive results. This General Assembly chose against divestment in order to allow corporate engagement to continue as reported. For any who attended this General Assembly, it was very clear that the assembly felt that a divestment decision was premature.

Once again, divestment overtures came before the 218th General Assembly (2008) in San Jose. By this time, one corporation had been dropped from the potential divestment list and MRTI reported to Committee 11 that corporate engagement was continuing with the other four corporations. With three of those corporations there was good progress. It was reported that progress with Caterpillar, Inc. was not quite as good as with the other three but that talks were continuing and meetings were taking place. As a result of that report, even though many substantive overtures were passed in support of Palestinians in their struggle, the General Assembly once again opted for corporate engagement rather than divestment.

At the time of this reporting before the 218th General Assembly (2008), Caterpillar corporate behavior had shown no signs of change. D-9 CAT bulldozers were still destroying Palestinian homes and ripping up Palestinian agricultural lands. They also continued to be a primary tool in the nonstop construction of illegal Israeli settlements in the West Bank.

Jeff Halper, executive director of the Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions (ICAHD), testified before Committee 11 about the devastation wreaked by CAT bulldozers in the OPT and that such activity continued unabated.

Following the 218th General Assembly (2008), no change in CAT corporate behavior was forthcoming. It was reported at the MRTI meeting on November 6, 2009, that a meeting with Caterpillar executives was unproductive. During the 2009 war in Gaza, more than 4,000 homes were completely destroyed by CAT D-9 bulldozers. In addition to this, Caterpillar employees were enlisted to tow disabled bulldozers from battlegrounds, repair them, and get them back into service as soon as possible.

At Caterpillar, Inc.’s 2009 annual meeting, investors rejected an effort by human right activists and dissident shareholders to stop the firm from selling bulldozers to Israel. Corporation CEO, Jim Owen, told the body: “If you don’t like how CAT does business, you don’t have to hold your shares.”

At its meeting on November 5, 6, and 7, 2009, in Cincinnati, it was reported to MRTI that corporate engagement, in the manner by which it had been employed since 2004, was no longer working in regard to CAT. After discussion and debate about what the next step should be, on November 7th, MRTI decided to recommend to the General Assembly Mission Coun-
By its own admission, MRTI now recognizes that the corporate engagement encouraged and endorsed by three successive General Assemblies is not working. With its recommendation to GAMC, MRTI believes that it is continuing its corporate engagement with Caterpillar, Inc. in a new way. CAT’s unchanged behavior and failure to seriously engage in conversation with our denomination, its decision at the 2009 shareholder annual meeting, and the public statement of the company’s CEO are all clear indications that the corporation has no intentions of changing its business practices whatsoever.

Three successive General Assemblies have made it clear that in regard to our investments with Caterpillar, Inc. there are only two options before us: (1) Engagement as shareholders in the company to effect substantive change towards just business practices in regard to the OPT, or (2) Divestment from all assets held by the PC(USA) in CAT. It is believed by the writers and endorsers of this overture that a public statement of denouncement, with a smattering of praise, will not change CAT corporate behavior. In the meantime, more settlements will be built in the West Bank, more Palestinian land and natural resources will be stolen, the presence of indigenous Palestinian Christianity will continue its rapid decline in the land of Christ’s birth, and more Palestinians will die. Now that corporate engagement is no longer a realistic option, the only option left is disinvestment. It is no longer a question about how long we can wait, but rather, whether we will do the right thing, or even anything at all.

The writers and endorsers of this overture deeply understand that decisions like these are extremely difficult. We know that by taking such action we hurt the feelings and spirits of some who we call our fellow Presbyterian brothers and sisters, as well as the people of God outside of our fold. We recommend such action with profound humility, confession of our brokenness as a human race, and with an ongoing desire for reconciliation even in the face of serious disagreement. In light of the reality that we are called to address injustice and oppression in this world in the name of Jesus Christ, the internal work of healing that we must do within our denominational fellowship and outside of it is both our burden and obligation as we carry forth this work. By the power of the Holy Spirit, we can heal hearts and spirits within our own house, and outside of it, as a result of the decisions we make. What we cannot do is take back the death and destruction that is happening daily in the Occupied Palestinian Territories as a result of sinful corporate policy.

We have no illusions that this recommended action will actually sway Caterpillar, Inc. to engage in better and more just business practices, although we always pray for this eventuality. What it will do, however, is keep us consistent with the following affirmation: We are the Church of Jesus Christ. When the powers of the world decide that they will conduct business as usual, and that business is contrary to the teachings of Christ and the will of God for humanity, then it is time for the church to end its complicity in this sinful behavior. If we do not, then we remain unrepentant.

Answered by comments on Items 14-02 and 14-03.

We agree that corporate engagement has not worked. As faithful Christians, we can no longer support the actions of Caterpillar, Inc., which has chosen to continue to sell equipment to the Israeli government that is being used to unjustly cause death and destruction in Palestinian communities. We support the comment by the Newark Presbytery: “We are the Church of Jesus Christ. When the powers of the world decide that they will conduct business as usual, and that business is contrary to the teachings of Christ and the will of God for humanity, then it is time for the church to end its complicity in this sinful behavior.”

On Divestment from Caterpillar, Inc.—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Affirm that the occupation of Palestine needs to end, both for the sake of justice between Jews, Christians, and Muslims and to prevent the extinction of Christianity in Jerusalem and the West Bank.

2. Affirm that church investments should not support or profit from injustice and that actions of corporate divestment, when other shareholder engagement has not succeeded, are based both in the church’s own integrity and in the likelihood of greater continuing witness and effective influence from the outside, as was the case in the worldwide ecumenical campaign against South African apartheid.

3. Commend the Church of England and Hampshire College (among others) for their conscientious and courageous stands in choosing to divest their assets from Caterpillar, Inc., a company internationally known to be instrumental in the construction of the separation wall on occupied land and the destruction of Palestinian homes.

4. Instruct the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to begin the process of disinvestment from Caterpillar, Inc., and not to reinvest in this corporation unless the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is fully satisfied that Caterpillar, Inc. no longer engages in the selling of equipment to Israel that is used to build illegal Israeli settlements, construct walls that illegally encroach upon Palestinian lands that cut Palestinians off from their own property and natural resources, destroy Palestinian life and property, and otherwise continue to support the occupation of Palestinian territories.

5. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to all other PC(USA) judicatories and entities, and invite and strongly encourage those groups and organizations that hold assets in Caterpillar, Inc. to divest as well.

6. Direct the State Clerk to inform our ecumenical partners of this action, both nationally and globally—particularly within Israel and Palestine—encouraging them to hear this witness and consider following suit in applying social responsibility and human rights criteria to other companies in their portfolios that support the occupation of Palestine.

Rationale

In July 2004, the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), meeting in Richmond, Virginia, took the ecumenical world by storm in its decision to begin the process of engaging in selective divestment from U.S. corporations that provide support, technology, and military equipment to the Government of Israel to sustain the occupation of the Palestinian Territories. During the six years following that action, prospects for a viable two-state solution in Israel and Palestine have declined, and the number of Christians in occupied Palestine has decreased steadily.

At the 217th General Assembly (2006) in Birmingham, Alabama, with new overtures for divestment coming before the Assembly, the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) of the PC(USA) reported that corporate engagement with Caterpillar and four other corporations was ongoing and yielding positive results. This General Assembly chose against divestment in order to allow corporate engagement to continue as reported.

Once again, divestment overtures came before the 218th General Assembly (2008) in San Jose. By this time, one corporation had been dropped from the potential divestment list and MRTI reported to Committee 11 that corporate engagement was continuing with the other four corporations. With three of those corporations there was good progress. It was reported that progress with Caterpillar, Inc. (CAT) was not quite as good as with the other three but that talks were continuing and meetings were taking place. As a result of that report, even though many substantive overtures were passed in support of Palestinians in their struggle, the General Assembly once again opted for corporate engagement rather than divestment.

At the time of the report to the 218th General Assembly (2008), Caterpillar corporate behavior had shown no signs of change. CAT bulldozers were still being used to destroy Palestinian homes and ripping up Palestinian agricultural lands. They also continued to be a primary tool in the nonstop construction of illegal Israeli settlements in the West Bank. Jeff Halper, Executive Director of the Israeli Committee against House Demolitions (ICAHD), testified before Committee 11 about the devastation wreaked by CAT bulldozers in the Palestinian Territories and that such activity continued unabated. The lawsuit Corrie v Caterpillar (2003–09) was dismissed after finding that CAT was a military provider and therefore the court did not have jurisdiction because adjudication would intrude upon the executive branch’s foreign policy decisions. Though CAT was labeled a military provider, their investment status among PC(USA) institutions hasn’t changed.
Following the 218th General Assembly (2008), no change in CAT corporate behavior was forthcoming. It was reported at the MRTI meeting on November 6, 2009, that a meeting with Caterpillar executives was unproductive. During the 2009 war in Gaza, over 4000 homes were completely destroyed by CAT bulldozers. In addition to this, Caterpillar employees were enlisted to tow disabled bulldozers from battlefields, repair them, and get them back into service as soon as possible, “…marking the first time the [Israeli] army will be conscripting the staff of a private firm in wartime.” (Anshel Pfeffer, “IDF to draft civilians to maintain bulldozers in battle,” Haaretz, November 3, 2009, <http://www.haaretz.com/hasen/spages/1070057.html>) As of April 7, 2009, ICAHD estimates that 21,145 homes have been demolished since 1967. There have been 315 house demolitions in East Jerusalem alone in 2009.

At Caterpillar’s 2009 annual meeting, investors rejected an effort by human right activists, dissident shareholders, and the interfaith coalition of Christian and Jewish investors with whom the PC(USA) partnered to stop the firm from selling bulldozers to Israel. Corporation CEO, Jim Owens, told the body that: If you don’t like how CAT does business, you don’t have to hold your shares. By their own admission, stopping these sales will have minimal impact on Caterpillar’s business, but it would have a great impact on the lives of Palestinians and all people of good will in the region.

At its meeting on November 5–7, 2009, in Cincinnati, Ohio, it was reported to MRTI that corporate engagement, in the manner in which it had been employed since 2004, was no longer working in regard to CAT. After discussion and debate about what the next step should be, on November 7, 2009, MRTI decided to recommend to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC)—at its February 2010 meeting—adoption of a statement of denouncement in regard to the behavior of Caterpillar, and send it to the 219th General Assembly (2010) in Minneapolis for action. The statement began as a denouncement, but was amended to include words of commendation for Caterpillar business practices outside of the Palestinian Territories.

By its own admission, MRTI now recognizes that the corporate engagement encouraged and endorsed by three successive General Assemblies is not working. With its recommendation to GAMC, MRTI believes that it is continuing its corporate engagement with Caterpillar in a new way. CAT’s unchanged behavior and failure to engage seriously in conversation with the denomination, its decision at the 2009 shareholder annual meeting, and the public statement of the company’s CEO are all clear indications that the corporation has no intentions of changing its business practices whatsoever.

Three successive General Assemblies have made it clear that in regard to the church’s investments with Caterpillar there are only two options: 1) engagement as shareholders in the company to effect substantive change towards just business practices in regard to the Palestinian Territories, or 2) divestment from all assets held by the PC(USA) in CAT. It is believed by the writers and endorsers of this overture that a public statement of denouncement, with a smattering of praise, will not change CAT corporate behavior. In the meantime, more settlements will be built in the West Bank, more Palestinian land and natural resources will be stolen, the presence of indigenous Palestinian Christianity will continue its rapid decline in the land of Christ’s birth, and more Palestinians will die. Now that corporate engagement is no longer a realistic option, the only option left is disinvestment. It is no longer a question about how long the church can wait, but rather, whether it will do the right thing, or even anything at all.

The writers and endorsers of this overture deeply understand that decisions like these are extremely difficult. We know that by taking this action we hurt the feelings and spirits of some of our Presbyterian brothers and sisters, as well as the people of God outside of the Presbyterian church. We recommend such action with profound humility, confession of our brokenness as a human race, and with an ongoing desire for reconciliation even in the face of serious disagreement. Bibliographical Information

Information on the MRTI meeting came from personal accounts and from PC(USA) News, see the report at: <www.pcusa.org/gamc/business/sept09/information/224.pdf>.

Information on the CAT bulldozers and their destruction in was collected from several sources, most notably: <http://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/hrcouncil/specialsession/9/FactFindingMission.htm>; The most pertinent information is found on pages 210–14 of the report. There are many references to the use of bulldozers in these pages of the report, but in regard to the D-9 CAT bulldozer involvement, note the following footnote #509 on page 212: One soldier recalls: “There was a point where D-9s were razing areas. It was amazing. At first you go in and see lots of houses. A week later, after the razing, you see the horizon further away, almost to the sea. They simply took down all the houses around so terrorists would have nowhere else to hide.”

Since 2004, the PC(USA), through the MRTI, has made several attempts of corporate engagement with Caterpillar, Inc., to encourage the company not to sell its products to the Israeli government. In 2009, however, at Caterpillar’s annual meeting, investors rejected a proposal to stop selling bulldozers to Israel. The MRTI was advised that as of November 2009, corporate engagement was no longer working. We agree that corporate engagement has not worked. As faithful Christians, we can no longer support the actions of Caterpillar, Inc., which has chosen to continue to sell equipment to the Israeli government that is being used to unjustly cause death and destruction in Palestinian communities. It is time to divest.

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the Report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) of Its Engagement with Corporations Involved in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, and do the following:

1. Renew the call of previous General Assemblies to all corporations doing business in the region to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits, and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israeli-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory, and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 “Green Line” into Palestinian territories.

2. Continue to urge all corporations doing business in the region to seek proactive ways to promote respect for human rights, peace building, and equal employment opportunity.

3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), to continue the corporate engagement process with identified companies doing business in the region, as follows:
a. That the engagement with Motorola, ITT, United Technologies, and Hewlett-Packard be continued, together with ecumenical partners, as part of MRTI’s regular work plan, in accordance with the previously identified positions and priorities of the General Assembly, and subject to ordinary reporting to each General Assembly and report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) on its work including appropriate recommendations.

b. Whereas the Spirit of Christ “… gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace” (The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith—Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), lines 66–71), we seek to fulfill this calling by continued engagement with Caterpillar in accordance with the following policy statement of the 219th General Assembly (2010):

Caterpillar, Inc. has produced, sold, and profited from equipment that has been and continues to be used—with or without modifications made by their exclusive dealers and by others—for clearly non-peaceful purposes. Caterpillar thus profits from continued actions by Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) and other government agencies (at times by private companies under contract with government entities or on construction projects approved by Israeli government bodies) that have been condemned by the international community and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). These uses include (but are not limited to) the demolition of the homes of Palestinian civilians, the building of Israeli settlements and the separation barrier on Palestinian territory that is occupied illegally by Israel, and the provision of (and possible conscription in the future) of civilian employees of Caterpillar’s exclusive dealer to the Israeli military for the purpose of maintaining Caterpillar equipment for military purposes.

The inaction of Caterpillar in addressing the injustice and pain caused by its failure to monitor and take actions to prevent such uses by its Israeli dealer is inconsistent with our stated position calling on all corporations doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank “to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israel-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 ‘Green Line’ into Palestinian territories.”

Further, Caterpillar has been slow to engage the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment and the broader ecumenical community in these shareholders’ earnest attempts to have constructive conversation about these concerns. For extended periods, the company was unwilling to meet. When they have met, they have denied any responsibility for how their products are used or for their knowledge of the clear purposes for which these products are acquired from Caterpillar’s dealers. Caterpillar’s representatives have been dismissive of the ecumenical community’s concerns, and their responses (or lack thereof) have stood in sharp contrast with those of other companies doing business in Israel/Palestine. While we might like to see greater progress in some of those other dialogues, Caterpillar’s unwillingness to engage with authenticity and openness is unique and disappointing. Their actions do not provide much encouragement about the possibility for real change coming through conversation and correspondence conducted “behind the scenes.”

In contrast to its unyielding stance on this specific issue, Caterpillar has in many ways provided positive leadership to its community, its state, and the nation. It has donated considerable resources and equipment in support of local development and disaster relief at home and overseas. It has significantly improved workplace safety, acted aggressively to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and pursued environmental conservation within its production processes. In recognition of these accomplishments, Caterpillar has been listed for seven consecutive years in the Dow Jones Sustainability World Index. But these positive acts do not excuse the severity of the particular injustice that is being done to the Palestinian people through the use, in part, of certain Caterpillar products and from which Caterpillar profits directly or indirectly. This injustice undermines Caterpillar’s own stated commitment to human rights and positive global citizenship.

On the basis of Christian principles and as a matter of social witness, the 219th General Assembly (2010) strongly denounces Caterpillar’s continued profit-making from non-peaceful uses of a number of its products. We call upon Caterpillar to carefully review its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine, and to take affirmative steps to end its complicity in the violation of human rights. We hope that, by God’s grace, Caterpillar will come to exercise its considerable power and influence in the service of a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine.

Report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment of Its Engagement with Corporations Involved in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank

MRTI Report on Engagement with Corporations on Israel-Palestine Issues from 2004 to 2009

Historical Background: 2004-2006

The 212th General Assembly (2004) instructed the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to begin a process of “phased, selective divestment” related to corporations doing business in Israel. Following the assembly, MRTI initiated a process consistent with General Assembly (GA) policy. First, MRTI reviewed the 1984 GA policy on the use of divestment as a strategy for socially responsible investing, and the criteria for consideration of any recommendation for divestment. Also reviewed was the 1985 GA policy describing the process of phased, selective divestment.

At its first meeting following the General Assembly, MRTI identified GA policy positions on the obstacles to a just peace in Israel and Palestine. These included the ongoing violence perpetrated by Israelis and Palestinians against innocent people; the Israeli occupation of the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem in violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions; the presence of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories; the construction of the separation barrier; and the need for a viable Palestinian economy to enhance the possibility of a successful Palestinian state. These GA policies were incorporated into criteria to focus the research into corporations that may be profiting from involvement in any of the obstacles to a just peace. The MRTI also adopted a clear statement on the process of progressive engagement of any such companies that affirmed the cycle of dialogue, shareholder resolutions, and proxy voting and more dialogue before MRTI would be in any position to consider recommending possible divestment action to the General Assembly. This was reported to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), and publicized widely.

The MRTI conducted research to determine which corporations, if any, met the criteria. In August 2005, MRTI reviewed the research to select from among the identified companies an initial group to engage. These were Caterpillar, Citigroup, ITT Industries, Motorola, and United Technologies. The MRTI also maintained contact with various ecumenical partners that were committed to engaging companies on the issue of their involvement in Israel and Palestine. These included the Episcopal Church, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the United Methodist Church, the United Church of Christ, and several Roman Catholic religious orders.

The MRTI began the process of contacting and meeting with the five companies (meetings were held with Citigroup, ITT Industries, and Motorola), communication with the presbyteries where the companies are headquartered, and continued interpretation of the process to the church and the general public. The MRTI also worked ecumenically on strategies for proactive investment in Israel and Palestine by churches and corporations in consultation with James Wolfensohn, special envoy for the Quartet (the United States, the European Union, the United Kingdom, and Russia), whose charge included helping to rebuild the Palestinian economy.

In 2006, the General Assembly responded to numerous overtures regarding corporate engagement on Israel-Palestine issues, and approved a statement urging that “… financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 944.)

Ecumenical Activities

The MRTI continued its work with considerable time devoted to fostering ecumenical cooperation on engagement. To that end, an informal table called the Ecumenical Action Group: Investment for a Just Peace in Israel /Palestine (EAG) was created. As a result, corporate dialogues were expanded to include participation by representatives of other Protestant denominations and Roman Catholic religious orders. These have included the Episcopal Church, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, United Church of Christ, United Methodist Church (General Board of Global Ministries, General Board of Church and Society, General Board of Pensions and Benefits, and the New England Conference), United Church of Canada, Mercy Asset Management, the Passionists, Ursuline Sisters, and the Dominican Sisters. Also participating has been KAIROS Canada and the World Council of Churches.

In October 2007, the World Council of Churches convened a meeting of U.S., Canadian, and European churches working on corporate engagement. As a result, there has been increased sharing of research, and broader participation in dialogues and shareholder resolutions. United States and Canadian churches continue to cooperate in the EAG.

In Europe, churches in the Netherlands reported on engagements with a Dutch company that subsequently moved its facilities out of the West Bank and back into Israel. Swedish churches were instrumental in convincing Assa Abloy, a lock-smithing company, to move its facility out of the Barkan settlement in the West Bank to the other side of the Green Line. This ecumenical cooperation has helped identify several European and other companies with extensive ties to the Occupation including Veolia, AIG, Ahava, and Alstom.

Corporate Engagement

Additional dialogues were held with Motorola and Citigroup. These dialogues were the first step of the corporate engagement mandated by the 216th and 217th General Assemblies (2004 and 2006). Corporate engagement is a deliberate process outlined in the basic policies of the General Assembly on socially responsible investment, dating to 1971, 1976, and 1984. Elements of this process include research, correspondence, dialogue, proxy voting, and the possible filing of shareholder resolutions. Only after all other options fail to achieve the desired results, the committee on MRTI, through the GAMC, may recommend to the GA divestment from particular corporations.

Citigroup: The Citigroup dialogue was highly productive. The primary concern with Citigroup involved an allegation that Citigroup had provided insufficient controls to prevent the transfer of funds to Palestinian organizations supporting violence. In conversation with MRTI representatives, the company provided assurance that the bank had robust controls in place to monitor and prevent questionable money transfers. There have been no subsequent reports alleging inappropriate funds transfers by Citigroup. In addition, Citigroup expressed willingness to assist the religious community with exploring how to increase microcredit lending in the region to address the lack of adequate investment opportunities in Palestine. Therefore, in June 2007, MRTI removed Citigroup from its focus list of companies for corporate engagement.

Motorola: The dialogue focused on human rights standards and conventions, and explored the company’s involvement in the occupation through sales of military communications products, fuses for bombs, security technology for Israeli settlements on the West Bank, and operating a cell phone business in the West Bank. Motorola denied that any of its activities implicate it in the Israeli occupation, or raise human rights concerns. A shareholder resolution addressing broader human rights issues was filed by several religious shareholders in the fall of 2007. In response, Motorola requested a follow-up meeting, which occurred in January 2008. The company indicated its intent to review and amend its policies but would not specify the particular changes under consideration and made clear that its human rights policies would not be applied to their business relationships with foreign governments. This lack of clarity and limited scope led the religious investors, including MRTI representatives, to decline to withdraw their resolution, which went to a vote at the annual shareholders meeting on May 5, 2008. It received more than 12 percent of the shareholder vote, enough to be resubmitted in 2009. Although the conversation with Motorola has been less productive than hoped, religious shareholders agree that more in-depth dialogue on corporate social responsibility and human rights might potentially create a more productive arena for analyzing the Israel-Palestine conflict and other world situations and ought to be continued.

Caterpillar: The resolution at Caterpillar requested the board of directors to review the company’s human rights policies and amend them where applicable. Caterpillar also received a resolution on foreign military sales from a coalition of shareholders including several Roman Catholic religious orders and Jewish Voice for Peace.

There were two developments at Caterpillar. First, several religious shareholders sent a letter to the company requesting a meeting to discuss nonmilitary sales of company products in Israel and Palestine. The company replied by letter on December 13, 2007. While not responding to the request for a meeting, the company said for the first time that “As an industry leader, Caterpillar advocates responsible use of our equipment. We expect our customers to use the products they purchase from us in environmentally responsible ways and consistent with human rights and requirements of international humanitarian law.”

Secondly, the resolution submitted by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Dominican Sisters produced a dialogue on January 30, 2008. Caterpillar representatives reviewed their Worldwide Code of Business Conduct. Discussion focused on the human rights dimensions of the code, what it included or omitted, and who beyond the company’s employees it affected or not. Religious shareholders, including MRTI representatives, raised the need to address the end-use of company products, particularly in countries with human-rights challenges. After further discussions, the shareholders agreed to withdraw the resolution from consideration at the 2008 annual meeting in exchange for an ecumenical dialogue with the company on human rights and the end use of Caterpillar products.

The dialogue was held in July 2008 on the subject of the end-use of Caterpillar products in light of the company’s statement on its expectations for the use of its products. The dialogue included the Episcopal Church, Mercy Asset Management, United Church of Christ, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and three Boards of the United Methodist Church. The discussion focused on human rights and humanitarian law and conventions, and the company’s expectation that its customers would abide by these standards. The company considers its dealers as its customers. While it meets with its dealers regularly, and would terminate this relationship if it learned that a dealer was offering bribes, it has no mechanism for enforcement of its human rights expectations. The church representatives also requested information from Caterpillar on the customers of its Israeli dealer, particularly major construction companies that are involved in building the illegal settlements and Israeli-only roads in the Occupied Territories, the construction of the separation barrier, and the demolition of Palestinian homes. Caterpillar did say it had retained a consultant to advise them in making philanthropic grants in the region.

ITT Industries: The resolution at ITT Industries requested a report on foreign military sales. On March 4, 2008, religious shareholders, including MRTI representatives, met with ITT Industries. The company wanted to discuss its new corporate ethics program rather than foreign military sales. ITT’s position is that it will not disclose its foreign military sales claiming that all the information is publicly available. ITT had challenged the resolution at the Securities and Exchange Commission. The SEC’s decision upholding the shareholders was announced later in March. The resolution was voted on at the ITT Industries annual meeting on May 13, 2008, receiving more than 7 percent of the proxy vote.

United Technologies: The resolution to United Technologies requested that ethical criteria be applied to foreign military contracts, and, with the Episcopal Church as the primary filer, was supported by 23.8 percent of shareholders voting at the annual meeting; a very strong showing, considering resolutions of this nature submitted to major defense contractors routinely receive 3 to 5 percent of the shareholder vote. The vote was sufficient to qualify the resolution for automatic reconsideration at next year’s annual meeting. The Episcopal Church had a brief phone conversation with company officials, and received a commitment to a dialogue on developing a human rights policy.

2008 General Assembly

Regular reports on the corporate engagement process were made to the GAMC. The 218th General Assembly (2008) received a comprehensive report on MRTI work that included the committee’s belief that more engagement was the appropriate course of action at that time. It also called upon corporations doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank “…to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits, and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israeli-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory, and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 “Green Line” into Palestinian territories” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1223).

The GA also directed MRTI “to continue the corporate engagement process, and report on its status with any recommendations to the 2010 General Assembly” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1223).

In accordance with this directive, the corporate engagement process continued in late 2008 and 2009.

Caterpillar: A second dialogue was held on September 10, 2009, to continue the discussion of the previous year. Additional information had become public that was added to the agenda for discussion. An article in Haaretz, an Israeli newspaper, dated March 11, 2009, reported on the close relationship between Caterpillar’s Israeli dealership and the Israeli military. This includes selling the Caterpillar D-9 bulldozers to the Israeli Defense Forces who has them weaponized by an Israeli company. The article notes that the IDF has used these bulldozers from the mid 1980s, and has hundreds of them in its arsenal. After that, the Caterpillar dealer provides maintenance work. The dealership’s mechanics provided maintenance in the recent Gaza war (These dealership employees maintained and serviced Caterpillar equipment during the Gaza War of January 2009, when more than 1,300 civilians were killed and the entire civilian infrastructure of the territory was destroyed) and the Second Lebanon War. The dealership noted publicly its close working relationship with the Israeli Defense Forces, according to Haaretz in an article dated March 17, 2009, the IDF also “is planning to draft civilian bulldozer-maintenance personnel for reserve duty, marking the first time the army will be conscripting the staff of a private firm in wartime.”

The dialogue clarified several issues, but did not produce any progress. Company officials made it clear that the company took no responsibility for the use of its products even by its dealers (the only party considered to be a customer), had no procedure in place for monitoring or ensuring compliance with Caterpillar’s stated expectations even in a situation with a documented historic pattern of the equipment being used in human rights violations, and no desire to develop such a procedure. Further, they indicated that Caterpillar, although a global company doing business in virtually every country except where prohibited by U.S. law, had no capacity to evaluate whether particular actions are in accord with human rights conventions or international humanitarian law. Finally, Caterpillar did not provide information on whether its dealership was selling equipment to major construction companies building the illegal settlements, the separation barrier, or the Jewish Israeli-only roads in the occupied territories as requested. It also did not provide an update on the effort to expand its philanthropic activities as announced at the 2008 meeting.
Meanwhile, a shareholder resolution requesting a report on foreign military sales was refiled by Jewish Voice for Peace and several Roman Catholic religious orders for consideration at the 2009 stockholders meeting in June. The resolution garnered slightly less than six percent of the shareholder vote, and failed to requalify automatically for the 2010 meeting. Whether they will switch to another resolution is unclear. (Note: A new CEO has been appointed to take office at Caterpillar, July 22, 2010.)

Motorola: A shareholder resolution similar to the one from 2008 was filed with Motorola requesting that the company amend its human rights policies “to conform more fully with international human rights and humanitarian standards…” The resolution was co-filed by the General Board of Pensions and Health Benefits of the United Methodist Church, Mercy Investment Program, and the Episcopal Church. The company did not respond to a request in the filing letter for a meeting to discuss the resolution. When the filers tried to set one up following the annual meeting, the company declined, but offered to answer written questions. The stockholder meeting was held on May 4, 2009. Speaking in support of the resolution, which received 9.7 percent of the vote, were representatives of the United Methodist Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Meanwhile, the involvement of Motorola in the occupation has lessened in some important ways. The sale of armaments work by Motorola Israel means that it no longer makes bomb fuses for the Israeli military, or the wide area sensing surveillance system being deployed around the illegal settlements. Motorola also announced its intention to sell its Israeli cell phone company, and has sought bids from potential buyers. The company supplied cell phones to the Israeli soldiers operating in the Occupied Territories, and built cell towers in the illegal settlements.

ITT Industries: The company has supplied the Israeli military with night-vision and communications equipment. Following up on the resolution from last year, an updated version was filed requesting a report on the company’s foreign military sales (ITT Industries derived 46 percent of its fiscal 2007 revenue from military business). The resolution was co-filed by the Dominican Sisters of Hope, the Mercy Investment Program, and the Episcopal Church. A meeting was held on March 4, 2009, at the company’s offices. The company was represented by its senior corporate counsel, the counsel for its defense division, and its public affairs official. The MRTI staff was joined by a representative of the Presbytery of Hudson River and Sr. Valerie Heinonen of the Mercy Investment Program. ITT Industries continues to maintain, however, that it cannot discuss specific sales, even in countries with serious human rights challenges. However, as the company is currently barred from military contracts unless a special exemption is given, there does not appear to be recent sales to the IDF. ITT Industries is interested in developing a more specific human rights policy, but has ruled out that it would stop future sales to the IDF.

The resolution received nearly 7 percent of the shareholder vote at the May 2009 annual meeting. It can be refiled for the 2010 meeting.

United Technologies: The Episcopal Church filed a resolution with United Technologies asking for a report on the ethical criteria for its foreign military sales. The company agreed to develop the report, and a meeting was held on August 17, 2009, to discuss how the report and a policy on sales would be implemented. This was the first meeting with company officials, and was a productive session according to the participants.

Hewlett-Packard: On March 5, 2009, several religious shareholders were scheduled to hold a conference call with Hewlett-Packard, and had submitted a detailed list of questions for the discussion. The company then cancelled the call saying it would respond in writing, and only then consider a meeting. The shareholders reviewed the company’s written answers, and noted that they were vague or incomplete. The General Board of Pensions and Health Benefits of the United Methodist Church contacted the company to renew the request for a dialogue. Hewlett-Packard again declined saying they would only respond in writing. Two rounds of letters produced only vague answers to the shareholders’ questions.

The company sells hardware to the Israeli Navy that is used for its operational communications, logistics, and planning including the ongoing naval blockade of the Gaza Strip. This blockade has included interdicting humanitarian supplies by attacking or turning back international vessels carrying the supplies, and attacks on Palestinian fishermen. The company also is involved through its ownership of Electronic Data Systems in providing electronic biometric identification scanning equipment to monitor Palestinians at several checkpoints inside the West Bank.

Soldiers in the IDF are issued a Tadiran Communications ruggedized personal digital assistant (RPDA) based on the Hewlett-Packard IPAQ. This RPDA has been selected for Israel’s Angol soldier modernization program. Its use enforces the occupation. In July 2009, HP won a contract for the installation of software products in a three-year IDF virtualization tender offer valued at an estimated $15 million, with a two-year option to extend. Further, Hewlett-Packard’s HP Invent subsidiary outsources information technology services to Talpiot, a subsidiary of Matrix. Talpiot’s main outsourcing center is in the illegal West Bank settlement of Modi’in Ilit. By using Talpiot’s services, clients of the company are profiting from the company’s relationship with an illegal settlement, and are helping solidify the occupation. Finally, as with Motorola Israel, HP’s Israeli subsidiary does not disclose its equal employment opportunity record of its hiring practices.

A shareholder resolution was developed requesting a review of HP’s human rights policies, and a report on their implementation. It was filed by the PC(USA), United Methodist General Board of Pensions and Benefits, and four Roman Catholic religious orders. The filing letters requested an opportunity for dialogue, and prompted a positive response by the company.
On October 28, 2009, several religious participants met with company officials by conference call. The discussion reviewed HP’s policies and procedures, and identified issues of concern for further discussion. Participants were grateful for the positive atmosphere, and willingness to cooperate. As the company agreed to initiate a board of directors level review of its human rights policy, and committed to positive follow-up to the issues identified in the dialogue, the shareholders decided to withdraw the resolution.

Summary: While progress might not be as complete or as rapid as we might hope, the committee believes there has been progress in our dialogues with four of the five current companies we have been intentionally engaging in the process that began six years ago:

1. Motorola has taken positive steps, though some of these steps were likely motivated by business decisions rather than engagement with investors. In any case, the effort has seen positive results as the company has reduced its involvement in obstacles to a just peace.

2. ITT has seen a decrease in sales to conflicted regions, largely due to restrictions on sales to the U.S. Department of Defense. The company has been willing to meet with MRTI, and local Presbyterians have contributed in positive ways to establishing opportunities for dialogue. Continued engagement would focus on the company’s human rights practices.

3. United Technologies was always less involved in the region than some others, with most of their involvement coming as a subcontractor for companies with larger financial stakes. The company is open to further conversation.

4. HP had expressed some hesitation about meeting with ecumenical investors but following the filing of a shareholder resolution has apparently received the dialogue with openness and sincerity. The company has committed to continued conversations.

The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment is deeply disappointed that the dialogue between the Caterpillar corporation and our committee (together with ecumenical partners) has not borne more fruit. Caterpillar continues to accept no responsibility for the end use of their products. Over many years, the company has not indicated a willingness to review its policies for distribution or sales in conflicted areas like Israel/Palestine, and does not acknowledge a responsibility for its dealers’ adherence to human rights law in these areas.

Caterpillar’s own high standards of global citizenship are being undermined by its unwillingness to critically self-assess its own conduct in Israel/Palestine. It is the conclusion of MRTI that further efforts to engage Caterpillar through ordinary means (including shareholder resolutions, and written and oral communications) are unlikely to be successful.

While not all of Caterpillar’s operations are involved in non-peaceful pursuits, a significant portion of them are. Thus, the company does not measure up to the General Assembly’s stated position that the church’s investments in companies doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank be in companies involved in only peaceful pursuits.

The committee calls upon all potential customers and investors to carefully review the human rights records of Caterpillar and any other companies doing business in the region as they make their own decisions as consumers and investors. The committee stands ready to take whatever steps going forward as the assembly may direct.
“[On the basis of Christian principles and as a matter of social witness, the 219th General Assembly (2010) strongly denounces Caterpillar’s continued profit making from non-peaceful uses of a number of its products. We call upon Caterpillar to carefully review its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel/Palestine, and to take affirmative steps to end its complicity in the violation of human rights. We hope that, by God’s grace, Caterpillar will come to exercise its considerable power and influence in the service of a just and lasting peace in Israel/Palestine.]”

“As a Reformed Christian body, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to engage with and not withdraw from the world, and hence seeks to apply Christian principles of integrity, justice, and solidarity in its life as a community, including its investments. This focused action of divestment is a positive, non-violent act of solidarity with Palestinian Christians and Muslims in the quest for justice, peace, and equal human rights for both Palestinians and Israelis. It is a matter of integrity that the church’s words and actions be consistent; thus this act of divestment does not claim purity for the church, but recognizes that a more effective witness for justice at this time can be achieved by standing with those who suffer rather than with those who profit from a situation of suffering. This act of divestment says that there is a limit to how much endurance we ask of others. This is a way to give voice to those long silenced; and it says, no investment is an idol.

“The 219th General Assembly (2010) commends the Committee on MRTI for its sustained engagement with Caterpillar and other firms described in supporting documents, and recommends continued corporate engagement with other corporations significantly involved in the maintenance of or profit from the occupation of Palestine, with appropriate ecumenical and interfaith engagement and dialogue. Similarly, MRTI should continue to monitor church investments to ensure that no support is given to terrorism by any party, affirming that just economic activity should not support violence in any form. Corporations involved in the continued militarization of all countries in the region, democratic and non-democratic, are to be addressed in consultation with the U.S. government (which authorizes foreign military sales) and directly with companies involved, in accordance with the recommendations of the Report of the Middle East Study Committee, “Breaking Down the Walls.” In accordance with the distinction made in that policy statement, this action is not to be construed as divestment from Israel, but rather an action focused on the occupation and its enforcement.

“In conclusion, we call upon Caterpillar and all corporations doing business in Palestine and Israel to review carefully their involvement in obstacles or possible obstacles to a just and lasting peace, and to take affirmative steps as necessary to end complicity in any violation of human rights. We look forward to a time when the situation in Israel/Palestine no longer requires corporate engagement, but with this action indicate that such engagement necessarily includes the possibility of divestment when significant ethical matters are at stake.

“[4. Direct the Stated Clerk to inform our ecumenical partners of this action along with the Middle East Study Committee Report, both nationally and globally—particularly within Israel and Palestine—encouraging them to hear this witness and consider their own application of social responsibility and human rights criteria to companies represented in their financial portfolios with operations in Israel/Palestine, and to communicate this action to appropriate officials of the United States government, the United Nations, Caterpillar, Inc and other corporations named in this action.”]

Commissioners face a basic question: is the MRTI Committee’s recommendation of “denouncement” enough of a response to what they describe as an effective refusal by Caterpillar management to reconsider its full scope of engagement with the Israeli government. Denouncing Caterpillar’s unrestricted sales of armored bulldozers is in fact part of any act of divestment, but divestment gives substance to the mere words of denunciation. The General Assembly, since the 1970’s, has in fact phased out the term, “pronouncement,” as statements without actions were seen as weakening the church’s voice rather than strengthening it. The terms policy statement and resolution are terms that involve recommendations for action that shape the church’s life. Thus to focus on denouncing Caterpillar’s activity is at best half of the task before the church as an ethical investor.

Three developments since MRTI’s recommendation back in November support the moral logic of divestment at this time: the call by a brave and very ecumenical group of Palestinian Christians for economic pressure to end the occupation, and the decision of Caterpillar to end sales in Iran, based on political considerations, short of official sanctions. Whether the sale of unarmored bulldozers to Iran would actually be illegal, it was also learned that in Israel Caterpillar employees maintain the armored bulldozers in combat and have official recognition by the Israeli military. Thus the role of Caterpillar is not neutral or at a distance in aiding Israeli government policy.

In 1984, the General Assembly approved a theological and ethical study of divestment in relation to trusteeship, The Divestment Strategy: Principles and Criteria, accompanied by the study paper, The Divestment Strategy: Ethical and Institutional Context. This policy has been followed carefully by MRTI. Its criteria include all of the steps MRTI has taken with Caterpillar, plus an analysis of the importance of the ethical issue and the objective sought by this form of non-violent economic pressure, an end to the occupation. Clearly the financial impact of divestment by any single investor are limited, but the witness impact of the action is effective—as in the case of South Africa—and as understood by the opponents of divestment.

The commissioners will already be aware of the controversy and criticism that would be attached to their action. This is why the ethical focus needs to be on the realities of occupation and the danger to the Christian community in the Palestine (including East Jerusalem). Divestment of securities in Caterpillar is due to the company’s de facto support for the occupation and its enforcement, which is oppressive on all Palestinians, illegal under international law, injurious to US security, and is accelerating the disappearance of Christians in the Middle East. This action does not threaten the security of Israel, nor is it a denial that Israel has genuine security concerns, though we believe that many of these are integrally related to the continued occupation. The PC(USA) reiterates its commitment to two nations of Israel and Palestine, secure, at peace, and respecting full human rights, with internationally recognized borders.

The fact that an action is controversial does not make it any less timely, courageous, or necessary for the integrity of the church itself, given the careful process in which MRTI has engaged for six years, during which the situation for Palestinians has worsened, particularly in Gaza. Clearly, the people at Caterpillar do many good things, but in this case the primary corporate goal of profitability conflicts with the aspirations for freedom, dignity, security, and hopes for a two-state solution.

The last recommendation, that this action be publicized with the Middle East Study Committee report, would complete the treatment of investment issues that committee itself left undone. Here is what it said, as part of its discussion of “A Moment of Truth”: “While Kairos Palestine calls for divestment and boycott of everything produced by the occupation as an act of conscience and a method of nonviolent resistance, it lifts this up as part of the Christian affirmation of speaking truth in love. We struggle with its call for solidarity in this area and confess we have not fully answered it” (Item 14-08).

By approving this overture, the General Assembly would more fully answer the Orthodox, Roman Catholic, and Protestant communities in Palestine with, “Yes, we stand with you. We do not wish to profit from the bulldozers that demolish your homes.”

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

Item 14-03 is the report from GAMC from its committee MRTI, Mission Responsibility through Investment, on its engagement with corporations involved in Israel, Gaza, and East Jerusalem.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 14-03 be approved.

Rationale

The ACREC commends the committee’s work over a six-year period of corporate engagement with U.S. companies involved in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. According to this report, of the four companies on the original list from 2004, Caterpillar, Inc., is the only one that has not been willing to change its corporate practices when it comes to human rights failures. The report states that the committee is “deeply disappointed” that their talks with Caterpillar did not bear “more fruit” and says they “stand ready to take whatever steps going forward as the assembly may direct.”

The ACREC is disappointed that MRTI has not called for divestment when Caterpillar’s own Chairman, Jim Owens, is reported to have said in a shareholder meeting on June 16, 2009, that “If you don’t like how we do business, you don’t have to hold your shares.” When MRTI takes corporate engagement as far as it can go but does not take the final step of recommending divestment, it does two things:

1. The MRTI limits its future power to change corporate behavior by demonstrating that it will not in fact recommend divestment from companies that continue human rights abuses.

2. The MRTI fails to live up to its own definition of faith-based investing: “God’s call for justice, compassion and humility requires Presbyterians to respond. We believe a faithful response requires the whole of our lives, including our financial investments. It is more than a practical question. It gets to the very essence of our faith.”

This failure to go all the way “with the whole of our lives” weakens MRTI’s and the PC(USA)’s position for future corporate engagement.

[The assembly answered Item 14-04 by the action taken on Item 14-08 with comment. See pp. 51, 54.]

[Comment: While we are deeply concerned with the policies implemented by Israel in relation to the Palestine territories and Palestinians under its jurisdiction, we believe that dialogue is hampered by words like “apartheid.”]

On Recognition that Israel’s Laws, Policies, and Practices Constitute Apartheid against the Palestinian People—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

Recognizing that Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people, the Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to send this overture to the United Nations, encouraging them to find that the state of Israel is committing the crime of apartheid and to take the appropriate actions.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to communicate this information to the president and the Congress of the United States.

3. Urge its members, congregations, presbyteries, and national staff units, including the Office of Interfaith Relations, to study this matter and to seek appropriate ways to bring an end to Israeli apartheid.

4 Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to prepare study resources, and urge presbyteries to provide opportunities for study and discussion to further educate church members about the Israeli occupation of Palestine.

Rationale

Although only individuals can be convicted of the crime of apartheid, Articles I and II of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on November 30, 1973, are instructive as to what constitutes apartheid. These articles of the Apartheid Convention are included in Appendix A of this document. The rationale for the above recommendation is that the laws, policies, and practices of the state of Israel towards Palestinians constitute the crime of apartheid as defined by the United Nations. After a short discussion of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) resolutions and positions on the Israel-Palestine conflict, this rationale section gives examples of how Israel is committing apartheid in eleven areas specifically identified by the U.N.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Positions on the Israel-Palestine Conflict

Since 1948 the PC(USA) has passed resolutions strongly supporting the right of Israel to exist within the internationally recognized pre-1967 borders and emphatically condemning violence against civilians by all parties. The church affirms that Israel and all nations have the right to provide security for their citizens by taking appropriate measures that are consistent with international law.

The PC(USA) has also, through resolutions, strongly supported the right of Palestine to be an independent and sovereign state within the pre-1967 borders, the right of return to refugees or a negotiated compensation, the removal of all illegal Israeli settlements in occupied Palestinian territories or a 1:1 swap of land, a shared Jerusalem, an end to Israel’s military occupation of Palestinian territories, either the total removal of the Separation Wall or the removal of those portions of the wall that are on Palestinian land, and equal rights for Palestinians who are citizens of Israel.

Presbyterian Beliefs Relevant to this Recommendation

We believe in God, Creator of the universe and of humanity. We believe in a good and just God, who equally loves each one of God’s creatures. We believe that every human has dignity that is derived from the dignity of the Almighty One. We believe that this dignity is one and the same in all of us.

We believe the new reality revealed in Jesus Christ is the new humanity, a new creation, and a new beginning for human life in the world in which sin is forgiven, reconciliation is accomplished, and the dividing walls of hostility are torn down.

We believe the prophetic mission of the church is to speak the Word of God courageously, honestly, and lovingly in the local context and in the midst of daily life. Following the example of Jesus, the church is called to stand alongside the oppressed to help bring about justice, peace, and reconciliation.

As a living church we are called to bear witness to the goodness of God and the dignity of human beings. We are called to pray and to make our voice heard when we see injustice and oppression in the world. The communion of love says to every believer in spirit and in truth: if my brother or sister is a prisoner, I am a prisoner; if my neighbor’s home is destroyed, my home is destroyed; when my brother or sister is killed, then I too am killed.
Why the PC(USA) Should Declare that Israel Is Committing the Crime of Apartheid

The PC(USA) resolutions on Israel and Palestine are consistent with U.N. resolutions regarding the Israel-Palestine conflict and with international law. To date, resolutions and words have had no effect on Israel’s occupation of Palestine. Nor have they changed Israel’s disregard for international law in the occupied territories.

Each year the ordeals and injustices suffered by the Palestinian people in the West Bank, Gaza, and Israel continue. Land is expropriated, homes are demolished, and freedom of movement is restricted. The combination of Israeli settlement colonies on Palestinian land, the bypass roads connecting these settlements, and the Separation Wall creates a network of barriers that confine Palestinians to live in separate reserves and ghettos. The rights to work, education, freedom from arbitrary arrest, peaceful assembly, and freedom of expression granted under international law are restricted or denied.

For many years many prominent political, social, and religious leaders have looked at Israeli laws, policies, and practices in occupied Palestine and have asserted that they constitute the crime of apartheid. The PC(USA) has not been one of those voices. It is time to end our silence and give a name to injustices already condemned by many PC(USA) resolutions. In response to the urgent call from our Palestinian Christian sisters and brothers, now is the time for the PC(USA) to declare that Israel is committing the crime of apartheid against the Palestinian people.

Israel Is Committing the Crime of Apartheid

Israel’s laws, polices, and practices towards Palestinian citizens of Israel and Palestinians in the occupied West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem establish and maintain the domination of one ethnic group of persons over another ethnic group through systematic discrimination and oppression in violation of the U.N. International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid. Israel has created a system where one ethnic group, Israeli Jewish nationals, have a superior status and another ethnic group, non-Jewish Arabs living in Palestine and Israel, have an inferior status. This overtakes the highlights the following eleven areas in which the state of Israel is violating the Apartheid Convention adopted and ratified by the United Nations.

1. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid through the expropriation of landed property belonging to Palestinians (Article II.d., U.N. Convention on Apartheid) (see Attachment A. Table 1 and Figure 1, p. 1003).

Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically distinguish, exclude, dominate, and oppress Palestinians on the grounds of ethnicity. Among these laws, policies, and practices are numerous acts of population transfer developed by the state of Israel to transfer, both internally and externally, Palestinians from Israel or the Occupied Territories and prevent the return of those who have been displaced. Israel allows and funds the construction of settlement colonies built on the expropriated land in violation of international law. The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually expropriates the landed property of Palestinians.

• Under the 1947 United Nations Palestine Partition Resolution 181, 56 percent of the land area of Palestine was designated for a Jewish state and 44 percent for an Arab state. This resolution stipulated that the equal rights of minorities within each state must be protected. However, in the war that followed Israel’s declaration of independence in May 1948, Israel occupied 78 percent of the land, thereby expropriating all of the land within its military control that had been designated by the United Nations for an independent Arab state.¹

• In 1947–48, 750,000 non-Jewish residents of land designated by the U.N. for the Jewish state and an Arab state were either forcibly removed from their landed property or not allowed to return to their homes, in defiance of international law.² The land was expropriated by Israel for Jewish housing, farms, roads, and businesses.

• Israel passed a series of measures called the Absentees Property Laws in beginning in 1948, the law of return in 1950, and later the Land Acquisitions Act. These, and other measures, served to expropriate land from Palestinians. Palestinians were prevented from returning to their land, their land was confiscated because they were absent from it, and offered to Jewish refugees.

• In June 1967, East Jerusalem was occupied by the Israeli military. Twenty-seven square miles of East Jerusalem were annexed to Israel. More than 30 percent of the land in East Jerusalem has been expropriated to build new settlements where approximately 190,000 Israelis reside³ in 46,978 units of housing.⁴

• Between 1967 and 2009, vast areas of West Bank land have been expropriated to allow 121 recognized settlements and 100 unrecognized settlements for Jewish residents.⁵ Nearly half a million settlers now live in the occupied West Bank, including 190,000 in East Jerusalem.⁶

• A separation wall is constructed on land in the West bank and will expropriate an additional 11.9 percent of Palestinian land in the West Bank when complete.

• The agricultural Jordan Valley area, about 30 percent of the West Bank, is now off limits to most Palestinians.

219TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2010)
In 1998, Ariel Sharon, as Israeli Foreign Minister (later to become prime minister) made the following statements about Israeli settlement of the West Bank:7

○ “Everybody has to move, run and grab as many [Palestinian] hilltops as they can to enlarge the [Jewish] settlements because everything we take now will stay ours …”

○ “It is the duty of Israeli leaders to explain to public opinion, clearly, and courageously, a certain number of facts that are forgotten with time. The first of these is that there is no Zionism, colonization, or Jewish State without the eviction of the Arabs and the expropriation of their lands.”

2. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by denying the right to freedom of residence to Palestinians in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem (Article II.c, U.N. Convention on Apartheid).

Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically prevent Palestinians from freedom of residence through the demolition of Palestinian housing and denial of building permits for the construction of Palestinian housing. In those areas of the West Bank and East Jerusalem where Palestinian housing is destroyed or denied, homes for Jewish settlers are permitted and constructed and only Jewish people can live in the settlement colonies.

• Between 1967 and the end of 2001, almost no Palestinian housing units were given construction permits in East Jerusalem. In that same time period, 46,978 housing units were built for Jewish settlers in East Jerusalem.8

• Since the Annapolis peace talks began in November 2007, nearly 5,500 new Jewish only settlement housing units have been submitted for approval.9

• In 1967, the population of East Jerusalem was almost entirely Palestinian. Today there approximately 190,000 Jewish settlers. Palestinians now constitute one-third of the East Jerusalem’s population.

• Between 1999 and 2008, 688 Palestinian houses were demolished in East Jerusalem alone.10

• From June 1967 to June 2009, over 24,000 Palestinian homes have been demolished in the occupied territories.11

3. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by denying Palestinians “... the right to freedom of movement ...” in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem (Article II.c, U.N. Convention on Apartheid).

Israel’s laws, policies, and practices systematically deny Palestinians the right to movement. Israel uses a number of means to restrict Palestinian movement in the West Bank including: permanent and temporary checkpoints, physical obstructions, the Separation Wall, forbidden roads or roads with restrictions on Palestinian use, and the movement-permit regime. By implementing these means, Israel has split the occupied territories into six geographical areas: North, Center, South, the Jordan Valley and northern Dead Sea, the enclaves resulting from the Separation Wall, and East Jerusalem, which is an integral part of the West Bank for Palestinians. Movement between the sections and within each section has become, in recent years, hard, slow, and sometimes impossible. Israel almost completely forbids the movement of Palestinians between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and impedes Palestinians from entering Israel and from going abroad:

a. Checkpoints (see Attachment A, Figure 2, p. 1004)

• Israel has set up more than 600 checkpoints and road-blocks in the occupied West Bank. Fixed and random temporary checkpoints restrict movement between Palestinian cities and villages.12

• Checkpoints restrict Palestinians’ freedom of movement to their homes, businesses, schools, jobs, hospitals, and farms.

• Palestinians routinely suffer indeterminate waiting, humiliating treatment, uncertainty, and denial of access at checkpoints. Often, the end result is that the army denies Palestinians the ability to cross the checkpoint.

• These restrictions significantly affect the daily lives of Palestinians in commerce, in access to medical treatment and educational institutions, and in conducting social activities. Simple actions such as going to work in a nearby town, marketing farm produce, obtaining medical treatment, and visiting relatives entail bureaucratic procedures and great uncertainty.

• Restrictions on the freedom of movement prevent Palestinians from practicing other rights such as those set forth in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Among these are the right to work, peacefully assemble, health, education, protection of family life, and an adequate standard of living.13

• Israel’s restriction on freedom of movement for non-Jewish Palestinians is discrimination based on ethnic origin since these restrictions apply only to Palestinians. Jewish residents are permitted to enter and leave settlements without restriction.
• Israel claims that checkpoints and roadblocks are needed for the security of Israel. However, since only a handful are located on the border between Israel and the West Bank, the purpose appears to be the affliction of such hardship on Palestinians to force them to leave their lands and homes and emigrate from Palestine.

b. Bypass Roads (see Attachment A, Figure 3, p. 1004)

• Bypass roads link settlement colonies with one another and with Israel, circumventing Palestinian built-up areas. These roads include a buffer zone that is fifty to seventy-five meters wide, in which no construction or planting is allowed.\(^ {14}\)

• Bypass roads, often constructed on expropriated Palestinian land, carve up the West Bank into isolated ghettos and often deprive Palestinians of vital agricultural land and the income from it. As of August 2008, 493 miles of bypass roads were in use.\(^ {15}\)

• Bypass roads are restricted to Israelis with yellow license plates on their vehicles. Palestinian vehicles, identified by green license plates, are not allowed on these roads without a permit. Permits are difficult or impossible to obtain and expensive. These roads cut off Palestinians from their schools, hospitals, markets, and extended families.

• Palestinian transportation is relegated to inferior, secondary, sometimes unpaved roads that are, themselves, restricted by checkpoints and roadblocks.

c. Separation Wall (see Attachment A, Figure 4, p. 1004)

• In the West Bank, much of the Separation Wall is constructed between Palestinian homes and their farmland, businesses, schools, hospitals, and the homes of family and friends. In East Jerusalem the Separation Wall is constructed through the middle of a once contiguous city, much like the Berlin Wall. The wall has brought untold hardships to hundreds of thousands of Palestinians. The suffering has been particularly acute for those who depend on agriculture for their livelihoods.

• When completed, the 722 kilometer length of the wall will be more than twice the 315 kilometer length of the Green Line, which is the internationally recognized border separating Israel and the West Bank.\(^ {16}\)

• Only Palestinian land, most of it privately owned, is being confiscated for the building of the wall. Land owned by Jews is unaffected.\(^ {17}\)

• The Separation Wall cuts deeply into the West Bank in several locations. There is creeping confiscation of land in the areas between the Green Line and the wall, where severe movement restrictions continue to result in the inability of Palestinian land owners to farm their land. Along this zone, thousands of Palestinians on both sides of the wall are being driven into poverty by restrictions on residency, lack of access to farm lands, inability to market their crops, and outright confiscation of land.

4. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by “... [dividing] the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos ...” for Palestinians (Article II.d, U.N. Convention on Apartheid) (See Attachment A, Figure 5, p. 1004).

Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically create separate reserves or ghettos for Palestinians. The settlement colonies, the bypass roads that connect them, and the Separation Wall imprison Palestinians into isolated enclaves, eviscerate the Palestinian economy, and prevent the creation of a viable, contiguous, sovereign, and independent Palestinian state. Many thousands of acres around settlements are closed to Palestinian entry.

• In the occupied territories, the combination of Israeli land expropriation, bypass roads that cannot be crossed by Palestinians, and severe curtailment of Palestinian movement has confined the Palestinian people into ever-shrinking ghettos or reserves.

• The International Court of Justice, a number of United Nations human rights treaty bodies, independent experts, and the International Committee of the Red Cross have concluded that the construction of the wall causes forced displacement and amounts to population transfer.

• The number of settlements and bypass roads increased during the Oslo peace negotiations more than at any other point in history, slicing the West Bank into countless disconnected areas reserves or ghettos in which Palestinians are confined.

5. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by denying Palestinians “the right to a nationality” (Article II.c, U.N. Convention on Apartheid).

On November 29, 1947, the United Nations adopted Resolution 181 (II): Future Government of Palestine, a partition plan for Palestine that divided the League of Nation’s British Mandate of Palestine. It stated that “... Independent Arab and Jewish States and the Special International Regime for the City of Jerusalem, set forth in Part III of this Plan, shall come into existence in Palestine two months after the evacuation of the armed forces of the mandatory Power has been completed but in any case not later than 1 October 1948…” (United Nations Resolution 181, p. 1) In this partition plan, 44 percent of the land was allocated for an Arab state and 56 percent was allocated for the Jewish state. While Israel did become an independent state in 1948, the independent Arab state did not come into existence because the land designated as an independent Arab state was militarily occupied.

- Between 1948–2009, the state of Israel has systematically occupied or annexed all of the land within its military control that had been designated by the United Nations for an independent Palestinian state. In doing so, Israel has denied the Palestinians a right to a nationality.

- The 1952 Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law which limits eligibility for Israeli citizenship to only those Palestinian non-Jews who were present in the territory of Israel between 1948 and 1952 and their descendants. This law excludes and de facto de-nationalizes Palestinian refugees who were displaced in 1947–1948 by the Israeli military.

- In 1967, Israel annexed East Jerusalem in violation of international law.

- Between 1967–2009, Israel has controlled the rural undeveloped part of the West Bank, called Area C in the Oslo Peace agreement. Through the construction of settlement colonies, bypass roads, the Separation Wall, buffer zones, and the creation of land reserves, Israel has left Palestinians in control of only 13% of the land area of the former British mandate of Palestine.

- Israel has failed to implement the November 22, 1967, United Nations resolution 242 requiring Israel to withdraw its forces from the West Bank and Gaza.

- In 1978, Israeli Menachem Begin signed the Camp David Accords, which stated that “the Israeli military government and its civilian administration will be withdrawn as soon as a self-governing authority has been freely elected by [its] inhabitants …” (Camp David Accords, p. 2) By not implementing this agreement to end its occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, Israel has denied the Palestinians right to a nationality.

- In Israel-Palestinian negotiations in Madrid (1991), Oslo (1993), Wye River (1998), Camp David (2000) and Annapolis (2007), Israel has insisted that it will not implement U.N. Security Council Resolution 242 and that Palestinians must recognize certain Israeli facts on the ground. By not implementing U.N. resolutions or peace accords regarding the Palestinians, Israel has denied Palestinians the right to a nationality since 1948.

Israel’s use of administrative detention violates international standards. Israel holds Palestinians in prolonged detention without trial and without informing them of the charges against them. While detainees may appeal the detention, neither they nor their attorneys are allowed to see the evidence.

- Administrative detention is detention without charge or trial, authorized by administrative order rather than by judicial decree. International law has placed rigid restrictions on the application of administrative detention because of the high potential for abuse. The Israeli government does not conform to international legal standards in its use of administrative detention. Israel has never defined the criteria for what constitutes “state security,” and routinely detains Palestinians for political or other reasons.\(^{18}\)

- In 2007, Israel held a monthly average of 830 administrative detainees, which was one hundred higher than in 2006. As of October 31, 2009, there are forty-one detainees under sixteen and 269 detainees between the ages of sixteen and eighteen.\(^{19}\)

7. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by denying Palestinians “… the right to education” (Article II.c, U.N. Convention on Apartheid).

In Israel, the 400,000 Palestinian school children are in a public school system wholly separate from the 1.2 million Jewish students. The Palestinian schools differ significantly in quality from their Jewish counterparts. Palestinian schools are often overcrowded and understaffed, poorly built, badly maintained, or simply unavailable. Schools for Palestinian children offer fewer facilities and educational opportunities than are offered other Israeli children.

- Palestinian children attend schools with larger classes and fewer teachers than do those in the Jewish school system, with some children having to travel long distances to reach the nearest school. Palestinian schools also frequently lack basic learning facilities like libraries, computers, science laboratories, and even recreation space.\(^{20}\)
• Israeli Education Ministry authorities have acknowledged that the ministry spends less per student in the Palestinian school system than in the Jewish school system. The Israeli schools also receive additional state and state-sponsored private funding for school construction and special programs through other government agencies. The gap between Israeli and Palestinian schools is enormous on every criterion measured by Israeli authorities.\textsuperscript{21}

• The Israeli government has acknowledged that its Palestinian educational system is inferior to its Jewish education system when it reported to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child in 2001 that “[t]here is a great deal of variance in the resources allocated the education in the Arab versus the Jewish sector. These discrepancies are reflected in various aspects of education in the Arab sector, such as physical infrastructure, the average number of students per class, the number of enrichment hours, the extent of support services, and the level of education of professional staff.”\textsuperscript{22}

• Neglect of the physical infrastructure of the public educational system in East Jerusalem has worsened over the years until it has reached the crisis point. Today it is necessary to build thousands of additional classrooms overnight in order to accommodate the needs of residents. The situation has deteriorated even further as a result of construction of the Separation Wall in East Jerusalem.

• Thousands of Palestinian students in East Jerusalem are being denied access to free public education, although they are entitled to it by Israeli law. In East Jerusalem there is a shortage of over 1,350 classrooms.\textsuperscript{23}

• The Israeli High Court of Justice ruled that the Ministry of Education and the Jerusalem Municipality must build hundreds of classrooms for the Palestinian students in East Jerusalem. However, the classrooms have not been built, and the classroom shortage has steadily worsened.\textsuperscript{24}

• Every year the Jerusalem Municipal Education Administration rejects a large number of Palestinian children from East Jerusalem who want to register for the public education system, due to lack of space in the educational institutions. This defies the law as well as the regulations of the Director General of the Ministry of Education.

• By the year 2007, only about half of the Palestinian children in East Jerusalem, about 39,400 out of about 79,000 students, were enrolled in the municipal school system.

8. \textit{Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by “deliberate imposition ... of living conditions calculated to cause [the] physical destruction [of Palestinians] in whole or in part ...”} (Article II.b, U.N. Convention on Apartheid).

The physical well being of any people is determined in large part by their access to adequate housing, drinking water, agricultural irrigation water, food, agricultural areas, utilities, employment, education, and wastewater treatment. The laws, policies, and practices of Israel systematically deprive many Palestinians adequate living conditions in some or all of the above areas. Israeli practices deliberately impose on Palestinians living conditions calculated to make life intolerable. Israel exploits Palestinian natural water and land resources through restricting water supply to Palestinians, not investing in infrastructure for economic development, uprooting olive and fruit trees of Palestinian farmers, and preventing the freedom of commerce for Palestinian farmers and workers.

• More than one and a quarter million olive and fruit trees and thousands of acres of farmland have been destroyed in Palestinian territories since 1967. Nearly 465,000 olive trees were uprooted between 2000 and 2005.\textsuperscript{25}

• Since the beginning of the occupation in 1967, Israel’s strict control of the water sector in the occupied territories has prevented development to meet Palestinian water needs, caused shortages, and created a water-quality crisis.\textsuperscript{26}

• Israel has neglected construction of infrastructure to connect the Palestinian rural population to a running water network as well as proper maintenance of existing networks. In 2008, 227,500 Palestinians in 220 towns and villages were not connected to a water network. Another 190,000 Palestinians are only partially served.\textsuperscript{27}

• Of the water available from West Bank aquifers, Israel uses 83 percent, (10 percent for illegal Israeli settlers in the West Bank and 73 percent for residents in Israel). West Bank Palestinians use the remaining 17 percent.\textsuperscript{28}

• Israel generally restricts Palestinians’ water use to the municipal and limited commercial and industrial sectors by limiting the extraction of groundwater for agricultural irrigation purposes.\textsuperscript{29}

• In the West Bank, about fifty groundwater wells and more than 200 cisterns have been destroyed or isolated from their owners by construction of the Separation Wall, affecting the domestic and agricultural needs of more than 122,000 people.\textsuperscript{30}

• The sole aquifer that provides 96 percent of water consumed in the Gaza Strip has become polluted and salinated due to over-extraction and penetration of untreated sewage and agricultural runoff.\textsuperscript{31}
- Only 7 percent of the water in the Gaza Strip meets World Health Organization standards.\textsuperscript{32}

- West Bank Palestinian water consumption is forty liters per day less than the minimum global standards set by the World Health Organization.\textsuperscript{33}

- Israel has severely restricted the already limited authority of the Palestinian National Authority (PNA) in the Palestinian Territory. Israel’s destruction of ministerial buildings, arrests of PNA officials and unlawful withholding of PNA tax revenues, have rendered the PNA unable to pay the full salaries of its civil servants and carry out its basic functions. These factors have weakened the PNA’s ability to uphold law and order.

- Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem pay taxes, but receive few benefits. The municipality has failed to invest significantly in infrastructure and services (such as roads, sidewalks, and water and sewage systems) in East Jerusalem’s Palestinian neighborhoods.

9. \textit{Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by denying Palestinians “... the right to work”} (Article II.c, U.N. Convention on Apartheid).

The destruction of farming as a source of livelihood has forced more and more Palestinians to seek work outside the agricultural sector and has provided Israeli employers with a cheap and vulnerable labor pool. Israeli employers of Palestinian workers in the West Bank directly benefit from employing people under conditions of occupation. Restrictions on Palestinian movement limit the workers’ employment choices. Workers must get permits to work in Israel and these permits can have severe restrictions, be rescinded, or be denied. Dependency on permits makes organizing almost impossible.

- Because Palestinian workers are effectively prevented from changing employers, organizing, or suing for their rights, there is great potential for exploitative employment.\textsuperscript{34}

- Palestinian workers have no effective legal redress and labor laws are not enforced.

- Reports document companies in the Israeli industrial zones that have paid sub-standard wages, forced Palestinians to work overtime for no pay, employed workers in hazardous conditions, or denied them of adequate social benefits.\textsuperscript{35}

- Thirty percent of West Bank Palestinians are out of work and average earnings in the territory are little more than half Israel’s minimum wage.

10. \textit{Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by enacting “... legislative measures and other measures calculated to prevent [Palestinians] from participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the country ...”} (Article II.c, U.N. Convention on Apartheid).

Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically take actions to prevent Palestinians from participating in the political, social, economic, and cultural life of their country. The expropriation of Palestinian land; restrictions on the freedom of movement and residence; confinement to ghettos; arbitrary arrest and imprisonment; and the restriction or denial of rights to work, education, peaceful assembly, and religious practices are all part of Israeli measures calculated to prevent Palestinians from full participation in the economic, environmental, and social life of their country. This discriminatory system benefits Israeli Jews and causes irreparable harm to non-Jews both in Israel itself and in the occupied Palestinian territories.

In May 2009, The Human Sciences Research Council of South Africa analyzed Israeli practices towards the Palestinians and concluded that Israel practices the following “three pillars” of apartheid in the occupied territories. These Israeli practices are calculated to prevent Palestinians from participation in the political, social, and cultural life of their country.

- Israeli laws and policies establish Jewish identity for purposes of law and afford a preferential legal status and material benefits to Jewish people over non-Jewish people.

- Israel’s policies and practices fragment the Occupied Palestinian territories and ensure that Palestinians remain confined to the reserves designated for them. While Israeli Jews are prohibited from entering those reserves, they enjoy freedom of movement throughout much of the Palestinian territory. This policy is evidenced by Israel’s extensive appropriation of Palestinian land, which continues to shrink the territorial space available to Palestinians; the hermetic closure and isolation of the Gaza Strip from the rest of the Palestinian Territories; the deliberate severing of East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank; and the appropriation and construction policies serving to carve up the West Bank into an intricate and well-serviced network of connected settlements for Jewish-Israelis and an archipelago of besieged and non-contiguous enclaves for Palestinians.

- Israel invokes the need for “security” to impose sweeping restrictions on Palestinian rights to freedom of opinion, expression, assembly, association, and movement. The true underlying intent is to suppress dissent to its system of domination and maintain control over Palestinians as a group.
11. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid "... by inflict[ing] ... serious bodily or mental harm, ... [and] inhuman or degrading treatment ..." on Palestinians (Article II.a, U.N. Convention on Apartheid).

The previous ten examples of Israeli apartheid portray many ways in which Israeli laws, policies, and practices result in degrading treatment of Palestinians. In the West Bank, there are also many examples where Israel inflicts serious bodily or mental harm on Palestinians. However, the most egregious commitment of this crime took place during the December 2008–January 2009 war on Palestinians in Gaza. Since 2007, Israel has laid siege to Gaza, depriving the Gaza Strip of food, purified water, medicines, building supplies, and most other necessities, and creating what the Israeli human rights organization B’Tselem calls “the largest out-door prison in the world.” During the Gaza invasion, Israel attacked it with F-16 fighter-bombers, Apache helicopter gunships, phosphorous bombs, tanks, armored D-9 Caterpillar tractors, and ground troops. The statistics are telling:

- 1,400 Palestinians killed, including at least 850 civilians, 350 children, and 110 women; over 5,000 wounded
- Fourteen Israelis killed, including four civilians; 330 wounded
- More than 4,000 homes destroyed, over 40,000 damaged
- 215 factories and 700 private businesses destroyed or seriously damaged
- Fifteen hospitals and forty-three primary health care centers destroyed or damaged
- Twenty-eight government buildings and sixty police stations destroyed or damaged
- Thirty mosques destroyed, twenty-eight damaged
- Ten schools destroyed, 168 damaged
- Three universities or colleges destroyed; fourteen damaged
- Fifty-three United Nations properties damaged along with the food and medicines warehoused within them.
- Much of the economic infrastructure (power generators, water and sewage treatment plants, roads, and farmland) was also destroyed or damaged

This invasion demonstrates Israel’s vastly disproportionate use of force against Palestinians resulting in the unnecessary infliction of serious bodily or mental harm on the Palestinian people and the creation of living conditions that are inhuman and degrading to the Palestinian people.

Appendix A

International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

Adopted and opened for signature, ratification by General Assembly resolution 3068 (XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, entry into force 18 July 1976, in accordance with article XV.

The States Parties to the present Convention... have agreed as follows:

Article I. 1. The States Parties to the present Convention declare that apartheid is a crime against humanity and that inhuman acts resulting from the policies and practices of apartheid and similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination, as defined in article II of the Convention, are crimes violating the principles of international law, in particular the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and constituting a serious threat to international peace and security.

2. The States Parties to the present Convention declare criminal those organizations, institutions and individuals committing the crime of apartheid.

Article II For the purpose of the present Convention, the term “the crime of apartheid”, which shall include similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination as practiced in southern Africa, shall apply to the following inhuman acts committed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial group of persons over any other racial group of persons and systematically oppressing them:

a. denial to a member or members of a racial group or groups of the right to life and liberty of person:
   (i) by murder of members of a racial group or groups;
   (ii) by the infliction upon the members of a racial group or groups of serious bodily or mental harm, by the infringement of their freedom or dignity, or by subjecting them to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
   (iii) by arbitrary arrest and illegal imprisonment of the members of a racial group or groups;

b. deliberate imposition on a racial group or groups of living conditions calculated to cause its or their physical destruction in whole or in part;
c. any legislative measures and other measures calculated to prevent a racial group or groups from participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the country and the deliberate creation of conditions preventing the full development of such a group or groups, in particular by denying to members of a racial group or groups basic human rights and freedoms, including the right to work, the right to form recognized trade unions, the right to education, the right to leave and to return to their country, the right to a nationality, the right to freedom of movement and residence, the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association;
d. any measures, including legislative measures, designed to divide the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the members of a racial group or groups, the prohibition of mixed marriages among members of various racial groups, the expropriation of landed property belonging to a racial group or groups or to members thereof;
e. exploitation of the labour of the members of a racial group or groups, in particular by submitting them to forced labour;
f. persecution of organizations and persons, by depriving them of fundamental rights and freedoms, because they oppose apartheid.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 14-04 calls upon the General Assembly to recognize that Israeli law, policies and practice constitute apartheid against Palestinians.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) counsels the 219th General Assembly to consider the following information.

The Presbytery of San Francisco has sponsored as many tours and study groups to the Middle East as any other presbytery in the PC(USA), if not more. ACSWP also notes that

- the word apartheid is sometimes used and quoted in parts of the Israeli population and press to describe the predicament of Palestinians in the occupied territories.
- Israel’s former Prime Minister, Ehud Olmert, warned that Israel risked being compared to South Africa if it did not move toward a viable two state solution.
- the overture’s assessment of the impact of Israel’s laws, policies and practices corresponds to the findings of numerous Presbyterian and human rights groups that have studied and travelled in the Middle East.

The ACSWP encourages the assembly to receive the narrative in this overture as a credible and incisive assessment of the deteriorating situation of Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Since 2006, however, it has been the general practice of PC(USA) employees and agencies not to use the word apartheid in our engagement with Israel and the American Jewish community. While that practice is not binding on the General Assembly, it has opened up avenues for conversation. ACSWP is not certain that this is the time to change our practice. The committee hopes that it will be more productive to press the points raised in the report of the Middle East Study Committee, Breaking Down the Walls, and the plea of Palestinian Christians in the Kairos Document.

The ACSWP endorses the comment of the General Assembly Mission Council that invites commissioners to judge for themselves whether using this term advances the search for a just peace in the region; agrees that the problems of the Middle East call us to prayer, study, advocacy, and serious engagement with all parties; reiterates Presbyterian support for the existence of the State of Israel within its internationally recognized pre-1967 borders; and encourages Presbyterians travelling to Israel and Palestine to invite Jewish neighbors to visit the occupied territories with Palestinians to investigate jointly the impact of Israel’s policies on their communities.

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 14-04 be approved.

Rationale

Israel uses the Hebrew word “hafrada,” meaning “separation” to describe the twenty-five foot concrete security wall (known in Israel as the Hafrada Wall or Separation Barrier). Israel applies this word to their official policy of separation of Jews and Palestinians. Likewise, “apartheid” also means “separation.”

Archbishop Desmond Tutu, April 2010:

I have been to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and I have witnessed the racially segregated roads and housing that reminded me so much of the conditions we experienced in South Africa under the racist system of Apartheid. ... True peace must be anchored in justice and an unwavering commitment to universal rights for all humans, regardless of ethnicity, religion, gender, national origin or any other identity attribute. Comment on Item 14-04—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

This overture accurately describes many of the current policies, actions and laws of the Israeli government and their impact on Palestinians.

No previous statements of the General Assembly relevant to Israel/Palestine use the term “apartheid.” Commissioners will have to judge whether this label in itself advances our church’s understanding of the Israeli-Palestinian situation, or the search for its just resolution. Some GAMC members are concerned about the use of the word “apartheid.”

In any case, the situation itself cries out for deeper and more serious engagement (with both those who disagree with us and others), study, prayer and advocacy.

Recommendation 4 of this overture directs the General Assembly Mission Council to prepare study resources, and urge presbyteries to provide opportunities for study and discussion to further educate church members about the Israeli occupation of Palestine.

The role of the General Assembly Mission Council is changing in response to trends in mission engagement and funding throughout the denomination. The focus of our ministry is to inspire, equip, and connect Presbyterians as they engage in ministry.

We are moving away from:

- creating offices at the denominational level to coordinate every area of specialized ministry, and
- producing our own resources where good resources exist from other sources.

This ministry focus for the GAMC is consistent with the available funding streams and the broad range of ministry support that Presbyterians expect.

We invite Presbyterians with a passion for specialized ministries to form ministry networks for collaboration and coordination. The PC(USA) Web site provides tools for these networks to form and for synergies to emerge. New features are being added to the Web site to improve that capability. These varied ministries are vital for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and we will continue to seek ways to foster connections and collaboration to join in expanding partnership in God’s mission and to grow Christ’s church deep and wide.

[The assembly answered Item 14-05 by the action taken on Item 14-08. See pp. 51, 54.]

On Commending “A Moment of Truth: A Word of Faith and Hope from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering” as an Advocacy Tool—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to

1. receive “A Moment of Truth: A Word of Faith and Hope from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering,” commending it to use by our presbyteries and congregations as an advocacy tool;

2. call on the Interfaith Office to include in its discussions with American Jewish and Muslim groups a careful study of the Palestinian Christian Kairos document.

Rationale

This is the first time we have a common voice from the grassroots Christians in Palestine asking us to help them get rid of the occupation through concrete acts: theological debates on occupation as sin, and boycott, divestment, and sanctions campaigns.

Appendix A (From the Web site of the Israel/Palestine Mission Network of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), http://www.israelpalestinemissionnetwork.org/resources/kairos.pdf)

South Africa’s transition to a multi-racial democracy was unexpectedly peaceful due, in large part, to international economic, political, and diplomatic pressure. This process was aided by a call from South African Christian leaders who challenged the legitimacy of the official “state theology” called Apartheid. Palestinians are also facing a de facto (official) state theology that delegitimizes their rights as children of God in the land of their ancestors. Christian leaders in Palestine and Israel are now calling for a similar international response of boycotts, divestment, and sanctions to help end the occupation and achieve a just peace in the Holy Land. Their call, Kairos Palestine, is based on a serious theological commitment to the prophetic challenge belonging to all three monotheistic faiths: Christianity, Judaism and Islam. It is also based on the conviction that without international Christian awareness and solidarity, the indigenous Christian Church in Palestine and Israel may cease to exist.

KAIROS PALESTINE | 2009
A moment of truth:
_A word of faith, hope and love from the heart of Palestinian suffering_

Introduction

We, a group of Christian Palestinians, after prayer, reflection and an exchange of opinion, cry out from within the suffering in our country, under the Israeli occupation, with a cry of hope in the absence of all hope, a cry full of prayer and faith in a God ever vigilant, in God’s divine providence for all the inhabitants of this land. Inspired by the mystery of God's love for all, the mystery of God’s divine presence in the history of all peoples and, in a particular way, in the history of our country, we proclaim our word based on our Christian faith and our sense of Palestinian belonging—a word of faith, hope, and love.

Why now? Because today we have reached a dead end in the tragedy of the Palestinian people. The decision-makers content themselves with managing the crisis rather than committing themselves to the serious task of finding a way to resolve it. The hearts of the faithful are filled with pain and with questioning: What is the international community doing? What are the political leaders in Palestine, in Israel, and in the Arab world doing? What is the Church doing? The problem is not just a political one. It is a policy in which human beings are destroyed, and this must be of concern to the Church.

We address ourselves to our brothers and sisters, members of our Churches in this land. We call out as Christians and as Palestinians to our religious and political leaders, to our Palestinian society and to the Israeli society, to the international community, and to our Christian brothers and sisters in the churches around the world.

1. The reality on the ground

1.1 “They say: ‘Peace, peace’ when there is no peace” (Jer. 6:14). These days, everyone is speaking about peace in the Middle East and the peace process. So far, however, these are simply words; the reality is one of Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories, deprivation of our freedom and all that results from this situation:

1.1.1 The separation wall erected on Palestinian territory, a large part of which has been confiscated for this purpose, has turned our towns and villages into prisons, separating them from one another, making them dispersed and divided cantons. Gaza, especially after the cruel war Israel launched against it during December 2008 and January 2009, continues to live in inhuman conditions, under permanent blockade and cut off from the other Palestinian territories.

1.1.2 Israeli settlements ravage our land in the name of God and in the name of force, controlling our natural resources, including water and agricultural land, thus depriving hundreds of thousands of Palestinians, and constituting an obstacle to any political solution.

1.1.3 Reality is the daily humiliation to which we are subjected at the military checkpoints, as we make our way to jobs, schools, or hospitals.

1.1.4 Reality is the separation between members of the same family, making family life impossible for thousands of Palestinians, especially where one of the spouses does not have an Israeli identity card.

1.1.5 Religious liberty is severely restricted; the freedom of access to the holy places is denied under the pretext of security. Jerusalem and its holy places are out of bounds for many Christians and Muslims from the West Bank and the Gaza strip. Even Jerusalemites face restrictions during the religious feasts. Some of our Arab clergy are regularly barred from entering Jerusalem.

1.1.6 Refugees are also part of our reality. Most of them are still living in camps under difficult circumstances. They have been waiting for their right of return, generation after generation. What will be their fate?

1.1.7 And the prisoners? The thousands of prisoners languishing in Israeli prisons are part of our reality. The Israelis move heaven and earth to gain the release of one prisoner, and those thousands of Palestinian prisoners, when will they have their freedom?

1.1.8 Jerusalem is the heart of our reality. It is, at the same time, symbol of peace and sign of conflict. While the separation wall divides Palestinian neighborhoods, Jerusalem continues to be emptied of its Palestinian citizens, Christians and Muslims. Their identity cards are confiscated, which means the loss of their right to reside in Jerusalem. Their homes are...
demolished or expropriated. Jerusalem, city of reconciliation, has become a city of discrimination and exclusion, a source of struggle rather than peace.

1.2 Also part of this reality is the Israeli disregard of international law and international resolutions, as well as the paralysis of the Arab world and the international community in the face of this contempt. Human rights are violated and despite the various reports of local and international human rights' organizations, the injustice continues.

1.2.1 Palestinians within the State of Israel, who have also suffered a historical injustice, although they are citizens and have the rights and obligations of citizenship, still suffer from discriminatory policies. They too are waiting to enjoy full rights and equality like all other citizens in the state.

1.4 In the face of this reality, Israel justifies its actions as self-defense, including occupation, collective punishment and all other forms of reprisals against the Palestinians. In our opinion, this vision is a reversal of reality. Yes, there is Palestinian resistance to the occupation. However, if there were no occupation, there would be no resistance, no fear, and no insecurity. This is our understanding of the situation. Therefore, we call on the Israelis to end the occupation. Then they will see a new world in which there is no fear, no threat but rather security, justice, and peace.

1.5 The Palestinian response to this reality was diverse. Some responded through negotiations: that was the official position of the Palestinian Authority, but it did not advance the peace process. Some political parties followed the way of armed resistance. Israel used this as a pretext to accuse the Palestinians of being terrorists and was able to distort the real nature of the conflict, presenting it as an Israeli war against terror, rather than an Israeli occupation faced by Palestinian legal resistance aiming at ending it.

1.5.1 The tragedy worsened with the internal conflict among Palestinians themselves, and with the separation of Gaza from the rest of the Palestinian territory. It is noteworthy that, even though the division is among Palestinians themselves, the international community bears an important responsibility for it since it refused to deal positively with the will of the Palestinian people expressed in the outcome of democratic and legal elections in 2006.

Again, we repeat and proclaim that our Christian word in the midst of all this, in the midst of our catastrophe, is a word of faith, hope, and love.

2. A word of faith

We believe in one God, a good and just God

2.1 We believe in God, one God, Creator of the universe and of humanity. We believe in a good and just God, who loves each one of his creatures. We believe that every human being is created in God’s image and likeness and that everyone’s dignity is derived from the dignity of the Almighty One. We believe that this dignity is one and the same in each and all of us. This means for us, here and now, in this land in particular, that God created us not so that we might engage in strife and conflict but rather that we might come and know and love one another, and together build up the land in love and mutual respect.

2.1.1 We also believe in God’s eternal Word, His only Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, whom God sent as the Savior of the world.

2.1.2 We believe in the Holy Spirit, who accompanies the Church and all humanity on its journey. It is the Spirit that helps us to understand Holy Scripture, both Old and New Testaments, showing their unity, here and now. The Spirit makes manifest the revelation of God to humanity, past, present, and future.

How do we understand the word of God?

2.2 We believe that God has spoken to humanity, here in our country: “Long ago God spoke to our ancestors in many and various ways by the prophets, but in these last days God has spoken to us by a Son, whom God appointed heir of all things, through whom he also created the worlds” (Heb. 1:1–2).

2.2.1 We, Christian Palestinians, believe, like all Christians throughout the world, that Jesus Christ came in order to fulfill the Law and the Prophets. He is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, and in his light and with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we read the Holy Scriptures. We meditate upon and interpret Scripture just as Jesus Christ did with the two disciples on their way to Emmaus. As it is written in the Gospel according to Saint Luke: “Then beginning with Moses and all the prophets, he interpreted to them the things about himself in all the scriptures” (Luke 24:27).
2.2.2 Our Lord Jesus Christ came, proclaiming that the Kingdom of God was near. He provoked a revolution in the life and faith of all humanity. He came with “a new teaching” (Mark 1:27), casting a new light on the Old Testament, on the themes that relate to our Christian faith and our daily lives, themes such as the promises, the election, the people of God, and the land. We believe that the Word of God is a living Word, casting a particular light on each period of history, manifesting to Christian believers what God is saying to us here and now. For this reason, it is unacceptable to transform the Word of God into letters of stone that pervert the love of God and His providence in the life of both peoples and individuals. This is precisely the error in fundamentalist Biblical interpretation that brings us death and destruction when the word of God is petrified and transmitted from generation to generation as a dead letter. This dead letter is used as a weapon in our present history in order to deprive us of our rights in our own land.

Our land has a universal mission

2.3 We believe that our land has a universal mission. In this universality, the meaning of the promises, of the land, of the election, of the people of God open up to include all of humanity, starting from all the peoples of this land. In light of the teachings of the Holy Bible, the promise of the land has never been a political program, but rather the prelude to complete universal salvation. It was the initiation of the fulfillment of the Kingdom of God on earth.

2.3.1 God sent the patriarchs, the prophets, and the apostles to this land so that they might carry forth a universal mission to the world. Today we constitute three religions in this land, Judaism, Christianity and Islam. Our land is God’s land, as is the case with all countries in the world. It is holy inasmuch as God is present in it, for God alone is holy and sanctifier. It is the duty of those of us who live here, to respect the will of God for this land. It is our duty to liberate it from the evil of injustice and war. It is God’s land and therefore it must be a land of reconciliation, peace, and love. This is indeed possible. God has put us here as two peoples, and God gives us the capacity, if we have the will, to live together and establish in it justice and peace, making it in reality God’s land: “The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps. 24:1).

2.3.2 Our presence in this land, as Christian and Muslim Palestinians, is not accidental but rather deeply rooted in the history and geography of this land, resonant with the connectedness of any other people to the land it lives in. It was an injustice when we were driven out. The West sought to make amends for what Jews had endured in the countries of Europe, but it made amends on our account and in our land. They tried to correct an injustice and the result was a new injustice.

2.3.3 Furthermore, we know that certain theologians in the West try to attach a biblical and theological legitimacy to the infringement of our rights. Thus, the promises, according to their interpretation, have become a menace to our very existence. The “good news” in the gospel itself has become “a harbinger of death” for us. We call on these theologians to deepen their reflection on the Word of God and to rectify their interpretations so that they might see in the Word of God a source of life for all peoples.

2.3.4 Our connectedness to this land is a natural right. It is not an ideological or a theological question only. It is a matter of life and death. There are those who do not agree with us, even defining us as enemies only because we declare that we want to live as free people in our land. We suffer from the occupation of our land because we are Palestinians. And as Christian Palestinians we suffer from the wrong interpretation of some theologians. Faced with this, our task is to safeguard the Word of God as a source of life and not of death, so that “the good news” remains what it is, “good news” for us and for all. In face of those who use the Bible to threaten our existence as Christian and Muslim Palestinians, we renew our faith in God because we know that the word of God can not be the source of our destruction.

2.4 Therefore, we declare that any use of the Bible to legitimize or support political options and positions that are based upon injustice, imposed by one person on another, or by one people on another, transform religion into human ideology and strip the Word of God of its holiness, its universality, and truth.

2.5 We also declare that the Israeli occupation of Palestinian land is a sin against God and humanity because it deprives the Palestinians of their basic human rights, bestowed by God. It distorts the image of God in the Israeli who has become an occupier just as it distorts this image in the Palestinian living under occupation. We declare that any theology, seemingly based on the Bible or on faith or on history, that legitimizes the occupation, is far from Christian teachings, because it calls for violence and holy war in the name of God Almighty, subordinating God to temporary human interests, and distorting the divine image in the human beings living under both political and theological injustice.

3. Hope

tion. Despite this, our hope remains strong, because it is from God. God alone is good, almighty, and loving and His goodness will one day be victorious over the evil in which we find ourselves. As Saint Paul said: “If God is for us, who is against us? ... Who will separate us from the love of Christ? Will hardship, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, “For your sake we are being killed all day long” ... For I am convinced that (nothing) in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God” (Rom. 8:31, 35, 36, 39).

What is the meaning of hope?

3.2 Hope within us means first and foremost our faith in God and secondly our expectation, despite everything, for a better future. Thirdly, it means not chasing after illusions—we realize that release is not close at hand. Hope is the capacity to see God in the midst of trouble, and to be co-workers with the Holy Spirit who is dwelling in us. From this vision derives the strength to be steadfast, remain firm, and work to change the reality in which we find ourselves. Hope means not giving in to evil but rather standing up to it and continuing to resist it. We see nothing in the present or future except ruin and destruction. We see the upper hand of the strong, the growing orientation towards racist separation, and the imposition of laws that deny our existence and our dignity. We see confusion and division in the Palestinian position. If, despite all this, we do resist this reality today and work hard, perhaps the destruction that looms on the horizon may not come upon us.

Signs of hope

3.3 The Church in our land, her leaders and her faithful, despite her weakness and her divisions, does show certain signs of hope. Our parish communities are vibrant and most of our young people are active apostles for justice and peace. In addition to the individual commitment, our various Church institutions make our faith active and present in service, love, and prayer.

3.3.1 Among the signs of hope are the local centers of theology, with a religious and social character. They are numerous in our different Churches. The ecumenical spirit, even if still hesitant, shows itself more and more in the meetings of our different Church families.

3.3.2 We can add to this the numerous meetings for inter-religious dialogue, Christian-Muslim dialogue, which includes the religious leaders and a part of the people. Admittedly, dialogue is a long process and is perfected through a daily effort as we undergo the same sufferings and have the same expectations. There is also dialogue among the three religions, Judaism, Christianity, and Islam, as well as different dialogue meetings on the academic or social level. They all try to breach the walls imposed by the occupation and oppose the distorted perception of human beings in the heart of their brothers or sisters.

3.3.3 One of the most important signs of hope is the steadfastness of the generations, the belief in the justice of their cause and the continuity of memory, which does not forget the “Nakba” (catastrophe) and its significance. Likewise significant is the developing awareness among many Churches throughout the world and their desire to know the truth about what is going on here.

3.3.4 In addition to that, we see a determination among many to overcome the resentments of the past and to be ready for reconciliation once justice has been restored. Public awareness of the need to restore political rights to the Palestinians is increasing, and Jewish and Israeli voices, advocating peace and justice, are raised in support of this with the approval of the international community. True, these forces for justice and reconciliation have not yet been able to transform the situation of injustice, but they have their influence and may shorten the time of suffering and hasten the time of reconciliation.

The mission of the Church

3.4 Our Church is a Church of people who pray and serve. This prayer and service is prophetic, bearing the voice of God in the present and future. Everything that happens in our land, everyone who lives there, all the pains and hopes, all the injustice and all the efforts to stop this injustice, are part and parcel of the prayer of our Church and the service of all her institutions. Thanks be to God that our Church raises her voice against injustice despite the fact that some desire her to remain silent, closed in her religious devotions.

3.4.1 The mission of the Church is prophetic, to speak the Word of God courageously, honestly, and lovingly in the local context and in the midst of daily events. If she does take sides, it is with the oppressed, to stand alongside them, just as Christ our Lord stood by the side of each poor person and each sinner, calling them to repentance, life, and the restoration of the dignity bestowed on them by God and that no one has the right to strip away.

3.4.2 The mission of the Church is to proclaim the Kingdom of God, a kingdom of justice, peace, and dignity. Our vocation as a living Church is to bear witness to the goodness of God and the dignity of human beings. We are called to pray and to make our voice heard when we announce a new society where human beings believe in their own dignity and the dignity of their adversaries.

3.4.3 Our Church points to the Kingdom, which cannot be tied to any earthly kingdom. Jesus said before Pilate that he was indeed a king but “my kingdom is not from this world” (John 18:36). Saint Paul says: “The Kingdom of God is not food and drink but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom. 14:17). Therefore, religion cannot favor or support any unjust political regime, but must rather promote justice, truth, and human dignity. It must exert every effort to purify regimes where human beings suffer injustice and human dignity is violated. The Kingdom of God on earth is not dependent on any political orientation, for it is greater and more inclusive than any particular political system.

3.4.4 Jesus Christ said: “The Kingdom of God is among you” (Luke 17:21). This Kingdom that is present among us and in us is the extension of the mystery of salvation. It is the presence of God among us and our sense of that presence in everything we do and say. It is in this divine presence that we shall do what we can until justice is achieved in this land.

3.4.5 The cruel circumstances in which the Palestinian church has lived and continues to live have required the church to clarify her faith and to identify her vocation better. We have studied our vocation and have come to know it better in the midst of suffering and pain: today, we bear the strength of love rather than that of revenge, a culture of life rather than a culture of death. This is a source of hope for us, for the Church and for the world.

3.5 The Resurrection is the source of our hope. Just as Christ rose in victory over death and evil, so too we are able, as each inhabitant of this land is able, to vanquish the evil of war. We will remain a witnessing, steadfast, and active Church in the land of the Resurrection.

4. Love

The commandment of love

4.1 Christ our Lord said: “Just as I have loved you, you also should love one another” (John 13:34). He has already showed us how to love and how to treat our enemies. He said: “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.’ But I say to you, Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, so that you may be children of your Father in heaven; for he makes his sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the righteous and on the unrighteous ...Be perfect, therefore, as your heavenly Father is perfect” (Matt. 5:44–47). Saint Paul also said: “Do not repay anyone evil for evil” (Rom. 12:17). And Saint Peter said: “Do not repay evil for evil or abuse for abuse; but on the contrary, repay with a blessing. It is for this that you were called” (1 Pet. 3:9).

Resistance

4.2 This word is clear. Love is the commandment of Christ our Lord to us and it includes both friends and enemies. This must be clear when we find ourselves in circumstances where we must resist evil of whatever kind.

4.2.1 Love is seeing the face of God in every human being. Every person is my brother or my sister. However, seeing the face of God in everyone does not mean accepting evil or aggression on their part. Rather, this love seeks to correct the evil and stop the aggression. The aggression against the Palestinian people which is the Israeli occupation, is an evil that must be resisted. It is an evil and a sin that must be resisted and removed. Primary responsibility for this rests with the Palestinians themselves suffering occupation. Christian love invites us to resist it. However, love puts an end to evil by walking in the ways of justice. Responsibility lies also with the international community, because international law regulates relations between peoples today. Finally responsibility lies with the perpetrators of the injustice; they must liberate themselves from the evil that is in them and the injustice they have imposed on others.

4.2.2 When we review the history of the nations, we see many wars and much resistance to war by war, to violence by violence. The Palestinian people have gone the way of the peoples, particularly in the first stages of its struggle with the Israeli occupation. However, it also engaged in peaceful struggle, especially during the first Intifada. We recognize that all peoples must find a new way in their relations with each other and the resolution of their conflicts. The ways of force must give way to the ways of justice. This applies above all to the peoples that are militarily strong, mighty enough to impose their injustice on the weaker.

4.2.3 We say that our option as Christians in the face of the Israeli occupation is to resist. Resistance is a right and a duty for the Christian. But it is resistance with love as its logic. It is thus a creative resistance for it must find human ways that engage the humanity of the enemy. Seeing the image of God in the face of the enemy means taking up positions in the light of this vision of active resistance to stop the injustice and oblige the perpetrator to end his aggression and thus achieve the desired goal, which is getting back the land, freedom, dignity, and independence.

4.2.4 Christ our Lord has left us an example we must imitate. We must resist evil but he taught us that we cannot resist evil with evil. This is a difficult commandment, particularly when the enemy is determined to impose himself and deny our right to remain here in our land. It is a difficult commandment yet it alone can stand firm in the face of the clear declarations of the occupation authorities that refuse our existence and the many excuses these authorities use to continue imposing occupation upon us.

4.2.5 Resistance to the evil of occupation is integrated, then, within this Christian love that refuses evil and corrects it. It resists evil in all its forms with methods that enter into the logic of love and draw on all energies to make peace. We can resist through civil disobedience. We do not resist with death but rather through respect of life. We respect and have a high esteem for all those who have given their life for our nation. And we affirm that every citizen must be ready to defend his or her life, freedom and land.

4.2.6 Palestinian civil organizations, as well as international organizations, NGOs and certain religious institutions call on individuals, companies, and states to engage in divestment and in an economic and commercial boycott of everything produced by the occupation. We understand this to integrate the logic of peaceful resistance. These advocacy campaigns must be carried out with courage, openly [and] sincerely proclaiming that their object is not revenge but rather to put an end to the existing evil, liberating both the perpetrators and the victims of injustice. The aim is to free both peoples from extremist positions of the different Israeli governments, bringing both to justice and reconciliation. In this spirit and with this dedication we will eventually reach the longed-for resolution to our problems, as indeed happened in South Africa and with many other liberation movements in the world.

4.3 Through our love, we will overcome injustices and establish foundations for a new society both for us and for our opponents. Our future and their future are one. Either the cycle of violence that destroys both of us or peace that will benefit both. We call on Israel to give up its injustice towards us, not to twist the truth of reality of the occupation by pretending that it is a battle against terrorism. The roots of “terrorism” are in the human injustice committed and in the evil of the occupation. These must be removed if there be a sincere intention to remove “terrorism.” We call on the people of Israel to be our partners in peace and not in the cycle of interminable violence. Let us resist evil together, the evil of occupation and the infernal cycle of violence.

5. Our word to our brothers and sisters

5.1 We all face, today, a way that is blocked and a future that promises only woe. Our word to all our Christian brothers and sisters is a word of hope, patience, steadfastness, and new action for a better future. Our word is that we, as Christians, carry a message, and we will continue to carry it despite the thorns, despite blood and daily difficulties. We place our hope in God, who will grant us relief in His own time. At the same time, we continue to act in concord with God and God’s will, building, resisting evil and bringing closer the day of justice and peace.

5.2 We say to our Christian brothers and sisters: This is a time for repentance. Repentance brings us back into the communion of love with everyone who suffers, the prisoners, the wounded, those afflicted with temporary or permanent handicaps, the children who cannot live their childhood, and each one who mourns a dear one. The communion of love says to every believer in spirit and in truth: if my brother is a prisoner I am a prisoner; if his home is destroyed, my home is destroyed; when my brother is killed, then I too am killed. We face the same challenges and share in all that has happened and will happen. Perhaps, as individuals or as heads of churches, we were silent when we should have raised our voices to condemn the injustice and share in the suffering. This is a time of repentance for our silence, indifference, lack of communion, either because we did not persevere in our mission in this land and abandoned it, or because we did not think and do enough to reach a new and integrated vision and remained divided, contradicting our witness and weakening our word. Repentance for our concern with our institutions, sometimes at the expense of our mission, thus silencing the prophetic voice given by the Spirit to the churches.

5.3 We call on Christians to remain steadfast in this time of trial, just as we have throughout the centuries, through the changing succession of states and governments. Be patient, steadfast, and full of hope so that you might fill the heart of every one of your brothers or sisters who shares in this same trial with hope. “Always be ready to make your defense to anyone who demands from you an accounting for the hope that is in you” (1 Pet. 3:15). Be active and, provided this conforms to love, participate in any sacrifice that resistance asks of you to overcome our present travail.

5.4 Our numbers are few but our message is great and important. Our land is in urgent need of love. Our love is a message to the Muslim and to the Jew, as well as to the world.

5.4.1 Our message to the Muslims is a message of love and of living together and a call to reject fanaticism and extremism. It is also a message to the world that Muslims are neither to be stereotyped as the enemy nor caricatured as terrorists but rather to be lived with in peace and engaged with in dialogue.

5.4.2 Our message to the Jews tells them: Even though we have fought one another in the recent past and still struggle today, we are able to love and live together. We can organize our political life, with all its complexity, according to the logic of this love and its power, after ending the occupation and establishing justice.

5.4.3 The word of faith says to anyone engaged in political activity: human beings were not made for hatred. It is not permitted to hate, neither is it permitted to kill or to be killed. The culture of love is the culture of accepting the other. Through it we perfect ourselves and the foundations of society are established.
6. Our word to the Churches of the world

6.1 Our word to the Churches of the world is firstly a word of gratitude for the solidarity you have shown toward us in word, deed, and presence among us. It is a word of praise for the many churches and Christians who support the right of the Palestinian people for self-determination. It is a message of solidarity with those Christians and churches who have suffered because of their advocacy for law and justice. However, it is also a call to repentance; to revisit fundamentalist theological positions that support certain unjust political options with regard to the Palestinian people. It is a call to stand alongside the oppressed and preserve the word of God as good news for all rather than to turn it into a weapon with which to slay the oppressed. The word of God is a word of love for all His creation. God is not the ally of one against the other, nor the opponent of one in the face of the other. God is the Lord of all and loves all, demanding justice from all and issuing to all of us the same commandments. We ask our sister churches not to offer a theological cover-up for the injustice we suffer, for the sin of the occupation imposed upon us. Our question to our brothers and sisters in the churches today is: Are you able to help us get our freedom back, for this is the only way you can help the two peoples attain justice, peace, security, and love?

6.2 In order to understand our reality, we say to the churches: come and see. We will fulfill our role to make known to you the truth of our reality, receiving you as pilgrims coming to us to pray, carrying a message of peace, love, and reconciliation. You will know the facts and the people of this land, Palestinians and Israelis alike.

6.3 We condemn all forms of racism, whether religious or ethnic, including anti-Semitism and Islamophobia, and we call on you to condemn it and oppose it in all its manifestations. At the same time we call on you to say a word of truth and to take a position of truth with regard to Israel’s occupation of Palestinian land. As we have already said, we see boycott and divestment as tools of non-violence for justice, peace, and security for all.

7. Our word to the international community

7. Our word to the international community is to stop the principle of “double standards” and insist on the international resolutions regarding the Palestinian problem with regard to all parties. Selective application of international law threatens to leave us vulnerable to a law of the jungle. It legitimizes the claims by certain armed groups and states that the international community only understands the logic of force. Therefore, we call for a response to what the civil and religious institutions have proposed, as mentioned earlier: the beginning of a system of economic sanctions and boycott to be applied against Israel. We repeat once again that this is not revenge but rather a serious action in order to reach a just and definitive peace that will put an end to Israeli occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories and will guarantee security and peace for all.

8. Jewish and Muslim religious leaders

8. Finally, we address an appeal to the religious and spiritual leaders, Jewish and Muslim, with whom we share the same vision that every human being is created by God and has been given equal dignity. Hence the obligation for each of us to defend the oppressed and the dignity God has bestowed on them. Let us together try to rise up above the political positions that have failed so far and continue to lead us on the path of failure and suffering.

9. A call to our Palestinian people and to the Israelis

9.1 This is a call to see the face of God in each one of God’s creatures and overcome the barriers of fear or race in order to establish a constructive dialogue and not remain within the cycle of never-ending maneuvers that aim to keep the situation as it is. Our appeal is to reach a common vision, built on equality and sharing, not on superiority, negation of the other or aggression, using the pretext of fear and security. We say that love is possible and mutual trust is possible. Thus, peace is possible and definitive reconciliation also. Thus, justice and security will be attained for all.

9.2 Education is important. Educational programs must help us to get to know the other as he or she is rather than through the prism of conflict, hostility, or religious fanaticism. The educational programs in place today are infected with this hostility. The time has come to begin a new education that allows one to see the face of God in the other and declares that we are capable of loving each other and building our future together in peace and security.

9.3 Trying to make the state a religious state, Jewish or Islamic, suffocates the state, confines it within narrow limits, and transforms it into a state that practices discrimination and exclusion, preferring one citizen over another. We appeal to both religious Jews and Muslims: let the state be a state for all its citizens, with a vision constructed on respect for religion but also equality, justice, liberty, and respect for pluralism and not on domination by a religion or a numerical majority.

9.4 To the leaders of Palestine we say that current divisions weaken all of us and cause more sufferings. Nothing can justify these divisions. For the good of the people, which must outweigh that of the political parties, an end must be put to division. We appeal to the international community to lend its support towards this union and to respect the will of the Palestinian people as expressed freely.
9.5 Jerusalem is the foundation of our vision and our entire life. She is the city to which God gave a particular importance in the history of humanity. She is the city towards which all people are in movement—and where they will meet in friendship and love in the presence of the One Unique God, according to the vision of the prophet Isaiah: “In days to come the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established as the highest of the mountains, and shall be raised above the hills; all the nations shall stream to it ... He shall judge between the nations, and shall arbitrate for many peoples; they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more” (Isa. 2:2–5). Today, the city is inhabited by two peoples of three religions; and it is on this prophetic vision and on the international resolutions concerning the totality of Jerusalem that any political solution must be based. This is the first issue that should be negotiated because the recognition of Jerusalem’s sanctity and its message will be a source of inspiration towards finding a solution to the entire problem, which is largely a problem of mutual trust and ability to set in place a new land in this land of God.

10. Hope and faith in God

10. In the absence of all hope, we cry out our cry of hope. We believe in God, good and just. We believe that God’s goodness will finally triumph over the evil of hate and of death that still persist in our land. We will see here “a new land” and “a new human being,” capable of rising up in the spirit to love each one of his or her brothers and sisters.

This document is the Christian Palestinians’ word to the world about what is happening in Palestine. It is written at this time when we wanted to see the Glory of the grace of God in this land and in the sufferings of its people. In this spirit the document requests the international community to stand by the Palestinian people who have faced oppression, displacement, suffering, and clear apartheid for more than six decades. The suffering continues while the international community silently looks on at the occupying state, Israel. Our word is a cry of hope, with love, prayer, and faith in God. We address it first of all to ourselves and then to all the churches and Christians in the world, asking them to stand against injustice and apartheid, urging them to work for a just peace in our region, calling on them to revisit theologies that justify crimes perpetrated against our people and the dispossession of the land.

In this historic document, we Palestinian Christians declare that the military occupation of our land is a sin against God and humanity, and that any theology that legitimizes the occupation is far from Christian teachings because true Christian theology is a theology of love and solidarity with the oppressed, a call to justice and equality among peoples. This document did not come about spontaneously, and it is not the result of a coincidence. It is not a theoretical theological study, or a policy paper, but is rather a document of faith and work. Its importance stems from the sincere expression of the concerns of the people and their view of this moment in history we are living through. It seeks to be prophetic in addressing things as they are without equivocation and with boldness, in addition it puts forward ending the Israeli occupation of Palestinian land and all forms of discrimination as the solution that will lead to a just and lasting peace with the establishment of an independent Palestinian state with Al-Quds as its capital. The document also demands that all peoples, political leaders and decision-makers put pressure on Israel and take legal measures in order to oblige its government to put an end to its oppression and disregard for the international law. The document also holds a clear position that non-violent resistance to this injustice is a right and duty for all Palestinians including Christians.

The initiators of this document have been working on it for more than a year, in prayer and discussion, guided by their faith in God and their love for their people, accepting advice from many friends: Palestinians, Arabs and those from the wider international community. We are grateful to our friends for their solidarity with us. As Palestinian Christians we hope that this document will provide the turning point to focus the efforts of all peaceloving peoples in the world, especially our Christian sisters and brothers. We hope also that it will be welcomed positively and will receive strong support, as was the South Africa Kairos document launched in 1985, which, at that time proved to be a tool in the struggle against oppression and occupation. We believe that liberation from occupation is in the interest of all peoples in the region because the problem is not just a political one, but one in which human beings are destroyed. We pray God to inspire us all, particularly our leaders and policy-makers, to find the way of justice and equality, and to realize that it is the only way that leads to the genuine peace we are seeking.

We, the Patriarchs and Heads of Churches in Jerusalem, hear the cry of hope that our children have launched in these difficult times that we still experience in this Holy Land. We support them and stand by them in their faith, their hope, their love, and their vision for the future. We also support the call to all our faithful as well as to the Israeli and Palestinian Leaders, to the International Community, and to the World Churches, in order to accelerate the achievement of justice, peace, and reconciliation in this Holy Land. We ask God to bless all our children by giving them more power in order to contribute effectively in establishing and developing their community, while making it a community in love, trust, justice, and peace.

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 14-05 be approved with the following minor changes in recommendation one. [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strikethrough; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

1. [receive] [endorse] “A Moment of Truth: A Word of Faith and Hope from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering,” commending it to use by our presbyteries and congregations as [an advocacy tool] [a resource for education, worship, and advocacy for both its theological understanding of sin and hope and its brave call for solidarity in non-violent economic witness for change];

Rationale

The proposed amendment reflects the language of the Middle East Study Committee’s Report, “Breaking Down the Walls,” particularly in recommendation 3.f. and the overture’s specific concern that the call for action in “A Moment of Truth” not be separated from its theology. It is because of the brave support for boycott, divestment, and sanctions focused on the occupation that some have criticized the signers of “A Moment of Truth,” perhaps not knowing of the constant institutional pressure that all church leaders labor under in Palestine. While the spectacle of persons in comfortable locations criticizing the non-violent spirituality of those under military occupation is jarring, the relevance of non-violent strategies found effective in the South African liberation struggle is undeniable. The ecumenical consensus represented by the document’s supporters is also significant.
By taking the name, “Kairos Palestine,” the church leaders are invoking the memory of a South African Kairos statement from 1985, though they are choosing non-violence and do not use the word “apartheid” in the document. (South African church leaders, responding to “A Moment of Truth,” use the word and analyze the occupation from that angle; see http://www.oikoumene.org/gc/resources/documents/other-ecumenical-bodies/south-african-response-to-kairos-palestine-document.html.) What is less known is that the term kairos gained currency in the Kairos Circle of 1930’s Germany where theologian Paul Tillich and other Christians worked with Jews in resisting totalitarian forces.

The second part of the overture, if approved, may help Palestinian Christians not be mischaracterized as supersessionists (seeing Christianity as superior and replacing Judaism), or linked to fundamentalism in their understandings of land or peoplehood. As a document, “A Moment of Truth” includes emphasis on the dignity of adversaries and self-criticism. But above all, “A Moment of Truth” cannot fairly be termed hateful or anti-Semitic in its legitimate criticism of Israeli government policies and constant effort to look forward to a reconciled future that involves two peoples and three faiths at peace. In “endorsing” this text, the General Assembly would be pointing to its value as a witness for both resistance and reconciliation, understanding it as the self-description of besieged Christians at a crucial moment.

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 14-05 be approved.

Rationale

This report should be received by the PC(USA) because it is critical to hear from all voices, including Palestinian Christians. The ACREC believes that whenever and wherever our brothers and sisters in faith justly call out for solidarity in a time of challenge when they are resisting occupation, we must heartily support them with the love that Jesus taught. “… Love one another as I have loved you” (Jn. 15:12).

This call from the Palestinian Christians makes a moral claim on us to which we cannot turn our backs; our response will determine the integrity of the church. If some doubt persists, we must ask ourselves if this call for solidarity were from any other part of the world, would we hesitate to give our support? The ACREC is persuaded that nothing trumps God’s call for justice. “… What does the LORD require of you but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God” (Mic. 6:8).

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 14-05

Comment on Item 14-05—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

Known as “Kairos Palestine,” this statement comes to us from the anguished hearts of our partners in Israel and Palestine. These are the Christians with whom our church has been engaged in mission and witness for many decades: Evangelical Lutherans and Reformed, Episcopalians, Orthodox and Catholics. It has been supported by our wider circle of Christian partners in the region, all four families of churches.

The document reflects a theological, spiritual, and missiological stance, and reaches out from the community’s profound chronic pain and tenacious affirmation of love. It communicates the truth they live, the hope they breathe, and the faith that sustains them.

First, we thank our Christian brothers and sisters for sharing their cry with us, and affirm our relationship and the church’s solidarity with them in their struggle for a just peace.

In the spirit of partnership that frames our mission relationship and our witness to truth, faith, and hope, Presbyterian World Mission commends “Kairos Palestine” to Presbyterians across the church for study, and draws the attention of the 219th General Assembly (2010) commissioners and delegates to the report of the Middle East Study Committee titled “Breaking Down the Walls” (Item 14-08), especially to the references made to this Kairos document.

On Middle East Peacemaking—From the Presbytery of San Joaquin.

The Presbytery of San Joaquin overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to answer all overtures concerning Israel and Palestine with the following actions:
1. That the 219th General Assembly (2010) approves the following statement:

The Arab-Israeli conflict presents an unprecedented level of complexity amid constantly changing political conditions in the region. Thus the best course of action for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is to defer from taking positions or making policy statements that appear to favor either side in the conflict.

We call upon the leadership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to use our limited resources and influence to direct our specific involvement as peacemakers to:

• offer our prayers to God for the success of all peaceful efforts;
• support peacemakers who encourage tolerance and reconciliation;
• advocate for the process of establishing a step-by-step, negotiated, two-state Israel/Palestine solution;
• condemn all acts of terrorism and unwarranted violence;
• provide humanitarian assistance to innocent victims of the conflict.

As we witness for peace in this manner, we will defer from taking actions or making statements that align the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with unilateral support for any of the specific parties involved in the struggle.

2. The 219th General Assembly (2010) also instructs the General Assembly Mission Council to ensure that staff, council members, entities, affiliated organizations, and networks abide by these directives.

3. The 219th General Assembly (2010) urges the church to pledge its constant prayers and conscientious support for the overall welfare of all the peoples in the Middle East, and indeed for the world.

Rationale

The 217th General Assembly (2006) overwhelmingly approved an approach to Middle East peacemaking that singled out neither the Palestinian Authority nor Israel for condemnation.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) resolution, as approved, rejected a process of divestment that singled out the State of Israel. Instead, it encouraged affirmative investment and engagement as the most constructive means to achieve “positive outcomes” for peace and stability in the region.

The goal, as approved, would result in the “… creation of a socially, economically, geographically, and politically viable and secure Palestinian state, alongside an equally viable and secure Israeli state, both of which have a right to exist” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 945, section 3.c.).

The resolution delegated to the church’s Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) committee the task of implementing some aspects of this policy, in full recognition of the complexities and the difficulties confronting peacemakers on both sides in a rapidly evolving situation in the region.

Since then, Hamas and Hizbollah continue to advocate the destruction of Israel and continue to reject a two-state solution advocated by, among others, the United Nations, the United States, the European Union, and Fatah. The prospect for an early peace in the region greatly deteriorated with tragic consequences in both Israel and Lebanon following the initiation of military combat operations by Hizbollah from its base in Lebanon, the continuation of military operations of Hamas and Fatah in Gaza against each other, and military operations of Hamas against the Israelis, the latter primarily in the form of thousands of increasingly destructive rocket attacks on Israeli cities and towns.

The cumulative effect has been one of an escalation of violence in the region, further isolation of the Gaza Strip by Israel, military retaliation strikes by Israel against terrorists, an increase of internecine Palestinian fighting, and the creation of a humanitarian and health crisis for the residents of the region. There has also been a concomitant increase in risk of life for Palestinian Christians residing in the Gaza Strip.

Any statement of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) policy or action by its entities that has the appearance of unilateral alignment or support of either side in the Arab/Israeli conflict will be counter-productive to achieving the positive peacemaking results we all desire. It may, instead, set back the efforts of those committed to working for lasting peace in the region.

Therefore, by this action the 219th General Assembly (2010) seeks to provide continued encouragement for all peacemakers and persons of good will who desire and support constructive efforts to achieve a negotiated peace.

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 14-06 be disapproved.
The overture’s call for prayer, support for peacemakers, continued condemnation of all acts of terrorism and unwarranted violence, and humanitarian assistance are laudable and affirm existing policies of the General Assembly. It is not clear, however, that the Arab-Israeli conflict presents an unprecedented level of complexity, nor is it clear that the political conditions in the region are subject to greater change than other parts of this troubled world. More problematic is the possibility that adopting the statement proposed in this overture risks alienating or even abandoning partner churches in the Middle East who turn to the PC(USA) regularly for advice and support on questions of justice and peace in the region. Furthermore, this statement implies that the church should turn a blind eye to violations of U.S. and international laws that protect non-combatants. Ultimately, the failure to advocate for the protection of non-combatants is to back away from our commitment to be peacemakers.

On Iraq—From the Presbytery of Providence.

The Presbytery of Providence respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

A. Pray for

1. the churches in Iraq—the Reformed and Presbyterian Churches in Basrah, Baghdad, Mosul, and Kirkuk; the Chaldean Catholic, the Armenian Orthodox and Catholic, the Assyrian, and the Greek Orthodox Churches—as they strive to survive and witness during the chaotic period of rebuilding their nation and their churches;

2. all who grieve, both Iraqis and internationals, because of lost loved ones and those who have suffered from the hostilities;

3. all Iraqis that they may rebuild a nation that promotes the highest potential of all its citizens and responds to the continuing special needs of those who are displaced or refugees from warfare;

4. all refugees, both internally and externally displaced, who have often been forced from their homes by fear and threats of violence, that they may soon be able to resume their lives in safety and health.

B. Commend

1. the agencies of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) for making available members of our partner churches in Iraq to inform us about their churches’ life and witness, at national gatherings such as the Big Tent and the Presbyterian Women’s Triennium, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program’s International Peacemakers, and the Iraq Partnership Network; and we urge the GAMC to use these and other means to continue to inform us about the life and witness of our partners in Iraq, the ways in which we may support them, and ways in which our partners may help us better understand our mission; *

2. [Commend the practical and proactive initiatives of the Iraqi churches to serve their neighbors and contribute to the rebuilding of Iraq and Presbyterian Women for designating the Kirkuk Church Kindergarten and Child Care Center as a recipient of the 2010 Birthday Offering grant] [helping to provide education for children in Iraq];

3. Congregations and individuals that have special ministries with Iraqi refugees, recognizing the connection between spiritual and other human needs.

C. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to empower and equip presbyteries and congregations as they respond to the spiritual and material needs of Iraqi refugees arriving in the United States, including increased collaboration between Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and the office of Middle Eastern Congregational Support to provide a holistic approach to this outreach ministry; and also direct the GAMC to work proactively with our regional partners as they respond to the ongoing needs of Iraqi refugees in the host countries in the Middle East. *

D. Urge the GAMC to continue to provide spiritual and psychological services for those now or previously in military service related to Iraq, as well as to those who now or previously resisted military service in Iraq for reasons of conscience. *

[E. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to study and report back to the General Assembly the relationship between the expenditures for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and the economic conditions in the U.S.]
including those who benefit from these expenditures, those sectors that are disadvantaged, and providing a theological and practical discussion from the Reformed perspective. [*]

[These assume no additional budget is needed, and that the activities will reflect the priorities of the General Assembly.]

[F. E.] Direct the Stated Clerk to call upon the church, its congregations and presbyteries to:

1. pray for the effectiveness of our national leaders in making peace;

2. encourage presbyteries to develop linkages between their congregations and agencies that assist in the relocation of Iraqi refugees in the United States;

3. commend the U.S. government for [taking necessary steps to protect noncombatant Kurdish and other civilians in Northern Iraq from Turkish and Iranian military action that has resulted in damage to property and persons in that region.]

[a. responding to the massive Iraqi refugee situation;

[b. taking steps to return troops from combat;

[c. giving support to returned troops and their families;

[d. giving political and economic support toward rebuilding Iraq as an independent nation.]

4. urge the U.S. government to maintain its commitments to:

[d. make available sufficient U.S. funds for the repatriation and resettlement of Iraqi refugees and for the postwar reconstruction of Iraq;

[e. reduce the time that it takes to process refugees coming to the U.S.; [and]

[f. ensure that sufficient funds are provided for medical and psychological treatment of returning military personnel[.]

[g. protect civilian populations from harm, particularly in the northern part of Iraq, due to long-standing hostilities among militant, governmental, economic, ethnic, and religious groups; and carry out its stated policy of engaging all sides involved in a conflict by following that policy in order to find peaceful ways to resolve their differences.]

[G. F.] Direct the Stated Clerk to send this overture to the synods, presbyteries, and churches in the most practical manner as soon as possible, requesting their concurrence and active participation in these ministries, especially in association with ecumenical and interfaith partners.

Rationale

“Greetings from [Iraq] in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ! Thank you for your concern and follow-up on our church situation in [Iraq], and also I would like to thank all brothers in faith who support us and pray for our safety. … Due to the occupation of Iraq in 2003 which resulted in loss of security, our country is considered [to have] the highest in number of orphans. … We need your prayers, so that God may give us enough strength to stand with these difficult circumstances.”

This is typical of the greetings from Iraqi Presbyterians, who live in the spirit of Paul’s words: “… as dying, and see—we are alive; as punished, and yet not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing everything” (2 Cor. 6:9–10). We note with sadness that killing has taken place. One elder was deliberately killed and another, who had been deliberately shot and later threatened, fled the country. Half of Iraqi Christians have become internally displaced or refugees; they are among several million Iraqis whose lives have been terribly disrupted.

Those that remain persevere with worship in their sanctuaries where possible or in their homes. They continue programs for children, youth, and women, and with community activities such as prison visitation, kindergartens for children with families and for orphans, a radio station, and a medical clinic.
The suffering includes other Christian churches, all other Iraqis, and those who have served with the military forces. Concern for those who grieve and for those who will spend their lifetimes with painful memories and physical and psychological challenges will need to be expressed as long as we live.

The refugees, who languish in host countries in the Middle East and those who find new beginnings in the United States, will continue to need our attention to their spiritual, psychological, and physical needs for a long time. Greater coordination among GAMC offices, presbyteries, and congregations will increase the caring and advocacy ministries that we are committed to provide, both in the host countries and in the U.S. Because processing refugees takes from eight to eighteen months, whatever we can do to encourage the government to speed up the process is helpful.

Previous studies related to Iraq, most recently “To Repent, to Restore, to Rebuild, and to Reconcile: A Study Paper on Lessons Learned and Directions Toward Peace in Iraq,” received by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and commended for study, have a solid basis in Reformed theology and practice, citing, for instance, the linkage between peace and justice in the Confession of 1967 (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp.1203–19). To bring these up to the present, a study relating U.S. expenses for war to economic justice would be very helpful.

Commitments and agreements with Iraqis have been made during the previous and current U.S. administrations; on behalf of both the Iraqi and the U.S. military forces, public support is advisable and necessary.

At the end of 2009, of the $52.8 billion allocated for reconstruction, $39.54 billion had been spent, with half of that going for security needs, not reconstruction or development. As this funding is anticipated to end by 2014, it is appropriate to call for a level of funding that will overcome much of the destruction caused by the war, similar to the Marshall Plan following WWII.

This overture brings up-to-date the overture on Iraq approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) (Item 11-10), which states, for instance, in paragraph five: “Call upon the United States government to develop and implement a lasting peaceful solution, responsibly bringing the troops home, and reaffirm the call of the 216th General Assembly (2004) for the United States government to engage with the international community through the United Nations and other international agencies to cooperate with the government of Iraq in providing security, peacekeeping forces, and funding the rebuilding of the country” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1159).

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 14-07 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“E. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to study and report back to the [220th] General Assembly [(2012) on the costs and related impacts of the Iraq War, including] the relationship between the expenditures for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and the economic conditions [in the U.S.] [of the United States], [including those who benefit from these expenditures, those sectors that are disadvantaged, and providing a theological and practical discussion from the Reformed perspective] [which sectors benefited from war expenditure and which were disadvantaged by it, along with a Reformed theological, ethical and practical summary assessment.]

“G. Direct the Stated Clerk to send this overture to the synods, presbyteries, and churches in the most practical manner as soon as possible, requesting their concurrence and active participation in these ministries, especially in association with ecumenical and interfaith partners [and, in coordination with the Washington Office, to communicate particularly the content of section F.4. to the President of the United States and appropriate government agencies and representatives].

Providence Presbytery calls for a thorough list of actions appropriate to the range of relationships with and needs of the Iraqi people, praying and caring for the Christian community and other minorities, remembering the refugees and internally displaced to be resettled—more in the U.S., and including the needs of U.S. military veterans wounded in the war and occupation. It encourages a holistic ministry response that includes theological reflection and practical analysis of the impact of the long-running and very costly conflict. The overture’s rationale shows a careful reading of previous policy on the Iraq war and an awareness of the church’s mission capabilities and experience. There is no doubt but that the elders and pastors leading the remaining Presbyterian churches in Iraq deserve our prayer and admiration for their bravery and sacrifices.

On the particular section that calls for a study by the ACSWP, the overture assumes that such work will be done with no additional monies. While the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy can prepare the study requested, it would be done without the appointment of a separate study committee but could involve consulting with one or more economists. This work would complement a larger updating of peace thinking in the church (see the Advice and Counsel on Items 13-11, 13-07, and others) and, if that larger participatory process is approved, it may be that economists who have studied the war’s impact can be found in academic institutions involved in that process.

GAMC COMMENT ON 14-07

Comment on 14-07—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

Recommendation B.1. of Item 14-07 “... urge[s] the GAMC to use these and other means to continue to inform us about the life and witness of our partners in Iraq, the ways in which we may support them, and ways in which our partners may help us better understand our mission” (Item 14-07).

Presbyterian World Mission is pleased that the Rev. Haitham Jazrawi, Pastor of the Evangelical Church of Kirkuk and Moderator of the Evangelical (Presbyterian) Church of Iraq, plans to attend the 219th General Assembly as an “Ecumenical Representative,” if he is granted a United States visa. This should be an important opportunity for the Commissioners, Advis-sory Delegates, and guests of the assembly to greet our partner, and to hear first-hand about the opportunities and challenges the Presbyterian and other churches of Iraq are facing. World Mission has also facilitated an invitation to an Iraqi Presbyterian to spend a month with the Synod of the Covenant in October 2010, as part of the Synod’s “Mission to the U.S.A.” program.

The latter half of Recommendation C asks that the General Assembly “… also direct the GAMC to work proactively with our regional partners as they respond to the ongoing needs of Iraqi refugees in the host countries in the Middle East”
(Item 14-07).

In the wake of the Iraq War, in 2003, Presbyterian World Mission (at that time known as Worldwide Ministries Division) established an extra commitment opportunity (ECO) account, #E051722, as the “Peace Fund for Solidarity with the Churches of Iraq.” The fund, which has so far elicited a significant response approaching $200,000 over seven years, has continued to be used to support the life and ministry of our partner churches in Iraq. That ministry included, among other programs, a variety of ways to assist families and individuals displaced in the country, and for many who had to flee.

Portions of the “Peace Fund for Solidarity” were forwarded to the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon to provide a variety of ministries to Iraqi refugees who ended up in Syria and Lebanon. Similarly, contributions were forwarded to the Middle East Council of Churches, Jordan Liaison Office, to serve the needs of Iraqi refugees in that country. A few Presbyterian families have also landed in Western European countries, where partner churches were contacted for help.

The World Mission-related Iraq Partnership Network (IPN) adopted as one of its priorities the support of the church’s work with Iraqi refugees, for which it raised some funds. In the fall of 2008, twenty-two members of the IPN traveled to Syria and met with leaders from the churches of Iraq and some Iraqi refugee families, to consult on how best to continue in ministry with them. This overture captures the inspiration of that encounter, and urges the PC(USA) to help share in a ministry of support to displaced families, with the aim of helping as many refugees as possible to return to a secure and stable homeland, and to a thriving church.

Recommendation C also asks that the General Assembly “[d]irect the [GAMC] to empower and equip presbyteries and congregations as they respond to the spiritual and material needs of Iraqi refugees arriving in the United States, including increased collaboration between Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and the office of Middle Eastern Congregational Support to provide a holistic approach to this outreach ministry …” (Item 14-07).

The Office of Middle Eastern Congregational Support assists presbyteries in establishing worshiping communities, including Bible Study Fellowships and New Church Developments (NCDs), in order to meet the spiritual needs of immigrants from the Middle East, including refugees from Iraq. Many of these Presbyterian worshiping communities in the United States lack the capacity to provide material assistance to the influx of Iraqi refugees. There are about fifty such fellowships, NCDs, and congregations in the PC(USA).

“Breaking Down the Walls”—From the Middle East Study Committee.

In service to its ever-linked concerns for peace and justice in Palestine and Israel, and its concern for the enduring integrity and witness of the Christian Church there and in the United States, the Middle East Study Committee recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following recommendations:
1. Affirmation of Human Rights & Moral Principles

In accordance with past policy statements and the theological-ethical bases of our confessions, the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms the following human rights, moral principles, and goals guiding its recommendations:

a. The human right to self-determination through free elections and the rule of law, including the right to enjoy such basic freedoms as those of speech, press, and assembly.

b. The human right to religious freedom, including full access to religious sites and freedom from all discriminatory practices based on religious identity.

c. Those additional rights enumerated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and international human rights conventions, including the principle of universal jurisdiction.

d. The moral principle of applying humanitarian laws regarding warfare to all nations. These laws protect civilians and nonmilitary facilities prohibit such internationally recognized violations as the use of anti-personnel weapons and weapons of mass destruction, the assassination of political opponents, collective punishment, detention without due process, and the torture or abuse of prisoners.

e. The moral principle of applying these same humanitarian laws regarding warfare to nongovernmental combatants as well. These laws prohibit such practices as suicide bombing, kidnapping, shelling civilian populations, and torturing or abusing prisoners.

f. The moral principle of granting to Red Cross, Star, or Crescent inspection teams access to all prison facilities.

g. The moral principle that all refugees have an individual right to return or to adjudicate or negotiate compensation for the loss of home and homeland, wherever those may be.

h. The moral goal for nations to create a nuclear-free world and, toward that goal, to sign and comply with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and other relevant treaties.

i. The moral goal of demilitarizing conflict situations to levels consistent with a state’s or people’s right to self-defense.

j. The moral principle of respecting United Nations observers and peacekeeping forces and imposing disciplinary sanctions when nations or entities target UN facilities and personnel.

k. The moral principle of nonintervention in, noninterference with, and non-destabilization of other countries.

2. Affirmation of Previous General Assembly Policies & Statements

Given the daunting and mounting obstacles to the viability of a “two-state solution,” and following from the above principles, the 219th General Assembly (2010) affirms with greater urgency our historic Presbyterian stances with specific regard to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, calling for

a. an immediate cessation of all violence, whether perpetrated by Israelis or Palestinians;

[b. the reaffirmation of Israel’s right to exist as a sovereign nation within secure and internationally recognized borders in accordance with United Nations resolutions.]

[b.] [c.] the end of the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories and diversion of water resources;

[c.] [d.] an immediate freeze both on the establishment or expansion of Israeli settlements in the West Bank and on the Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land and buildings in East Jerusalem;

[d.] [e.] the relocation by Israel of the Separation Barrier to the 1967 border;

[e.] [f.] the withholding of U.S. government aid to the state of Israel as long as Israel persists in creating new West Bank settlements;

[f.] [g.] continuing corporate engagement through the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment with companies profiting from the sale and use of their products for non-peaceful purposes and/or the violation of human rights;
[g.] a shared status for Jerusalem;

[h.] equal rights for Palestinian citizens of the state of Israel;

[i.] the cessation of systematic violation of human rights by any party, specifically, practices of administrative detention, collective punishment, the torture of prisoners and suspects, home demolitions and evictions, and the deportation of dissidents;

[j.] the immediate resumption by Israel and Palestine of negotiations toward a two-state solution.

3. For the Witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

a. Directs the General Assembly Mission Council to set 2010–2012 as a time of Presbyterian prayer and action for the Middle East, including: travel opportunities with a particular emphasis on visits with the Christian communities, study of Reformed theological understandings of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and of historical understandings that encompass various narratives and verifiable sources, itineration throughout the U.S. by Middle Eastern Christian partners, local dialogues and shared projects with American Jews and Muslims, participation in the ecumenical accompaniment program (EAPPI) in Palestine and Israel of the World Council of Churches, and robust publicity and promotion of these activities.

b. Authorizes the creation of a Monitoring Group on the Middle East for the next two years that will consist of seven people appointed by the current and immediately past Moderators in consultation with the GAMC staff persons responsible for global mission in the Middle East and for Interreligious Affairs to assist the appropriate General Assembly Mission Council offices and the Middle East staff team in monitoring progress and guiding actions to ensure adequate implementation of policy directions approved by this General Assembly, given the growing complexity and interrelatedness of issues in the region. (It is the understanding that the group would be convened, as necessary and helpful, via teleconferencing or other means incurring minimal expense.) This committee shall be appointed by the end of August 2010. The monitoring group shall include at least one but no more than two members of the existing Middle East Study Committee (MESC). New appointees shall be chosen on the basis of demonstrated experience with and knowledge of the complex dynamics of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict within the larger concerns of the Middle East, and shall together comprise an authentic balance representing the fullness of the spectrum of commitments within the PC(USA) toward the people and issues in the region.

c. Strongly denounces Caterpillar’s continued profit-making from non-peaceful uses of its products and presses Caterpillar to review carefully its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine and to take affirmative steps to end its complicity in the violation of human rights.

d. Calls on denominational agencies and entities, presbyteries, congregations, and individual members to invest positively, after due vetting, in sustainable economic development projects for the West Bank and Gaza (that do not support the occupation) sponsored by Palestinians or jointly by Palestinians and Israelis in equitable partnership.

e. Urges a visit to Israel/Palestine by a high-level joint delegation of Presbyterians (including representatives from the Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Foundation, and the General Assembly Mission Council) and appropriate counterparts in the American ecumenical, Jewish, and Muslim communities, with costs shared among the participating faith groups, for the purpose of identifying opportunities for positive investment, with a report back to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

f. [Endorses the Kairos Palestine document (“A Moment of Truth”) in its emphases on hope for liberation, nonviolence, love of enemy, and reconciliation; lifts the document up for study and discussion by Presbyterians; and directs the creation of a study guide for the document through the appropriate channel of the General Assembly Mission Council.] [Commends for study the Kairos Palestine document (“A Moment of Truth”), and endorses the document’s emphases on hope for liberation, nonviolence, love of enemy, and reconciliation. We lift up for study the often neglected voice of Palestinian Christians. We direct the monitoring group for the Middle East to create a study guide for the document].

g. Promotes contributions to Extra Commitment Opportunities for the support of Christian educational institutions throughout the region, especially in Lebanon and Iraq.

h. Encourages Presbyterians to travel to the region, especially Israel/Palestine, and when doing so to worship and visit with fellow Palestinian Christians, support Christian businesses, [seek to understand the range of narratives] engage Israeli Jews, Israeli Arabs, and Palestinian Muslims, and spend dedicated time in Israel and Palestine.
4. Urgent Actions Toward Justice and Peace in Israel, the Occupied Territories of Palestine, and Jerusalem

The 219th General Assembly (2010):

a. Advocates the immediate resumption of good faith negotiations to address comprehensively the issues of occupation, refugees, borders, shared status of Jerusalem, release of prisoners and detainees, and security, based on UN Security Council resolutions.

b. Calls on the U.S. government to exercise strategically its international influence, including [the possible withholding of military aid as a means of bringing Israel to] [making U.S. aid to Israel contingent upon Israel’s] compliance with international law and peacemaking efforts.

c. Calls upon Israel to release, without any further delay, withheld Palestinian tax moneys to the Palestinian National Authority.

d. [Calls on the Israeli government to end immediately its blockade of Gaza, and on the U.S. government to end any support it is giving to the blockade, and also calls on the Egyptian government to facilitate the passage of humanitarian supplies into Gaza as well as consumer goods from the strip.] [Calls on the Israeli and Egyptian governments to limit their blockade of Gaza solely to military equipment/devices and to guarantee adequate levels of food, medicine, building supplies, and other humanitarian items, and to allow free commercial exchange in and out of Gaza, and calls on the U.S. government to end any support for the blockade that interferes with the adequacy of such items or such exchange.]

e. Urges the main Palestinian political parties (Fatah and Hamas) to set aside their differences, to pursue an ideology of nonviolence, to reconcile immediately, and to work for peace with each other and with their neighbor, Israel, for the sake of their people, and also calls on the U.S. government to offer support for such reconciliation.

f. Supports the establishment of an international council for Jerusalem to ensure the nondiscriminatory treatment of all Jerusalemites, including fair allocation of housing and family unification permits, free movement of religious workers of all faiths, fair provision of city services in exchange for taxes, protection of all religious and historic sites, international scientific review of all archeological sites and labeling of historic sites, and equitably accessible mass transit from both Israeli and Palestinian areas and links to the West Bank and Gaza.

g. Encourages the participation of Palestinian and Israeli religious leaders (Christian, Jewish, Muslim, and Druze) to participate in the peace process and to lead efforts at reconciliation among both peoples, without governmental interference.

h. Calls for Bethlehem to be a free and open city accessible to all people.

5. Urgent Actions for a Comprehensive Peace with Justice in the Middle East

The 219th General Assembly (2010) does the following:

a. Calls on all parties in the Middle East, including Iran and Israel, to refrain from nuclear arms proliferation and to work actively and constructively toward a nuclear-free world especially in the Middle East, and calls on the U.S. to offer support for such a process.

b. Calls on all parties in the Middle East to cease rhetoric and actions that demonize others, whether that takes the form of anti-Semitism or Islamophobia, as well as rhetoric and actions that threaten the well-being of another nation or people. This includes threats by Iranians and members of Hamas and Hezbollah against Israel, sponsorship by Iran of Holocaust-denial conferences, Israeli efforts to deny the Nakba and threats of a mass transfer (expulsion) of the Palestinians into Jordan or elsewhere, and the perpetuation of maps and textbooks that deny the existence of internationally recognized borders, states, and occupied territories.

c. Commends as a model to all nations in the region the joint efforts of Bethlehem, Syracuse, and Tel Aviv universities to examine current Israeli and Palestinian government textbooks for existing biases and inaccuracies and encourages the application of the same examination to textbooks used in private religious schools, be they Christian, Jewish, or Muslim.

d. Condemns, as a matter of principle, the interference of one government in the internal politics of another country, such as Iranian support for Hamas and Hezbollah, American complicity in the Israeli occupation, Syrian interference in the Lebanese political process, and Egyptian collaboration in the enforcement of the blockade of Gaza.

e. Calls on the Lebanese government to address immediately the plight of Palestinian refugees living within its borders, providing them with access to work and the democratic process.
f. Calls on the Syrian and Israeli governments to resume negotiations toward a resolution of the Golan Heights occupation and security issues and calls upon the governments of the U.S. and Turkey to support these negotiations.

g. Commends the bravery and courage of Iranians who have taken to the streets peacefully to demand their democratic rights and calls on the Iranian government to cease its repression of democratic and religious freedoms.

h. Calls on the U.S. government to exercise strategically its international influence and the withholding of financial, economic, and military aid to countries other than Israel, as we might with Israel, until such a time as the civil, religious, and other freedoms of their peoples are fully exercised; and to end U.S. taxpayer support for regimes that perpetuate inequality and popular frustration.

i. Supports an accelerated shift of Iraq occupation activities to effective reconstruction, and the allocation of significant ongoing monetary reparations to help resettle refugees and those internally displaced, compensate victims and survivors of violence, and restore economic sovereignty and productivity to its oil industry.

6. Addressing Our Own Government

For U.S. government policy to fulfill its “honest broker” aspirations and honor a region-wide human rights agenda, the 219th General Assembly (2010):

a. Calls on the U.S. government to repent of its sinful behavior vis-a-vis the Middle East, including its ongoing war in Iraq, its selectively undermining or supporting the democratic process in such places as Iran and the Palestinian National Authority, its continuing support of nondemocratic regimes for the sake of oil or leverage over oil, or its involvement with security services and contractors who engage in torture, surveillance, and other human rights violations.

b. Calls on the U.S. government to eliminate existing loopholes in tax codes that permit its citizens to make donations to organizations that support human rights violations and breaches of international law and UN Security Council resolutions—particularly those loopholes that allow tax-deductible donations that financially support the Israeli settlement enterprise on occupied territory or Palestinian militant groups.

c. Calls on the U.S. government to give a thorough accounting to its citizenry as to the amounts of its foreign aid to countries in the Middle East that have been used by the recipient nations to finance human rights violations, breaches of international law and UN Security Council Resolutions, ; and to redirect adequate allocations of aid toward (1) the rebuilding of Gaza and humanitarian assistance for its people, and (2) Palestinian reuse or dismantling of the remaining settlement infrastructure following the establishment of a Palestinian state.

d. Calls on the U.S. government to work with other governments to provide reconstruction aid with assurances that there would be no further destruction of infrastructure provided by this aid.

e. Call on the U.S. government to pursue the goal of guaranteeing continued security for Israel from an atmosphere of fear of rocket attacks or other forms of violence, while the U.S. also addresses the Palestinian needs for security and a just resolution of the conflict with Israel.

7. Concerning Christian Presence in the Middle East

For tolerance of religious pluralism, freedom of worship, and protection of Christian communities and in line with principles stated above, the 219th General Assembly (2010):

a. Views with respect the integrity of the religious faiths of Jews, Muslims, and other peoples, the value of noncoercion in religious life, and the benefits of public toleration of religious diversity to diminish extremism, discrimination, and bigotry.

b. Recognizes the current role Christian communities play in helping preserve cultural diversity, historical awareness, and political freedom.

c. Expresses its alarm at increasing waves of Christian emigration thus diminishing Christian presence and witness in the Middle East, and cites as positive counter-examples the inclusion and fuller participation of Christians in Syrian and Jordanian societies.

d. Calls on the government of Iraq to strengthen the protection of minority communities, especially Christian communities under threat, within contexts of increasing protection for all citizens.
e. Recognizes the efforts made by the Egyptian government and civil society to ease the growing climate of tension between the country’s Christians and Muslims, and urges that the root causes of fear, anger, and the growing incidence of violent outbreaks be addressed, in order to restore mutual trust and to enable all citizens to enjoy their full and equal rights.

f. Urges the government of Israel to honor family reunification of Christians and others, to provide permits for home construction and improvement without discrimination for all its citizens and those Christians and Muslims under its occupation, to apply the 1967 Protection of Holy Sites law equitably, and to extend religious freedoms as described in Recommendation IV.f. throughout Israel without discrimination and prejudice against non-Jews.

8. Engaging This Report

The 219th General Assembly (2010):

[a. Approves Part One of the report (Introduction; Letters to Our Church, Partners, and Engaged Parties; Biblical Theological Reflections; ‘What We Have Seen and Heard’).

[b. Receives Part Three (I. Notes from a Humanistic, Liberal Zionist: A Personal Narrative; II. A Plea for Justice: A Historical Analysis; and the Appendices) and commends it to the church for study.

[c. Authorizes the creation of a study guide by the monitoring group (see Recommendation 3.b.).]

[d. Receives Part One of this report (Introduction; Letters to Our Church, Partners, and Engaged Parties; Biblical Theological Reflections; ‘What We Have Seen and Heard’) as rationale for recommendations only, not as policy.

[b. Delete Part Three, Items A and B (A. Notes from a Humanistic, Liberal Zionist: A Personal Narrative; B. A Plea for Justice: A Historical Analysis), and replace with a series of eight narratives of comparable length, four arising from the range of authentically Palestinian perspectives (including both Christian and Muslim), and four arising from the range of authentic Israeli perspectives, along with an annotated bibliography for additional understanding about the breadth and depth of both authentically Palestinian and Israeli spectrum of perspectives but above all authentically pro-justice and pro-peace. These narratives and the bibliography will be collected and approved by the Monitoring Group on the Middle East.)”

Rationale

The mandate for this study is the action of the 218th General Assembly (2008): “to prepare a comprehensive study, with recommendations, that is focused on Israel/Palestine within the complex context of the Middle East” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1226). The complex context includes two, ongoing wars, one in Iraq and one in Afghanistan and the northwest border regions of Pakistan, wars that, like the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, involve issues of U.S. involvement, a use of force, an occupation, and religious tension. The context also includes ongoing struggles within particular nations: between religious and ethnic groups in Iraq and to a lesser extent in Lebanon; between the rulers and the ruled in Egypt and several other Arab countries; between the native-born and the guest workers in the Gulf region; between political factions in Palestine; between Israelis and Palestinians in Israel; between the ideals of democracy and theocracy in Iran, Israel, and Palestine; and between forces of modernization and tradition in all countries. The undue influence of outside forces continues a history of colonial interference throughout the Middle East. Yet most expert observers and popular opinion polls confirm that the Israeli-Palestinian struggle is playing a central role in exacerbating region-wide grief and grievance.

Even as this is a statement addressed first to Presbyterians and to the government of our own nation, the United States, it is also an invitation to respectful and frank conversation addressed to other Christians, to Jews, and to Muslims both here and abroad, and to persons of every nation who seriously seek peace. Still because religious faith is to be lived out in an obedience of thoughts and deeds, our study does recommend to Presbyterians specific policies and particular actions.

To summarize at the outset our principal concerns, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to strengthen its past positions on behalf of peace between Israelis and Palestinians and the cessation of violence by all parties, and its opposition to Israel’s ongoing expansion of Jewish settlements in the West Bank and East Jerusalem and its continuing occupation of those territories. We also call upon the various Palestinian political factions to negotiate a unified government prepared to recognize Israel’s existence. We proclaim our alarm and dismay: both over the increasingly rapid exodus of Christians from Israel/Palestine caused by anti-Palestinian discrimination and oppression, the growth of Islamic and Jewish fundamentalism, and the occupation-related absence of economic opportunity; and also over the exodus of Christians from other parts of the region caused by various military, economic, religious, and cultural factors. And we oppose the government of Iran’s nuclear ambitions, its sponsorship of international guerilla warfare, and the threat these pose both to Israel and to Arab states.

We deeply value our relationships with Jews and Muslims in the United States, Israel, and the predominantly Muslim countries of the Middle East. Yet the bonds of friendship must neither prevent us from speaking nor limit our empathy for the suffering of others. Inaction and silence on our part enable actions we oppose and consequences we grieve. We recognize how great a burden past misguided actions by our government have placed on Christians throughout the Muslim world. We recognize that massive amounts of U.S tax money are feeding the various conflicts in the Middle East—including two current wars of arguable necessity and Jewish settlements in Palestine.

We also recognize that our concern to end support for both violence in all its forms and the ongoing occupation and settlement of Palestine places demands of integrity on how the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) uses its own resources and investments. Let us be clear: we do affirm the legitimacy of Israel as a state, but consider the continuing occupation of Palestine (West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem) to be illegitimate, illegal under international law, and an enduring threat to peace in the region. Furthermore, we recognize that any support for that occupation weakens the moral standing of our nation internationally and our security.

Given the complexities of the issues of the Middle East and the diversity of this study committee, it was inconceivable that we achieve unanimity on all the details of the report’s recommendations. However, every good faith effort has been made to negotiate differences, honor majorities, and come to consensus without forsaking our deepest convictions.

Breaking Down the Walls

Part One: We Bear Witness

A. Introduction

Increasingly, we find that we are living in a world with numerous walls and barriers. These are walls that force us to live in sometimes small and isolated compartments. These walls and the resulting compartments often prevent us from seeing and understanding the lives of others who live in different compartments or on the other side of the wall from us. These walls are leading many to live in fear, isolation, and poverty; therefore, preventing all parties from living in peace.

This is no more obvious than with the conflict in Israel and Palestine. Ideological, theological, political, economic, and even physical walls have been erected that are preventing the establishment of a just peace in the Middle East.

Our Presbyterian confessions clearly affirm God’s reconciling work in Jesus Christ and the church’s mission of reconciliation as being the heart of the gospel. Since Christ “... has broken down the dividing wall, that is, the hostility between us,” we are entrusted as “ambassadors of Christ” with this “message of reconciliation.” We are called to be those who work to break down these walls that stand in the way of the realization of God’s peaceful and just kingdom.

The Middle East Study Committee of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), which was mandated by our 218th General Assembly (2008) and appointed by our current and two previous Moderators, has taken seriously this gospel mandate of seeking to break through these walls of hostility and to envision appropriate steps that we recommend which our church, our nation, and the other parties involved in this conflict take.

Our voice is one, which is priestly, prophetic, and pastoral. The first voice that will be heard in this report is a priestly voice speaking of our theological understanding of justice, Zion, the land, and reconciliation. The next voice is both prophetic and pastoral. Prophets and pastors are called first and foremost to truth telling. From the vast experiences and study of the members of this committee, from numerous meetings with people and leaders of diverse communities throughout the Middle East (including Iraqi and Iranian church leaders), from meetings with political and religious leaders in Washington and New York with a wide spectrum of perspectives, from debating and challenging one another, and from traveling together for two weeks in the Middle East, we strive in this report to tell the truth as we see it and understand it. Based on this, we are compelled to speak pastorally to ourselves as a denomination and our partners in the region, and prophetically to other powers engaged in this ongoing conflict.

Our voice is one that has a definite sense of urgency. The time for action from all parties is now. We are witnessing a rapidly closing window of opportunity for action. Events are happening every day now in Israel and Palestine and the Middle East that are making it increasingly difficult to bring about this just peace for which we all pray. If we do not act now, our fear is that we will all look back with deep regret and shameful guilt. Our spirit, though, is not one of fear, but rather of hope. We do believe that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) will once again speak with a clear, priestly, prophetic, and pastoral voice.

Our prayer is that the 219th General Assembly (2010) and our Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will seriously and prayerfully discuss and approve the contents of this report, embrace the recommended actions, and recommit our church to being an agent of reconciliation—to being a church that will wholeheartedly work to break down the ideological, theological, economic, and political walls that stand in the way of a just peace. It is also our prayer that the whole church will then engage in a thoughtful and prayerful study of this report with a view to taking significant actions toward fulfilling God’s vision of peace for all peoples.

B. Letters to Our Church, Partners, and Engaged Parties

Each of the following eight letters is addressed to one of the various parties with whom we are engaged in this discussion of the Israel-Palestine conflict. The letters are written primarily with a pastoral voice in the hope that each of these parties will continue to be fully engaged with us in our common struggle for a just peace.

1. Presbyterian Brothers and Sisters in Christ

Letter to Our Presbyterian Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

We come to this work hoping that we have brought Reformed theology, historical Presbyterian positions, and the present realities together in a way that gives honor and glory to Christ. This work is for his sake, and is intended to strengthen the conversation within the family. And we have been grateful to so many of you who have prayed for us and our ministry in this endeavor.

The Moderators of the 216th, 217th, and 218th General Assemblies (2004, 2006, and 2008) appointed us to “prepare a comprehensive study, with recommendations, that is focused on Israel/Palestine within the complex context of the Middle East” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1226) and to report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

There is much in our work that commends you to engagement with the issues of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict within the context of the broader Middle East. Above all, we want you to share our alarm at the continuing decline of the Christian community in the region. Through our work as a committee, we have had the gift of visiting with our partner churches and organizations. And we have grown in our appreciation for what the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has done through the centuries to encourage, nurture, and strengthen these ancient communities who are our spiritual forebears. The time is critical, however, to continue that strong tradition for the sake of the gospel in the region of its birth.

There is much more in our report, however. And this work has been done with careful research, deliberation, and prayer. We hope that it will invite you in, that it may be an entry for your own study of the Middle East. And in our recommendations, we have offered tools that we think will assist us all in this endeavor. To the best of our ability, we have striven to bring a balance between the pastoral, priestly, and prophetic roles of our church’s calling.

We are also aware that our recommendations have a much wider audience beyond the membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) who will be scrutinizing our work and ready to interpret it for their own means. Because of this, we have written other introductory letters that have a focus toward those constituencies. We are aware that such constituencies are far more diverse than any one letter could summarize. Even so, we hope that you will assist us by sharing these letters with those in your community to whom they are addressed. Our primary concern is that, no matter what the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) might say about the situation in the Middle East, we remain committed to a common cause toward justice and security for both sides, and breaking down dividing walls, even when we do not see eye-to-eye on matters of policy and practice.

May we continue to work together for the sake of all of God’s children.

2. American Brothers and Sisters in the Ecumenical Community

Letter to Our American Brothers and Sisters in the Ecumenical Community,

For many years, we have partnered with you through the National Council of Churches and World Council of Churches in matters of common concern in the Middle East. It is our hope that we can continue to do so. We are aware that our polities and structures are different. And while we do not always agree on details, we know that we share a common passion for the region and for the justice with peace.

Our practice has been to focus on those things that unite us; this not only makes sense practically, but also theologically. Now, with a regional situation that is so critical, and with a rapidly disintegrating hope for a two-state solution in Israel/Palestine, we think the time has come for us to study more closely those places where we might have different approaches so that we might challenge and encourage one another and grow in our unity for the sake of Christ our Lord. We also know, within your own polities, you continue to study the issues and make recommendations as well. There are subtle differences between our conclusions. And unfortunately, where we have disagreed on matters of practice and policy, this has become an opportunity for those who do not share our concern for all parties in the region to divide us and even to manipulate one denomination’s policy to criticize another denomination’s approach. Let us be of one voice.
In addition to what we in the United States have to say, there are the voices of our brothers and sisters in Christ in the Middle East. In our regional travels, we have been encouraged by their steadfastness, distressed by their challenges, and moved by their diversity, but also their unity. As their ecumenical voices have spoken, from the Amman Call to the Kairos Palestine document, the Middle Eastern Church has spoken clearly and directly to us. We ignore their voice at our own peril. Let us do all we can to show our oneness with them in Christ.

We know that you have been and continue to be engaged in the Middle East. Our hope is that our work will both encourage and challenge you and your members to deepen that engagement.

3. American Jewish Friends

Letter to Our American Jewish Friends,

For decades we have worked side-by-side in innumerable causes in our own nation for the sake of justice and human well-being. And yet, with the introduction of the corporate engagement process in 2004 (and the use of the word “divestment”), this relationship has been seriously tested.

We want to be sure to say to you in no uncertain terms: we support the existence of Israel as a sovereign nation within secure and recognized borders. No “but,” no “let’s get this out of the way so we can say what we really want to say.” We support Israel’s existence as granted by the U.N. General Assembly. We support Israel’s existence as a home for the Jewish people. We have said this before, and we say this again. We say it because we believe it; we say it because we want it to continue to be true.

And, at the same time, we are distressed by the continued policies that surround, sustain, and consolidate the occupation of the West Bank, East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip, and the Golan Heights, in particular. Many of us come to this work out of a love for Israel. And it is because of this love that we continue to say the things we say about the occupation, the settlement infrastructure, and the absolute death knell it is sounding for the hopes of a two-state solution, a solution that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has supported for more than sixty years.

We also want to make it clear that what we say in moral criticism of policies and actions of the Israeli government should not be used as a battering ram against Israel’s right to membership in the community of nations nor to deepen anti-Semitism or any categorical blame of the Jewish people for the ills of the world. As those whose faith originated in the synagogues of the Fertile Crescent, our love of our common heritage is precious. Anti-Semitism has no place in faithful Christian expression.

Our hope is that we can work together for a more just and secure Israel. We have found this to be possible with local networks more often than with national organizations within the mainstream Jewish community. We are hard-pressed to find statements from such organizations that are willing to oppose the occupation or the settlement policy that has dominated Israel since 1967. Even so, we are hopeful as organizations like J-Street, B’Tselem, Jewish Voice for Peace, and others continue to raise the banner that being pro-Israel and being truly Jewish is not tantamount to complicity in the excesses of Israeli policy. It is our hope that the leadership of mainstream American Jewish organizations will catch up with this growing reality of Jewish identity in the U.S.

We are aware that our report will likely draw such critiques as being “unfair” or “imbalanced.” We believe that our report, however, is quite fair. Our analysis, both through careful research and through our experience of being in the Middle East, is that Israel is the most powerful party to the conflict. Therefore, Israel has both the responsibility and the ability to reverse the course of the current precipitous decline throughout the region.

May we continue to pray, and work, for the peace of Jerusalem, the Middle East, and our world.

4. American Muslim Friends

Letter to Our American Muslim Friends,

Our relationship in the Western Hemisphere is a more recent one than that of our connection with our Jewish neighbors. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has worked through the years for increased interfaith understanding in Muslim-Christian relations, and will continue to do so. Our sponsorship of the Interfaith Listening Program, bringing Christian and Muslim leaders from around the world to the U.S. to model what our society might look like, is evidence of this.

We are also encouraged by the open letter to the Christian churches, “A Common Word Between Us and You.” Our church responded favorably and continues to encourage our members and congregations to explore common ground with our Muslim neighbors.

We have resisted those who have attempted to stoke the fires of cultural conflict. We are aware that American Muslims have come under more scrutiny, pressure, and, indeed, racism since the tragedies of September 11th. Violence is a phenomenon of the human condition, not the exclusive domain of any religion or people group, as our own Christian history attests. We hope that we can continue to explore ways we can work together to bring attention to these injustices and work together for a future in which all of humanity is granted the dignity it deserves.

We also challenge you, especially those of you in the West, to take seriously your call to be bridge builders: both within the Muslim world (e.g. between Shiite and Sunni) and between the East and West. We know that more, much more, can be done. And while we are deeply aware of our own complicity (both for historic Western colonial influence in the Middle East and for more recent American intervention in the region), we are hopeful that more can be done from within the Muslim world to address the ongoing divides that erode our humanity.

We are grateful for American Muslims who continue to decry violence perpetrated in the name of Islam. We want to partner with you in amplifying your voices. And we would like to hear more, including voices from those in the Middle East where, as in our own country, violence, too often, can be a watchword and where religion, too often, can be used as a battering ram. We look to you, as leaders of the Islamic world, to speak and act strongly on behalf of justice for all, including Christians and your fellow Muslims.

We hope that you hear these words of challenge as from those who seek mutual friendship. May the common words between us and you be love, peace, and justice.

5. Middle Eastern Brothers and Sisters in Christ

Letter to Our Middle Eastern Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

You are the living stones of the Church. You are the salt of the earth, giving flavor to the whole region, despite your numbers or proportions. We have visited with you. You have challenged us. You have welcomed us. And you have taught us immeasurably.

We cannot fully identify with the struggles of being a minority religious community. As American Christians, we are only recently coming to terms with the possibility that we, too, might have to face this reality. And so we have much more to learn from you and your model of faithfulness. And we cannot imagine the land of Christ devoid of the body of Christ. May our ongoing partnership be one that encourages your steadfast witness, not only on behalf of your own flocks, but on behalf of the worldwide body of Christ.

You cherish your national culture. This is a challenging word to us who can act as though the gospel originated in the West. And yet, as part of a society that has confused our culture with our faith at times, we feel that we have something to offer you. Be careful; be faithful. We often fall into the temptation to be more in line with culture. However, we also know that the gospel calls us to faithful obedience, even when facing risk to our own selves on behalf of Christ’s truth. But when the wider society advocates violence, or when it seeks to marginalize one group or another, our encouragement to you is to discern the Spirit’s call in the face of such circumstances. We pray that you will be led and strengthened in faithfulness.

To our Palestinian brothers and sisters in faith, we particularly want to commend the words above. We also want to commend you to unity. As Presbyterians, we have come to Israel and Palestine as partners; not seeking to establish our own congregations, but to support you in your continued witness. We pray for your unity. We encourage you not to compete over an increasingly shrinking number of Christians or over a decreasingly smaller influence in regional politics. We beseech you to remain focused on preaching Christ and him crucified, and risen. It is your own experience of his suffering that can teach us all. We will do what we can do amplify the word you preach from the heart of suffering, the Kairos Palestine document, and your resurrection hope.

We also know, our dear Palestinian friends, that your suffering is primarily under the weight of occupation. But we also know that this is not the only cause of suffering. At best, your numbers leave you marginalized by the wider Palestinian society and many ignorant of your practices and faith. At worst, there are elements that seek to eliminate the Christian presence from the region altogether. To you, we commend the example of our Lord, who, even faced with the loss of his own life, preferred to be an agent of healing, restoring the centurion’s ear in the Garden of Gethsemane. Do not be afraid to speak out against injustice. But do not let temptation to injustice overtake you.

May your witness continue to encourage us; and may we continue to show our debt to you as our spiritual forebears.

6. Palestinian Friends

Letter to Our Palestinian Friends,

Our history in the Middle East goes back to the 1820s. For many of us, our personal histories and those of our Presbyterian forebears goes back nearly that far to Israel/Palestine. From 1948, we have made our stance clear on the unjust situation of Palestinian refugees since the Nakba. Your experience is one of displacement; as a people of faith, we are kinsfolk. Our challenge is to accompany you in exile.

For us, this is not only an issue of sympathy in the midst of suffering. We have come to know Palestinians as our brothers and sisters in our congregations in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Their stories and witness have strengthened us. And yet, we confess, there are many in our own number who remain unaware of this.

Year after year our General Assembly has made our position known to the world, that the Palestinian people deserve justice and the right to their homeland. We have advocated for a two-state solution that affirms the right of return for Palestinian refugees, so long deprived of their home and their dignity. And when we included corporate engagement in these statements in 2004, you rejoiced in this act of solidarity. You let us know how pleased you were.

Because of this, we want to be clear to you: we hold in tension the rights and aspirations of Palestinians and Israelis to have safe and secure lives. We know that there is consensus in the international community around this, and we continue to work for this. Our corporate engagement in Israel/Palestine, reaffirmed by General Assemblies since 2004, focuses attention on companies that profit from the violence of the occupation. Our efforts that focus on Israel are those that focus on unjust policies, not on Israel as a nation.

We still see the occupation as the major obstacle to regional stability, and to the just solution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. We do not see it as the only obstacle. Being oppressed does not justify using the means of the oppressor; nor does suffering from the breach of international law permit similar breaches, even if smaller in scale. We are alarmed by acts of violence committed by militants and extremists.

We are also alarmed when we hear some Palestinians use anti-Semitic language against Jews and Israelis. We know that you are well-versed in the language of human rights; it has meant the building of a strong civil society in the face of incredible odds and overwhelming oppression of occupation. We hope that this zeal for equality would include all.

We have had experiences and know of Palestinian Christians and Muslims living side-by-side in peaceful coexistence. Yet we are also alarmed by the increase of targeted violence against Palestinian Christian institutions, be they from traditional or evangelical communities. For us, the presence of the Christian community is more than nostalgia for the time of Jesus; it is a vital part of the Palestinian fabric of society alongside their Muslim neighbors.

We commit ourselves both to pray and to work for the day that Palestine will be free and independent. May it come soon!

7. Israeli Friends

Letter to Our Israeli Friends,

Much of what we have said to our American Jewish friends we say to you. We are strong advocates for Israel’s secure existence. The fact that we are deeply troubled by Israeli policies should not diminish this advocacy in any way, shape, or form. We continue to speak out against anti-Semitism, knowing that it is an evil which our forbears in faith inflicted upon you and your ancestors. We are fervent in our hope that Israel would continue to be a homeland for the Jewish people.

We say all this because we believe it. And we stand by it in word and in deed. Our corporate engagement process has been handled carefully so as to focus our attention on companies who profit from practices we do not support. We have also encouraged positive investment in the region, including companies whose policies and practices of coexistence within Israeli society’s diverse tapestry and between Israelis and Palestinians are ones we can wholeheartedly support.

We grieve when anyone is a victim of violence, but especially civilians, be they Palestinian or Israeli. The number of casualties may give evidence to the imbalance in the conflict; however, each person is created in the image of God. We know that God’s heart must be the first to break. Trauma is trauma, no matter who experiences it. They cannot compete with one another; instead, our hope is that trauma may lead to healing across divides, bound by a common humanity.

Our recent trip to the region, and to Israel and the Occupied Territories in particular, was marked by our own heartbreak. The situation on the ground is changing rapidly. The rise of the extremist settler movement within Israel belies the Israel as a nation for all of its citizens we so long to see. The ongoing land expropriation and settlement expansion, in East Jerusalem in particular, continues to undermine, and indeed, destroy the possibility for a just and secure peace for Israelis and Palestinians alike. The Separation Barrier (part wall, part fence) and its route are evidence of this. Beyond this, we are increasingly troubled by the rhetoric and actions that support and facilitate a growing radicalized settler population.

Your government cannot credibly claim that the incumbent violence against and dehumanization of Palestinians are happening without their knowledge; indeed, your government is aiding and abetting these basic violations of human rights.
And just as we have spoken and acted against our own society’s vision of itself as a nation when it behaved as though it were “above the law,” we will do the same for Israel. We both have a place in the community of nations. Let us act as though we do.

We truly yearn for the day when Israel is secure, and when Israel and Palestine live side-by-side in peace and justice and mutual respect. And we will continue to work for that vision. We hope that we can work together in this endeavor.

Letter to Our American Neighbors, Friends, Fellow Citizens, Government Representatives, and Our American Administration:

We are nine Presbyterians who are also American citizens. And while there are many audiences for our work, our hope is that we will also be able to encourage and challenge you to work with us, and allow us to work with you, to seek justice, security, and peace throughout the Middle East.

No doubt some of our words will come across as harsh rebuke; please hear them as our desire to speak the truth in love. We are grateful for the freedoms our nation provides us, and we see them as nothing short of God’s grace for us as a nation and as individuals. It is because of this that we speak as bluntly as we do, following Christ’s word to confess the log in our own eye before pointing out the speck in our neighbor’s. In short, we think our American ideal of the equal dignity afforded each human being is one for which we commendably strive. And when we as a nation fall short of that ideal, we must be honest with ourselves.

Our nation is powerful. As a result, when we act well, our works of good will, opportunity, and equality spread far. By the same token, when we behave badly, the consequences are devastating. It is our hope that, as a nation, we will confess the latter while we strive for the former in relating to the rest of the world. May this especially be true in the Middle East, where our intervention has been, at best, inconsistent, and at worst, destructive.

We have seen in Israel/Palestine, and in the neighboring nations, how governments who receive extravagant benefits of our foreign aid consistently violate the most basic of human rights. This is a fact that should give every American pause and should move us to hold our elected officials accountable.

And to you, those whom we have elected, whether Republican or Democrat, we are tired of partisan politics. We are weary of pronouncements that do nothing to further the cause of peace and actions that obstruct it in the Middle East. It is our foreign aid and political impotence that enable the continued Israeli Occupation, among other regional injustices. We implore you: Hold nations accountable for what they receive from our taxes. And, at the very least, implement existing American laws that would do much to alleviate unconscionable suffering. Our stated policy has supported a two-state solution for decades; the opportunity for that to happen is disappearing rapidly.

We are ready to work with you to bring peace, security, and justice to Palestinians and Israelis alike. And where we believe you are amiss, we will continue to speak truth to power.

C. Witness of the Scriptures: A Biblical Theological Reflection

In developing policy statements and actions relating to critical world issues, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has always held it essential to study the biblical and theological concepts that establish an ethical foundation for our positions. As our denomination once again addresses the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, four biblical concepts and their interrelationship require specific examination: Justice, Zion, Covenant and Land, and Reconciliation.

The Middle East is the birthplace of Judaism, Christianity, and Islam, and followers devoted to all three religions have continued to live there to this day. In the biblical and theological reflection below, care has been taken to include detailed references to “the Older Testament”—first, because these books are held to be authoritative by both Judaism and Christianity; and second, because it is there in the Bible that one sees most clearly the struggle of a nation’s leaders and people to exercise power with justice. And because the concept of justice is also central to the morality of Islam, references to the Qur’an and the Islamic tradition have been included in the first section immediately below.

1. Justice

“Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel says: By three things is the world sustained: by justice, by truth, and by peace, as it is said, Truth and justice and peace judge ye in your gates (Zech. 8:16).” This profound interpretation of a verse from the prophet Zechariah, spoken by a rabbi of the second century C.E. living in Roman Palestine, was in turn commented upon with great wisdom some two centuries later by another Palestinian rabbi, Rav Muna. He said, “These three things are actually one. When justice is done, truth is served, and peace is achieved. … Wherever there is justice there is peace (and wherever there is peace there is justice).”
“Justice” is central to the Older Testament (including Zech. 8:16), the Newer Testament, and the scripture of Islam, the Qur’an.10

First, in both testaments of the Bible justice is presented as an essential attribute of God’s own nature as Sovereign of the universe. “For the Lord is a God of justice” (Isa. 30:18c); “…I am the Lord; I act with steadfast love, justice, and righteousness in the earth” (Jer. 9:24b); “Happy are those whose help is the God of Jacob, …who keeps faith forever; who executes justice for the oppressed; who gives food to the hungry” (Ps. 146:5–7); “If we confess our sins, he who is faithful and just will forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all injustice” (1 Jn. 1:9); “Your throne, O God, is forever and ever, and the scepter [of straightness (i.e., justice)] is the scepter of your [reign]” (Heb. 1:8b–c); “You are just, O Holy One …” (Rev. 16:5b); “Just and true are your ways, [Sovereign] of the nations!” (Rev. 15:3c); “[The Mighty One] has shown strength with his arm; he has scattered the proud in the thoughts of their hearts. He has brought down the powerful from their thrones, and lifted up the lowly” (Lk. 1:51–52). And in Islam, one of the ninety-nine “beautiful names” of God is al-’Adl, “The Just,” or “Justice” (itself).

Second, based on this identification of justice as central to God’s sovereign role, the Bible also presents justice as essential to the role of human monarchs and of earthly governors in general. “At that time Deborah, a prophetess, wife of Lappidoth, was judging Israel. She used to sit under the palm of Deborah between Ramah and Bethel in the hill country of Ephraim; and the Israelites came up to her for [justice (mishpat)]” (Judg. 4:4–5); “So David reigned over all Israel; and David administered justice and equity to all his people” (2 Sam. 8:15); “…For time would fail me to tell of …David …—who through faith …administered justice … (Heb. 11:32b–33a); “Give the king your justice, O God … May he judge your people with righteousness, and your poor with justice” (Ps. 72:1–2); “…as [Paul] discussed justice, self-control, and the coming judgment, Felix [, the Roman governor,] became frightened …” (Acts 24:25a); “[King] Jehoshaphat … said to the judges, ‘…Now, let the fear of the Lord be upon you; take care what you do, for there is no perversion of justice with the Lord our God, or partiality, or taking of bribes’” (2 Chr. 19:4a, 6a, 7). This same extension of the justice of the sovereign God to the role of earthly governments is found in Islam—for example, in this saying of the prophet Muhammad (or, hadith): “The Government (al-Sultan) is the shadow of God on the earth; all of His servants who are oppressed shall turn to it. When it is just, it shall be rewarded …”11

Third, the Bible identifies the practice of justice as essential not only for those who govern but also for all of God’s people. “…I have [known Abraham], that he may charge his children and his household after him to keep the way of the Lord by doing righteousness and justice; so that the Lord may bring about for Abraham what he has promised him” (Gen. 18:19); “Happy are those who observe justice, who do righteousness at all times” (Ps. 106:3); “…what does the Lord require of you but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God?” (Mic. 6:8b–d); “…let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an everflowing stream” (Am. 5:24); “But strive first for the kingdom of God and his [justice], and all these things will be given to you as well” (Mt. 6:33); “…justice and mercy and faith. It is these you ought to have practiced …” (Mt. 23:23c–d); “…in every nation anyone who fears [God] and does what is [just] is acceptable to him” (Acts 10:35); “No longer present your members to sin as instruments of [injustice], but …present your members to God as instruments of [justice]” (Rom. 6:13a, c); “For the kingdom of God is not food and drink but [justice] and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom. 14:17); “Stand therefore, and fasten the belt of truth around your waist, and put on the breastplate of [justice]” (Eph. 6:14); “You must not distort justice; you must not show partiality; and you must not accept bribes …Justice, and only justice, you shall pursue, so that you may live and occupy the land that the Lord your God is giving you” (Deut. 16:19a, 20). In like manner, the Qur’an reads: “O ye who believe! Stand out firmly for justice, as witnesses to God, even as against yourselves, or your parents, or your kin, and whether it be (against) rich or poor…” (Sura 4:135).12

Here an all-important question arises: “To whom is due this ‘justice, and only justice’ that, according to Deuteronomy 16:20, must be practiced by all God’s people? Is justice due only to persons of our own ethnicity and/or religion, or is it due as well to others different from ourselves?” How Jesus would answer this question seems altogether clear. For the Gospel of Matthew, drawing upon Isaiah 42:1, describes Jesus in this way: “Here is my servant, whom I[, God,] have chosen, …and he will proclaim justice to the Gentiles” (Mt. 12:18a, d). And within the Jewish tradition, the second-century rabbi already cited above, Simeon ben Gamaliel, is quoted as having said while reflecting on Deuteronomy 16: “Justice must be accorded to non-Jews as to Jews; the former should have the option of seeking judgment before either a Jewish or a pagan court.”

Thus, “justice, and only justice, you shall pursue” on behalf of all persons and not just your own people. But what exactly constitutes the “justice” that is due to all? The Bible in general and Jesus in particular answer in this way. Justice is: promoting truth;15 upholding the cause of the poor, the weak, and the needy;16 loving those who are “other” and providing for their needs;17 restoring what has been stolen;18 humbling the proud;19 issuing fair and equitable judgments in court;20 ending oppression,21 keeping God’s statutes and commandments;22 following God’s will rather than one’s own;23 fostering peace;24 and not pursuing dishonest gain, not shedding innocent blood, not practicing violence, not trusting in military might.25 In Islam, according to John L. Esposito, “The Quran envisions a society based on the unity and equality of believers, a society in which moral and social justice will counterbalance oppression of the weak and economic exploitation…. Exploitation of the poor, weak, widows, women, orphans (Qura 4:2; 4:12) is vividly condemned... False contracts, bribery, abuse of women, hoarding of wealth to the exclusion of its subordination to higher ends, and usury are denounced." 26

As shall soon be seen, “justice” understood in biblical ways came to underpin ancient Israel’s beliefs about a person’s right to enter the temple precincts of Zion or even to live within the city of Jerusalem.

2. Zion—and Justice

The name “Zion” evolved and multiplied in its ancient applications. Originally, it designated the fortress of the pre-Israelite city of Jerusalem captured by David around the year 1000 B.C.E. 27 “Zion” then came to designate the rather small “City of David” of which the fortress was a part. 28 When the Ark of the Covenant was shifted to the new temple built by Solomon, the name “Zion” was transferred from the confines of David’s city to the new sacred space lying to its northwest—the temple precincts, the place on earth where God most fully dwelled, 30 the “touchpoint” between heaven and earth. 31 Next, by metonymy—a figure of speech in which the name of one thing stands for the name of another thing with which it is associated—“Zion” came also to designate the entire city of Jerusalem together with its residents, and, then, with the destruction of that city in 587 B.C.E., it came also to serve as a name for the whole people of Israel. 33 Then, too, in the developing eschatology of ancient Israel’s prophets and psalmists after 587, “Zion” named the about-to-be rebuilt (or, for somewhat later prophets and psalmists, the recently rebuilt) city of Jerusalem and temple that served as a focus of hope—hope for the restoration of God’s people after exile, hope for the advent of peace throughout the world, and hope for a renewed covenant with God. 36

Persons’ right to enter God’s presence within the temple precincts of holy Zion or even to live within the city of Jerusalem was closely linked to their living justly—that is, to their living in accordance with the demands of covenant law. In the eighth century B.C.E., the prophet Isaiah proclaimed that the people of Zion would be spared from judgment only through repentance and the leading of just lives (Isa. 1:27–28). Since justice and righteousness were divine attributes with which God had filled Zion (Isa. 33:5), justice would be the line and righteousness the plummet by which the people of Zion would be measured and weighed (Isa. 28:16–17). Only those in Zion who despise the gain of oppression, who wave away a bribe instead of accepting it, who stop their ears from hearing of bloodshed and shut their eyes from looking on evil” would be able to abide in the presence of the God of justice (Isa. 33:14–16; cf. 30:18). A contemporary of Isaiah, the prophet Micah, condemned the rulers and leading citizens, “who abhor justice and pervert all equity” and thereby “build Zion with blood and Jerusalem with wrong” (Mic. 3:9–10). Because of their actions, “Zion shall be plowed as a field” (Mic. 3:11–12). Nearly 100 years later, the prophet Jeremiah called upon the refugees from the former northern kingdom of Israel to repent their evil so that God might again bring them to Zion (Jer. 3:14), and he denounced those of Judah who entered the temple to worship the Lord without having amended their ways and ceased their violations of God’s commandments (Jer. 7:1–15). Two psalms also state explicitly that those who enter the temple precincts—which is to say, Zion—should be persons who practice justice.

“O Lord, who may abide in your tent? Who may dwell on your holy hill? Those who walk blamelessly, and do what is [just (tsedeq)], and speak the truth from their heart, who do not slander with their tongue, and do no evil to their friends,
nor take up a reproach against their neighbors;
in whose eyes the wicked are despised,
but who honor those who fear the Lord;
who stand by their oath even to their hurt;
who do not lend money at interest, and do not take a bribe against the innocent.
Those who do these things shall never be moved.” Ps. 15:1–3, 5c “Who shall ascend the hill of the Lord? And who shall stand in his holy place? Those who have clean hands and pure hearts, who do not lift up their souls to what is false, and do not swear deceitfully.

They will receive blessing from the Lord, and [a just reward (tsdaqah)] from the God of their salvation.” Ps. 24:3–5

Thus, the Older Testament closely connects the concepts of “Zion” and “justice,” for Zion is the principal earthly dwelling place of the God of justice.

The Older Testament also speaks of Zion as a place to which not only Jews but also other peoples and nations will come both to worship God and to receive God’s teaching. Toward the end of the sixth century B.C.E., the prophet we call Third Isaiah proclaimed to those who had returned from exile in Babylon to the holy mountain that is Zion, “Maintain justice, and do what is right” (Isa. 56:1a). And he proceeded to tell his fellow Jews that what is just and right includes joining God in welcoming to the holy mountain and its sacred precincts those from other lands who love God and strive to keep the commandments, for God’s temple “shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples” (Isa. 56:6–8). And according to Psalm 87, “Zion is the mother city of all who know the Lord, wherever they are born”—be that Canaan, Babylon, Philistia, Tyre, Ethiopia, or any other place. Other passages as well share that vision:

“Let this be recorded for a generation to come, … so that the name of the Lord may be declared in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem, when peoples gather together, and kingdoms, to worship the Lord.” (Ps. 102:18a, 21–22)

And:

“In days to come the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established as the highest of the mountains, and shall be raised up above the hills. Peoples shall stream to it, and many nations shall come and say: ‘Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; that he may teach us his ways and that we may walk in his paths.’ For out of Zion shall go forth instruction, and the word of Lord from Jerusalem. He shall judge between many peoples, and shall arbitrate between strong nations far away; they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more; but they shall all sit under their own vines and under their own fig trees, and no one shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts has spoken. (Mic. 4:1–4 [see also Isa. 2:2–4])

Thus, according to the Older Testament, the final effect of the exiles’ return to Zion will be the dawn of an age of peace and a joining with other peoples and nations to worship and study the teachings of the one true God. It is thus noteworthy that while Jerusalem has indeed become a place holy not only for Jews but also for Christians and Muslims the longed-for age of peace and reconciliation has yet to come.

In the Newer Testament, “Zion” occurs just seven times. Four usages designate not “earthly” Jerusalem but instead “eschatological” Jerusalem. Two of these four arise from quoting the book of Isaiah. According to First Peter, God lays the solid cornerstone of Jesus Christ for all believers in eschatological Zion (1 Pet. 2:6, quoting Isa. 28:16), and from there also, according to Romans, the Deliverer for all of Israel will yet come forth (Rom. 11:26, quoting Isa. 59:21 from one particular manuscript tradition of the Greek Septuagint). Then, too, according to Hebrews, it is to eschatological Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, that Christians have worshipfully “come … to God, the judge of all, … and to Jesus, the mediator of a new covenant” (Heb. 12:22–24a). Finally, a vision in the book of Revelation describes eschatological Zion as the launch point for God’s end-time action to rid the world of evil. The Lamb (Christ) takes his stand on the solid high ground of “Mount Zion,” surrounded by 144,000 righteous faithful (Rev. 14:1), while the dragon (Satan) takes his stand on “the sand of the seashore” (Rev. 12:18), viewing from there the two beasts that are his proxies (symbolizing perhaps Rome’s emperors and priests of the imperial cult, Rev. 13:1–18). This vision of the Lamb on Mount Zion affirms Zion as the seat of justice for the world and anticipates Revelation’s later vision of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:9–22).

The other three usages of “Zion” in the Newer Testament do designate “earthly” Jerusalem. Two of these occur in gospel accounts of Jesus’ dramatic entry into that city on “Palm Sunday” (Mt. 21:5, quoting compositely from Isa. 62:11 and Zech. 9:9; and Jn. 12:15, quoting compositely from Zeph. 3:16 and Zech. 9:9). In calling to readers’ minds Zech. 9:9–10, both gospel texts affirm that Zion’s peaceable Messiah is the one who creates true shalom for the nations. The third “earthly” usage occurs in Paul’s Letter to the Romans (Rom. 9:33), where he uses the same prophetic image found in First Peter ( Isa. 28:6) but employs it quite differently. Paul, interpreting this Isaian image through the lens of Isa. 8:14, speaks of God’s laying in Zion, earthly Jerusalem, “a stone” that is a stumbling block to Jewish faith—namely, the crucified and risen Christ. All three of these instances of “Zion” arise from quoting books of the prophets.

It appears that during the first century C.E., Christian authors rather fully transferred the locus of God’s concrete presence in the world of space and time from the place of Zion—that is, Jerusalem—to the person of Jesus, who had been crucified and raised from the dead just outside Jerusalem. The Roman destruction of Zion—that is, the temple in Jerusalem—in 70 C.E. doubtless hastened that process. So what do Christians make of the claim that a link endures between God’s covenant with Abraham and the promise of land?

3. Covenant and Land—and Justice

Nearly ten years ago, four American Jewish scholars offered as a basis for Jewish-Christian dialogue a set of eight propositions entitled “Dabru ’Emet.” The third of those read, “Christians can respect the claim of the Jewish people upon the land of Israel.” That proposition went on to present as part of its brief rationale this comment: “As members of a biblically-based religion, Christians appreciate that Israel was promised—and given—to Jews as the physical center of the covenant between them and God.”

So, do we Presbyterians—collectively and/or individually—“respect the claim of the Jewish people upon the land of Israel”? Do we Presbyterians “appreciate that Israel [geographic Israel? biblical Israel? political Israel?] was promised—and given—to Jews as the physical center of the covenant between them and God”?

Any answer to that question will be complicated and will most certainly prove controversial. At least five issues are involved in framing a context for reflecting on “Dabru Emet’s” third proposition and its rationale, and all of these issues are ones very much on the minds and hearts of many Presbyterians today.

First, most Presbyterians accept that the promise of offspring and land is in fact found throughout the book of Genesis and that that promise is conceptually central to God’s covenant with Abraham. Yet most Presbyterians also hold that this promise is conditioned by concepts found elsewhere in the first five books of the Bible, such as: (a) the Jubilee theology found in the book of Leviticus, according to which the land belongs fundamentally to God and is a gift from God given to ancient Israel as a leasehold (25:23–24, 38); (b) the Sinai-covenant theology found in the book of Deuteronomy, according to which God’s gift of the land is dependent upon the people’s adherence to justice and obedience to the commandments (e.g., 4:40; 16:19–20; 30:15–20)—including the prohibition against subverting the rights of “strangers” and the needy (27:19); and (c) Genesis’ own warning about the potential loss of the promises through deeds of injustice (18:19).

Thus, most Presbyterians hold that the “land-grant” to Abraham’s offspring described in Genesis is not so much a matter of “rights” as it is a matter of “responsibilities,” that “the land” is a place whose residents God holds responsible for what is being done in and with it, including dealing justly with “the stranger” and the poor.

Second, Presbyterians believe that the boundaries of ancient Israel varied throughout its history—first in the days of the patriarchs and matriarchs, then under the judges and kings, then in the aftermath of exile and diaspora. Furthermore, the boundaries of “Greater Israel” that are described in the book of Exodus (Ex. 23:31), are surely not to be taken literally, for those would extend Israel’s borders from the “Sea of Reeds” in the south—that is, deep into the territory of modern Egypt—to the Euphrates River in the north—that is, deep into the territory of modern Syria. And as the Jewish scholar Nahum Sarna has observed, “At no time in Israeli history, even at the height of the Davidic-Solomonic empire, were these boundaries a reality.”

Thus, Presbyterians believe that one cannot define “the land of Israel” with any kind of religious specificity. The varying boundaries of “the promised land” have always been more a matter of realpolitik than of theology.

Third, most modern Presbyterians read not with approval but with something approaching horror the theology of the accounts in Deuteronomic literature that describe the taking of “the land” from those who had long been dwelling there by means of “holy war.” One cannot evaluate as “moral” deeds that achieve a concrete realization of “land promise” through extreme “land violence.” And a number of Jewish scholars agree that the acts of “holy war” described in these biblical narratives are, at the very least, morally problematic. For example, Jon Levenson has written that the narrative tradition in which the Canaanites are demonized and dismissed offers an unsavory parallel in Israel’s sacred texts to the strand of anti-Semitism that runs throughout Christians’ Newer Testament.

Thus, most Presbyterians believe that “land promise” ought not to be realized through “land violence” and that the claiming of “promised land” does not justify the displacement of “the others” who have long lived there.

Fourth, most Presbyterians agree with the apostle Paul (Romans 9–11, esp. 11:26–29) that Jews remain to this day heirs of God’s covenant with Abraham. That, and not supersessionism, is what most hold. Yet many Presbyterians also believe that Jews are not today’s only heirs of that covenant with Abraham—that we Christians, too, are heirs of that covenant. This understanding was stated first and most authoritatively by the apostle Paul, who, in the first century C.E., wrote in his Letter to the Galatians (Gal. 3:29), “… if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise.” And in modern times it has been restated this way: “Two vital communities, Judaism and Christianity, claim direct descent from those who lived by and preserved the biblical stories; [and] a third, Islam, treasures the tradition as well.”

Now, it is true that most Christians at most times and in most places have not strongly linked the concept of our descent from Abraham to the concept of the promise of “the land.” Still, a number of Christians throughout history have made that strong connection, and among them are some who are living in “the land” today—Palestinian Christians. Neither they nor their Palestinian Muslim cousins view themselves as filling the role of the “strangers” or “aliens” mentioned in the Older Testament.

For at least 300 years, between the fourth and seventh centuries C.E., the majority of those who lived in the Roman province of Palestine were Christians, and the city of Jerusalem, which had been the site of the death and the resurrection of Jesus the Christ, was viewed by these residents as “the Christian city par excellence.”
Also, many monks throughout the wider reaches of Christendom were taking to their own hearts God’s words to Abram, “Go up … to the land that I will show you” (Gen. 12:1). Yes, many monks were interpreting these words as a command that God was now directing to them. So a great number of them began to pick up and move to what they were beginning to call “the Holy Land”—where Jesus had been born, had lived, had died, and had been raised from the dead.\(^5\)

Now, “Byzantine Palestine was, for Christians, a Holy Land but [it was] also a homeland, a place where men and women tilled the ground and planted orchards, built homes and raised families, bought fish and sold olives, buried parents and grandparents.” And “when Jerusalem was captured by the Persians in the seventh century of the Common Era, it was the Christians, not the Jews, who sang a lamentation over the Holy City.”\(^5\)

Then shortly after the Persian conquest came the Arab conquest—and Islam. Yet most of the Christians who were indigenous to that region continued to live there—carrying on with their everyday lives, learning to speak Arabic either in addition to or instead of Aramaic and/or Greek,\(^5\) and continuing to worship the God made known to Abraham and made known in Jesus. Many of today’s Palestinian Christians are direct descendants of these for whom Roman Palestine had become both their homeland and their Holy Land, where the central mysteries of their Christian faith had taken place.

So, no matter how many centuries have passed since the end of the Byzantine Christian hegemony over “the land,” and no matter in how many other countries the Christian religion has since set down roots, there are in the world Christians who remain strongly wedded to the land that gave birth to both Christ and the Christian religion, and none are more strongly wedded to “the land” than those who are Palestinian Christians.\(^5\)

Then, too, of course, as early as the 6th century some Muslims considered Palestine to be their home, and from the late-7th century onward Muslims constituted the majority of Palestine’s population. Indeed, since the end of the 7th century, two of Islam’s holiest places have stood in Jerusalem—the Al-Aqsa Mosque and the Dome of the Rock.\(^5\)

Thus, Presbyterians confront a dilemma. What are Presbyterians to do when Jews and Christians and Muslims find that their continuity to the past is in part dependent upon living in the same land and in the same city, the land and the city in which both Judaism and Christianity are native and Islam has had such a significant presence for more than 1,200 years?

Fifth, Presbyterians believe that God is sovereign over all nations, states, governments, and peoples, and that God calls upon persons of faith to be critical of those governments understood to be violating God’s commandments and God’s standards for justice and compassion. American Presbyterians believe that God urges us to stand ready to speak “like prophets,” to stand ready first and foremost to speak to our own government but also to speak to other governments. For the prophets of ancient Israel addressed their words-in-the-name-of-God not only to their own nation but to other nations as well.

Thus, if American Presbyterians are to speak “like prophets,” we must stand ready to speak not only to our own government but to others as well—including the government of the State of Israel and the governments of the Palestinian people.

Throughout the sixty-two years since the British mandate over the territory of Palestine ended, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has spoken out a number of times concerning the ongoing conflict between Israel and the Palestinian people. Although each of these themes has prompted spirited discussion, there have run throughout these statements four strong commitments:

• To the right of Israel to exist as a sovereign nation within secure and legitimate borders,\(^5\) borders that are not contended for on the basis of some literal reading of “biblical” geography and that are arrived at through peaceful negotiation with the Palestinians. And accompanying this commitment have been two calls: first, one to Palestinians and other Arabs to recognize Israel’s existence within secure borders; and second, one to Israeli Jews to fulfill their “land responsibilities,” responsibilities that include the covenant obligation to extend to “others” in their midst—that is, to Israeli Christians and Muslims—a full equality of civil rights and a full measure of justice.\(^6\)

• To the right of Palestinians to self-determination and to have their own separate, contiguous, economically viable, sovereign nation-state within the wider borders of “the land.”\(^6\) Arising from this second commitment has been our denomination’s steady call for the government of Israel to put an end to its military, political, and economic occupation of Palestinian land after 1967 and its practice of establishing and expanding settlements there.

• To a nonviolent resolution to the conflict.\(^6\) The PC(USA) has continuously called upon all parties in the Middle East to settle their differences peacefully and also upon both Palestinians and Israelis to end all acts of violence against each other.

• To the concept that Jerusalem, like “the land” as a whole, does not belong to any one people alone, but is rather to be shared by two peoples (Israelis and Palestinians) and three religions (Judaism, Christianity, and Islam).\(^6\)

In 1987, the 199th General Assembly (1987) also received and commended to our congregations for study and reflection the paper entitled “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship between Christians and Jews.”\(^6\) It is the content of this paper that undergirds the paper “Christians and Jews: People of God,” which is now also before the 219th General Assembly
Reconciliation—and Justice

It is in light of all this that we can hear afresh Jesus' words in the Sermon on the Mount:

“For if while we were enemies, we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son, much more must become the justice of God” (2 Cor. 5:14a, 17a, 18, 21). Interpreting this last passage, J. Paul Sampley writes: “Reconciliation is at the heart of life's business. If the most important single factor about any of our lives is God's having reconciled us to God's very self, then the proper celebration of our reconciliation is to share it with others by fostering reconciliation … wherever and whenever we can.”

Furthermore, the Newer Testament proclaims that this reconciliation between God and humankind accomplished through Christ is also the ground and empowering force for reconciliation among humans—between one person and another, between the individual and the group, between one group and another—in fulfillment of the eschatological vision of peace, of shalom, found in both Micah and Isaiah: “[T]hey shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks” (Mic. 4:3b, Isa. 2:4b). Ephesians says, “For [Christ] is our peace; in his flesh he has made both groups into one and has broken down the dividing wall, that is the hostility between us” (2:14). In its first century context, Ephesians was speaking of Christ's death having broken down the dividing wall of hostility between Jews and Gentiles within the Christian community. But in the twenty-first century, we are led by the Spirit to find in this verse, especially when viewed through the lens of Col. 1:19–20, a wider application—Christ's death having broken down the dividing wall of hostility between any two peoples or groups within God's creation.

And Second Corinthians says, “For the love of Christ urges us on, because we are convinced that one has died for all … . So if anyone is in Christ, there is a new creation … ! All this is from God, who reconciled us to himself through Christ, and has given us the ministry of reconciliation … . For our sake [God] made him to be sin who knew no sin, so that in him we might become the justice of God” (2 Cor. 5:14a, 17a, 18, 21). Interpreting this last passage, J. Paul Sampley writes: “Reconciliation is at the heart of life's business. If the most important single factor about any of our lives is God's having reconciled us to God's very self, then the proper celebration of our reconciliation is to share it with others by fostering reconciliation … wherever and whenever we can.” It is in light of all this that we can hear afresh Jesus' words in the Sermon on the Mount: “So when you are offering your gift at the altar, if you remember that your brother or sister has something against you, leave your gift there before the altar and go; first be reconciled to your brother or sister, and then come and offer your gift” (Mt. 5:23–24). By so reconciling, we do become, as Paul says, “the [justice] of God” (2 Cor. 5:21).
A number of biblical accounts illustrate the processes of human reconciliation—whether frustrated or successful. We will focus here on just two: the narrative of the twins Jacob and Esau (especially Gen. 27:1–45, 33:1–17), and Jesus’ parable of The Man and His Two Sons (Lk. 15:11–32).

Stolid Esau was his father Isaac’s favorite son, while wily Jacob was his mother Rebekah’s. Jacob had already duped Esau, the first-born twin, into selling his birthright (Gen. 25:27–34). Then, through an ancient version of identity theft, Jacob tricked blind-old Isaac into bestowing on him the paternal blessing Isaac intended for Esau (Gen. 27:1–29). When Esau learned of his lost blessing, he hated Jacob, yet bided his time until the opportune moment to kill him (Gen. 27:35–41). Rebekah warned Jacob of Esau’s plan and sent him away to the home of her brother Laban outside Canaan, far to the northeast in distant Haran (Gen. 27:42–45).

Twenty years passed (Gen. 31:38–41), during which Jacob married first Leah and then Rachel (Gen. 29:1–30), begot eleven sons and a daughter (Gen. 29:31–30:24), and prospered at Laban’s expense (Gen. 30:25–43). Laban’s sons became angry at Jacob, so Jacob started to flee back to his home country of Canaan with his wives, children, and great wealth of livestock (Gen. 31:1–21). Laban chased them down, for one of the party had stolen his household gods (Gen. 31:22–32). Laban never found the gods (Gen. 31:33–35), yet in the end he made a covenant with Jacob that let him depart in peace (Gen. 31:36–55).

Jacob now feared that when he got home Esau would exact revenge; and when Jacob learned that Esau was coming to meet him accompanied by 400 men, he thought the worst and, to appease his twin, sent ahead a huge offering of livestock (Gen. 32:1–21).

That same night, when Jacob was alone, a “man” came and wrestled long and hard with him, finally at daybreak throwing Jacob’s hip out of joint (Gen. 32:22–25). The “man” then bestowed on the exhausted Jacob a new name, Israel, and, after blessing him, departed (Gen. 32:26–29). In the end, Jacob came to believe that the “man” was really God (Gen. 32:30–32).

Jacob next saw Esau and his retinue approaching. He arranged the women and children of his caravan defensively and limped ahead to meet his twin, bowing submissively to the ground seven times as he proceeded (Gen. 33:1–3). “But Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck and kissed him, and they wept” (Gen. 33:4; compare Lk. 15:20!). Having thus shown his forgiveness of Jacob, Esau greeted the women and children and told Jacob he would not keep his offering, for he already had quite enough livestock (Gen. 33:5–9). Jacob, however, insisted that Esau keep the gift, and Esau at last agreed (Gen. 33:10–11).

Esau, far from harboring bitterness or exacting revenge against Jacob, had initiated a model reconciliation, and it would seem that Jacob had completed it. Jacob, reflecting on his previous night’s wrestling with God, had even said to Esau, “[T]o see your face is like seeing the face of God—since you have received me with such favor” (Gen. 33:10b). Yet in the end Jacob remained characteristically untrusting and wily. In spite of having seen “the face of God” and received a new name, he had had no experience of “new being,” of “new creation.” So when Esau first volunteered to travel onward with him and then offered to lend him some men for help along his way, Jacob refused both offers, preferring that Esau’s future not be linked to his (Gen. 33:12–15). So the two parted and went their separate ways (Gen. 33:16–17).

Thus, Jacob kept Esau out of his future life, and they met only once more—coming together to bury their father Isaac (Gen. 35:28–29). Basically, theirs was but a partial reconciliation, its full success having been frustrated—perhaps by Jacob’s continuing suspicion of Esau, perhaps by his inability to accept Esau’s forgiveness, but most certainly by his insistence on going his separate way.

Family dynamics, sibling rivalry, and offered reconciliation also lie at the heart of Jesus’ parable of The Man and His Two Sons (Lk. 15:11–32). Like all of Jesus’ parables, this one lends itself richly to multiple interpretations. For example, the “man” can be seen variably, and correctly, as either a God-figure or a model human parent. The latter reading is followed here, where the parable is interpreted as a story of both successful human reconciliation (father and younger son) and frustrated human reconciliation (elder brother and younger brother, father and elder son).

The younger son asked his father prematurely, and insultingly, for his inheritance, yet surprisingly he was given it. He went off to a far country and there wasted it “in dissolute living” (Lk. 15:11–13). So this Jewish lad was reduced to slopping hogs, while he himself, in the midst of a famine, had nothing at all to eat (Lk. 15:14–16). Finally, “he came to himself” and realized he would be far better off at home, even as a hired hand. So, feeling quite contrite, he thought through his speech of repentance and headed back to his father (Lk. 15:17–20a).

While this son was still a distance away, his father caught sight of him “and was filled with compassion; he ran and put his arms around him and kissed him” (Lk. 15:20b; compare Gen. 33:41). The son began his speech of repentance, but the father interrupted him and commanded the servants to bring for this son a robe, ring, and sandals and to prepare a special feast. A joyful celebration followed, completing the reconciliation between father and son, a reconciliation brought about through the son’s humble acts of repentance and truth-telling and the father’s gracious acts of forgiveness and amnesty (Lk. 15:21–24).
But the elder son had received no speech of repentance from his brother. Instead, upon returning from his work in the field, he encountered an unexpected feast of celebration. Puzzled, he learned secondhand of his younger brother’s return and restored sonship (Lk. 15:25–27). Angered at the injustice of the whole situation and jealous of what he perceived to be his father’s favoritism toward his brother, the elder son refused to enter. So his father came out and pleaded with him. The elder son spoke angry and jealous words to his father, yet the father answered him with words that proclaimed both his enduring constancy toward his elder son and his newborn reconciliation with his younger son (Lk. 15:28–32).

Jesus’ parable concludes without any resolution between these two figures but with the ball in the elder son’s court, so to speak. Would he remain unreconciled to his father, either resentful forever or leaving the ranch altogether? Would he remain unreconciled to his younger brother, either entering the party sullenly and unforgivingly or turning on his heel and walking away? Then, too, would the younger brother ever have the chance, or the desire, to apologize to his elder brother and tell him the truth? Would the elder brother ever take the opportunity to forgive his brother and, like their father, offer him amnesty? Could a reconciliation between these brothers succeed without “justice” being done, and what would “justice” look like in this situation? Jesus left the answers to all these questions to our imagination—or rather, for our discernment.

It is tempting to apply the first of these two narratives to the present situation in the Middle East by identifying Esau with either the Israelis or the Palestinians and then Jacob with the other. One of the “brothers” has wronged the other, has never asked for forgiveness, and, despite the best overtures of the other, has perpetuated a separation that frustrates reconciliation and the realization of justice. Yet perhaps the real-world complication to such an application is that the historical parties have in fact been continually switching roles, in one instance playing the part of Esau and in the next playing that of Jacob.

Likewise it is tempting to apply the second of these biblical narratives by identifying the younger brother with either the Israelis or the Palestinians and then the elder brother with the other—acknowledging with regret that neither party seems to display the full virtue of the father. One of the “brothers” has wronged the other and has not yet acknowledged that wrong to the other and asked for forgiveness. Meanwhile the other brother is intent on demanding the kind of justice that is retributive rather than restorative. Again, perhaps the real-world complication to such an application is that the historical parties have in fact been continually switching roles, now playing the elder brother and then the younger brother.

Still, these two narratives frame for us ever so importantly the theological elements involved in human reconciliation—the needs for speaking truth, acknowledging wrong, accepting responsibility, asking pardon, offering forgiveness (and even amnesty), finding a just way to live side by side, and becoming “the [justice] of God” (2 Cor. 5:21).

Keeping in mind all four of the biblical and theological emphases studied in this opening section—justice, Zion, covenant and land, and reconciliation—and the relationship of each of the latter three to the first, we will now provide perspectives on the contemporary situation in the Middle East.

D. Our Witness: “What We Have Seen and Heard”

1. Introduction

The Middle East Study Committee (MESC) was created by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and appointed February 2009 by the current and two previous moderators. The members of the MESC are: Susan Andrews, Hudson River Presbytery (New York); Frederick Bush, Los Ranchos Presbytery (California); Nahida Gordon, Presbytery of Muskingum Valley (Ohio); John Huffman, Los Ranchos Presbytery (California); Lucy Janjigian, Palisades Presbytery (New Jersey); Rebecca Reyes, New Hope Presbytery (North Carolina); Marthame Sanders, Greater Atlanta Presbytery (Georgia); Byron Shafer, New York City Presbytery (New York); Ron Shive, Salem Presbytery (North Carolina).

Our mandate was “to prepare a comprehensive study, with recommendations, that is focused on Israel/Palestine within the complex context of the Middle East” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1226). The scope of this study is fourfold:

- A description of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s mission and relationships, including an assessment of the future for the Christian presence and witness in the Middle East;
- An overview of the complex interactions among religions, cultures, and peoples that characterize the region;
- An analysis of U.S. policies that impact the area; and
- A [recommendation of] steps to be taken with our partners in the Middle East and the United States to foster justice, improve interfaith relations, and nurture the building of peace toward a secure and viable future for all. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1226)

The methodology for the study has been to engage as many representatives from a spectrum of perspectives on the Israel-Palestinian conflict and to embrace the witness and concerns of our Christian partners in the region. This approach involved conversations both in the United States and in the Middle East; with both Israelis and Palestinians; Jews, Muslims, and Christians. We have worked diligently to listen to the multitude of voices that are crying aloud in the midst of the Middle East conflict. We have also consulted the Presbyterian Panel through its August 2009 survey for a sample of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) convictions and attitudes regarding Israel/Palestine, and learned much about the extent to which Presbyterians care about the parties involved in the conflict. Unfortunately, we must acknowledge that limited time, resources, and other circumstances prevented us from engaging some voices. This report thus makes only limited observations and recommendations regarding the broader context, and devotes most summary here to the Israel-Palestine struggle. The Presbyterian church has in fact spoken prophetically on matters such as the Iraq war and its refugees and developed policies on just peacemaking that address the larger region. These also include the dynamics of Iran and preemptive warfare and are part of the policy review and application found in Appendix 2. We mention this here because our study, though with new approaches, also acknowledges this very Presbyterian history of social and ethical analysis of the Middle East.

2. Two Unparalleled Experiences

One does not have to be in the Middle East long before becoming aware of the two unparalleled traumatic experiences that grip the lives of the people of this region. The horror that both the Jews and the Palestinians have faced is unparalleled and has resulted in a state of psycho-trauma, which grips the lives of both people and results in fear, anxiety, and anger. The Jewish psycho-trauma and the Palestinian psycho-trauma, both of which underlie the region’s conflicts, cannot be compared, nor should they be allowed to compete with one another. A competition of traumas will only result in an endless argument over who is the greater victim.

One of these psycho-traumas is the Holocaust in which 6 million European Jews were annihilated at the hands of the Nazi party, its state apparatus and allies. The other trauma is the forced displacement of 750,000 Palestinians in 1948 from their ancestral homeland by the Israel Haganah [the pre-state militant force that was the precursor of the Israel Defense Forces].

Avraham Burg, Former Speaker of the Knesset and Cabinet Minister, speaks of the Jewish psycho-trauma and identifies the pain and power that the Holocaust still plays in the soul of Israelis today. He says,

> To many, the Shoah [Holocaust or literally calamity] was and will forever be an incurable wound. To others, the Shoah is the nucleus of their identity. To everyone, the Shoah is a present, tangible experience wherever we go.

Another has described this Jewish trauma well:

> To Israelis and most Jews, the Jewish State is a miracle that represents redemption from the unspeakable horrors of the Nazi Holocaust. Israel is an emotional insurance policy against the visceral vulnerability that many Jews still feel, a vulnerability born of centuries of persecution in Europe.

One of the results of this psycho-trauma is that every time the Palestinians, or the Iranians, or any other neighbor offer a threat, the Israeli Jews become engulfed in fear, their perceived vulnerability is heightened, and the question that arises is, “Is a second Shoah on the way?”

The atrocities that the Nazis committed against the Jews and this resulting psycho-trauma has become for many a rationalization to do whatever is necessary to maintain Israel’s security. Again, Burg says,

> Since those days in Germany, we have been holding on painfully to the little that we have, not letting go. We hold the memories and the traumas and they do not leave us. We cling to the tragedy and the tragedy becomes our justification for everything else.

This sense of historical victimization creates for some Israelis a compensatory reflex to choose power and armament; to reject the claims and critique of others; and the adoption of a philosophy that the “end justifies the means,” even if that means the loss of human rights, life, and the dignity of others.

A Vignette: Hostile Walls and Holy People

By Susan R. Andrews

This time I came home depressed and anxious—sobered by the bitterness, the polarization, and the hopelessness that seems to permeate the region. Very different from my last trip to Palestine-Israel, back in 1995— in between the first and second Intifadas—when Oslo seemed promising, the Palestinian Authority had a strong voice, and Christians and Jews were talking and hoping and building tentative bridges together. But in 2010 the situation is bleak—and the window of opportunity for peace is rapidly closing.

The first six days we met with our Christian partners in Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan—soaking in the beauty of these ancient lands, hearing the lament about the rapid diminishment of the Christian voice and presence in the Holy Land, and feeling the urgency of this moment in time. We were heartened by the unity of the Christian voices, increasingly joined by moderate Muslim voices—all crying out for peace with justice. And yet we also heard a clear warning that the conflict in Israel/Palestine is a pervasive disease, poisoning the present and jeopardizing the future of the entire Middle East region—indeed a toxic combination of fear and anger and chronic displacement that is jeopardizing the harmony of the whole world.

Our final eight days were spent in Israel/Palestine—six days in Jerusalem and two days in the Galilee and Jericho. We stayed at a Christian Retreat Center in East Jerusalem, and a kosher Orthodox Jewish hotel in West Jerusalem—literally experiencing the cultural tension of this small, fierce and divided city. We spent a day in Hebron and a day in Bethlehem—and we talked and listened, and talked and listened, and talked and listened with Christians, Muslims, Jews, Israelis, Palestinians, human rights activists, rabbis, government officials, Bedouins, scholars, settlers, and displaced refugees.
Several images have been burned into my soul from our troubled days together. I see the elder-physician from Basra, Iraq, who remains faithful in his devastated city, keeping the doors of the church open, preaching every week, and ministering as a plastic surgeon, reshaping faces and bodies deformed by the bombs and pollution of the war. I hear the pastor from Iran, serving with a quiet joy amidst much pressure and civil unrest, rejoicing that his pews are full each Sunday with inquirers about the faith, in a country where it is illegal to proselytize.

I see the steady march of settlement expansion on confiscated Palestinian land—mammoth development dominating every hillside around Jerusalem—squeezing the Arab populations into valleys of poverty and despair. And I see bypass roads and towering security walls—literally fencing off the reality of the occupation from the Israeli families, many who live in these burgeoning suburban settlements with a 50 percent subsidy from the government.

I see and hear the seven rabbis who ate lunch with us—aware of the moral failures of the Israeli government, actively seeking ways to redeem the Israeli people by dismantling the occupation, and yet also fiercely committed to the security of their land and their people. I see the angry settler in Hebron—greeting us with contempt in his voice and a pistol on his hip. And the soldiers who kept us waiting as they cleaned up the early morning blood from a confrontation between a Palestinian resident and an Israeli soldier.

I see a church packed with Christians in predominantly Muslim Amman, Jordan—most of them from families displaced by the 1948 invasion of Palestine by Israeli soldiers. I see Angela, a Jewish human rights activist working for the Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions, who showed us the inequities of roads and houses and schools and freedom between East and West Jerusalem, and who grieves the very loss of the soul of the Jewish people amidst the power politics of the Israeli government. And I feel the joy and the energy of Mitri Raheb, a Lutheran pastor in Bethlehem, who insists on being a resurrection Christian, living with hope amidst the contemporary suffering of his people—pouring all his energies and dreams into empowerment and encouragement of the youth of Bethlehem—giving them imagination and leadership skills through education and the arts.

Two ideas have stuck with me from our conversations in the Middle East. Avraham Burg, a former speaker of the Knesset, now a scholar and peace activist, encouraged us to see the conflict in the Middle East in a new light. It is not only about power politics, it is also about psycho-politics. As he sees it, the conflict is almost cosmic in proportion—a struggle between “competing traumas.” There is the trauma of 1948—and all the horror of violent displacement and the de-legitimization and demonization of the Palestinian people. And there is the trauma of the Holocaust—the genocide of 6 million people feeding on the historical hatred that has tried to wipe out the Jewish people for more than 5,000 years. These traumas are not just about political conflict. These traumas permeate the very essence of identity and passion and life. And they will not be healed by high-sounding words in a peace agreement. They will only be healed by a global embrace of the radical grace of God.

The second idea that has stuck with me focuses on the mantra we so often hear from our Jewish friends. “Never again”—never again will the world allow the horror and hatred of a holocaust against God’s people. But that mantra can have two meanings—never again will MY people go through such devastation, even if it means oppressing and destroying others in the process. OR, never again will ANY people go through such ugly destruction. And all of us—Christian, Muslim, Jew—must work together to find true shalom in the Middle East and around the world.

I came home hearing a double message from our journey through the Holy Land. The first was a plea from our Christian brothers and sisters to stand with them in solidarity—naming the evil that is the occupation, and doing everything in our power to end it. The second was a plea from our Israeli Jewish brothers and sisters to engage our Jewish partners here in the United States in such a way that they can hear our message—and be transformed into peacemakers with and for the people of both Israel and Palestine. Those two pleas remain in tension as we submit our report as a task force.

My prayer is that God will give the PC(USA) the grace and the clarity to speak the truth in love—and to further God’s reign of peace and justice in the world. And my conviction is that the Living Christ can indeed be our peace, working to break down the dividing walls of hostility that are fragmenting this beautiful and broken world.

May it be so.

[The vignettes in this section of the report were written by individual members of the MESC as they reflected on their experience in the Middle East. Susan R. Andrews is general presbyter of Hudson River Presbytery and has long been involved in interfaith and ecumenical relations.]

The second psycho-trauma that one encounters in the Middle East is the trauma brought by Nakba [The Catastrophe], as the Palestinians call it, or the War of Independence, as the Israelis term the event. The term “Nakba” does not refer to the establishment of Israel itself, but rather the effect that the war had on the Palestinian people. This war resulted in the displacement of 750,000 Palestinians in 1948 from their ancestral homeland. This was a violent displacement and is overwhelmingly experienced as a de-legitimization of the Palestinian people. This is described well by Naim Ateek. A Palestinian Anglican priest and the president and director of Sabeel in Jerusalem.

On Israel’s Independence Day in 1958 the Israeli military governor had allowed the Palestinian Arabs living in Israel to move around without permits. My father took advantage of this temporary freedom to rent a pickup truck and take all of his children back for the first time to see our home in the town of Beisan, the home from which we had been forced out nine years earlier. Even today I clearly remember how we were not allowed even to look inside our home. The three houses built by my father that made up our home had been divided into smaller units, each occupied now by a Jewish immigrant family. It must have been very difficult for my father to see our house occupied by Jewish immigrants who had come from North Africa while he, the rightful owner, was prevented even from entering them. A few days after this traumatic experience, my father suffered a stroke from which he never fully recovered, leaving him unable to walk or speak clearly.
The inexplicable pain of the Nakba creates for some Palestinians a sense of historical victimization, which creates a compensatory reflex to choose violence; to reject the claims and critique of others; and the adoption of a philosophy that the “end justifies the means.” The awareness of the Nakba is renewed every time a bulldozer knocks down a Palestinian house or uproots an olive tree, posing the constant moral test of how to respond non-violently—as almost all always do.

With both the Israeli Holocaust and the Palestinian Nakba, empathy is weakened, humiliation is remembered, hopelessness and fear increased, and when they confront each other “horns are locked.”

The defensive reaction seen by some in both communities is to move away from democracy and toward fundamentalism, theocracy, and exclusivism. This exclusivism is manifested in two peoples who have often looked at the world around them solely through the lenses of their own trauma, and who thereby fail to see the whole picture. Each have become compartmentalized, resulting in further misunderstanding and conflict. This compartmentalization prevents each from knowing what is happening to the other and failing to accurately understand the other’s viewpoint. The walls or borders of each compartment become blinders that obscure the reality of the situation.

Compartmentalization also leads to living in isolation, permitting each party to think that their mistreatment of the other is both good and proper. “It is just the way it is.” This has led some Zionists, who see themselves as an embattled minority, to justify the occupation and the invasion of Gaza because it is for Israel’s security. Likewise, this has led some extremist Arabs, who see themselves as the oppressed, to resort to violent resistance. Either way, “each side sees itself as a victim and the other side as an instigator.”

“The emotional baggage of the Holocaust and the displacement of hundreds of thousands of Palestinians affect people’s perceptions of the objective reality of the Israeli Palestinian conflict, a reality in which people are being killed. One side may perceive the blowing up a bus or a disco as justified retaliation; the other side may perceive the isolation of Gaza and the killing of far greater numbers of Palestinians with tanks and F-16s as justified retaliation. The objective reality remains the same: people are dying.”

We believe that the one person’s pain does not justify the inflicting of pain on another. We also believe that breaking through the conflict created by both of these psycho-traumas is possible only with the work of outside parties. Both sides are so “locked in horns” that a third party breakthrough is imperative. This “outside-assisted breakthrough” must come from the U.S. government (which is a primary supporter of Israel), American Jewish voices for a just peace, Christian churches both within the Middle East and worldwide, and the many moderate Muslims who embrace a vision for peace.

A Vignette: Like the Lilies of the Field and the Birds of the Air
by Nahida H. Gordon

Like the lilies of the field and the birds of the air, “I am from there”—Palestine. As we leave Jordan and enter Palestine at the King Hussein crossing, we are greeted by the flag of the government that has denied me my Palestine. My friends, the members of the Middle East Study Committee, are excited at seeing the desert wilderness where Jesus wandered for forty days. One of them begins to sing a hymn. They and I look at the same thing, but see very different realities. Palestine belongs to them in a way that it does not to me. I feel only sadness and loss.

I was born in Jerusalem and lived in Jaffa. My family, which had lived in Palestine for centuries, left Jaffa in May 1948 to flee the Israeli bombing of the business and civilian areas of Jaffa. As the bombs fell on our houses, my father was wounded and the church across the street was partially destroyed. We literally fled for our lives thinking that we could return when the violence abated. We heard about the massacre in Deir Yassin in early April and heard about the trucks with loudspeakers promising that if Palestinians stayed in their homes, they would suffer the same fate as the inhabitants of Deir Yassin, a Palestinian town near Jerusalem. I have a document, circulated in Jaffa by the Hagana (Israeli forces) on May 13, 1948, in which we were promised that they, the Hagana, will honor the Geneva conventions and allow our return to Jaffa. This was a lie, one of many, throughout the years. It is now sixty-one years later, and I am still waiting to return to my home.

As we traveled throughout Palestine, I looked at the birds of the air with envy. They fly about not worrying about checkpoints, earth mounds, Black Hawk helicopters, F16 jets, sulfur bombs, tear gas canisters, sound grenades, bullets, or the myriad variety of armaments that plague Palestinians and suicide bombs that plague Israelis. Birds, it seems, do not need passports or identity cards. Before Israel, we Palestinians were more like the birds—we lived in a multicultural society of Christians, Jews, and Muslims. I had friends who were Jews and Muslims. Why cannot the world allow us to strive for that again?

As we continued to travel throughout the land, we encountered the continuing dispossession of the Palestinians by the Israeli government to make way for Jewish immigrants from many parts of the world, including the United States and Europe. In West Jerusalem, we passed through the neighborhood called Ba’a where my grandmothers’, uncles’, and aunts’ houses still stand—now occupied by Israeli citizens. The sights and sounds of Jerusalem, its sweet breezes, the trees, the song of the morning dove all evoke memories of the past. My family’s dispossession seems complete and brings on a wave of intense sadness. And anger—why were the Palestinians deemed to be an expendable people for the purpose of assuaging the guilt of Western Christianity?

We ended our trip at the Sea of Galilee. Upon arriving, we celebrated communion. So for me, the trip into Palestine ended the same way it began. My friends see the biblical connections and I see the loss and grief. Because of my Christian Palestinian origin, Palestine is lost to me!
I am grateful for those who give of themselves and of their time to consider the question of Palestine and particularly to those who have the courage to speak the truth. Only truth will free Palestine-Israel.

3. Dwindling Christian Presence and Influence

The Christian community has maintained an unbroken presence and witness in Jerusalem since Pentecost, gradually spreading throughout Palestine, the Middle East, and the Mediterranean world. There is continuing concern about the numbers of Christians remaining in the Middle East and particularly in Palestine. This was the message that was clearly heard from our Christian partners, particularly in Lebanon and Israel.

At present it is estimated that 9,246,000 to 16,206,000 Christians live in the Middle East. Currently, Christians have been emigrating from the Middle East, and reasons for the outmigration vary by country. Political upheavals in Lebanon; discrimination in Israel, Egypt, and Iran; the occupation and economic decline in the West Bank and Gaza; and security and discrimination in Iraq are some of the reasons. There are political reasons to try to inflate the numbers; we are told that the actual numbers are closer to the lower ends of each range. Christians in Jordan and Syria appear to experience the least difficulties in the Middle East; however numbers are reported to be declining there as well. The Table below provides estimates by country.

Although the numbers of Christians in Israel and the Palestinian Territories have remained steady, or may have even increased slightly, they have not kept pace with the normal rate of population growth. Their proportions have declined significantly and their influence greatly diminished. The reduction to the present 1.37 percent in the proportion of Christians is attributed to lower birth rates and the higher rates of outmigration, which result from the occupation with its difficulties for daily life. A further concern of this outmigration is that those able to migrate, either Christian or Muslim, are those with education and whose political views are “liberals or seculars” thus tending to leave behind a greater proportion of those on the extremes in political orientation.

This dwindling presence of Christians in the Middle East is a deep concern due to the role that Christians have played in being a mediating, reconciling presence. Without that presence, we fear a more religiously polarized Middle East, more prone to extremism.

4. Refugees in the Middle East

As a result of the 1948 Arab-Israeli conflict, 750,000 Palestinians became refugees. The 1967 war resulted in an additional 140,000 refugees in Jordan and 240,000 in the West Bank. It is currently estimated that there are 4.7 million registered Palestinian refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, the West Bank, and Gaza. The massive numbers of Palestinian refugees in surrounding countries continues to cause concern, conflict, and anger on the part of our respective partners there. For there to be a just peace, Palestinian refugees must be offered the right to return or compensation for their home and lands. One Jewish author has poignantly remarked, “Can the United States stop its support of Israel’s military and instead support Israel by offering to help in the repatriation of Palestinian refugees? We can, and we should.”

5. Increasing Nuclear Threat

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) reported on February 8, 2010, the following news.

The IAEA can confirm that it has received a letter from the Atomic Energy Organization of Iran (AEOI) on 8 February 2010, in which the AEOI informed the Agency that production of less than 20 percent enriched uranium is being foreseen at the Pilot Fuel Enrichment Plant at Natanz for fuel for the Tehran Research Reactor.

The IAEA then reported ten days later that they had extensive evidence of “past or current undisclosed activities” by Iran’s military to develop a nuclear warhead.

That news sent waves of fear through Israelis and fueled their sense of vulnerability and insecurity.

While this growing fear is a deep concern, an equal concern is the number of nuclear warheads that Israel currently stockpiles and thus the growing sense of Iranian vulnerability and insecurity. While Israel will not confirm its possession of nuclear weapons or the number held, it is generally agreed that Israel has stockpiled close to 100 nuclear weapons.

The only just and peaceful solution to this growing concern is to work for a nuclear-free Middle East in both Iran and Israel.

6. Reality on the Ground in Israel-Palestine

a. Violence by Both Extremes

Inexcusable acts of violence have been committed by both the powerful occupying forces of the Israeli military and the Jewish settlers in the West Bank, as well as, the Palestinians, of whom a relatively small minority has resorted to violence as a means of resisting the occupation. Violence is not an acceptable means to peace, regardless of its rationale.

b. The Israeli Occupation of the West Bank and Gaza

As the MESC traveled throughout the region, the overwhelming consensus of all members was that Israel’s occupation of the West Bank and Gaza is a sin against God and other fellow human beings. While there are many subordinate factors that contribute to the lack of a just peace in Israel-Palestine, the major issue for a just peace is the continued occupation that has been ongoing for the past forty-three years.

The real concern that we all embrace is that the window of opportunity for an end to the occupation and the viability of a two-state solution is rapidly closing. This is due in large part to the rapid growth of settlements in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, the increasing number of bypass roads, the injustice of the separation barrier, and tragic numbers of house demolitions.

One of the growing concerns of the occupation is the dramatic increase of settlements that began after the 1967 war. One of the hopes of the Oslo Interim agreements was that settlement growth would cease; however, the opposite has occurred, resulting in a current population of the West Bank settlements at 285,000 and 198,700 settlers in East Jerusalem. The continued growth of the number of settlements and settlers is perceived by many as an attempt by Israel to prevent the establishment of an economically viable Palestinian state.

Another concern of the occupation is the number of “Israeli-only bypass roads” that carve up the Palestinian homeland and connect one settlement to another. This has a devastating effect on the ability of Palestinian residents to live out a normal life—to visit family, farm family property; to seek medical treatment; to secure employment; and to travel freely in one’s own country.

The separation barrier at times is an imposing twenty-six feet high, concrete wall and at other times, in less densely populated areas, it is a barbed-wire topped fence. Israeli supporters of the barrier argue that the wall is necessary to protect Israeli citizens in Israel and its West Bank settlements from Palestinian terrorists and attribute the decrease of incidents of suicide bombers to the existence of the barrier. While few would deny the right of any government to put a barrier on its own property line, thus along the 1967 borders, three-quarters of this barrier is inside the West Bank on Palestinian land. This is often perceived by the Palestinians as an effort to secure an illegal settlement, claim water sources, and annex Palestinian land. The location of the barrier is a violation of international law and thus is perceived as a means to preempt a just peace.

The number of house demolitions is alarming and shocks the human conscience. It is estimated that some 24,145 Palestinian homes have been demolished in the Occupied Territories since 1967 and that some 4,247 Palestinian homes were demolished in the Gaza Strip during Operation Cast Lead. The Israeli reason given for these demolitions are as follows:
houses demolished for lack of a building permit, houses demolished as punishment for the actions of people associated with the houses, and houses demolished by the IDF in the course of military operations. Regardless of the reason, the demolition of houses is a tragic human experience for Palestinian homeowners and an unnecessary action if there were no occupation.

A just and lasting peace and security for Israel is possible when the occupation has ended and the Palestinian acts of violent resistance are no longer employed. A just and lasting peace and security for the Palestinians is possible when the occupation has ended and Israel does not need to resort to military force to maintain its illegal land possession. If there were no occupation, there would be no Palestinian resistance. If there was no Palestinian resistance, Israelis could live in peace and security.

The Israeli occupation leads to the denial of many human rights and the violation of international laws. The violent forms of Palestinian resistance to the occupation also leads to violations of international law. The only just solution is to insist that both Palestinians and Israelis abide by international law and justly respect the human rights of all. Double standards must give way to equal justice for all, which will result in peace for all.

A Vignette: Jesus Wept
by Lucy Janjigian

Jesus wept!

For more than two thousand years, Palestine has been the destination of Christian pilgrimages. Sadly, now about 1.5 percent of its population is Christian. This is the cry from all the leaders of Christian denominations.

Born in Jerusalem, I attended an English Anglican School with Arab (Muslim and Christian), Jewish, Armenian, and other girls of many nationalities. Our home was in an international quarter where Abyssinian, Arab, Armenian, Assyrian, English, French, Jewish, Polish, and Russian families lived in peace and within proximity to each other.

Around 1946, militant Zionists began blowing up British soldiers and policemen. July 22, 1946, was Palestine’s September 11. Irgun Zionists blew up the King David Hotel that housed the British Mandate Government, killing 92 Arab, Armenian, British, Greek, and Jewish personnel, including my aunt’s sister Eugenie, and a Greek girl I knew, a recent graduate from our school.

On November 29, 1947, the United Nations announced the Palestine Partition Plan. The house we lived in landed in no man’s land with bullets flying through the windows between Arabs and Jews. One night, the four-storied Mandelbaum Apartment Building (that was behind our house) whose Jewish residents had evacuated that day, was blown up by Jewish forces. Our windowpanes shattered, dogs barked, pictures and dishes crashed to the tiled floor. The blast terrified us and shook us out of bed.

The next morning we were uprooted. At the urging of Bishop Stewart, we abandoned our home and moved to St. George’s School across the street, where my father had taught both Arab and Jewish students. For us to move safely, a temporary two-hour ceasefire was agreed upon. Carrying a few personal belongings, the street we crossed became the boundary between Israel and Jordan. Jerusalem was now a divided city. Travel between Jerusalem Jordan and Jerusalem Israel had to be through the Mandelbaum Gate. This barbed wire fence in front of our demolished home was monitored by UN personnel. It was dismantled after the 1967 War when Jerusalem became a united city by illegal Israeli annexation that has not been recognized by the U.S. or by other international governments.

June 11, 1948—The first ceasefire was signed by UN’s Count Folke Bernadotte, with high ranking Israeli and Jordanian military and civilian officials, in our living room at St. George’s School. During the ceasefire both sides rearmed. We left Jerusalem and found refuge at the Anglican Girls’ Mission School, Amman, Jordan; where other refugees shared their room with extended family.

Upon our return to Jerusalem in 1950, I worked with United Nations Relief Works Agency (UNRWA) among Palestinian refugees in tented camps. That was an eye-opener and a heartbreak. In the past sixty years, the 750,000 refugees have since multiplied to millions. Sadly, they have not been allowed to return or compensated for their land and property.

It was an honor to be on this journey with the Presbyterian General Assembly-appointed study committee. Unfortunately, we were not able to visit Ramallah, Gaza, or refugee camps.

Israel evicts Palestinians, demolishes their homes and cisterns, confiscates their land, and cuts down their orchards, which are frequently their only means of livelihood. Palestinians are deprived of their human rights and are humiliated on a daily basis. We saw an example of this the day we visited Hebron. An Israeli soldier carrying his gun entered our bus to check our identities. As he was getting off, out of the blue, he spat at a young Arab boy passing by minding his own business.

Palestinians feel imprisoned and choked by the Separation Wall (sometimes referred to as Wall of Tears or Apartheid Wall) and continues to build illegal settlements on Arab lands and hilltops converging onto villages, even though President Obama asked for a freeze on settlement building. Palestinians are harassed, denied water and freedom of movement. They are required to carry identity passes that are checked at numerous checkpoints making travel difficult and time-consuming. Furthermore, they have to use unpaved, winding roads that prolong travel time, while Israelis have access to direct exclusive paved roads.

“Israel acts as a spoiled child,” remarked one Israeli activist. “America has helped create this undisciplined child. It depends on the U.S. for its lifeline of funding and weapons.” She continued to say “that even though the state of Israel is supposed to be a democracy, it acts as a Nazi state.” She did not feel she could live in the country much longer if it continued to be an oppressor, ignoring human rights.

We were privileged to attend Dar Annadwa’s 5th Annual Conference—“The Kairos & the Intersection Between Theology & Politics—A South African Perspective” in Bethlehem.

Israel has violated human rights, broken Geneva Conventions, ignored UN Declarations, and gotten away with it. This I cannot understand. The U.S. government must stop providing Israel with unlimited funds and weapons.

I weep, with Christ for the Oppressor, the Oppressed,
Jerusalem—The Holy City.

I pray,
hearts of stone to melt into hearts of flesh,
Peace to reign with Justice, resulting in a two-state solution
Reinstating the 1967 borders,
Jerusalem declared an International City
Open for ALL.

May justice and peace reign.

Amen.

7. Palestinian Christians: Agents of Reconciliation and Nonviolent Resistance

In the Middle East the voice of our Christian partners, though increasingly small, is both vital and promising. While their percentage of the population continues to decline due to the Israel-Palestine conflict and the resulting political struggles and economic pressures, their unified witness in the recent past has been clear, concise, and challenging. In June 2007, the World Council of Churches brought together an international peace conference in Amman, Jordan. An urgent ecumenical plea, known now as “The Amman Call,” came out of this gathering. This document was a call for churches to step forward in their role to “heal and to bring all sides to reconciliation.” In addition it called for the Palestinian right of return, a two-state solution that is “viable politically, geographically, economically and socially,” and a shared Jerusalem. From our partners we all took seriously their cry, “Enough is enough. No more words without deeds. It is time for action.” Hearing this plea, the 218th General Assembly (2008) endorsed and affirmed “The Amman Call.”

The Palestine-Israel Ecumenical Forum (PIEF) was launched out of this initial gathering in Amman and during the next two years it continued to meet, encouraging the writing of a defining statement from our Palestinian partners. In December 2009, the forum met again in Bethlehem, Palestine, and there witnessed the unveiling of a Palestinian Christian statement: “Kairos Palestine: A Moment of Truth, A Word of Faith, Hope, and Love from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering.”

This Kairos Palestine document is a cry for the international community to stand with the Palestinian Christians who have faced great oppression and suffering. It is a call for us as Christians to oppose occupation theologies and to work for a just peace. This document clearly calls the occupation “a sin against God and humanity” and thus must be opposed by all who are concerned for justice and peace in the Middle East. It reaffirms “the establishment of an independent Palestinian state with Al-Quds [East Jerusalem] as its capital.” Throughout the document, even in the face of the separation wall that illegally confiscates Palestinian land and the growing number of settlements that recreate a growing obstacle to a political solution and Israel’s disregard of international law, the tone is one of hope and the method embraced is peaceful, nonviolent resistance. Kairos Palestine focuses, above all, on love and reconciliation.

While Kairos Palestine calls for divestment and boycott of everything produced by the occupation as an act of conscience and a method of nonviolent resistance, it lifts this up as part of the Christian affirmation of speaking truth in love. We struggle with its call for solidarity in this area and confess that we have not fully answered it.

The hopes and prayers are that the Kairos Palestine document will “provide the turning point to focus all peace-loving peoples in the world,” because “liberation from the occupation is in the interest of all peoples in the region.”

A Vignette: 58 Years in Israel and Palestine
by John Huffman

I am theologically a moderate pro-Zionist. While I cannot embrace the triumphal enthusiasm of the ultra-dispensationalists with their detailed eschatological charts, I on the other hand cannot bring myself to deny the significant role of the Jews in both human history and salvation history. Even as in my Reformed theology, I affirm the Church to be the New Israel, I am stopped in my tracks as I see an exiled people return to a land once theirs, more than 2,000 years since they have had complete sovereignty over that land. There is nothing comparable in history. This convinces me that some of the prophecies of Scripture are being fulfilled in our day in a most amazing way.

At the same time, I am forced to raise issues with today’s zealous Jewish Zionism and the State of Israel in its present policies and actions in regard to the Palestinian people. There is no biblical mandate for such a lack of hospitality and such flagrant injustice. Something must be done.

I first visited the Middle East as a twelve-year-old in 1952. As my parents had tea with Dr. and Mrs. Thomas Lambie at the Berachah Tuberculosis Sanitarium south of Bethlehem, I stood on the roof of their house looking out into their backyard and the hillside beyond observing more than 30,000 Palestinian refugees of the 1947–48 war, still living in the squalor of camelhair tents, behind barbed wire fences, eking out an existence on United Nations rations. Seeing other such encampments, I then, as a youngster, sensed that these refugee camps would inevitably become hotbeds of resentment and even potential terrorism.

In my subsequent thirty trips to the area, the most recent being with our task force this past August, I have been perplexed by the complexity of the situation, troubled by acts of terrorism on both sides, and ultimately appalled by the arbitrary expropriation of Palestinian land and the exponential increase of that expropriation since 1967 and the use of that land in violation of international law, the most visible evidence of that being the building of Israeli settlements housing what soon will be one-half million settlers.

It was with great reservation that I accepted the invitation to join this General Assembly task force. I know how controversial is this topic and how viciously attacked any truth-tellers are by majority voices in the American Jewish community that are quick to attach the label “anti-Semitic” to anyone who even suggests that there are serious ethical and legal issues at stake. I support the security of the State of Israel and believe that American tax dollars should be used for that purpose. But it should not be done at all costs on Israeli-dictated terms resulting from a masterful manipulation of the United States political process.

Whatever else our report recommends, I personally plead for a reversal of the apartheid actions that now are integral to Israeli domestic and foreign policy. Something must be done to remove the ghastly wall that is such a reminder of the Soviet unjust endeavor to exclude. And I would hope for the negotiation of a land swap that will inconvenience the fewest possible Palestinians and Israelis in a realistic understanding that, as painful as it is, the clock cannot be turned all the way back to 1948 but that reparations can be made. I beg for a more humane approach by Israel to implement the conditions undergirding God’s covenant blessing on His people, an implementation that will not deny realistic security threats but will endeavor to alleviate the suffering of the second-class status of Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank. If this is not forthcoming, I must reluctantly join that lonely minority of Jewish and Gentile voices that call for justice even if it takes divestment to force the issue. And I urge our American U.S. foreign policy to cut off our elaborate financial/military support of Israel until there is full compliance with international law and the standards of justice in any respected society. Short of such actions on the part of the Israelis, I see a continued heightening of tensions and circumstances evolving in the larger Middle East that could even ultimately threaten the existence of Israel as a continuing Jewish homeland.

8. A Time for Action

One last observation that the Middle East Study Committee encountered in the Middle East was the disparity between the fierce urgency felt by many whose lives focus on solving the conflict and the lack of urgency felt by many others whose lives are more removed from day-to-day contact with the conflict. Many give so much energy to the ending of the occupation and the resolution of a just peace; and, on the other hand, many simply are willing to live with the disparity of justice, perhaps because the insecurity of the current status quo is perceived to be better than the fear of the unknown that a dramatic change would bring.

On the floor of the Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, the words attributed to Martin Niemoller, which he wrote as an anti-Nazi German pastor, read:

First, they came for the socialist, and I did not speak out, because I was not a socialist.
Then they came for the trade unionist, and I did not speak out, because I was not a trade unionist.
Then they came for the Jews, and I did not speak out, because I was not a Jew.
Then they came for me, and there was no one left to speak for me.

We all do have a shared responsibility to guard human rights everywhere, and now is the time for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to speak out, stand up, and take action. We must be those who will say, “Never again” not just for the Jew, but for every suffering victim in the world today, including the Palestinians.

Part Two: Recommendations

[The recommendation section has been moved to the beginning of this report.]
This section is composed of study materials to be used by individuals, groups, and churches for further study. These pieces were written at the request of the MESC and reflect the views and experiences of the authors. Sections of these historical perspectives have been used in previous portions of the committee’s report.

[A. Notes from a Humanistic, Liberal Zionist: A Personal Perspective]

[This study piece was written by Ron Kronish, a rabbi and educator, who has lived in West Jerusalem, for the past thirty years. Rabbi Kronish serves as the founder and director of the Interreligious Coordinating Council in Israel (www.icci.org.il). The Middle East Study Committee (MESC) met Dr. Kronish when in the Jerusalem and asked him to write this study piece. It gives a perspective to the Israel-Palestine conflict.

1. A Personal Introduction

I am honored to write this short essay for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). During the past few years—since the issue of “divestment,” which emerged from the annual assembly of the PC(USA) in 2004, I have been privileged to engage in genuine dialogue with members of the PC(USA) on their study tours to Israel, and I have always felt a keen sense of fellowship and a sincere effort on their part to learn more about the Jewish Zionist narrative that underlies the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Accordingly, I am pleased to be able to respond positively to the invitation to write a short reflection as part of your church’s comprehensive study on the Middle East, with a special focus on Israel-Palestine.

Let me begin with a few words about myself. I am a Reform rabbi who grew up in the U.S. and made aliya (Hebrew for “went up”) to Israel with my wife, Amy and then two daughters (we now have three wonderful daughters) in June 1979, slightly more than thirty years ago, which means that I have spent almost half my life in Israel by now! I grew up in Miami Beach, Florida, in a fervently Zionist Jewish home, so I imbibed Zionism from my youth, mostly from my father, Rabbi Leon Kronish, of blessed memory. He was a Reform rabbi at Temple Beth Sholom (House of Peace) from 1944-1996, where he preached and taught by example the meaning and importance of the Jewish state to Jews in America for more than five decades. He was also one of the leaders of the Reform Jewish movement in the United States from the 1960s until 1984, when he retired due to illness.

In an essay that I wrote about my father in a book about him, which was published the year he died (1996), I wrote:

Often, when I am asked why I decided to live in Israel, I answer that I took Ben Gurion’s speeches and my father’s sermons seriously! My parents took my sister and me to Israel for the first time in 1964, the summer after I finished high school. And I fell in love with Israel on that first visit because my father’s love for Israel was infectious and overwhelming.

Later in that same essay, I explained why the state of Israel was so important to my father, even though he never lived there:

My father has been a great teacher of the concept that both Israel and the Diaspora are vital for the continuity of Judaism and the Jewish People. Not one or the other, but both are crucial and inextricably intertwined—this has been his greatest message. It is certainly a message that I learned from him and cherish deeply until this very day. And, it is the sort of concept that I believe that we still need to strengthen and develop, as we work towards the future of the local community and the State of Israel with a growing realization of the fact of our interlocking destiny as a people, which binds us together in common concern, caring and commitment.

Indeed, I am sure that one of the lessons learned by the leaders and followers of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in recent years, since the beginning of the “divestment” debate, is how important the state of Israel—as the homeland of the Jewish People worldwide—is to American Jews with whom they live in neighborly relations and often work in common cause in many communities throughout North America.

In addition to my personal upbringing at home, I am also very much a product of the 1960s in the U.S.A. Not only did I live through the heyday of the civil rights period and the anti-Vietnam War period when I was a college student at Brandeis University (1964-68) and as a student at the Rabbinical college of the Reform movement, the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in New York (1968-73), but I was profoundly moved and inspired by the victory of Israel over those Arab countries who sought to annihilate the young Jewish state (only nineteen years old!). Yes, only twenty-two years after World War II, there was a serious attempt to destroy the state of Israel in what would surely have been perceived as another Holocaust or a continuation of the one that began in Europe in the late 1930s and early 1940s. It is often amazing to me how easily this is forgotten. Jews everywhere in the world live with this consciousness and visiting groups to Israel begin to understand this better after they pay a somber visit to Yad Vashem, Israel’s national Holocaust museum and education center.

It was actually in 1970-71, after a spending a full year as students at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem only three years after the Six Day War of 1967, did my wife, Amy, and I decide that Israel was the place where we would want to live our lives to the fullest extent as Jews in a society and culture committed to the creative survival of the Jewish People. In those years, there was no “intifada” (Palestinian uprising)—we thought naively that we were living with what Moshe Dayan called a “benign occupation” with regard to the Palestinians in the territories of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, whom the Israel government thought were entitled to civil rights (hence the establishment of the Civil Administration), but not to national rights, since at that time, it was illegal to recognize the existence of the P.L.O. (Palestine Liberation Organization) or to speak with any of its leaders. For those who don’t remember, from 1967–1986 (the outbreak of the first intifada), Israelis could travel the length and breadth of the West Bank and Gaza Strip and there was no violence or terror threatening normal life.

When we actually made the move and came to live in Israel in 1979, it was a time of relative peace for Israel, six years after “the earthquake” of the Yom Kippur War and seven years before the outbreak of the first “intifada.” We were deeply moved—as we still are—by the unique historic opportunity and obligation to live in the Jewish State of Israel, where we would be able to raise our children as full-fledged and proud Jews in the language and culture of the people Israel.

During the last eighteen years, I have served as the director of the Interreligious Coordinating Council in Israel (ICCI), Israel’s leading interreligious organization, which I founded in 1991. In my capacity as leader of this institution, I have been invited to seminars at the Vatican several times and I was fortunate to be at the signing of the Fundamental Agreement between the State of Israel and the Holy See, at the end of 1993, a few months after the signing of the Oslo Accords on the White House lawn in Washington D.C. I also work closely with local Palestinians (Christians and Muslims) in an attempt to bring about greater understanding between people in this Land.

In March 2002, I hosted fifty rabbis (as one of the programs of the convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis (CCAR) in Jerusalem that year) at the ICCI Education Center in the prestigious German Colony in Jerusalem for a panel discussion with a Christian and Muslim colleague on “The Contribution of Interreligious Dialogue to Peace-building in Israel and the Middle East,” a subject about which I have spoken and written extensively during the past eighteen years. After the session, I joined a number of other rabbis and their spouses for lunch at the well-known Café Cafit on Emek Refaim Street. During the lunch, a terrorist came in to the café and was noticed by a courageous waiter, who tackled him and took away his explosives, and we were saved by this act of bravery (and by the miracle of the nonfunctioning of the terrorist’s detonator!) and, thank God, I am alive to tell the story. When we went back to thank the heroic waiter the next morning, we were interviewed by Israeli television, and by the end of the day the whole world knew about this incident.

A few days later, my colleagues and I offered a special blessing of gratitude to God at Shabbat morning services held at the educational and cultural center of the World Union for Progressive Judaism in a very emotional and heart-warming ceremony.

Notwithstanding this traumatic experience, I have tried to be a voice for peaceful coexistence here in Israel. Since Israeli society has been moving to the right in recent years, I often find that my voice is a lonely one, but I persist nevertheless. In my lectures to visiting groups in Israel and around the world, I am often asked if Israel will ever live in peace, and my answer is: “Yes!” It can and it will happen in my lifetime.

2. Zionism as the National Liberation Movement of the Jewish People

Since the infamous “Zionism Is Racism” resolution in the U.N. and since the horrific and continuous anti-Zionist and anti-Israel propaganda of the Arab countries and of some European countries since the outbreak of the first intifada in 1986, the term “Zionism” is greatly misunderstood and purposely distorted in much of the Western world, especially in much of mainline Christianity. This, therefore, is a good opportunity to set the record straight.

First of all, it is important to note that Zionism is not simply a response to the Holocaust of World War II. Rather, its origins are to be found in Europe some sixty-to-seventy years before the Holocaust, during the rise of nationalism at the end of the 19th century.

Zionism is one of the major streams of modern Jewish thought (and action) which arose out of the historical experience of the emancipation of the Jews of Europe in the 18th and 19th centuries. It was—and still is—one of the central Jewish responses to modernity and it offered the Jews of the world a compelling option for Jewish survival in the modern and contemporary world.

The father of modern Zionism, Theodore Herzl, wrote a famous book in 1896 called The Jewish State, which diagnosed “the Jewish Problem” as it was called at the end of the 19th century, as one of anti-Semitism. According to his reading of the situation, there was no real possibility for Jews to survive in Europe anymore, after centuries of pogroms, blood libels, and rampant anti-Semitism, culminating in the infamous Dreyfus Affair in France of the 1890s. In his view—and the view of many other classical Zionist thinkers of the latter part of the 19th century—there was simply no future for Jews anymore in Europe since hatred of the Jews was so endemic to European (Christian) society. The only solution was to leave Europe and return “home.”

And where was home? Clearly, it was the ancient homeland of the Jewish People, the Land of Israel, with which this people had been connected for all of its history, ever since the days of the Bible and in all our wanderings in the Diaspora. Herzl’s theory became known as “Political Zionism” since he proposed a political solution to the Jewish People of his time.
Instead of anti-Semitism and rootlessness in Europe, the Jews should establish a state that would be a “state of the Jews,” i.e., a state with a strong Jewish majority, in which this people—the Jewish People—would “live and breathe free.” In this state, the Jews would live a “normal” national life. They would be a “people like all other peoples.” This state would therefore be first and foremost a refuge for oppressed Jews anywhere in the world who suffer from anti-Semitism, a haven for Jews in which their suffering as a humiliated and despondent people would be no more.

This notion of Israel as a refuge for oppressed Jews everywhere still lies at the center of the self-consciousness of the modern state of Israel. It is therefore self-evident to all governments of Israel—and to the Jewish People of Israel—that when Jews were oppressed in the Former Soviet Union or in Ethiopia, it is automatically understood that they be “saved” and brought home to Israel. The same of course was the case for the “remnants” of the Shoah in the years during and immediately following World War Two.

It is important for me to add that what underlies this idea of Zionism—and all other theories of Zionism—is the concept that Jews are a nation/people! In my briefings to Christian groups who come to Israel over many years, it is shocking to me how this comes as a surprise to them. Yes, the Zionist movement—in all of its streams from the beginning until today—understands the Jews as a national movement, as a people, which originated in biblical days and somehow miraculously survived for all of its history. To be a Jew, according to all versions of Zionism, is to be a member of the Jewish People. This is its revolutionary message to the Jewish World, one that most Jews have accepted in theory, but not always in practice. One can express one’s Jewishness nationally, culturally, or religiously, but at the base of one’s Jewish identity is the notion of belonging to an ancient people that has always maintained a very strong attachment to its ancient homeland.

Theodore Herzl was not the only Zionist thinker at the end of the 19th century to propose radical new ideas for the Jewish People. There were many of them. One of them was a man originally named Asher Ginsberg, who took the name Ahad Ha’am (“One of the People”). He and his followers argued strongly with Herzl and his followers in the early years of the Zionist movement in Europe. In contrast to Herzl, he felt that the main problem facing the Jews—certainly those in Western Europe, as opposed to those in Eastern Europe—was assimilation, not anti-Semitism. In the West, the Jews were not persecuted or oppressed. In places like Germany, France, and Britain, they were welcomed as full citizens for the first time in Jewish history. So, many of them preferred to be Frenchmen or Englishmen or Germans of the Jewish heritage. Many of them abandoned Jewish religion for the newer ideas of the Enlightenment—Science, Democracy, Rationality, Progress.

Ahad Ha’am argued that the only place where Jews would live out a full Jewish national culture would be in their own homeland. In Israel, they would revive the Jewish language of Hebrew and with it Hebrew literature, art, music, and dance, all major elements of a thriving national culture. Only in Israel would Jews study the Bible as their national history. Only in the land of Israel would they feel a natural connection to the land and to every place in it as part of their own national heritage.

In contrast to Herzl, Ahad Ha Am further argued that the goal of returning to Israel was not “normalization.” Rather, Israel must be a unique Jewish society, living up to the ideals of the biblical prophet of Israel by setting up an ethical and just society that cares for the minorities within its midst.

Whether one subscribed to the political Zionism of Herzl or to the cultural Zionism of Ahad Ha-am, there was a definite sense that there was no future for the Jewish People outside of its homeland, the Land of Israel.

In addition, there was a minority point of view in the early years of the Zionist Movement in Europe at the end of the 19th century and the beginning of the 20th century that was called “Religious Zionism.” In contrast to political and cultural Zionism, religious Zionists did not think that the Jewish religion was a thing of the past. On the contrary, they argued that genuine Judaism is an authentic combination of religion and nationality. Indeed, they said that the Jews are both a religion and a people, and have always combined both sides of their identity. Attempts of assimilated Jews of one stripe or another to separate the Jewish Nation from the Jewish Religion are inauthentic, they argued, and this dichotomy could not hold water over time.

Religious Zionism has grown and developed in Israel since the founding of the state in 1948 and especially in the past forty-two years since the Six Day War of 1967. Not only Orthodox Jews are “religious Zionists” today, but so are Reform and Conservative and Reconstructionist Jews, who have all joined the Zionist Movement since 1967 and who all have major institutions in Israel to this day. In other words, there has been a general trend to combine the religious and national parts of our identity as Jews among all Jewish religious groups (except for the ultra orthodox groups, which are another story or the ultra secular, who hardly exist anymore) in contemporary Israel.

3. Zionism and Jewish Identity Today in Israel

Without going into more Jewish history, the question now arises as to the nature of Zionism and Jewish identity in Israel today. This is a complicated contemporary issue, which I cannot tackle comprehensively in this short reflection, but I will present my own analysis and perspective in a short and succinct manner.
First of all, it is important to state, that Israel has changed greatly during the years since the state was founded in 1948. New waves of aliyah (Jewish immigration to Israel) have helped Israel grow from a population of 600,000 people to a population of 7.5 million people today, 80 percent of whom are Jewish. With time, the idealism and socialism of the pioneering decades in the pre-state era and in the early years of the state, has dissipated greatly. Contemporary Western culture—for good and for bad—has inhibited greatly the ability of nonreligious Jewish culture to compete in the free market of ideas and trends, especially for the younger generation. And, many decades of wars and “intifadas”—including a great deal of terrorism, especially suicide bombers—have pushed the mainstream Jewish population to the right, with the feeling that the world is still out to get us via terrorism and wars that threaten to destroy the Jewish state, not to mention the possibility of a nuclear Iran that promises every day to wipe Israel off the map of the nations of the world.

In other words, the right has take over the center in Israeli political and cultural life. Perhaps the greatest irony is despite our great military and technological power, we still live with a Holocaust consciousness which reminds us that major elements in the world still seek our destruction. In this sense, we are not yet entirely free, even though we live in a land of freedom, in our own national home.

This brings me to the title of this reflection, i.e. the idea of a humanistic liberal understanding of Zionism. Is such a position still tenable in contemporary Israel?

My answer, of course, is yes. Let me explain.

Israel’s founding document is our Declaration of Independence, published on May 14, 1948. It is an inspirational statement of the ideals on which this state and society are based. I quote below just a few paragraphs to give the reader some idea of the vision of what kind of state we are supposed to have here in Israel, according to our founding-generation:

THE STATE OF ISRAEL will be open for Jewish immigration and for the Ingathering of the Exiles; it will foster the development of the country for the benefit of all its inhabitants; it will be based on freedom, justice and peace as envisaged by the prophets of Israel; it will ensure complete equality of social and political rights to all its inhabitants irrespective of religion, race or sex; it will guarantee freedom of religion, conscience, languages, education and culture; it will safeguard the Holy Places of all religions; and it will be faithful to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

THE STATE OF ISRAEL is prepared to cooperate with the agencies and representatives of the United Nations in implementing the resolution of the General Assembly of the 29th November, 1947, and will take steps to bring about the economic union of the whole of Eretz-Israel.

WE APPEAL to the United Nations to assist the Jewish people in the building-up of its State and to receive the State of Israel into the comity of nations.

WE APPEAL in the very midst of the onslaught launched against us now for months—to the Arab inhabitants of the State of Israel to preserve peace and participate in the upbuilding of the State on the basis of full and equal citizenship and due representation in all its provisional and permanent institutions.

WE EXTEND our hand to all neighboring states and their peoples in an offer of peace and good neighborliness, and appeal to them to establish bonds of cooperation and mutual help with the sovereign Jewish people settled in its own land. The State of Israel is prepared to do its share in a common effort for the advancement of the entire Middle East.

In many ways, all that is called for is a return to these basic values enshrined in our declaration of independence! Indeed, a Jewish organization of which I am a member, Rabbis for Human Rights, has written a new commentary on the Declaration of Independence to remind all Israeli citizens of the basic values upon which this state rests.

But life is not so simple. We cannot simply go back to 1948! Too many wars and too much violence have occurred since then. And, with them, the development of two very different national narratives—the Israeli Jewish one and the Palestinian Arab one. Sometimes I think that the only things they have in common are the dates!

For a long time, both sides denied the existence of the other. Until the Oslo accords in 1993, both sides did not officially recognize the existence of the other. The state of Israel refused to recognize the existence of a collective entity in the world now known as the Palestinian people; and the Palestinians refused to recognize the state of Israel as a legitimate state and referred to it as “the Zionist entity.”

Ever since the mutual recognition of the Oslo Accords, we now recognize the Palestinians and they now recognize us. At least in principle! The Jewish state now recognizes the existence of the Palestinian People and their rights to self-determination, i.e. a state. And the Palestinians recognize the state of Israel and its right to secure and recognize boundaries. In this sense, the Oslo Accords signed on the White House lawn in Washington, D.C., on September 13, 1993, represent a sea-change in the whole Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Yet, peace has eluded us for the past sixteen years, since the signing of these accords. Instead, we have been witness to terror and counterterror, the Second Lebanese War in summer 2006, rockets shot from Gaza at our communities in the south, and Israeli military operations in Gaza last year.

Naturally, people on both sides have begun to despair of the possibility of peace in our region. Instead of normalization, we have separation. Instead of negotiations, we have walls and fences.
[My answer to this—and the answer shared by many of my colleagues in Israel—is not to give up! We must resist despair with all of our strength and resources. Even if we cannot solve all of the political problems at once, we must persevere via dialogue wherever possible.

4. Towards the Future

[My father, Rabbi Leon Kronish, of blessed memory, always used to respond to the simple question “how are you?” with a typically Jewish/I Israeli answer: “Yehiye tov”—“it will be good.” The future will be better than the past.]

He believed deeply in Israel’s mission as the fulfillment of messianic redemption. And so do I. I inherited this legacy, this optimism, from him.

[And therefore I say that despite the current difficulties and obstacles in the political peace process—and there are many of them—I believe that the process will work itself out, and there will be a political solution, sooner or later, between Israel and the Palestinians (and all the Arab states).

There will be a two-state solution: Israel and Palestine, side-by-side. This is the new unfolding reality coming about, albeit much too slowly and painfully.

And then what? Will we be prepared for the next steps? What will be needed in the future?

What will be needed is what I like to call “the other peace process”—the educational, religious, and spiritual one, to supplement the political one.

There will be a desperate need for a massive religious, spiritual, educational, and psychological campaign to change the hearts and minds of the people on both sides, a serious and systematic set of programs that will educate the next generations about the existential needs to learn to live together.

This will not be quick, nor will it be easy. But it will soon become the educational imperative of the new era.

We will have no choice but to bring people together in large numbers to learn to live in peace:

-Rabbis, imams, priests and ministers, as the grass-roots community leaders,

-Teachers, educators, headmasters, assistant principals, curriculum writers,

-Youth movement leaders, informal educators, in a wide variety of settings, such as community centers, camps, and seminar centers,

-Women from all parts of the Palestinian and Jewish societies—professionals as well as laypersons, educators and activists, housewives and mothers, community leaders and laypersons.

I believe that those of us currently engaged in interreligious dialogue and education in Israel and Palestine will have a major role to play in this people-to-people peace process for a long time to come. And, religious leaders and their followers from abroad—Jewish, Christian, and Muslim—will be called upon to help.

This will be a time not to divest of the possibilities of peace but to invest in peace-building programs in Israel and Palestine, and across borders, for the sake of all of God’s children in the region.

B. A Plea for Justice: A Historical Analysis

This study piece was written by two members of the Middle East Study Committee, Nahida H. Gordon and Frederic W. Bush. Nahida Gordon is a professor of Statistics at Case Western Reserve University where she has long been involved in teaching undergraduate and graduate courses in mathematics and statistics. She has had a lifelong interest in the Middle East, particularly in Palestine where she has served as a Fulbright Senior Scholar. She subsequently received a Fulbright Alumni Initiatives Award grant to continue collaborations with researchers at Birzeit University. Frederic Bush served for thirty-five years as professor of Ancient Near Eastern Studies and Old Testament at Fuller Theological Seminary. During that time, he spent a full year’s sabbatical in Israel/Palestine studying the physical and historical geography of Palestine, after which, for some ten years, he led or directed a summer program in which he took students to Israel to study biblical Hebrew, experience Israel and Palestine, and participate in archeological excavations.

1. Introduction

The 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) called for the formation of a committee to prepare a comprehensive study focused on Palestine-Israel. This historic overview of the conflict was written by two members of the committee, who take sole responsibility for its contents. It was prepared as a study document for the committee.
We drew upon our combined experiences of living in Palestine; frequent visits during the past two decades to the Palestinian Occupied Territories; living in the West Bank as a Senior Fulbright Scholar; ongoing professional collaborations with Palestinian academics; and serving as a volunteer with the Christian Peacemaker Team in Hebron in the West Bank. Along with other members of the committee, we traveled, conducted many interviews of both Palestinians and Israelis, and discussed among ourselves what we have seen and learned. This is an attempt to understand a complex situation, and we are grateful for the opportunity to present this document.

One of us has the memory of pre-1948 Palestine as a multicultural society that included refugees from pre-World War II disasters elsewhere. A member of the committee is an Armenian-Palestinian-American some of whose family survived the Armenian genocide. The Armenians came to Palestine to seek refuge with a wish to live, raise their families, and contribute to the culture of their new home. They embraced the culture, learned the language, shared its cuisine, and most importantly contributed to the rich diversity of Palestinian society. Deep friendships and lasting family connections were common among the newly-arrived Armenians and the indigenous Palestinians. Tragically, the Armenian-Palestinians were uprooted once more in 1948-1949 during the Nakba, the expulsion of Palestinian Christians and Muslims by the newly arrived Jewish settlers from Europe.

It is important to note that there always has been a Jewish presence in Palestine before the arrival of these European immigrants. Jewish Palestinians spoke Arabic, lived peacefully on the land with Christian and Muslim-Palestinians, shared its cuisine, and enjoyed Palestine as did their Christian and Muslim neighbors. They were part of a multicultural Palestine, without whom Palestine would have lost some of its rich diversity and heritage. Friendships between these Jewish Palestinians and their Christian and Muslim neighbors were common.

So why did things change? They changed with the mass immigration of Jewish refugees from Europe to Palestine during the first half of the 20th century. These refugees came to Palestine to escape centuries of segregation, expulsion, murder, and the horrors of their holocaust during World War II. They were a traumatized people who, rather than integrating into the existing Palestinian society as the Armenians had done earlier, eventually came to displace the Palestinians. They took the land of Palestine from a majority of its inhabitants at gunpoint. The land dispossession by the state created by these European immigrants continues to the present time to further add to the widely dispersed 1948 Palestinian refugee population. Tragically, the government of these immigrants continues to nurture the belief that security comes only from military might. Not surprisingly, Palestinians responded with violence to their displacement. Violent elements in both the Israeli and Palestinian communities have repeatedly frustrated efforts at reconciliation.

Western countries, mindful of the Jewish holocaust, and their wish for atonement, contributed to the establishment of Israel and, by their mostly unconditional support, enable the continuing dispossession of Palestinians by successive Israeli governments. The atonement for the suffering of one people has created another suffering and dispossessed people. Through our travels, interviews, study, research, and life experiences, it is the authors’ belief that one of the major current obstacle to a just and peaceful resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is the ongoing support by Western nations, but especially our own country, of the continuing dispossession of the Palestinians and the violation of their human rights, including the right to political self-determination.

[2.1] State in Palestine: Who’s Right?

After the end of World War I, on January 25, 1919, the League of Nations was created and shortly thereafter on June 22, 1922, it issued the Mandate for Palestine (“Mandate”) to be administered by Great Britain. The Mandate document begins with the statement that the purpose of the Mandate is to give “effect to the provisions of Article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations.” Article 22 concerns territories and communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire, such as Palestine.

Article 22: To those colonies and territories which as a consequence of the late war have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenuous conditions of the modern world, there should be applied the principle that the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilization and that securities for the performance of this trust should be embodied in this Covenant.

Immediately after the restatement of Article 22, the mandate document declares that the Mandatory should be responsible for putting the Balfour Declaration into effect.

His Majesty’s Government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavours to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine.

Furthermore, six articles (2, 4, 6, 7, 11, and 22) of the Mandate document relate to the obligations of the mandatory power to foster and support this endeavor. In both the Mandate and Balfour Declaration documents, “the Palestinians were never once cited by name, whether as Palestinians or as Arabs, and were referred to only as ‘non-Jewish communities,’ pos-seeing solely civil and religious rights; their national and political rights were mentioned in neither. By contrast, national rights were ascribed to the ‘Jewish people,’ and the League of Nations Mandate made it a solemn responsibility of Great Britain to help the Jews create national institutions. The mandatory power was specifically called upon to extend all possible assistance to the growth and development of this national entity, notably by encouraging Jewish immigration.”

At this time, the census of Palestine, showed that Jews constituted 7.90 percent of the population. The incongruence between the League of Nations charter and the Mandate documents was ignored.

[Starting soon after the British occupation, Palestinians repeatedly pressed Great Britain to grant them their national rights of self-determination and representative government. They claimed these rights on the basis of the American President Woodrow Wilson’s Fourteen Points, specifically Point V which states that “A free, open-minded, and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the government whose title is to be determined.” Each time they did so, however, they were told that they were obliged to accept the terms of the Mandate as a precondition for any change in their constitutional position. But these terms denied the Palestinians any of these rights, or at best subordinated them completely to the national rights of the Jewish people. Acceptance of the Mandate by the Palestinians would thus have meant their recognition of the privileged national rights of the Jewish community in what they saw as their own country, and formal acceptance of their own legally subordinate position, indeed of their nonexistence as a people. This was something that the Palestinians felt they could not do without denying their own rights, their own national narrative, and the evidence of their own eyes, which told them that Palestine was an Arab country and belonged to them, and to them alone.

Even though Great Britain was a member state of the League of Nations it disregarded the clear contradictions between Article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations and Point V of Woodrow Wilson’s fourteen points with the Balfour declaration. Therefore rather than being a liberator, Great Britain became a conqueror as it disposed of Palestine according to its wishes thus ignoring the human rights of the Palestinian people, the large majority of whom were Muslim or Christian. A more detailed census conducted in 1922 by the British shows that the population consisted of 589,177 (78.34 percent) Muslims, 83,790 (11.14 percent) Jews, 71,464 (9.50 percent) Christians, and 7,617 (1.01 percent) Others. The British government facilitated the mass immigration of Jews into Palestine, thus altering its ethnic composition. By 1946 there were 608,725 (32.96 percent) Jews and 1,237,334 (67.04 percent) Muslims and Christians; thus in spite of the mass immigration, Jews constituted a minority population, albeit larger than before.

Palestinians objected to the Balfour Declaration and in the 1936 to 1939 uprising (which can be characterized as the first Intifada) against the occupation. Palestinians also objected to the mass immigration of Jews into Palestine. Violence between the British, Jews, and Palestinians continued until the end of the British Mandate on May 14, 1948. The partition of Palestine was proposed as a possible solution to the conflict.

Many years of lobbying by prominent Jewish citizens of the United States and months of cajoling and threats by United States officials in the Truman Administration preceded the United Nations General Assembly vote on partition. Therefore, Great Britain, in issuing and enforcing the Balfour Declaration, violated Article 22 of the League of Nations, point V of Woodrow Wilson’s League of Nations fourteen points, and the United States in imposing its will on the UN General Assembly to recommend the partition of Palestine both violated the United Nations Charter, articles 1 (paragraph 2), 55 and 73, and the General Assembly’s Declaration on the Principles of International Law concerning the Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States thus infringing on the Palestinians’ human right of self-determination. “This right provides all peoples, including the Palestinian people, the right to determine their own future. It is a right that Israelis [because of their minority status] did not enjoy in the Palestinian territory when they unilaterally declared their state in violation of Palestinians’ right to self-determination. The Palestinians’ right to self determination preexisted any effort by Israel to occupy Palestinian lands. It is a right that all Palestinians are entitled to exercise according to international law from the very beginning of the British mandate in 1922. It is thus a right that is enjoyed over all of mandate Palestine.” The occupation of Palestine began in 1922 by the British and continued in May 14, 1948, to the present time by Israel when unilaterally, it declared itself a state. Subsequently, Israel was recognized as a state and is a member of the United Nations. Palestine is yet to be recognized by the United Nations.

On November 29, 1947, the United Nations General Assembly (Resolution 181) voted to recommend partition of Palestine into two states, one Jewish and the other Palestinian. [See Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, Figure 1, p. 1126.] The territories designated to the Jewish and Palestinian states would be 56 percent and 43 percent of Palestine, respectively. Jerusalem and Bethlehem were to become an international zone. Approximately 407,000 or 45 percent of the population in the Jewish part was comprised of Muslims and Christians and 1 percent of the Palestinian part was comprised of Jews. At the end of 1946, Jews, most of whom were immigrants from Europe, had acquired by purchase 6 to 8 percent of the total land area of Palestine and comprised approximately one third of its population. The Palestinians who in a short span of three decades saw the ethnic composition of Palestine change dramatically due to the British facilitation of immigration of Jews into Palestine objected to the partition plan. Between November 19, 1947, and May 14, 1948, both sides... engaged in violence. The Israelis were better trained and equipped than the Palestinians. It is estimated that 442,000 Palestinians were expelled from Palestine and became refugees either in the West Bank, Gaza, and the surrounding Arab countries principally Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, and to a lesser extent Egypt. It is also estimated that 225 villages were depopulated and/or destroyed. The Israelis called it the war of independence and the Palestinians called it the Nakba (the catastrophe). The Israelis say that the Palestinians left of their own free will urged on by their leaders while the Palestinians say that they were terrorized into leaving thinking that they will be able to return to their homes once the violence abated. Most historians now agree that the expulsion of the Palestinians occurred against their free will and an Israeli historian, Ilan Pappe, uses the term “ethnic cleansing” to characterize what happened to the Palestinians.

It was only after May 14, 1948, that Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, and Egypt sent a portion of their armed forces into Palestine to protect the Palestinian populace. They were no match for the better trained and equipped Israeli forces. By July 20, 1949, armistice agreements with these four countries and Israel were signed. By the end of this war, Israel had gained more territory and was in control of 78 percent of Palestine. Also at this time it is estimated that more than 750,000 Palestinians were expelled from their homes and more than 500 villages were depopulated or destroyed.

2.3 The 1967 War

In June 1967, Israel attacked Egypt, Jordan, and Syria. At the end of six days, Israel had taken the Gaza strip and the Sinai from Egypt, East Jerusalem and the West Bank from Jordan, and the Golan from Syria. The United Nations Security Council passed resolution 242 that requested the withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the 1967 war and emphasized the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war and the need to work for a just and lasting peace in which every State in the area could live in security. By 1970, the Sinai was returned to Egypt and a peace treaty was signed between Egypt and Israel. In 1994 Israel and Jordan signed a peace treaty. At this time, the Golan Heights, the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and the Gaza strip are under total Israeli control.

3. Refugees

3.1 Right of Return

The right of return of refugees to their countries of origin is a customary right and has origins from several sources. First, in Leviticus, Chapter 25, the “Year of Jubilee” is defined as occurring every fifty years. Leviticus, Chapter 25, verse 13 is a commandment from God: “In this Year of Jubilee everyone is to return to his own property.” Thus, using God’s commandment, then after sixty-two years, the Palestinian refugees certainly have the right to return.

Second, on December 10, 1948, the General Assembly (GA) of the United Nations (UN) adopted and proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Articles 9, 13, and 15 address the individual’s right of return:

- Article 9: No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.
- Article 13: (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each state. (2) Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.
- Article 15: (1) Everyone has the right to a nationality. (2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality.

Third, on December 11, 1948, the UN GA passed Resolution 194(III) concerning the progress report of the United Nations Mediator for Palestine. Article 11 of Resolution 194(III) specifically addresses the issue of the right of return of refugees:

[11. Resolves that the refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property which, under principles of international law or in equity, should be made good by the Governments or authorities responsible;]

Instructs the Conciliation Commission to facilitate the repatriation, resettlement and economic and social rehabilitation of the refugees and the payment of compensation, and to maintain close relations with the Director of the United Nations Relief for Palestine Refugees and, through him, with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations;

Fourth, on December 16, 1966, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights issued the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Article 12 section 4 states that “No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of the right to enter his own country.”

Clearly, then, the Right of Return of refugees is granted under accepted practices and is firmly anchored in international law. The Israeli point of view, as expressed by Dr. Eyal Benvenisti, professor at the Tel Aviv University Faculty of Law, is that international law stipulates that the demand of Palestinian refugees to return must be negotiated by governments, and not be resolved in the courts of law. He claims that “... in Resolution 194 there is no recognition of the refugees’ right of return. Indeed, since the 1990s, the Palestinians have been claiming that the resolution recognizes the right of return, but their claim is baseless. On the contrary, the resolution denies the refugees’ right to return to their homes. Moreover, the resolution set as a goal for the UN the solution of the problem of the refugees by means of resettling them in Arab countries. The formulation that was passed was amenable to convenient interpretation from Israel’s perspective, because it left in its hands the judgment as to whether, when and how many refugees it would accept into its territory.”

Clearly, this Israeli view is in direct contradiction to statements of international law and UN resolutions. The Palestinian view differs markedly. Salman Abu Sitta, a researcher on the land and people of Palestine and the founder and president of Palestine Land Society, London, is the author of The Atlas of Palestine 1948 and a member of the Palestinian National Council and general coordinator of the Right of Return Congress. Salman Abu Sitta claims:

“One of the most important lessons we have learned from the 60 year Palestinian-Israeli conflict is that the essence of the struggle has not changed. It is the expulsion of the people of Palestine from their homes and the confiscation of their land. Since then the Palestinian refugees have been dispersed all over the world, many of them living in deplorable conditions in exile, others suffering under occupation or virtual siege, harassed by friends and foe alike. The implementation of their inalienable rights is the key to a permanent peace. All else, including a Palestinian state, so-called regional cooperation or other contrived devices to obscure this fundamental issue, is peripheral. In addition, the misrepresentation of the Right of Return by Israel and its defenders, the United States in particular, is driven more by fear about, rather than interest in, their rights. However, the refugee issue is still the main problem to contend with and is imposing itself on every agenda of negotiating the question of Palestine.”

[A third view is expressed by Alain Epp Weaver, the country representative for the Mennonite Central Committee in the occupied Palestinian territories.

“The energized debate over the right of return is a welcome development. More than any other issue, the right of return cuts to the core of the conflict. If justice, peace and reconciliation are to be achieved in Palestine/Israel, the refugee issue must be tackled head on, not except under the diplomatic rug.”

— The return of refugees need not mean a new exodus of Israeli Jews. ... The desire to maintain a Jewish demographic majority at the expense of refugee rights is not only morally problematic; it’s a losing battle. Researchers suggest that within 50 years, Palestinians inside the Green Line would number the Jewish refugees, while Palestinian Jews would reach demographic parity in the land of Mandate Palestine within the next 15 to 20 years. This demographic reality, apart from moral considerations, suggests that a realistic project in Palestine/Israel would lead toward integration, not separation.”

[4]If the final status negotiations are to produce a settlement that enjoys the respect of the parties, and of the people who make up their constituencies, the issue of the displaced Palestinians must be resolved in a way that satisfies legitimate expectations. The parties would do well to recall the 1948 ad

A fourth view is expressed by Alain Epp Weaver, the country representative for the Mennonite Central Committee in the occupied Palestinian territories.

While pursuing his official duties as UN mediator, Count Folke Bernadotte was assassinated in Jerusalem on September 17, 1948, by the militant Zionist group, Lehi (Fighters for the Freedom of Israel) to protest his diplomatic efforts to modify the Palestine partition plan. “Yitzhak Shamir reputedly played a role in planning the assassination; however, he was never tried and went on to become Prime Minister of Israel.”

A Palestinian artist’s view of the issue of right of return is depicted by the work of sculptor, Ahmad Canaan, in the Negev: two crosses in a common grave. (See Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, Figure 2, p. 1126.) When the wind blows, the crosses move and the key, the Palestinian symbol of the Right of Return, hanging between them moves up and down. This work suggests that the Palestinians and Israelis share a common fate and the right of return is an issue between them.

Finally, the Israelis themselves claim the right of return after 3,000 years to the land granted to them by God. The Israeli “narrative” claims that they are uniquely the descendants of the Jews from Palestine. Scientific inquiry into this claim is complex with varying opinions on the amount of admixture of Jews from Europe, North Africa, and the Middle East with gentile ancestors. Some research appears to indicate that they, along with the present day Palestinians of Christian and Muslim faiths, all share very similar genetic associations and represent the descendants of people of Palestine from 2,500 to 3,000 years ago.”

“Another point of view that the Israeli government presents is that “This war [1967] resulted in the movement of more than 590,000 Jewish refugees from Arab lands to Israel, and of a similar number of Palestinian Arabs from Israel to Arab-controlled Gaza and the ‘West Bank,’ Jordan, Syria and Lebanon, where the majority became residents of refugee camps.”

(See the differing United Nations Relief and Works Agency’s [UNRWA] estimates of refugee numbers, below.) Some claim that Jews in Arab countries were actively encouraged by the Zionist movement to move to Israel so that Israel would increase its Jewish population. The Palestinians’ refugee rights are affirmed by general world practices, international and human rights laws, and UN resolutions. Furthermore Palestinians were not responsible for the emigration of Jews from Arab countries into Israel and their right of return cannot be negated by the rights of another group of refugees. By the same standards which apply to the Palestinian refugees. Jewish refugees from Arab countries should have the right to return to their home countries or to have compensation for any lost properties. The Right of Return is an "individual" right and no country has the right to make decisions for these individuals. The idea of a swap of refugees benefits the Israeli government and does not necessarily benefit individual Jewish refugees and certainly not the Palestinian refugees who wish to return to their homes and lands.

[3.2 Palestinian Diaspora]

[Obtaining accurate estimates of the worldwide numbers of Palestinians is difficult; however estimates exist. The Palestine Central Bureau of Statistics has periodically published such estimates. The table below provides estimates as of the end of the year 2007.]

| Estimated Number of Palestinians in the World by Country of Residence 31/12/2007 |
|---------------------------------|-----------------|------------------|
| Country                        | Number          | Percent          |
| Palestinian Territory          | 3,770,606       | 36.5             |
| Israel                         | 1,184,466       | 11.5             |
| Jordan                         | 3,102,463       | 30.0             |
| Other Arab Countries           | 1,690,709       | 16.3             |
| Other Foreign Countries        | 593,580         | 5.7              |
| Total                          | 10,341,824      | 100              |

[Of these 10.3 million Palestinians, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency’s (UNRWA) estimates that 4.7 million are registered refugees. The definition of a registered refugee is a person “whose normal place of residence was Palestine between June 1946 and May 1948, who lost both their homes and means of livelihood as a result of the 1948 Arab-Israeli conflict. To be eligible for UNRWA’s services a refugee must be registered.” The UNRWA estimates that it responded to the needs of approximately 750,000 refugees when it began operation in 1950. Furthermore, after the 1967 war, UNRWA estimates that another 140,000 persons became refugees in Jordan and an additional 240,000 citizens of the West Bank were “displaced persons.”]

[The table below provides some basic statistics about UNRWA’s base of operations, the numbers of camps, refugees registered in camps and refugees not living in camps.]

[The UNRWA maintains and administers camps in Jordan, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic, and the occupied Palestinian Territories. “Socio-economic conditions in the camps are generally poor with a high population density, cramped living conditions and inadequate basic infrastructure such as roads and sewers. Conditions differ among the host countries.”]

[In Jordan, Palestinian refugees have full Jordanian citizenship; however in Lebanon “they do not have social and civil rights, and have very limited access to the government’s public health or educational facilities and no access to public social services. . . . Considered as foreigners, Palestinian refugees are prohibited by law from working in more than 70 trades and professions and thus have a very high rate of unemployment. . . . In Syria, Palestinian refugees have access to government services such as government-run schools, universities, and hospitals. UNRWA’s services complement those of the Syrian Government.”]

[In the West Bank, “camp residents have been hard hit by closures imposed on the West Bank by the Israeli authorities, since they are largely dependent on income from work inside Israel. Subsequently, unemployment has risen and socioeconomic conditions in the camps have deteriorated. The West Bank camps are active social units. Camp residents run their own activities and camp committees in each camp are regarded as an official body representing the camp population. The Agency] runs elementary and preparatory schools. However, the main problem facing UNRWA’s education program in the West Bank is overcrowding with an average of 50 pupils per classroom."

In Gaza, “over three-quarters of the current estimated population of some 1.5 million are registered refugees; representing 22.42 per cent of all UNRWA registered Palestine refugees. The refugee camps in the Gaza Strip have one of the highest population densities in the world.”

4 Failed Peace Process and Its Consequences

The Oslo Accords or the Declaration of Principles (DoP) document was signed September 13, 1993. Briefly, this document outlines the procedure for a “peace process” between Israel and the Palestinian people. It called for the creation of a Palestinian interim self-government authority and an elected council for the Palestinian people in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The document further claims that “the two sides view the West Bank and Gaza Strip as a single territorial unit, whose integrity will be preserved during the interim period.” This interim government was for a transitional period of not more than five years leading to a permanent settlement based on Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. Security Council Resolution 242 called for Israel to withdraw to its 1949 Armistice lines (i.e., what is now referred to as the 1967 borders, or the “green line”), the right of every state in the area to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force, and achieving a just settlement of the refugee problem. Resolution 338 signed October 22, 1973, shortly after the 1973 war between Israel and Egypt, calls upon all parties to cease fire and terminate military activity, and further calls upon all parties to begin the immediate implementation of Security Council Resolution 242.

Initial reaction of the Palestinian people to the DoP was enthusiasm and hope for the future. This may be best depicted by the Tamam Al-Akhal painting. Beginning at the upper lefthand corner, we see depicted the people of Palestine returning home and carrying olive branches. Some are returning in wheelchairs and others are carrying suitcases. Other scenes depict a horse representing the resistance and its white colt representing peace; a woman calling to announce and celebrate the coming peace; people rebuilding their homes; children going to school; children playing; and others picnicking underneath two trees representing the peaceful side by side coexistence of the Israeli (orange tree) and the Palestinian (olive tree with many roots) people.

Unfortunately, the enthusiasm, optimism, and hope were short-lived. Article V, part 3 of the DoP stipulates that further permanent status negotiations shall cover several issues among which are the status of Jerusalem, refugees, settlements, security arrangements, and border. These negotiations, which became known as the “peace process,” lingered past the five-year interim period. A detailed accounting of these negotiations can be found in several publications. In 1998, Dr. Maleki Abdul-Hadi, head of Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA) in Jerusalem, commented on the general view of the DoP by Palestinians:

For most Palestinians, life has worsened since the Oslo Accords and only a few talk about the ongoing negotiations in positive terms. Today, five years after Oslo the hopes for a two-state solution to end the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and bring about a better life for the generations to come have been replaced by great disillusionment and frustration among Palestinians.

While the interim negotiations were taking place, Israel commenced to build and expand settlements in East Jerusalem and the West Bank. Conditions under the present Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza are described below in Section 5. House demolitions, destruction of agricultural land, building of the wall/fence and its concomitant land seizure, restrictions in movement within and between the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem (contrary to the agreement in the DoP), the seizure of Palestinian lands for the building of settlements and bypass roads are all factors contributing to the disillusionment of the Palestinian people with the so-called “peace process.” Resolution of these conflicts through the courts yielded very little results. Israeli “state security needs” trumped the law. An example of a revealing and detailed description of the futile legal processes that Palestinians undertook to forestall seizure of their land is the Albina Case described in detail in the book by the attorney, Rajah Shehadeh, who is a co-founder of the Al-Haq Palestinian Human Rights group.

Distressingly, all too often violence is used as a means of reactivity to injustice or as a means of inflicting a country’s will on another people. Violence, whether by tanks, attack helicopters, F-16 fighter jets, rubber bullets, tear gas canisters, antpersonnel bombs, white phosphorous, rockets, bombs of any kind including suicide bombs, is reprehensible and is a crime against humanity.

Quantifying human suffering with numbers cannot relay the depth of anguish, feelings of hopelessness, fear of the other whether Palestinian or Israeli, anger, or frustration. Nevertheless, the casualty statistics of violence can demonstrate the lack of parity in power and means of the parties to the conflict to inflict their will on the other.

4.1.1 Arrests and Kidnapping

Arrests and kidnappings by the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority (PA) are common occurrences. According to the Amnesty International 2009 Human Rights Report for Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories:
[Israeli soldiers and settlers who committed serious abuses against Palestinians, including unlawful killings, assaults and attacks against property, enjoyed impunity in most cases. Hundreds of Palestinians were arrested by Israeli forces; reports of torture and other ill-treatment were frequent, but investigations were rare. Hundreds of Palestinians, including scores of children, were detained by Israeli forces in the OPT and many were held incommunicado for prolonged periods. Most were later released without charge, but hundreds were charged with security-related offences and tried before military courts, whose procedures often failed to meet international standards for a fair trial. Some 8,000 Palestinians arrested in 2008 or in previous years were still imprisoned at the end of the year. They included some 300 children and 550 people who were held without charge or trial under military administrative detention orders, including some who had been held for up to six years.]

The Palestinian Authority conducted hundreds of arrests of individuals known to be connected to groups taking part in suicide bombings. These arrests were of individuals belonging to resistance organizations such as Hamas, Islamic Jihad, and the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP). Suspected or known collaborators were arrested and on a few occasions executed by the PA.

4.1.2 Targeted Assassinations

The PFLP assassinated Rehavam Ze’evi, Israeli Minister of Tourism on October 17, 2001, and said it was in revenge for the assassination of their secretary general, Abu Ali Mustafa, killed by Israel in August 2001. According to a CNN report, Rehavam Ze’evi sparked controversy in July 2001 for referring to Palestinians working and living illegally in Israel as “lice” and a “cancer.”

In apposition to this assassination of an Israeli leader is the campaign of targeted assassinations of Palestinian leaders by Israel. Between September 29, 2000, and December 26, 2008, the Israeli government killed 234 Palestinians as targets of assassination and an additional 153 innocent bystanders including children. These assassinations were of leaders of PLO, Islamic Jihad, Fatah, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), and Hamas. Furthermore, on March 22, 2004, Israeli forces assassinated Hamas founder and leader Sheikh Ahmed Yassin as he was leaving morning prayers at the Omari Mosque in Gaza City. Three missiles were shot at him and his entourage, killing seven bodyguards and other Hamas operatives and wounding fifteen other people. Hundreds of thousands attended Yassin’s funeral later that day and throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip clashes between Palestinians and Israeli forces erupted. Arab states and Europe condemned the assassination as “unlawful.” On April 17, 2004, Israeli forces also assassinated Hamas leader Dr. Abed El Aziz El-Rantisi along with his driver and a bodyguard.

According to B’Tselem, these targeted assassinations and others merely served to fuel the cycle of revenge and counter revenge.

These killings are part of an open policy to assassinate Palestinians suspected of acts of violence against Israelis. Far from being a new phenomenon, Israel has carried out assassinations overseas for over 30 years. Over the course of the previous intifada, Israeli undercover units assassinated “wanted” Palestinians in the Occupied Territories as well. The assassination policy violates the right to life, the most fundamental of all human rights, enshrined in international and Israeli law. There is no legal basis for these killings. Unnamed security personnel make a decision to kill a person, and the decision is carried out with no legal process whatsoever. The assassinations carried out by Israel in recent months are, in essence, extra-judicial executions.

As the statement above claims, Israel has carried out targeted assassinations overseas for more than thirty years. These assassinations were not always against militants who use armed resistance to Israel but also against those who used nonviolent resistance. Consider the ease of Ghassan Kanafani, a Palestinian journalist, novelist, and short story writer, who was assassinated along with his young niece, Lamis, on July 12, 1972, by Israeli agents in a car bomb explosion in Beirut. By the time of his early death at the age of 36, he had published eighteen books and written numerous articles on the culture, politics, and the Palestinian people’s struggle. His works have been translated into seventeen languages. A collection of short stories about Palestine’s children was published in English in 1984 and was titled Palestine’s Children. Kanafani’s untimely death deprived the Palestinians of an eloquent voice.

An excerpt from his work, “The Curiosity of a Child or the Destiny of a Man” perhaps explains why he was deemed to be dangerous.

“[My son, oh future,]

I hear you yesterday in the other room asking your mother, “Am I Palestinian too?” When she said “yes,” a heavy silence engulfed the whole house. It was as if something that was suspended over our heads had fallen, its noise exploding, and then falling silent.

Afterwards, I could not believe my ears, but my fingers I did believe. I was reading when I felt the book trembling in my hands. No, everything was real, to an alarming extent. I heard you cry. . . .

I could not move to see what was happening in the other room. I knew, however, that a distant homeland was being reborn, that some land of meadows, olive groves, dead people, torn and folded banners, was making its way into a future of flesh and blood, to be born in the heart of another child.”

4.1.3 Other Deaths: Palestinian Suicide Bombers and Israeli Occupation Forces

According to records from the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the first recorded suicide bombing occurred in April 6, 1994. Total deaths recorded due to suicide bombings in Israel for the years 2000 to 2008 are listed as 553 from a total of 147 attacks. According to B’Tselem, during this same period there were 490 Israeli civilians and 90 Israeli occupation forces killed by Palestinians for a total of 580—a higher total than that reported by the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Also during the same period, from September 29, 2000, to December 26, 2008, 4,860 Palestinians were killed (Gaza Strip, West Bank, and Israel) by occupation forces and 47 by Israeli civilians for a total of 4,907. Also during this same period 955 Palestinian minors were killed by Israeli occupation forces and 129 Israeli minors killed by Palestinians. The ratio of all Israeli to Palestinian deaths is 1 to 8.5 and for children it is 1 to 7.4. These numbers are chilling and do not convey the depth of suffering they cause to both peoples.

Yet, some are able to withstand their suffering and reach levels of human love and reconciliation that are indeed humbling. We will relate two such instances. The first is that of Dr. Nurit Peled-Elhanan, linguist at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, who is the recipient of the Sakharov Prize 2001 awarded by the European Parliament and the mother of Smadar Elhanan, thirteen years old, who was killed by a suicide bomber in Jerusalem in September 1997. In a speech on International Women’s Day at the European Parliament in Strasbourg, August 3, 2005, she said:

However, I must admit I believe you should have invited a Palestinian woman at my stead, because the women who suffer most from violence in my country are the Palestinian women. And I would like to dedicate my speech to Miriam R’aban and her husband, Kamal, from Bet Lahiya in the Gaza Strip, whose five small children were killed by Israeli soldiers while picking strawberries at the family’s strawberry field. No one will ever stand trial for this murder.

My little girl was murdered because she was an Israeli by a young man who was humiliated, oppressed and despised to the point of suicide and murder, just because he was a Palestinian. Now their blood is mixed on the stones of Jerusalem that have long been indifferent to children’s blood. We, who were not wise enough to free our children from the grip of hate and racism before they found their final rest, need to look at their mutilated bodies and innocent faces, and ask ourselves, with the poetess Anna Akhmatova, Why does that streak of blood rip the petal of their cheek?

The second instance is that of Ismail Khatib, Ahmed Khatib’s father. Ahmed was shot by Israeli soldiers in Jenin in 2005. Ismail Khatib and his wife decided to donate Ahmed’s organs. His heart saved the life of a Druze Muslim girl in Israel; a kidney went to a Bedouin child from the southern Negev desert; and other organs to two recipients who choose to remain anonymous. Ahmed’s second kidney went to a young Israeli toddler, Menuha Levinson, daughter of an Ultra-Orthodox Jewish family in Jerusalem. A movie, The Heart of Jenin, has been made by an Israeli-German team about Ismail and Ahmed Khatib’s sacrifice. Menuha’s father, Yaakov Levinson, remarks shortly after his daughter’s lifesaving operation that “he would have preferred a Jewish donor and remarks that he would never allow his children to be friends with Arabs for fear of ‘bad influence.”

Two years after the death of his son, Ismail Khatib and his brother are allowed to enter Israel to visit the children who were saved. The climax of the movie is a meeting with the Levinsons. Menuha is well and happy. In an exchange at their Jerusalem home, the Levinsons “apologize for their earlier comments and thank Khatib, but betray a deep misunderstanding about life in the occupied West Bank.”

It is clear that the lives of Israelis and Palestinians are so intertwined that peace will come only after acknowledgement of the other’s trauma thereby opening the way to forgiveness and reconciliation. Both Nurit Peled-Elhanan and Ismail Khatib have shown us that forgiveness can occur even after the most painful loss that a parent can experience.

5. Present-Day Occupation

5.1 Israel

5.1.1 Status of Palestinians

According to the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, the population of Israel at the end of 2008 was composed of 5,569,200 ethnic Jews (including those living in settlements in the Occupied West Bank and East Jerusalem), 1,487,600 ethnic Palestinians, and 317,100 of other ethnicities for a total of 7,374,000 individuals. Of the total, 121,900 are listed as Arab, 5,569,200 as ethnic Jews, 1,240,000 as Muslim. Comparatively little is written about the status of Palestinians, both Christians and Muslims, who live in the State of Israel. To understand the contributory factors to this demographic composition of the people of Israel, it is necessary to consider several historic factors in the development of the state.

In 1950, Israel passed the “The Absentee Property Law.” This law divided all the Palestinians who had lived in what had become the State of Israel into two categories: the “absentees” and the “present.” The vast majority of the “absentees” consisted of the 750,000 to 800,000 Palestinians who were expelled from what became Israel. Using Israeli statements and publications, Don Peretz (professor emeritus of Political Science at the State University of New York at Binghamton), in his Ph.D. thesis claimed:

Abandoned property was one of the greatest contributions toward making Israel a viable state. The extent of its area and the fact that most of the regions along the border were absentee property made it strategically significant. Of the 370 new Jewish Settlements established between 1948 and the beginning of 1953, 350 were on absentee property. In 1954, more than one-third of Israel’s Jewish population lived on absentee property, and nearly a third of the new immigrants (250,000 people) settled in urban areas abandoned by Arabs. They left whole cities like Jaffa, Acre, Lydda, Ramle, Beirgam, Majdal, 388 towns and villages, and large parts of 94 other cities and towns, containing nearly a quarter of all the building in Israel. 10,000 shops, businesses and stores were left in Jewish hands. At the end of the Mandaic, citrus holdings in the area of Israel totaled about 240,000 dunums of which half were Arab owned. Most of the Arab groves were taken by the Israeli Custodian of Absentee Property. But only 14,000 dunums were cultivated by Rana Bishara, an artist who lives in Northern Israel, created a work that depicts a leaf of the cactus plant, called “saber” in Arabic. [See Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, Figure 4, p. 1127.] The artist took a saber leaf and dipped the lower part in chocolate. Rana Bishara is telling us that “Palestine is sweet but it is difficult to enjoy it.” “Saber” also means patience in Arabic. The Saber plant is easy to destroy with a bulldozer but its roots are tenacious in their hold on the land. This plant is often used as a fence between homes and its fruit is delicious. When Israel destroyed entire villages with bulldozers, the saber came back and grew showing the fence lines of houses of the village. Another interpretation of this work is that Palestinians in their hospitality and warmth may seem sweet and gentle but they are tenacious and difficult to eradicate. The Saber plant is also a symbol of “sumud”—the steadfastness of the Palestinian people in refusing to be denied their land, identity, and culture.

5.1.2 Political Status

Palestinians who remained in Israel enjoy the rights of citizenship however with some reservations as explained more fully below. They enjoy the privilege of voting and have elected representatives to the Israeli Knesset. According to the U.S. Department of State Human Rights Report for 2008, the 120-member Knesset included ten ethnic Palestinians and two Druze. The twenty-nine member cabinet included two women, one Druze, and one Arab-Israeli Muslim. An Arab Christian was on the High Court, but no Muslim or Druze citizens have served. Of note is that even though ethnic Palestinians constitute 20 percent of the population of Israel, they have only 8.3 percent representation in the Knesset.

5.1.3 Economic Status

According to Adalah, economic discrimination exists at many levels through governmental practices. “The discre- tionary powers entrusted to various government ministries and institutions—including budget policies, the allocation of resources, and the implementation of laws—results in significant de facto discrimination between Jewish and Palestinian cit-izens. For example, a report issued by the Ministry of Interior confirmed that Arab municipalities received a fraction of the total funds allocated by the national government per resident to Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories and development towns populated exclusively by Jews. Moreover, the Ministry of Religious Affairs affords a small percentage of its budget to the Arab Muslim, Christian, and Druze religious communities. Funds for special projects such as the renewal and development of neighborhoods and improvements in educational programs, services, and facilities are also dispropor-nately allocated to Jewish communities. To date, Israeli authorities have rarely used their discretionary powers to benefit the Palestinians minority.

[5.1.4 Human Rights]

According to the U. S. State Department 2008 report on Human Rights, the government of Israel generally respected the human rights of its citizens; however problems in some areas were evident. “Institutional, legal, and societal discrimination against Arabs, non-Orthodox Jews, and other religious groups continued, as did societal discrimination against persons with disabilities. Women suffered societal discrimination and domestic violence. The government maintained unequal educational systems for Arab and Jewish students. Trafficking in and abuse of women and foreign workers remained a problem, as did societal discrimination against persons with disabilities.”

[5.1.5 Education]

Israel maintains two separate school systems, one for the Jewish majority and the other for the Palestinian minority children. Israeli citizens of Palestinian origin attend the minority school system that is “a world apart in quality from the public schools serving Israel’s majority Jewish population. Often overcrowded and understaffed, poorly built, badly maintained, or simply unavailable, schools for Palestinian Arab children offer fewer facilities and educational opportunities than are offered other Israeli children.”

Human Rights Watch claims that the Education Ministry authorities have acknowledged that the ministry spends less per student in the Arab system than in the Jewish school system and claims that “the Israeli government has offered various other explanations for the gaps between Jewish and Palestinian Arab students’ performance. These include poverty and cultural attitudes, especially regarding girls. Human Rights Watch found that in light of clear examples of state discrimination, neither poverty nor cultural attitudes adequately explained the existing gap. Indeed, in many instances, the data run directly contrary to the claim that these factors, and not discrimination, are at the root of the problem.”

[5.1.6 Discrimination Against Non-Jewish Ethnic Minorities]

Other factors leading to discrimination are evident in Israel. Adalah identified more than twenty laws that discriminate against the ethnic Palestinian minority in Israel. Examples are the “Law of Return (1950) and the Citizenship Law (1952), which allow Jews to freely immigrate to Israel and gain citizenship, but exclude Arabs who were forced to flee their homes in 1947-48 and 1967. Israeli law also confers special quasi-governmental standing on the World Zionist Organization, the Jewish Agency, the Jewish National Fund and other Zionist bodies, which by their own charters cater only to Jews. Various other laws such as The Chief Rabbinate of Israel Law (1980), The Flag and Emblem Law (1949), and The State Education Law (1953) and its 2000 amendment give recognition to Jewish educational, religious, and cultural practices and institutions, and define their aims and objectives strictly in Jewish terms.” According to the U.S. State Department 2009 International Religious Freedom Report, “the Basic Law describes Israel as a “Jewish and democratic state” and that government policy continued to support the generally free practice of religion, although governmental and legal discrimination against non-Jews and non-Orthodox streams of Judaism continued. As of the end of 2008, of 137 designated “holy sites” given protection by the Israeli government under the Protection of Holy Sites Law, all were Jewish. “[M]any Muslim and Christian sites are neglected, inaccessible, or threatened by property developers and municipalities.”

[5.2 The West Bank]

[5.2.1 The Occupation as a Matrix of Separation in the West Bank]

In a number of articles over the years, Israeli professor Jeff Halper has described the occupation as a “matrix of control.” However, what Halper called “a matrix of control” has now become a “matrix of separation.” The separation principle was first enunciated publicly in Ehud Barak’s slogan, “Us here, them there” during his 1999 campaign for prime minister of Israel, and it has been the policy of every Israeli government since. The “matrix of separation” has many facets and dimensions, each of which has had a drastically negative impact upon every aspect of Palestinian life.
[5.2.2 Land Seizure]

In an interview with Ma'ale Edummim architect, Thomas M. Leitersdorf described the strategy to “capture ground” in the West Bank: “you capture as much areas as possible by placing few people on numerous hills. The underlying political idea was that the further inside the Occupied Territories we placed settlers, the more territory Israel would have when the time came to set the permanent international borders.”

[5.2.2.1 The Settlements]

One of the most important elements of the matrix of separation is the massive number of Jewish settlements, which Israel has built in the West Bank (see Attachment I, Map 1, “West Bank and Gaza Strip 2000,” which can be found on p. 1132 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps). The Israeli government has been building settlements ever since shortly after the 1967 War. The Oslo Interim Agreements in the 1990s were based on the premise that Israel would be willing to give up land in the West Bank and Gaza for peace. Yet, during the seven years of the Oslo Process, the number of settlements in the West Bank increased significantly, and the actual number of settlers in the West Bank (excluding East Jerusalem) increased by 90 percent. And, ever since Oslo, the number of settlers and settlements has relentlessly increased. In their 2008 annual report, B’Tselem describes what has happened during the last few years:

[The Ministry of the Interior recognizes 121 settlements in the West Bank (not including East Jerusalem). In addition there are 12 large settlements in East Jerusalem. Also there are some 100 outpost in the West Bank that the government does not officially recognize, but supplies services to many of them.]

The Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics (CBS) estimated the 2008 population of the settlements at 285,800. Together with the 198,700 residents of the East Jerusalem settlements, the total number of settlers in the West Bank approaches half a million. The CBS also estimates that, in 2008, the settler population (not including East Jerusalem) rose by 4.7 percent. This figure is appreciably higher (almost 300 percent) than the 1.6 percent growth rate inside Israel.

Further, settlements have been placed in every section of the West Bank, and many of them are strategically located at communication junctions, on strategic hills, and in valleys that are of strategic importance as corridors of movement. In the words of Israeli author, Eyal Weizman, “[I]ndividual settlements were located on strategic summits, thereby allowing them to function as observation points: maintaining visual connection with each other and overlooking their surroundings, main traffic arteries, strategic road junctions, and Palestinian cities, towns and villages.”

Furthermore, numbers of these settlements have been put together into large, almost continuous, urban blocks (see Attachment I, Map 2, “Jewish Settlements in the West Bank,” which can be found on p. 1133 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps). First, there is a large group of settlements southwest of Nablus. Israel plans that this settlement block will become part of Israel since “fingers” of the wall/fence run many miles into the West Bank to include them (see Attachment I, Map 3, “West Bank Wall—2006,” which can be found on p. 1134 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, and see the discussion of the separation wall/fence below). Second, there is a massive arc of settlements surrounding Jerusalem. As the map reveals, this block extends many miles eastward into the Jordan valley near the Palestinian city of Jericho. The significance of this massive arc of settlement will be discussed when considering the impact of “matrix of separation” on Jerusalem, below.

[5.2.2.2 The System of Bypass Roads/Highways]

The next critical element in the matrix of separation is the system of bypass roads/highways. (These are represented on Map 1, which can be found in the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, p. 1132, by blue lines). From very early in the process of establishing settlements, the Israeli government began building bypass roads. They were built in order to connect the Israeli settlements to one another, to Jerusalem, and to Israel proper without passing through any area of Palestinian occupation. During the Oslo process, the Israeli government built twenty-nine of these roads. In 2005, Halper described these roads as follows: “these highways, lined on both sides with ‘sanitary margins’ that eliminate all Palestinian homes, fields and orchards in their path, are 300 miles in length and three to four football fields wide.”

As Halper notes as a result, many farmlands were destroyed by the construction of these roads, depriving their owners of their source of income. And because they are “security” roads, most of them are fenced. Consequently, farms have often been split into pieces, rendering it impossible for their owners to cross from one side of their property to the other. In recent years, the bypass roads have been connected with the West Bank highways and integrated into a huge system (see Attachment I, Map 4 “Forbidden Roads Regime,” which can be found on p. 1135 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps). Few Palestinians travel on either the bypass roads or the highways, either because access to them is prevented by a system of physical barriers (see the discussion of “the closure regime” below) or because permission to do so is forbidden.

Further, note on Maps 1 and 4, which can be found in the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, pages 1132 and 1135, how the bypass and highway road system divides the West Bank into enclaves, which do not connect with one another. Movement between the enclaves requires formal permits from the Israeli authorities, which are very difficult to obtain. As a result, movement from one enclave to another has become very difficult for Palestinians. Clearly, if this situation becomes permanent, it will preclude any meaningful Palestinian state.

5.2.3.3 The Separation Wall/Fence

[Without doubt, the most serious element of the matrix of separations is the “separation wall/fence.”] [For pictures, see Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, Figure 5, p. 1128.] The wall/fence, which Israel began building in 2002, is a complex barrier, replete with rolls of barbed wire on each side, a six-to-eight-foot deep ditch on the Palestinian side, and paved roads for military vehicles. The average width of the barrier is fifty to seventy yards, but it may reach up to 100 yards in some areas. In most areas of the West Bank, at the center of the barrier is a ten-foot high fence. However, when the barrier passes close to Palestinian cities, such as East Jerusalem or Bethlehem, at its center is not a fence, but a wall made of solid concrete slabs, 26 feet in height, often with observation and sniper towers every few hundred yards.

The construction of the wall has resulted in several serious consequences for the Palestinians, one of which is occasioned simply by its route (see Attachment I, Map 3, “West Bank Wall, 2006,” which can be found on p. 1134 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps). The current route of the wall/fence was approved by the Israeli cabinet in April 2006. Note that the wall is frequently not built on the internationally recognized armistice line between Israel and the West Bank. Almost three quarters of the separation wall/fence (325 of the 450 miles in length) is inside the West Bank. [414]

In the north, the wall/fence extends many miles into the West Bank (in what are frequently called “fingers”) to include some of the settlements of the large block southwest of Nablus (see Map 3, which can be found in the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, p. 1134). Indeed, one of the worst effects of the wall/fence is having and will have on the West Bank is what has happened in this northern region. The loss of land here will severely damage the Palestinian way of life. The Palestinian economy is essentially an agricultural one, and this area, where rainfall is the heaviest, is literally the breadbasket of the West Bank. In section 5.2.4.1 “Water: Consumption of a Rare Resource” below, dealing with Israel’s discriminatory water policy, the importance of the mountain aquifer for the Palestinians of the West Bank is noted. In this region, the settlements have been strategically located over these water reservoirs. If these areas are annexed to Israel, it will create a permanent shortage of water for the Palestinians of the West Bank.

Secondly, the wall/fence will have grave consequences for those who live in the land between the wall/fence and the 1967 borders. Israel calls this area the “seam zone.” In October 2003, the area was declared closed by military order. All residents and landowners in the seam zone must obtain a special permit to remain in their homes or to work their land, permits that are exceedingly difficult to get. The UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the OPT reports that 60,500 Palestinians living in forty-two villages will be living in this seam zone, and will be virtually cut off from the rest of the West Bank.

Finally, the wall/fence runs east of some sixty-nine Israeli settlements—comprising some 83 percent of the settlers— and the Israeli government has publicly declared that the wall/fence will be its permanent border. Numerous Israeli government statements have made this clear. For example, in an article in the Israeli newspaper, Haaretz, on Thursday, Dec. 1st, 2005, entitled, “West Bank fence is Israel’s future border,” Israeli journalist Yuval Yoaz wrote, Justice Minister Tzipi Livni has stated publicly that the separation wall/fence will serve as “the future border of the state of Israel” and that, “the High Court of Justice, in its rulings over the fence, is drawing the country’s borders.”

And on February 10th, 2006, the Israeli columnist Aluf Benn published an article, entitled, “Olmert: Israel will separate from most Palestinians,” in which he wrote: Acting Prime Minister Ehud Olmert said yesterday, that Israel “will separate from most of the Palestinian population that lives in the West Bank.... We are moving toward separation from the Palestinians, toward setting Israel’s permanent border.”

On July 9, 2004, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) published its advisory opinion regarding the construction of the wall/fence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. “The Court finds that the construction by Israel of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and its associated régime are contrary to international law”; “the construction of the wall being built by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and its associated régime, are contrary to international law”; “Israel is under an obligation to terminate its breaches of international law; it is under an obligation to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, and to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, in accordance with paragraph 151 of this Opinion”; and “Israel is under an obligation to make reparation for all damage caused by the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem.” Furthermore, the ICT concludes, “the Court considers that Israel cannot rely on a right of self-defence or on a state of necessity in order to preclude the wrongfulness of the construction of the wall. The Court accordingly finds that the construction of the wall and its associated régime are contrary to international law.”

[One of the most brutal of the means by which the Israeli military maintains this matrix of separation is the policy of the demolition of Palestinian homes.224 The policy is used for preventing the Palestinians from building either outside the enclaves to which they have been confined or anywhere near the bypass roads. Any construction outside the Palestinian enclaves cannot be done without a building permit. The introduction to a study by B’Tselem reports, “Over the past decades, Israel has created a situation in the West Bank in which thousands of Palestinians are unable to obtain a permit to build on their land. Consequently, they are compelled to build without a permit.”225 And, as Neve Gordon notes, “Applications filed to the Civil Administration . . . for building on private land . . . are almost always rejected.”226 As a result, desperation caused by overcrowded conditions in the Palestinian areas has forced many Palestinians to build without permits and to invest their life savings in building homes they know might well be destroyed. Halper reported in 2005 that, from the time of the start of the second intifada in September 2000 until then, more than 900 homes had been demolished for lack of a permit,227 while many thousands had been destroyed for other reasons.228]

[As Jeff Halper notes, “The human suffering entailed in the process of destroying a family’s home is incalculable.”229 Palestinian families never know just when the demolition crews, accompanied by dozens of soldiers and police, will arrive. When the dreaded time comes, the families are usually given fifteen to thirty minutes warning to remove their belongings before the bulldozer moves in. Home demolitions are almost always brutal, since families understandably refuse to leave their home voluntarily so that it might be demolished. Therefore, demolitions usually involve arrest and often beatings. This cruel policy has had but one goal, to keep the Palestinians confined to their isolated enclaves, and to keep the area of the West Bank under Israeli control free for Israeli settlement construction and the building of bypass roads, etc.]

[For several years now, another layer of restrictions has been imposed upon the Palestinians of the West Bank, which has come to be called the “closure regime.” “Closure” in general refers to restrictions placed by Israel on the movement of Palestinians (as well as goods and produce) across the borders between Palestinian enclaves and the territory controlled by Israel. Closure was imposed upon the Palestinians during Oslo,230 as a response to suicide attacks carried out by Palestinian militants. Though such attacks have virtually come to an end, the Israeli government has not ended or reduced the policy. Instead, in the interests of separation, it has been drastically heightened and extended it, so that it has become what we shall call the “closure regime.”]

[The most important of the elements of the closure regime are the many “checkpoints” or barriers of various types manned by the Israeli military.231 These barriers consist of a large number of other physical impediments, used primarily to block access to the bypass road/highway system (described in section 5.2.2.2 The system of By-pass Roads/Highways), such as metal gates, mounds of earth or rubble, a series of large concrete blocks across the road, or deep trenches.232 All of these impediments have the purpose of controlling or blocking Palestinian movement. Yet, in November 2005, Israel signed “The Agreement on Movement and Access.” In regard to the West Bank, the agreement stated, “Israel will facilitate the movement of people and goods within the West Bank and minimize disruption to Palestinian lives.” Not only has this not been met, exactly the opposite has happened. According to the UN’s Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, the number of closures in the West Bank has increased from 396 in November 2005 to 630 in March 2009, an increase of 59 percent!]

[Since most Palestinians have little or no access to the bypass road/highway system, they are compelled to use an alternative road network of secondary and inferior roads, often unpaved.233 As a result, a two-tier road system exists in the West Bank, which operate side by side. To enable Palestinians to travel from one enclave to the other, increasingly tunnels and bridges are being built under or over the Israeli bypass/highway network.234 This regime has been imposed by the Israeli military ostensibly as a security measure to protect its citizens. However, the vast majority of the elements of the closure regime separate Palestinians from Palestinians, rather than Palestinians from Israelis.]

[Thus, the matrix of separation in the West Bank, with its ever-expanding settlements, its system of bypass roads/highways, the seizure of Palestinian water and the closure regime, has kept the Palestinians tightly confined. This has virtually destroyed the Palestinian economy, and reduced many Palestinians to poverty. Speaking of an earlier period, Neve Gordon describes the situation as follows:]

[[Due to the various restrictions placed on the movement of people, labor and goods, the Palestinians have experienced a contraction of real personal income of almost 40 percent. Using a $2.10 per day poverty line, an estimated 60 percent of the population was poor by December 2002 . . .235]

[This was the result of the dire situation created by the re-occupation of the West Bank by the Israeli army in the summer of 2002. Since then, through massive infusions of aid, conditions have improved. Based on household income, according to the Palestine Central Bureau of Statistics, 45.7 percent of West Bank citizens live below the poverty line.236 If the present status of the Israeli occupation as a “matrix of separation” in the West Bank does not change, a two-state solution seems hardly possible.]

[5.2.4 Environmental Degradation]

[5.2.4.1 Water—Consumption of a Rare Resource]

[Soon after the 1967 War, Israel transferred control over all the sources of water in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to the military. The reason is simple. 80 percent of the mountain aquifers, the region's largest reservoirs, are located under the West Bank (see Attachment I, Map 5, “Water Sources,” which can be found on p. 1136 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps), and Israel desires the great majority of it for her own use.”232 Weizman reports, “Though the aquifer is the sole water source for residents of the West Bank, Israel uses 83 percent of its annually available water for the benefit of Israeli cities and its settlements, while West Bank Palestinians use the remaining 17 percent.”233 At the same time, Israeli water policy has placed stringent, arbitrary, and unjust controls upon Palestinian development of water resources and installations, for example, prohibiting the Palestinians from drilling any new wells. As a result, Palestinians regularly suffer acute water shortages, many receiving water only for three or four days a week, requiring the installation of large cisterns on the roof for storage. Even then many people run out of water before the next delivery and are forced to purchase it on the black market at exorbitant prices. It hardly needs to be said that this highly discriminatory policy contributes significantly to Israel’s matrix of separation.234]

[5.2.4.2 Water—Pollution]

[Further, pollution contributes to the already limited supply of water in the region. Israel’s environmental policies are reflected in the treatment of waste and dump sites in the West Bank. For example, by mid-2006, it is estimated that the Israeli Occupation Forces (IOF), hundreds of small, random dump sites were created within areas controlled by the Palestinian Authority. As noted in previous sections, the West Bank, restrictions on movement of people and access to natural resources have stifled economic growth. The wall/fence is restricting farmers’ access to their land. Recurrent destruction of trees, private homes, and public infrastructure, as well as settlers’ encroachments on private land create a permanent state of insecurity. Land administration and registration within the Palestinian Authority (PA) controlled areas has been slow and lacking in institutional capacity and resources.235]

[Amnesty International has reported on the Israeli practice of destroying agricultural land and cisterns. Throughout the millennia, Palestinians have relied on water cisterns in which they collect rainwater for daily use and irrigation. The government of Israel does not allow the construction of cisterns without a permit and makes it almost impossible for Palestinians to obtain such permits to build them. Amnesty International reported the heartbreaking story of a West Bank farmer, Mahmoud al-’Alam.]

[The village of Beit Ula, where Mahmoud lives, is not connected to the Palestinian water network. Instead the community, located north-west of Hebron, relies on rainwater, which it collects and stores in pots dug in the ground, known as cisterns. The nine new cisterns built in 2006 as part of a European Union-funded project to improve food security became the pride of the village. The cisterns were vital to the survival of the nine families that used them until the bulldozers arrived. “The Israeli army destroyed everything; they went up and down several times with the bulldozer and uprooted everything,” recalls Mahmoud al-’Alam. “This is good land and it was a very good project. We put a lot of money and worked very hard,” said Mahmoud al-’Alam. “This is good land and it was a very good project. We put a lot of thought into how to shape the terraces and build the cisterns in the best way, to make the best use of the land, and we planted trees which need little water. . . .” The story of Beit Ula is one of many cases where Israeli forces have targeted Palestinian communities in the region.236]

[5.2.4.4 Dumping of Waste]

[As we neared the top of the hill the cloud of soil began to feel wet even though there was no spring nearby and it hadn’t rained. We soon realized that we had walked into the open sewers of the Jewish settlement of Talmon to the north. This settlement might have had a rubbish collection system but it did not have one for treating sewage, which was just disposed of down the valley into land owned by Palestinian farmers.]

[Talon is a settlement northwest of Ramallah. This incident is not unique and unfortunately typical. Kathleen and Bill Christison, retired U.S. Central Intelligence Agency analysts, relate their experience when they visited the village of Wadi Fukin in the West Bank. They describe seeing tons of construction dirt and rocks from Betar Illit, an illegal Israeli settlement east of Wadi Fukin, dumped onto the Wadi Fukin’s agricultural fields. Furthermore, the sewage from this settlement, which has approximately a population of 29,000, is regularly dumped onto Wadi Fukin’s lands. The Christisons say that “it is possible to see the large-diameter opening of a pipe near the top of the ridge line, from which the sewage pours.”]

[As we neared the top of the hill the cloud of soil began to feel wet even though there was no spring nearby and it hadn’t rained. We soon realized that we had walked into the open sewers of the Jewish settlement of Talmon to the north. This settlement might have had a rubbish collection system but it did not have one for treating sewage, which was just disposed of down the valley into land owned by Palestinian farmers.]

[Johann Hari, in an article in the London-based newspaper, The Independent, reports about the problem of dumping of raw sewage onto Palestinian agricultural lands. “Across the occupied West Bank, raw untreated sewage is pumped every day out of the Jewish settlements, along large metal pipes, straight onto Palestinian land. From there, it can enter the groundwater and the reservoirs, and become a poison.”]

[A third example is a B’Tselem video showing dumping of domestic effluent as well as industrial waste from the settlement of Ariel onto the lands of Sufit village: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nPxlBzdJ9R9. The footage shows graphically the sewage coming out of an open pipe down the valley onto the farm land of Sufit.]

[5.2.5 Food Insecurity]

[Food insecurity, as defined by the Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO) of the United Nations, consists of four characteristics, all of which must be present. These are: first, the availability of sufficient quantities and qualities of food; second, the ability to access adequate food resources; third, the stable availability of these food resources; and fourth, the opportunity to consume food through adequate diet and availability of clean water, adequate sanitation, and health care.]

[According to the United Nations, FAO, the Palestinian people living in the West Bank and Gaza Strip are in serious trouble. Food security continues to be precarious in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. A 2007 food security analysis conducted by the United Nations Standing Committee on Nutrition concluded that 34 percent of the population of West Bank and the Gaza Strip was considered food secure in 2006, while 20 percent was marginally food secure, 12 percent was vulnerable to becoming food insecure, and 34 percent was food insecure. See Map 6 in Attachment I, which can be found on p. 1137 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, for details of food insecurity by West Bank governorates. Economic conditions, particularly the loss of jobs, impacts directly on a population’s food security in particular when that population is already experiencing significant levels of food insecurity. The Palestinian economy continues to contract under the pressures of economic restrictions and political instability. According to the World Bank, the per capita GDP in 2007 decreased to 60 percent of its levels in 1999, and investment dropped to precariously low levels.]

[5.2.6 Destruction of Archeological Sites]

[A debate within Israel has existed for many years about the role of archeological excavation. There is a contention that some archeologists, in an attempt to show connections of the present state of Israel with the ancient Land of Israel, have been in too much haste or have discarded as unimportant upper layers of archeological records belonging to intervening Turkish, Arab, and Byzantine periods. In other words, present day political realities have assumed a more important point of view than science. As quoted by William Dalrymple in his book, From the Holy Mountain, in a meeting with Bishop Hagop Sarkissian, of the Armenian Quarter in the Old City of Jerusalem, William Dalrymple relays several examples.]

[In 1992 the Jerusalem-based archaeologist Shulamit Giva accused Israeli Biblical archeology of being “a tool in the hands of the Zionist movement [attempting] to find a connection between the ancient history of the Land of Israel and the historic occurrence of the [modern] State of Israel.” Israeli archeology, she continued, had “lost its independence as a scientific discipline and become an executive arm of an ideological movement, a nationalist and political instrument which provided ‘roots’ for the new state.”]

[According to the official Israeli archaeological report, there were four separate monasteries discovered in the excavations north of the Damascus Gate, as well as two hostilies for pilgrims and a large Christian cemetery. Moreover, shortly afterwards, a fifth Byzantine shrine—a small burial chapel decorated with mosaics and rare frescoes—was discovered near the Jaffa Gate. But despite the unprecedented Christian protests, not one of these sites was preserved for posterity. All were reburied, with the exception of the frescoed chapel outside Jaffa Gate, which was bulldozed to make way for nothing more important than an underground parking lot. “The whole Mamilla Project depends on it [the car park],” Gideon Avni of the Israel Antiquities Authority told the Jerusalem Post by way of explanation.]

5.3 East Jerusalem and Territorial Expansion

The occupation is as fully a “matrix of separation” in the area of Jerusalem as it is in the rest of the West Bank. To document this, some historical background is necessary.

When Israel took control of the West Bank in the 1967 War, there were two separate cities of Jerusalem: Israeli Jerusalem, which covered an area of about 15 square miles, ruled by Israel, and Palestinian Jerusalem, consisting of the Old City of Jerusalem and its municipal territory, which contained an area of about 2.3 square miles, ruled by Jordan (see Attachment I, Map 7 “Israeli Settlements and Palestinian Neighborhoods in East Jerusalem,” which can be found on p. 1139 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps).

However, within weeks after the end of the war, Israel seized not only the area that had been Palestinian Jerusalem, but also an additional 24.7 square miles, most of which had belonged previously to twenty-eight Palestinian villages of the West Bank, including parts of Ramallah in the north and Bethlehem in the south. The Israeli government unilaterally annexed this territory to the municipal boundaries of Israeli Jerusalem, and imposed Israeli law there.

This area is now known as “East Jerusalem,” and the earlier Israeli Jerusalem is known as “West Jerusalem.” In 1980, the Israeli Knesset passed legislation, which declared, “Jerusalem, complete and united, is the capital of Israel.” Therefore, most of the area that Israel claims as “East Jerusalem” was never previously part of the city, but rather part of the West Bank.

Demographic considerations were the primary factor in determining what land was expropriated to form “East Jerusalem.” The primary goal was to ensure a Jewish majority in the city. This was accomplished by annexing sparsely populated land and excluding heavily populated Palestinian areas. In many cases, villages were split in half. Parts of the villages of Aktau, Hizma, and Beit Ilwa, for example, were annexed by Israel, but the most populated areas remained in the West Bank. In other cases, agricultural lands were annexed to Jerusalem, while the town or village itself remained in the West Bank. Such was the case with territory belonging to Bethlehem, Beit Jala, and Beit Sahur in the south (for the location of these villages and towns, see Attachment I, Map 5 “The Wall, Bethlehem District—December 2003,” which can be found on p. 1139 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps).

The effects of the annexation of East Jerusalem upon the Palestinians have been extreme. In its 2008 annual report, entitled “Human Rights in the Occupied Territories,” B’Tselem states:

Since the annexation of East Jerusalem in 1967, the authorities have discriminated against its Palestinian residents in almost every area of life—education, infrastructure, municipal services, urban development, planning and building, and so forth.

Such discrimination has been going on since the Oslo period. In a study issued in late 1999, entitled “Injustice in the Holy City,” B’Tselem included information on the neglect of infrastructure and services in the Palestinian neighborhoods. They reported that East Jerusalem residents are required to pay taxes like all city residents; however, they did not receive the same services. Since the annexation of Jerusalem, the municipality had continuously failed to invest significantly for roads, sidewalks, water and sewage systems in Palestinian neighborhoods, and almost no new school, public building, or medical clinic had been built. Less than 10 percent of the Municipality’s development budget for 1999 was allocated for Palestinian neighborhoods, although the population then represented 33 percent of the city’s residents. This lack of investment had left East Jerusalem in a deteriorated state. This is what B’Tselem reported in 1999, and it has not substantively changed since then:

1. Entire Palestinian neighborhoods were not connected to a sewage system and did not have paved roads or sidewalks;

2. Almost 90 percent of the sewage pipes, roads, and sidewalks are found in West Jerusalem;
Further, over the years, the Jerusalem city planning authorities have prepared few, if any, planning schemes that allow building in Palestinian areas. In the summary of a 1995 study entitled “A Policy of Discrimination: Land Seizure, Planning and Building in East Jerusalem,” B’Tselem reported:

The Israeli authorities promote extensive building for Jewish neighborhoods, at an enormous investment, in the annexed area. At the same time, by their acts and omissions, the Israeli authorities choke development and building for the Palestinian population, who are perceived as a “demographic threat” to Israeli control of the city. Town Planning Schemes: the planning authorities utilized the town planning schemes to restrict the development of Palestinian neighborhoods, limit the area designated for Palestinian construction, and reinforce Jewish control throughout the city.

This discrimination has continued unchanged over the years. In B’Tselem’s annual report for 2008, they provide the following information:

The situation in the village of Silwan, which lies south of the Old City, clearly illustrates the discrimination in planning and building. The planning authorities have never prepared an outline plan for the village, without which it is impossible to build legally. Given that population growth in the village raises the need for additional construction, the residents have been forced to build without a permit.

Undoubtedly, the least defensible and certainly the most brutal of the Israeli policies to restrict the Palestinian population in East Jerusalem is the policy of demolishing houses and other structures belonging to those who have been forced to build without a permit. The policy is politically motivated and is aimed at maintaining a Jewish majority in the city. In a 2007 study of home demolitions in East Jerusalem, the Israeli Committee Against Home Demolitions (ICAHD) included a table listing the buildings demolished in East Jerusalem between 1994 and 2006. The total listed is 678, including four, five, and seven-story structures. The brutal policy has continued over the last two years. B’Tselem’s annual report for 2008 states:

Clearly, the occupation is as fully a “matrix of separation” in the area of Jerusalem as it is in the rest of the West Bank. However, there are other aspects of the matrix of separation in the area of East Jerusalem and the territory of the West Bank surrounding Jerusalem that raise extremely serious questions about the possibility of a “two-state” solution to the occupation. As described above, the Israeli authorities have gone to great lengths to keep the Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem confined to their limited neighborhoods. Yet, at the same time Israel has invested enormous resources in the construction of numerous, large and affluent new settlements in East Jerusalem for Jews alone. These settlements are slowly and relentlessly virtually filling East Jerusalem. However, the problem is not only the large number and size of the settlements for Jews alone built in East Jerusalem. As Map 3 “West Bank Wall 2006” reveals, Israel has also constructed a large block of settlements north and northwest of Jerusalem. [See Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, p. 1134, for Map 3.] There is also a second block of settlements south of Jerusalem and west and southwest of Bethlehem, isolating Bethlehem. Most critical, however, is a third, large block of settlements, Ma’aleh Adummim, which lies due east of Jerusalem.

As Map 3 reveals, these three blocks create a massive arc of settlements around which the separation wall/fence is being built in order to include them on the west side of the wall, which Israel has declared will be its permanent border. The most troubling aspect of this massive arc of settlements, surrounded by the wall/fence, for the possibility of a viable Palestinian state is the Ma’aleh Adummim block on the east, which now stretches into the Jordan Valley, almost to the Palestinian town of Jericho, 10 miles east of Jerusalem.

The Ma’aleh Adummim settlement block was designated a city by the Israeli government in October 1992. While its current built-up area is small, its municipal plan covers a total area of just over twenty-one square miles. The signficance of this area can be gleaned from a comparison with Tel Aviv, a city of some 350,000 inhabitants with an area of twenty square miles. The strategy involved in the creation of the Adumim Block does not have to be inferred only from its dimensions on the map, though that is clear enough. The town’s mayor, Benny Kashriel, a leading figure in the West Bank settler movement, has openly said that Adumim was established “to create a buffer that will prevent the creation of a Palestinian state, because every state requires territorial contiguity.”

[Some background about the Gaza Strip would be helpful to understanding the conflict. The Gaza Strip, has the highest population density in the world, and “over three-quarters of the current estimated population of some 1.5 million are registered refugees.” A large proportion of these refugees were expelled by the Israeli Haganah forces in 1947 to 1948 from Jaffa, Palestine, and the coastal areas south of Jaffa.]

[In elections, which were certified as fair by international observers including former U.S. President Jimmy Carter, held on January 25, 2006, Hamas won municipal seats throughout the West Bank and Gaza and won 76 of 132 seats in the parliament. With a majority of seats in the Palestinian parliament, Hamas could then form the government for the Palestinian Authority. Israel and its supporters, the United States and European Union, refused to recognize the new Hamas prime minister and instituted an economic blockade of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank in an effort to unseat the Hamas government. When the economic blockade failed, Israel (with United States cooperation) provided Fatah forces in Gaza with arms to battle Hamas. Violence erupted within the Palestinian territories with the end result that in 2007 Hamas controlled the Gaza Strip and the Palestinian Authority and Fatah controlled the West Bank. Efforts at reconciliation between the factions have repeatedly failed. Violence continued between Hamas and Israel.]

[The United States, European Union, and Israel governments consider Hamas to be a terrorist organization bent on the destruction of Israel, while most Gazans see Hamas as an organization formed to resist the occupation by Israel and to recover their lost lands in Palestine. Hamas is an Arabic acronym for Harakat al-Muqawama al-Islamiyya, or Islamic Resistance Movement. Hamas is a militant organization; however over 90 percent of Hamas’ resources are spent on social services to the Palestinian refugees.]

[The most horrific violence against Gaza by Israel occurred between December 2008 and January 2009, in the course of which the Israeli military destroyed or badly damaged Gazan homes, places of worship, schools, universities, factories, fishing boats, police stations — in short, everything that sustains civilized and orderly life. The Israeli government justified its attack by claiming that (1) Israel had no choice but to attack in response to the barrage of Hamas rockets fired from Gaza into Israel over the past eight years, and (2) only Hamas violated the six-month ceasefire on Dec. 19th, 2008, and only Hamas refused to reinstitute it. Thus, only Hamas bears responsibility for what happened.]

[Major U.S. media outlets repeated the Israeli government pronouncements. On January 8th, Shervan Sardar published in the website the Electronic Intifada — an extensive study of the coverage of the conflict in the op-eds and editorials of major American newspapers, entitled The US Media and the Attack on Gaza. He writes, “In the first three days of the Israeli offensive from 28–30 December, editorials and op-eds from the major papers overwhelmingly adopted the official US and Israeli government talking points.” Here are two of his examples.]

[The Washington Post] stated that Hamas “invited the conflict by ending the six-month old ceasefire and launching scores of rockets and mortar shells at Israel.” Similarly, in The New York Times, Benny Morris maintained, “In November and early December, Hamas stepped up the rocket attacks and then, unilaterally, formally announced the end of the truce.”

[On Friday, January 9, the House of Representatives passed a resolution that “calls on all nations to lay blame both for the breaking of the ‘calm’ and for subsequent civilian casualties in Gaza precisely where blame belongs, that is, on Hamas.” Conversely, the resolution praised Israel for the facilitation of humanitarian aid to Gaza. The resolution passed 390 to 5.]

[To understand the reality that lies behind this war, two periods of time will be considered: (1) What was the situation in Gaza after Hamas drove out the forces of Fatah and took over sole control of the Gaza Strip in June 2007, and (2) what transpired during the period of the six-month truce, which was inaugurated June 19th and ended on Dec. 19th, 2008.]

[But a more important factor in what has led up to the current catastrophe has been the drastic deterioration of the quality of life of the Palestinians of the Gaza Strip. That quality of life was bad enough prior to the summer of 2007. John Wolfensohn, who had left his position as head of the World Bank in April 2006, was a special envoy of the “Quartet,” whose job was to help implement the peace process during and after the removal of the Israeli settlements from Gaza in the summer of 2005. In an interview with the Ha’aretz newspaper in 2007, Wolfensohn said that “every aspect of that agreement was abrogated.” The economy collapsed as a result, as Gaza’s farmers saw their produce rot at the crossings, and unemployment and disillusionment among Gazans skyrocketed. He concluded, “Instead of hope, the Palestinians saw that they were put back in prison. And with 50 percent unemployment, further conflict is inevitable.”]

[As a result of the Hamas takeover in 2007, the Israeli government placed the Gaza Strip under an unrelenting blockade, which placed far more severe limits upon the amount of electricity, food, medicine, and other necessities that may enter the Gaza Strip than had been permitted previously.]
The UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs issues a monthly report on conditions in the occupied Palestinian territories called “the Humanitarian Monitor.” The report monitors key humanitarian indicators and includes field observations collected by UN agencies, including those of the health, education, and food aid sectors.

The Gaza Humanitarian Monitor for October 2007 included the following statement: “Following ... an Israeli cabinet decision, on 28 October the Government of Israel started implementing a proposed series of economic sanctions on the Gaza Strip.” The new sanctions included the following severe restrictions: (1) the closure of Karm, the largest commercial crossing; (2) the prohibition of all exports from Gaza and the suspension of most industrial imports that were not of a humanitarian nature; (3) a severe reduction in the amount of fuel allowed entry; (4) a ban on the movement of Palestinians through Egypt, the sole passenger crossing; and (5) an almost total closure of the Rafah crossing point, the only crossing on the border with Egypt. As Richard Falk, the UN Special Rapporteur for The Occupied Palestinian Territories has noted: “Such a blockade is unlawful, a massive form of collective punishment, and as such is in violation of Article 33 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and also a violation of Article 55, which requires that the occupying power ensure that the civilian population has sufficient food and that its health needs are addressed.”

Under such an unremitting blockade, conditions in Gaza grew steadily worse and lead to the economic collapse of Gaza. An article in the British newspaper, The Guardian, written by Soumaya Ghannoushi, a freelance writer and a researcher at the University of London, described conditions in Gaza early in 2007 as follows:

Gaza is at Israel’s mercy. It depends almost totally on it for electricity and fuel, a result of the 38 years of Israel’s direct control over of the Strip. This dependence has grown since June 2006, when Israel bombed Gaza’s only power station. This was forced to close on Sunday when Israel blocked fuel shipment to the Strip. And, of course, no electricity does not mean dark candlelit nights only; it means no heating in the cold Gaza winter, and, more crucially, no water, with no fuel to pump, treat, or deliver the vital liquid to homes, schools, medical clinics or hospitals.

For months a terrible cloud of stench has been hanging over the tiny coastal strip. The sanitation system is in a state of paralysis. Raw sewage is spilling out on to the streets, homes and fields, and in order to save fuel, the city has stopped collecting garbage—400 metric tons a day.

The effects of the blockade were nothing short of catastrophic, particularly for the children. Prior to 2005, when conditions were not as bad as they are now, Dr. Jean Ziegler, UN special envoy for the UN Human Rights Commission, spent ten days in the occupied territories, from which he prepared a report for the UN General Assembly on conditions there. In a press briefing on his report held in the UN Briefing Room, the main findings were,

- 22 percent of Palestinian children under five are suffering from malnutrition—a threefold increase from 2000;
- 9.3 percent suffer acute malnutrition—an eightfold increase from 2000;
- 15.6 percent suffer acute anemia, which can lead to permanent impairment of physical and mental development;

Peter Hansen, who was United Nations Relief and Works Agency Commissioner General in the same period, assessed the significance of findings like these. He wrote:

The world has grown used to the idea that hunger manifests itself only in the hollow cheeks and distended stomachs of an African famine. But today in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, a dreadful, silent malnutrition is stalking the Palestinians.

In the terminology of experts, the Palestinians are suffering in the main from micronutrient deficiencies—what the World Health Organization calls “Hidden Hunger.” It may be less dramatic than the protein-energy malnutrition that stalks African emergencies, but on the scale that it is being found among the Palestinians it is just as serious. Micronutrient deficient children fall to grow and develop normally; their cognition is damaged, often severely and irreversibly. Their immune systems are compromised. In both adults and children, mental and physical capacities are impaired. In extreme cases, blindness and death result. The mental and physical development of a generation of Palestinian children hangs in the balance. An ongoing study funded by the United States Agency for International Development has found that four out of five children in Gaza and the West Bank have inadequate iron and zinc intake, deficiencies that cause anaemia and weaken the immune system.

The stark fact is that 22 percent of the Palestinian children are suffering from acute or chronic malnutrition for purely man-made reasons. No drought has hit Gaza and the West Bank; no crops have failed and the shops are often full of food. But the failure of the peace process and the destruction of the economy by Israel’s closure policy have had the effect of a terrible natural disaster.

After setting forth further aspects of the situation, Hansen concluded his article:

There are as yet no skeletal faces in Gaza for the television cameras to record, no bloated bellies to shock the world into action. Instead, the Palestinians face hidden hunger and the quiet horror of a generation that will be physically and mentally stunted for the rest of their lives.

During the same period described above, Qassam rockets from Gaza had caused fear and disruption of life in southern Israeli towns and had killed four Israeli civilians in the first six months of 2008. On June 19th, 2008, Israel and Hamas enacted a cease-fire brokered by the Egyptian government. The terms of the cease fire were as follows:
[1.] Hamas would halt all rocket attacks into Israel.

[3.] Israel would begin to significantly reduce its military blockade of Gaza.265

In the order that they are mentioned, let us briefly consider how each side met these terms. Term 1: On the Hamas side, the ceasefire was remarkably effective. In fact, the rate of rocket and mortar fire from Gaza into Israel dropped almost to zero, and stayed there for four straight months. The evidence for this has been set forth, surprisingly enough, in a chart of all the rockets fired from Gaza into Israel during 2008, prepared by the Israeli Consulate in New York City.266

Figure 7, which can be found in the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, p. 1129, demonstrates that during the first six months of 2008, the monthly average of rockets fired from Gaza into Israel was 179. However, for the first four-and-a-half months of the truce, from June 19 through the end of October, the contrast is dramatic and striking. Only eleven rockets were fired, and eight of those eleven were fired in August. Hence, for three of the first four months of the ceasefire, one rocket each month was fired into Israel. The data shows clearly that Hamas can indeed control the violence if it so chooses, and sometimes, when it has the right incentives, it does for long periods of time. However, from November through December 19, the end date of the cease-fire, the situation was completely reversed. Once again, numerous rockets were fired from Gaza into Israel. For that six-week period, the number of rockets fired per month rose to an average of 112. Then, on December 19, Hamas declared that it would not continue the cease-fire.

What caused this drastic reversal in Hamas’ actions and decisions? The second condition of the ceasefire was that Israel would halt all military incursions into Gaza. Evidence for this is set forth in the monthly reports of The UN Humanitarian Monitor for the Occupied Palestinian Territories. A portion of the chart of the monthly report of Palestinian deaths and injuries for October 2008 is displayed in the table below:

As the table shows, on the Israeli side also, the ceasefire was remarkably effective in reducing the violence. As with the number of rockets fired from Gaza, the contrast from the first six months of 2008 is dramatic. A little arithmetic would show that, during the first six months an average of seventy Palestinians were killed each month in Gaza by the Israeli military, and an average of 153 Palestinians were injured. But, for the four and a half months from June 19 to the end of October, only one Palestinian was killed by direct military action, and only nine were injured. However, in November and December the situation was reversed, exactly as was the ease with the rockets from Gaza into Israel. The text of the monthly report of The UN Humanitarian Monitor for the Occupied Palestinian Territories for November states that fifteen Palestinians were killed and twenty-four injured from Israeli military incursions, and concludes, “This figure represents a sharp increase compared with the single Palestinian fatality during the four months (July–October 2008) immediately following the truce.”

What happened to end this eminently successful ceasefire and bring on a new and tragic round of violence between the two sides? To answer this, consider the second condition of the ceasefire that was incumbent upon Israel, term 3, the requirement that Israel would begin to significantly reduce its military blockade of Gaza. Tragically, from the outset of the ceasefire, Israel did little to increase humanitarian aid to the previous level of around 700 trucks daily. Former President Carter said that it reached only about 20 percent of the previous levels and so Israel did not live up to even this more modest agreement. As a result, during the four and a half months from June 19 to the end of October, in which the ceasefire was so very effective, Gazans continued to suffer from a lack of food, fuel, financial aid, electricity, clean water, medical supplies, and more, to a degree that can only be called horrendous and unconscionable. Indeed, as the summer months went by, the situation actually deteriorated. The UN Humanitarian Monitor for July, dated August 12, states:

[In Gaza—— the population of Gaza saw little tangible dividend from the truce. The amount of commodities remained far below actual needs as the level of imports was 46% below the level in May 2007 (one month before the Hamas takeover that triggered the full closure). The restrictions on imports, combined with the total ban on exports, kept 95% of Gaza’s local industry closed.

[And the Monitor for August, dated Sept 12, states:

Despite the reopening of the Kerem Shalom commercial crossing, the amount of imports allowed to enter Gaza continued to decrease over the month. August imports constituted around 70% of July imports and 21% of the imports in May 2007, before the Hamas take-over. The lack of raw materials, combined with the continuous prohibition on exports prevented economic reactivation.

[And yet, despite the fact that Hamas saw no tangible relaxation of the desperately serious living conditions in the Gaza Strip, they maintained the cease-fire from June 19 through October. So was there another reason for ending the eminently successful cease-fire and bringing on a new and tragic round of violence between the two sides? The answer seems crystal clear and unmistakable. In spite of the fact that the cease-fire had accomplished the end of violence by both sides, and especially the end of the rocket attacks upon the residents of southern Israel for four and a half months, an end that Israel had been ceaselessly demanding, the cease-fire was broken, not by Hamas, but by the Israeli military. Late in the evening of November 4th, while Americans voted for a new president, Israeli troops raided the Gaza Strip. Israeli military authorities claim that the target of the raid was a tunnel that they said Hamas was planning to use to capture Israeli soldiers, but the tunnel was located 250 meters from the border fence. In the course of the action six Palestinian militants were killed. On November 5, Hamas resumed sending rockets into Israel. With hindsight, the Hamas leadership should not have reacted to the Israeli provocation. But, having seen no tangible relaxation of the desperately serious living conditions in the Gaza Strip while they maintained the truce for four and a half months, one presumes they acted out of anger and frustration.

[One result of the failure of the cease-fire for the Palestinians of Gaza was drastic indeed. Following the resumption of violence on November 5, Israel virtually sealed the Gaza Strip. On Dec. 23rd, four days before the Israeli offensive began, Professor Sara Roy, who teaches at Harvard’s Center for Middle Eastern Studies, published an article in The London Review of Books in which she discussed the extent and ramifications of this new siege of Gaza. She reported:

[On November 5, the Israeli government sealed all the gates and entrances into Gaza. Food, medicine, fuel, parts for water and sanitation systems, fertilizer, plastic sheeting, phones, paper, glue, shoes and even teacups were no longer getting through in sufficient quantities or at all. According to Oxfam only 137 trucks of food were allowed into Gaza in November. This means that an average of 4.6 trucks per day entered the strip compared to an average of 123 in October this year and 564 in December 2005——UNRWA alone feeds approximately 750,000 people in Gaza, and requires 15 trucks of food daily to do so. Between 5 November and 30 November, only 23 trucks arrived, around 6 per cent of the total needed. During the week of 30 November it received 12 trucks, or 11 per cent of what was required. There were three days in November when UNRWA ran out of food. On 18 December UNRWA suspended all food distribution for both emergency and regular programs because of the blockade.

[Thirty out of forty-seven commercial bakeries in Gaza have had to close because they had run out of cooking gas. As the UN Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) has made clear, cooking gas canisters are necessary for generating the warmth to incubate broiler chicks. Shortages of gas and animal feed have forced commercial producers to smother hundreds of thousands of chicks. By April, according to the FAO, there will be no poultry there at all: 70 percent of Gazans rely on chicken as a major source of protein. Gaza’s Coastal Municipalities Water Utility (CMWU), which is not controlled by Hamas, is supposed to receive funds from the World Bank via the Palestinian Water Authority (PWA) in Ramallah to pay for fuel to run the pumps for Gaza’s sewage system. Since June, the PWA has refused to hand over those funds, perhaps because it feels that a functioning sewage system would benefit Hamas. The CMWU has also asked Israel’s permission to import 200 tons of chlorine, but by the end of November 2008 it had received only eighteen tons—enough for one week of chlorinated water. By mid-December 2008, Gaza City and the north of Gaza had access to water only six hours every three days.

[In his report to the special session of the Human Rights Council on the situation in the Gaza Strip, held on January 9, 2009, Richard Falk, the UN’s Special Rapporteur for the Occupied Palestinian Territories, summarized the situation in Gaza prior to Dec. 27th as follows:

[1]Up to 80% of Gaza was living under the poverty line, unemployment totals approached 75%, and the health system was near collapse from the effects of the blockade.

[Finally, given the fact that Israel had not only not met the most important obligation that the cease-fire imposed upon her, namely the easing of the blockade, but had in fact virtually sealed the strip so that conditions in Gaza had become unimaginable, on December 19th, Hamas decided that to continue the cease-fire was pointless.

[Yet, according to the Israeli press, as late as December 23rd, four days before Israel began her bombing campaign, Yuval Diskin, the head of the Israeli security service Shin Bet, “told the Israeli cabinet that Hamas is interested in continuing the truce, but wants to improve its terms.” Diskin explained that Hamas was requesting two things: an end to the blockade, and an Israeli cease-fire on the West Bank. The cabinet—— eager to appear tough with elections coming in February—rejected these terms.
[Present conditions in the Gaza Strip continue to be intolerable. In the words of Amnesty International as expressed in their report, titled “Suffocating: The Gaza Strip Under Israeli Blockade” and dated January 10, 2010,

[the Israeli authorities say the blockade is a response to attacks from Palestinian armed groups, in particular the indiscriminate rockets fired from Gaza into southern Israel. In November 2009, Hamas declared a unilateral cessation of rocket fire, although this has been since been breached on several occasions by members of Palestinian armed groups. Israeli military forces, meanwhile, have conducted regular raids into Gaza and have continued to bomb the tunnels under the border at Rafah used for smuggling between Gaza and Egypt.

[In fact, whatever its stated justification, by restricting the food, medical supplies, educational equipment, and building materials allowed into Gaza, the Israeli authorities are collectively punishing the entire population of Gaza, the majority of whom are children, rather than targeting those responsible for carrying out rocket or other attacks. The situation is made all the worse by the Egyptian government’s continued general closure of the Rafah crossing and, most recently, by its construction of a steel wall along the border at Rafah to disrupt the cross-border smuggling that has become Gaza’s life-line. However, as the occupying power, it is Israel that bears the foremost responsibility for ensuring the welfare of the inhabitants of Gaza.]

[Clearly, as this study has shown, the cause of the current catastrophe has far more to do with Israel’s refusal to relieve the injurious and inhumane blockade of the Gaza Strip than it does with Hamas’ refusal to control the rockets fired into Israel. For Hamas has demonstrated that, with sufficient incentive, it can control the rockets. Israel, however, has demonstrated its unwillingness to allow the people of Gaza a life worth living. Until Israel is willing to end the occupation and to grant the Palestinians their own state—a state with such dimensions and character that they do indeed have a life worth living, there will be no peace for either side in this tragic conflict.

[On 3 April 2009, the president of the United Nations Human Rights Council established the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict with the mandate “to investigate all violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law that might have been committed at any time in the context of the military operations that were conducted in Gaza during the period from 27 December 2008 and 18 January, 2009, whether before, during or after.” The report of the findings of this Mission is commonly called the Goldstone Report.

[in relation to the firing of rockets and mortars into Southern Israel by Palestinian armed groups operating in the Gaza Strip, the Palestinian armed groups fail to distinguish between military targets and the civilian population and civilian objects in Southern Israel. The launching of rockets and mortars which cannot be aimed with sufficient precision at military targets breaches the fundamental principle of distinction. Where there is no intended military target and the rockets and mortars are launched into civilian areas, they constitute a deliberate attack against the civilian population. Those actions would constitute war crimes and may amount to crimes against humanity.

[With regard to Israel, the Mission found that

[the following grave breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention were committed by Israeli forces in Gaza: willful killing, torture or inhuman treatment, wilful causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, and extensive destruction of property not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly. As grave breaches these acts give rise to individual criminal responsibility. The Mission notes that the use of human shields also constitutes a war crime under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and that the series of acts that deprive Palestinians in the Gaza Strip of their means of subsistence, employment, housing and water, that deny their freedom of movement and their right to leave and enter their own country, that limit their rights to access a court of law and an effective remedy, could lead a competent court to find that the crime of persecution, a crime against humanity, has been committed.

[Furthermore, as reported in the Goldstone Report, the number of Palestinians killed during Israel’s attack on Gaza is estimated to be between 1,387 and 1,417. These numbers are based on estimates obtained after extensive field research and from nongovernmental organizations. “According to the Government of Israel, during the military operations there were 4 Israeli fatal casualties in southern Israel, of whom 3 were civilians and one soldier, killed by rockets and mortars attacks by Palestinian armed groups. In addition, 9 Israeli soldiers were killed during the fighting inside the Gaza strip, 4 of whom as a result of friendly fire.”

[In interviewing Palestinian victims, human rights defenders, civil society interlocutors, and officials, the Mission reported frequent comments about the hope that “this would be the last investigative mission of its kind, because action for justice would follow from it” and that “every time a report is published and no action follows, this ‘emboldens Israel and her conviction of being untouchable’.”

[To deny modes of accountability reinforces impunity and impacts negatively on the credibility of the United Nations and of the international community. The Mission believes these comments ought to be at the forefront in the consideration by Member States and United Nations bodies of its findings and recommendations and action consequent upon them. The Mission is firmly convinced that justice and respect for the rule of law are the indispensable basis for peace. The prolonged situation of impunity has created a justice crisis in the OPT that warrants action. [Emphasis added.]

[6. THE PALESTINIAN AUTHORITY

[6.1 Governing Structure

[The evolution and structure of the governing bodies of the Palestinian people both in the Diaspora and in the Occupied Territories (West Bank, East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip) is somewhat complex. The Arab League, during the 1964 Cairo meeting, created the Palestine National Council (PNC) as the legislative arm of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), which will be described in detail below. The PNC meets approximately biannually and operates as the Palestinian Parliament in exile. The PNC consists of the elected Palestine Legislative Council (PLC), which will also be described in detail below, member representatives to represent the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip, and members at large to represent the Palestinian Diaspora. Among past actions of the PNC was the creation of the PLO in 1964, adoption of the Palestinian Declaration of Independence in 1988, and ratification of the Oslo Accords in 1993.²²² (Also see section 4, Failed Peace Process and Its Consequences, p. 1059.)

[The PLO is an umbrella organization for several parties all of which share the goal of an independent Palestinian state. For example, Fatah, is one party and the largest within the PLO. Governing bodies for the PLO are the PNC, which is the legislative branch, the Executive Committee, which is appointed by the PNC and conducts the business of the PNC between its biannual meetings, and the Central Committee, which serves as the advisory body for the PLO. Ostensibly, these organizations represent all the Palestinian people including those in the Diaspora.

[A description of the governing bodies within the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT) follows. A summary description of the government and administration of the Palestinian Authority (PA) can be found on the web site of the Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs, Jerusalem (PASSIA).²²³ The following content is a brief summary of that document. Pursuant to the Oslo Accords signed in September, 1993 (see Section 4 Failed Peace Process and Its Consequences, p. 1059), the West Bank was divided into three areas designated as areas A, B, and C. In Area A, comprised of 17.2 percent of the West Bank (as of October 2000), the Palestinian Authority (PA) was to have jurisdiction and security control; however, Israel retained authority of movement in and out of Area A and in fact conducts almost daily incursions into Area A. In Area B (23.8 percent of the West Bank), the PA has civil authority and responsibility for public order, while Israel maintains a “security presence.” Finally, Area C consisted of the remaining 59 percent of the West Bank and was and continues to be under total Israeli control and occupation. In spite of this apparent control by the PA of some areas of the West Bank, under international law Israel remains the occupying power over all the OPT including East Jerusalem.

[Within the context of the Oslo Accords, the agreement, between the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and Israel, called for the creation of an interim administrative organization to govern the West Bank, Gaza Strip, and East Jerusalem (to be determined at final status talks) within the limitations of areas A, B, and C. This organization became known as the Palestinian National Authority (PNA or PA as is more commonly used). The peace process was to last five years after which there would be final status talks and the creation of the State of Palestine. As we have seen, this process failed.

[The West Bank and the Gaza Strip were divided into sixteen governorates, eleven in the West Bank including East Jerusalem and five in the Gaza Strip. The president of the PA appoints the governors who are subordinate to the Ministry of Local Government. Municipal and village councils, of which there are 557, have administrative responsibility for water, electricity, waste disposal, schools, planning and building control, road construction and maintenance, and control of public markets; however, the Israeli authorities limited their powers and took control over policies and budgets. “The Arab Jerusalem Municipality Council was completely dissolved.” Of the total number of municipal and village council members, 13.4 percent were women, mostly in the West Bank.²²⁶

[As mentioned earlier, the Palestinian Authority held elections on January 25, 2006, for the Palestine Legislative Council. These elections were monitored by international observers, including former U.S. President Jimmy Carter, and were certified as fair and democratic. On September 26, 2005, during the campaigns for the elected seats in the Palestine Legislative Council, Israeli Occupation Forces arrested 450 members of the Hamas party, most of whom were actively campaigning for the municipal elections or the PLC. The majority of those detained were kept in administrative detention for varying periods of time and released a few days before or after the day of elections. Furthermore, “during the elections, the Israeli authorities banned the candidates from holding election campaigns inside Jerusalem. Rallies and public meetings were prohibited. Those who violated the order were arrested. For example, on January 3, 2006, Dr. Mustafa Barghouthi, head of the Independent Palestine coalition list, was arrested in East Jerusalem whilst on a tour of the Old City as part of the Legislative election campaign.”²²⁷

[finds that these practices have resulted in violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, including the prohibition of arbitrary detention, the right to equal protection under the law and not to be discriminated based on political belief the special protections to which children are entitled. The Mission also finds that the detention of PLC members may amount to collective punishment contrary to international humanitarian law.²³⁰]

[Israel and its supporters, the United States and European Union, refused to recognize the new Hamas prime minister and instituted an economic blockade of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank in an effort to unseat the Hamas government. Violence erupted, thought by many to be aided and abetted by the United States and Israel, within the Palestinian territories with the end result that in 2007 Hamas controlled the Gaza Strip and the Palestinian Authority and Fatah the West Bank. President Abbas then appointed Salam Fayyad (who belongs to the Third Way party) as the prime minister in the West Bank.]

[Donors to the PA bypassed the existing financial institutions (mainly the Hamas headed Finance Ministry) and channeled funds via the president’s office. The surprising win by Hamas at the polls was thought, by many Palestinians, to be the result of disillusionment with Fatah and the perception of widespread corruption within the PA. Many Palestinians resented the interference with their elections by Israel and others. They felt that they worked for two years to plan a fair and democratic election and against great odds managed to carry on campaigns in spite of arrests and restrictions on travel. During and shortly after the economic boycott, one manifestation of this resentment was the oft-repeated statement: “I did not vote for Hamas, but if I had a chance again, I would vote for Hamas.”]

[The Palestine Legislative Council (PLC) consists of 132 elected members (with six seats reserved for Christians). Palestinians vote solely for party lists. All presidential and parliamentary candidates are furthermore required to recognize the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. According to the U. S. Department of State 2008 Human Monitor for Israel and the Occupied Territories, there were seventeen women in the PLC and thirteen women in the six-member cabinet formed in June. There were seven Christians in the PLC and two in the cabinet during the year 2008.]

[“Since the PLC elections in 1996, the development of a legal infrastructure and judicial system—devastated by decades of neglect under occupation, the lack of regulatory frameworks and a confusing mixture of Ottoman, British Mandate, Egyptian, and Jordanian laws as well as Israeli military orders—has been a priority. As of November 2005, eighty-five laws had been passed and signed, while another seven were awaiting signature by the president and others were pending in their readings or reviews by the PLC, or being drafted.” The Palestinian Basic Law was passed on July 7, 2002, and serves as a basis for a constitution. In 2005, there were a chief justice and 128 judges (thirteen of them women) serving in the PA court system, consisting of the Supreme Court, Appeals Court, First Instance Courts, and Magistrate Courts.]

[Arrests. In the past, in response to suicide bombing and strong pressure from Israel and the United States, the PA conducted large scale arrests of individuals from various factions suspected of planning and carrying out suicide bombing. These arrests included members of Islamic Jihad, Hamas, Palestine Front for Liberation of Palestine, and others.” According to PASSIA, “The insufficient conduct of legal proceedings, arbitrary raids and arrests, violation of the right to freedom of expression, as well as the torture of detainees have become regular complaints.”]

[Freedom of the Press. “The Basic Law permits every person the right to freedom of thought, conscience, and expression, orally, in writing, or through any other form. The PA does not have laws providing for freedom of press. A press law enjoins criticzing the PA or the president, but it was not applied. The climate of violence induced self censorship, and both the PA security forces in the West Bank and members of the Hamas security apparatus in Gaza restricted freedoms of speech and press. Individuals criticizing the authorities publicly risked reprisal, and during the year (2007) PA security forces and Hamas Executive Forces closed media offices, confiscated equipment, prevented the delivery of newspapers, and assaulted journalists during demonstrations.”]

[Deaths. From September 29, 2000, to December 26, 2008, five-hundred and ninety-three Palestinians were killed by Palestinians, 120 of them on suspicion of collaborating with Israel. According to the Palestinian Human Rights Monitoring Group (PHHRMG) 161 collaborators were killed by Palestinians and the PA Security Forces between September 28, 2000, and August 31, 2008, and a total of thirty-five honor killings occurred in the West Bank and Gaza Strip between 2003–August 2008. According to B’Tselem, there were seventy-one death sentences of which thirteen were executed.”]

[7. LAW IN OCCUPIED PALESTINIAN TERRITORIES]

[7.1 Separate Laws for Settlers and Palestinians]

[The system of military rule imposed upon the OPT has been in place ever since the 1967 War. It is in some ways the most primary of the elements that comprise the matrix of control since (see Section 5) it is the one that makes all the others...]

possible. However, it has changed over the years of the occupation only in expanding and contracting as Israel’s military commanders deemed it necessary for its control needs.

[The 1967 War ended the geographic separation between the Israelis and the Palestinians of the West Bank and Gaza, which had existed during the eighteen years since the end of the 1947–49 War. This created a critical demographic problem for the government of Israel, for these areas contained some 900,000 Palestinians who had not fled during the war or been expelled shortly after its end. Since Israel could simply annex the West Bank and Gaza, thereby granting citizenship to their Palestinian residents, as she had done with the Palestinians who had not been driven out of Israel in the 1947–49 War, who by 1967 numbered some 300,000. But then Israel would face a Palestinian population of some 1.3 million. Given that the Palestinian birthrate was higher than that for Israel, eventually the number of Palestinians would exceed the number of Jews in the state. This was unacceptable to the leadership of Israel, for whom the ideal state of Israel was for Jews alone.]

[Consequently, unwilling on the one hand to risk the international, political costs of eviction and unwilling on the other hand to accept the internal, social implications of annexation, the Israeli government settled for the option of leaving the Palestinians in place, but putting them under a tight, oppressive military rule.]

[On June 7, the third day of the 1967 War, the commander of the Israeli occupying forces placed the OPT under strict military rule, justifying himself with the words, “in the interests of security and public order.” Military Order No. 2 stated, “All powers of governance, legislation, appointment and administration in relation to the Region and its inhabitants shall henceforth vest in me alone and shall be exercised by me....” The proclamation went on to state that the military commander had the power to enact any law, make legislative changes, and cancel or suspend any existing law. These military orders immediately became law for all Palestinians living in the OPT.]

[In addition to establishing military rule, Israel rejected the applicability to the OPT of the 1949 Fourth Geneva Convention, the most important humanitarian law pertaining to the land and the population of occupied territories. Israel’s rationale was that the West Bank and Gaza should not be considered “occupied” territory because, though the two regions had been ruled by Jordan and Egypt from 1948 to 1967, they had never legally become a part of those two states. Consequently, they are not “occupied territory,” they are not subject to the Fourth Geneva Convention. The international community has rejected entirely these arguments.]

[Further, though it rejected the applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention, Israel accepted the principles of The Hague Conventions and Regulations of 1907, in particular article 43, which specifies that the occupying power must recognize the laws that were in force when a territory was occupied. Consequently, Israel was able to set up in the OPT a complex legal tradition that incorporated laws from the period of Ottoman rule, from the time of the British Mandate (in particular the emergency regulations from 1945), Jordanian laws in the West Bank, and Egyptian laws in Gaza. Israel’s transparent purpose in this adoption is well described by Neve Gordon:]

[The implementation of this complex and comprehensive legal system has not only enabled Israel to enact any law it wishes, but also to change or cancel local laws that were in place prior to the occupation. Those parts of the Jordanian or Egyptian law that advanced Israel’s political objectives were maintained, while other parts that hindered these objectives were altered or annulled.... Israel opted for a partial adoption of the pertinent clauses of the Hague Convention, one that corresponded to its needs.]

[Since June 1967, the military commander has issued more than 2,500 of these military orders, and they have dealt with virtually every aspect of the matrix of control, as well as military, judiciary, and fiscal matters, and administrative affairs, including education, welfare, and health. After the Oslo Accords were signed in 1993 and 1995, the military order system continued to apply to all Palestinians in the OPT, even those living in Area A, which was exclusively under the civil and security control of the Palestinian Authority. Palestinians are often unaware that new military orders have been issued because they have not normally been translated into Arabic. They are frequently revised, almost impossible to challenge, and can apply retroactively.]

[As part of rule by military law, Israel set up a system of military courts, replete with military judges and prosecutors. Though Palestinians charged with violations of local Palestinian law are tried in Palestinian courts, all those charged with violations of military edicts are tried in the Israeli military court system. All the officials of the court system are military officers, many of whom do not have sufficient judicial training. It has been frequently noted by NGOs and human rights organizations that, all too often, the court procedures not only do not fall within the required international standards of fair trial, but are gross violations of the same.]

[This system of military law was also largely established by a permit system created by military orders. Permits monitored and controlled every aspect of Palestinian life, such as, for example, car registration, opening a business, or constructing any kind of building. By March 1968, every male over the age of sixteen had to be registered and carry an identity card at all times. Entire areas such as the Jordan Valley were made closed zones, requiring a permit to enter.]

[It is difficult to overstate the immense, and often negative, impact that this self-serving system of military law has had upon the occupation. Neve Gordon assesses its significance as follows:]
The conception of the law as an instrument that protects the individual from the sovereign—which can be traced back to the Magna Carta (1215) and, more recently, to post-World War II international law—was totally foreign to the legal system Israel set up in the OPT. It is therefore no coincidence that this system was never applied to the Jewish settlers who moved into the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. These settlers were subjected to Israeli civilian law. By transforming Jewish settlers into creatures that are entitled to “personal jurisdiction” (i.e., laws that follow people), Israel managed to create a situation whereby two ethnic groups sharing the same space have actually been subjected to two radically different legal systems.

This complex system of legal governance served to sanction and make possible the alleged legality, legitimacy, and morality of the matrix of control. As Neve Gordon observes, “The law served as the foundation for almost all of the other controlling apparatuses and practices and in many ways shaped their operation.” It is thus not difficult to conclude that these two separate laws are institutionalized discrimination against the Palestinian People.

7.2 Violations of International and Humanitarian Laws

This report thus far has described the conditions leading to the creation of the State of Israel and the reality under which the Palestinian People live. Deprivation of the human rights of the Palestinian People under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and International Law has been discussed in some detail beginning with the British Mandate in 1922 until the present day under Israeli occupation.

Human Rights as defined by international law are codified in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights that was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly 217 A (III) on December 10, 1948. This declaration arose after the experience of World War II and specifically after the Hitler’s holocaust of Jews and others. The preamble recognizes that “the inherent dignity of and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.” A brief summary of some of the thirty articles in the Declaration is provided here:

- everyone has the right: life, liberty and security of person (Article 3); freedom from torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (Article 5); recognition everywhere as a person before the law (Article 6); equality before the law and entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law (Article 7); not to be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile (Article 9); not be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honor and reputation (Article 12); freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each state or leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country (Article 13); nationality or not be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality (Article 15); be not be arbitrarily deprived of his property (Article 17); and freedom of opinion and expression (Article 19).

Here in brief summary are the details of the present state of Human Rights in the Palestinian Occupied Territories. There are many sources of information on this subject. The B’Tselem Annual Report 2007 “Human Rights in the Occupied Territories.” summarizes Human Rights violations in the Palestinian Occupied Territories. The U.S. Department of State “2008 Human Rights Report: Israel and the occupied territories” is also a good source of information. There are many other human rights groups that can be consulted on the subject. Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch, PASSIA, Al Haq, and Miflah are just a few.

According to B’Tselem 2007 Report, the intentional killing of civilians not taking part in hostilities is a grave breach of the right to life and is classified in international humanitarian law as a war crime. Both Israel and Palestinians have killed innocent civilians. B’Tselem estimates that in 2007 alone, Israel killed 379 Palestinians of whom 133 were not participating in hostilities and 50 were not possible to determine if they were engaged in hostilities. During the same period, Palestinians killed 7 Israeli civilians not engaged in hostilities. The Israeli government continues to practice collective punishment, a tightened siege, and sanctions of the Gaza Strip. According to B’Tselem the Gazan economy is devastated and “more than 80% of Gazans depend on direct assistance from humanitarian agencies to keep them from starving.” Gaza is often called a big prison containing 1.5 million Palestinians. This blockade and siege of Gaza is in violation of international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

Other violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people are the restriction of movement in and out of Gaza and in and out and within the West Bank. The wall/fence, forbidden road system, earth mounds, and other road closures all hinder the movement of people and goods within the West Bank. The opinion of B’Tselem is that “these restrictions constitute a form of collective punishment, which is categorically prohibited by international humanitarian law.” Beatings and humiliations by Israeli security forces are extensive. “The large number of cases, their severity and their frequency all indicate that ill treatment is not committed by a handful of ‘rotten apples’, but is common and constitutes a systematic failure.”

More than 6,000 Palestinians were detained for interrogation by the Israel Security Agency (known as Shin Bet). Detainees were subjected to varying amounts of psychological and physical abuse. According to B’Tselem, some interrogations included the use of physical force that amounted to torture. There were many complaints sent to the Israel State Attorney’s Office, however the government failed to initiate criminal proceedings. According to B’Tselem, “this failure exposes the Israel Security Agency interrogators and those in the political echelon who supervise them to criminal prosecution abroad.”

Israeli soldiers continued using Palestinians as human shields—forcing them to perform dangerous military tasks or to protect soldiers from gunfire. Settler violence against West Bank citizens continued. B’Tselem investigated many cases and claims that it occurs daily in the Hebron City Center. Cases of settler violence, even when brought to the attention of the courts, seldom result in punishment. Moreover, Palestinians are tried in military courts whereas settlers are tried in Israeli civil courts. “This dual system is discriminatory with regard to the right to fair trial, in that it is based solely on the nationality of the defendants. Such discrimination is patently prohibited by both international and Israeli law.”
[Other violations of human rights, most of which are described more fully in the report, are the denial of family unification; discriminatory distribution of water in the West Bank; the existence and expansion of the settlements (colonies) in the West Bank; settler violence and the restriction of movement; restricted urban planning; house demolitions, isolation, and expulsion of residents; revocation of residency in East Jerusalem; and the separation barrier and its consequences. B’Tselem, in its 2007 Annual Report on Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, describes more fully each of these areas of human rights violations.

The Palestinian Authority and the Hamas government have also committed human rights violations against Palestinians. According to B’Tselem, clashes between Fatah and Hamas in the West Bank and Gaza Strip resulted in increased incidences of human rights violations. Seventy-three deaths of innocent bystanders, twenty-three of them children, occurred during street fighting or from gunfire during demonstrations. There have also been reports of torture of detainees by the Palestinian Authority.

[8] Unconditional Support of Israel by the United States

Based on funding, supplies of arms, vetoes in the United Nations Security Council, and media, the United States government is a strong partner and supporter of Israel in its war efforts, settlement, and economic development.

[8.1] Support Through Funding

[A comprehensive and thorough estimate of total U.S. aid to Israel from 1949 to 2008 is provided in an article by the Washington Report on Middle East Affairs November 8, 2008, issue. The conservative estimate is that Israel over the years has received $14,992.47 billion. This amount is considered to be a conservative estimate because additional moneys are buried in the budgets of various U.S. agencies such as the Defense Department or “in a form not easily quantifiable, such as the early disbursement of aid, giving Israel a direct benefit in interest income and the U.S. Treasury a corresponding loss.” Sources for these estimates were obtained from the Congressional Research Service Report RL32222, U.S. Foreign Aid to Israel, updated January 2, 2008, and the FY ’08 omnibus appropriations bill, H.R. 2764.

[However others contend that costs to American taxpayers due to the Israel/Palestine conflict is much more than the direct contributions to Israel. Thomas R. Stauffer, who has taught the economics of energy and the Middle East at Harvard and Georgetown University’s School of Foreign Service, published a report that estimates the cost to U.S. tax payers to be close to $3 trillion measured in 2002 dollars. Stauffer claims that approximately 60 percent (which amounts to $1.7 trillion) resulted from the U.S. defense of Israel since 1973. The majority of the remaining amount is due to a series of six oil supply crises since the end of World War II.

[United States aid to the Palestinian Authority totaled $622.458 million for the 2004 to 2008 budget years. This compares to $10,282.97 billion to Israel during the same period of time. The ratio of Palestinian aid to Israeli aid is 1 to 16,520! There is certainly nothing evenhanded about this disparity in aid.

[8.2] Support Through the Supply of Arms

[Military weapons are machines designed to kill. Consider what has been done with these machines in Lebanon, the West Bank, and the Gaza Strip! Citation.]

Citing U.S. government sources, Frida Berrigan and William D. Hartung, foreign policy scholars at Foreign Policy in Focus, estimate that “between 1996 and 2005 (the last year for which full data are available), Israel took delivery of $10.19 billion in U.S. weaponry and military equipment, including more than $8.58 billion through the Foreign Military Sales program, and another $1.61 billion in Direct Commercial Sales.” The most prominent arms deal during the Bush administration was a $4.5 billion sale of 102 Lockheed Martin F-16s. This type of aircraft has been used by Israel in its assaults on Lebanon, civilian areas of the West Bank and Gaza. A selected list of other U.S. weapons “purchased” from the U.S. and included in the Israeli arsenal is: rifles, grenade launchers, 2.50 caliber machine guns, ammunition, cluster bombs; F-4E Phantom, F-15 Eagle, and F-16 Fighting Falcon fighter planes; AH-64 Apache Attack, Cobra Attack, CH-53D Sea Stallion, and Blackhawk helicopters; AGM 65 Maverick, AGM 114 Hellfire, TOW, AIM 7 Sparrow missiles, AIM 9 Sidewinder, AIM 120 B AMRAAM, Patriot, and Harpoon Anti-Ship Missiles.

[In contrast, the Palestinian Authority or Hamas have none of these weapons creating an enormous disparity in military power.

[“Critics of U.S. aid policy, particularly some in the Middle East, argue that U.S. foreign aid exacerbates tensions in the region. Many Arab commentators insist that U.S. assistance to Israel indirectly causes suffering to Palestinians by supporting Israeli arms purchases. In the past, the United States reduced loan guarantees to Israel in opposition to continued settlement building, but it has not acted to cut Israel’s military or economic grant aid.”

[8.3] Support Through Vetoes on Behalf of Israel

[The United States first exercised its veto privilege in the Security Council in 1970. Its first veto on behalf of Israel was on July 26, 1973. From that date until the end of 2009, the United States used the veto eighty two times and of those eighty-] two times, forty-one were on behalf of Israel. Here is a small sampling of the draft resolutions that were vetoed by the United States:

- Three draft resolutions dated Nov 11, 2006, July 13, 2006, and October 5, 2004, demanding that Israel withdraws from Gaza and that both parties stop the violence.

- March 25, 2004: condemnation of the assassination of Ahmed Yassin, the leader of Hamas.

- On Oct 14, 2003: regarding the wall/fence built by Israel in the West Bank.

- On Sept 16, 2003: regarding the Israeli decision to “remove” Palestinian Authority leader, Yasser Arafat.

- Dec 20, 2002: on the killing by Israeli forces of several United Nations employees and the destruction of the World Food Program (WFP) warehouse.

- Two resolutions in 2001: the first on the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Palestinian-controlled territory and condemning acts of terror against civilians and the second on establishing a UN observer force to protect Palestinian civilians.

- In 1997: calling upon Israel to refrain from East Jerusalem settlement activities and demanding Israel’s immediate cessation of construction at Jabal Abu Ghneim (now known as Har Homa settlement) in East Jerusalem.

The Christian community has maintained an unbroken presence and witness in Jerusalem since Pentecost, gradually spreading throughout Palestine, the Middle East, and the Mediterranean world. Much has been written about the history of Christianity in the Middle East. The subject is complex and cannot be reasonably considered within this short discussion. Christians of the Middle East, including Palestine, are part of the rich tapestry of Arabic culture. Arabic is the native language of the majority of Middle Eastern Christians. Many Palestinian Christians trace their history to the early church in Palestine and have a deep love and attachment to the land of Palestine.

There is continuing concern about the numbers of Christians remaining in the Middle East and particularly in Palestine. Estimates of numbers in the Middle East throughout the past two millennia are difficult to obtain at best. During the Byzantine Empire, Christians were thought to be the majority population of Palestine, Egypt, and much of the Near East. At present it is estimated that 9,246,000 to 16,206,000 Christians live in the Middle East. Currently, Christians have been emigrating from the Middle East, and reasons for the outmigration vary by country. Political upheavals in Lebanon; discrimination in Israel, Egypt, and Iran; the occupation and economic decline in the West Bank and Gaza; and security in Iraq are some of the reasons. Christians in Jordan and Syria appear to experience the least difficulties in the Middle East; however numbers are reported to be declining there as well. The table below provides estimates by country.

Although the total numbers of Christians in Israel and the Palestinian Territories have gradually increased, the proportions have declined significantly. According to the 1922 British census of Mandate Palestine, Christians constituted 9.50 percent of the total population. Using estimates from the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics and the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, the proportion of Christians in Israel and the Palestinian Territories is estimated to be 1.9 percent. However, in certain areas, the Christian population has decreased in absolute numbers. An example is the Jerusalem-Bethlehem area, which “today has a Christian Palestinian population that is at least 12,000 less than the numbers of 1945.” Clearly, the Christian population is not growing at the same rate as the Jewish and Muslim populations.
The perception that the numbers of Christians are dwindling is underscored further if one examines population growth patterns. If one assumes that the population growth has an exponential distribution, and using British census data for Mandate Palestine from the years 1914 to 1947, the growth rate parameter can be estimated; then using the 1945 number of Christians as a starting point, we would expect the population of Christians to double. Clearly, since the Christian population has not doubled and since there have been no reports of famine or epidemics, the natural conclusion is that outmigration is a major contributory factor to the population dynamics of Christians.

The reduction in the proportion of Christians is attributed to lower birthrates and the higher rates of outmigration, which result from the occupation with its difficulties for daily life. A further concern of this outmigration is that those who migrate, either Christian or Muslim, are those whose political views are “liberals or seculars” thus tending to leave behind a greater proportion of those on the extremes in political orientation.

Propaganda on the issue of the decline in the numbers of Christians in the Middle East is frequent. A common assertion is that Christians experience discrimination in majority Muslim countries; however such a statement is misleading. The U.S. Department of State cites examples of discrimination against Christians by the government of Israel, which is not predominantly Muslim. Christians have six reserved seats and the Samaritans have one reserved out of the 132 seats in the Legislative Council. Party affiliations of Christians are either Fatah Party or Independents. Mainstream Muslim thinking about Christians in their midst is exemplified by the words of El Hassan Bin Talal, the previous Crown Prince of Jordan (now the present king’s uncle):

[Christians remain leading spokesmen for Arab national causes—most notably, the Palestinian Arab cause—Christian Arabs are in no way aliens to Muslim Arab society, a society whose history and culture they have shared for over fourteen centuries to date, without interruption, and to whose material and moral civilization they have continually contributed, and eminently so, on their own initiative or by trustful request. With such a heritage of trust and good faith in their favour, Christian Arabs need not feel any more apprehensive than other Arabs for things to come. With the patience, resilience and empathy for which they have been historically known, and the imaginative leadership they have rarely lacked, they will surely be at no loss to find their place in the Arab world of the future, to their own benefit, and to the benefit of all other parties concerned.]

Christian churches and denominations are varied and provide a rich heritage to the Arab culture of Palestine and elsewhere in the Middle East. There are four major divisions of Christians: the Orthodox churches, the Orthodox Byzantine churches (known as “Greek Orthodox churches”), Catholic churches, and Protestant churches. Each of these divisions is yet divided further. The table below is a listing of these churches:

[I. Oriental Orthodox Churches:]
[1. “Assyrian Church of the East” or Oriental Syrian Church]
[2. The Syrian orthodox Church of Antioch]
[3. The Coptic Orthodox Church]
[4. The Armenian Apostolic Church:
   (a) Catholicosate of Etchmiadzin
   (b) Patriarchate of the Throne of Saint Jacques of Jerusalem
   (c) Armenian Patriarchate of Constantinople
   (d) Armenian Catholicosate of the Great House of Cilicia]

[II. Eastern (Byzantine or Greek) Orthodox Churches:
[1. Patriarchate of Alexandria, Patriarchate of Alexandria and all of Afriesa
[2. Greek Orthodox Patriarchate of Antioch and all of the East.
[4. Monastery of Saint Catherine from the Mount Sinai.

[III. Catholic Churches:
[1. Maronite Patriarchate of Antioch and of all the East.
[7. The Catholic Church of the Latin Rite.

[IV. Protestant Churches: 11 denominations]
A concise history explaining these divisions can be found in the article, “Christian Churches in the Near and Middle East.” Unlike the Christians in the West, those in the East have lived as a minority in a society predominantly Muslim. This heritage provides an environment conducive to reconciliation between the three faiths in Palestine-Israel. The European Jewish immigration into Palestine brought with it a traumatized people who were the victims of religious persecution and this has unfortunately become a dominant characteristic of interethnic/religious relationships between Jews and Christians and Muslims. Furthermore, the West’s intolerance of the Muslim culture has complicated relations between Muslims, the dominant religion, and Christians and Jews.

10. Prospects for the Future

What is the solution to the Palestine-Israel conflict? It has been suggested there are four possible outcomes: (1) expulsion of all Palestinians from Palestine; (2) one state with fragmented and separated Palestinian “ghettos”; (3) two states, each sovereign and independent; and (4) one state that is binational or secular with equal rights for all its citizens.

10.1 Expulsion of All Palestinians from Palestine

Consider option (1), i.e., the wish for the leadership in Israel to have a land without a people—free of all non-Jewish Palestinians whether Christian or Muslim. This wish has been expressed in various forms early from the founding of Zionism to this day. Nur Masalha in his book, The Politics of Denial: Israel and the Palestinian Refugee Problem, describes in detail the theme of “population transfer” or “ethnic cleansing” in the thinking and action of the Zionist movement in Palestine-Israel. His work is largely based on Hebrew and Israeli archival sources and represents some of the original work in this area and is frequently cited by later authors.

For example, Masalha writes that Israel Zangwill, a prominent Anglo-Jewish writer, was an early advocate of the transfer solution: worked relentlessly to propagate the slogan “a land without a people for a people without a land.” Zionists knew that in fact that the land had people; however they viewed the Palestinians as people not worth considering. The view of Palestinians by most Zionists has not changed over the past century! As early as 1891, a leading liberal Russian Jewish thinker, Ahad Ha’Am (Asher Zvi Ginsberg) observed that the Zionist “pioneers” believed that [the only language that the Arabs understand is that of force. ... [The Zionist “pioneers”] behave towards the Arabs with hostility and cruelty, trespass unjustly upon their boundaries, beat them shamefully without reason and even brag about it, and nobody stands to check this contemptible and dangerous tendency.

Masalha documents with meticulous detail the early plans of the Zionist leaders to transfer the Palestinian people as a necessary prelude to the founding of the state of Israel. Tactics for such a transfer evolved with time. In the beginning there was hope that through negotiations with colonial powers such as Italy, England, and Turkey that these powers would cooperate with the voluntary or forced transfer of the Palestinian population. When these tactics failed, then purchase of land was the attempted device; however by late 1947, the Jewish National Fund and others had acquired by purchase only 6 to 8 percent of the land (see “Partition” in Section 2 above). Clearly other tactics were necessary if the Zionist leaders were to achieve their goal of a “land without people”. After the United Nations General Assembly voted to recommend partition of Palestine in 1947, civil war erupted. The Yishuv-armed forces, the Haganah, Irgun, Leumi, and Ledhi groups, were fully armed and on the offensive against a largely unarmed, disorganized, and powerless Palestinian groups. Both force and psychological intimidation were tactics used to initiate and implement the mass exodus of 750,000 to 800,000 Palestinians. After the cessation of hostilities and successful takeover of many villages by the Yishuv-armed forces, the massacre of villagers was used as a successful device of intimidation resulting in the mass exodus.

The expulsion of approximately 60,000 Palestinians from the towns of Lydda and Ramle in July 1948 is just one example of outright forced expulsions. [For art and a picture, see Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, Figures 8 and 9, see pp. 1129–30.] Masalha writes [Ben-Gurion and three senior army officers were directly involved: Yigal Allon, Yitzhak Rabin and Moshe Dayan. Shortly before the capture of the towns, Ben-Gurion met with his army chiefs. Allon, commander of the Palmach, the Haganah’s elite military force, asked Ben-Gurion, “What shall we do with the Arabs?” Ben-Gurion answered (or according to one version, jested with his hand), “Expel them.” This was immediately communicated to the army headquarters and the expulsion implemented.

Benny Morris, one of the first Israeli historians to write about the Nakba, writes:

[At 13.30 hours on 12 July, Lieutenant-Colonel Yitzhak Rabin, Operation Dani head of Operations, issued the following order: “1. The inhabitants of Lydda must be expelled quickly without attention to age. Implement immediately.” A similar order was issued at the same time to the Kiryati Brigade concerning the inhabitants of the neighbouring town of Ramle, occupied by Kiryati troops that morning. On 12 and 13 July, the Yiftah and Kiryat brigades carried out their orders, expelling the 50,000 remaining inhabitants of Lydda and Ramle and refugees camped in and around the two. About noon on 13 July, Lydda’s inhabitants were forced to walk eastwards to the Arab Legion lines, many of Ramle’s inhabitants were forced to walk in trucks or buses. Clinging the roads—the tens of thousands of refugees marched, gradually shedding their worldly goods along the way. It was a hot summer day. Arab chroniclers, such as Sheikh Muhammad Nimer al-Khatib, claimed that hundreds of children died in the march; from dehydration and disease. One Israeli witness described the spoor: the refugee column “to begin with [jettisoned] utensils and furniture and, in the end, bodies of men, women and children.”]
Massacres did not stop in 1948–49. On October 29, 1956, Israeli border patrol massaged forty-eight Palestinian in Kafr Qasim, which was a village of Israel and near the “green line,” the so-called border between Israel and the West Bank. Palestinian sources put the death toll at forty-nine since one of the women was pregnant and her unborn child is counted as one of the casualties. The artist, Samia Halaby, collected eyewitness testimony [See Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, Figure 10, p. 1130.]

The women grouped together into one embrace and began to slowly turn as the bullets struck them. According to Kafr Qasim residents, the 16-year-old Hana Amer was in the middle and could hear the bullets shredding on the women. One after another the women and girls fell in one place at which time Hama, wounded and bleeding fainting. There she remained till the following day when she woke up as they were removing the dead. In my drawing of the embrace that prefaces death, I draw Kahmies Amer in the front. She is first to begin falling. I show her wearing an Arab coat, and her shoes fallen off her feet. Her son, Abu Butros, told me that on Wednesday afternoon when the curfew ended and they were allowed out of their homes, he found her shoes in the road along with pools of blood and other scattered possessions of the departed. "

To the credit of some in the Israeli public who put pressure on their government, the Ben Gurion government reluctantly agreed to bring the commanders responsible for the massacre to trial. They received jail sentences but were pardoned in one year and were then promoted.

The previous descriptions are but a small sample of the expulsions of approximately 750,000 Palestinians in 1947 to 1948 and later. The present Muslim and Christian population within Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza is at least 4 million. It would be difficult indeed to implement such a mass expulsion without worldwide revulsion. So option (1) is inconceivable and morally objectionable!

10.2 One State with Fragmented and Separated Palestinian “Ghettos”

The present situation resembles option (2) most closely in that the Palestinian people live in areas fragmented into many “ghettos” or “prisons.” The Gaza Strip has frequently been characterized as a 1.5 million people prison. East Jerusalem is under continuing pressure from the Israeli government with revocation of residency permits, house demolitions, and a myriad number of measures designed to make the people to quit and leave. We have seen with ample description in this report that the West Bank is divided into many enclaves with limited freedom of travel by the Palestinian people and their goods from one enclave to the next. A map that demonstrates the Palestinian loss of land beginning in 1946 (the white areas represent land owned by Jewish citizens of Palestine) can be found in the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, p. 1131, as Figure 11. The second map represents the land proposed by the UN Partition plan for the Palestinians (green areas) who were two thirds of the population of Palestine; the third map represents the area bounded by the 1967 (or equivalently the 1949 armistice) borders; and finally the fourth map represents the present day reality.

That the present situation is unacceptable by the international community is amply clear. A permanent occupation and repression of a people by a state is morally and ethically unacceptable and is against all international laws.

10.3 Two States, Each Sovereign and Independent

On April 30, 2003, the Road Map was formally presented to Israel and the Palestinian Authority by the United States, European Union, Russia, and the United Nations (the Quartet). The plan is characterized as a performance-based and goal-driven roadmap that proposes three phases. The first phase to be implemented by May 2003, was intended to end terror and violence, normalizing Palestinian life, and building Palestinian institutions. The end of violence was explicitly stated as follows:

Palestinian leadership issues unequivocal statement reiterating Israel’s right to exist in peace and security and calling for an immediate and unconditional cease-fire to end armed activity and all acts of violence against Israelis anywhere. All official Palestinian institutions end incitement against Israel.

Israeli leadership issues unequivocal statement affirming its commitment to the two-state vision of an independent, viable, sovereign Palestinian state living in peace and security alongside Israel, as expressed by President Bush, and calling for an immediate end to violence against Palestinians everywhere. All official Israeli institutions and incitement against Palestinians.

This first phase also calls for the Government of Israel (GOI) to immediately dismantle settlement outposts erected since March 2001 and, consistent with the Mitchell Report, GOI freezes all settlement activity (including natural growth of settlements). The second phase, to end in December 2003, was to focus on creating an independent Palestinian state with provisional borders and “attributes” of sovereignty, based upon the new constitution, which was to be written in Phase 1. The third phase, to be completed by 2005, was to result in a permanent status agreement and end the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Both Israel and the Palestinian Authority immediately accepted the Road Map after its introduction by President Bush in a speech given June 2003; however very shortly thereafter Israel published fourteen “reservations.” To date the Road Map has not been implemented and Israel is proceeding with a greater land seizure through the building of the wall/fence and through expanded settlements.

As in the Oslo agreements, the Road Map depended upon the willingness of the parties to negotiate. In fact the text of the Road Map contains the statement: “... however, as a performance-based plan, progress will require and depend upon the...
Because of the unequal status and power of the two parties involved in the conflict, the weaker party is at the mercy of the stronger party—in this case Israel. It has been in Israel’s interest to continually negotiate, i.e., have a “peace process” so that during the negotiations it can continue its land seizure and creation of facts on the ground. It has become abundantly clear to the Palestinians that the Road Map is dead.

10.3.1 The Saudi Plan

A second proposed peace plan for a two-state solution was proposed by Abdullah bin Abdul Aziz, the Crown Prince of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and approved by the Council of the League of Arab States summit in Beirut in 2002. The statement of the plan is concise and explicit. In summary form, the plan calls for “full Israeli withdrawal from all the Arab territories occupied since June 1967, implementation of Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, reaffirmed by the Madrid Conference of 1991 and the land for peace principle, and Israel’s acceptance of an independent Palestinian State, with East Jerusalem as its capital, in return for the establishment of normal relations in the context of a comprehensive peace with Israel. It also called for a just solution to the Palestinian Refugee problem in accordance with the UN General Assembly Resolution 194.”

According to a March 28, 2007, article that appeared in Ha’aretz, Mahmoud Abbas, the president of the Palestinian Authority, voted for the plan and Ismail Haniyeh, the democratically elected prime minister now in control only in Gaza abstained from the vote but said that he would not oppose the peace plan. The Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs declared, “The Arab League initiative is positive in calling for normalization of relations with Israel. However, it contains some problematic aspects as well, such as insistence on a Palestinian ‘right of return’ and a predetermination of the border issues.”

To date no agreement has been reached based on either the Road Map or the Saudi Peace Plan. It is in Israel’s interest to continuously negotiate to provide more time for creation of “facts on the ground” while the Palestinians are in disarray and are too weak to be a partner in realistic negotiations. By continuing to “exist,” the Palestinians are resisting nonviolently to their displacement and the erasure of their culture.

The lives of Palestinians and Israelis are intertwined in many respects. By consulting the maps in Attachment I, which can be found starting on p. 1132 of the Middle East Study Committee Art, Charts, and Maps, it is clear that separating the two peoples will be difficult. There are approximately 500,000 Israelis living in settlements in the West Bank and areas annexed to Jerusalem. If there were to be a two-state solution with the 1949 armistice lines for borders, these people would either have to be moved to Israel, which would be difficult but not impossible, or they could become citizens of the new state of Palestine, a possibility that would very likely be unacceptable to the settlers. Furthermore, Israel depends very heavily on water from the West Bank mountain aquifer and an equitable and just agreement would have to be reached regarding its use. The difficulties are many but not insurmountable if the two parties choose to implement the two-state option; however there is little evidence that Israel is willing to contemplate this choice. On the contrary, the continuing seizure of Palestinian land and construction of settlements all demonstrate Israel’s wish to take all of Palestine. As Saeb Erekat, chief negotiation for the Palestinian authority states:“

The pursuit of a two-state solution has continued for many years, at least since the Oslo Accords in 1993. The perception by many is that the Road Map is dead. The Palestinian negotiator, Saeb Erekat, said that the “Palestinians may have to abandon the goal of an independent state if Israel continues to expand settlements and the United States does not stop it.” Palestinians may have to “refocus their attention on the one state solution where Muslims, Christians and Jews can live as equals.” An objection to one-state solution is the fear that Israel will cease to be a Jewish state. However, Mark Satin, claims that the majority of those proposing a one-state solution do not question Israel’s right to exist as a Jewish state but rather “they question the wisdom of its existing as a specifically Jewish state when Jewish life and culture could be equally well (and arguably more securely and benignly) preserved in that same region in a secular, democratic state that was constitutionally sensitive to the needs of all its peoples.”

Palestine, before 1948, was a multicultural society of Christians, Jews, and Muslims. Difficult though it may be after so much strife between Palestinians and Israelis, it is imperative for the sake of peace that they strive to live together with respect for each other’s differences.

There have been several suggestions for a one-state solution to the Palestine-Israel conflict. One possibility is a binational arrangement similar to that existing in Belgium or to a state where each person has an equal vote. Either format would entail enormous adjustments by the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority.

At present the Government of Israel has control over its own territory and the occupied territories. It even contests the term “occupier” and would rather use the term “disputed.” In other words the Government of Israel rules over all of Mandate Palestine. As Ali Abunimah, a Palestinian American and editor of the Electronic Intifada, states “the two people[s] are completely interrelated and intertwined on every possible level. . . . In reality, Palestine is Israel today and Israel is Palestine.” There is already a de facto one state in which differing levels of discrimination against both Christians and Muslims exists. The quality of life in Israel for Christians and Muslims, though by no means ideal (see Section 5, Israel) is better than in the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza (see Sections 5.2 to 5.4).

There is much that must happen before the emergence of one state with equal rights for all its citizens. The occupation of the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza must stop; the wall/fence must be removed; freedom of movement throughout the territory previously known as Mandate Palestine must be possible with no highways for Jews only; integration of all schools and neighborhoods must occur; equal employment opportunities must be possible; discriminatory laws against non-orthodox Jews, Christians, and Muslims must be abolished; citizens of the state must have the right to purchase land irrespective of their religious affiliation; the state should support religious institutions of all three faiths equally; security for all its citizens must be assured; and safeguards for diversity of ethnic traditions must be in place.45 In other words, all its citizens must enjoy the same human rights. The state would have to be bilingual with both Arabic and Hebrew signage and all legal documents. The issue of what to call the human rights can be resolved.

The most contentious issue is Israel’s Law of Return that at present allows a Jewish person living anywhere outside Israel to immigrate to Israel but does not allow those of Palestinian origins to return to Palestine Israel. The right of return or compensation must be granted to Palestinians according to UN resolution 194 III and under accepted international laws (see Section II, Right of Return). This right is an individual right and cannot be negotiated away by governments.

The right of return issue is at the heart of the conflict. Israelis see it as a threat to the identity of Israel as a Jewish state and Palestinians, who see the land as an inseparable part of their heritage and culture, see it as a necessary prelude to justice. A country composed of only one religious-ethnic group is an anachronism in the 21st century. Israeli must come to terms with the notion that they can share Mandate Palestine with its indigenous Christian and Muslim people, who have lived there for centuries before the land was colonized in the 20th century by immigrants initially from Europe. Truth telling and acceptance of the other must be the preludes to peace.

11 CONCLUSION

We ended this overview of the Palestine-Israel conflict with a section on the “Prospects for the Future” by presenting four possible outcomes. The first two options, which are a total dispossession and displacement of the indigenous Palestinians or the present reality with the Palestinians herded into ever shrinking ghettos, are morally and ethically unacceptable. Achieving either of the other two possibilities, two states, both sovereign and independent, or a one state that is either binational or secular with equal rights for all its citizens, appear not to be possible at this time. A two-stage development where initially there would be two states that would then federate to form a binational state also seems unachievable at this time. The huge disparity in power, wealth, and international support enjoyed by Israel leaves them little incentive to change the present status that is a continuing dispossession of the Palestinians.

Sixty-two years after the United Nations General Assembly passed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which affirms in Article 2 that “everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,”453 theocratic states in the Middle East that are “Islamic” or “Jewish” should be considered as anachronisms in the twenty-first century. Such states cannot exist without practicing discrimination against citizens who are of the other faiths than those of the state.

Frequently the criticism aimed at the Palestinians is that they, through their violence, are responsible for their treatment by Israel. The thought is that if they would only use nonviolent resistance, then Israel would feel secure and reconciliation would be possible. This accusation is unjust. When one talks with most Palestinians, they will voice their frustration but put their hope in sumud—their ability to withstand all their hardships and continue with their lives. They firmly believe that to continue to exist is their way of resisting. They will tell you that time is on their side and that history will repeat itself—meaning that the Israelis, like all previous invaders, eventually will blend with the people of Palestine Israel and become one with the others. This hope at this time seems unrealistic.

Another example of nonviolent resistance is the weekly demonstrations that take place in Bil’in, a village 60 percent of whose land has been seized for a nearby Israeli settlement and the building of the wall. These demonstrations, supported by Israeli and international peace activists, are regularly met with violence from the Israeli Occupation Forces. Tear gas canisters, rubber bullets, and concussion grenades are used to disperse the demonstrations and raids into Bil’in to arrest and harass the organizers of the demonstrations are also common.454 The resolve of the leaders of the demonstrations is evident in the words and actions of Abdallah Abu Rahmah, a member of the Bil’in Popular Committee against the Wall. He was arrested on International Human Rights Day, December 10, 2009, by Israeli occupation forces that raided his house at 2 a.m. in the morning and arrested him in front of his wife and children.455 In a letter from prison, Abu Rahmah declared “whether we are confined in the open-air prison that Gaza has been transformed into, in military prisons in the West Bank, or in our own villages surrounded by the Apartheid Wall, arrests and persecution do not weaken us. They only strengthen our commitment to turning 2010 into a year of liberation through unarmed grassroots resistance to the occupation.” “Unlike Israel, we have no nuclear weapons or army, but we do not need them. The justness of our cause earns us your support. No army, no prison and no wall can stop us.”

[Other forms of nonviolent resistance are through the mediums of poetry, literature, and art. One example, the story of Ghassan Kanafani, is portrayed in Section 4.1.2 Targeted Assassinations. John Halaka, a painter, now professor of Visual Art at San Diego University in California, says this about his work: “My drawings from the series Landscapes of Desire are inspired by the ruins of Palestinian villages and homes that were destroyed by Israel during and after the 1948 ethnic cleansing of Palestine. The images enable me to reflect on the unrelenting effort to annihilate a Palestinian culture that refuses to disappear and an indigenous people that refuse to go away. Drawings of the ruins of stone homes from destroyed Palestinian villages such as Kafr Bir'im, Lifa, Al Bassa, A'mka and Kuikat, are a declaration that in the face of looming cultural annihilation, the persistence of memory is a crucial act of political resistance and cultural survival.”

[Beginning with their displacement and dispossession from their ancestral lands to the continuing sin of occupation, these pages have presented the suffering of the Palestinian people. In spite of the separation wall and inhuman blockade of Gaza, continued seizure of land by Israeli settlements, daily humiliation at checkpoints, separation between family members, denial of access to holy places of worship, denial of refugees’ right of return, imprisonment of thousands including children, discrimination against Palestinian Christian and Muslim citizens of Israel, the continued displacement of Christians and Muslims from Jerusalem, the unwillingness of the international community to insist that Israeli cease violating the human rights of the Palestinian people, the Christian community of Palestine on December 11, 2009, issued The Kairos Palestine Document, “A moment of truth: A word of faith, hope and love from the heart of Palestinian suffering.” In their words is the message of forgiveness and reconciliation.

[“We believe in God, one God — a good and just God, who loves each one of his creatures.” “Love is the commandment of Christ our Lord to us and it includes both friends and enemies. This must be clear when we find ourselves in circumstances where we must resist evil of whatever kind. Love is seeing the face of God in every human being.” “Hope within us means first and foremost our faith in God and secondly our expectation, despite everything, for a better future. One of the most important signs of hope is the steadfastness of the generations, the belief in the justice of their cause and the continuity of memory, which does not forget the ‘Nakba’ (catastrophe) and its significance.” “Love is the commandment of Christ our Lord to us and it includes both friends and enemies. This must be clear when we find ourselves in circumstances where we must resist evil of whatever kind.”

[“Our message to the Jews tells them: Even though we have fought one another in the recent past and still struggle today, we a

[“In the absence of all hope, we cry out our cry of hope. We believe in God, good and just. We believe that God’s goodness will finally triumph over the evil of hate and of death that still persist in our land. We will see here ‘a new land’ and ‘a new human being’, capable of rising up in the spirit to love each one of his or her brothers and sisters.”

[We end this document with a prayer of Cedar Duaybis, a founding member of Sabeel, the Ecumenical Liberation Theology Center, an international peace movement initiated by Palestinian Christians in the Holy Land. The prayer was for our committee (the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Middle East Study Committee), for Palestinians, and for Israelis.

[We thank you, God, for this time that you have been with us. It has been a privilege to be able to meet with this Committee. We know how much they feel in their hearts for all the people of this land not just for one side. We know that they are very brave to have agreed in the first place to come on this trip knowing how complex this situation is. We know dear God that we belong to one side. We are Palestinian and sometimes we have to get out of our situation and look at it from the outside. So please, dear God, let us remain aware and look at the situation fairly and do your will. We know that all the people in this land have suffered at some time or another and that the only way to move forward is to make their problem ours and for them to make our problem theirs. We need to look at this way to try and solve the problem of the Jewish people and for them to take our problem and even try to solve ours. Lead us, dear God, in that way because it is the only way that will lead to peace. Help us to see that this land though very small can take both peoples. We know how much you love this land, we know how much we love this land, we know how much the Jewish people love this land. Help us, God, to work through our love so that we can all remain in this land and live peacefully together. Dear God, lead this Study Group to the right decisions. Give them the courage, I know they are courageous, to do the right thing and leave the rest in your hands — your loving hands — so that we can come even one step closer to a peaceful solution for this very long and very painful conflict. Dear God, help all the leaders of this land to make the right decisions to do your will and help the people of this land to reach a peaceful, livable viable solution that will be to the good of all. In your name we ask it. Amen.”

4. The Middle East Study Committee is deeply thankful for the gracious welcome and engaging conversations that we had during this time with our Middle Eastern Christian partners, their Jewish and Muslim neighbors, and other political and religious leaders.
5. The terminology for the two testaments of the Christian Bible used throughout this paper is “Older Testament” and “Newer Testament,” following a suggestion made in another paper that is before the 219th General Assembly (2010), “Christians and Jews: People of God.” “Older”/“Newer” emphasizes that the relationship between the two testaments is one of chronology, not of supersession. That is, the Newer Testament has not superseded the Older and has not rendered the Older obsolete and without authority.

6. In Judaism, these books are divided into three sections: the Torah (Genesis through Deuteronomy), first in its hierarchy of biblical authority; the Prophets (the books of the major and minor prophets, excluding Daniel, plus Joshua, Judges, 1–2 Samuel, and 1–2 Kings), second in its hierarchy of biblical authority; and the Writings (all the other books, including Daniel), third in its hierarchy of biblical authority.

9. Please note that in the Newer Testament, the Greek word dikaios may often be translated “just” even in texts where the NRSV translates it “righteous,” and that dikaiosune may often be translated “justice” even in texts where the NRSV translates it “righteousness.” In many of the NT texts quoted below, “just” and “justice” translate dikaios and dikaiosune. In others, “justice” translates the Greek word krisis.

40. Jerusalem is holy to Muslims primarily because of the Prophet Muhammad’s Night Journey (al-Isra’), during which: he was transported on the winged beast Burayq from Mecca to Jerusalem; he prayed there with Abraham, Moses, Jesus, and other prophets; and he then ascended from the rock of the Jewish Temple Mount to the Divine Presence through the seven heavens (al-Mi’raj). Both the Al-Aqsa mosque and the Dome of the Rock were built at the end of the 7th century to commemorate that journey and experience.

41. This section has addressed only the biblical uses of the term “Zion” and does not at all address the phenomenon of either Jewish Zionism or Christian Zionism. Jewish Zionism is too complex and diverse a set of historical movements to be defined or described in brief. For a Jewish perspective, go to: www.mideastweb.org/zionism.htm. For a Palestinian perspective, see the presentation by Professor Munther S. Dajani, “Judaism and Zionism and Human Rights from a Palestinian Perspective.” Do a Google search by entering “Munther S. 45. The Hebrew word ger, translated “stranger” or “sojourner” or “alien,” designates foreigners who live among the Israelites. “Strangers” were not full members of ancient Israelite society and were considered to be of lower status, but they were afforded a measure of legal protection. Needless to say, Palestinians do not consider themselves to be “strangers” in the land, and this term should not be interpreted as in any way describing them.

70. Intriguingly, several ancient witnesses to the text of John 12:32, quoted just above, reflect the same “cosmic” theology found here in Colossians, reading panta (all things) rather than pantes (all people).

72. Within those congregations that follow the Revised Common Lectionary strictly, neither ch. 27 nor ch. 33 is ever read or preached on during worship. In fact only one passage about Jacob and Esau (their birth and Esau’s lost birthright) and three other episodes from the life of Jacob (his dream of the heavenly ladder at Bethel, his marriage to Leah and Rachel, and his wrestling with the “man” at Peniel), are ever read. For this reason, the story of these twins is summarized rather fully in the following paragraphs.

73. This parable is well known to Presbyterians. In churches following the Revised Common Lectionary it was just read on the Fourth Sunday in Lent, March 14, 2010, along with 2 Cor. 5:16–21 (see above, at fn. 68)! Still, the interpretation of the parable offered here may not be familiar to many.

74. This committee represents a considerable diversity in life experiences, theological perspectives, and views of current reality in the Israel-Palestinian conflict. This will become obvious through reading the four individual vignettes that have been written by committee members and are included in this section of the report. It has been encouraging to see how the committee has worked to respect the struggles, pains, experiences, and opinions of each of its members. We have worked hard to find consensus of opinion as we have proceeded with each section of this report and with our recommendations. As one can imagine given the complexity of the situation, this has not always been possible.

75. The Middle East Study Committee (MESC) met four times: April 1–3 (Washington, D.C.), August 17–September 1 (Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, Israel, and Palestine), November 11–13 (New York City), January 29–30 (Louisville, Ky.). A complete list of all the individuals with whom the committee met is available in Appendix 1. Great care was taken to assure that equal voice was given to all viewpoints.

76. The Middle East Study Committee (MESC) met four times: April 1–3 (Washington, D.C.), August 17–September 1 (Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, Israel, and Palestine), November 11–13 (New York City), January 29–30 (Louisville, Ky.). A complete list of all the individuals with whom the committee met is available in Appendix 1. Great care was taken to assure that equal voice was given to all viewpoints.

77. The MESC was not able to gain access to Gaza due to the recent war and blockade, under which Israeli forces have prevented most church representatives from entering that territory; and therefore we did not have the opportunity to hear the voice of Hamas. Our time limitations did not permit us to have conversations with members of the Likud in Israel or Hezbollah in Lebanon. From the time of the appointment of this committee in February 2009 until the submission of this report on March 5, 2010, the committee has attempted to make the best use of the limited time and resources that we have been provided.

(Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs web site: http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/) We know that violence takes various forms, overt and then more structural, and these figures only portray the overt violence.
100. According to records from the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the first recorded suicide bombing occurred in April 6, 1994. Total deaths recorded due to suicide bombings in Israel for the years 2000 to 2008 are listed as 553 from a total of 147 attacks. (Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs web site: http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/). According to the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, the population of Israel at the end of 2008 was composed of 1,487,600 ethnic Palestinians (Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, Statistical Abstracts of Israel 2009 No. 60, Table 2.1) and there have been 147 suicide bombers, thus .0098 percent of Palestinians resort to this extreme violence.

301. In an article in the October 28, 2007 edition of The Atlanta Journal Constitution, entitled “Israel’s Military Court System Is the Model to Avoid,” Lisa Hajjar wrote as follows:

“Imprisonment has been one of the key strategies of Israeli control of the Palestinian population, and since 1967 more than half a million Palestinians were prosecuted through military courts that fall far short of international standards of due process.

“Most convictions are based on coerced confessions, and for decades Israeli interrogation tactics have entailed the use of torture and ill treatment. Tens of thousands of more Palestinians were never prosecuted, but were instead held in administrative detention for months or years....

“In addition to the reliance on coercive interrogation to produce confessions and to justify continued detention, prisoners in Israeli custody can be held incommunicado for protracted periods, and lawyers face onerous obstacles in meeting with their clients.

“While it is true that detainees are brought before an Israeli military judge at some point, this process is hardly impartial. Such hearings tend to be used to extend detention and often take place in interrogation facilities, not courts. Detainees are rarely represented by lawyers or apprised of their rights, including a right to complain about abuse or to assert innocence. Failure to assert innocence at this hearing can be used as evidence of guilt.

Emanating from the conviction of the Arab countries that a military solution to the conflict will not achieve peace or provide security for the parties, the council:

1. Requests Israel to reconsider its policies and declare that a just peace is its strategic option as well.

2. Further calls upon Israel to affirm:
   a. Full Israeli withdrawal from all the territories occupied since 1967, including the Syrian Golan Heights to the lines of June 4, 1967 as well as the remaining occupied Lebanese territories in the south of Lebanon.
   b. Achievement of a just solution to the Palestinian Refugee problem to be agreed upon in accordance with UN General Assembly Resolution 194.
   c. The acceptance of the establishment of a Sovereign Independent Palestinian State on the Palestinian territories occupied since the 4th of June 1967 in the West Bank and Gaza strip, with East Jerusalem as its capital.

3. Consequently, the Arab Countries affirm the following:
   a. Consider the Arab-Israeli conflict ended, and enter into a peace agreement with Israel, and provide security for all the states of the region.
   b. Establish normal relations with Israel in the context of this comprehensive peace.

4. Assures the rejection of all forms of Palestinian partition which conflict with the special circumstances of the Arab host countries.

5. Calls upon the Government of Israel and all Israelis to accept this initiative in order to safeguard the prospects for peace and stop the further shedding of blood, enabling the Arab Countries and Israel to live in peace and good neighborliness and provide future generations with security, stability, and prosperity.

6. Invites the International Community and all countries and Organizations to support this initiative.

7. Requests the Chairman of the Summit to form a special committee composed of some of its concerned member states and the Secretary General of the League of Arab States to pursue the necessary contacts to gain support for this initiative at all levels, particularly from the United Nations, the Security Council, the United States of America, the Russian Federation, the Muslim States and the European Union.

Introduction:

This summary begins with a very brief historical review of the context for Presbyterian mission and relationships in the larger Middle East since 1856 and then concentrates on positions taken by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including its predecessor denominations, on Israel/Palestine and on the several wars that have occurred in the recent period (including the Iranian revolution, the first Gulf War, and the Iraq war begun in March 2003). Presbyterian-founded educational and medical institutions remain particularly notable in Cairo and Beirut but mission partnerships and ecumenical relations link us with 15 million Arab Christians throughout the region. Their presence, the importance of the “Holy Land” for our faith, the tragic frequency of violence, and enormous U.S. geostrategic investments in oil and Israel, have prompted frequent General Assembly attention, averaging a policy or shorter resolution every other year since 1967.

The General Assembly Social Witness Policy Compilation (available on the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) website: www.pcusa.org/acswp) includes excerpts from most of social policy statements of the General Assembly. The latest comprehensive statement on the Middle East dates from 1997; it shows great continuity with the statement of 1949 concerning Palestinian refugees and with the equally comprehensive policy statement of 1974. General Assembly statements generally consist of study or rationale sections (partly in appendices in this study) accompanied by recommendations for study, action, and witness. Copies of the 1997 statement may be downloaded free of charge from the ACSWP website. Similarly, resolutions on the Iraq war (2003, 2004, and 2008) and “Violence, Religion, and Terrorism” (2004) are available in both print and cyber form and in several issues of Church & Society magazine (2003, 2004, 2006). In shortest summary, this policy stream consistently finds the Israeli occupation of Palestine to be at or near the heart of too many regional conflicts, although the U.S. invasion and occupation of Iraq has created both new refugees and new forms of ideological response.

Context and History of Mission

Although the Orthodox Churches of the Middle East (Coptic, Syrian, Armenian, Assyrian, and Byzantine [also known as Greek]), and Catholic churches (Coptic, Maronite, Melkite, Greek, and Latin Rite [Roman]) maintain continuity with the earliest Christian communities and have generally lived under Islamic governments since the early Islamic conquests of the late 600s and early 700s, any treatment of the Middle East must note the history of the Crusades and the fall of Constantinople, now Istanbul, the removal of Islam from most of Europe by 1492, and then the relatively brief European colonial history that followed the dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire after Turkey’s defeat in WWI. The Protestant denominations entered the Middle East in the 19th century, with each denomination taking particular areas. The Presbyterians (with the Congregationalists) began work in Syria and Lebanon in the early mid 1820s, in Iran in the mid 1830s, in Iraq (jointly with the Reformed and Congregational Churches) in the mid 1840s, and in Egypt in the mid 1850s. The Anglicans (Church of England), as well as the Lutherans (i.e., the “German Mission” consisting of the German Lutheran “state church” and the German “Free Church,” i.e., Reformed) focused their mission activity in Jerusalem, Jordan, and the Holy Land. The post-WWII period was marked by the independence (decolonization) of a variety of Middle Eastern countries (some with relatively recent boundaries), the rise of the oil states generally, and through Saudi Arabia particularly, the influence of a very conservative Wahhabist strain of Islam. Pan-Arab and Pan-Islamic movements have had some influence in the post-war period, but nationalism has been the prevailing model, with Islam providing a counterweight to Western cultural (if not economic) influence.

Overview of Positions on Arab-Israeli-Palestinian Peace Efforts

From 1948 forward, recognition of Israel has been accompanied by concern for the original refugees (about 750,000) displaced during the 1947–49 period. Statements note the role of Egypt and Jordan in controlling Gaza and the West Bank, respectively, until 1967.

Historical summaries are found in the 1974 and 1997 church background reports. These note the 1956 Suez-Sinai war between Egypt and Britain and France, joined by an Israeli attack across Sinai and slow withdrawal. The Eisenhower administration effectively backed Egypt’s right to control the Suez canal, but Cold War and other developments led to Egypt and other Arab states aligning themselves more or less with the Soviet Union, while Israel’s ties with the U.S. became closer and included U.S. acceptance of Israel’s nuclear weapons development.

The major 1974 United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (UPCUSA) statement was begun at the General Assembly’s request in 1971 and speaks consistently of the “Palestinians,” whose organizations were being developed in the 1964–65 period. The 1974 report summarizes the political-military situation in Israel/Palestine as follows:

In the 1967 war, Israel occupied positions in the Golan area of Syria, the whole of Sinai with its strategic position on the Suez Canal and at Sharm-el-Sheik, all of Jerusalem, and the West Bank of the Jordan. In 1970, Egypt, Jordan and Israel accepted the provisions of United Nations Resolution 242, adopted in November of 1967, which called for Israeli withdrawal from occupied territory and Arab recognition of Israel and secure and recognized boundaries, but differing interpretations of these provisions and the means to implement them led to continual impasse … .

The 1974 recommendations include “criteria” for “the evaluation of any proposed settlement,” as well as encouragement for study, interfaith dialogue, advocacy, and ecumenical coordination. The presupposition was that the occupation should end in accordance with international law, even though the pattern of Israel’s resisting any United Nations involvement, except to care for refugees, was already visible.

The later 1970s were marked by the achievement of Camp David agreement in 1980 by Jimmy Carter, Menachem Begin, and Anwar Sadat, but no substantial progress followed. Thus the 1995 statement sums up many resolutions in this excerpt:
The 207th General Assembly (1995)

3. Urges the president and the United States Congress to:
   a. support the United Nations in the implementation of its resolutions on the future of Jerusalem;
   b. renew efforts to make U.S. aid to Israel conditional upon the cessation of the appropriation of Palestinian land in and around Jerusalem and the establishment of new settlements in the occupied territories, especially those that are a part of the ongoing efforts to create a Greater Jerusalem.

At that time, a new peace process had started in 1993 following the First Intifada (1987 forward) that, notwithstanding its non-violent origins, had been met with massive arrests, long term detentions, and deportations, leading to further violence. Here the pattern of disproportionately more Palestinian than Israeli civilian deaths is marked.

The 1997 PC(USA) policy continues the presumption that a two-state solution can be negotiated with the role of the U.S. as “honest broker,” although there is less faith about the role of the U.S. Recommendations include:

   Call upon the United States to take effective measures, including withholding aid and joining in efforts of the United Nations Security Council, to oppose expansion of Israeli settlements in Gaza and the West Bank, and in the Jerusalem area, where unilateral action, without negotiations, exacerbates national and religious tensions, and runs the risk of generating violent confrontation. (Minutes, 1997, Part I, p. 14)

Unilateral Israeli settlement expansion continued and great violence continued in a Second Intifada partly triggered by Ariel Sharon’s provocative visit to the Dome of the Rock, following the failure of both the Oslo Accords and President Clinton’s attempt at a new Camp David agreement. The 2004 resolutions of the PC(USA) against the “security barrier” or “wall” and for “selective divestment” followed recognition of the role of continuing Israeli expansion and collective punishments of Palestinian people, including overwhelming military responses to sometimes terrorist acts of Palestinian resistance, coupled with passivity on the part of the Bush Administration, passivity that continued through Israel’s war on Lebanon in the summer of 2006 (after the General Assembly).

The 204th General Assembly (2006) rephrased and broadened the focus of PC(USA) corporate responsibility efforts, clarifying that “divestment” of stock in companies collaborating in the occupation would be the culmination of an explicit process of dialogue and shareholder proposals. Disagreement with “Christian Zionism” by the General Assembly remained in place, as did a call for justice for the Palestinian people and particular concern for Christians being squeezed out by the occupation. The 204th General Assembly (2006) almost supported the campaign to condemn suicide bombings sponsored most notably by the Simon Wiesenthal Center, but generalized the concern to include all innocents subject to bombing and effective terror. It should be noted that the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns spoke out against the war in Lebanon, and that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) provided relief supplies afterward to Muslims and Christians alike. Many Christian churches, including several Presbyterian churches, as well as mosques and thousands of homes and fields were destroyed in the very widespread Israeli shelling. The survival of the Shiite Hezbollah forces was seen by them as a triumph, reinforcing religiously motivated Islamic parties throughout the region and leaving the government of Lebanon increasingly weak.

Particular Positions, Primarily as Expressed in the 1997 Middle East Policy

1. Concerning Political Violence

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes, “the legitimate right of the state to defend itself and the right of oppressed peoples to resistance and revolution” (Resolution on the Middle East, pp. 38–39). While the church recognizes these rights it also consistently called for cessation of violence. The admitted tension in these views is explored in a 1999 resolution that looks at the dilemmas of military intervention for humanitarian purposes and the development of “Just Peacemaking” rather than simply “Just War” criteria for primarily nonmilitary engagement (see Iraq War below). Complex political dynamics are present in the Middle East. Different factions of people within each nation support political violence and sometimes religious and ethnic cleansing. Governance (including in tribal and colonial times) has traditionally not been democratic; several states explicitly favor state religions and many discriminate. Thus struggles present within and among faith traditions aggravate an already volatile context.

2. Concerning Stereotypes

We recognize our biases and fears regarding our American understanding of the Middle East. Two dominant perspectives exist: one fearful of Islam through the portrayal of Islamic Fundamentalism, the other involving the “stereotyping of Arabs as shiftly, sinister, and terrorist, reflecting ongoing patterns of racism in American life” (Ibid., p. 38) At an emotional level, unhelpful rhetoric, labels, and other designations justify denials of human rights and the use of violence rather than negotiation. This is part of the church’s rationale for encouraging the U.S. government to support serious negotiation and open communication that may lead to peace (Resolution on the Middle East, p. 40). The church’s repeated condemnation of anti-Semitism can also be considered an opposition to anti-Jewish stereotypes.

3. Concerning Terrorism

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has consistently opposed terrorism by all entities and by all means. The “Resolution on Violence, Religion, and Terrorism” (2004) quotes the Federal Bureau of Investigation definition of terrorism as, “the unlawful use of force or violence against persons or property to intimidate or coerce a government, the civilian population, or any segment thereof; in furtherance

1106 219TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2010)

Recent Israeli-Palestinian and related developments

4. Concerning Arms Control

Many governments, and in particular the United States, export weapons to countries in the region in order to support military efforts and existing regimes; others smuggle weapons to resist or change groups in power. The church has opposed the flood of weapons that weaken democracies and the development of new military and security technologies that imprison populations.

The actions of the 209th General Assembly (1997) stand clearly for the de-escalation of the arms race and call for further moderation, urging Congress to enact a Code of Conduct to govern the arms exports of the United States. We have called upon all Middle Eastern countries to join the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, the Chemical Weapons Convention, and other treaties (Ibid., p. 44). In the wake of claims about nonexistent “weapons of mass destruction” in Iraq, repeated but disputed claims of nuclear weaponization by Iran, and the dangers of nuclear weapons in India and Pakistan, the church has stood by its pro-monitoring and comprehensive treaty positions.

5. Concerning Economic Issues

With much of the economy of the Middle East based upon the production and exportation of oil, there is great concern for the future sustainability of all nations in the region. Further, much of the land has been scarred by the impact of war and continuing strife. The economic burdens of war and costs of occupation are both unsustainable and unjust. The General Assembly urges all nations to assist in developing more sustainable, self-reliant, and socially equitable agricultural systems. We also encourage governments to support economic development by supporting non-petroleum trade with Middle Eastern countries, and call for a more equitable redistribution of U.S. aid funds that presently go mainly to Israel ($3 billion plus) and Egypt ($1 billion, based on the Camp David accord). Where the United States and other governments have compromised the infrastructure of countries in the region, especially in Iraq, the church calls for serious reconstruction and re-development (Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future, approved by the 217th General Assembly [2006], pp. 9–10). The General Assembly has also urged caution in the use of economic sanctions to protect the least privileged even when such sanctions have international approval (Resolution on the Middle East, p. 52).

6. Concerning Water

Water is in precious, short supply for many in the Middle East. Wars and disputes have been waged over the control of water rights in order to provide growing populations with potable drinking sources and irrigation. The General Assembly has supported both equitable distribution and new technologies to create more sources of fresh water and food self-sufficiency (Resolution on the Middle East, pp. 57–58).

Given massive U.S. dependence on foreign oil, it has been hard to separate security needs from military commitments to “protect our way of life” (Resolution on the Middle East, p. 62). The PC(USA) has sought to distinguish our commitments to freedom and democracy from our oil-dependent and carbon-producing transportation, housing, and food production habits. The 1997 Middle East policy included the call to “reduce significantly the American demand for petroleum so as to conserve this nonrenewable resource, protect the environment, reduce balance of payments pressures, and lower energy costs for developing countries” (Resolution on the Middle East, p. 64), and thus reduce the need for military presence in the region. While the Iraq war reversed this direction, it was reinforced in the 218th General Assembly (2008) resolution on energy, The Power To Change. Along with consumption patterns, the PC(USA) has long been concerned for wise population control in the Middle East and other regions, noting these while calling upon “the United Nations and its member states to exercise their influence in … assisting Middle Eastern countries in their efforts to protect and preserve the environment” (Resolution on the Middle East, p. 69).

Recent Israeli-Palestinian and related developments

1. The Occupation, the Wall, and Questions about the “Two-State” Solution

The “two-state” solution remains the official international position of most nations, including Israel, the United States, and, at least implicitly, the main Palestinian parties and most Arab states. However, the scope of Israeli settler presence, the scale of the “security barrier” or Wall that largely follows their presence, and the network of roads almost exclusively for Jewish Israeli use, all call the Two-State solution into question. These matters, discussed extensively at the 2004, 2006, and 2008 General Assemblies, led the 218th General Assembly (2008) to authorize a new study of the Middle East with a focus on the Israel-Palestine struggle.

The economic and humanitarian stranglehold on Gaza, following the withdrawal of settlements, efforts to pressure the Hamas government, and finally a disproportionately devastating bombing and invasion in late December of 2008 and early 2009, has only made the two-state solution more remote. Yet, as it stands today (2009), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supports an economically and environmently viable and contiguous Palestine existing peacefully next to an Israel that has internationally-recognized borders. The PC(USA) has been clear in its condemnation of terrorism and its concern for an end for violent attacks of Palestinians on Israelis and the Israeli civilians living among them. With the overthrow of the corrupt and inept regime of Saddam Hussein, the goals of a democratic Iraq committed to free elections and a nonviolent path forward are now well within reach. Pursuing these goals must be predicated on the international community working together to provide the infrastructure, the human rights, and the means for an inclusive democracy.

The PC(USA) has long been concerned for wise population control in the Middle East and other regions, noting these while calling upon “the United Nations and its member states to exercise their influence in … assisting Middle Eastern countries in their efforts to protect and preserve the environment” (Resolution on the Middle East, p. 69).

Recent Israeli-Palestinian and related developments

1. The Occupation, the Wall, and Questions about the “Two-State” Solution

The “two-state” solution remains the official international position of most nations, including Israel, the United States, and, at least implicitly, the main Palestinian parties and most Arab states. However, the scope of Israeli settler presence, the scale of the “security barrier” or Wall that largely follows their presence, and the network of roads almost exclusively for Jewish Israeli use, all call the Two-State solution into question. These matters, discussed extensively at the 2004, 2006, and 2008 General Assemblies, led the 218th General Assembly (2008) to authorize a new study of the Middle East with a focus on the Israel-Palestine struggle.

The economic and humanitarian stranglehold on Gaza, following the withdrawal of settlements, efforts to pressure the Hamas government, and finally a disproportionately devastating bombing and invasion in late December of 2008 and early 2009, has only made the two-state solution more remote. Yet, as it stands today (2009), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supports an economically and environmently viable and contiguous Palestine existing peacefully next to an Israel that has internationally-recognized borders. The PC(USA) has been clear in its condemnation of terrorism and its concern for an end for violent attacks of Palestinians on Israelis and the Israeli civilians living among them. With the overthrow of the corrupt and inept regime of Saddam Hussein, the goals of a democratic Iraq committed to free elections and a nonviolent path forward are now well within reach. Pursuing these goals must be predicated on the international community working together to provide the infrastructure, the human rights, and the means for an inclusive democracy.
vice versa. Rather than focusing on ethnic and religious hatreds, however, the church has understood Israel’s fundamental security problem to be based in the injustice of the occupation of Palestinian land by now more than 450,000 settlers.

Three other elements affect the current mission and witness of the church: the continued pressure on and at least relative decline of the Christian population in Israel/Palestine and elsewhere, the desire of moderate Muslim leaders across the region (and world) to develop an expanded conversation with Christian leaders (as seen in the public statement, “A Common Word”), and the tentative U.S. re-engagement with an Israeli-Palestinian peace process, due in part to international pressure on both the U.S. and Israel. The human rights and humanitarian law implications of the Gaza invasion (detailed in the Goldstone Report) continue to be debated even as a new U.S. administration commits millions of dollars to rebuild structures largely destroyed by U.S.-provided weapons. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) carries on a range of dialogues with Jewish and Muslim groups, trying to hear both perspectives, and is also conducting a study of Muslim-Christian relations similar to an earlier study of Jewish-Christian relations.

3. Public Witness and Corporate Engagement, Including Divestment of Securities

Along with other forms of public witness, since the early 1970s the PC(USA) has sought to “put its money where its mouth is,” both in positive investment (such as Self-Development of People and OikouCredit) and by using the influence of its foundation and pension investments in companies. The push for corporate social responsibility generally has been very influenced by the churches; it is also controversial for the association of campaigns against South African apartheid—which included divestment—with the use of economic pressure on Israeli occupation and land annexation policies, or continuing violence by Israelis and Palestinians against innocent civilians. The 216th General Assembly (2004) stated that continued Israeli occupation and expansion of settlements required the church to examine which of its investments supported and profited from that occupation and hence posed questions of moral integrity for the church. The 216th General Assembly (2004) action also stated that “selective, phased” divestment (that is, aimed at companies supporting the occupation, not Israeli companies in general) should be a form of witness in a worsening situation. [The 2004 phrasing was the same language that had been used in 1985 for the South Africa policy: See Endnote].

The 217th General Assembly (2006) clarified that divestment was always part of a larger effort of dialogue and engagement with companies, but did not disavow corporate engagement, which continues through the work of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI). The 217th General Assembly (2006) restated its commitment that “…financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment … is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 944).

Many but not all Jewish groups oppose any corporate pressure on Israeli policies. Conversely, most Palestinian groups, both Christian and Muslim, support such nonviolent pressure, as in “A Moment of Truth,” December 11, 2009, statement by Palestinian Christians: Section 4-2-6 “Palestinian civil organizations, as well as international organizations, NGO’s and certain religious institutions call upon individuals, companies and states to engage in divestment and in economic and commercial boycott of everything produced by the occupation. We understand this to integrate the logic of peaceful resistance …”

Alongside concerns for the unity of the church and for friendship with the Jewish community, the basic issue is the right of the church to make its own moral decisions about what it will profit from or invest in. This was clearly stated by the 218th General Assembly (2008)’s invocation of the Barmen Declaration in its combined action on the Atlanta and other Middle East overtures. Barmen and other confessions make it quite clear that the church has every right and a basic responsibility under God to witness against any country, company, or policy that deprives God’s children of justice. Of several overtures seeking to limit the assembly’s voice to general statements deploving violence, one was affirmed that cautioned against “over-identification” with any party to conflicts. At the same time, in also affirming the Amman Call, one may judge the assembly to have identified itself with the ecumenical Christian community.

4. The Impacts of the Iraqi and Afghanistan Wars and Islamic Developments

The 218th General Assembly (2008) “commended for study” a paper on the Iraq war entitled, To Repent, To Restore, To Rebuild, and To Reconcile. Attached to an overture clearly calling for responsible and timely withdrawal of U.S. and remaining “coalition” forces, the assembly recognized the need for massive reconstruction and the moral responsibility of the United States for thousands of Iraqi and U.S. deaths. Those actions also recognized the crisis caused by more than 4.5 million displaced Iraqis, 2 million internally and 2.5 million in Jordan, Syria, and other neighboring countries. Throughout the six years of this conflict, Arab TV and public commentary has compared the U.S. invasion and presence in Iraq to the Israeli occupation of Palestine. In some quarters, such linkage has fueled the appeal of terrorism and mixtures of anti-American and anti-Israel feeling.

Perhaps most clearly in the “Baker-Hamilton” Report, the U.S. government began to recognize the detrimental role played by the continued “impasse” between Israel and Palestine on other countries and popular attitudes within the region. Within the larger Middle East, the clear desire of many in Israel for an Israeli or U.S. attack on Iran has reinforced continued hostility to both countries in some quarters. The larger sets of issues raised by “preventive” or, conceivably in the Sudan, by humanitarian intervention, were addressed in the 1998 General Assembly policy on “Just Peacemaking,” a phrase that has also been used in ecumenical circles for a set of war prevention and conflict resolution approaches.

As the U.S. returns its focus to the war in Afghanistan, attention focuses on the prosecution of the war, whose initial aims were widely supported: ending the Taliban support for Al Qaeda. The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved a “Resolution on Human Rights in a Time of Terrorism and Torture” critical of all weakening of Geneva Conventions, extraordinary rendition, and extraterritorial prison facilities. With the slow closure of the Guantanamo Bay indefinite prison facility, and clearer policies against torture, it is hoped that dissipate and development initiatives will replace the primary use of military force. In terms of church policy, it will be important to encourage support for humanitarian reconstruction despite the increasingly clear financial havoc wrought by carrying on both the Iraq and Afghanistan wars as "emergency appropriations" rather than as part of the regular budget.

The General Assembly had in 2004 already determined that the invasion of Iraq was "unwise, immoral, and illegal," a viewpoint confirmed in the subsequent tragic disaster of the occupation and neglect of Afghanistan. The 2008 Iraq study paper notes how the exploitation of Shia and Sunni religious differences was underestimated, and how "terrorism" has become a blanket phrase for all kinds of non-state violence.

The 2009–10 Middle East Study Committee received a briefing on geostrategic issues and discussed these framework questions with representatives of several religious communities, as well as with State Department officials. As in previous policies, it noted the predominant presence of undemocratic governments—often supported and allied to the U.S. government and oil interests—and the social tensions building among young, relatively uneducated populations throughout the region. The Sunni elites in some of these governments themselves look with apprehension at any growth in Iran's power, although militant Islam throughout the region focuses on the trauma of Gaza and the West Bank, much more visible on their televisions. This overall context becomes most important in assessing the actual threat posed by Iran's increasingly military-linked government, its links to Hezbollah and Hamas, and the results of previous preemptive military solutions.

Lebanon bears many scars from the military campaign carried out by Israel in the summer of 2006 that focused on Shiite areas in South Lebanon and Beirut but which also targeted many bridges and pieces of infrastructure serving all Lebanon. Hezbollah, while classified as a “terrorist organization,” demonstrates through its social services and governmental participation that it is a more broadly political body guided by an Islamist viewpoint of some flexibility. Iran’s past support for Hezbollah is part of its appeal to Muslim Arab nonelites across the region who are willing to overlook its difference of sect and ethnicity (note: the dimensions of documented and alleged support for Hezbollah and Hamas by Iran, Syria, or other countries are subject to wide debate).

Lebanon’s recent history has seen the withdrawal of overt Syrian presence, following the assassination of Rafik Hariri (allegedly by Syrian forces, though this remains unconfirmed). Following the election of Barack Obama and hopes of progress in the Middle East, Hezbollah’s candidates were outvoted by more moderate parties, an outcome accepted peacefully. Lebanon’s politics have, in fact, been long interfered in by powerful neighbors, with Israel invading in the 1980s and occupying Southern Lebanon—perhaps the largest factor in the development of Hezbollah in the first place. Syria’s standing in the region has in fact grown since its overt withdrawal from Lebanon and it, like Lebanon and Jordan, remains stable and occupied with dealing with refugees from Iraq.

Iran and Hezbollah did not play a significant role in the threats to Israel made in the 1991 Gulf War and Israel’s subsequent focus on Iraq related to Saddam Hussein’s continuing in power. At the same time, since Iran’s Islamic revolution in 1979, the U.S. government and Israel cooperated in a “dual containment” strategy—the “axis of evil” identified by the second Bush Administration reflected some of that background, despite several efforts by moderates in Iran to make positive overtures to the West—particularly after 9/11. Iran remembers U.S. support for both the CIA coup against democratically-elected Mohammed Mossadeq in 1956 (installing the Shah’s dictatorship) and U.S. support for Saddam Hussein’s 1980–81 war with Iran (including the then un-protested use of chemical weapons). All of this background of invasion and interference in the affairs of neighbors—in which the U.S. and Israel have been major players since long before the current Iraq war—needs to be kept in mind when assessing Iran’s threat.

Iran’s current leaders have repeatedly shown their disdain for both democracy and public protest, but they have also been under repeated threat of “regime change” by U.S. political leaders and preemptive military strike by Israel. Iran’s stated willingness to bomb neighboring countries, as in the early 2009 case of a possible Syrian nuclear facility, may reinforce the Iran military’s desire for a deterrent, as Iran itself has not invaded any other country for centuries.

Conclusion

The church remains attentive to conflicts in the Middle East and remains painfully aware of the number of lives that have been lost as those conflicts continue. The church is committed to continuing to study the issues and pray for lasting peace. We are called upon to join in this prayer and to work on building networks of support for lasting peace among both members of our churches and within our nation, including support for transnational efforts at peace-building. The General Assembly has also called upon Presbyterians to create and maintain interreligious dialogue among Christians, Muslims, and Jews within their communities and has opposed the oversimplifications of Christian Zionism and other one-sided efforts. The church stands for the even-handed application of international humanitarian law and human rights protections, including protections for all religious and ethnic minorities (such as Armenians historically or Kurds today [Resolution on the Middle East, pp. 70–72]). Because there are various forms of violence and oppression, General Assembly policy has addressed religious and ethnic exclusivism, economic opportunities, ecological and especially water and energy issues, as well as formal peace processes and alternatives to military invasions and occupations.

ENDNOTE ON CORPORATE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY: The corporate engagement of the church in support of a just peace in Israel and Palestine clearly builds on a history—unknown to some—of Presbyterian “mission responsibility through investment” or MRTI going back to 1971. Notable in this is not only the “selective, phased divestment” related to South Africa and later Sudan, but the church’s “Military-Related Investment Guidelines,” adopted by the General Assembly in 1981. Reflecting the church’s commitment to the 1980 policy, “Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling,” these guidelines restrict the church from profiting from nuclear weapons producers and the largest and most war-dependent military contractors. There has also been corporate engagement with companies active in countries with repressive regimes in Latin America, Asia, and Africa, most notably the Sudan before this became an organized focus of divestment. (The church has traditionally also proscribed investments in alcohol, tobacco, and gambling: the “sin stocks.”)

In assessing any corporate engagement strategy, the 1984 General Assembly study, “The Divestment Strategy: Ethical and Institutional Context,” is an important analysis of trusteeship and Christian mission. The key factors of integrity (not unattainable purity), effectiveness (the full impact is not financial), and ecumenical solidarity were presented. A year later the assembly adopted its South Africa-related divestment policy. A 1991 review of the implementation of that policy found that the church had divested of securities in thirteen companies while joining in ecumenical ef... forts that influenced the legitimacy of investment in South Africa for many more companies. In terms of effectiveness, church-led, nonviolent economic pressure of all kinds, including divestment, had led to the departure of 214 of 324 U.S. corporations in South Africa in 1981, representing an equity decline from $2.6 billion to $714 million, a substantial move toward isolating South Africa economically. Also, the churches played a key role in persuading international banks to stop long-term lending and accelerate repayment of short-term loans. As is well-known, after liberation, figures such as Nelson Mandela, Desmond Tutu, and Allan Boesak credited the churches with decisive impact, as did studies such as Robert K. Massie’s Loosing the Bonds: The United States and South Africa in the Apartheid Years (Doubleday, 1998). That 1991 review, “The Dividends of Hope: An Evaluation of Divestment for South Africa: An Investment in Hope,” led to the General Assembly action to “affirm a continued policy of selective, phased divestment until the South African Council of Churches and other ecumenical partners determine that irreversible change in the dismantling of apartheid … has occurred or is occurring” (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 727).

This endnote does not review or duplicate MRTI’s work.

This policy review and application were prepared by the Reverend Christian Iosso, Ph.D., coordinator of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, General Assembly Mission Council, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), serving as co-opted staff to the Middle East Study Committee.

Appendix 4: The Amman Call

[The Amman Call was issued at the World Council of Churches’ International Peace Conference, “Churches together for Peace and Justice in the Middle East,” in Amman, Jordan, June, 18–20, 2007.]

Amman imperatives:

1. Almost sixty years have passed since the Christian churches first spoke with one voice about Arab-Israeli peace. For the last forty years the Christian churches have called for an end to the Israeli occupation of Palestine. In the very place where Jesus Christ walked upon the earth, walls now separate families and the children of God—Christian, Muslim and Jew—are imprisoned in a deepening cycle of violence, humiliation and despair. The Palestinian Christians from Gaza to Jerusalem and to Nazareth, have called out to their brothers and sisters in Christ with this urgent plea: “Enough is enough. No more words without deeds. It is time for action.”

2. We welcome the timely and prophetic statement of the Heads of Churches in Jerusalem. We affirm that “the Churches are part of the conflict, because the Churches cannot remain silent while there is still suffering. The role of the Churches is to heal and to bring all sides to reconciliation.” Our belief in God reminds us “that all God’s children of all religions and political parties are to be respected.” We assure the Churches of Palestine and Israel of our prayers, collaboration and resources.

3. Thus, in Amman, Jordan 18-20 June 2007, days that have witnessed a deepening of the crisis in the occupied Palestinian territories, and also includes the United Nations World Refugee Day, we representatives of Christian churches and church-related organizations from every corner of the earth, affirm the decision of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches and launch the “Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum” as an instrument to “catalyze and co-ordinate new and existing church advocacy for peace, aimed at ending the illegal occupation in accordance with UN resolutions, and demonstrate its commitment to inter-religious action for peace and justice that serves all the peoples of the region.”

4. This action has been taken in response to three fundamental imperatives that call us to action:

- The ethical and theological imperative for a Just Peace
- The ecumenical imperative for unity in action
- The Gospel imperative for costly solidarity

5. The premises of this action are the following:

5.1. That UN resolutions are the basis for peace and the Geneva conventions are applicable to the rights and responsibilities of the affected people.

5.2. That Palestinians have the right of self-determination and the right of return.

5.3. That a two-state solution must be viable politically, geographically economically and socially.

5.4 That Jerusalem must be an open, accessible, inclusive and shared city for the two peoples and three religions.

5.5 That both Palestine and Israel have legitimate security needs.

5.6 That the Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories are illegal, and constitute an obstacle to peace.

5.7. That the “Separation Barrier” constructed by Israel in the occupied Palestinian territories is a grave breach of international law and must be removed from the occupied territory.

5.8. That there is no military solution for this conflict. Violence in all its forms cannot be justified whether perpetrated by Israelis or Palestinians.
5.9. That comprehensive regional peace is indivisible from a just peace in Israel and Palestine.

5.10. That the life and witness of local churches is at the center of worldwide church advocacy for a just peace.

6. We understand the mandate of the Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum to be a space where we will develop comprehensive strategic approaches to the two processes of peace making and peace building. An inclusive core group convened urgently by the WCC should be mandated to facilitate this and also ensure improved coordination between all actors. The core group will be informed by the reports of the working groups of the Amman conference, and that its composition and mechanism be designed and announced by the WCC.

7. Peace building will include the following:
   7.1. Furthering theological and biblical perspectives and Christian education resources around those issues central to the conflict.
   7.2. Developing strategies that will support the processes of justice and reconciliation, including inter-religious dialogue and cooperation.
   7.3. Strengthening the churches’ responses to the occupation.
   7.4. Recognizing, encouraging and cooperating with all efforts of Israeli and Palestinian civil society that are in accord with the vision and goals of the PIEF.

8. Peace making will include the following:
   8.1. Defining and promoting measures, including economic ones, that could help end the occupation and enhance sustainable growth and development.
   8.2. Strengthening existing efforts and identifying new models of church solidarity in action. Supporting local churches and church related organizations not only to survive and continue their powerful ministries, including educational, health, cultural and social services, but also to thrive and be witnesses of hope.
   8.3. Developing a long-term advocacy strategy in order to mobilize all of our constituencies and influence change.

Amman challenges:

9. We have heard the voices of the Christian churches of Palestine and Israel challenging and saying to us:
   9.1. Act with us to liberate all peoples of this land from the logic of hatred, mutual rejection and death, so that they see in the other the face and dignity of God.
   9.2. Pray with us in our efforts to resist evil in all of its guises.
   9.3. Raise your voices along with ours as we speak “truth to power” and name with courage the injustices we see and experience. The illegal occupation has stolen two generations of lives in this tortured place, and threatens the next with hopelessness and rage.
   9.4. Risk the curses and abuse that will be aimed at you and stand in solidarity with us and with our Palestinian brothers and sisters of all faiths as we defiantly reject the possibility that occupation will continue.
   9.5. Help us to tear down walls and build and rebuild bridges among all peoples in the region. Extremism on all sides produces chaos. It threatens to divide us and to destroy bridges among peoples that would lead to reconciliation and peace.
   9.6. Add your hope to ours in the knowledge that evil and despair have been overcome through the death of our Lord on the Cross and through His Resurrection.
   9.7. Insist with us that all dispossessed peoples, all refugees, have the right to return.
   9.8. Partner with us as we seek peace and pursue it. Peace is possible. Christians and Muslims and Jews have, can and will understand one another and live together as neighbors.

10. And we representatives of Christian churches and church-related organizations from every corner of the earth, we respond:

11. Yes, we will. Together we will act and pray and speak and work and risk reputations and lives to build with you bridges for an enduring peace among the peoples of this tortured and beautiful place -Palestine and Israel- to end these decades of injustice, humiliation and insecurity, to end the decades of living as refugees and under occupation. We will work with you to seek peace and pursue it. We have allowed too much time to pass. Time has not served the cause of peace but has served the cause of extremism. This is our urgent cause that cannot wait.

Kairos Palestine: A Moment of Truth

A word of faith, hope, and love from the heart of Palestinian suffering

[Kairos Palestine: A Moment of Truth was issued by a group of Palestinian Christians at the meeting of the Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum, in Bethlehem, December 11, 2009.]

Introduction

We, a group of Christian Palestinians, after prayer, reflection and an exchange of opinion, cry out from within the suffering in our country, under the Israeli occupation, with a cry of hope in the absence of all hope, a cry full of prayer and faith in a God ever vigilant, in God’s divine providence for all the inhabitants of this land. Inspired by the mystery of God’s love for all, the mystery of God’s divine presence in the history of all peoples and, in a particular way, in the history of our country, we proclaim our word based on our Christian faith and our sense of Palestinian belonging – a word of faith, hope and love.

Why now? Because today we have reached a dead end in the tragedy of the Palestinian people. The decision-makers content themselves with managing the crisis rather than committing themselves to the serious task of finding a way to resolve it. The hearts of the faithful are filled with pain and with questioning: What is the international community doing? What are the political leaders in Palestine, in Israel and in the Arab world doing? What is the Church doing? The problem is not just a political one. It is a policy in which human beings are destroyed, and this must be of concern to the Church.

We address ourselves to our brothers and sisters, members of our Churches in this land. We call out as Christians and as Palestinians to our religious and political leaders, to our Palestinian society and to the Israeli society, to the international community, and to our Christian brothers and sisters in the Churches around the world.

1. The reality on the ground

1.1 “They say: ‘Peace, peace’ when there is no peace” (Jer. 6:14). These days, everyone is speaking about peace in the Middle East and the peace process. So far, however, these are simply words; the reality is one of Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories, deprivation of our freedom and all that results from this situation:

1.1.1 The separation wall erected on Palestinian territory, a large part of which has been confiscated for this purpose, has turned our towns and villages into prisons, separating them from one another, making them dispersed and divided cantons. Gaza, especially after the cruel war Israel launched against it during December 2008 and January 2009, continues to live in inhuman conditions, under permanent blockade and cut off from the other Palestinian territories.

1.1.2 Israeli settlements ravage our land in the name of God and in the name of force, controlling our natural resources, including water and agricultural land, thus depriving hundreds of thousands of Palestinians, and constituting an obstacle to any political solution.

1.1.3 Reality is the daily humiliation to which we are subjected at the military checkpoints, as we make our way to jobs, schools or hospitals.

1.1.4 Reality is the separation between members of the same family, making family life impossible for thousands of Palestinians, especially where one of the spouses does not have an Israeli identity card.

1.1.5 Religious liberty is severely restricted; the freedom of access to the holy places is denied under the pretext of security. Jerusalem and its holy places are out of bounds for many Christians and Muslims from the West Bank and the Gaza strip. Even Jerusalemites face restrictions during the religious feasts. Some of our Arab clergy are regularly barred from entering Jerusalem.

1.1.6 Refugees are also part of our reality. Most of them are still living in camps under difficult circumstances. They have been waiting for their right of return, generation after generation. What will be their fate?

1.1.7 And the prisoners? The thousands of prisoners languishing in Israeli prisons are part of our reality. The Israelis move heaven and earth to gain the release of one prisoner, and those thousands of Palestinian prisoners, when will they have their freedom?

1.1.8 Jerusalem is the heart of our reality. It is, at the same time, symbol of peace and sign of conflict. While the separation wall divides Palestinian neighbourhoods, Jerusalem continues to be emptied of its Palestinian citizens, Christians and Muslims. Their identity cards are confiscated, which means the loss of their right to reside in Jerusalem. Their homes are demolished or expropriated. Jerusalem, city of reconciliation, has become a city of discrimination and exclusion, a source of struggle rather than peace.

1.2 Also part of this reality is the Israeli disregard of international law and international resolutions, as well as the paralysis of the Arab world and the international community in the face of this contempt. Human rights are violated and despite the various reports of local and international human rights’ organizations, the injustice continues.

1.1.2 Palestinians within the State of Israel, who have also suffered a historical injustice, although they are citizens and have the rights and obligations of citizenship, still suffer from discriminatory policies. They too are waiting to enjoy full rights and equality like all other citizens in the state.

1.4 In the face of this reality, Israel justifies its actions as self-defence, including occupation, collective punishment and all other forms of reprisals against the Palestinians. In our opinion, this vision is a reversal of reality. Yes, there is Palestinian resistance to the occupation. However, if there were no occupation, there would be no resistance, no fear and no insecurity. This is our understanding of the situation. Therefore, we call on the Israelis to end the occupation. Then they will see a new world in which there is no fear, no threat but rather security, justice and peace.

1.5 The Palestinian response to this reality was diverse. Some responded through negotiations: that was the official position of the Palestinian Authority, but it did not advance the peace process. Some political parties followed the way of armed resistance. Israel used this as a pretext to accuse the Palestinians of being terrorists and was able to distort the real nature of the conflict, presenting it as an Israeli war against terror, rather than an Israeli occupation faced by Palestinian legal resistance aiming at ending it.

1.5.1 The tragedy worsened with the internal conflict among Palestinians themselves, and with the separation of Gaza from the rest of the Palestinian territory. It is noteworthy that, even though the division is among Palestinians themselves, the international community bears an important responsibility for it since it refused to deal positively with the will of the Palestinian people expressed in the outcome of democratic and legal elections in 2006.

Again, we repeat and proclaim that our Christian word in the midst of all this, in the midst of our catastrophe, is a word of faith, hope and love.

2. A word of faith

We believe in one God, a good and just God

2.1 We believe in God, one God, Creator of the universe and of humanity. We believe in a good and just God, who loves each one of his creatures. We believe that every human being is created in God’s image and likeness and that every one’s dignity is derived from the dignity of the Almighty One. We believe that this dignity is one and the same in each and all of us. This means for us, here and now, in this land in particular, that God created us not so that we might engage in strife and conflict but rather that we might come and know and love one another, and together build up the land in love and mutual respect.

2.1.1 We also believe in God’s eternal Word, His only Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, whom God sent as the Saviour of the world.

2.1.2 We believe in the Holy Spirit, who accompanies the Church and all humanity on its journey. It is the Spirit that helps us to understand Holy Scripture, both Old and New Testaments, showing their unity, here and now. The Spirit makes manifest the revelation of God to humanity, past, present and future.

How do we understand the word of God?

2.2 We believe that God has spoken to humanity, here in our country: “Long ago God spoke to our ancestors in many and various ways by the prophets, but in these last days God has spoken to us by a Son, whom God appointed heir of all things, through whom he also created the worlds” (Heb. 1:1–2)

2.2.1 We, Christian Palestinians, believe, like all Christians throughout the world, that Jesus Christ came in order to fulfil the Law and the Prophets. He is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, and in his light and with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we read the Holy Scriptures. We meditate upon and interpret Scripture just as Jesus Christ did with the two disciples on their way to Emmaus. As it is written in the Gospel according to Saint Luke: “Then beginning with Moses and all the prophets, he interpreted to them the things about himself in all the scriptures” (Lk 24:27)

2.2.2 Our Lord Jesus Christ came, proclaiming that the Kingdom of God was near. He provoked a revolution in the life and faith of all humanity. He came with “a new teaching” (Mk 1:27), casting a new light on the Old Testament, on the themes that relate to our Christian faith and our daily lives, themes such as the promises, the election, the people of God and the land. We believe that the Word of God is a living Word, casting a particular light on each period of history, manifesting to Christian believers what God is saying to us here and now. For this reason, it is unacceptable to transform the Word of God into letters of stone that pervert the love of God and His providence in the life of both peoples and individuals. This is precisely the error in fundamentalist Biblical interpretation that brings us death and destruction when the word of God is petrified and transmitted from generation to generation as a dead letter. This dead letter is used as a weapon in our present history in order to deprive us of our rights in our own land.

Our land has a universal mission

2.3 We believe that our land has a universal mission. In this universality, the meaning of the promises, of the land, of the election, of the people of God open up to include all of humanity, starting from all the peoples of this land. In light of the teachings of the Holy Bible, the promise of the land has never been a political programme, but rather the prelude to complete universal salvation. It was the initiation of the fulfilment of the Kingdom of God on earth.
2.3.1 God sent the patriarchs, the prophets and the apostles to this land so that they might carry forth a universal mission to the world. Today we constitute three religions in this land, Judaism, Christianity and Islam. Our land is God’s land, as is the case with all countries in the world. It is holy inasmuch as God is present in it, for God alone is holy and sanctifier. It is the duty of those of us who live here, to respect the will of God for this land. It is our duty to liberate it from the evil of injustice and war. It is God’s land and therefore it must be a land of reconciliation, peace and love. This is indeed possible. God has put us here as two peoples, and God gives us the capacity, if we have the will, to live together and establish in it justice and peace, making it in reality
God’s land. “The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps. 24:1).

2.3.2 Our presence in this land, as Christian and Muslim Palestinians, is not accidental but rather deeply rooted in the history and geography of this land, resonant with the connectedness of any other people to the land it lives in. It was an injustice when we were driven out. The West sought to make amends for what Jews had endured in the countries of Europe, but it made amends on our account and in our land. They tried to correct an injustice and the result was a new injustice.

2.3.3 Furthermore, we know that certain theologians in the West try to attach a biblical and theological legitimacy to the infringement of our rights. Thus, the promises, according to their interpretation, have become a menace to our very existence. The “good news” in the Gospel itself has become “a harbinger of death” for us. We call on these theologians to deepen their reflection on the Word of God and to rectify their interpretations so that they might see in the Word of God a source of life for all peoples.

2.3.4 Our connectedness to this land is a natural right. It is not an ideological or a theological question only. It is a matter of life and death. There are those who do not agree with us, even defining us as enemies only because we declare that we want to live as free people in our land. We suffer from the occupation of our land because we are Palestinians. And as Christian Palestinians we suffer from the wrong interpretation of some theologians. Faced with this, our task is to safeguard the Word of God as a source of life and not of death, so that “the good news” remains what it is, “good news” for us and for all. In face of those who use the Bible to threaten our existence as Christian and Muslim Palestinians, we renew our faith in God because we know that the word of God can not be the source of our destruction.

2.4 Therefore, we declare that any use of the Bible to legitimize or support political options and positions that are based upon injustice, imposed by one person on another, or by one people on another, transform religion into human ideology and strip the Word of God of its holiness, its universality and truth.

2.5 We also declare that the Israeli occupation of Palestinian land is a sin against God and humanity because it deprives the Palestinians of their basic human rights, bestowed by God. It distorts the image of God in the Israeli who has become an occupier just as it distorts this image in the Palestinian living under occupation. We declare that any theology, seemingly based on the Bible or on faith or on history, that legitimates the occupation, is far from Christian teachings, because it calls for violence and holy war in the name of God Almighty, subordinating God to temporary human interests, and distorting the divine image in the human beings living under both political and theological injustice.

3. Hope

3.1 Despite the lack of even a glimmer of positive expectation, our hope remains strong. The present situation does not promise any quick solution or the end of the occupation that is imposed on us. Yes, the initiatives, the conferences, visits and negotiations have multiplied, but they have not been followed up by any change in our situation and suffering. Even the new US position that has been announced by President Obama, with a manifest desire to put an end to the tragedy, has not been able to make a change in our reality.
The clear Israeli response, refusing any solution, leaves no room for positive expectation. Despite this, our hope remains strong, because it is from God. God alone is good, almighty and loving and His goodness will one day be victorious over the evil in which we find ourselves. As Saint Paul said: “If God is for us, who is against us? (…) Who will separate us from the love of Christ? Will hardship, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, ‘For your sake we are being killed all day long’ (…) For I am convinced that (nothing) in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God” (Rom. 8:31, 35, 36, 39).

What is the meaning of hope?

3.2 Hope within us means first and foremost our faith in God and secondly our expectation, despite everything, for a better future.
Thirdly, it means not chasing after illusions – we realize that release is not close at hand. Hope is the capacity to see God in the midst of trouble, and to be co-workers with the Holy Spirit who is dwelling in us. From this vision derives the strength to be steadfast, remain firm and work to change the reality in which we find ourselves. Hope means not giving in to evil but rather standing up to it and continuing to resist it. We see nothing in the present or future except ruin and destruction. We see the upper hand of the strong, the growing orientation towards racist separation and the imposition of laws that deny our existence and our dignity. We see confusion and division in the Palestinian position. If, despite all this, we do resist this reality today and work hard, perhaps the destruction that looms on the horizon may not come upon us.

Signs of hope

3.3 The Church in our land, her leaders and her faithful, despite her weakness and her divisions, does show certain signs of hope. Our parish communities are vibrant and most of our young people are active apostles for justice and peace. In addition to the individual commitment, our various Church institutions make our faith active and present in service, love and prayer.

3.3.1 Among the signs of hope are the local centres of theology, with a religious and social character. They are numerous in our different Churches. The ecumenical spirit, even if still hesitant, shows itself more and more in the meetings of our different Church families.
3.3.2 We can add to this the numerous meetings for inter-religious dialogue, Christian-Muslim dialogue, which includes the religious leaders and a part of the people. Admittedly, dialogue is a long process and is perfected through a daily effort as we undergo the same sufferings and have the same expectations. There is also dialogue among the three religions, Judaism, Christianity and Islam, as well as different dialogue meetings on the academic or social level. They all try to breach the walls imposed by the occupation and oppose the distorted perception of human beings in the heart of their brothers or sisters.

3.3.3 One of the most important signs of hope is the steadfastness of the generations, the belief in the justice of their cause and the continuity of memory, which does not forget the “Nakba” (catastrophe) and its significance. Likewise significant is the developing awareness among many Churches throughout the world and their desire to know the truth about what is going on here.

3.3.4 In addition to that, we see a determination among many to overcome the resentments of the past and to be ready for reconciliation once justice has been restored. Public awareness of the need to restore political rights to the Palestinians is increasing, and Jewish and Israeli voices, advocating peace and justice, are raised in support of this with the approval of the international community. True, these forces for justice and reconciliation have not yet been able to transform the situation of injustice, but they have their influence and may shorten the time of suffering and hasten the time of reconciliation.

3.4 Our Church is a Church of people who pray and serve. This prayer and service is prophetic, bearing the voice of God in the present and future. Everything that happens in our land, everyone who lives there, all the pains and hopes, all the injustice and all the efforts to stop this injustice, are part and parcel of the prayer of our Church and the service of all her institutions. Thanks be to God that our Church raises her voice against injustice despite the fact that some desire her to remain silent, closed in her religious devotions.

3.4.1 The mission of the Church is prophetic, to speak the Word of God courageously, honestly and lovingly in the local context and in the midst of daily events. If she does take sides, it is with the oppressed, to stand alongside them, just as Christ our Lord stood by the side of each poor person and each sinner, calling them to repentance, life, and the restoration of the dignity bestowed on them by God and that no one has the right to strip away.

3.4.2 The mission of the Church is to proclaim the Kingdom of God, a kingdom of justice, peace and dignity. Our vocation as a living Church is to bear witness to the goodness of God and the dignity of human beings. We are called to pray and to make our voice heard when we announce a new society where human beings believe in their own dignity and the dignity of their adversaries.

3.4.3 Our Church points to the Kingdom, which cannot be tied to any earthly kingdom. Jesus said before Pilate that he was indeed a king but “my kingdom is not from this world” (Jn 18:36). Saint Paul says: “The Kingdom of God is not food and drink but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom.14:17). Therefore, religion cannot favour or support any unjust political regime, but must rather promote justice, truth and human dignity. It must exert every effort to purify regimes where human beings suffer injustice and human dignity is violated. The Kingdom of God on earth is not dependent on any political orientation, for it is greater and more inclusive than any particular political system.

3.4.4 Jesus Christ said: “The Kingdom of God is among you” (Luke 17:21). This Kingdom that is present among us and in us is the extension of the mystery of salvation. It is the presence of God among us and our sense of that presence in everything we do and say. It is in this divine presence that we shall do what we can until justice is achieved in this land.

3.4.5 The cruel circumstances in which the Palestinian Church has lived and continues to live have required the Church to clarify her faith and to identify her vocation better. We have studied our vocation and have come to know it better in the midst of suffering and pain: today, we bear the strength of love rather than that of revenge, a culture of life rather than a culture of death. This is a source of hope for us, for the Church and for the world.

3.5 The Resurrection is the source of our hope. Just as Christ rose in victory over death and evil, so too we are able, as each inhabitant of this land is able, to vanquish the evil of war. We will remain a witnessing, steadfast and active Church in the land of the Resurrection.

4. Love

The commandment of love

4.1 Christ our Lord said: “Just as I have loved you, you also should love one another” (Jn 13:34). He has already showed us how to love and how to treat our enemies. He said: “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall love your neighbour and hate your enemy.’ But I say to you, Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, so that you may be children of your Father in heaven; for he makes his sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the righteous and on the unrighteous (…) Be perfect, therefore, as your heavenly Father is perfect” (Matt. 5:45–47). Saint Paul also said: “Do not repay anyone evil for evil” (Rom. 12:17). And Saint Peter said: “Do not repay evil for evil or abuse for abuse; but on the contrary, repay with a blessing. It is for this that you were called” (1 Pet. 3:9).

Resistance

4.2 This word is clear. Love is the commandment of Christ our Lord to us and it includes both friends and enemies. This must be clear when we find ourselves in circumstances where we must resist evil of whatever kind.
4.2.1 Love is seeing the face of God in every human being. Every person is my brother or my sister. However, seeing the face of God in everyone does not mean accepting evil or aggression on their part. Rather, this love seeks to correct the evil and stop the aggression.

The aggression against the Palestinian people which is the Israeli occupation, is an evil that must be resisted. It is an evil and a sin that must be resisted and removed. Primary responsibility for this rests with the Palestinians themselves suffering occupation. Christian love invites us to resist it. However, love puts an end to evil by walking in the ways of justice. Responsibility lies also with the international community, because international law regulates relations between peoples today. Finally responsibility lies with the perpetrators of the injustice; they must liberate themselves from the evil that is in them and the injustice they have imposed on others.

4.2.2 When we review the history of the nations, we see many wars and much resistance to war by war, to violence by violence. The Palestinian people has gone the way of the peoples, particularly in the first stages of its struggle with the Israeli occupation. However, it also engaged in peaceful struggle, especially during the first Intifada. We recognize that all peoples must find a new way in their relations with each other and the resolution of their conflicts. The ways of force must give way to the ways of justice. This applies above all to the peoples that are militarily strong, mighty enough to impose their injustice on the weaker.

4.2.3 We say that our option as Christians in the face of the Israeli occupation is to resist. Resistance is a right and a duty for the Christian. But it is resistance with love as its logic. It is thus a creative resistance for it must find human ways that engage the humanity of the enemy. Seeing the image of God in the face of the enemy means taking up positions in the light of this vision of active resistance to stop the injustice and oblige the perpetrator to end his aggression and thus achieve the desired goal, which is getting back the land, freedom, dignity and independence.

4.2.4 Christ our Lord has left us an example we must imitate. We must resist evil but he taught us that we cannot resist evil with evil. This is a difficult commandment, particularly when the enemy is determined to impose himself and deny our right to remain here in our land. It is a difficult commandment yet it alone can stand firm in the face of the clear declarations of the occupation authorities that refuse our existence and the many excuses these authorities use to continue imposing occupation upon us.

4.2.5 Resistance to the evil of occupation is integrated, then, within this Christian love that refuses evil and corrects it. It resists evil in all its forms with methods that enter into the logic of love and draw on all energies to make peace. We can resist through civil disobedience. We do not resist with death but rather through respect of life. We respect and have a high esteem for all those who have given their life for our nation. And we affirm that every citizen must be ready to defend his or her life, freedom and land.

4.2.6 Palestinian civil organizations, as well as international organizations, NGOs and certain religious institutions call on individuals, companies and states to engage in divestment and in an economic and commercial boycott of everything produced by the occupation. We understand this to integrate the logic of peaceful resistance. These advocacy campaigns must be carried out with courage, openly sincerely proclaiming that their object is not revenge but rather to put an end to the existing evil, liberating both the perpetrators and the victims of injustice. The aim is to free both peoples from extremist positions of the different Israeli governments, bringing both to justice and reconciliation. In this spirit and with this dedication we will eventually reach the longed-for resolution to our problems, as indeed happened in South Africa and with many other liberation movements in the world.

4.3 Through our love, we will overcome injustices and establish foundations for a new society both for us and for our opponents. Our future and their future are one. Either the cycle of violence that destroys both of us or peace that will benefit both. We call on Israel to give up its injustice towards us, not to twist the truth of reality of the occupation by pretending that it is a battle against terrorism. The roots of “terrorism” are in the human injustice committed and in the evil of the occupation. These must be removed if there be a sincere intention to remove “terrorism.” We call on the people of Israel to be our partners in peace and not in the cycle of interminable violence. Let us resist evil together, the evil of occupation and the infernal cycle of violence.

5. Our word to our brothers and sisters

5.1 We all face, today, a way that is blocked and a future that promises only woe. Our word to all our Christian brothers and sisters is a word of hope, patience, steadfastness and new action for a better future. Our word is that we, as Christians we carry a message, and we will continue to carry it despite the thorns, despite blood and daily difficulties. We place our hope in God, who will grant us relief in His own time. At the same time, we continue to act in concord with God and God’s will, building, resisting evil and bringing closer the day of justice and peace.

5.2 We say to our Christian brothers and sisters: This is a time for repentance. Repentance brings us back into the communion of love with everyone who suffers, the prisoners, the wounded, those afflicted with temporary or permanent handicaps, the children who cannot live their childhood and each one who mourns a dear one. The communion of love says to every believer in spirit and in truth: if my brother is a prisoner I am a prisoner; if his home is destroyed, my home is destroyed; when my brother is killed, then I too am killed. We face the same challenges and share in all that has happened and will happen. Perhaps, as individuals or as heads of Churches, we were silent when we should have raised our voices to condemn the injustice and share in the suffering. This is a time of repentance for our silence, indifference, lack of communion, either because we did not persevere in our mission in this land and abandoned it, or because we did not think and do enough to reach a new and integrated vision and remained divided, contradicting our witness and weakening our word. Repentance for our concern with our institutions, sometimes at the expense of our mission, thus silencing the prophetic voice given by the Spirit to the Churches.
5.3 We call on Christians to remain steadfast in this time of trial, just as we have throughout the centuries, through the changing succession of states and governments. Be patient, steadfast and full of hope so that you might fill the heart of every one of your brothers or sisters who shares in this same trial with hope. “Always be ready to make your defence to anyone who demands from you an accounting for the hope that is in you” (1 Pet. 3:15). Be active and, provided this conforms to love, participate in any sacrifice that resistance asks of you to overcome our present travail.

5.4 Our numbers are few but our message is great and important. Our land is in urgent need of love. Our love is a message to the Muslim and to the Jew, as well as to the world.

5.4.1 Our message to the Muslims is a message of love and of living together and a call to reject fanaticism and extremism. It is also a message to the world that Muslims are neither to be stereotyped as the enemy nor caricatured as terrorists but rather to be lived with in peace and engaged with in dialogue.

5.4.2 Our message to the Jews tells them: Even though we have fought one another in the recent past and still struggle today, we are able to love and live together. We can organize our political life, with all its complexity, according to the logic of this love and its power, after ending the occupation and establishing justice.

5.4.3 The word of faith says to anyone engaged in political activity: human beings were not made for hatred. It is not permitted to hate, neither is it permitted to kill or to be killed. The culture of love is the culture of accepting the other. Through it we perfect ourselves and the foundations of society are established.

6. Our word to the Churches of the world

However, it is also a call to repentance; to revisit fundamentalist theological positions that support certain unjust political options with regard to the Palestinian people. It is a call to stand alongside the oppressed and preserve the word of God as good news for all rather than to turn it into a weapon with which to slay the oppressed. The word of God is a word of love for all His creation. God is not the ally of one against the other, nor the opponent of one in the face of the other. God is the Lord of all and loves all, demanding justice from all and issuing to all of us the same commandments. We ask our sister Churches not to offer a theological cover-up for the injustice we suffer, for the sin of the occupation imposed upon us. Our question to our brothers and sisters in the Churches today is: Are you able to help us get our freedom back, for this is the only way you can help the two peoples attain justice, peace, security and love?

6.2 In order to understand our reality, we say to the Churches: Come and see. We will fulfill our role to make known to you the truth of our reality, receiving you as pilgrims coming to us to pray, carrying a message of peace, love and reconciliation. You will know the facts and the people of this land, Palestinians and Israelis alike.

6.3 We condemn all forms of racism, whether religious or ethnic, including anti-Semitism and Islamophobia, and we call on you to condemn it and oppose it in all its manifestations. At the same time we call on you to say a word of truth and to take a position of truth with regard to Israel’s occupation of Palestinian land. As we have already said, we see boycott and disinvestment as tools of non-violence for justice, peace and security for all.

7. Our word to the international community

7. Our word to the international community is to stop the principle of “double standards” and insist on the international resolutions regarding the Palestinian problem with regard to all parties. Selective application of international law threatens to leave us vulnerable to a law of the jungle. It legitimizes the claims by certain armed groups and states that the international community only understands the logic of force. Therefore, we call for a response to what the civil and religious institutions have proposed, as mentioned earlier: the beginning of a system of economic sanctions and boycott to be applied against Israel. We repeat once again that this is not revenge but rather a serious action in order to reach a just and definitive peace that will put an end to Israeli occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories and will guarantee security and peace for all.

8. Jewish and Muslim religious leaders

8. Finally, we address an appeal to the religious and spiritual leaders, Jewish and Muslim, with whom we share the same vision that every human being is created by God and has been given equal dignity. Hence the obligation for each of us to defend the oppressed and the dignity God has bestowed on them. Let us together try to rise up above the political positions that have failed so far and continue to lead us on the path of failure and suffering.

9. A call to our Palestinian people and to the Israelis

9.1 This is a call to see the face of God in each one of God’s creatures and overcome the barriers of fear or race in order to establish a constructive dialogue and not remain within the cycle of never-ending manoeuvres that aim to keep the situation as it is. Our appeal is to reach a common vision, built on equality and sharing, not on superiority, negation of the other or aggression, using the pretext of fear and security. We say that love is possible and mutual trust is possible. Thus, peace is possible and definitive reconciliation also. Thus, justice and security will be attained for all.
9.2 Education is important. Educational programs must help us to get to know the other as he or she is rather than through the prism of conflict, hostility or religious fanaticism. The educational programs in place today are infected with this hostility. The time has come to begin a new education that allows one to see the face of God in the other and declares that we are capable of loving each other and building our future together in peace and security.

9.3 Trying to make the state a religious state, Jewish or Islamic, suffocates the state, confines it within narrow limits, and transforms it into a state that practices discrimination and exclusion, preferring one citizen over another. We appeal to both religious Jews and Muslims: let the state be a state for all its citizens, with a vision constructed on respect for religion but also equality, justice, liberty and respect for pluralism and not on domination by a religion or a numerical majority.

9.4 To the leaders of Palestine we say that current divisions weaken all of us and cause more sufferings. Nothing can justify these divisions. For the good of the people, which must outweigh that of the political parties, an end must be put to division. We appeal to the international community to lend its support towards this union and to respect the will of the Palestinian people as expressed freely.

9.5 Jerusalem is the foundation of our vision and our entire life. She is the city to which God gave a particular importance in the history of humanity. She is the city towards which all people are in movement—and where they will meet in friendship and love in the presence of the One Unique God, according to the vision of the prophet Isaiah: ‘In days to come the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established as the highest of the mountains, and shall be raised above the hills; all the nations shall stream to it (...) He shall judge between the nations, and shall arbitrate for many peoples; they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more’ (Is. 2: 2–5). Today, the city is inhabited by two peoples of three religions; and it is on this prophetic vision and on the international resolutions concerning the totality of Jerusalem that any political solution must be based. This is the first issue that should be negotiated because the recognition of Jerusalem’s sanctity and its message will be a source of inspiration towards finding a solution to the entire problem, which is largely a problem of mutual trust and ability to set in place a new land in this land of God.

10. Hope and faith in God

10. In the absence of all hope, we cry out our cry of hope. We believe in God, good and just. We believe that God’s goodness will finally triumph over the evil of hate and of death that still persist in our land. We will see here “a new land” and “a new human being,” capable of rising up in the spirit to love each one of his or her brothers and sisters.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-08

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 14-08 with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

• That the section of the Middle East Report providing the mandate and outline of the report (beginning with the second paragraph in the Rationale, and ending with the last paragraph before the introduction) be approved as the summary introduction to its recommendations, to be printed prior to those recommendations, as is done in the separately printed report.

• That section 3.c. reflect the action taken on the Caterpillar recommendation in the ACSWP Advice and Counsel comment on Item 14-03, the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) report:

>“3.c. [Strongly denounces Caterpillar’s continued profit-making from non-peaceful uses of its products and presses Caterpillar to review carefully its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine and to take affirmative steps to end its complicity in the violation of human rights.] [Affirms the divestment of securities in Caterpillar, Inc. until that corporation ceases the sale and use of its armored bulldozers in the maintenance of the occupation, understanding this action to be based on the careful report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment’s six years of unsuccessful efforts to change corporate policy as a shareholder, and on the PC(USA)’s steady response to Christian Palestinian calls for solidarity and non-violent pressure to end the occupation. Continued corporate engagement with other companies is also to focus on their roles in helping maintain and thereby profit from the occupation of Palestine.”

• That section 3.f. be amended as follows and that this advice be consistent with the action taken on 14-05, if that item is approved:

>“3.f. Endorses the Kairos Palestine document (“A Moment of Truth”), [in] [noting] its emphases on hope for liberation, nonviolence, love of enemy, and reconciliation[, and seeking to honor its moral claim for Christian solidarity through nonviolent economic witness for change (including corporate engagement with the possibility of divestment) and other means]; lifts the document up for study and discussion by Presbyterians; and directs the creation of a study guide for the document through the appropriate channel of the General Assembly Mission Council.”
That section 4.b. be amended as follows:

"4.b. Calls on the U.S. government [to exercise strategically its international influence, including the possible withholding of military aid as a means of bringing Israel to compliance with international law and peacemaking efforts.] [in principle and in accord with international law, to suspend all economic and military aid to the government of Israel until the occupation is ended with an internationally recognized peace agreement, recognizing that the occupation itself is a security threat to both Israeli and U.S. interests, that Israel is currently imposing economic sanctions on Palestine while its own economy is strong, and that specific new military aid would need to be justified in terms of its contribution to the peace process.]"

That section 5.h. be amended as follows:

"5.h. Calls on the U.S. government, [to exercise strategically its international influence and the withholding of financial, economic, and military aid to countries other than Israel, as we might with Israel, until such a time as the civil, religious, and other freedoms of their peoples are fully exercised; and to end U.S. taxpayer support for regimes that perpetuate inequality and popular frustration.] [in principle and in accord with international law, to suspend all military aid to undemocratic countries in the Middle East region until such a time as the civil, religious, and other freedoms of their peoples are fully exercised, recognizing that militarization of autocratic regimes creates a security threat, that support for such regimes perpetuates inequality and popular frustration, and that economic cooperation is a long-term anchor for regional security.]"

That section 6.a. be amended as follows:

"6.a. Calls on the U.S. government to repent of its sinful behavior vis-à-vis the Middle East, including its ongoing war in Iraq, its selectively undermining or supporting the democratic process in such places as Iran and the Palestine National Authority, its continued support of non-democratic regimes for the sake of oil or leverage over oil, or its involvement with security services and contractors who engage in torture, surveillance, and other human rights violations.] [Calls upon the president and State Department to re-state the goals of U.S. policy in the Middle East so as to renounce: the use of war under false pretenses as in Iraq, inconsistent support for democratic processes in Iran and Palestine, continuing support for undemocratic regimes for the sake of oil or leverage over oil, and the use of security services and contractors who engage in torture, assassination, and other human rights violations. Such a re-affirmation of legality and integrity in U.S. policy would constitute an act of institutional repentance and help restore the reputation of the United States.]"

This rationale addresses the six points in order, commending the report overall as a strong witness, directly challenging efforts to deny the reality of on-going oppression, to divert attention from the great imbalance of military power and wealth, and to disregard for the near demise of Palestinian Christianity.

The summary we recommend moving forward gives coherence to the recommendations and identifies new elements in this policy for this time of urgency, when new settlements and new policies to strip Palestinians of residency heighten tensions throughout the region. Given the March 16, 2010 statement by General Petraeus about the security concern represented by the continued lack of peace, and the range of Jewish groups now expressing some criticism of the occupation and its moral consequences, those first seven paragraphs succinctly state the overall themes that guide the listing of particulars. As an opening section it would also clarify the assignment given by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and indicate the attempt at consensus by the theologically diverse Middle East Study Committee—a consensus that held through much of its work, despite the final demurral by one member.

2. The proposed policy statement and study, together called the Report of the Middle East Study Committee, present a sustained theological, ethical, and pragmatic case for “breaking down the walls” that are shown to block progress toward a viable Palestinian state. The necessity for urgent action is based on the accelerating disappearance of Christians from the Palestinian population and the effective end of the possibility of a “two-state” solution due to the severe limitations on human rights and economic opportunity for the Palestinians, especially in Gaza. If there continues to be only one state controlling the lives of Palestinians, then comparisons with South Africa become only more pointed. The report puts extensive document-
The recommendation for divestment that we present in the Advice and Counsel on Item 14-03, as the proper culmination of the work of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI), also fits better the sustained argument that is laid out in section D., Our Witness: “What We Have Seen and Heard.” In addition to the comment made with regard to the Kairos’ document’s call for economic pressure; “we struggle with its call for solidarity in this area and confess that we have not fully answered it” (D.7.), there is a strong statement that indicates the direction of the report’s overall analysis:

We also recognize that our concern to end support for both violence in all its forms and the ongoing occupation and settlement of Palestine places demands of integrity on how the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) uses its own resources and investments. Let us be clear: we do affirm the legitimacy of Israel as a state, but consider the continuing occupation of Palestine … to be illegitimate, illegal under international law, and an enduring threat to peace in the region. Furthermore, we recognize that any support for that occupation weakens the moral standing of our nation internationally and our security. (Item 14-08, Introductions to Recommendations)

In the light of these statements and the consistent goal of ending the occupation, divestment—as the principled use of the church’s voice after serious engagement—is fully consistent with the Middle East Report.

It is also significant that data on Presbyterian member opinion from the Presbyterian Panel research instrument provided in an appendix shows considerable support for both corporate engagement and for divestment if the activity or sales in question continue.

At least three in five panelists in each group (members, 66%; elders, 66%; pastors, 64%; specialized clergy, 80%) agree that the PC(USA) should shift its investment funds away from such corporations if it is unable to dissuade them from doing things that directly or indirectly support violence against Israeli or Palestinian civilians…” (Appendix 3—Presbyterian Panel, Israel/Palestine and the Rest of the Middle East)

3. The amended recommendation proposed for “A Moment of Truth,” Item 14-05 unites its moral and theological appeal for Christian solidarity in non-violence with specific action that would make that support real.

4. The Presbyterian church has, since 1997, had a stronger position than the one being recommended by the committee. This call for suspending military aid to Israel, as part of the strategic exercise of U.S. international influence, calls into question the seriousness of the situation the rest of the report describes. Is it not past time to stop enabling continued settlement growth, fence or wall building, detention without trial of thousands of Palestinians? Clearly we support Israel’s security through a whole range of security guarantees, but the language of “in principle” strengthens the witness and focuses the issue on international law. Certainly, Israel has long been by far the largest beneficiary of U.S. government support, on a per capita basis in excess of what many U.S. citizens receive from their government.

5. The same principles hold for the aid we have spread around the Middle East for stability, cooperation, balance of power, etc. The amended recommendation makes a stronger and more consistent case than the previous, somewhat convoluted language. The effort to end double standards is clear.

6. In proposing this rewording, ACSWP hopes it has clarified the intent of the Middle East Study Committee while also providing a reasonable request for the redirection of U.S. policy. At the same time, the appeal for repentance by a nation is not inappropriate, given the symbolic importance of such statements by German, U. S., and various nations in relation to Truth and Reconciliation processes.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 14-08 be approved.

Rationale

The ACREC thanks and commends the Middle East Study Committee (MESC) for its work on this expansive report. The ACREC thinks it is unfortunate that the report stops at endorsing BDS (Boycott Divestment & Sanctions) as a way of living out the title of the report. They leave us wondering how we are to “break down the walls,” practically speaking, without BDS, a nonviolent tool that has been used successfully in the past on other issues.
On Seeking Compliance to U.S. Government Policy in the Use of Military Aid by All Parties in the Middle East—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take the following actions:

1. Express its enduring and heartfelt commitment to security, justice and lasting peace for the Israeli and Palestinian peoples.

2. Express its support for the U.S. government policy of carefully vetting the funds distributed to foreign countries in ways that ensure peaceful development and are consistent with international law, human rights protections, and U.S. foreign policy, namely:

   a. the U.S. Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 which prohibits giving assistance to the government of any country which engages in a consistent pattern of human rights violations;

   b. the U.S. Arms Export Control Act of 1976 which prohibits using U.S. weapons against civilians and civilian infrastructure, and

   c. the U.S. foreign policy insofar as it pertains to recommendations for steps toward peace, in this instance, between Israelis and Palestinians.

3. Call for the allocation of U.S. military aid funds to be contingent on compliance with the above-mentioned statutes and/or to the peace process.

4. Express its extreme disappointment with the U.S. government that while the State of Israel has been found not to comply with the above statutes, it continues to be the recipient of U.S. military aid.

5. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to communicate these recommendations to all members of the U.S. Congress, in particular the chairs of the Foreign Relations Committees for the House and Senate and to all appropriate members of the U.S. administration, including the president, vice-president, secretary of state and secretary of defense.

_Rationale_

The church is called to seek justice when there is injustice, to struggle to free people from oppression, and to counter violence with strong messages to reconcile and heal. Countenancing any such wrongs without protest makes the church complicit if not culpable. We find this call in many places in the Bible:

• “[God] shall judge between the nations, and shall arbitrate for many peoples; they shall beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war anymore” (Is. 2:4).

• “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called children of God” (Mt. 5:9).

Since WWII, Israel has received more direct aid from the United States than any other country—and since 1965, nearly $3 billion annually in aid. In a 2007 agreement, the U.S. pledged to provide military aid totaling $30 billion over the next ten years (Ref. 1). Taxpayers would expect that the recipient of such generous amounts would have a solid international presence and would be in alliance with U.S. foreign policy; however, this is not the case. This overture calls into serious question the wisdom of such a financial arrangement by virtue of Israel’s pattern of human rights violations, its use of U.S. weapons against civilians and civilian infrastructure, and its disregard of U.S. foreign policy.

The current Congress and administration should be urged to correct its foreign aid disbursement policy and to send a message to both parties that funds from U.S. taxpayers are not to be used for any activity which violates human rights or impedes peace. Rather than sending a mixed message to Israel and the world that exceptions are tolerated, conditions should be placed on any aid allocations until that country’s policy conforms.

The State of Israel has been cited by several organizations including the United Nations, B’Tselem (an Israeli organization), Amnesty International, and the Human Rights Watch—as engaging in human rights violations. U.S. weapons have been used to kill and injure Palestinian civilians and to destroy Palestinian infrastructure: specific violations include the use of cluster bombs in Lebanon in 2006, and the use of white phosphorous in the 2009 Gaza incursion (Refs. 6 and 7, also...
U.S. foreign policy contains strict procedures to build a peaceful solution one of which is halting settlement development. The current Israeli government resists such calls (Ref. 8). The Palestinian Authority must continue its efforts to resolve internal leadership issues, as well.

In regards to Israel/Palestine, the congressional committees responsible for fund allocation have been careful to assure that no funds go to Hamas or any organization advocating violence, and have from time to time delayed funds conditionally (Ref. 2).

The U.S. Congress has been faulted for not applying these strictures to Israel. Four times during the past thirty years, the PC(USA) has spoken out. The following are excerpts from overtures on this topic (Ref. 3.)

- In 1983, “… denying all forms of aid to Israel as long as that nation persists in creating new West Bank settlements…” (Minutes, PC(USA) 1983, Part I, p. 796.)

- In 1990, “… make continuation of U.S. aid …contingent upon an end to further settlements…and an end to human rights violations as enumerated by the U.S. State Department …” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 105).

- In 1995, “… renew efforts to make U.S. aid to Israel conditional upon cessation of the appropriation of Palestinian land, … [u]rge the Israeli government to lift the military closures of Jerusalem that deny Christians, Muslims, and others access to their places of worship …” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, p. 689).

- In 1998, “… make continued aid and military assistance to Israel contingent on its fulfilling the terms of the Oslo Accords …” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 655).

In addition, the Middle East Study Team, commissioned by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 2008, reports the need to account for the percentage of U.S. foreign aid that supports human rights violations (Ref. 4). Other organizations have joined their voices to this call (see below).

Members of the U.S. Congress and several U.S. administrations have from time to time also challenged the disbursement of aid to Israel by withholding or delaying it conditionally, though never in a sustained manner and ultimately ineffectively (Refs. 1 and 5).

Any criticism of Israeli policy must be understood as criticism of government policy and not as anti-Jewish; many Jewish individuals agree with the arguments presented in this overture (see statement below from Jewish Voice for Peace.) While the Jewish people have suffered from persecution and have been victims of violence perpetrated by Palestinians, the Israeli government’s abuse of human rights, illegal land acquisition, and disregard for the peace process cannot serve as excuses and should not be subsidized by U.S. funds.

This overture communicates concern for Israel’s long-term secure place in the international community and for the Palestinians’ rights to unified leadership pledged to non-violence. Suspension of aid until conditions are met is intended as a strategy to move peace-making forward, and not as a punishment. Should Israeli aid be suspended, that country would be able to defend itself given strategic agreements and a strong military.

This overture also communicates our concern that the United States not be viewed as disrespectful to Muslims. For the U.S. government to have different standards for different countries implies discrimination. The international Muslim community holds the belief that the U.S. is inconsistent in its posture toward the Israeli/Palestinian conflict and, by virtue of the Palestinians being predominantly Muslim, disrespects Islamic believers (Ref. 9). It is hoped that, by achieving sound, consistent standards in its aid policies toward the Israelis and the Palestinians, the United States would be judged as a more fair and consistent nation.

Calls by Other Organizations for Conditions on Aid

Jewish Voice for Peace, January 2010

“Despite President Barack Obama’s very clear position against Israel’s blockade on Gaza and continued settlement expansion, Israel continues to forbid humanitarian assistance from entering Gaza and expand its West Bank. We are asking Congress, why is Israel being rewarded with almost three billion dollars in aid when it ignores American policies and continues to use our money to build settlements and maintain the blockade of Gaza? Shouldn’t our aid come with strings attached?” (<http://www.jewishvoiceforpeace.org/publish/campaigns.shtml>).
Evangelical Lutheran Church of America (ELCA), 1991

“… to relate U.S. foreign assistance to the willingness of those nations to negotiate with one another in good faith and to adhere to international law and human rights conventions; and to oppose further housing loan guarantees to Israel unless and until the construction and expansion of settlements in the occupied territories is stopped” (Conflict in the Middle East, passed by the 1991 Churchwide Assembly in Orlando, Florida, found at <http://archive.elca.org/socialpolicyresolutions/resolution.asp?id=19&ref=hts>).

Churches for Middle East Peace, September 7, 2005

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 14-09 be approved.

Rationale

The overture begins appropriately by asking the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to express its enduring commitment to the peoples of Israel and Palestine. The concerns that generated the overture draw attention to violations of U.S. law and policy by the United States. Its critique is directed primarily at the practices of our own nation.

Subsequent to the submission of this overture to the Office of the General Assembly, however, the problems of U.S. Middle East Policy and practice have assumed greater urgency. In testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee General David Petraeus, United States Central Command, reported:

The enduring hostilities between Israel and some of its neighbors present distinct challenges to our ability to advance our interests in the AOR. Israeli-Palestinian tensions often flare into violence and large-scale armed confrontations. The conflict foments anti-American sentiment, due to a perception of U.S. favoritism for Israel. Arab anger over the Palestinian question limits the strength and depth of U.S. partnerships with governments and peoples in the AOR and weakens the legitimacy of moderate regimes in the Arab world. Meanwhile, al-Qaeda and other militant groups exploit that anger to mobilize support. The conflict also gives Iran influence in the Arab world through its clients, Lebanese Hizballah and Hamas. (General David Petraeus, Senate Armed Services Committee, March 16, 2010 <http://www.lobelog.com/petraeus-confirms-link-between-israel-palestine-and-u-s-security/>
The perception of U.S. favoritism for Israel, which foments anger, complicates partnerships with moderate Arab regimes, and weakens their legitimacy, is further exacerbated by continued allocation of U.S. funds for military purposes and foreign assistance in violation of U.S. law and internationally recognized standards for human rights. The PC(USA)’s long history of partnership with Christians in the Middle East, concern for a just peace in the region, and our support for the State of Israel require that this overture be read carefully for what it says and hopes to accomplish.

Toward Peace and Reconciliation in the Middle East—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take the following actions and direct the Stated Clerk to communicate them appropriately to the various parties:

1. Call upon the government of Israel to establish an independent commission, whose findings it could accept, to investigate the allegations of inappropriate behavior contained in the Goldstone Report regarding actions of the Israeli Defense Force in Operation Cast Lead, and to report its findings to the government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority, the Hamas authorities in Gaza, and the secretary general of the United Nations.

2. Call upon the Hamas authorities in Gaza to work together to establish an independent commission, whose findings it could accept, to investigate the allegations of inappropriate behavior contained in the Goldstone Report regarding actions of Hamas and its military, and to report its findings to the Hamas authorities in Gaza, the Palestinian Authority, the government of Israel, and the secretary general of the United Nations.

3. Call on the United States government, its president and Congress, to actively engage with all authorities involved in the Gaza conflict to initiate and sustain the proposed independent investigations.

4. Urge the U.S. government to continue to work actively through the presence of its special envoy to further peace negotiations between the Palestinian Authority, the Hamas authorities in Gaza, and the government of Israel.

Rationale

This overture arises from the Gaza Conflict, including Hamas firing rockets into Israel (2008) and Israel responding with a military assault called “Operation Cast Lead” (December 2008 – January 2009).

Concerned about possible violations of International Law on the both sides of the conflict, the Human Rights Council of the United Nations commissioned a Fact-Finding Team to investigate, chaired by Justice Richard Goldstone.

Its findings were published (September 2009) in what is now known as the Goldstone Report, which was rejected by Israel. Two months later, just this past November, the U.S. House of Representatives, in House Resolution 867, called on “…the President and the Secretary of State to continue to strongly and unequivocally oppose any endorsement of the ‘Report of the United Nations Fact Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict’” (the Goldstone Report) (H.Res. 867 EH, 111th Congress).

In its sweeping denunciation of this report, the U.S. Congress overlooked two of its major recommendations: namely, that should Israel and Hamas not agree with the findings, they initiate their own independent investigations. This overture seeks to rectify this oversight.

1. The U.S. Arms Export Control Act of 1976 prohibits using U.S. weapons against civilians and civilian infrastructure. Sources vary in the particulars, but as a result of Operation Cast Lead, there were more than one thousand persons killed, mostly women and children (with thousands more wounded). Thousands of homes were destroyed with many more damaged. There was extensive destruction and damage to businesses, universities, colleges, schools, medical facilities, the central supply for water, electricity, and sewage treatment. Scores of mosques were destroyed or damaged. Preceding and during the attack upon Gaza, the Hamas military fired rockets into Israeli civilian communities and used the presence of civilians in Gaza as protection for their efforts.

2. U.S. taxpayers are contributing $7.6 million per day to the Israeli military and have a right to know whether that money was used appropriately in the defense of Israel.

3. Human rights groups within Israel, such as B’Tselem and Breaking the Silence, are calling on Israel to have an independent investigation of these events.
4. Both Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch have released detailed reports based on field research and witness testimony, but urge Israel and Hamas to conduct their own independent studies.

5. The European Parliament urges Israel and the Palestinians to conduct investigations into the Gaza Conflict that “… meet international standards of independence, impartiality, transparency, promptness, and effectiveness” within five months and calls on the European Union to “… work towards a strong E.U. common position on the follow-up to this report” (From a Press Release, March 10, 2010, circulated by al Haq, “Defending Human Rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territories).

Priorities for Improving the Situation in the Middle East

At least one-third of panelists in each group believe that pursuing the following actions is very important for improving the situation in Israel/Palestine and the rest of the Middle East:

- Addressing extremism and the threat of violence (members, 72%; elders, 74%; pastors, 71%; specialized clergy, 70%).
- Freedom of worship at all major religious sites (65%; 62%; 51%; 62%).
- Achieving a nuclear-free Middle East (59%; 52%; 40%; 40%).
- Providing for religious freedom throughout the Middle East (52%; 52%; 47%; 51%).
- Reconciliation among racial-ethnic groups within Middle Eastern countries (45%; 43%; 57%; 57%).
- Compliance with United Nations resolutions and human rights treaties (41%; 40%; 37%; 46%).
- Supporting Christian minorities in Israel/Palestine (36%; 38%; 45%; 42%).

More than one-third of laypeople—but fewer ministers—view as very important both maintaining positive relations between Presbyterians and members of the U.S. Jewish community (members, 40%; elders, 37%; pastors, 32%; specialized clergy, 27%) and maintaining the close diplomatic and military relationship between the U.S. and Israeli governments (38%; 38%; 23%; 22%).

Two other principles are seen as very important by at least two in five ministers, but by fewer laypeople: reducing economic inequality within Middle Eastern countries (members, 25%; elders, 24%; pastors, 42%; specialized clergy, 48%) and refugee resettlement (26%; 25%; 40%; 47%).

Relatively few panelists (members, 27%; elders, 28%; pastors, 23%; specialized clergy, 19%) believe that promoting democracy throughout the Middle East is very important (see also Figure 1).

Figure 1. Importance of Various Actions for Improving the Situation in Israel/Palestine and the Rest of the Middle East
Possible Peacemaking Strategies

✓ Large majorities of panelists in each group strongly support or moderately support the following peacemaking strategies:
  - Permitting Gaza residents to enter the West Bank and Israel for trade or other legitimate purposes (members, 69%; elders, 72%; pastors, 84%; specialized clergy, 87%).
  - Delivery by international organizations of humanitarian aid to people living in Palestinian territory occupied or controlled by Israel (70%: 68%; 85%; 90%).
  - The presence of United Nations peacekeepers to help supervise the borders between Israel and Palestine (73%; 70%; 77%; 85%).
  - Limiting the influence and military capacity of the Iranian government (64%; 66%; 66%; 60%).

✓ Almost half or more of ministers—but fewer members and elders—strongly support or moderately support:
  - Permanent Israeli withdrawal from all of Gaza, the West Bank, and East Jerusalem (members, 36%; elders, 33%; pastors, 50%; specialized clergy, 61%).
  - The inclusion of democratically elected Hamas leaders in negotiations about the future of Israel/Palestine (35%; 41%; 48%; 61%).

✓ Around two in five members (38%) and elders (43%)—but fewer ministers (pastors, 27%; specialized clergy (21%)—strongly support or moderately support maintaining a U.S. military presence in Iraq.

✓ Few panelists in each group strongly support or moderately support:
  - Construction of a separation barrier between territory that the Israeli government administers and the Palestinian authorities administer (members, 18%; elders, 24%; pastors, 18%; specialized clergy, 17%).
  - Expansion of Israeli settlements further into the West Bank and East Jerusalem on Palestinian land (10%; 10%; 6%; 5%). (Figure 2 provides additional information.)

ISRAEL/PALESTINE AND THE REST OF THE MIDDLE EAST

A Two-State Solution?

- Seven in eight specialized clergy (86%), four in five pastors (78%), and two-thirds of members (65%) and elders (68%) support a two-state solution in the Middle East, with both a state of Israel and a state of Palestine.

- Three in ten members (30%) and one-quarter of elders (24%)—but fewer ministers (pastors, 15%; specialized clergy, 11%)—don’t know whether or not they support this solution.

Comparing Responses of 2009 Panelists with Those of Earlier Panelists

Presbyterians’ opinions about issues related to Israel/Palestine and the Middle East have been relatively stable, results of the August 2009 Panel survey and earlier surveys suggest.

The May 2002 Panel survey on Peacemaking, International Conflict, and Related Issues and the August 2009 survey asked virtually identical questions about support for a two-state solution in the Middle East, with both a state of Israel and a state of Palestine.

The November 2004 Panel survey on Current Issues in Church and Society and the August 2009 survey asked somewhat similar questions about support for the building of a wall between Israeli- and Palestinian-held areas.

The 2004 survey asked panelists whether they favor, oppose, or have no opinion about the “current construction by Israel of a security barrier or wall between it and occupied Palestinian territories.” The 2009 survey asked panelists whether they strongly support, moderately support, neither support nor oppose, moderately oppose, strongly oppose, or have no opinion about the “construction of a separation barrier between territory that the Israeli government administers and the Palestinian authorities administer.”

The levels of support for a two-state solution and building a wall have not changed over time with two exceptions. Members’ support for building a wall declined over time, and specialized clergy’s support for a two-state solution declined. (Table 1 provides additional information.)

Support for Israeli Withdrawal Among Presbyterians with Different Theological and Political Leanings

Presbyterians with different theological orientations and those linked with different political parties have very different opinions about permanent Israeli withdrawal from Gaza, the West Bank, and East Jerusalem.

Table 2 shows that larger fractions of panelists in each group who are theologically liberal or very liberal than are theologically moderate strongly support or moderately support Israeli withdrawal, and more theologically moderate panelists support withdrawal than very conservative or conservative panelists. This is also the case among panelists who have different political preferences. More Democrats than Independents support withdrawal, and more Independents than Republicans support withdrawal.

Presbyterian Involvement?

- At least three in five panelists in each group (members, 61%; elders, 66%; pastors, 74%; specialized clergy, 76%) strongly agree or moderately agree that Presbyterians can contribute to building peace in Israel/Palestine and the rest of the Middle East.

- Majorities of panelists in each group (members, 55%; elders, 59%; pastors, 74%; specialized clergy, 76%) strongly agree or moderately agree that Presbyterians should try to improve the situation in Israel/Palestine and the rest of the Middle East.

PC(USA) Investments and Israel/Palestine

- At least two-thirds of panelists in each group (members, 68%; elders, 71%; pastors, 70%; specialized clergy, 84%) strongly agree or moderately agree that the PC(USA) should avoid making investment profits from unjust situations and should use its investments in corporations to promote justice and other Christian values.

- Similar proportions of panelists in each group (members, 67%; elders, 68%; pastors, 74%; specialized clergy, 84%) strongly agree or moderately agree that the PC(USA) should try to dissuade corporations from doing things that directly or indirectly support violence against Israeli or Palestinian civilians.

- At least three in five panelists in each group (members, 66%; elders, 66%; pastors, 64%; specialized clergy, 80%) agree that the PC(USA) should shift its investment funds away from such corporations if it is unable to dissuade them from doing things that directly or indirectly support violence against Israeli or Palestinian civilians (as it already does from corporations involved in tobacco, military-related production, and human rights violations). (Figure 4 provides additional information.)

- avoid making investment profits from unjust situations and use its investments in corporations to promote justice and other Christian values.
- try to dissuade corporations from doing things that directly or indirectly support violence against Israeli or Palestinian civilians.
- shift its investment funds away from corporations that it is unable to dissuade from doing things that directly or indirectly support violence against Israeli or Palestinian civilians.

On Transferring Community Church of Seattle from the Presbytery of Seattle to the Presbytery of North Puget Sound—From the Synod of Alaska-Northwest.

The Synod of Alaska Northwest overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to concur with the request that the Community Church of Seattle Presbyterian Church (PIN10580) be transferred to North Puget Sound Presbytery from Seattle Presbytery.

Note: It is understood the effective date [is January 1, 2011] [will be upon favorable action of the General Assembly].

Rationale

Community Church of Seattle Presbyterian Church, (known hereafter as “Community Church of Seattle PC”), was chartered in 1980 and is a member of the Presbytery of Seattle. In 2002, Community Church of Seattle PC purchased twenty-five acres of land in Bothell, Washington at 3727 240th Street SE, Bothell, WA, 98011. They moved to the new location in 2003 after twenty-three years of ministry at 3902 Woodland Park Ave. N in Seattle, Washington. The new location in Bothell is within the geographic boundaries of the Presbytery of North Puget Sound.

In 2003, North Puget Sound Presbytery and Seattle Presbytery worked with Community Church of Seattle PC to draft an agreement to transfer the church to North Puget Sound Presbytery. That agreement was declined by North Puget Sound Presbytery citing lack of ability to guarantee the $4 million loan Community Church of Seattle PC acquired to construct Phase 1 of the new facility. Community Church of Seattle PC has remained a member of Seattle Presbytery since that time.

North Puget Sound Presbytery is now ready and delighted to welcome Community Church of Seattle PC and able to assume loan guarantees previously assumed by Seattle Presbytery. North Puget Sound Presbytery embraces Community Church of Seattle PC as a valuable partner in Christ’s ministry in North Puget Sound Presbytery.

Community Church of Seattle PC has requested a transfer to North Puget Sound Presbytery.

On May 19, 2009, Seattle Presbytery voted to transfer Community Church of Seattle PC to North Puget Sound Presbytery.

On May 20, 2009, North Puget Sound Presbytery voted to welcome Community Church of Seattle PC.

The Synod of Alaska-Northwest voted at its July 13–15, 2009, Stated Meeting to approve the transfer, and to overture the General Assembly to concur.

On Establishing the United Church of the San Juans in Ridgway, Colorado, as a Union Church—From the Presbytery of Western Colorado.

The Presbytery of Western Colorado overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the action taken by the Presbytery of Western Colorado, the Rocky Mountain Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA), the Rocky Mountain Conference of the United Methodist Church, and the Rocky Mountain Conference of the United Church of Christ, to establish the United Church of the San Juans in Ridgway, Colorado (Ouray County), as a union church. The United Church of the San Juans will be responsible and accountable to all four denominations.

Rationale

The Presbytery of Western Colorado, the Rocky Mountain Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the Rocky Mountain Conference of the United Methodist Church, and the Rocky Mountain Conference of the United Church of Christ seek “… to manifest more visibly the unity of the church of Jesus Christ … ” and strengthen the witness of our Lord and Savior in the Ridgway area, by this action (Book of Order, G-15.0101).

Notes: The United Church of the San Juans was initiated as a new church development in a partnership agreement between the four denominations; it is not a union of previously existing churches. The PC(USA) is in full communion with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and the United Church of Christ; and in correspondence with the United Methodist Church.

All of the needed legal and ecclesiastical steps have been taken to assure a full and joyful union according to the constitutions of the four supporting denominations.

The Rocky Mountain Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America will vote on the affiliation agreement at its meeting in May 2010.

The Rocky Mountain Conference of the United Methodist Church approved the affiliation agreement at its meeting June 17–20, 2009.

The Rocky Mountain Conference of the United Church of Christ approved the affiliation agreement at its meeting June 13, 2009.

The Presbytery of Western Colorado approved the affiliation agreement at its meeting on February 17, 2009. It then adopted this overture on February 23, 2010.

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) renew its commitment to help grow Christ’s Church deep and wide by doing the following:

1. Extend a churchwide commitment to participate in God’s activity through Jesus Christ in transforming the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the 2011–2012 biennium.

2. Encourage synods, presbyteries, sessions, and all agencies, entities, and networks of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to commit to foster the growth of Christ’s Church deep and wide in the following areas:
   a. Grow in Evangelism: Share the good news of Jesus Christ. Invite persons to join in the church’s worship and fellowship. Baptize children and adults (Mt. 28:19–20; Lk. 15).
   c. Grow in Servanthood: Stand alongside the wider community to promote the well-being and love of neighbor. Embrace stewardship in all of life (Jn. 13:12-17; Mt. 25:34–40).
   d. Grow in Diversity: Welcome everyone. Learn from others. Reflect the cultural and ethnic diversity of God’s peoples in the world [including leadership] (Gal. 3:26–29; Rev. 7:9–10).

3. Encourage the General Assembly Mission Council to support the whole church’s commitment to foster the growth of Christ’s Church deep and wide in its ministries and mission.

4. Request each session to commit time on its agenda during 2011–2012 to cast a vision for each of the four “Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide” areas.

Rationale

“Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide” was created by the 218th General Assembly (2008) as a churchwide commitment to participate in God’s activity through Jesus Christ in transforming the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The original rationale for this action stands as true today, as it did two years ago:

The persistent decline in membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) over the past forty years is a concern to the church at large and to the General Assembly Mission Council. While membership has declined, many congregations and PC(USA) ministries are flourishing. As Christians, we are called to “make disciples of all peoples.” Rather than give in to a climate of decline, the General Assembly Mission Council believes that a more faithful stance is to take affirmative steps that renew our commitment to advance Christ’s gospel in word and deed in our churches, our communities, and throughout the world.

In addition, it is important that we keep all aspects of church growth in biblical and theological perspective. In this regard, it is worth noting that if the opposite of our current situation in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) were true—if we were growing exponentially in attendance and members—our situation might be no more satisfying. This is because church growth for its own sake is never the aim of the Christian Church. Instead, our growth as Christians, whether quantitative or qualitative, is to take place so that God may be glorified as the body of Christ is drawn into ever-closer communion with God. (“But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and to the day of eternity. Amen” 2 Peter 3:18.)
Growth is the natural consequence of the Christian life. In the Epistle to the Ephesians, Paul identifies growth in the church as the necessary process of spiritual health: “... we must grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ, from whom the whole body, joined and knit together by every ligament with which it is equipped, as each part is working properly, promotes the body’s growth in building itself up in love” (Eph. 4:15b-16).

Rightly understanding growth in the life of the church is as important as the growth itself. When growth occurs in any aspect of the church, we may be tempted to take credit for it. Scripture makes clear, however, that God is the ultimate giver of growth and life. Jesus said, “Just as the branch cannot bear fruit by itself unless it abides in the vine, neither can you unless you abide in me” (John 15:4b). Being a part of God’s family and abiding in Christ is a necessary aspect of spiritual growth. A multiplicity of human ministries contributes to spiritual growth in people’s lives, thus emphasizing God’s ultimate role in the gift of spiritual life. Paul wrote to the Corinthians saying, “I planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the growth” (1 Cor. 3:6).

Conversely, history has shown that religious organizations or groups may experience rapid and large growth in adherents, even though the wider Church may not affirm that God was behind that growth or that the growth was based on dubious theological motivations.

Finally, growth is a central aspect of our Reformed heritage. Together with the Scots Confession, “We most surely believe that God preserved, instructed, multiplied, honored, adorned, and called from death to life his Kirk in all ages…” (The Book of Confessions, The Scots Confession, 3.05). Thus, although we are unable to determine growth, and unable to affirm in all circumstances exactly where and when God will cause growth, we do have a role in the healthy, spiritual growth of our members, attendees, churches, and programs. Indeed, in the same way that we feed our children and ourselves to engender greater physical health and growth, the Scriptures are filled with examples and admonitions urging us to nurture, foster, and cultivate spiritual health and growth within the community of Christ’s church (1 Sam. 2:26; Mt. 13:31-33; 2 Cor. 10:15; Col. 1:10; 2 Pet. 3:18). Stating our desire and intention to nurture healthy spiritual growth is the first step in contributing toward that result. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 1238–39)

During the 2009–2010 period, many presbyteries dedicated a significant portion of their meetings to casting a vision for “Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide” in their congregations. As with any grassroots movement, initial progress can be slow. Some presbyteries have had no awareness of the initiative.

The General Assembly Mission Council responded to this effort by coordinating a variety of ministries. An evangelism consultation for “Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide” was held at Stony Point with seventy-five key church leaders. The consultation produced a wiki page with resources and hosted a follow up conversation at Big Tent.

The GAMC partnered with the Board of Pensions to “Cast the Vision” of “Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide” at each of the three regional benefit consultations.

A community web site has created a nationwide grassroots conversation. Videos of churches Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide in evangelism, discipleship, servanthood, and diversity have been produced to tell our story of hope: God is alive in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). An education curriculum, developed for these videos can be ordered through Presbyterian Distribution Center, PDS #13102-010-1.

During the fall of 2009, GAMC Executive Director Linda Valentine and Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons hosted telephone conference calls with church leaders on each of the four Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide areas, so that participants could exchange ideas.

In addition, more than sixty news stories of congregations growing deep and wide have been published.

At least four websites have been extensive focus on “Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide”:

- Wiki page: http://e.vangelize.us/;
- Community web site: www.pcusa.org/deepandwide;
- Videos of churches growing Deep and Wide: www.pcusa.org/goodnews; www.pcusa.org/evangelism;

The “Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide” initiative is gaining momentum. As the original rationale for “Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide” stated, “Growth is the natural consequence of the Christian life” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1238). The words of Ephesians 4:15–16 reminds us: “… speaking the truth in love, we must grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ, from whom the whole body, joined and knit together by every ligament with which it is equipped, as each part is working properly, promotes the body’s growth in building itself up in love.”

Extending the initiative for two more years will allow the church build upon its initial progress, and move us further into the deeper and wider growth that God has planned for us.

ACREĆ ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the recommendation in Item 15-03 be approved.
Rationale

The ACREC appreciates the emphasis in the recommendation on building diverse elements and would like to see this emphasis strengthened.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 15-03

Comment on Item 15-03—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 15-03 with the following change in Section 2.d.: [Text to be added is shown in brackets and with an underline.]

“d. Grow in Diversity: Welcome everyone. Learn from others. Reflect the cultural and ethnic diversity of God’s peoples in the world [including leadership] (Gal. 3:26–29; Rev. 7:9–10)” (Item 15-03).

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) supports the emphasis on diversity in growing the church deep and wide, with thanks and appreciation. At the 217th General Assembly (2006), the assembly committee reviewing GACOR recommended, and the General Assembly approved, that the General Assembly Council (now the General Assembly Mission Council) consider designating a year to celebrate diversity in their planning for a year-long emphases. This referral from 2006 fits nicely within Item 15-03, if the addition is made to connect diversity to church leadership.

The GACOR would also like to remind the assembly that growth in diversity within the leadership of the denomination is needed in a wider expression of diversity than just the “cultural and ethnic diversity of our membership” cited in item 15-03, but rather includes the fuller definition of diversity found in G-4.0403:

“... Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions (married, single, widowed, or divorced) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church. (Book of Order, G-9.0104ff)

The General Assembly Mission Council, upon recommendation by the Presbyterian Multicultural Network (PMN), recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

1. Affirm the multicultural church growth strategy and encourage all governing bodies of the PC(USA) to consider the PMN as a ministry partner and resource.

2. Affirm the PMN’s work to cultivate a Pentecost vision for the PC(USA) through the Multicultural Church Growth Strategy.

3. Encourage all governing bodies of the PC(USA) to consider multicultural church growth and transformation as one of their top priorities.

4. Invite sessions, presbyteries, and other entities of the PC(USA) to utilize the PMN as a resource for growing into a multicultural vision for the church.

5. Pray during the plenary gathering of the 219th General Assembly (2010) for the PC(USA) to open itself up to the healing opportunities that God brings to us when all of God’s diverse people worship and live together.

Rationale

Presbyterian Multicultural Network (PMN) Church Growth Report

“When the day of Pentecost had come, they were all together in one place.”—Acts 2:1

“... and I am coming to gather all nations and tongues ...”—Isa. 66:18

1. Background

In August 2008, after the General Assembly passed the “Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide” initiative, a team of leaders of the Presbyterian Multicultural Network (PMN) and the staff of Multicultural Congregational Support (at that time called Multicultural Ministries) met at Ghost Ranch Conference Center for seven days of prayer and engaging in a visioning process to develop a way to support the General Assembly strategy of Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide.

The same team, in addition to new members of the board, met again in June 2009, for two days to complete their strategic visioning. Both events were co-sponsored by the Office of Multicultural Congregational Support and PMN. The result of these efforts is the attached report. The PMN is also open to any suggestions as they seek to support the church’s efforts in this area of church growth in an increasingly multicultural world.

2. An Introduction to the PMN

Description: The PMN is a grassroots network in our denomination that connects and nurtures multicultural ministries all over the United States. Our individual memberships include members, clergy, seminary students, and staff. Our institutional memberships include churches and governing bodies. We are ambassadors of a Pentecost vision for the PC(USA). We cultivate ways to empower and embody churches of “all nations and tongues.” We are in partnership and covenant relationship with the Office of Multicultural Congregational Support in the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW ministry area of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).1 We also affirm and partner with ethnic-specific and language-specific congregations.

The PMN, in partnership with the Office of Multicultural Ministries, does consultations for presbyteries, sessions, and other church entities to help them minister more effectively in a variety of multicultural contexts. It also offers scholarships for multicultural conferences, institutes, and regional trainings. The PMN has a website (www.PresbyterianMulticulturalChurch.net) and is linked to the Office of Multicultural Ministries webpage (www.pcusa.org/multicultural). These websites list opportunities for multicultural conferences, training, vocational opportunities, and resources. We are on Facebook, and we are always seeking new and creative ways to reach out and communicate with our members. The PMN seeks relationships and experiences that encourage healing and reconciliation in all of our work. Its mission statement reads as follows:

Presbyterian Multicultural Network is to serve Jesus Christ and Christ’s mission through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by:

• Connecting multicultural ministries through the development of a grass roots network,

• Nurturing the PC(USA) vision of multicultural ministry and the evangelism and church growth strategies adopted by all PC(USA) governing bodies, and

• Igniting the Church to imagine and embody God’s Pentecost vision through sharing ideas and resources, learning together, and seeking intentional multicultural experiences.

Rationale for the Recommendations

In light of the biblical mandate for a Pentecost vision,2 our Reformed theological heritage and the Book of Order3, actions from previous General Assemblies4, and the growing diversity in the United States, the PMN offers the following strategy to support the General Assembly initiative to “Grow Christ’s Church Deep and Wide.”

Strategy of the Presbyterian Multicultural Network:

1. Principles of Multicultural Ministry: Multicultural ministries5 encourage the growth of Christ’s Church deep and wide, through:

   a. Evangelism

      • Following Jesus across every human boundary, intentionally forming interpersonal relationships with those we consider “the other.”

      • Sharing resources in a multicultural, globalized world that calls for redefining evangelism beyond reaching people “like us.”

      • Embracing the missional and multicultural nature of the church in its origin, proclaiming a holistic message of the Gospel with equal commitment to personal/communal transformation and sweeping social justice.

   b. Discipleship

      • Upholding the centrality of Scripture as the unique and authoritative witness to Jesus Christ.6 We particularly affirm its message that the beloved community is intended to be both diverse and inclusive.

      • Learning to pray, praise, work, play, and enjoy our lives in Christ in ways that both embody and demonstrate mutuality, partnership, and the celebration of each other’s personhood and gifts.
• Growing in our commitment to follow Jesus Christ personally, communally, and institutionally. We encourage the church to be filled with the Holy Spirit and open to God’s leading.

c. Servanthood

• Creating a culture of reconciliation that draws from the sacred practices of repentance, confession, and forgiveness.

• Engaging in dialogue and service with the Church across denominational lines and cultural boundaries.

• Intentionally fostering a culture that practices and celebrates shared power, with leadership that incorporates diverse backgrounds and perspectives.

d. Diversity

• Building a multicultural vision of Christian community that is regularly celebrated, practiced, and embodied.

• Listening and learning from familiar and emerging voices and from diverse contexts, affirming their unique value to the Church.

• Risking new ways of being church by practicing sincere hospitality, without co-opting someone else’s culture, engaging in deep mutuality, and honoring God’s wondrous diversity in our midst.

2. Initiatives: Guided by the above principles, the PMN partners with the Office of Multicultural Ministries to cultivate God’s Pentecost vision through work in the following initiatives as well as others. These initiatives all seek to develop leadership, ignite church growth, and nurture transformation.

a. We seek partnerships with seminaries through our Seminary Action Team and other PMN Board initiatives. We encourage and support efforts to cultivate and nurture aptitude for multicultural ministries in our seminaries.

   • Our Seminary Action Team:
     — Inventories what is happening on seminary campuses.
     — Seeks one-on-one conversations with people in the seminary community who are interested in and/or already working on multicultural issues.
     — Makes recommendations for how the PMN can better support multicultural movements in our seminaries.

   • In the next five years the PMN seeks to designate a Seminary Action Team member on every Presbyterian-affiliated seminary campus.

b. The PMN seeks partnerships with executive and general presbyters and presbytery leaders.

   • The PMN is extending invitation to every executive and general presbyter and to presbytery leaders with an invitation mailing that introduces the PMN.

   • In the next five years, it seeks to identify and resource a “multicultural awareness resource champion” in every presbytery.

c. The PMN seeks partnership at presbytery and regional levels.

   • Seven presbytery multicultural teams already exist.

   • In the next five years it seeks to double that number.

d. The PMN has an active Multicultural Institute at Ghost Ranch Conference Center and a continuing partnership with Stony Point.

   • The PMN is establishing a new Multicultural Institute at Montreat Conference Center in North Carolina, beginning in November 2010.

   • In the next five years, the PMN seeks to increase our funding and participation in these institutes.

   e. The PMN supports and facilitates internships in multicultural contexts.

   • The PMN currently provides two to three multicultural church internships a year.

   • In the next five years it will seek to provide five multicultural church internships a year.

   f. The PMN, in partnership with the GAMC Office of Multicultural Ministries support, offers annual national multicultural conferences providing people and presbyteries opportunities for training, learning, and connecting.
The PMN has already moved from a workshop model to a more intensive track system allowing focused training in church growth, leadership development, and transformation.

Within five years it will have two coaching teams in place focusing on evangelism in diverse contexts and transformation of existing congregations.

For these reasons, it is crucial that the Presbyterian Multicultural Network, working in conjunction with the Office of Multicultural Ministries and the whole church take initiative and provide impetus for transformation and growth of multicultural congregations and ministries in the church.

Respectfully Submitted,

Endnotes

1. The PMN partners with Office of Multicultural Ministries in various ways including: funding support, sharing resources, strategic planning, consultative service, planning team partnerships, conference design teams, Institute funding and planning, and spiritual support and relationship.

2. Some verses that inform the biblical mandate: “When the day of Pentecost had come, they were all together in one place” (Acts 2:1), “… no longer Jew or Greek, … slave or free, … male or female …” (Gal. 3:28), “… a house of prayer for all peoples” (Isa. 56:7b), “… a great multitude that no one could count, from every nation, [tribe, people and language] …” (Rev. 7:9), “… [all] are one in Christ …” (Gal. 3:28), “Go therefore and make disciples of all nations …” (Mt. 28:19) (NRSV).

3. The Book of Order mandates the following: “[The Church is called] to a new openness to its own membership, by affirming itself as a community of diversity, becoming in fact as well as in faith a community of women and men of all ages, races, and conditions, and by providing for inclusiveness as a visible sign of the new humanity” (G-3.0401b). “The church in its witness to the uniqueness of the Christian faith is called to mission and must be responsive to diversity in both the church and the world. Thus the fellowship of Christians as it gathers for worship and orders its corporate life will display a rich variety of form, practice, language, program, nurture, and service to suit culture and need” (G-4.0401). “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions (married, single, widowed, or divorced) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church” (G-9.0104a) (G-4.0403).

5. Multicultural congregations intentionally recognize, celebrate, and incorporate diverse membership in worship, power sharing, and evangelism. These ministries may reflect this multicultural vision by utilizing diverse languages, arts, spiritual practices, and theological expressions in worship. Power Sharing may be reflected in equal representation on sessions, church boards, and executive positions, as well as inclusive modes of conversation and decision-making. Evangelism reflects multicultural intentions when the Good News is provided in a form that people respect and appreciate to their racial and cultural backgrounds.

6. The Book of Order has the following language for ordination vows: “Do you accept the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be, by the Holy Spirit, the unique and authoritative witness to Jesus Christ in the Church universal, and God’s Word to you?” (W-4.4003b).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 15-04 be approved.
The fastest growing church communities are in the multicultural area.

Resources are needed to aid the church in growing and resourcing multicultural, multiracial churches in these fast growing communities.

New models are needed for growing multicultural churches because of diverse needs that cannot be tracked or cultivated in the traditional ways.

Multicultural community members are asking the church for church development models and strategies as they move forward with growing the church.

Item 15-06

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the revised Partnership Covenant Between the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
Rationale

The covenant agreement between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through the GAMC, and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREIs) is reviewed on a four-year cycle.

In 2009, the Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges Covenant Task Force met, consisting of representatives from the GAMC and the Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges Presidents’ Roundtable (“Presidents’ Roundtable”). The Partnership Covenant Between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (“the covenant”) was revised and is presented for your approval. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved Institutional Standards for Participating in the Christmas Joy Offering (“Institutional Standards”). Information concerning the dissemination of funds from the Christmas Joy Offering designated for racial ethnic education is found in the Institutional Standard and thus, this information is not found in the covenant. The covenant, instead, focuses on the relationship and partnership of the GAMC and the HPREIs. In affirmation of this covenant, the GAMC and the Presidents’ Roundtable pledge to be mutually supportive of each other through our shared emphasis of educating and equipping racial ethnic women and men for lives of committed leadership within society and the church.

PARTNERSHIP COVENANT BETWEEN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) AND THE HISTORICALLY PRESBYTERIAN RACIAL ETHNIC INSTITUTIONS

Preamble:

The strong investment of the Presbyterian Church in education reflects John Calvin’s conviction that education should be an integral part of the church’s mission. Since colonial times the American Presbyterian Church, reflecting Calvin’s conviction, has sought: (1) to develop an educated clergy and provide educational service to the community of faith and (2) to educate for responsible citizenship and to serve the public good through education. Many institutions, colleges, and universities in the United States owe their beginnings to this heritage and were founded for these two purposes.

Westward expansion, the Civil War, and Reconstruction gave rise to new obligations and opportunities. The Church expanded its mission by providing access to education for those persons previously excluded. The establishment of African American, Native American, and Hispanic educational institutions became a central mission thrust of the entire Presbyterian Church.

Through the institutions it established, the Presbyterian Church provided educational opportunities which racial ethnic people had been denied. The institutions developed racial ethnic leaders who served society at large and the Church as well as their own racial ethnic constituency. These leaders espoused the Christian faith and the Presbyterian tradition. This mission has become a sacred trust for the Church and an investment in young people and adults who are challenged to serve the Church, the community, and society as a whole.

The Presbyterian Church’s commitment to this historic mission produced over 150 educational institutions, of which seven racial ethnic educational institutions continue to relate directly to the General Assembly through a covenant of understanding. They are as follows:

The Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions listed above (“Institutions”) are essential to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s mission of educating and equipping women and men for lives of committed leadership within society and the Church. These Institutions seek to guide and challenge individuals and to affirm them in their quest for values, knowledge and truth. The Institutions endeavor to provide students with the knowledge and understanding to make ethical decisions and to be responsible to family, community, church, and nation. Each Institution integrates faith and learning in a Christian environment and each is committed to meeting special needs in order to develop the unique potential of their students.
MUTUAL AFFIRMATIONS

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Institutions uphold education as a continuing priority of the Church. The General Assembly officially names the General Assembly Mission Council (“GAMC”) and its programmatic offices as its representative for program administration and ongoing relations. The General Assembly recognizes the Presidents’ Roundtable as the instrument through which the relationship of the Institutions is affected.

The parties to this covenant therefore mutually affirm that:

1. Our involvement in education is rooted in the Bible and the Reformed tradition and grows out of our commitment to Jesus Christ as Lord.
2. Our common mission is guided by “The Great Ends of the Church” (Book of Order, G-1.0200).
3. Our continuing commitment is to be involved together in service to God and society through education.
4. Our continuing partnership in mission is declared in this covenant, setting the basic guidelines for the joint and separate responsibilities of the General Assembly and the GAMC and the Institutions through their association named the Presidents’ Roundtable.

THE COMMITMENT OF HISTORICALLY PRESBYTERIAN RACIAL ETHNIC INSTITUTIONS

In affirmation of this covenant, the Institutions pledge (individually and mutually) to extend the Gospel of Jesus Christ through education which is open to all people. Each Institution is an instrument of witness for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), implementing a vision of people who “enter to learn and depart to serve” (Dr. Charles Stillman). In fulfillment of this shared mission and in support of the continuing relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Institutions pledge to be loyal to this mission of education.

1. We will continue the Church’s commitment to education and maintain the heritage of the racial ethnic mission of each school by emphasizing quality educational experiences for people of color within Institutions that are open to all. We will continue the commitment through programs that teach and model Christian values that adhere to standards of academic freedom, that maintain high standards of education, and that emphasize individual and corporate service to humankind.
2. We will interpret our collective and individual missions on behalf of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Throughout the Church, we will lift up this covenant relationship in publications and other communications of each Institution and will cooperate with efforts which provide interpretation of and advocacy for our Institutions within the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
3. We will provide opportunities for the guidance and interpretation of the mission and program of each Institution by having members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on each school’s Board of Trustees as is appropriate for each Institution.
4. Through a biennial report to the General Assembly, we will share the accomplishments and concerns of each Institution, in fulfillment of its mission and this covenant.
5. We will develop relationships with other entities within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for mutual support and affirmation. These relationships include but are not limited to the synods and presbyteries within which the Institutions are located, the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries area of the GAMC, the Mission Interpretation area of the GAMC, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, and the Board of Pensions. We will encourage them to explore avenues of mutual partnership.
6. We will exercise responsible stewardship of the resources provided through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by way of the Christmas Joy Offering and other designated funds and continue the pursuit of financial strength for ongoing fiscal operations. We will document our efforts through annual independent audits and annual program reports to the GAMC.
7. We will encourage use of the facilities, faculty and staff of each Institution by various entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

THE COMMITMENT OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly, in covenant partnership with the Institutions, will work through the Discipleship Committee of the GAMC and its appropriate ministry areas to affirm this commitment. The commitment of the General Assembly is expressed in several documents of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). 8.4 of the Articles of Agreement, the document that guided the Church in the Reunion of the two streams in 1983, is clear:

Racial ethnic educational institutions have been the primary source from which racial ethnic church leadership has developed. Consistent with the dire need for racial ethnic church leadership, the General Assembly Council shall propose to the General Assembly ways whereby the General Assembly shall be able to fulfill its responsibility for education through colleges and secondary schools and for meeting the operational and developmental needs of those Presbyterian schools that historically have served Black Americans and those serving other racial ethnic groups. (Book of Order, Articles of Agreement, 8.4)

In fulfillment of this shared mission and in support of the continuing relationship with the Institutions, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) pledges to be loyal to the mission of education in the following ways:

1. The General Assembly will call upon the GAMC and its ministry areas to report biennially to the General Assembly and other appropriate governing bodies on the mission of the Institutions.

2. The General Assembly, through the GAMC, will provide information regarding opportunities for funds development.

3. The General Assembly, through the GAMC, will support and articulate the unique challenges and blessings of educating poor people and partner in enhancing the success of the Christmas Joy Offering.

4. The General Assembly, through the GAMC, will provide transparent stewardship of funds intended for this mission and will provide official, audit-based reports of the Christmas Joy Offering to the Presidents’ Roundtable on an annual basis.

5. The General Assembly, through the GAMC and its ministry areas, will develop the appropriate linkages to support and advocate the mission of the Institutions within the national church. The GAMC will also encourage middle governing bodies to establish and maintain supportive relationships with the Institutions for continued mutual support.

6. The General Assembly, through the GAMC and its ministry areas, will provide avenues of interpretation of the mission of the Institutions throughout the church. The GAMC will also seek to utilize the expertise and facilities of the Institutions to resource the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

IMPLEMENTATION

The covenant relationship between the General Assembly and the Institutions shall be facilitated by the Institutions through the Presidents’ Roundtable and by biennial reports to the General Assembly. The reports to the General Assembly will be prepared by the Presidents’ Roundtable and the GAMC Office of Educational and Financial Support and will be submitted first to the Discipleship Committee, then to the GAMC, and finally to the General Assembly.

The covenant will be implemented by the General Assembly through the GAMC, and in particular the Office of Educational and Financial Support, which is lodged in the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries area. It is the Office of Educational and Financial Support that has the primary responsibility for day-to-day activity in reference to the affirmations of the covenant. These responsibilities include administration of the Christmas Joy Offering fund, administration of several endowments for the Institutions, administrative support to the Presidents’ Roundtable, and visits to the Institutions.

FORMAL APPROVAL

The Partnership Covenant Between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions will be made available to each member of the Boards of Trustees of the Institutions as well as other appropriate bodies for implementation. This covenant becomes operable upon its ratification by the Trustees of the Institutions named and by the General Assembly.

Recommendations for substantive changes whether initiated by the Church or the Institutions will be referred to the GAMC and its appropriate ministry area for preparation and action by the parties of the covenant.

REVIEW AND RENEWAL CYCLE

The General Assembly, through the GAMC and its appropriate ministry areas, and the Institutions, through the Presidents’ Roundtable, shall review, and when necessary, suggest revisions to this covenant. Revisions will generally be made at four-year intervals beginning with the date of adoption by the Presidents’ Roundtable and the Office of Educational and Financial Support on behalf of the Institutions and the GAMC. Copies of the covenant shall be given to the General Assembly through the GAMC and the Boards of Trustees of the Institutions through the Presidents’ Roundtable.

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) do the following:

1. Approve the following list of colleges and universities as those related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

   Agnes Scott College, Decatur, Ga.; Alma College, Alma, Mich.; Arcadia University, Glenside, Pa.; Austin College, Sherman, Tex.; Barber-Scotia College, Concord, N.C.; Belhaven University, Jackson, Miss.; Blackburn College, Carlinville, Ill.; Bloomfield College, Bloomfield, N.J.; Buena Vista University, Storm Lake, Iowa; Carroll University, Waukesha, Wis.; Centre College, Danville, Ky.; Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; The College of Idaho, Caldwell, Idaho; College of the Ozarks, Point Lookout, Mo.; The College of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio; Cook Native American Ministries, Tempe, Ariz.; Davidson College, Davidson, N.C.; Davis & Elkins College, Elkins, W.Va.; Eckerd College, St. Petersburg, Fla.; Grove City College, Grove City, Pa.; Hampden-Sydney College, Hampden-Sydney, Va.; Hanover College, Hanover, Ind.; Hastings College, Hastings, Nebr.; Illinois College, Jacksonville, Ill.; Jamestown College, Jamestown, N.Dak.; Johnson C. Smith University, Charlotte, N.C.;

   King College, Bristol, Tenn.; Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn.; Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.; Lake Forest College, Lake Forest, Ill.; Lees-McRae College, Banner Elk, N.C.; Lindenwood University, St. Charles, Mo.; Lyon College, Batesville, Ark.; Macalester College, St. Paul, Minn.; Mary Baldwin College, Staunton, Va.; Maryville College, Maryville, Tenn.; Millikin University, Decatur, Ill.; Missouri Valley College, Marshall, Mo.; Monmouth College, Monmouth, Ill.; Montreat College, Montreat, N.C.; Muskingum University, New Concord, Ohio; Peace College, Raleigh, N.C.; Pikeville College, Pikeville, Ky.; Presbyterian College, Clinton, S.C.; Queens University of Charlotte, Charlotte, N.C.; Rhodes College, Memphis, Tenn.; Rocky Mountain College, Billings, Mont.; St. Andrews Presbyterian College, Laurinburg, N.C.; Schreiner University, Kerrville, Tex.; Sheldon Jackson College, Sitka, Alaska;

2. Approve the following list of secondary schools as those related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

Bachman Academy, McDonald, Tenn.; Blair Academy, Blairstown, N.J.; Chamberlain-Hunt Academy, Port Gibson, Miss.; French Camp Academy, French Camp, Miss.; Goodland Academy, Hugo, Okla.; Menaul School, Albuquerque, N.Mex.; Presbyterian Pan-American School, Kingsville, Tex.; Rabun Gap-Nacoochee School, Rabun Gap, Ga.; Wasatch Academy, Mt Pleasant, Utah.

Rationale

It has been customary for the General Assembly annually to recognize and approve a list of institutions related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through history, tradition, and covenants with governing bodies, and various relationships of program and financial support.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the development of a task force of nine people appointed by the Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to study racial ethnic and new immigrant church growth. The task force would meet for three days each meeting, up to three times a year for two years (eighteen meeting days). This group would have the responsibility to do the following:

1. Review the strategy from 1998, in consultation with staff in the Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth offices.

2. Analyze and determine reasons for not reaching the 1998 goal.

3. Identify middle governing bodies who are responding to demographic change in effective and faithful ways, and collect modes of new church development and transformation that can work in other contexts.

4. Discern what resources—personnel, funding, multimedia, technology, social networking, and other—are needed at the General Assembly level to assist and support efforts at the middle governing level.

5. In light of Jesus’ continuing call to us to repent of our racism and to make disciples of all nations (Mt. 28:19), revisit the goal set in 1998 and determine what the call to the church is now that we as a church might become a reflection of Jesus in the world.

[Financial Implication: (2010) $17,970 (2011); $27,205 (2012); $9,735 (Per Capita—GAMC).]

The 208th General Assembly (1996) approved a resolution that set a goal of 20 percent racial ethnic and new immigrant membership by 2010 (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 53, 378). They directed the creation of an action plan and detailed strategies for implementing the goals. The church has not met this goal.

The ACREC has accepted the responsibility of monitoring the progress of this General Assembly action. In an effort to discern where we are on the goal, we have met with staff; consulted with racial ethnic caucuses, fellowships, and councils, and consulted with emerging new immigrant groups. We are excited and grateful for the significant potential for church growth in racial ethnic and new immigrant communities. In response to the call of Christ and the challenges and opportunities in demographic shifts already in place and increasing in scope, depth and pace, we recommend this action to the General Assembly.

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture.
Recommendation 5 from this report states: “In light of Jesus’ continuing call to us to repent of our racism and to make disciples of all nations (Mt. 28:19), revisit the goal set in 1998 and determine what the call to the church is now that we as a church might become a reflection of Jesus in the world.”

The church has not yet met the goal of 20 percent racial ethnic and new immigrant membership by 2010.

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) convene a conversation within the larger church to develop a comprehensive strategy for addressing the concern for Hispanic/Latino/a leadership at all levels of the church that would include and be led by no less than two representatives appointed or elected by each of the following groups: the PC(USA) Hispanic/Latino/a Caucus, the PC(USA) Office of Vocation, the Advisory Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns, the Committee on Theological Education, and the General Assembly Mission Council. Other groups and/or appropriate individuals may be invited into the conversations with all individually responsible for reporting to their respective groups and corporately back to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Rationale

The COTE received communications and representatives from the Hispanic/Latino/a Caucus on the need for trained Hispanic Presbyterian leadership in the PC(USA). The committee deeply regrets the lack of visible Hispanic/Latino/a perspective in the PC(USA)’s seminaries. The COTE will gather information on what is currently offered; urge imaginative structural changes to enable Hispanic/Latino/a participation at M.Div., certificate levels, and doctoral levels, and intentional recruitment of Hispanic/Latino/a scholars; and commits to assisting seminaries with the inclusion of Hispanic/Latino/a scholarship in the curriculum and to monitor their progress. This concern is part of a larger conversation needed within the larger church to develop a comprehensive strategy for addressing the concern for Hispanic/Latino/a leadership at all levels of the church. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns also communicated with COTE on this same subject.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommends that Item 15-09 be approved with the following comment:

“This recommendation arose in response to concerns raised by the Hispanic/Latino/a Caucus and ACREC in light of the loss of all faculty positions at PC(USA) seminaries outside Puerto Rico previously held by Hispanic/Latino/a scholars. Consultation on this process should be done with the Hispanic/Latino/a Caucus and ACREC on the need for diverse, trained Presbyterian leadership for the PC(USA).”

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the Advice and Counsel of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) with the addition of this comment: The ACWC would encourage the inclusion of a focus on the intersection of race and gender in the consultation.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is also troubled by the loss of all PC(USA) faculty positions that were held by Hispanic/Latino people in seminaries outside of Puerto Rico, but would like also to draw attention the fact that all of these positions were held by men. While we join in ACREC’s advocacy for Hispanic/Latino/a people in general, ACWC would note especially the importance of considering here and always the intersection of gender with race. Unfortunately, many situations in which race and ethnicity or racism is being considered and combated, the perspective of being a woman within this marginalized group is never considered. Women within racial ethnic groups find themselves in a unique situation that often serves to marginalize them doubly—once as a racial ethnic person, and again as a woman. While we would also maintain that consultation should be done with the Hispanic/Latino/a Caucus and ACREC, we would hope that perhaps the Women of Color Joint Working Group would also be included in this consultation as well, as they are focused on celebrating and lifting up the voices and experiences of racial ethnic women in the church in particular.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 15-09

Comment on Item 15-09—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) shares the concerns of Item 15-09 and advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve its recommendation to convene a conversation within the larger church to develop a comprehensive strategy for addressing the concern for Hispanic/Latino/a participation at all levels of the church, and in particular, leadership.

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) is charged to help remind the PC(USA) and hold it accountable that that all the Church’s diversity should be represented in all areas of its life.

In a recent article, Daniel Aleshire, Executive Director of the Association of Theological Seminaries points out that while Hispanic/Latinos/as comprise about 13.8 percent of the U.S. and Canada population combined, the percentage of Hispanic/Latinos/as enrolled in the fall of 2007 in theological schools was only 4.2 percent. This disparity demonstrates that Hispanic/Latinos/as are significantly underrepresented. The gap is recognized throughout theological education in the US and Canada.

Item 15-09 recognizes the gap present in Presbyterian seminaries and provides a means to address the concern. In response to the challenges encountered in reaching and serving Hispanic communities, it is necessary to develop a plan to affirm and promote Hispanic/Latino/a ministries and to do so with a table of concerned parties.

In particular, the PC(USA) needs to encourage and support the inclusion of Hispanic/Latino/a students, professors, and instructors at the seminary level. This will not only ensure continuity and expansion of Hispanic/Latino/a ministries, but also to help non-Hispanic students become aware of context and work toward becoming trans-cultural, exposing them to voices different from their own, helping them understand, and to be sensitive to the cultural realities and values of this gifted part of the family of God. If the PC(USA) is to live up to its statements valuing diversity and pledging to increase Hispanic/Latino/a participation at all levels of the Church, then it needs to provide real opportunities for Hispanic/Latino/a students and teachers in its theological education settings and work to make sure schools provide a community within which they can thrive.

Item 15-09 renews these efforts. In Item 15-09, the church will be addressing a systemic problem, creating greater capacity for effective evangelization among Hispanics/Latinos/as and by Hispanics/Latinos/as (a growing cultural group, and a growing and potentially vital part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)). This effort may also provide an example of inclusive/adaptive leadership and serve as a model for addressing other areas of disparity in the future.

“‘Cast the net to the right side of the boat, and you will find some.’ So they cast it, and now they were not able to haul it in because there were so many fish” (Jn. 21:6).

Item 15-10

The Youth Task Force recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following as the new vision statement for the church and youth in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

“In the midst of a beautiful and broken world, we have a vision for ministry with young people that unites youth in Christ with all other generations and proclaims the love of God that is without end. This vision gives us hope for a church that

• is authentic, comprised of communities of faith that live what they proclaim;

• participates in, and pays witness to, the lively, joyous reality of the grace of God for the whole world;

• helps young people to understand what it means to be saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, so that they will, as God does, view all people with love and possibility;
This vision statement is a final response to the following referral:

2008 Referral: Item 17-3NB. Recommendation. Direct the Moderator of the General Assembly to Appoint a Task Force to Seek Input from Youth, Young Adults, and Adults to Continue the Dialogue Begun at This Assembly; Find and Present Model Programs; and Focus on Needs and Development of Youth Ministries and Report Back to 219th General Assembly (2010) Specific Recommendations for Designing and Conducting Various Youth Ministries Under a “New Vision” for Youth (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 16, 1405).

Our task as commissioned by the 218th General Assembly (2008) was “to continue the dialogue begun at this assembly; find and present model programs; and focus on the needs and development of youth ministries, and report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010) specific recommendations for designing and conducting various youth ministries under a ‘new vision’ for youth” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1405). “Youth” or “young people,” as described in this report and understood by the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), Office of Ministries with Youth, includes adolescents, age 12–18 years old and preadolescents (for some tween programs) 9–11 years old.

The task force convened for the first time in person in Atlanta in the summer of 2009 during the Big Tent event from June 11–15. Through discussion and prayer, we discerned that the best way to “continue the dialogue begun at [the] assembly” and to “seek information” was to interview Presbyterians of all ages and from varied roles in the church (youth, educators, national staff, pastors, youth workers, elders, etc) about the role of youth in the church using a list of eleven questions that we prepared as a group. This wide-reaching interview process was the manner in which we gathered a large mass of information, approximately four hundred interviews in all, to offer the most comprehensive picture of the church as possible. At the Atlanta meeting, we collected the first 135 interviews. We felt that this process was very fruitful, and we decided to continue our data collection as we returned to our home congregations and as some of us traveled to presbytery meetings, camps, and summer youth conferences. We also conducted interviews using a variety of electronic and social media networks (e.g. Facebook).

Every member of the task force participated in the interview process. However, we felt increasingly that our General Assembly-appointed task was a two-pronged assignment: one was creating a “new vision for youth” and an accompanying publicity campaign to raise awareness of youth in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and of the theological significance of youth ministry and the other to “find and present model programs” for youth. Thus, the task force divided itself into two work groups: the “vision” team and the “model programs” team.

A. Vision Team

Once formed, the vision team decided to focus on the responses to question numbers 9 and 11 from the master interview question list, which read: “What basic ideas, issues, or concepts does the church need to pass on to young people? (As opposed to school, family, friends, etc.) What is the church’s role in youth ministry? The young person’s local Presbyterian church?” (9) and “We learn from scripture that ‘Where there is no vision—the people will perish.’ If the Presbyterian Church were to try and capture a vision for its young people—what would be important to YOU to include in this vision? Words, concepts, ideals, scriptures, statements?” (11). We felt these pertained most specifically to the Vision Team’s task of gleaning the church’s vision from the interviews, yet all responses were considered and utilized in the process of creating the Vision Statement.

After the meeting in Atlanta concluded, we had several Go-To or online meetings over the summer. This brainstorming, combined with our extensive information gathering through the interviews, prepared us for the second and final in-person meeting in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, from September 18–21. At this meeting, we looked at the 1990 Vision Statement, and found that while it contained visionary language for 1990 and the subsequent years the task was to come back to the 219th with a “new vision” for the church and youth. While the 1990 statement has served as an excellent foundational vision for youth ministry, it did not adequately represent the youth of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) today. Thus, guided by prayer, we were able to synthesize what we found to be the most recurrent themes in the interviews. We, a task force of youth, young adults, and adult mentors, also drew from our own personal experiences, Christian practices, and faith journeys to contribute to the vision statement.
This synthesis process consisted of creative and careful sifting exercises to narrow down the list of a hundred words and phrases that spoke to the overarching sentiments of the interviews and our discussions, to thirteen words. We then took those words that inspired us, and had a discussion about our interpretation of the core meaning or principle behind each. Finally, we created one sentence for each word, and through an editing process post-Harrisburg, we honed the statement down even further for conciseness, rhythm, and clarity. The editing process was conducted by a writing team and approved by the larger assembly that while young people yearn to be a part of the church they are, and the adults called to accompany them are, unsure about how to fit into an institution so historically situated and confessionally rich as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A). Who is going to be there for the church in the future? A young person asking the question could be met with the answer “We will be there!” A parent asking could find comfort in the answer “We will, adults who care about your child’s faith and place in the world!” The church is asking as it ponders its future livelihood and might find, as they look to the youth room that young people are saying “We will be there!” One could answer, “I am!,” “We are!,” or “God is!” We felt that this somewhat enigmatic question was very open-ended, and thus could foster discussion among church members, and draw attention to youth issues in the church. It is our hope that this campaign be financially supported, visually accompanied, and denominationally circulated through the work of the members of this task force, through the commissioners at the 219th General Assembly (2010), and in the work of the national Ministries with Youth office and the national Presbyterian Youth Workers’ Association.

1. A Campaign for Visibility of Youth and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

As a result of the aforementioned sifting process that occurred during the Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, meeting, we also came up with a tag-line or motto for youth in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The phrase, “Who’s Gonna Be There?” spoke to us in a plethora of ways. Taken literally, “Who’s Gonna Be There?” is the question that youth and young adults frequently ask when attending youth group or other church events. It reflects their need for community and strong relationships at church to encourage their attendance. More figuratively, this phrase embodies questions concerning the future of the PC(USA). Who is going to be there for the church in the future? A young person asking the question could be met with the answer “We will be there!” A parent asking could find comfort in the answer “We will, adults who care about your child’s faith and place in the world!” The church is asking as it ponders its future livelihood and might find, as they look to the youth room that young people are saying “We will be there!” One could answer, “I am!,” “We are!,” or “God is!” We felt that this somewhat enigmatic question was very open-ended, and thus could foster discussion among church members, and draw attention to youth issues in the church. It is our hope that this campaign be financially supported, visually accompanied, and denominationally circulated through the work of the members of this task force, through the commissioners at the 219th General Assembly (2010), and in the work of the national Ministries with Youth office and the national Presbyterian Youth Workers’ Association.

2. A Word About Young People and Their Vision for the Church ...

We found that it was challenging to interpret the responses given by youth during the interview process. In many ways this mirrors the normal disconnect between what a young person feels about being a Christian and how they then articulate their own personal belief. By and large, the youth interviewed had difficulty verbally articulating the specific shape of their faith or of their belief in Jesus Christ. Most of the youth that were interviewed were very clear and, for the most part, enthusiastic about the centrality of their home congregation (or a congregation with whom they are connected) in their life. They were able to describe how a particular congregation welcomed them, helped them learn, nurtured them, and taught them, but they had difficulty describing what the result of this nurture was. As we reflected on these interviews, we thought it was important to identify this pattern. We also recognize that it is very common among youth that they acknowledge they believe in Jesus Christ and desire to follow Christ but have difficulty expressing this as a job for the church or for their family or for themselves. Adults who were interviewed, however, had much to say about youth, youth in the church, and their (the adult being interviewed) vision for young people. We mention this pattern because we believe it is important to hold up to the assembly that while young people yearn to be a part of the church they are, and the adults called to accompany them are, unsure about how to fit into an institution so historically situated and confessionally rich as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) when the faith of many/most young people is more fluid, developing, and still developing in its shape.

B. Model Programs Team

The Model Programs team approached the task of finding and presenting model programs with open minds, enthusiasm, and most of all, excitement to see the ways in which youth across the United States are developing their faith, participating in fellowship, giving back, and praising and worshiping God together.

The interviews that were collected at the Big Tent in Atlanta, and continued to be collected in the following months, were the initial and primary source of information for the beginning of the process of seeking out model programs. The model programs team paid special attention to the responses to the following questions: “If you are involved in a congregation, youth group, or another source of Christian ministry—what is the best thing about that ministry? Why do you say this is the best?” As this question was directed purposely at youth and young adults, it allowed the model programs team to get direct input from youth about the standout programs and ministries in which they are involved and from which they are learning and growing. Also, the team was able to learn a great deal about what youth believe are key elements for effective youth ministry, and what can make or break a youth ministry. See Attachment C for a list of patterns that were identified in the interviews; programs and practices that are and are not working in youth ministry. Common threads included good, committed leadership, a safe place for questioning and developing faith, the importance of being known and valued by the larger church, and the value of the sense of purpose gained through youth group and community outreach/mission events. As one young woman stated, “I love the connections you make with people. It allows you to get to know other teens in your congregation and denomination and spend time with them having fun and being there for each other. It also connects you with the adults of your church and the community through service projects done in the church or outside the church in your area.” Other youths cited openness, learning about Jesus, being instantly welcomed, and the family-like atmosphere. According to a high school-aged boy, the best thing about youth ministry at the level of his presbytery “is that it takes a great interest in its youth and their opinions. As a youth myself, I have learned so much from serving on a pastor nominating committee to serving as a youth advisory delegate. In all the things I have participated in, my opinion has always been valued and for this I have loved serving in all these ministries.”

Another question to which we paid special attention was: “Does your church have a strong youth ministry program? If so, what do you think they do that is effective? If not, what do you think is not working?” This question was not asked exclusively of youth, but rather of all people of all ages and roles. Oftentimes it provided a unique perspective of adults and their impressions of youth ministry in their church, as viewed from the outside. A member of a congregation in his forties, for example, said that what makes his church’s youth ministry program especially effective is the attention to developing relationships with the whole church. In spite of this, however, he pointed out that there is still room for improvement: “We have two youth on session but they are called youth elders and that ruins the call. I think that they aren’t called simply because they are youth. It’s the same way with ‘Youth Sunday’ because I think the church thinks we have one Sunday to feature youth and then we are done with them the rest of the year. I want every Sunday to be Youth Sunday.” This call for greater inclusion of youth was echoed throughout many interviews.

The last interview question that the model programs team targeted was: “What organizations could give Presbyterians a good lesson about youth ministry? Are any organizations doing things that might help us?” In regards to the last part of the question, the answer was almost unanimously “yes.” In support of this view, people cited existing Presbyterian entities, such as Montreat Conference Center and programs like Young Adult Volunteers, as well as ecumenical organizations such as Young Life. A few people mentioned the Coca-Cola Corporation due to its highly effective method of varying marketing according to audience, even across cultures, and overall, any organization that is successfully able to get people to rally behind its cause. Interviewees cited Barack Obama’s presidential campaign, the Susan B. Komen campaign for breast cancer awareness, and initiatives like Invisible Children that inspire people to make a difference in the world. The value of these statements was not that youth ministry in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should be concerned with multimillion dollar marketing campaigns, nor that we should start recruiting youth to form a bigger voting constituency, but rather that there are facets of all of the above programs/campaigns that we would do well to adapt and/or model and implement.

The information that we garnered from the initial Big Tent interviews, as well as our personal interviews in the following months, formed a solid foundation for the beginning of our work. Next followed the assignment of finding and documenting specific programs, a task that we were admittedly somewhat unsure of how to approach. The Atlanta meeting at the Big Tent ended with a charge to each work group member to find two model programs that he or she would be able to present at our next face-to-face meeting in Harrisburg. Although this was a seemingly small step, it served as a way to get the ball rolling and begin the process of discerning what to do with our incoming information, which was one of the first questions we would tackle in Harrisburg—where to go to find model programs, who would know about excellent programs, where to store the programs, what to search for, how to organize them, etc. Also, what would we hope to do with the final body of information?

During our second face-to-face meeting in Harrisburg, we were able to bring together and review the programs we had collected independently. It seemed that we had all encountered a similar difficulty: many youth, youth workers, etc. struggled with the ambiguity of the term “model program,” and were often hesitant to label any of the ministries that they had created or were involved in as model. Our team, then, reflected on how to better define what, exactly, a model program is, how to continue to make our search for model programs known, and how to best encourage people to respond.

We began by drafting a letter that could easily be disseminated via many channels and assigned work group members with specific tasks of distributing it to certain contacts. The letter was sent to all members’ youth-related Presbyterian Facebook groups, including the Presbyterian Youth Workers Association (PYWA). The letter was posted by Moderator Bruce Reyes-Chow, on his blog, and by Gina Yeager-Buckley, associate for Ministries with Youth, on the GAMC Ministries with Youth website. And as all task force members are from geographically diverse parts of the United States, we were each responsible for sending the letter out to personal contacts and our respective presbyteries so that they might forward it to interested and connected individuals.

The letter included directions for sending information about model programs to an e-mail address that was created for collecting suggestions, and that all work group members could access. The e-mail submissions were then added to a wiki website: www.modelprograms.wikia.com. The wiki proved to be a great way to store all of our information in one place, especially since we could all edit the page and make our own additions of model programs. For each program, we felt it was necessary to provide a description, contact information, and suggestions for adapting a program to a specific congregational demographic (e.g. larger or smaller groups of people). Our rationale for providing adaptations was that while a church may not be able to implement a certain program in its entirety, it could possibly adopt a part of it or use an idea as inspiration for a new program better suited to fit their needs.

The programs were categorized under labels that were created based on careful reflection on the interviews. We looked for patterns in responses to the question “What distances young people from the church?” A few common answers included youth not having voice in their congregation, the church not being open to change, and a lack of mentoring in the church. We referred to these answers, along with sixteen other commonly occurring responses, as “needs” or “issues” in the church, and they helped us to categorize model programs according to what need or issue they addressed. Using these needs, we formed eight basic categories that all the model programs seemed to fit into: Empowerment, Worship, Leadership Development, Fellowship/Outreach, College Ministry, Mentoring, Stewardship/Fundraising, and Interfaith/Ecumenical. We placed forty-seven model programs that we collected into the eight categories. These programs can be found in Attachment B. Please note that the full description of the programs, as well as ideas for adapting them to various sized congregations, governing bodies, budget, etc…, can be found by viewing the following link: www.modelprograms.wikia.com

C. Chairperson’s Final Remarks

As mentioned several times in this report, the task force chose to meet both face-to-face and using electronic media. Due to a limited budget, it was not feasible to fly the task force members to a meeting more than twice. Knowing that we were charged to meet four times, we chose to meet face-to-face twice although broke our first face-to-face meeting at the Big Tent up into two parts, counting it as two meetings. Our Harrisburg meeting served as our second face-to-face but was counted as our third meeting. The limited budget and few opportunities to gather the task force meant a great deal of our work had to be completed while living and working thousands of miles apart. The task force chose to use Go-To meetings, which are meetings conducted over a computer. Participants are able to speak to one another as well as see a common screen so editing could happen on the spot. We felt this form of working together, while not as ideal as face-to-face meetings, was extremely effective and important in completing our assigned task. Using Go-To, the task force as able to hold eight separate meetings and accomplish our work in a relatively short period of time. We, as a task force, would like to encourage the use of this technology to the 219th General Assembly (2010). As resources are increasingly limited and in demand, we believe creative use of media will be essential in the way our denomination moves forward and conducts its business in the future. It is also a language young people understand and can use effectively in order to lead in the church and in the world.

As chair, I would like to thank this task force. As mentioned, it was comprised of ten youth and young adults as well as five adults. We were able to model what we hope the church will live out as the young people on the task force gave of their ideas, dreams, and unique gifts leading us in our work and finally offering what we believe to be a helpful report, inspiring model programs, and a fresh vision statement. And finally, I would like to thank Gina Yeager-Buckley for her guidance, wisdom, and faithful work with this task force. We are fortunate to have such a faithful servant in our denominational offices.

Interview/Survey Questions

(Questions might be specific to youth or adult—interviewer should communicate this)

Name of Interviewer:_______________________________________

Name of person being interviewed:________________________________

Age/Role of person being interviewed:_____________________________________

Location of interview:______________________________________________________

1. What attributes make youth unique disciples of Jesus? Unique members of the church? What is the unique “thing” about youth in our church?

2. What attributes should an adult youth worker (volunteer, youth minister, educator, pastor, teacher, mentor) or mentor have?

3. What, in your opinion distances young people from the church? Or, causes them to feel disconnected from the church? Or from God? Or from the Presbyterian Church? Or from the Christian faith?

4. If you’re a youth— if you are involved in a congregation, youth group, or another source of Christian ministry— what is the best thing about that ministry? Why do you say this is “the best”?

5. How is that ministry helping you be a more mature Christian? A better person?

6. Does your church have a strong youth ministry program? If so, what do you think they do that is effective? If not, what do you think is not working?
7. What is ONE THING that you can do to strengthen and/or support youth in the church? (Please note whom is answering: e.g. youth, adult, older, younger, etc…)

8. Why do you think youth ministry is important for the Presbyterian Church? What is it specifically about our denomination our “flavor” of Christian discipleship that needs young people connected to it?

9. What basic ideas, issues, or concepts does the church need to pass on to young people? (As opposed to school, family, friends, etc…) What is the church’s role in youth ministry? The young person’s local Presbyterian church?

10. What organizations could give Presbyterians a good lesson about youth ministry? Any organizations doing things that might help us? (e.g. Disney, Facebook, CNN, etc….)

11. We learn from scripture that “Where there is no vision—the people will perish.” If the Presbyterian Church were to try and capture a vision for its young people—what would be important to YOU to include in this vision? Words, concepts, ideals, scriptures, statements?

Youth Task Force

Empowerment

Trinity Presbyterian of Boise, Idaho—Oregon Mission Trip: Youth camped on the Lostine Presbyterian Church yard in Oregon for a week, helped to run VBS and a local mission project, did some maintenance work on the church grounds, and helped the elderly church members and friends. A sign-up sheet was posted a few weeks in advance, and folks wrote down what they needed help with: ... washing windows, pruning trees, weeding a garden, or anything they could not do for themselves. The youth took it seriously and deeply. Leadership stated that in their opinion, in the field of “mission trips,” this was much more effective and useful than a trip to Mexico where the youth do not speak the language or understand the culture. It was a highly relevant and on-target expression of mission.

- Adaptation: Use this model for a mission trip in any local community of need. Explore areas near your church or in your presbytery and connect with a church within a community of need. Connect to local families and join together in a mutual mission.

- Contact: Trinity Presbyterian Church, Boise, Idaho. tpcboise@qwestoffice.net

Youth Ministries for Peace and Justice: Rebuilds the neighborhoods of Bronx River and Soundview/Bruckner in the South Bronx by preparing young people to become prophetic voices for peace and justice. This is accomplished through political education, spiritual formation, and youth and community development and organizing. It also uses art as a medium for social and political transformation.

- Adaptation: Create or participate in an urban setting mission program.

- Contact: http://www.ympj.org

“Youth Urban Immersion,” Broad Street Ministry, Philadelphia: A broad-minded Christian Community that cherishes creativity, fosters and nurtures artistic expression, extends hospitality, and works for a more just world through civic engagement. Broad street hosts a number of programs including the Homeless Cafe (and a number of other services for the homeless), No Barriers Community Dinner, and offers an immersion experience for youth mission trips.

- Adaptation: Create a space of welcome in your church for those who are in need in your neighborhood. Host other youth groups at your church and plan mission days in your community together.

- Contact: http://www.broadstreetministry.org, The Reverend Erika Funk—Youth Initiative Minister. (215) 735-4847 or info@broadstreetministry.org.

Mission Possible, Harpeth Presbyterian Church, Davidson College Presbyterian Church and Pleasant Hill Presbyterian Church: A joint venture mission experience for middle school youth. In the past, participating churches have included Swarthmore in Pennsylvania, Davidson College in North Carolina, and Pleasant Hill in Georgia, and more. These churches travel to one another’s towns and participate in mission projects in which the local congregation is involved. Youth share the love of Christ by serving in these mission organizations; learning about urban poverty issues; participating in worship, Bible study, and spirituality practices; engaging in fellowship and recreation; and reflecting on the experience with other youth. They also visit important landmarks and sites in the downtown area where they are serving. “Mission Possible” is a wonderful way to engage youth in mission, as well as educate them about the nature of the connectionism of Presbyterians.
- Adaptation: Your youth group visiting different cities and different churches (not necessarily a preset partnership) and working through the specific ministries of that congregation.
- Contact: Alan Bancroft, associate pastor at Harpeth Presbyterian Church. alanbancroft@comcast.net.
- Also See: PDA (Presbyterian Disaster Assistance).

Invisible Children Night Commute: Youth in the United States join in solidarity with children in Uganda who walk to city centers to avoid being kidnapped by rebel soldiers. These youth promote awareness of the 23-year-long war in Uganda while experiencing walking to a city center and sleeping outdoors.

- Adaptation: Awareness walk for a cause, Crop Walk, Box-a-thon. Contact invisible children to see if your youth group and church can provide a base of support for their yearly awareness experience in your city. Host the night commute in your sanctuary one evening for the entire church or local youth groups.

Presbytery of St. Augustine, Box-a-thon: This is an overnight event that helps raise awareness about hunger and homelessness. Youth pledge to spend twenty-four hours in a cardboard box, thus learning how it feels to be homeless. The leadership of the event plans related activities, such as “working” (can be turned into a volunteer project) for food stamps, which the youth can then use to “buy” and ration their limited amount of food. Also, movies such as “Homeless to Harvard,” “Pursuit of Happiness,” and “With Honors” are appropriate to show, as well as games/activities that help youth learn about the realities of homelessness and hunger, and what they can do to help. The box-a-thon can also be used as a fundraiser—youth can get their fellow church members to pledge a certain amount of money for every hour spent in their box. The Presbytery of St. Augustine does the Box-a-thon annually as a presbytery-wide event.

- Adaptation: The Box-a-thon could also be done on a smaller level, such as with one youth group, as an intergenerational church activity, or by combining area youth groups, if numbers are small.
- Contact: Katie Day, Palms Presbyterian Church, katie.day@palmschurch.org.
- Also see: “Homeless for the Homeless”—A similar program in which young people are invited to spend twenty-four hours in the shoes of a homeless person. They sleep in a local park, and are allowed to use cardboard boxes and nothing else. After spending twelve hrs (7p.m.–7a.m.) in a local park, 12 more hours (7a.m.–7p.m.) are spent volunteering at homeless ministries.

No More Deaths: Since 1998, more than 2,000 Mexican men, women, and children have died trying to cross the U.S.-Mexico border, a situation that has been brought on by economic inequality, ill-conceived U.S. border policy, and the harsh conditions of the Sonoran Desert. No More Deaths is a direct action program that seeks to stop these deaths by preventing and raising awareness about the violence and cruelty to migrants, as well as by providing water, food, and medical assistance to migrants walking through the Arizona desert. They also monitor U.S. operations on the border and work to change U.S. policy to resolve the “war zone” crisis, and to bring the plight of migrants to public attention. No More Deaths has a number of volunteer opportunities; volunteers under 18 must be accompanied by an adult.

- Adaptation: Check to see where migrant workers are in your area. What are their needs? Contact them to see how you or your church can help—perhaps even something as simple as English-language training/tutoring.
- Contact: http://www.nomoredeaths.org, action@nomoredeaths.org.
- Also see: Frontera de Cristo (a specifically Presbyterian border ministry).

Eco Stewards: Seeks to train and inspire young adults 18–24 in the ways of eco-stewardship within the wider context of our Christian faith. The Eco-Stewards Program is actively recruiting passionate, dedicated young people to join our team of inspired citizens, pastors, camp directors, and environmental professionals to help plan our 2010 Eco-Stewards Program in southern West Virginia. Our intention is to co-create an eight-day program in early summer with a core group of 18–24 year olds that is attentive to where God is working—through both people and places—in southern West Virginia. We will learn from and work alongside Christians who are answering God’s call to protect and restore local communities, mountains, streams, and human relationships.

- Adaptation: Explore eco-stewardship as part of any summer retreat or as part of your Sunday school program.
- Contact: Brian Frick, Brian.Frick@pcusa.org.

The Presbyterian Church at Tenafly Light bulb Project: The youth of The Presbyterian Church at Tenafly gather monthly for youth group. They are a smaller group, and after dinner, they go into the homes of the elderly of their community and change all of their light bulbs to more environmentally friendly light bulbs. The mission committee of the church provides the light bulbs.
Adaptation: Join with the deacons or other appropriate committee of your church to bring environmentally friendly light bulbs into your church buildings and then into the homes of shut-ins in your congregation.

Contact: Presbyterian Church at Tenafly, www.tenaflychurch.org.

Adopt-a-Family for Christmas: The senior high youth group (PYC) works with the government agency called Headstart (a preschool program for low-income families) to adopt families in need and provide Christmas gifts for them. The agency director provides the church with the family’s names, ages, sizes, and any special requests for gifts. The youth invited the entire church family to help contribute to this project by donating gently used or new household items, clothing, or toys. Whatever is not donated, the youth then supply through a fundraising event or their own contributions money to shop as a group for the items yet needed for this family. They also wrap all the gifts, always including a Bible for any of the children and then deliver the gifts to the home. Over the years, food baskets and even a live Christmas tree have been delivered. It is a very meaningful mission and stewardship project.

Adaptations: Talk with local agencies that work with those in need to discover what items are needed around the holidays or throughout the year. The youth group can serve as the clearinghouse for items donated and be responsible for delivering the items collected.

Contact: contact pending.

Free-for-All: Last year, recognizing the economic hardship brought on by the collapse of the economy, one of our folks said we should host an upscale yard sale, but instead of charging for the stuff, simply give it away. We started collecting goods one week before the Free for All. We had contacts with a local morning show host who agreed to do a live remote the Wednesday before the event. Unbelievable amounts of stuff came in from all over the community. We literally had people driving thirty and forty miles to bring us stuff to give away.

The youth decided that their part in this event would be to take care of the kids that came with moms and dads who were in many ways selecting Christmas gifts. They planned activities and crafts. They set up coffee stations to give coffee and hot chocolate away to folks. They carried stuff out to cars and they sang Christmas carols. The youth made the place fun.

It was the first event we had done in years that included every age group of the church, but the event was transformed by the excitement and energy of the youth. Seven hundred people came through the doors that Saturday morning, and there was absolutely nothing left at the end of the day.

Adaptation: Free-For-All can work in a small or large community because the goods donated are likely in proportion to the need of the community. Hold the event inside the church building or outside on the lawn so people driving by may be intrigued. Place large “Free” signs around the Free-for-All to encourage passers-by to stop and “shop.”

Worship

Columbia Theological Seminary—Anna Carter Florence: As the assistant Professor of Preaching, Anna Carter Florence offers a course in Preaching and Youth. This course offers an opportunity for seminary students to learn how to preach to young people.

Adaptation: Have preaching professors from each seminary to gather with youth from the PC(USA) and imagine worship for a new church.

Contact: FlorenceA@CTSNET.edu

Pioneer Memorial Presbyterian Church, Jeff and Kerri Peterson-Davis: This is a model for interactive worship. Preaching takes place as a dialogue between Jeff and Kerri; they don’t stand behind a pulpit but rather in front of the congregation. One discusses the biblical story, and the other tells a story relating to the story.

Adaptation: A pastor of a church could preach in a way that is more conversational.

Contact: Jeff and Kerri Peterson-Davis, http://www.pioneersolon.com/

Youth Sunday on Wheels in Grace Presbytery: This program is designed to provide a Youth Sunday for congregations that wouldn’t otherwise have one, whether due to low numbers of youth or other reasons. There are several model services that are used repeatedly, complete with music, Scripture, and a sermon.

Adaptation: If your youth group is planning a Youth Sunday, offer to do it the week before or after for a local congregation without youth in your presbytery. Connect with a smaller church that has a few youth and offer to assist in creating a youth Sunday. After youth Sunday, have your youth use the same format and partner with another youth group to guide them on youth Sunday at their church.

Contact: Grace Presbytery, Rick Carus, rick@gracepresbytery.org.
Presbyterian Campus Ministry at Vanderbilt—“Stories we live by”: After a sermon, one student every week tells a difficult story from their life, which helps not only build community, but also create a safe, trusting environment. This adds depth and meaning to the sermon and opens up dialogue after worship about daily life and places where the message might be helpful or relevant.

- Adaptation: Have youth (who are willing) tell stories at youth group and talk about how this has impacted their faith. A theme for your youth year might be “Our story, their story, God’s story,” and focus on the art of storytelling as a way to open up the word of God in powerful and dynamic ways.

Ridgefield Crystal Lake Presbyterian Church, Youth Group Model: Uses the parts of worship to structure youth group. As youth arrive there is fun and recreation—this is the “Gathering” time. In the time of “Encounter and Respond,” there is study and prayer. In the “Send” portion, there is a charge or something missional.

- Adaptation: Incorporate activities into your youth ministry programs that help teach young people about the structure of Christian worship and the importance and significance of each part.
- Contact: Teri Peterson teri@rclpc.org, Ridgefield Crystal Lake Presbyterian Church, http://www.rclpc.org/youth2007.html.

Leadership Development

West End Presbyterian Church, 5th Sunday: Every fifth Sunday, the youth lead the worship service. They perform all the items listed on the bulletin, except the pastoral prayer, Scriptures, message, and invitation to Christian discipleship.

- Adaptation: This might be done once every other month or slightly less often than that, but the intention is that the youth lead worship more than once a year.
- Contact: West End Presbyterian Church, wepc@sbcglobal.net.

Pathways: A day-long conference in which youth and adult leaders learn games, activities, and fun and different ways to do Bible study. What they learn at Pathways is taken home for use in their youth groups.

- Adaptation: Go back to home churches and lead a workshop for your leaders on what you have learned. Create a one-day leadership event for your youth, with leaders from your local church or presbytery.

K-Life: It is not the theology or program that makes K-Life a model program, but rather its leadership development. K-Life is a small group program that operates through the development and training of college-age leadership teams. They begin with 10–12 couples who will support their ministry, and then provide space, financial resources, and prayer, but not always direct leadership with the youth. Teams of college students trained by devoted couples then lead small groups for teens. This decentralized ministry focuses on mentoring, coaching, and discipling today’s teenagers.

- Adaptation: A church could use this decentralized ministry to invite a core of individuals to assist in creating the youth ministry of their church.
- Contact: http://www.klife.com.

Playology: A day event from the Annual Recreation Workshop at Montreat. Playology is designed for pastors, educators, youth workers, church volunteers, and anyone interested in developing more creative leadership skills in ministry settings.

- Adaptation: Invite local recreation leaders to provide a one-day recreation workshop at your church. Use this format for a one-day advent workshop for all ages, having the youth host and lead.
- Contact: Montreat Conference Center, Deb Guess, 843-442-1791.

Mid-Town Columbia Church Summer Internship Program: Youth and young adults assist pastors and church workers in developing sermons for young people and assist in other ways at the church.

- Adaptation: Invite youth or young adults to be a church worker for a week. Develop a summer internship program in which two or three high school youth assist the pastor for ten hours a week. During the year, invite young people to assist one day a week in the everyday ministry needs of the congregation. Have the pastor poll or seek input from youth to include in the upcoming week’s sermon.

Presbytery of Wabash Valley, L.O.G. (Love of God): A year-round program for high schoolers that centers around a three-day, student-led retreat. Teams of previous student participants meet for 6–8 weeks prior to each retreat to plan and implement the next retreat for a group of their peers. In between retreats, they meet for fellowship, worship, and prayer. This program reaches out to youth of many churches and schools in the South Bend, Indiana, area. It has been located in a church before, but is now a validated ministry of the Presbytery of Wabash Valley.

- Adaptation: Use motivated youth to plan events for other youth or as small group leaders for events.
- Contact: The Reverend Terry McBride, website: http://www.michianayouth.org/, e-mail: LOG@michianayouth.org.

North Park Presbyterian Church Youth Ministry Council: The North Park youth program is designed to equip youth to lead in various ways, from leading a game/activity at PYC (evening fellowship—Presbyterian Youth Connection) to leading a Sunday evening youth worship service or small group discussion at our annual fall youth retreat. The Youth Leadership Team has representatives from every grade level, which makes them part of the Youth Ministry Council (with adult sponsors). Their experiences leading short activities raises their comfort level to work outside the youth program on a session committee or to serve as a youth elder or deacon.

- Adaptation: Encourage your committees of session to have two young people serve on their committee.
- Contact: Jann Treadwell, North Park Presbyterian Church, 214-363-5457 X34, jtreadwell@northparkpresbyterian.org.

Fellowship/Outreach

Presbytery of St. Augustine, Broomball League: Four Friday nights in a row, six-to-twelve churches gather from 10-11 p.m. at the local ice rink to play broomball, a combination of hockey and lacrosse. Youth play wearing tennis shoes and using their own broom. Using the same logo, they get team shirts in different colors. This program offers fellowship with different churches in the presbytery. Smaller churches combine to create a team of eight. Larger churches form two teams.

- Adaptation: Bring local churches together for any sorts of sports events—these can serve as evangelism for young people not in a church. Create a kick-ball league for your presbytery or churches in your community. If you are in a community that has Whirleyball, create a whirleyball league (bumper car lacrosse-indoor).

Village Presbyterian Church, 8 in a Van: As described by Lindsay O’Connor: 8 in a Van is designed as a way to reach students where they are instead of trying to get them in the doors of a colonial-looking church. My hope in starting this program was to simply provide a fun, easy way to connect with students in a nonthreatening way. The concept is, just as it sounds, driving our church van to one of the local middle schools, picking up around eight students and heading to something fun for about an hour. Because of the location of many of our middle schools, we typically get Starbucks, ice cream, Sonic, or go to Quick Trip and then head to a local park. We let the kids decide what they are up for that day and have them pay for whatever treat they pick. Depending on the size, we can stay and chat and just share life at one of these locations, move to a park when the weather cooperated to play Frisbee, or return to church to play Wii or other games in our youth loft. I think one of the essentials of the program is to keep it small, but keep it fun. They know I’m not going to trick them into Bible study, but rather simply get to know me as their leader, in addition to other students, on a smaller scale. Also, it is a must to take the kids home at the end. Parents are asked to RSVP if their student is coming to help me know who to expect and to remind them I will be taking their middle school youth home. Our 8 in a Van lasts from 3:45 p.m., when school is out, and I have all kids home by 5-5:15 p.m. It’s short, doesn’t interfere with homework, and provides a relaxed, positive environment.

The time spent with students during 8 in a Van has been invaluable. Many of my middle school leaders have emerged during this time where I am intentionally being present with them, where they feel comfortable. Additionally, students have felt comfortable inviting un-churched friends. These relationships have then flowered into great relationships, with some students coming to youth group and even Sunday morning programs. It is easy to reflect Christ in these hour to hour-and-half long outings without having to do Bible study. Students always get in the van talking about the events of school and it is a perfect way to find out about their culture and trends. During its three years, it has yet to be cliquey and often gathers students from many different social circles.

One advantage we have is our own youth van, which actually has a pretty cool reputation among students oddly enough. The vehicle to be used seems to be the main obstacle I see in adapting this program to other churches. It’s simple and straightforward otherwise. Different middle schools go on different days of the week. Normally, it is first come, first serve, but if one person goes all the time, a person that has never gone or hasn’t gone in a while, then that person will go, depending on the van space.

- Adaptation: If a van is not available for use, parents or volunteers can drive and take kids home, etc. Parents (if a van is not available) can pick kids up from different middle schools and meet somewhere central where all the kids can hang out together.
Montgomery Presbyterian Conference Center, Man-Camp/Girls’ Retreat: On a long weekend, the presbytery camp provides a middle school retreat. It begins on Sunday afternoon and ends on Monday afternoon. Although the girls and boys might have the same content, it is on different weekends. Senior-high youth provide leadership for small groups and to mentor.

- Adaptation: Provide a girls’ retreat or man-camp in your local church with young adults and older youth.
- Contact: Cal Findeiss, email: cal@montgomerycenter.org.

The ORB: A Christian church in the heart of Red Bank, N.J. In addition to Sunday worship, ORB has outreach ministries to middle schoolers, high schoolers, young adults, adults, and older adults. The ORB’s ministries with youth emphasize openness and welcome for all. The programs for high schoolers on Thursdays, for example, stresses that you don’t have to be a Christian to come, and that while the leadership will certainly communicate their Christian beliefs and love for and faith in God, they will never tell you that you have to believe something in order to be a part of ORB. By not driving young people away through evangelism or attempts at conversion, the hope is that through showing the true nature of Christ’s love and inclusiveness, young people will be inspired by example.

- Adaptation: Open your youth room and be intentional about hospitality to young people in the community, regardless of their current religious affiliation (or lack thereof).

MOSAIC at Oakhurst Presbyterian Church: As described by Andrew Wong: Throughout Fort Worth there are many smaller Presbyterian congregations and unfortunately most of us could never get critical mass to maintain a youth group. To solve this, we created MOSAIC (Many Outstanding Students, Always In Christ), a youth group that rotates meeting at each of three different participating churches once a week. We go to presbytery, synod, and General Assembly-level events together. We rely on volunteer sponsors from the three congregations, but we often have more than enough leadership. The leaders meet once or twice a quarter to plan and fellowship apart from the youth. The group functions like a traditional youth group except that the kids are from three different churches (and actually many of them do not go to Sunday morning worship anywhere) and the location changes every week. We believe this model of partnership is easily adapted to any number of churches, but does require that the churches are fairly close together. The really brilliant advantage of this model is that it allows for a lot more opportunity to generate a critical mass of sponsors and youth for a youth group session than if each church were trying alone. Theologically, it also reinforces the idea of the one body of different members. The MOSAIC embodies the idea that we exist to serve God’s church as a whole, not just the church that we belong to. We demonstrate that other churches are not our competitors, but our family and that God calls us to reach out and work with other churches.

- Adaptation: Combine smaller groups or churches to form a larger group. Perhaps meet only once a month (rather than once a week).

Youth Week: As described by Shannon Guse—“This summer, we tried out our first youth week ... basically an evening VBS for youth. The youth came to the church from 6–10 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and participated in dinner, fun and messy games, and Bible study/activities, and worship each night. The youth band played, a mini-sermon was given, and discussion, mayhem, and fun ensued. Last year’s theme was “Sticky Faith” and included a Velcro wall, duct-tape night, messy games, tie-dye t-shirts, making sticky buns for the shelter, bubble gum sculptures. All discussions/sermons were inspired from the book Messy Spirituality. The theme for 2010 will be “Faith in a Box.” We will have a blow-up boxing ring and bounce house, meals from boxes (lunch boxes, pizza boxes, Chinese food, etc.), and a night of sleeping in a box where there will be an emphasis on homelessness.

This was a great experience and well attended. It truly was a lot of work, but totally worth it. We cut out almost all of our short day trips during the summer and used this as our focus activity. I think other groups/churches of any size could do this.”

- Adaptations: Ask the youth to assist with Vacation Bible School for younger children and then have them remain for their own “Youth Week.” Youth Week might include service projects, games, Bible study, a meal, and preparations for the next morning’s VBS.
- Contact: Shannon Guse, director of Christian education for youth at Faith Presbyterian Church, Tallahassee, Fla. Email: Shannon@faithpcusa.org.

Tween Events: Our newest model is what we call a Tween Bash. This is a three-hour fellowship event held in the church’s Christian Life Center open to anyone in middle school. For a $5 fee we offer a safe place to hang out with friends in a Chris-Adaptations: If a church is not able to open their building up to the entire community, parents on a rotation basis might provide a safe place for youth group kids to hang out on weekends.

Contact: Laura F. Stover, DCE at First Presbyterian Church in Fort Dodge, Iowa. 515-576-2091; www.firstpresfd.org.

Café 907: Fellowship and gathering time before Sunday school. During Café 907, youth and parents are invited to spend time in the youth suite and catch up. The goal is to bring the parents and members of the congregation to the youth suite, making the youth area a hospitable place for the whole congregation. A specific family volunteers to provide breakfast for the youth that morning; announcements of upcoming events are shared, and a simple/brief devotional is done (one or two songs and a closing prayer). Following the closing prayer, the youth move to their respective Sunday school class.

Adaptations: An opportunity for parents to gather with the youth might also be provided at the beginning of youth group or afterwards and include a shared meal. For example, the youth might meet from 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. with parents arriving at 6:30 p.m. to join the youth for dinner.

Contact: Jorge Sayago-Gonzalez, director of youth ministries, Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky.

Downtime: Weekly summer program. In the midst of busy lives and tight schedules we often forget to take time to rest and be reminded of God’s presence and gift of rest (Sabbath) in our lives. During Downtime, youth gather to discuss a theme of their interest, movies, and books from a spiritual perspective. The purpose is to provide a laid back atmosphere to introduce and develop spiritual practices that are in line with our Christian tradition, the realities and issues that our youth face on a daily bases.

Adaptations: Downtime in which young people are encouraged to participate in a variety of contemplative spiritual practices could be added to the weekly youth group gathering. This can also be an intergenerational event encouraging adults and youth to find quiet time for prayer and spiritual practices together.

Contact: Jorge Sayago-Gonzalez, director of youth ministries, Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky.

Youth Group Rotation System: Alternative Sunday night approach to youth group. The rotation system allows the youth group program to provide games, outings, fellowship dinners, workshops, and spiritual-driven activities on a monthly base. The idea is to assign one Sunday a month for each event and follow that model every month. For example; every first Sunday of the month the youth gather for games. The second Sunday of the month, youth have their regular spiritual-driven activity. The third Sunday the youth will have an alternative activity, and every fourth Sunday of the month the youth will meet at somebody’s house for fellowship dinner. The idea is to follow a pattern that allows for more creativity.

Adaptations: Easily adaptable to meet the needs of a local youth group. Service projects might be added one Sunday a month. This can also work even if a youth group meets only twice a month.

Contact: Jorge Sayago-Gonzalez, director of youth ministries, Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky.

Club 45: A program for 4th and 5th graders. They meet on Wednesday nights for thirty minutes of Children’s Choir and an hour of program. Their Sunday school class is also called Club 45, but much of what makes this group who it is happens on Wednesday nights. This group is specifically designed for preteens, children that are older than the “little kids” and younger than “youth.” It is designed to help preteens transition between programs. It is NOT meant to be youth group or to expose the preteens to youth curriculum, rather it embraces their age and experiences as upper elementary students. In order to prepare preteens for youth programs, Club 45 meets at the same time as middle school youth group, so in 6th grade only a little bit changes. They have a club 45 t-shirt that is youth-like, but like many kids, they wear them every week. They get to vote on which real-life, faith-based topics they want to study each semester (peer pressure, faith and family, pressure to succeed in school, etc). They have their own room that only they meet in, filled with age-appropriate Bibles, their art, and their photos. They have game nights and three outings a year in order to get to know each other (two play outings and one mission workday). Their teachers are not their parents so that their teachers can function as mentors.

Youth group in 6th grade can be really hard, but not for our Club 45 kids. They know the kids that are in 7th grade (from the previous year of Club 45), they are used to meeting on Wednesday nights, they know the expectations of challenging Bible study, they are willing to participate mission work, and they feel known by name and by personality by our church and by God. Club 45 is a group of friends, so they are more willing to go on youth group trips because they have good friends there. Transitions need to be smooth, easy, and a positive experiences and Club 45 is definitely that transition for our church.
Adaptations: Within a small church, preteens might be encouraged to meet with a couple of adult mentors to engage in Bible study, service projects, and fellowship activities. The interaction with other young people their age is as important as the interaction with caring adults willing to walk beside them.

College Ministry

Montreat College Conference: Offers college students the chance to come to a place set apart once a year to continue their faith journey and enjoy fellowship with one another. Each year the conference is structured around a different theme and has dynamic leadership and speakers. The college conference serves young adults of all denominations, in campus-based or parish-based groups, or as individuals.

Contact: www.montreat.org, or specifically at http://www.montreat.org/current/2010-college-conference. For questions, contact the registrar at 800-572-2257, ext. 335 or email susieb@montreat.org.

Faith Presbyterian Church, Church Mouse: This program is intended to keep college students connected with their home church (Faith) when they go away for college, or as a way to offer students not local to Tallahassee (who come to FSU) an invitation/encouragement to become involved/feel welcomed at Faith. The church obtains the college students’ contact information, as well as e-mail address, year and major, hobbies, favorite snack, favorite kind of cookie, caffeine consumption, what they look forward to in life, and a photo. An individual refrigerator magnet is then created for each student, which contains all of the above information. Members of the church volunteer to “adopt” a college student and be their “Church Mouse.” They are given the refrigerator magnet for the student that they adopt. The Church Mouse is encouraged to invite their adopted student to attend church with them, send them care packages, have them over for dinner, etc, in order to help the student feel connected and welcomed. But more than anything, we want the college students to be prayed for. Church mice also take part in the college/young adult Christmas reunion.

Adaptations: Create a secret pal program connecting a church member to a college student. Create a devotional blog for your college students and invite church members who have played a significant role in the life of your young people to write the devotional.

Mentoring

Central to Our Faith Youth Mentoring Program, First Presbyterian Church of Salt Lake City, Utah: This ministry works with young people who leave foster care at age 18 and helps them survive and thrive as they begin to live independent lives. Eight mentors began the project and worked with the Salt Lake Transitional Program for Foster Youth to recruit eight youth and match them with mentors. After working together for two years, three youth were attending college, one joined the Marines, one finished a GED and training at Job Corp, one was still in high school, and two were living on their own. Based on this success, The Utah Youth Mentor Project, a nonprofit organization, was formed to recruit and train other mentor groups to use the mentor model. After five years there are four-church based groups, one sponsored by a group from Juvenile Court and two groups sponsored by The Christmas Box organization. There are currently more than forty youth with mentors in the project, a number that is expected to double over the next year. The mentor groups become a community of support for youth, helping them access resources for safe housing, job placement, or postsecondary education. Mentors often assist youth who face barriers to success such as drug use, legal issues, debts, or family issues. The real success of the project, however, rests on nonjudgmental friendship and love given by volunteer mentors.

Adaptation: Contact your local foster care agency and invite youth in foster care to join your youth group.

Reaching Up Ministry, The University Presbyterian Church of Toronto Mission Group: Impoverishment, school dropouts, gun violence, and teenage pregnancies rob many of the children and youth of the Jane-Finch community of their potential to achieve, to be heard, and to excel. Reaching Up provides free academic and art programs for school-aged children in the Jane-Finch community in the name of the Lord. The program is threefold: Homework Club, Music School, and Youth Mentoring.

Adaptation: Facilitate a homework club on Saturdays to help students get ready for their state testing.
Parent Confirmation Sundays: While the confirmation class meets with their mentors each month, parents gather with the confirmation teachers. During this time, they take a short course, learning from the teachers key points from their child’s confirmation class. It is important to have it be a class and not just a time to pass on information from the previous month. This program is a great opportunity for parents to not only be more involved in their child’s confirmation journey, but also to grow in their own faith.

- Adaptation: Provide a parallel class for parents in confirmation with different teachers, same topics. Invite parents once a month to join the confirmation class for their study and fellowship.

- Contact: Nancy Myer, Knoxville, Tenn., nancymyer@gmail.com.

Adaptation:

- Adaptation: Congregational prayer partners might also be assigned when youth leave on mission trips or other church-related trips. Let the youth know on the way to their destination that someone is praying for them, for their faith development, and for enjoyment of the conference or work trip. Midway through the week, the youth can be asked to write a postcard to their prayer partner thanking them and telling them what they had learned.

- Contact: First Presbyterian Church, Fort Dodge, Iowa, Lauras@firstpresfd.org.

Confirmation Covenant Partner Program: During the eighth grade year confirmation class is taught and many enrichment activities are offered. Each confirmand is paired with a current elder or adult church member with the goal to meet several times over a simple meal for faith discussion and encouragement. Get acquainted activities and questionnaires are completed. Great friendships have developed. The adult partner offers a personal prayer for the confirmand on Confirmation Sunday. Other enrichment activities offered during the Confirmation years is visiting other faith denominations. The class goes to the church to meet the pastor/priest and learn about that faith including a tour of the church. The group then attends a worship service. A trip to a nearby Jewish Synagogue is included.

- Adaptations: The Confirmation Covenant Partner might be encouraged to attend a youth group activity, assist with a service project, or provide food for youth group or Sunday school. The intent is to offer adults who might not normally interact with the young people an opportunity to get to know and work and learn beside the youth of the congregation.

- Contact: First Presbyterian Church, Fort Dodge, Iowa, Lauras@firstpresfd.org.

*A number of people responded to the request for model programs with a Covenant Partner program example.

Stewardship/Fundraising

The Pentecost Offering: A denomination-wide special offering that enables a congregation to keep 40 percent of the offering to be used for whatever they want or need! Great resources, simple to do, and a good way to raise funds and awareness. The Pentecost Offering is working really well for many congregations.

- Contact: http://www.pcusa.org/pentecost/lgmaterial.htm.

Special Youth Offering, Goodwill Presbyterian Church, Mayesville, S.C.: As a supplement to the normal offering, one Sunday a month, two youth accompany the regular ushers with different tray’s baskets and collect money from members specifically for the youth ministry of the church. This encourages people (and youth especially) to contribute to the ministry of youth.

- Adaptation: On Stewardship Sunday, encourage the youth to give their commitments as well as a monetary offering.

- Contact: Ellaree Hampton, Goodwill Presbyterian Church, Mayesville, S.C.

Cookie & Ornament Exchange Fundraiser: An insert is placed in the bulletin a few weeks before inviting people to bake at least three dozen cookies of a variety of their choosing. They are asked to deliver their cookies and the recipe as well as any gently used ornaments they’d like to “exchange” the morning of the Fundraiser. The youth then arrange the cookies on trays and make fun signs to accompany the cookies (for example, “Jane Do’s super fabulous chocolate chip oatmeal cookies”).
the cookie trays are then placed on tables and the ornaments hung on Christmas trees in the fellowship hall. After worship, members are invited downstairs to fill a tin that they bring or a plate (to be covered with plastic wrap afterwards) with a variety of cookies. They are also able to select ornaments they’d like to take home. Donations are accepted for both. The fundraiser works well because there is almost no expense incurred by the youth program so all donations can be put towards fundraising needs.

- Adaptaions: This works in a small or large church because the number of cookies made is based upon the size of the congregation and those willing to bake. In recent years, we have added cookie baking as a youth group activity. Youth divide into teams and bake cookies at different members’ homes. It gives the youth an opportunity to interact with members of the congregation who do not usually participate in youth group activities. These cookies are then frozen and brought to church the morning of the Cookie Exchange Fundraiser.

Interfaith/Ecumenical

Interfaith Sailing Trip: This program occurs through a partnership of the South Coast Interfaith Council and the Los Angeles Maritime Institute. It is an educational adventure of connectionalism with youth of different faith backgrounds, including a combination of the Christian, Jewish, Muslim, Bahai, Hindu, and Quaker faiths. Youth work alongside one another onboard a tall ship, setting sails, steering the vessel, searching ahead for any perils, and discuss their experience over a meal. There are opportunities for day trips, and also weeklong trips during summer months. Team building, problem solving, decision making, planning, self-reliance, and leadership are just some of the skills gained on this daylong sail on the Pacific Ocean.

- Adaptation: Cooperative activities such as long-term service projects would also provide an opportunity to gather young people of different faiths. Find a project that is meaningful to all gathered so that the shared experience will build bonds of friendship and understanding.

- Contact: scic@charterinternet.com or http://lamitopsail.org/LAMI/index.html.

Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, My Faith/Your Faith: Brings together twenty high school age teens from Christian, Jewish, and Muslim communities in the New York City area for fifteen sessions over the course of a year. Participants teach each other about their traditions, observe religious services at houses of worship, observe home rituals at each other’s homes, and engage in service together. The goals of the program are to encourage religious understanding through dialogue, learning and experiential programming; to build friendship and understanding among the involved communities across lines of religious difference; to experience each other’s faiths as they are lived in community; and to participate in service learning as a shared experience, exploring ways to put faith into action.

- Adaptation: This type of program might also be developed across denominational lines building deeper understanding among the various Christian communities in your town.

- Contact: Jacob Bolton, director of family ministries at Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, N.Y., e-mail: JBolton@fapc.org.

Auburn Seminary’s Face to Face/Faith to Faith: A yearlong international, multifaith youth leadership program sponsored by Auburn Seminary. During one phase of the program, teens from four different continents are brought together to work on interfaith issues at the NY Presbytery camp for two weeks.

- Adaptation: Use a local camp as a site for a weeklong gathering of young people from different faith traditions or denominations. Participate in regular camping activities as well as provide opportunities for each group represented to “teach” the other young people about their faith.

Youth Task Force

What Works and What Doesn’t Work in Youth Ministry?

General Patterns Gathered from Interviewee Responses

What Works (Is of value)?

- Inclusion of youth in all aspects of church.
- Good communication to youth, parents of youth, and to congregation about youth.
○ A good, dedicated youth leader paid, educated, trained in most responses.

○ Real conversations without an authoritarian atmosphere.

○ Honest care for young people for acute youth experiences and feelings.

○ Good adult to youth ratio.

○ Youth share power and are nurtured into leadership positions.

○ Involved in worship through reading Scripture, liturgical dance, and sharing with the congregation about special trips.

○ Food ministry (gatherings that include a meal, snacks, or goodies).

○ Youth plan activities themselves or assist in the planning and implementation.

○ Retreats (programming away from church and home).

○ Well-organized; structured, prepared programs or ministries.

○ Nonjudgmental, non-hypocritical atmosphere (as modeled by adults).

○ Bridge from youth to young adult ministry—keep college students/young adults connected with “real” programs, opportunities, and communication.

○ Opportunities for fellowship offered on a regular basis where the church encourages simple conversation and gathering (this appears to be separate and in addition to planned programs).

○ Not limited to walls of the church.

What Does Not Work (Or is limited in value)?

○ Too many commitments for youth; parents/families have not prioritized church for the family rhythm and schedule.

○ A changing landscape of how church should “occur” (e.g. It is not always the case that youth group should happen on Sundays or church school on Sunday mornings).

○ Youth not involved in all church activities—only youth activities (hinders exposure to the full spectrum of ministry and discipleship).

○ Parents not involved in the church or not kept abreast of what’s happening in the church.

○ No training, support, nurture, care for volunteer youth leaders.

○ No real structure of support, compensation, or accountability for professional youth workers (their call is seen as “second tier”).

○ Adults not committed to transferring/sharing their faith and faith formation.

○ Adults who don’t value their own faith or who feel intimidated by the possibility of sharing their faith, Christian experience, or spiritual process.

○ Too much play, not enough spiritual substance.

○ Too many different “visions” (opinions) about what the youth ministry should be.

Item 15-11

On Establishing the Christ Community Church in Cortland, New York, as a Union Church—From the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley.

The Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) to approve the action taken by the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley to approve the union of Christ Presbyterian Church of Cortland, New York, with the United Community Church of Cortland, New York, (a previous union in 1981 between the Congregational and Baptist Churches in Cortland, New York, and affiliated with the Susquehanna Association of the United Church of Christ [UCC] in New York State and the Iroquois Association of the American Baptist Churches USA [ABC]) to establish a new union church, “Christ Community Church of Cortland.” The Christ Community Church will be responsible and accountable to all three denominations (PC(USA), UCC, and ABC).

Rationale

The Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley, the Susquehanna Association of the United Church of Christ in New York State, and the Iroquois Association of the American Baptist Churches USA seek “to manifest more visibly the unity of the church of Jesus Christ” and strengthen the witness of our Lord and Savior in the Cortland, New York, area by this action (Book of Order, G-15.0101).

All of the needed legal and ecclesiastical steps have been taken to assure a full and joyful union according to the Book of Order of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) and the United Church of Christ and American Baptist Churches USA denominations.

The Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley approved the plan for union constitution between Christ Presbyterian Church and the United Community Church of Cortland at its December 5, 2009, meeting.

The regional offices of the Susquehanna Association of the United Church of Christ in New York State (represented by the Reverend Richard Cowles) and the Iroquois Association of the American Baptist Churches USA (represented by the Reverend Tom Hast), as well as the interim executive presbyter (the Reverend Cheryl Ann Elfond) and representatives from the presbytery’s committee on ministry had met with and advised the two congregations for a two-year period, 2008–2009, in praying about and planning for this union.

As a “union” with an already “union” church, the proportion of church members for statistical purposes will be counted as one-half Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), one-quarter United Church of Christ, and one-quarter American Baptist Churches USA.

On Establishing the United Church of the Plains as an Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and a Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Union Church—From the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks.

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) to consent to the action taken by the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks and the Nebraska Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America to establish the United Church of the Plains in Dalton, Nebraska, as a union church. The United Church of the Plains will be responsible and accountable to both denominations (Book of Order, G-16.0301).

Rationale

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks and the Nebraska Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America seek to manifest the ties that bind us in our Reformed traditions and to bear witness to a more visible unity of the church of Jesus Christ and to thereby strengthen the witness to our Lord and Savior in the communities of Dalton and Gurley, Nebraska by this action (Book of Order, G-15.0204).

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks approved this action at its stated meeting on May 15, 2010. The action of the assembly will become effective upon the action of the Nebraska Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America to approve this union church.

[The assembly referred Item 15-13 to the General Assembly Mission Council (and its office of World Mission). See pp. 6, 7.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Assisting the Emmanuel Church of Tirana in Planting Churches and Forming a New Reformed Denomination in Albania.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) directs the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), in collaboration with the Presbytery of Santa Barbara, to assist the Emmanuel Church of Tirana in planting churches and forming a new reformed denomination in Albania. This authority includes the authorization of the Presbytery of Santa Barbara to ordain pastors, to train and install elders, and to take the lead in planting new churches and chartering churches. The Presbytery of Santa Barbara will hold the ordinations and memberships; the GAMC shall hold all charters pending the formal formation and transfer of those chartered churches to a new reformed denomination in Albania. The GAMC is directed to assist in developing a relationship with WCRC. This authority will be granted for up to twenty years or until the formal establishment of the Albanian denomination.

Rationale

The churches of the Presbytery of Santa Barbara have been working with the Emmanuel Church of Tirana, Albania, and the Albanian Christians for more than a decade.

The pastors and elders have been trained in reformed theology and have embraced the Constitution of the PC(USA) as a critically important means of being the Church of Jesus Christ.

The pastors, elders, and members of the Emmanuel Church of Tirana have requested help from the PC(USA) in consultation with the Reverend Art Beals and received ongoing guidance from our national church staff, and through that discernment process have asked the Presbytery of Santa Barbara to ordain their pastors and charter their churches.

As the two pastors, Zef and Altin have been examined and ordained by the Presbytery of Santa Barbara to be organizing pastors of a validated ministry to start a reformed denomination in Albania.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 15-13

Comment on Item 15-13—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

World Mission welcomes this initiative of the Emmanuel Church of Tirana, Albania and Santa Barbara Presbytery as they seek to faithfully participate in God’s mission in Albania.

Since the Lake Mohonk Consultation of 1956, the PC(USA) has understood our mission work to be shaped by a commitment to working in partnership, which means that we have not generally established new Presbyterian denominations in countries where there is not one, but have worked strengthening local initiatives, as they establish their own indigenous church. It would be important that the Albanian believers themselves be allowed to develop theologically and ecclesiologically to the point that they choose for themselves the form of government they believe is most effective in their context.

We affirm Santa Barbara Presbytery’s sense of calling to walk alongside the Emmanuel Church of Tirana, and have shared with them the following questions:

Questions regarding the Proposed Commissioner’s Resolution
PC(USA) World Mission, June 2010

A. Missiological Questions

1. Is the PC(USA) essentially expanding the bounds of the denomination by Santa Barbara Presbytery opening congregations in Albania? Since the Lake Mohonk Consultation of 1956, the PC(USA) has not established PC(USA) congregations overseas, but has worked in partnership with national Christian partners where these exist or ecumenically, where national Christian partners do not. What are the implications of reversing this policy in Albania and other countries?

2. What are the criteria that will be used to decide when these congregations are strong enough to become their own denomination? Who will decide?

3. How does the rest of the denomination relate to ministry opportunities in Albania in the presence of congregations of the Presbytery of Santa Barbara?

4. What other communions work in Albania? The WCC names two—the Albanian Orthodox Church (537,000 members in 600 congregations) and the Catholic Church (62,000 in 100 congregations). Have they had any input? If so, what was it?

B. Polity, Property and Legal Questions

1. Would the Emmanuel Church and the congregations it plants be a part of Santa Barbara Presbytery? Who owns the property and buildings? Are the members of these churches members of the PC(USA)?
2. Do these new churches have the same obligations as any other church in the Presbytery of Santa Barbara, including the payment of per capita?

3. If there is a problem with misconduct or other legal issues, either on the part of a pastor in one of these congregations or with an elder, who would address the issue? What oversight, if any, does the presbytery have on the activities of these congregations?

4. Is the Presbytery of Santa Barbara, or any other part of the PC(USA), subsidizing these new church developments? If so, what are the legal issues surrounding the (1) transfer of funds to Albania and (2) tax ramifications?

5. Are the Revs. Zef and Altin minister members of Santa Barbara Presbytery? If so, what are the legal, ecclesiastical, financial (taxes, pensions, salaries), and mission funding implications.

C. Strategic and Financial Questions

1. GAMC Mission Priorities: The overture opens up a new area of ministry for the presbytery of Santa Barbara, but then obligates the GAMC to prioritize the presbytery’s ministry. What will be the impact on GAMC’s mission priorities, particularly in World Mission?

2. There would be potentially significant, if undetermined, financial implications in this overture. Given the trend of decreasing mission funding revenue in the GAMC, what are the implications of the financial implications of this resolution?

In light of range of discussions that need to take place regarding numerous aspects of this resolution, we recommend that the resolution be referred to World Mission so that the Presbytery of Santa Barbara and World Mission can shape an appropriate, faithful, and effective response to this call.

Item 15-A

[The Assembly Committee on Church Growth, Christian Education, and PILP approved Item 15-A. See pp. 6, 8.]

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) recognize the following Women of Faith award recipients at the 219th General Assembly (2010):

- The Reverend Margaret E. Howland
- The Reverend Elizabeth Knott
- Elona Street-Stewart
- Joyce Uyeda

Rationale

Women of Faith Awards

The Women of Faith Awards were established in 1986 to honor women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) whose lives exemplify their Christian commitment through witness, service, and leadership.

Each year a theme is chosen. Nominations are received from throughout the church and honorees are selected by a committee of representatives from various groups.

Awards are presented at the Women of Faith Breakfast during the General Assembly. This breakfast is an annual celebration of God’s activity in the lives of women and their response to God’s presence.

The theme for this year’s awards is “Women with a Peaceful Heart: Guiding Paths of Peace” and therefore honors women who have helped the church grow in its witness and commitment to peacemaking.

The 2010 selection committee included Ruth Lane, moderator; Jan Martin, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns; Jane Lyman, General Assembly Mission Council; Ruth-Aimée Belonni-Rosario, Racial Ethnic Young Women Together; and Janice Takeda, Presbyterian Women.

The selection committee members were instructed to consider the following criteria in reviewing the twenty-four nomination forms and in making their selection of the four women who receive this award:

- How have these women helped the church grow in its witness to peacemaking?
- How have these women implemented a commitment to peacemaking?
• Strive for racial ethnic diversity.
• Strive for geographic diversity.
• The women must be living.
• GAMC staff members are ineligible.
• This is a one-time award; a woman cannot be selected more than once.

The election of the four honorees was approved by the Vocation Mission Committee and the General Assembly Mission Council.

Biographical sketches of these four women are as follows:

1. The Reverend Margaret E. Howland, Yonkers, New York

The Reverend Margaret E. Howland is a member of the Presbytery of Hudson River, Synod of the Northeast. Howland was one of the first women ordained in the denomination as a minister of the Word and Sacrament and is the retired pastor of South Presbyterian Church in Yonkers.

Her career and life are characterized by her commitment to fighting sexism, racism, poverty, and violence. At the 218th General Assembly (2008), concurrently with the 50th anniversary celebration of her ordination, she was awarded a special Peacemaker Award by the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship.

2. The Reverend Elizabeth Knott, Indianola, Iowa

The Reverend Elizabeth Knott is a member of the Presbytery of Des Moines, Synod of Lakes and Prairies. In her retirement, Knott, a former executive of the Synod of Alaska-Northwest, founded Pal CraftAid in 1993, a ministry that works directly with Palestinian craftspeople to sell their goods in United States.

More than $500,000 in profit has been returned to Palestinians. Now in her mid 80s, Knott serves as director emeriti of the program that has been a pathway for establishing positive relationships between Christians and Muslims.

3. Elona Street-Stewart, Eagan, Minnesota

Elona Street-Stewart is a member of the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area, Synod of Lakes and Prairies. Street-Stewart is actively engaged in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and community missions, development, and support programs.

For the past thirty years, she has been involved at the grassroots and national levels in social justice issues, including racism, affirmative action, women and family issues, and public policy.

Street-Stewart is an elder and synod associate for racial ethnic ministries and community empowerment in the Synod of Lakes and Prairies. She is chair of the St. Paul School Board, where she has served as a member since 2001.

Street-Stewart is the first Native American to serve on an urban school board in Minnesota.

4. Joyce Uyeda, Sacramento, California

Joyce Uyeda is a member of the Presbytery of Sacramento, Synod of the Pacific. Uyeda is an elder at Parkview Presbyterian Church, where she has been a member for sixty years.

She has previously served as moderator of Presbyterian Women of the Presbytery of Sacramento and on the Ethnic Concerns Committee of the Sierra Mission Partnership.

Uyeda’s career and ministry have been dedicated to youth and creating opportunities for a more peaceful world for young people. A retired educator, she is a volunteer librarian of a library she helped organize and establish and a classroom aide at an under-resourced elementary school in her area. Uyeda has led the Ethnic Concerns Committee Youth Camp of the Sierra Mission Partnership for twenty-five years.

A native of Oregon and a Japanese American, Uyeda and her family lived in three internment camps in the Western United States during World War II.

“These remarkable women have dedicated their lives to guiding paths of peace,” said Ruth Lane, chair of the awards selection committee. “Their faithful lives and accomplishments have made a difference, not only in their local church but in the global community. They are true peacemakers witnessing God’s call.”

[The Assembly Committee on Church Growth, Christian Education, and PILP approved Item 15-B. See pp. 6, 8.]

A. Sam and Helen Walton Awards for 2009

The General Assembly Mission Council reports the recipients of the Sam and Helen Walton Awards for 2009 for outstanding new church developments:

1. Neema Community Fellowship, Synod of Mid-America, Presbytery of Heartland;
2. Top Stone Church, Synod of the Northeast, Eastern Korean Presbytery;
3. Inglesia Presbiteriana Monte Sinai, Synod of South Atlantic, Presbytery of Central Florida;
4. Peace Presbyterian NCD, Synod of South Atlantic, Presbytery of Peace River;
5. New Kirk Presbyterian Church, Synod of South Atlantic, Presbytery of Trinity;
6. Highland Presbyterian Church, Synod of Southern California & Hawaii, Presbytery of Santa Barbara;
7. Santa Maria Presbyterian Church, Synod of Southern California & Hawaii, Presbytery of Santa Barbara; and
8. Biyaya Community Church, Synod of the Sun, Presbytery of New Covenant.

Rationale

In late December 1991, Sam and Helen Walton made a generous gift through the Presbyterian Foundation of $6 million that included $3 million to be used for new church developments that have placed an emphasis on site acquisitions. All nominees must meet the qualifications as set forth in the application. The General Assembly Mission Council, acting on behalf of the General Assembly between meetings, approved the above recipients during its September 2009 meeting.

B. Sam and Helen Walton Awards for 2010

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) recognize the recipients of the Sam and Helen Walton Awards for 2010:

1. Ramseyer Presbyterian Church, Columbus, Ohio, Synod of the Covenant, Presbytery of Scioto Valley;
2. Palmetto Presbyterian Church, Mt. Pleasant, South Carolina, Synod of South Atlantic, Presbytery of Charleston-Atlantic;
3. Thien An Presbyterian Church of Houston, Houston, Texas, Synod of the Sun, Presbytery of New Covenant;
4. Christian Arabic Church, Richmond, Virginia, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic, Presbytery of the James.

Rationale

In late December 1991, Sam and Helen Walton made a generous gift through the Presbyterian Foundation of $6 million dollars that included $3 million to be used for new church developments that have placed an emphasis on site acquisitions. All nominees meet the qualifications as set forth in the application.

The above awards were approved by the General Assembly Mission Council Executive Committee, acting on behalf of the General Assembly Mission Council, during their conference call of April 20, 2010.

Item 15-Info

In gratitude for God’s bounty, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Investment and Loan Program, Inc (“PILP”) promotes the growth of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by bringing together the dreams of church developers and the resources of Presbyterian investors and financial partners. The PILP offers investments providing a competitive financial return plus the opportunity to participate in the expansion of the church through Presbyterian congregations, governing bodies, and mission agencies. The PILP offers loans to Presbyterian congregations and middle governing bodies to purchase, renovate, and expand worship and mission space and to promote the growth of the church. Guided by the best practices of the financial industry, PILP is committed to faithful stewardship of the resources entrusted to us for the support of the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The PILP began 2008 with a disbursed loan portfolio of $56.3 million and an additional $8.4 million in commitments pending close and construction loans not yet disbursed. At the end of 2009, PILP had a disbursed loan portfolio of $74.0 million and an additional $10.1 million in commitments pending close and construction loans not yet disbursed. That represents growth of 30.0 percent over the two-year period. In 2008 PILP disbursed $9.1 million in new loans from investor funds; in 2009 PILP disbursed $15.7 million. We began 2008 with $61.8 million in investments from individual Presbyterians, Presbyterian congregations, middle governing bodies, and General Assembly agencies. We ended 2009 with $79.6 million in investments. That is a 28.8 percent increase in two years.

In 2009 PILP experienced our ninth consecutive year with an annual surplus. It is essential that PILP generate surpluses to assure investors of the strength of our program, to meet regulatory requirement to be profitable four out of the most recent past five years, and to provide capital for future expansion of the program. The combined surpluses from 2008 and 2009 have helped us toward our goal of rebuilding our capital base back to the $5 million we were given as start-up capital. At the end of 2009, PILP had $4.7 million in unrestricted net assets.

The Uniform Securities Act determines who regulates PILP’s investment products. The North American Securities Administrators Association establishes program guidelines for denominational investment and loan programs. At the end of 2009 PILP met or exceeded all of the guidelines. The PILP is expected to maintain a capital adequacy ratio of net worth to total assets of 5 percent. At the end of 2009 our capital adequacy ratio was 5.5 percent. The PILP is expected to maintain a liquidity ratio of liquid assets to Term Notes and Denominational Account Receipts (“DARs”) of at least 8 percent. At the end of 2009 our liquidity ratio was 15.9 percent. The PILP is required to limit senior secured debt to no more than 10 percent of total assets. At the end of 2009 PILP had no senior secured debt.

Some commercial lenders may offer lower rates or waive certain fees, but PILP is the only lender we know, who gives money back to borrowing congregations. Through the “Get the Point” program, borrowing congregations earn rebates based on supporting investments. For 2009 PILP returned $243,000 to borrowing congregations, bringing the total returned to congregations since the inception of the rebate program to $1.6 million.

The PILP provides consulting services to congregations and presbyteries to help them develop the appropriate size and timing for construction plans. We explore fundraising, financing opportunities, and requirements for capital projects. Each congregation benefits from the PILP staff’s experience in working with hundreds of congregations.

Demand for new loans has remained high throughout 2008 and 2009. The PILP has been able to respond to this demand through increasing investments from individuals, congregations, and middle governing bodies. The PILP has maintained careful underwriting standards, believing that relaxed standards do not benefit the lender or the borrower. We maintain a review process for all lending relationships and work intentionally with middle governing bodies, who guarantee our loans. This process has resulted in a loan portfolio that is the envy of most lending institutions. At the end of 2009, PILP had no thirty-day or longer delinquencies.

The Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program administers the Church Loan Program, (“CLP”) for the General Assembly Mission Council. The CLP is the result of many gifts, campaigns, and bequests to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) since 1843. By December 31, 2009, the total endowment for church loans had grown to more than $200 million. The PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program has worked with the General Assembly Mission Council and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to develop a capital grant program to supplement the existing loan program. We are engaged in conversations with the Foundation and General Assembly Mission Council staff that could secure funding for Mission Program Grants from the Church Loan Program for the foreseeable future.

The CLP began 2008 with a disbursed loan portfolio of $98.5 million and an additional $12.4 million in commitments pending close and construction loans not yet disbursed. At the end of 2009 CLP had a disbursed loan portfolio of $105.7 million and an additional $8.2 million in commitments pending closing and construction loans not yet disbursed. This represents growth of 2.7 percent over the two-year period. In 2008 PILP disbursed $16.3 million in new loans from endowment funds and in 2009 PILP disbursed $16.5 million. The maximum loan from CLP is currently $450,000. The maximum project in which CLP participates is $2.5 million. Larger loans are funded by investor funds or participations with synod loan programs or banking partners. Many loan applications received by PILP qualify for funds from both PILP and CLP. These loans are offered to churches as one loan with a blended rate.

Together PILP and CLP represent the Coordinated Loan Program of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) The Coordinated Loan Program is dedicated to providing low-cost loans to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and mission agencies. At the beginning of 2008 the base interest rate for loans from investor funds for existing congregations was 6.9 percent and 5.9 percent from endowment funds. By the end of 2009 the base interest rate for loans from investor funds rate for existing congregations was 6.0 percent and 5.0 percent from endowment funds. In spite of efforts on the part of the Federal Reserve to bolster commercial lending, funds available from commercial lending institutions dried up and where funds have been available, the interest charged generally has been at least double the prime lending-rate. The PILP has remained competitive in an interest rate environment that has experienced large decreases in the cost of funds to banking institutions.

The following are just few examples of how endowment and investor funds are helping the church grow:

- Morningside Presbyterian Church in Atlanta, Georgia, has restored its building, improved accessibility, and added new welcoming space.

- Moorpark Presbyterian Church in Moorpark, California, has completed the third phase of their church campus. They began with a multipurpose facility in 1992, an educational building in 2000, and in 2007 they built the church’s long-awaited sanctuary.

- Southlake Boulevard Presbyterian Church, Southlake, Texas, built their first multipurpose building in 2001. It doubled as a sanctuary and community gymnasium. The church is nearing completion of a new Mission Building that will increase their classroom space and provide new space for fellowship and informal gatherings.

- Grace Covenant Presbyterian Church, Orlando, Florida, brings together the mission strengths of two congregations to make a greater impact in their community. One result of this merger has been the necessary adjustment of our plans to accommodate Small Blessings Child Care Center, an excellent preschool ministry of the smaller Conway Presbyterian Church for more than twenty years.

The PILP is completing a multiyear process of transferring the ministry of the Synod of Lincoln Trails Capital Improvement Program into the Coordinated Loan Program of the General Assembly. The PILP collaborates with the three synods that maintain investment and loan programs.

The Board of Directors of PILP is elected by the General Assembly Mission Council and is confirmed by the General Assembly. The 2009 board of directors included: Nancy Muth, chair; James B. Rea Jr., vice chair; Frank Fisher Jr.; LaVert Jones; Douglas Kenney; Carolyn Knight; Alice Okazaki; Jim Dave Wilson; William Nelson; John H. Shannahan; Alicia Williams; Catesby Woodford; Agnes Young; Stephen Bacon.

The officers of the corporation in 2009 were: James L. Hudson, president and CEO; James G. Rissler Sr. vice president finance and administration and treasurer; Ben W. Blake, vice president, sales and marketing; Martha E. Clark, secretary.

On Commending Confessions That Uphold the Oneness of All Believers, and Discontinuing Efforts to Include the Belhar Confession in The Book of Confessions—From the Presbytery of Sacramento.

The Presbytery of Sacramento overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to do the following:

1. Commend all current and past efforts of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to establish church-governance standards that embrace equality among believers without regard to race or ethnic background, as expressed in the Book of Order.

2. Commend to the church those confessions of the PC(USA) that uphold the oneness of all believers, including A Brief Statement of Faith and The Confession of 1967, and counsel all members of the PC(USA) to fully and purposefully live out their words, which must be fulfilled in reality in every arena of church life, particularly those sections that read:

   “We trust in God, whom Jesus called Abba, Father. In sovereign love God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community. (The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.3, Lines 27–32)

   God has created the peoples of the earth to be one universal family. In his reconciling love, he overcomes the barriers between brothers and breaks down every form of discrimination based on racial or ethnic difference, real or imaginary. The church is called to bring all men to receive and uphold one another as persons in all relationships of life: in employment, housing, education, leisure, marriage, family, church, and the exercise of political rights. Therefore, the church labors for the abolition of all racial discrimination and ministers to those injured by it. Congregations, individuals, or groups of Christians who exclude, dominate, or patronize their fellowmen, however subtly, resist the Spirit of God and bring contempt on the faith which they profess. (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.44)

3. Discontinue efforts to include the Belhar Confession in The Book of Confessions, adding the following comment: Since the Belhar Confession has at times been linked by some theologians with the Theological Declaration of Barmen, it should be noted that the focus of the Theological Declaration of Barmen rests squarely on the Lordship of Christ, as he is identified in the Old and New Testaments. Examination of the message of the Belhar Confession needs to be done in light of this profession from the Barmen Declaration:

   “I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no one comes to the Father, but by me” (John 14:6), “Truly, truly, I say to you, he who does not enter the sheepfold by the door but climbs in by another way, that man is a thief and a robber. … I am the door; if anyone enters by me, he will be saved.” (John 10:1, 9.) Jesus Christ, as he is attested for us in Holy Scripture, is the one Word of God which we have to hear and which we have to trust and obey in life and death. We reject the false doctrine, as though the church could and would have to acknowledge as a source of its proclamation apart from and besides this one Word of God, still other events and powers, figures and truths, as God’s revelation. (The Book of Confessions, The Theological Declaration of Barmen, 8.10–8.12)

Rationale

The Belhar Confession is a complex and somewhat confusing document, which some parties—those who defend it as a confession of the church for all times and all places—have attempted to use to press issues other than racial equality. This overly broad application of the Belhar Confession to champion liberation theology in general or same-sex causes in particular produces a conflicted response to its antiracism message. The confessions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) already contain clear and explicit directives against racism. They are far more applicable to the present context and less likely to introduce a confusion of issues. The confessions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) already contain clear and explicit directives against racism. They are far more applicable to the present context and less likely to introduce a confusion of issues. The Belhar Confession, written in an entirely different setting for a political purpose, would add controversy and confusion to our church-governance standards.

Concurrence to Item 16-01 from the Presbytery of San Joaquin.

Concurrence to Item 16-01 from the Presbytery of Central Washington (with Additional Rationale)

Simply put, while the Belhar Confession was an important statement about racial reconciliation in the context of the South African apartheid system and offers sound advice for issues of unity today, it does not meet the standards of a confession as defined in Chapter II in the Form of Government, “The Church and Its Confession” (Book of Order, G-2.0100–.0500).
Background

“… Boesak was also instrumental in drafting the 1986 Belhar Confession, which I welcomed at the time as an important confessional statement about race relationships. He now appeals to that document in support of his advocacy for gay-lesbian ordination. In a recent insightful blog posting, ‘The Belhar Confession & God’s Final Revelation,’ Violet Larson argues that this is a good reason to question the theological adequacy of the Belhar Confession, precisely because of the use to which it is being put these days by proponents of full inclusion on same-sex topics. I agree with her. While that document spoke forthrightly against the injustices of apartheid, it did not explicitly appeal to biblical authority. That it can now be seen by some of its drafters as capable of being extended to the full inclusion of active gays and lesbians in ministry says something about the weaknesses of Belhar—not as an important prophetic declaration in its original context, but as a statement that can stand on its own as a normative confession…” (Dr. Richard Mouw, President, Fuller Seminary, The President’s Blog, <http://www.netbloghost.com/mouw/?p=108>.)

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 16-01

Advice on Item 16-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution offers the following advice to the 219th General Assembly (2010) regarding Item 16-01.

Rationale

The first and second points of this overture call for the General Assembly to commend certain practices and Confessional positions that are consistent with existing constitutional wording and practice and thus do not invoke constitutional questions or issues. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) therefore simply notes that action or failure to act upon the first two points would not change the Constitution in any manner.

The third point regarding the recommendation to discontinue efforts to include the Belhar Confession in The Book of Confessions—with comment—raises questions regarding the integrity of the existing process for amending The Book of Confessions—as well as what would be the status of the “comment” to be added.

With regards to the existing process:

Sections G-18.0201a and b make clear the process of amending The Book of Confessions. Because of the position The Book of Confessions holds in the hierarchy of authority in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the process for adding a confession or amending one or more confessions, is more exhaustive than amending the Book of Order and requires a super-majority of presbyteries voting affirmatively for there to be a change. One of those “additional constraints” is the formation of a “special committee” to consider the proposal and consult with the committee or governing body, and to report its recommendation.

If the action proposed by this overture (“…to discontinue efforts…”) were to precede the report of the Special Committee assigned to consider the Belhar Confession, it would be in conflict with G-18.0201b and thus would be questionable on parliamentary as well as Constitutional grounds.

If, after receiving the report and recommendation of the Special Committee on the Belhar Confession, the 219th General Assembly (2010) agrees with the intent of this overture, the appropriate action at that time would be to disapprove the recommendation of the special committee.

With regards to the “following comment”:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises against approval of this portion of section three because it is unclear exactly what the General Assembly is being asked to do by voting on this comment—and because it is impossible to ascertain what the consequences would be in doing so.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 16-01 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 16-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 16-01 be disapproved.
Rationale

The Belhar Confession adds a voice from the Reformed church in the global south to our Confessions. In the context of theologically justified division of Christians by racial category, Belhar identified the grace of Christ as the gift to the church that would enable it to manifest reconciliation with God and one another. But Belhar stresses that if the church is to be the church it is called to be, it must make visible that reconciliation. It asks us to look at our church and see what others see. Do others see a people reconciled in Christ, bearing one another’s burdens, needing and fulfilling one another’s hopes? Belhar asks how we can be the church of Jesus Christ and not exhibit this gift of unity across racial divides. Where divisions separate us, causing suffering, poverty, violence, and injustice, Belhar reminds us that God is a God of justice, the one who hears the cries of the oppressed.

In our divided cities, in our divided world, Belhar speaks a new word of hope learned in the crucible of apartheid and still relevant and fresh for us today.

We draw the assembly’s attention to the January 2010 Colloquium of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches on the Accra Statement and the Belhar Confession, co-sponsored by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), and attended by participants from most of the Reformed churches of North America and the Caribbean. That Colloquium demonstrated the current role of the Belhar Confession within a number of Reformed churches as they deal with challenges of globalization.

This Colloquium, or structured conversation, was designed to explore complementary elements in the Accra document and the Belhar Confession of the Uniting Reformed Church of Southern Africa, and to relate both of these to the North American and Caribbean context, where matters of race and economic justice are closely intertwined. This message from the participants is meant to be part of the larger conversation about the Accra Confession endorsed by the 24th General Council [of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches]. It recognizes that our Reformed tradition itself is a continuing conversation that reflects the democratic ethos and ethical commitments linked so firmly to John Calvin’s example in last year’s 500th anniversary celebration of his birth. Because of the linkage of race and economic justice, it was appropriate to hold the colloquium on the Martin Luther King, Jr. weekend. The words of the Belhar Confession came alive as we prayed at the news of the grievous earthquake in Haiti: “the church must stand by people in any form of suffering and need.” This tragedy underlined part of the Caribbean context illuminated by Belhar, one of historic enslavement, colonialism, neo-colonialism, white racism, environmental degradation, and the extreme poverty that is in substantial measure traceable to the former identified realities. ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 16-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

Item 16-01 on commending confessions that uphold the oneness of all believers and discontinue efforts to include the Belhar Confession in The Book of Confessions.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 16-01 be disapproved.

Rationale

In recommending both (a) confessions upholding the oneness of all believers, and (b) that the Belhar Confession not be included in The Book of Confessions, Item 16-01 ignores the confession’s emphasis on the unity of the whole church. The Belhar Confession arose in a context of racial hatred and oppression, when the church was separated by sinful practice and belief. The confession states that belief in Jesus is the only condition for membership, arguing for a radical unity in Christ.

Item 16-01 is concerned about the use of the confession for other purposes. Part of the human condition of sinfulness is the use of published texts, including but not limited to the Bible, throughout Christian history, to support a variety of practices, including slavery, oppression of women, and corporal punishment of children. The social history of South Africa and the U.S. are similar in that the economic systems of both countries were built on racially divisive policies that were subsequently rejected after years of struggle and resistance. While the U.S. “revolution” occurred earlier than South Africa’s, we still do not treat our neighbor as we want to be treated, and deep-seated anger and unforgiveness runs strong in our society. The U.S. is still in need of healing, a need that grows even greater today because American society is more than just descendants of European and African peoples. We are more diverse in culture, race, and ideas, and as a result, there is a need to gather together all groups with love, based upon the common principles of reconciliation, justice, and unity. The assembly is called to judge the Confession of Belhar on the theological argument and thought contained as it seeks the will of God for the PC(USA) at this moment.

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) disapprove this overture. The ACWC advises including the Belhar Confession in The Book of Confessions. The ACWC further counsels the 219th General Assembly (2010) to replace the exclusive language for God with expansive language throughout the confession.
The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advocates for standing in solidarity with people who are marginalized due to race, gender, or sexual orientation. The ACWC strongly advises that the exclusive language for God that is part of the current translation of the Belhar Confession either be noted as exclusive language or changed to represent the expansive language for God that is a part of the biblical tradition. The ACWC recognizes the South African church context in which Belhar was written is different from the context of discussions in the United States; however, the oppression of women persists in South Africa and all around the world.

While exclusive language for God may not be a primary cause of women’s oppression, exclusive language is certainly a reflection of patriarchal society and encourages us to see women as subordinate to men and to view men as more closely resembling God’s image. If we are to truly confess solidarity with all people who are oppressed and to witness against apartheid of all forms, then we must also address the language that divides women and men and encourages us to see separate and often very unequal roles as divinely ordained. Other churches who have adopted this statement have used the translation that the PC(USA) is considering. The original language was altered to represent inclusive language for human beings. However, our church, the PC(USA), unlike many other churches, has already adopted a confessional statement that refers to God as both father and mother (see The Brief Statement of Faith, adopted in 1983). This progress concerning the affirmation of women and inclusive language for God should be reflected in Belhar as well. The ACWC urges the 219th General Assembly (2010) to affirm Belhar and to consider the need to replace the language for God in the confession itself.

[The assembly approved Item 16-02. See p. 8.]

On Amending W-4.4000 by Adding Prayer—From the Presbytery of Western New York.

The Presbytery of Western New York overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

1. Shall W-4.4003(h) be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “h. Will you pray for and seek to serve the people with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love?”

2. Shall W-4.4004(a)(2) be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “(2) Do we agree to pray for them, to encourage them, to respect their decisions, and to follow as they guide us, serving Jesus Christ, who alone is Head of the Church?”

3. Shall W-4.4006(b)(2) be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “(2) Do we agree to pray for him (her), to encourage him (her), to respect his (her) decisions, and to follow as he (she) guides us, serving Jesus Christ, who alone is Head of the Church?”

Rationale

God invites us to seek His favor and help for ourselves and others through prayer.

The Bible is replete with examples of godly people praying for themselves and others.

Jesus taught His disciples to pray.

Jesus prayed for His disciples, including those who would believe through their witness.

The early Church was devoted to prayer, and prayed for each other.

The members and officers of the Church of Jesus Christ are repeatedly urged by the Holy Spirit in Scripture to pray for one another (Ex. 8:9; 1 Sam. 12:23; 2 Kings 19:4; Ezra 6:9f; Ps. 72; Mt. 5:44; Jn. 17; Acts 4:23–31; Rom. 15:31f; Eph. 1:15–21, 3:14–19, 6:18–20; Col. 1:3, 4:3; 1Thess. 5:25; Heb. 13:18; Jas. 5:16).

Yet nowhere in our services of ordination and/or installation do either members or officers commit to do so.

By including these few words in our services of ordination and/or installation, the members and officers of the church remind themselves of the importance of the ministry of prayer and commit themselves faithfully to discharge this precious stewardship.
Advice on Item 16-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to answer Item 16-02 with the following advice.

Rationale

The language of this proposal is clear and consistent with its intent, although it is unclear why this provision and not others would be amended with the admonition of prayer.

The language is consistent with the teaching of the Bible and with other provisions of the Constitution. Thus, the importance of the ministry of prayer might be emphasized as the questions are asked at services of ordination and installation.

As all members of the church are to be involved in prayer as part of corporate and personal worship as well as in fulfilling their membership as ministry (G-5.0102c), it is not necessary to amend the constitutional questions for new officers and for congregations so as to include the promise that they will pray for one another.

Given the importance of the constitutional questions for ordination and installation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the General Assembly only amend them when there is a clear, broadly supported, and necessary rationale.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 16-02 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

[The assembly disapproved Item 16-03. See pp. 8, 9.]

On Amending W-2.3008b Regarding Baptism of Children—From the Presbytery of Missouri Union.

The Presbytery of Missouri Union overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall W-2.3008b be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

"The Baptism of children witnesses to the truth that God’s love claims people before they are able to respond in faith and God pronounces that he adopts our infants as his children, before they are born."

1. (John Calvin, The Institutes of the Christian Religion, IV:15:20)

Rationale

Scripture tells us that the promise of God’s grace was given before we were born. “For the promise is for you, for your children, and for all who are far away, everyone whom the Lord our God calls to him” (Acts 2:39 NRSV). “All who are far away” includes those far away in time (the future) as well as in place. John Calvin understood unborn children to be part of the covenant community and an example of God’s grace. The unborn child illustrates that we do nothing to become a chosen child of God; God does everything: “Just as he chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world to be holy and blameless before him in love. He destined us for adoption as his children through Jesus Christ” (Eph. 1:4,5a NRSV). The particularly reformed idea of grace is more fully expressed by the addition of the proposed line from the Institutes. The line strengthens the understanding of grace.

Our confessions teach that when infants are baptized, “…the congregation, as well as the parents, has a special obligation to nurture them in the Christian life, leading them to make, by a public profession, a personal response to the love of God shown forth in their baptism” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.51). And, “Q. 74. Are infants also to be baptized? A. Yes, because they, as well as their parents, are included in the covenant and belong to the people of God. …” (The Book of Confessions, The Heidelberg Catechism, 4.074). The line to be added is an aid to parents as they anticipate the arrival of their children, knowing that they already, before their births and before their baptisms, are part of the covenant community.

This sentence to be added is consistent with Scripture’s recognition of God’s relationship with us before we are born:

For it was you who formed my inward parts; you knit me together in my mother’s womb. I praise you, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made. Wonderful are your works; that I know very well. My frame was not hidden from you, when I was being made in secret, intricately woven in the depths of the earth. Your eyes beheld my unformed substance. In your book were written all the days that were formed for me, when none of them as yet existed. (Ps. 139:13–16 (NRSV))

Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, and before you were born I consecrated you; I appointed you a prophet to the nations. (Jer. 1:5 (NRSV)) But when God, who had set me apart before I was born and called me through his grace, was pleased to reveal his Son to me, so that I might proclaim him among the Gentiles, I did not confer with any human being. (Gal. 1:15–16 (NRSV))

This sentence by Calvin “God pronounces that he adopts our infants as his children, before they are born” to be added also reinforces the reformed teaching that “elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who worketh when, and where, and how he pleaseth …” (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.066). The sentence offers comfort and reassurance to parents whose children die before or shortly after birth.

Concurrence to Item 16-03 from the Presbytery of Western Colorado (with Additional Rationale)

Scripture tells us that the promise of God’s grace was given before we were born. “For the promise is for you, for your children, and for all who are far away, everyone whom the Lord our God calls to him” (Acts 2:39). “All who are far away” includes those far away in time (the future) as well as in place. John Calvin understood unborn children to be part of the covenant community and an example of God’s grace. The unborn child illustrates that we do nothing to become a chosen child of God; God does everything. “[J]ust as he chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world to be holy and blameless before him in love. He destined us for adoption as his children through Jesus Christ (Eph. 1:4–5). The particularly Reformed idea of grace is more fully expressed by the addition of the proposed line from the Institutes. The line strengthens the understanding of grace.

Our confessions teach that when infants are baptized, “… the congregation, as well as the parents, has a special obligation to nurture them in the Christian life, leading them to make, by a public profession, a personal response to the love of God shown forth in their baptism.” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.51). And, “Q. 74. Are infants also to be baptized? A. Yes, because they, as well as their parents, are included in the covenant and belong to the people of God …” (Ibid., The Heidelberg Catechism, 4.074). The line to be added is an aid to parents as they anticipate the arrival of their children, knowing that they already, before their births and before their baptisms, are part of the covenant community.

The sentence to be added is also consistent with Scripture’s recognition of God’s relationship with us before we are born:

For it was you who formed my inward parts;
you knit me together in my mother’s womb.
I praise you, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made.
Wonderful are your works; that I know very well.
My frame was not hidden from you, when I was being made in secret, intricately woven in the depths of the earth.
Your eyes beheld my unformed substance.
In your book were written all the days that were formed for me, when none of them as yet existed. (Ps. 139:13–16)

Now the word of the LORD came to me saying, ‘Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, and before you were born I consecrated you; I appointed you a prophet to the nations. (Jer. 1:4–5)

But when God, who had set me apart before I was born and called me through his grace, was pleased to reveal his Son to me, so that I might proclaim him among the Gentiles, I did not confer with any human being. (Gal. 1:15–16)

This sentence by Calvin to be added also reinforces the Reformed teaching that “[e]lect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who worketh when, and where, and how he pleaseth …” (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.066). The sentence offers comfort and reassurance to parents whose children are still born or who die shortly after birth.

It has been the presumption throughout the church’s history that the unborn are human beings created by God in God’s image, and are, therefore, to be protected. Early Christians were known for resisting abortion and caring for babies left to die by those in the societies in which they resided. This sentence encourages members of the church to seek the protection and care of all children, both born and unborn. Current General Assembly policy says, “The strong Christian presumption is that since all life is precious to God, we are to preserve and protect it…” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 268).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 16-03

Advice on Item 16-03—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to disapprove Item 16-03.
Rationale

In the Directory for Worship section on Baptism, W-2.3008b states the appropriateness of the baptism of children as witness “to the truth that God’s love claims people before they are able to respond in faith.” Immediately following, W-2.3008c states that “[t]he Baptism of those who enter the covenant upon their own profession of faith witnesses to the truth that God’s gift of grace calls for fulfillment in a response of faithfulness.” These two provisions concern the meaning of Baptism as a sign and seal of God’s faithfulness toward those who are and those who are not able to respond in faith. Their paragraph headings refer to children (W-2.3008b) and to adults (W-2.3008c) but the Directory for Worship text does not otherwise specify what constitutes the “ability” to respond in faith, nor does it deal with how to draw the line between “ability” and “inability” in specific cases. Except for a very general distinction on the basis of age, the Directory for Worship is silent on the question of when a person is capable of responding in faith and may be baptized upon profession of faith.

Item 16-03 would add “God pronounces that he adopts our infants as his children, before they are born” (John Calvin, Institutes of the Christian Religion, IV:15:20), so that W-2.3008b would read “The Baptism of children witnesses to the truth that God’s love claims people before they are able to respond in faith and God pronounces that he adopts our infants as his children, before they are born.” The stated intent is to reinforce the Reformed teaching on Baptism. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the language cited from Calvin is from a section titled “Against ‘emergency’ baptism” and reads:

Yet (you say) there is danger lest he who is ill, if he die without baptism be deprived of the grace of regeneration. Not at all. God declares that he adopts our babies as his own before they are born when he promises that he will be our God and the God of our descendants after us [Gen. 17:7]. Their salvation is embraced in this word. No one will dare be so insolent toward God as to deny that his promise of itself suffices for its effect. (John Calvin, Institutes of the Christian Religion, ed. John T. McNeill, Library of Christian Classics, IV:15:20)

Following Ephesians 1:4 (God chose us in him before the foundation of the world) and Calvin, The Westminster Confession of Faith states that “all dying in infancy are included in the election of grace and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who works when and where and how he pleases” (The Book of Confessions, 6.193). Item 16-03 proposes what is in fact a confessional stance. The Book of Confessions contains a richness of statements on Baptism that is already part of our Constitution.

In cases of children the Constitution takes pains to emphasize that it is a responsibility of the session, with the minister and the parents or others rightly exercising parental responsibility, to determine if a child is to be baptized (e.g., G-5.0101c; G-6.0108a; G-6.0202b; G-10.0102b; W-2.3011; W-2.3012; W-2.3014). Item 16-03 would introduce the possibility that in response to requests, administration of the sacrament of Baptism could be permitted prior to birth, and that the sacrament could rightly be administered without a visible presence of one to be identified by the church, named and baptized with water into the community of faith in the name of the Triune God.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that a second issue concerning Item 16-03 is that it would put into the Constitution at W-2.3008b as a provision for church administration of Baptism a definition of personhood that continues to be an unsettled subject of vigorous and profound theological debate in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that heavily controversial issues in the church are not resolved by amendment of the Constitution.

A third issue for the assembly’s consideration is whether Item 16-03 proposes an exclusive understanding of how Presbyterians are to interpret the Bible. Item 16-03 would bring into the Directory for Worship one Presbyterian interpretation of Scripture, reading Psalm 139:13–16, Jeremiah 1:5, or Galatians 1:15–16 as inspired and literal descriptions of God’s all-knowing presence in the world; by another Presbyterian interpretation, these passages are read as the poetic rendering of inspired biblical writers expressing faith in God’s unbounded presence. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution does not advise on this question of how to interpret Scripture but notes that the Constitution recognizes the validity of differing views, affirming that “[s]o far as may be possible without serious departure from [constitutional] standards, without infringing on the rights and view of others, and without obstructing the constitutional governance of the church, freedom of conscience with respect to the interpretation of Scripture is to be maintained” (Book of Order, G-6.0108a). This committee further notes that previous assemblies have provided resources such as Presbyterian Understanding of the Holy Scripture, Biblical Authority, and Interpretation for the church’s ongoing study of how Presbyterians understand the authority of Scripture from differing faithful perspectives.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 16-03 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 16-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly that Item 16-03 be disapproved.
Section W-2.3008b states the Reformed tradition’s justification for the practice of infant baptism: “The Baptism of children witnesses to the truth that God’s love claims people before they are able to respond in faith” (Book of Order, W-2.3008b). The proposed amendment would place the unborn in the same position as the born infant. This raises issues with regard to problem pregnancies and abortion about which there is a good deal of diversity within the church.

In response to a number of overtures coming to General Assemblies in the 1980s concerning problem pregnancies and abortion, the 200th General Assembly (1988) directed the Moderator to select a task force “designed to give forum to each different theological position in debate of the issues related to problem pregnancies and abortion, and that the members of the commission represent the broadest spectrum of theological positions within the church …” (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 1016). The result of that study, Do Justice, Love Mercy, Walk Humbly (Micah 6:8), was adopted by the 204th General Assembly (1992) and is the current policy of the PC(USA) concerning problem pregnancies and abortion—most recently reaffirmed in 2006.

Do Justice, Love Mercy, Walk Humbly (Micah 6:8) faithfully and skillfully describes the areas in which this diverse group found agreement and those they did not: specifically, the interpretation of Scripture and the question of when human life begins.

Clearly there is both agreement and disagreement in our use and interpretation of Scripture. There is also agreement and disagreement on the basic issue of abortion. The committee agreed that there are no biblical texts that speak expressly to the topic of abortion, but that taken in their totality the Holy Scriptures are filled with messages that advocate respect for the woman and child before and after birth. Therefore, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) encourages an atmosphere of open debate and mutual respect for a variety of opinions concerning the issues related to problem pregnancies and abortion (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 367)

The passages of Scripture quoted in the Rationales supporting Item 16-03 are precisely those passages of Scripture in which the task force could reach no common agreement. The Minority Report (not adopted by the General Assembly) interpreted such passages as meaning that each conception is planned and intended by God. Thus, at every stage, “... God alone has the right over the life that he has created and the right over death” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 379, 27.172). With this interpretation, any abortion is an immoral taking of human life. The majority report, now PC(USA) policy, interprets such passages as theological assertions of God’s dominion over all creation. We can surely say that we move, breathe, and have our being in God. However, that dominion does not remove the realities of finite life, the workings of biological existence, naturally occurring harms, and the unintended consequences of well-intended acts. In this reality, God gives us the gift of human responsibility for making choices that have significant consequences in a complex and finite world. “... Were every conception willed by God, it would be difficult to understand why methods of birth control are legitimately matters of human decision making. Would that not be preventing conceptions God has intended?” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 366, 27.081). The majority report rejected the interpretation that every pregnancy was God’s will. The distinction made is similar to that made by The Westminster Confession of Faith between God as primary creator of all things and those secondary causes that, by God’s providence, are the result of physical laws, free will, or the complex weaving of finite forces on creation (The Book of Confessions, 6.024, 6.025).

Why is the issue of problem pregnancies and abortion relevant to this overture? The amendment proposed by the Presbytery of Missouri Union could seem to require a uniformity of belief regarding Scripture and the personhood of the unborn, from the moment of conception, that would negate the emphasis of the church’s current policy that the “... church ought to be able to maintain within its fellowship those who, on the basis of a study of Scripture and prayerful decision, come to diverse conclusions and actions” (Ibid., 27.089). In fact, this may be the purpose of the overture. This conclusion seems justified based on the reference to abortion in the concurrence submitted by the Presbytery of Western Colorado; that is, the quote is being interpreted in a literal fashion much the way the minority report in 1992 interpreted these scriptural passages, more literally.

The quotation from John Calvin that is being proposed for our use is not a statement on abortion or the personhood of the unborn. It is part of Calvin’s argument against emergency baptisms, especially those performed by women. What if a child is ill and in danger of death, yet no clergy is available? Calvin responds that to believe in the necessity of baptism for salvation is to presume that the grace of God is restricted by the need for a sign in order to become effective! He is arguing, then, that baptism itself is not essential for salvation, as baptism is the sign of the promise God has already made. We agree that this proper understanding of baptism does much to give comfort to parents whose children are stillborn or die shortly after birth and before being baptized. However, this comfort can be conveyed without the proposed amendment. On the other hand, asserting that every conception is a human life intended by God lays enormous guilt on women facing serious reproductive decisions related to problem pregnancies.

Section W-2.3008b, as currently written, correctly defines the agreed upon purpose of infant baptism in the Reformed tradition. The proposed amendment adds language about which the Presbyterian church has agreed to disagree. It has significant consequences for the church’s policies on problem pregnancy and abortion that are neither recognized nor addressed.

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the Advice and Counsel of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, and advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to disapprove this overture, and offers the additional comments below.

Rationale

The passage, an excerpt from Calvin’s Institute, is taken out of context and is being used to protect the rights of the unborn when Calvin’s concern was about proper administration of the sacraments. The excerpt here is entitled, “Against Emergency Baptism,” and is included in a larger section on “Objections to Ceremonial Accretions and to Baptism by Women.” Calvin was writing about the popular belief in his time that infants who were unbaptized were damned. The emphasis in this passage was about right administration of the sacraments, not the rights of the unborn. In addition, while Calvin is a key theologian for our Reformed tradition, he is not the only theologian, and his work is not an infallible source of knowledge for contemporary ethical debates. There are many different theological perspectives that should be represented in arguments related to the debate concerning the beginning of life and the way in which we understand God affirming the rights of all living things.

[The assembly disapproved Item 16-04. See p. 8.]

On Amending W-4.4006 to Include Questions to the Presbytery—From the Presbytery of Great Rivers.

The Presbytery of Great Rivers respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

That section W-4.4006 be amended by adding a new section “c.” as follows and re-lettering the current sections “c.–g.” as “d.–h.”:

“c. Following the affirmative answers of the questions asked to the person being installed and to the members of the congregation, the moderator of the commission shall face the members of the presbytery and its constituent congregations who are present and shall ask them the following questions:

“(1) While (Name) _____________ was a candidate for ministry, his (her) presbytery of care pledged to exercise responsibility for his (her) spiritual growth, to support him (her) with an understanding and sympathetic interest, and to help him (her) to seek guidance for study. Do we, members and commissioners of the Presbytery of (Name) _____________ and its constituent congregations, pledge to continue to care for (Name) _____________ with sympathy, understanding, and support?

“(2) Will we be friends with this colleague in ministry, working together, subject to the ordering of God’s Word and Spirit?

“(3) Do we agree to encourage him (her), to solicit his (her) opinions in matters before the presbytery, to work side-by-side as colleagues in ministry, serving Jesus Christ who alone is Head of the Church?

“(4) Do we who are members and commissioners of the presbytery promise to oversee his (her) call, ensuring that it meets standards for equitable pay and benefits; to assist this congregation in providing for his (her) welfare as he (she) works among us; to stand by him (her) and this congregation in times of trouble and to share in their joy?”

Rationale

There are three parties to each call of a minister of Word and Sacrament to serve as pastor, co-pastor, designated pastor, or associate pastor of a congregation. Currently, the Directory for Worship only directs questions to two of those parties—the one being installed and the members of the congregation. These questions would include the presbytery, as the third party to the call, to make its own affirmations during the installation service.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 16-04

Advice on Item 16-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to disapprove Item 16-04.
Given the importance of the constitutional questions for ordination and installation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the assembly only amend them when there is a clear, broadly supported, and necessary rationale.

Although it may be appropriate for the presbytery to answer questions such as those proposed—making mutual commitments and promising to care for minister members—it would be more appropriate for such questions to be asked in front of the presbytery when the minister is received by the presbytery rather than at the time of his/her installation service at a congregation.

Question (1) of the proposed amendment W-4.4006c “While N. was a candidate for ministry, his/her presbytery of care pledged to exercise responsibility for his/her spiritual growth, to support him/her with an understanding and sympathetic interest, and to help him/her to seek guidance for study. Do we, members and commission members of the Presbytery of N and its constituent congregations, pledge to continue to care for N. with sympathy, understanding, and support?” may be appropriate for a minister at the time of ordination, with its reference to the nurture of the candidacy process. But these references are not as relevant or timely for the minister who has been ordained for a long time or a minister who is received by the presbytery from other denominations.

Question (2) of the proposed amendment W-4.4006c “Will we be friends with this colleague in ministry, working together, subject to the ordering of God’s Word and Spirit?” is a question that could more appropriately be asked of all the members of the receiving presbytery, and not be limited to the commission members. Although a commission represents the corporate body of the presbytery, the question is more about personal relationships with the members of the presbytery, more than about the individual’s relationship with the governing body.

Question (3) of the proposed amendment W-4.4006c “Do we agree to encourage him/her, to solicit his/her opinions in matters before the presbytery, to work side by side as colleagues in ministry, serving Jesus Christ who alone is Head of the Church?” is an unnecessary question because a minister member of the presbytery already made such a commitment at the time of his/her ordination/installation (W-4.4003).

Question (4) of the proposed amendment W-4.4006c “Do we who are members and commissioners of the presbytery promise to oversee his/her call, ensuring that it meets standards for equitable pay and benefits; to assist this congregation in providing for his/her welfare as he/she works among us; to stand by him/her and this congregation in times of trouble and to share in their joy?” is a responsibility assigned to the committee on ministry by the presbytery (G-11.0502g, h, i). It is unnecessary to ask this question as it could confuse the lines of accountability.

However, it should be noted that nothing would preclude any presbytery to add these questions to the ordination and/or installation service without amending the Constitution if the presbytery desires to do so.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 16-04 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

Item 16-05

[The assembly approved Item 16-05. See p. 8.]

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following nominee to the Mountain Retreat Association, Inc.’s Board of Directors:

Item 16-06

[The assembly approved Item 16-06 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 8, 9.]

[Baptism Requirement for Participation in Lord’s Supper] [On Baptism and the Lord’s Supper].

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following:

[2.] [1.] That the approach to the Lord’s Table always be gracious and invitational, not scrutinizing membership credentials, but extending Christ’s welcome to the people of God.
1. That the practice of extending the invitation to the Lord’s Supper be gracious and hospitable to “all the baptized faithful” (W-2.4006; see W-2.4011) be maintained, remembering that “access to the Table is not a right conferred upon the worthy, but a privilege given to the undeserving who come in faith, repentance, and love” (W-2.4011).

3. That congregations renew the practice of the invitation to discipleship—a call to baptism and to the reaffirmation of baptismal commitment—particularly after the proclamation of the Word.

4. That unbaptized persons who present themselves at the Lord’s Table be warmly received and promptly instructed on the significance of the sacraments, in order that their hunger for spiritual nourishment might be met by a gracious invitation to Christ and to Christian life through baptismal discipleship.

Comment: This statement is offered as pastoral advice.

Rationale

This report is in response to the following referral: 2006 Referral: Item 13-04. Recommendation 4. That the 217th General Assembly (2006) authorize the Office of Theology and Worship to gather learning’s, insights, and experiences, from Churches That Engage in This Discipline (Practices That Deepen Baptismal Life and Discipleship), and to submit a final report to the 219th General Assembly (2010)–From the General Assembly Council (Minutes 2006, Part I, pp. 11–12, 1102).

On the Relationship Between Baptism and the Lord’s Supper

The 210th General Assembly (1998) asked the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Office of Theology and Worship, to examine the baptismal requirement for participation in the Lord’s Supper, as expressed in the Directory for Worship (W-2.4006 and W-2.4011). Observing that “the underlying issue which needs to be addressed is the relationship between baptism and the Lord’s Supper,” the Office of Theology and Worship recommended that the 214th General Assembly (2002) authorize “a full and substantive study of the sacraments both within the Reformed tradition and in the ecumenical context, in order to help the church discern the history and theology and baptism and the Lord’s Supper, as well as their appropriate relationship.” The Sacraments Study Group established by that initiative met six times over the next three years, and produced Invitation to Christ: Font and Table: A Guide to Sacramental Practices. At the recommendation of the Sacraments Study Group, the 217th General Assembly (2006) voted to call all Presbyterian congregations “to renewal, through Word and Sacrament, of our life together in Jesus Christ, by engaging in practices that deepen baptismal life and discipleship” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 1102). Specifically, churches were invited to engage in liturgical action and theological reflection around five sacramental practices:

1. Set the font in full view of the congregation.
2. Open the font and fill it with water on every Lord’s Day.
3. Set cup and plate on the Lord’s Table on every Lord’s Day.
4. Lead appropriate parts of weekly worship from the font and from the table.
5. Increase the number of Sundays on which the Lord’s Supper is celebrated.

The Office of Theology and Worship was asked to facilitate this period of study and discernment, and to report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010) with any findings and possible recommendations.

In the three years that have passed since the publication of Invitation to Christ, it seems clear that a season of sacramental renewal has begun to flourish in this denomination. Presbyterians are seeking to rediscover the meaning and mystery of baptism and the Lord’s Supper, and are eager to understand how they relate to Christ’s mission and the Christian life. Among the fruits of this season of renewal:

- More than 500 Presbyterian congregations responded in writing to the call to engage the five sacramental practices in worship and study, with most pledging to take up some or all of the recommendations.
- Approximately 7,000 copies of the sacrament study guide, Invitation to Christ, have been distributed to pastors, sessions, congregations, seminarians, and others.
- A website, www.pcusa.org/sacraments, was developed to provide further resources and collect responses to the sacrament study. Many pastors and members have joined the discussion, sharing their own stories of sacramental renewal at the congregational level; in 2009, the site averaged 1,000 visits per month. Invitation to Christ is also available to download free of charge at this site.
• “Font and Table,” an electronic newsletter devoted to sacramental renewal in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), has more than 2,000 subscribers.

• Invitation to Christ was translated into Korean, and was used as a primary resource at the 2008 Korean Worship and Music Conference, “Invitation to Christ: Baptism and the Christian Life.”

• Published in 2009, El Libro de Adoración, a Spanish-language companion to the Book of Common Worship, contains full orders of worship for the celebration of baptism and the Lord’s Supper.

• Numerous conferences of the Presbyterian Association of Musicians over the past several years have been directly and indirectly related to Invitation to Christ and sacramental themes in liturgy and music.

• A February 2009 Presbyterian Panel survey investigated current theological understanding and liturgical practice of baptism and the Lord’s Supper in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

• A February 2009 Presbyterian Panel survey investigated current theological understanding and liturgical practice of baptism and the Lord’s Supper in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), finding that monthly celebration of the Lord’s Supper has increased from 60 percent to 75 percent in the past decade.

It is encouraging to see this groundswell of support for the renewal of sacramental life in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Particularly at the 500th anniversary of John Calvin’s birth, it is exciting to see the denomination take up one of Calvin’s marks of the church—“the sacraments administered according to Christ’s institution”—with such enthusiasm.

With gratitude to God for this season of sacramental renewal in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and on the basis of the findings of this fertile time of dialogue and discernment, the Office of Theology and Worship recommends that practice of extending the invitation to the Lord’s Supper to “all the baptized faithful” (W-2.4006; see W-2.4011) be maintained. The relationship between baptism and the Lord’s Supper is theologically significant, historically attested, and ecumenically acknowledged. It plays a vital role in the preservation of the identity and integrity of the church as covenant community. At the same time, people (within and beyond the church) are hungry for spiritual nourishment, thirsty for divine presence, and yearning for deeper relationship with God. We are called to offer the promise of the gospel and the presence of Christ in Word and Sacrament, and to “[put] no obstacle in anyone’s way” (2 Cor.1 6:3) that would hinder them from receiving Christ. As the authors of Invitation to Christ wrote:

Baptism is connected with death and new life; the Supper is connected with ongoing nourishment of that life. Baptism is connected with incorporation into the body of Christ; the Supper is connected with the repeated gathering of that body over time. Baptism is connected with initiation into the covenant community; the Supper is the meal of that covenant community. In addition, the long, historical tradition of the church has practiced this rhythm of washing before eating, out of which has emerged a rich tradition of theological interpretation and liturgical practice. ... In general, the broad range of sacramental meanings seems best preserved when baptism leads to the table. Being washed comes before eating. Those who have come through the waters of birth then come to the table and learn to eat with that family. Nevertheless, when this order serves to exclude rather than welcome people to God’s grace, then perhaps it needs to be temporarily disrupted. The larger theological concern is the power of both sacraments to convey God’s transforming grace and God’s call to a transformed life. If someone receive’s God grace first at the table, we need rebuke neither that person nor the local church that has welcomed her. Instead, we should joyfully invite that person into the life-giving waters of baptism (Invitation to Christ, 46).

Weighing all these considerations, the profound theological, historical, and ecumenical relationship between baptism and the Lord’s Supper—along with the relationship between the celebration of the sacraments and the proclamation of the Word—should be strengthened, nurtured, and deepened in the practice of Presbyterian worship. The tension between covenant identity and hospitality cannot be easily resolved through church polity or liturgical rubrics, but must be carefully, thoughtfully, prayerfully worked out in common life, relying always on the guidance of the Word and Spirit of God.

This effort will require coordination and collaboration on the part of pastors and sessions. Pastors, for their part, should lead worship and celebrate sacraments in a way that stirs up longing for the water of the baptismal font and whets an appetite for the spiritual nourishment of the Lord’s Table (in other words, in a way that makes a compelling invitation to Christ). Elders, as spiritual leaders in the church charged with the administration of the sacraments, are responsible for knowing the people of the congregation, being aware of who is baptized (and who is not), being cognizant of who participates in the Lord’s Supper (and who does not), and in consultation with the pastor, providing for the ongoing formation and nurture of the community in sacramental participation and Christian life. Should persons who are not yet baptized present themselves to receive the Lord’s Supper during the service of worship, they are to be warmly received at the table and promptly instructed thereafter on the significance of baptismal discipleship. This call to discipleship should not be presented as an obstacle or barrier to full participation in worship, but as a gracious invitation to Christ: to grow in knowledge and faith, and to engage more fully and deeply in the Christian life and the covenant community.

Finally, the General Assembly Mission Council hopes that congregations will continue to explore the sacramental practices commended in Invitation to Christ, as these practices seem to be making a significant contribution to the renewal of sacramental life in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Furthermore, congregations should provide regular and ongoing opportunities for substantive theological reflection on the sacraments—with a variety of points of entry and levels of accessibility—through sermons, Christian education, programs welcoming new believers (the catechumenate), and special workshops or events.

[The assembly approved Item 16-07. See p. 8.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) grant permission to the following theological institutions to celebrate the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in 2011–2012: Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary; Columbia Theological Seminary, University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary; McCormick Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, Princeton Theological Seminary, San Francisco Theological Seminary, Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary in cooperation with the Interdenominational Theological Center, and Union Theological Seminary & Presbyterian School of Christian Education.

Rationale

Beginning in 1989, the General Assembly became the governing body that grants permission to celebrate the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at Presbyterian theological institutions. The 218th General Assembly (2008) granted permission for celebrations in 2009–2010.

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the revised Covenant Between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and El Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico below and to be review this covenant before the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

A COVENANT BETWEEN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) AND EL SEMINARIO EVANGÉLICO DE PUERTO RICO 2010–2016

I. Purpose

The purpose of this covenant is to define the nature and scope of the relationship mutually agreed to by El Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico (Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico) and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

II. History of the Relationship

In 1919, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America closed Seminario Teológico Portoricense in Mayaguez, Puerto Rico, and joined with four other Protestant mission boards to found the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico. This action was taken under the guidance of the Board of National Missions.

In 1918, the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church of the United States proposed this action as follows:

The Board is in receipt of a communication from Rev. J. A. McAllister, an accredited missionary in Porto [sic] Rico under our Board of Home Missions, in which it is stated that the evangelical denominations at work in Porto [sic] Rico have joined together in an effort to organize a union Theological Seminary for the purposes of training a native ministry.

The Board of National Missions and its successor (The Program Agency) continued to appoint trustees and provide funding for the school. File documents indicate that the Board/Agency annual grant was from $20,000 to $25,000 until the early seventies. Restructuring in the UPCUSA in the early seventies resulted in inadvertent dropping of the budget line for the school, although funds were subsequently found, and annual funding continued at approximately $30,000 per year.

By 1977, discussion about the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico joining the Council of Theological Seminaries arose. The council adopted as policy the task “to keep under review the issues and options related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico” (quoted by John H. Galbreath in correspondence to the Reverend Jaime O. Quinones, November 12, 1984).
In 1982, the seminary received accreditation from the Association of Theological Schools. This was renewed for ten years in 1987, in 1997, and again in 2008. In the same manner, the seminary retains its State license by the Council of Higher Education of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico as well as its accreditation by the Middle States Council of Higher Education. The 1997 visiting team of the ATS wrote:

Few theological seminaries have better reasons for their existence than does the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico. The only accredited theological school on the island, ESPR stands within the Reformed tradition and serves the growing ecumenical constituency of six sponsoring Protestant denominations while training leaders for several other Protestant and Catholic groups as well. Moreover, ESPR increasingly provides training for Hispanic churches in the Middle Atlantic states and other locations where large numbers of Puerto Ricans live.1

As reunion was implemented at the national level in the Presbyterian church, responsibility for the seminary was lodged with the office of Global Education and Leadership Development of the Committee on Higher Education.
Funding continued at the level of $25,000 to $30,000 per year. The “Articles of Agreement” governing reunion made no mention of the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico. The General Assembly appointed a special Committee on Theological Institutions (CTI) to recommend new reporting and funding systems for the ten Presbyterian seminaries and the Presbyterian School of Christian Education. Their report to the 1986 General Assembly dealt directly with the funding and reporting issues, but went on to note that the relationship of the church to the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico remained unfinished business, and that the matter should be explored, along with other issues, by a special study committee.

The Committee on Theological Education agreed that this question needed examination. In 1988, the General Assembly accepted the recommendation of the Committee on Theological Education and appointed the Special Committee to Study Theological Institutions. The Committee on Theological Education’s assignment to the special committee included the following question: What should be the status of institutions such as the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico and Auburn Seminary that have Presbyterian Church ties?2

After considerable study the special committee has recommended that the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico relate to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the Committee on Theological Education (or its successor). The special committee judged that existing categories of membership on the Committee on Theological Education do not adequately serve to respect the historic and continuous relationship between the Presbyterian church and the singular ecumensal venture that is the seminary. The Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico has strong historical ties with the Presbyterian church and serves both Presbyterian students and Presbyterian congregations as it relates to the larger denominational body in representational character and collaborative projects. The seminary acknowledges its roots in the Reformed tradition and the place of the Presbyterian church in its institutional identity. For almost a century, the Seminario Evangélico has been a constitutive part of the history of the Presbyterian Church in the United States in its theological, missionary, and ecumenical ventures.

The special committee recommended the adoption of a special agreement between the General Assembly and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico (ESPR). The Committee on Theological Education concurred with that judgment. This covenant constitutes that most recent agreement as developed by the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico and the Committee on Theological Education for consideration by the General Assembly, and by the Board of Directors of the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico.

Following up on the recommendation of the special committee to review the scope of the relationship and considering the time for a covenant renewal, the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) appointed a visit team to discuss the covenant and explore new levels of partnership with the seminary. The visiting team was convened by the Reverend Dr. Kenneth Kovacs and included other COTE members; the Reverend Dr. Iain Torrance, and Elder Vil-marie Cintrón-Olivierí. The COTE staff, the Reverend Dr. Lee Hinson-Hasty and Robert Fohr, also participated. The narrative that follows summarizes the visiting team recommendations for the renewal of the PC(USA)-ESPR covenant agreement.

III. Members of the Covenant

The members of this covenant, El Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico (Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico), operating under its governing board, the board of directors, and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) operating as a governing body, are independent, self-governing bodies neither being controlled by the other.
Together, they share a common vision to serve the church of Jesus Christ and, in an act of solidarity, will partner together to fulfill their mission.

IV. Expectations Under the Covenant

A. El Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico (hereinafter referred to as “the Seminary”) affirms its commitment in the following areas:
1. Academic Matters

The Seminary shall maintain its accreditation from an internationally recognized accrediting agency such as the Association of Theological Schools (ATS), the Middle States Association, the Latin American Association of Theological Education (ALIET), or the Commission of Theological Education in Latin America (CETELA), for the duration of this covenant.

The Seminary will meet the needs of its Presbyterian students and the Presbyterian leadership seeking continuing formation and development. To this end, courses in Hebrew and Greek will continue to be provided minimally on alternate years, and courses will be offered in Reform ed history, Reformed theology, and Presbyterian polity, as mandated by the action of the Seminary’s Board of Directors. The seminary will also continue to respond to the request for leadership formation from Presbyterian middle governing bodies both in the island and those presbyteries in the U.S. with sizable Hispanic/Latino populations.

The Seminary will continue to be responsive to the academic needs of its Presbyterian students as these needs are expressed by the Synod of Puerto Rico and the presbyteries comprising that synod.

The Seminary will administer the Presbyterian Ordination examinations (including the designation of a proctor), and will provide reviews and learning experiences to help students achieve maximum results.

The Seminary will work closely with the Synod of Puerto Rico and the three presbyteries on the island to provide the necessary resources and educational experiences for their candidates for ministry and their pastoral and lay leadership. The Seminary will secure a suitable adjunct faculty member to teach the course entitled, “EMI-9, Denominational Principles,” or its successor. The Seminary will continue to grant the synod the authority to nominate the adjunct faculty member, and shall require that the person nominated meets the Seminary’s qualifications as an adjunct faculty member. If the Seminary declines to hire the synod’s nominee, the synod will submit another nominee. The Seminary shall hire only a person nominated by the synod.

As stipulated by the Board of Directors of the Seminary in their action of September 26, 1992, the professor named to the Presbyterian-Reformed chair will be a minister of Word and Sacrament in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Searches for other faculty appointments will consider Presbyterians as well as other qualified persons. Although Presbyterians will be considered, the Seminary is not obligated to appoint Presbyterians to a faculty post except to the Presbyterian-Reformed chair.

2. Cooperation

The Seminary will participate in cooperative ventures undertaken by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) theological institutions. As is the case with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) schools, cooperation with the other institutions is voluntary, depending on how a proposal or program is related to the institution’s mission and the availability of resources.

The Seminary shall submit annually the same or equivalent reports to the Committee on Theological Education (or its successor), as are required of all Presbyterian theological institutions. Such reports may include, but are not be limited to:

a. finances;
b. enrollment and graduates;
c. changes to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws;
d. appointments to the faculty;
e. appointments to the board of directors;
f. a brief narrative report of activities of the school to be shared with the General Assembly;
g. appointment of a new president.

3. Collaboration

The Seminary will serve as a resource for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) whenever such service can be appropriately and feasibly provided from the Seminary’s resources, programs, and personnel. The Seminary will participate in collaborative ventures undertaken by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Seminary welcomes the partnership of other Presbyterian seminaries in projects where the institutional resources and expertise of its faculty can be supportive of current or new theological education ventures. The growing importance of Hispanic ministries in the United States and in other countries makes ESPR a very significant institution for the denomination in carrying out its mission.

4. Board of Directors of the Seminary

The seminary will invite and expect the representation of Presbyterian leadership in its board of directors as stated in its bylaws. The Seminary shall have two directors nominated by the Synod of Puerto Rico and one director nominated by the Committee on Theological Education (or its successor) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as provided in the Seminary’s bylaws upon the request of the seminary. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) nominees from the Synod of Puerto Rico and from COTE may be submitted to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for review and approval. The Seminary will maintain the same number of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directors (3) on the board of the Seminary as presently is mandated by the Seminary’s bylaws.

Nomination by the Synod of Puerto Rico or by COTE does not constitute election to the Board of Directors of the Seminary. The power to elect directors rests exclusively with the board of the Seminary. If the board of directors chooses to not elect one of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) nominees, it will ask for another nominee from the appropriate governing body.

5. Development Activity

The Seminary agrees that, as a beneficiary of the Theological Education Fund, it will adopt the fund-raising policies agreed to by the COTE as outlined in the Manual of Operations of the COTE.

As of February 1997, the policy provides that, normally, the Seminary may solicit PC(USA) congregations for current operating funds for support of the annual budget if those congregations have an alumnus/a on the staff, a student in the institution, a trustee or former trustee as pastor, a geographic relationship, or are congregations which have given to the Seminary before. In soliciting Presbyterian congregations for operating budgets all communications will make first and foremost an appeal for support of the Theological Education Fund, i.e. the 1% Plan.

It is expected that all fund-raising activity among Presbyterians and Presbyterian churches in Puerto Rico will take place in close, cordial, and cooperative relationship with the Synod of Puerto Rico. The Seminary will continue to raise funds toward the full endowment of the Presbyterian-Reformed chair.

B. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), affirms its commitment in the following areas:

1. The Committee on Theological Education (or Its Successor)

This covenant relationship with the Seminary shall give to that institution voice and vote, with full participation on the Committee on Theological Education or its successor. Every effort must be made by the Seminary to ensure that the institutional representative to COTE is Presbyterian. Travel and lodging expenses associated with attendance of the Seminary’s representative to meetings of the Committee on Theological Education (or its successor) shall be reimbursed by the PC(USA) in accordance with its reimbursement policies.

The Committee on Theological Education will provide assistance as appropriate to the Seminary and the Synod of Puerto Rico for interpreting the Theological Education Fund to congregations in the synod, as well as the Seminary’s faculty and staff.

The Committee on Theological Education will provide the Seminary ongoing guidance with respect to any fund-raising efforts the Seminary undertakes in the United States or elsewhere where there is expertise.

2. Financial Support

The Committee on Theological Education (or its successor) shall include the Seminary in the annual allocation of the funds it administers, such funds including the Theological Education Fund. The Seminary shall be allocated funds according to the same formula as the other Presbyterian theological institutions, with the exception that the Seminary shall receive one-fifth of one share of that portion of the Theological Education Fund and other moneys that are divided in shares among the institutions without reference to numbers of graduates.

As of 1997, 46.5 percent of the administered funds are distributed on the basis of the number of graduates in all degree programs with 2.5 percent left to the discretion of the Committee on Theological Education. The Seminary will receive funds distributed on the number of graduates on the same basis and in the same manner as the other theological institutions.
The Seminary may seek moneys from the discretionary fund portion of the Theological Education Fund and other administered funds on the same basis and in the same manner as the other theological institutions.

Income from funds that are held in trust by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation and that are restricted by their original donor specifically to a particular Seminary shall not be included in the computed allocation of the Theological Education Fund and other funds allocated by the Committee on Theological Education (or its successor).

3. Disclosure

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agrees to disclose and describe this new arrangement to the other supporting denominations of the Seminary.

V. Indemnity

The Seminary agrees to hold the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) harmless for any acts, omissions, or failures to fulfill the terms of this covenant. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agrees to hold the Seminary harmless for any acts, omissions, or failures to fulfill the terms of this covenant.

VI. Amendments

Changes in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or in the circumstance of the Seminary may affect portions of this covenant. Either party to this covenant—the Seminary and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as represented by the Committee on Theological Education (or its successor)—may request revision of parts or this entire covenant during the term of this agreement. Amendments to this covenant may be executed by mutual agreement of the Board of Directors of the Seminary and the General Assembly.

VII. Term

The term of this covenant shall commence when formally approved and signed by the designated parties and shall expire in June/July 2016 (222nd General Assembly [2016]).

The covenant may be renewed by mutual consent.

VIII. Formal Approval

This covenant shall be effective upon formal approval by the Board of Directors of the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico and by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and when signed by the Moderator and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and by the Seminary’s president and the chair of the Board of Directors of the Seminary.

Financial support under this covenant shall continue for the duration of the covenant.

This covenant recognizes that the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico may develop other covenant relationship with other denominations who support the Seminary.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and El Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico, acting by and through the signatories below, do so covenant and agree:

Endnotes

3. The by-laws of the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico stipulate in Article I.A.1. on the composition of the board of directors the following: “One person representing each of the founding and cooperating mission boards in the United States of America.” This agreement proposes that the Presbyterian representative be nominated by the Committee on Theological Education or its successor.
Most of the proposed covenant remains the same as the covenant approved in 2003 by the General Assembly and reaffirmed by the General Assembly Mission Council in 2009 and the second time the General Assembly is considering a renewal of a covenant agreement with ESPR. There are several changes to the covenant worth highlighting. While the covenant is between ESPR and the PC(USA) (not with COTE), some of the changes in the proposed covenant have a direct bearing upon ESPR’s relationship to COTE. Those changes have been approved by COTE as it forwards this revised covenant to the 219th General Assembly (2010) that:

1. Broadens accreditation possibilities for ESPR, beyond the Association of Theological Schools (ATS). This could include accreditation through the Latin American Association of Theological Education (ALIET) or the Commission of Theological Education in Latin America (CETELA). This is recognizes the fact that ESPR operates in a Hispanic world and permits access to broader accreditation authorities. The task force believes this would be an anti-colonial move and asset to the PC(USA) as a whole. [Proposed Covenant IV.A.1.]

2. Invited reconsideration of ESPR’s membership status in COTE. The ESPR is really something other than a “Corresponding Member” of COTE. The nature of its mission and its relationship to the PC(USA) requires a kind of hybrid membership, a different form of membership that will allow it to participate more fully in COTE. The ESPR has been given both voice and vote on COTE. Giving vote will enable an ESPR institutional representative to participate in the leadership of COTE (executive committee membership, chair, vice-chair, etc). [Proposed Covenant IV.B.1.]

3. Highlights COTE’s responsibility for nominating a PC(USA) representative to the ESPR Board of Directors. We have not fulfilled our promise in this effort. As a result, COTE will establish a process of nomination and that this be done in collaboration with ESPR. In conjunction with ESPR, COTE ascertain the terms of service for the board member, the characteristics and skills set needed that reflects the “season” in the life of the school. The nominee need not be a COTE member. [Proposed Covenant IV.A.4.]

Also worth noting, COTE will discuss the theological rationale for the allocation formula as it relates to ESPR and consider reevaluating the 1/5 portion of the Theological Education Fund (TEF) that ESPR receives. [Proposed Covenant IV.B.2.] To facilitate this process, ESPR will be asked to share the funding commitments of the other four denominations that relate to the ESPR.

The Committee on Theological Education’s ESPR-PC(USA) Covenant Renewal Task Force met with leaders of ESPR in San Juan, Puerto Rico, 10th–12th September 2009. Our time together was the culmination of several months planning for the renewal of the covenant relationship between ESPR and the PC(USA), which expired in December 2008 and was renewed by the General Assembly Mission Council through December 2009.

Early in the process we determined that our first priority was to make this a collaborative experience, as well as “An Act of Solidarity.” We reviewed and discussed the covenant as it currently stands. From our conversations, guiding questions emerged that we then shared with ESPR. We invited representatives from ESPR to share their expectations for our visit, to state their priorities; we asked them to reflect upon our guiding questions, and to then raise questions regarding the covenant from their perspective. Our time together was guided by these four goals. We would worship together, listen to each other, affirm each other, and look for ways to enable each other.

We are grateful for the warm welcome and generous hospitality we received from ESPR. They were particularly happy to greet us, the first delegation from COTE to visit ESPR, and grateful for the conversation. We prayed together; worshipped with the seminary community; shared meals; learned a lot about Spanish colonial history, as well as the political, cultural, and ecclesial history of Puerto Rico; engaged in lively conversation (both formally and informally); went on a campus tour; met with synod representatives; met with Presbyterian pastors and graduates of ESPR; and we reviewed a long-range vision presentation that included plans for future development and expansion.

From the start, there was a high level of trust and transparency that allowed for honest and open discussions. We reviewed the current covenant and together identified changes that should be made. We agreed that the language needed to be updated (removing terms such as “native ministry”), language that better reflects contemporary realities; the covenant needed a new history of the covenant relationship written by ESPR.

We revised the section now entitled “Expectations” (formerly termed, “Responsibilities”) and added a new section called, “Collaboration.” Our aim was to craft a document that removed any language that implied “compliance” or “obedience,” in order to mutually affirm a covenant that reflected a spirit of partnership, collaboration, and solidarity. Our hope was to present a covenant that breathes new life into the relationship, that envisions a way forward, something that speaks to a covenant agreement in a post-colonial situation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 16-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that Item 16-08 be approved.

Rationale

The ACREC appreciates the efforts of the Evangelical Seminary and the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) in revising this important covenant, particularly in efforts to form the relationship using vocabulary appropriate for Christian partners in a postcolonial context.

Additionally, in light of COTE’s request in Item 15-09 for a conversation to develop strategies to increase Hispanic/Latino/a participation throughout the church (and particularly in theological education), ACREC sees a possible role for the resource of the Evangelical Seminary and the cultural understandings and perspectives of its staff, faculty, and administration. The ACREC encourages dialogue with the Evangelical Seminary as COTE commits itself to assisting PC(USA) seminaries in including Hispanic/Latino scholarship in their curricula.

[The assembly approved Item 16-09. See p. 8.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the new trustees elected by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) theological institutions in 2008–2009:

Rationale

“A Plan for the Governance and Funding of the Theological Institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986), requires the COTE to present presidents and trustees of PC(USA) related seminaries to the General Assembly for approval. A list of the entire board of trustees of each of the ten seminaries, as well as biographical information about trustees to be approved will be made available by COTE for review by the appropriate committee during the 219th General Assembly (2010). Similar information will also be made available about those currently serving on the boards of Auburn Theological Seminary and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico that are related to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through covenant agreements.

In addition, and as required by vote of the 209th General Assembly (1997), the following information is offered in regard to racial ethnic, gender, and clergy/lay representation on the various seminary boards.

Item 16-10

[The assembly approved Item 16-10. See pp. 8, 9.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve Stephen A. Hayner as president of Columbia Theological Seminary.

Rationale

General Assembly approval of Dr. Hayner’s appointment as president of Columbia Theological Seminary is required by “A Plan for the Governance and Funding of the Theological Institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986) and by the seminary’s current bylaws.

Steve Hayner was appointed president of Columbia Theological Seminary in 2009. Since 2003 he has served Columbia as Peachtree Professor of Evangelism and Church Growth. Steve holds degrees from Whitman College, Harvard Divinity School, Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary, and University of St. Andrews where he completed his Ph.D. in 1984.

Previously Steve has served as university pastor at University Presbyterian Church in Seattle, as vice president of Seattle Pacific University, as president of InterVarsity Christian Fellowship, and as associate pastor of two churches in Madison, Wisconsin.
Item 16-11

Report of the General Assembly Special Committee on the Heidelberg Catechism to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

The General Assembly Special Committee on the Heidelberg Catechism recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following two actions:

1. Appoint the presently constituted Special Committee on the Heidelberg Catechism to recommend to the 220th General Assembly (2012) a new translation of the present Heidelberg Catechism in The Book of Confessions in cooperation with the Christian Reformed Church in North America (CRCNA) and the Reformed Church of America (RCA).

2. Instruct the Special Committee on the Heidelberg Catechism to consider inclusion of appropriate Scriptural citations and/or textual references that correspond to each article of the Catechism.

Rationale

A. History of Charge

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved Item 13-06, an overture from the Presbytery of Newark. The overture sought to “correct translation problems in five responses of the Heidelberg Catechism as found in The Book of Confessions and to add the original Scripture texts of the German Heidelberg Catechism” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1260). The overture identified the following five sections of the Catechism for consideration: Q/A 19, 33, 55, 74, 87.

Because the overture sought to amend The Book of Confessions, Chapter XVIII of The Book of Order specified the necessary steps for proper consideration of the overture’s proposed amendments.

B. Composition of Special Committee

The 218th General Assembly (2008) authorized the Moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008) to appoint the fifteen members of the special committee.

The Moderator appointed the following:

The special committee was staffed by the Reverend Thomas Hay of the Office of the General Assembly and the Reverend Charles Wiley of the Office of Theology Worship and Education (General Assembly Mission Council).

C. Meetings

1. Initial Meeting Louisville, Kentucky: March 27–28, 2009:

This was the one face-to-face meeting of the General Assembly Special Committee on the Heidelberg Catechism. At this meeting we shared our background with appropriate introductions. Over the two days we were able to investigate our options as they related to the task given to us from the 218th General Assembly (2008). During the meeting we studied translation issues, including those noted in the overture, heard presentations on the historical and contemporary contexts, and agreed to:

- Engage in conversation with overture advocates.
• Request the Stated Clerk to initiate conversations with his counterparts in the Christian Reformed Church of North America and the Reformed Church in America, apprising them of the conversations the Special Committee has had with the Christian Reformed Church in North America (CRCNA) and the Reformed Church of America (RCA) joint translation committee.

• Analyze carefully the German, Latin, and English versions of the Catechism for accuracy of translation, readability, and theological integrity.

  a. Historical Context

  Of prime importance in understanding and appreciating the Heidelberg Catechism is first to recall the diversity of reform movements that marked sixteenth century Europe, resulting in intense theological turmoil. The Reformation was not a single, unified, orderly movement, but was marked by theological tensions and divisions.

  Disagreement and discord were especially evident between Lutheran Christians, influenced by the theology of Martin Luther and his successors, and Reformed Christians, influenced by the Swiss reformers Huldrych Zwingli and Heinrich Bullinger, as well as by John Calvin. These two Reformation traditions converged in Heidelberg. But rather than erupting into greater controversy, Heidelberg became a place marked by cooperation and conciliation, when, in 1562, Frederick the Elector, ruler of the Palatinate, proposed the preparation of a catechism that would be acceptable to both Lutheran and Reformed believers. The resulting catechism, traditionally attributed to Zacharias Ursinus (a professor of theology) and Kaspar Olevianus (a preacher), represented a collaborative connection between academy and church. The Elector Frederick took final responsibility for the catechism, and defended it publicly.

  Written in question-and-answer format particularly suitable to theological instruction and conveying the rudiments of the faith, the Catechism has contributed to the Christian education of laity, both children and adults, and theological students. Divided into a fifty-two “Lord’s Day” format, the Heidelberg has the added bonus of providing a comprehensive preaching guide for pastors.

  Written originally in German (of which the third German edition is definitive), and soon translated into Latin, the Heidelberg Catechism is personal and irenic in tone. Its intent was to establish religious peace and confessional uniformity in the Reformation churches. Above all, it sought to heal divisive rifts in Eucharistic theology among the Reformers by denying that “the bread and wine became the very body and blood of Christ” but affirming that “by this visible sign and pledge … we come to share in his true body and blood through the working of the Holy Spirit ….”

  The Heidelberg Catechism has become the most translated of the sixteenth century confessions, and has profoundly influenced doctrinal and ecumenical understanding and cooperation among Reformation churches.

  b. Contemporary Context

  Though historically Presbyterians were largely a “Westminster people,” the Heidelberg Catechism was approved in the nineteenth century for use in the former Northern Presbyterian Church. When The Book of Confessions was formed in 1967, it was decided that The Confession of 1967 and The Westminster Confession of Faith should not stand alone. This opened the door to the inclusion of The Heidelberg Catechism, along with others, into The Book of Confessions. The Heidelberg Catechism has established itself above other confessions in The Book of Confessions because of its personal, inclusive, and evocative nature, beginning with the first question: “What is your only comfort, in life and in death?” (The Book of Confessions, 4.001) The Heidelberg Catechism promotes God’s majesty and providential care, which is especially evident in the work of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord, and which is further elucidated through the now well-known “guilt, grace and gratitude” theological schema.

  c. June 2, 2009

  A letter was sent to the Reverend Gradye Parsons, Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the Reverend Dennis Hughes, moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The letter included the special committee’s findings on the process in which the overture was transmitted by the Presbytery of Newark and received by the Office of the General Assembly and recommendations to clarify and improve the transmission process.

    (1) Findings Related to Reception of Newark Overture and Editorial Process

    When the committee began its work in 2009, early in its deliberations a question was raised regarding a discrepancy in the language and translation of section 2 of the overture, particularly section 4.033.

    The Book of Confessions, 4.033, currently reads as follows: “A. Because Christ alone is God’s own eternal Son, whereas we are accepted for his sake as children of God by grace.”
The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved and communicated to the special committee the following (strike-through means delete; italics means insert):

“A. Because Christ alone is God’s eternal Son natural son, whereas we are accepted adopted for his sake as children of God by grace.”

The committee was concerned about the theological implications of omitting “eternal,” which threatens the loss of a key theological point related to the nature of Christ.

Persons in the following capacities were asked to provide their understanding of the above omission:

- A member of the Assembly Committee on Theological Issues and Institutions.
- General Assembly staff present at the 218th General Assembly (2008).
- One of the original authors of the overture

The committee’s investigations found the following: First, no significant amendments or changes to the overture were made either in the work of the committee or on the floor of the assembly. Therefore, the overture referred to the special committee contained the same language that was approved by the assembly committee, reported to the assembly plenary, and finally approved by the assembly. Second, the motion adopted by the Presbytery of Newark and communicated to the OGA had left out the word “eternal” from the text. The overture as communicated from the stated clerk of the Presbytery of Newark to the OGA read as follows (words in parenthesis were suggested deletions; words in all caps were proposed insertions):

“Because Christ alone is God’s (own) NATURAL Son, whereas we are (accepted) ADOPTED for his sake as children of God by Grace.”

Therefore, when the proposed motion reached the OGA an editorial decision was made that the presbytery intended to omit “eternal” since it was completely absent from the proposed overture. This resulted in the omission of the word.

In addition, the committee ascertained that the original intent of the overture authors was to include the following: “the eternal natural Son of God,” rather than the approved language of “God’s own natural Son.” Neither the authors of the overture, the general presbyter (who was the overture advocate), nor the presbytery stated clerk was aware of the omission.

(2) Recommendations Related to Findings of Transmittal of Item 13-06

In response to this error, the chair of the special committee corresponded with the Stated Clerk and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly on behalf of the special committee regarding the process of reception and communication of overtures and recommended that when there is uncertainty with proposed overture language, OGA staff should consult with presbytery staff leaders and/or overture advocates to ensure accuracy of language.

The OGA agreed to implement this recommendation.

2. Tuesday July 28, Conference Call

The special committee formed two sub-teams: a Translation Sub-Team and a Final Report Sub-Team. The Translation Sub-Team would examine the preliminary translation of the CRCNA/RCA Joint Translation Committee and submit its review. The Final Report Sub-Team began preparations to draft the special committee’s report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

3. Friday, October 30, 2009 Conference Call

A conference call was convened with prayer to discuss the outline of the final report. The General Assembly Special Committee on the Heidelberg Catechism decided to recommend that the 219th General Assembly (2010):

- Explore the possibility of replacing the present Heidelberg Catechism in The Book of Confessions with the new joint translation of the Heidelberg Catechism of the Christian Reformed Church in North America (CRCNA) and the Reformed Church of America (RCA); and
- Retain the Special Committee on the Heidelberg Catechism, as presently constituted, so that it may recommend to the 220th General Assembly (2012) proposals related to the CRCNA/RCA joint translation.
D. Findings Related to Issues Raised by Item 13-06

Item 13-06 asked the General Assembly to rectify five specific translation errors in the English version of the Heidelberg Catechism in the current version of The Book of Confessions. The overture further asked the General Assembly to add the Scripture texts to the English version that were present in the original German document.

The issue with section 4.033 has been considered above.

Further, the special committee agreed with Item 13-06 that the current translation 4.087 contains language not present in the original German or Latin texts of the Heidelberg Catechism that appears to have been added later.

There was a general consensus among the special committee that there are significant translation problems in the current English version of The Heidelberg Catechism in addition to those cited in the Newark overture. The special committee therefore concluded that, in order to provide for a more faithful translation, a more comprehensive approach to these problems needed to be explored.

E. Five Examples of Problems in PC(USA) Translation

The General Assembly’s Special Committee on the Heidelberg Catechism is comprised of fifteen members. Seven of these, proficient in German and Latin, were asked to advise the committee on translation deficiencies in the current translation of The Heidelberg Catechism. It was apparent to the seven members of the translation team that the current translation of The Heidelberg Catechism contained a number of translation inaccuracies or infelicities, including addition of English words and phrases not present in the original, and translations of given words or phrases that could be more faithful to the German and Latin originals.

Five specific examples of these kinds of errors follow. These instances do not include those cited in Item 13-06, and are illustrative, rather than comprehensive, of the translation in The Book of Confessions.

1. Q. 3: The current version renders the German, “Elend” as “sin and its wretched consequences.” A more accurate translation of “Elend” would be something akin to “misery.” This is an example of the insertion into the English of additional, unnecessary, and, perhaps, even inaccurate language.

2. Q. 10: The current version translates the German, “Will Gott diesen Ungehorsam und Abfall ungestraft hingehen lassen?” as “Will God let man get by with such disobedience and defection?” The colloquial “get by with” does not capture the Heidelberg’s language of punishment, and changes the syntax of the question by inserting “man” into the phrase. The special committee concurs with the proposed translation of the CRC/RCA version, “Will God permit such disobedience and rebellion to go unpunished?” Further, in the first line of Answer 10, “er zürnt schrecklich” is softened to the point of inaccuracy: “for the wrath of God is revealed from heaven.” This translation fails to reflect the seriousness of God’s wrath against sin in the original German, “God is terribly angry.”

3. Q. 12: The current version reads: “Since, then, by the righteous judgment of God we have deserved temporal and eternal punishment, how may we escape this punishment, come again to grace, and be reconciled to God?” A: “God wills that his righteousness be satisfied; therefore, payment in full must be made to his righteousness, either by ourselves or by another.” There are two problems here. The PC(USA) version here translates ‘und wiederum zu Gnaden kommen’ in the question as “come again to grace, and be reconciled to God?” And be reconciled to God does not exist in the original German, and is apparently inserted here as a clarification. Further the PC(USA) translates “deswegen müssen wir . . . vollkommene Bezahlung tun” in the answer as “payment in full must be made to his righteousness.” This inserts “to his righteousness” which is not found in the original. Such insertions tend to obscure rather than clarify the meaning of the catechism.

4. Q. 90. The current rendering is: “What is the birth of the new self?” The answer, “Complete joy in God through Christ and a strong desire to live according to the will of God in all good works.” This rendering of “die Auferstehung des neuen Menschen” as the birth of the new self entirely omits the reference to resurrection in the original German. The special committee worked with the CRC/RCA translation committee in proposing the following rendering for Question 90: “What is the rising-to-life of the new self? Answer. It is wholehearted joy in God through Christ and a love and delight to live according to the will of God in all good works.”

5. Q. 127. The current translation asks, “What is the sixth petition?” Its answer reads, “‘And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.’ That is: since we are so weak that we cannot stand by ourselves for one moment, and besides, since our sworn enemies, the devil, the world, and our own sin, ceaselessly assail us, be pleased to preserve and strengthen us through the power of thy Holy Spirit so that we may stand firm against them, and not be defeated in this spiritual warfare, until at last we obtain complete victory.” The current rendering of “der Teufel, die Welt, und unser eigen Fleisch” as “the devil, the world and our own sin” obscures the original’s reference to “our own flesh.” This is more accurately rendered in the proposed CRC/RCA translation as, “The devil, the world, and our own flesh.”
The special committee conferred with the authors of the overture and ascertained that where the overture text uses the term “Scripture texts” the intention was to indicate “Scripture citations,” for the original German text included Scripture citations by book and chapter in the margins for each question and answer. We concluded that any new translation of the catechism should consider including appropriate scriptural citations and/or textual references that correspond to each article of the catechism.

F. Final Comments Regarding CRCNA/RCA Translation

The special committee consulted with members of the CRCNA/RCA Joint Translation Committee, asking the CRCNA/RCA Joint Translation Committee to revisit those translation issues about which the translation team of the special committee voiced concern. The CRCNA/RCA was cordial and receptive to the suggestions of the translation team, and will consult with them in order to pursue a more accurate, faithful, and ecumenical translation of the Heidelberg Catechism.

G. Concluding Summary

The above recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010) are based upon a comprehensive review of the German and Latin texts of the Heidelberg Catechism conducted by the special committee in 2008–2009. This review identified multiple ways in which the current translation of the Heidelberg Catechism could be improved and corrected, in addition to the five examples identified by the original overture.

Review of the joint CRCNA/RCA translation and consultation with the CRCNA/RCA during 2010–2012 would provide joint ecumenical cooperation and witness in relation to this Reformed catechism, and in hopes that a new translation of the Heidelberg Catechism would be shared by three Reformed denominations in North America.

This cost accounts for two, face-to-face meetings of the fifteen-member special committee, three teleconferences, two committee representatives’ attendance at the 220th General Assembly (2012), and administrative costs.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 16-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The ACREC advises that this report be approved with comment.

Rationale

The ACREC appreciates the work being done by the special committee on moving toward a more accurate translation into English of this confession from the original German.

The ACREC asks that the special committee also look at translation issues into the Spanish and Korean versions, and how proposed translation changes will affect and call for new translations of the Heidelberg Confession into Spanish and Korean.

Item 16-12

[The assembly approved Item 16-12 with amendment. See pp. 8, 9–10.]

Report of the Special Committee on the Belhar Confession

The Special Committee on the Belhar Confession unanimously recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the inclusion of the Confession of Belhar in The Book of Confessions, and that the amendment be sent to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes by June 2011. [Text for the Confession of Belhar can be found as Attachment 2.]

[Scripture references should be added by footnotes, using those references found in earlier versions of the Belhar Confession published by the Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa. The “Accompanying Letter” customarily included with the Belhar Confession should be printed in The Book of Confessions as a background document without confessional status.]
Rationale

1. Why Should the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Adopt the Confession of Belhar?

The Confession of Belhar confesses the Christian faith powerfully, touching hearts especially at those places where we are struggling today to be faithful.

2. Reconciliation and Unity

First, the PC(USA) is preoccupied with questions about the unity of the church. The Confession of Belhar both reassures and challenges us when it speaks of Christ’s work of reconciliation being made visible in the church:

We believe … that unity is, therefore, both a gift and an obligation for the church of Jesus Christ; that through the working of God’s Spirit it is a binding force, yet simultaneously a reality which must be earnestly pursued and sought: one which the people of God must continually be built up to attain; … that the variety of spiritual gifts, opportunities, backgrounds, convictions, as well as the various languages and cultures, are by virtue of the reconciliation in Christ, opportunities for mutual service and enrichment within the one visible people of God; that true faith in Jesus Christ is the only condition for membership of this church. (As printed in the Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 1265–66)

The Confession of Belhar describes the active and practical ways in which unity must be expressed in loving service to one another. It thus reminds us that the confession emerged in 1980s from a South African Reformed community whose leaders and members had been oppressed because of their race and imprisoned for their resistance to their nation’s legally mandated system of apartheid, a strict segregation of people of different racial and ethnic backgrounds. Their “mother-church” of European immigrants had divided the Reformed Christians of South Africa into four distinct churches according to the system of apartheid: one for the descendants of white colonials like themselves, one for descendants of immigrants from Asia, one for those of mixed race (the church that produced the Confession of Belhar), and one for black Africans. Their mother-church taught that apartheid was justified on the basis of Scripture and that it properly allowed people of different races and cultures to have their own separate development. In 1982 the World Alliance of Reformed Churches declared this reading of Scripture heretical. Subsequently, the Confession of Belhar was written to provide a strikingly different biblical view of the church and insists on its unity across all racial and cultural divides. The confessing community was bold and courageous in directly defying the unjust laws of church and state, echoing at times The Theological Declaration of Barmen confession, and remarkably gracious in its focus on God’s love and justice. We remember that the church of mixed-race people acted on their convictions by merging with that of the black Africans. Then, in an astonishing gesture of forgiveness, they invited the white and Asian churches to join them in one Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa. That unification process has not yet reached completion, but unity is still being pursued.

The gift of unity and the obligation to pursue the unity of the church were both accepted by those who wrote the Confession of Belhar with the full knowledge that they would pay a heavy price in suffering. The authors, who themselves represented different racial backgrounds, lived out this reconciliation in the crafting of this confession. The confession challenges us as we realize that it is not armchair theology but costly grace experienced in faithful obedience to Jesus Christ. If we are to be faithful to the Gospel, we also must accept this gift and obligation with the full knowledge that they will be costly in many ways. This confession expresses clearly our own church’s longing for unity across barriers we see in our own situation of different spiritual gifts, backgrounds, convictions, languages, and cultures, both within our church and across denominational lines. We long for concrete testimony of the reconciliation and mutual service in the one church of Jesus Christ. The Confession of Belhar reassures us with its confidence that the good news of Jesus Christ offers hope, liberation, salvation, and true peace.

3. Justice

Our church is preoccupied with questions of justice, certainly including racial justice. As we read the Confession of Belhar, we remember that not long ago our own church struggled with overt and even legal racial segregation in church and state. Within the living memory of many of our church members, African American Christians were turned away from white congregational worship and communion; protesters against segregation in civil society were beaten and killed by police and supporters of the existing social structure. We identify profoundly with the struggle in South Africa to defeat apartheid at least partly because we see in that struggle our own story. Our church members, along with many other citizens, protested and boycotted in solidarity with our brothers and sisters in South Africa. We felt the unity of the church across the globe in a special way. Today, like those in South Africa, we celebrate the remarkable transformation of our societies with the lowering of legal barriers; yet we mourn the painful legacies of long years of segregation. Inequalities of resources of education, of health care, of employment opportunities, of respect by society, have left both our societies with vast gaps between the life possibilities of the dominant white society and those of people of color. Recent political discourse has alerted us to the degree to which racism remains alive in our national life and lays a responsibility upon the church to address it.
Again, the Confession of Belhar both reassures and challenges our church. It reassures us that God is active in bringing justice and true peace in the world, and that when we stand with the oppressed, the poor, the orphans and widows, the stranger, and the prisoner, we stand with God. The confession challenges us to take that stand with God.

We believe...that the church must therefore stand by people in any form of suffering and need, which implies, among other things, that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream; that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged; that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others. (as printed in the Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1267)

At present, The Book of Confessions represents well our historical connection with European theology and our own confessing on the American scene. But it lacks any witness to our profoundly significant theological bonds with churches on other continents. It would be appropriate to select the Confession of Belhar for inclusion as such a witness both because of our church’s sense of identification with the struggle for church unity and for racial justice that it represents, and also because it declares the Gospel powerfully to us in our own present situation.

The Confession of Belhar is increasingly recognized and respected by the church outside South Africa. It reflects major themes of the Reformed tradition: its deep biblical roots, its high Christology and Trinitarian theology, its emphasis on the sovereignty of God over all creation, its commitment to seek the visible unity of the church as the body of Christ in whom the walls of hostility are broken down, its call for justice for all of humanity, its conviction that in our common baptism in the one Lord and one faith all have been empowered by the Holy Spirit to the ministry of reconciliation.

This confession has been granted confessional status by some Reformed churches in Europe, Africa, and the Caribbean. Two of our sister Reformed churches in North America are in the process of adopting it: the Reformed Church in America and the Christian Reformed Church in North America. Many of our own church members know and identify strongly with this confession. It is being taught in our seminaries and being used in worship in some of our congregations. In this sense it already plays a role in our church’s life. With its formal adoption, we expect the themes of this confession to permeate the life of our denomination in its liturgy, its theological and missional reflections, and its training of church officers, just as has happened with more recent confessions such as The Theological Declaration of Barmen, The Confession of 1967, and A Brief Statement of Faith. We are indebted to this confession for its reassurances and its challenges to shake us out of our comfort and strengthen us to make a bolder and more faithful witness to the Gospel.

The process of preparing our church for the possibility of adopting the Confession of Belhar began with a task force reporting to the General Assembly in 2004. In the Task Force to Study Reparations report, the General Assembly approved a recommendation for a church-wide study by all presbyteries and congregations in preparation for the General Assembly of 2008. In 2008, the General Assembly called for the creation of a special committee to study whether Confession of Belhar should be adopted into The Book of Confessions.

The members of this committee now unanimously and enthusiastically endorse its adoption.

[Notes: It has been approved by Reformed Church in America (RCA), Evangelical Reformed Church (Germany), Protestant United Church (Belgium), Reformed Church (Iglesia Reformada Dominicana (Dominican Republic)).]

Belhar Pastoral Letter

Dear brothers and sisters in the PC(USA),

We write to you as the fifteen members of the Belhar Confession Special Committee commissioned by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and subsequently appointed by the moderator together with the two previous assembly moderators. The Belhar Confession was originally produced in the 1980’s by the South African Dutch Reformed Mission Church to protest the longstanding evil of apartheid in that country. We were asked by the Assembly to study this Confession and to decide whether or not it should be commended to the PC(USA) for inclusion in The Book of Confessions (BOC): The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church, (USA), Part One. The Book of Order, G-18.0201, spells out an exacting process that must be followed for any amendment to the BOC to be accepted. In short, after the initial approval by a G.A. for a special committee to study the viability of such an amendment, a proposed amendment to the BOC requires approval by the General Assembly, followed by a vote of approval of at least two-thirds of all our presbyteries before the final approval of its inclusion in the BOC by the ensuing General Assembly can take place.

We believe that the PC(USA) is in urgent need of being claimed and transformed by the gospel it professes to believe, to serve, and to proclaim to the world. Our American Presbyterian story is inextricably intertwined with our nation’s story. The American Declaration of Independence nurtured an inspiring vision of freedom, equality, and justice for all of our citizens. However, when the American Constitution was drafted in 1789, the founding authors in large measure betrayed the Declaration’s vision by reckoning a slave as three-fifths of a person for apportioning representation in the newly created House of Representatives.
Throughout the nineteenth century, efforts to maintain the political unity of north and south in the midst of the scourge of slavery ultimately failed, and our nation suffered the division and violence of the Civil War. In his Second Inaugural Address, President Abraham Lincoln lamented that both sides read the same Bible and prayed to the same God and believed that God was on their side. Presbyterians fought on both sides, deeply divided over the issues of race, biblical interpretation, and God’s will. Not only was our nation split down the middle, but our Presbyterian denomination became divided between “northern” and “southern” churches. This legacy of America’s racism and struggle to overcome it continues to inhabit the soul of both nation and church.

During the twentieth and into the twenty-first century, our nation has become progressively multi-racial and multi-cultural. In God’s providence, the world has been brought to our doorstep. Yet the mission of our church has not, by and large, been successful in embracing the new immigrants that have come to us from every nation. The vast majority of our congregations are still predominantly Euro-American, aging, and enjoying an economic level above most of the rest of the nation. Our membership numbers and adult baptisms continue to decline. Our cities continue to be segregated by ethnicity and social class. Cultural differences based upon language, gender, and wealth as well as ancient forms of ‘tribalism’ fueled by racism and ethnic chauvinisms continue to confront us with major challenges to the well-being of the church as we strive to witness to a fallen culture and a secular way of living.

In the face of these conflicts, the cry for schism is heard in several mainline Protestant churches. Together with other faith communions, we as Presbyterians are being compelled to rethink our biblical and confessional tradition and to ask what it means for us to be “one holy catholic and apostolic Church” (Nicene Creed, BOC, 1.3). If ever there were a time in which we need to know, to believe, to embrace, and to live our confession, it is now. According to The Book of Order,

“The PC (USA) states its faith and bears witness to God’s grace in Jesus Christ in the creeds and confessions in the Book of Confessions. In these confessional statements the church declares to its members and to the world

Who and what it is,

What it believes,

What it resolves to do.” (BO, G-2.0100)

The Belhar Confession has been helping many Reformed churches around the world to understand their call to the unity of Christ’s Church and their call to mission. We note that some partner churches in the Caribbean Africa and Europe (including the Evangelical Reformed Church in Germany, the Protestant United Church in Belgium, and the Reformed Church in the Dominican Republic) have already adopted Belhar as a confessional standard. As a part of the world Reformed family, we believe that American Presbyterians also need to be in conversation with the Belhar Confession. The church’s witness would be strengthened by a Book of Confessions that includes this document from the earth’s Global South, where the mission of the church is expanding so rapidly. We have much to learn from those churches’ struggles for unity, reconciliation, and justice. Their modeling of God’s grace in their rejection of injustice and embracing of forgiveness is a humbling reminder of our own need for renewal, even as it provides a beacon of light for the entire Reformed family. We understand that the Reformed Church in America and The Christian Reformed Church in North America are already engaged in a time of prayerful and theological discernment about whether to add Belhar to their own confessional standards. We enthusiastically urge the Presbyterian Church (USA) to move forward in its own process of discernment.

Our committee also believes that the Belhar Confession joins the chorus of witnesses to God’s story of salvation embodied in our Book of Confessions. This gospel story reveals the eternal purpose, plan, and will of God who “created the heavens and the earth.” From before the foundation of the world God willed “to gather up all things in Christ, things in heaven and things on earth” (Ephesians 1:9-10). For the sake of the new creation, the one Triune God, the Holy One of Israel, became incarnate in Jesus of Nazareth. In his life, death, and resurrection God acted in human history to make peace, to break down dividing walls of hostility, and to reconcile the cosmos and humanity to God’s Self and us as human beings to each other. Through the blood of Jesus’ cross, God’s mercy and grace rescued creation and human history from a hopeless bondage to the powers of sin and death. Through the amazing grace of God and by the faith which comes through God’s love revealed in Christ, Jews and Gentiles, circumcised and uncircumcised, justified and unrighteous, male and female, were joined together for the purpose of becoming one family of God, fellow citizens of the reign of God, and a holy temple of the Lord, being indwelled by the Holy Spirit of God. This salvation is of God and from God, God’s gift from beginning to end (2 Corinthians 5:16–21; Galatians 3:23–4:7; Ephesians 2:11–22; Colossians 1:13–23; 3:1–17).

As a new humanity we are called to live this gift of grace, to actualize who we are in Christ: the one, reconciled, just people of God. The citizens of the Kingdom of God, united in Christ, baptized into Christ, welcomed at the one Table of the Lord, are to be a light to the nations of God’s peace and justice. The visible unity of the people of God and the transformed character of this people are to witness to God’s salvation in a still broken, violent, and divided world. Through the fruit and the gifts of the Holy Spirit, the body of Christ is to be built up in the love of God for the sake of God’s mission in the world (Ephesians 4:1–32). As disciples of Jesus Christ we are called to be ambassadors of Christ’s reconciling peace, justice, and love. To the degree that the church has failed to be God’s people and to live into the reality of God’s will, we are called to repent and to work for the transformation of our life together.

As we think again of our church and our relation to the more recent history of racial division in the United States, we think especially of what Martin Luther King, Jr. wrote at the conclusion of his Letter From A Birmingham Jail in 1963 that continues to beam the hope of the American dream:

One day the South will know that when these disinherited children of God sat down at lunch counters, they were in reality standing up for what is best in the American dream and for the most sacred values in our Judaeo-Christian heritage, thereby bringing our nation back to those great wells of democracy which were dug deep by the founding fathers in their formulation of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence.
The Belhar Confession is a courageous proclamation of the gospel from our brothers and sisters in the South African Uniting Reformed Church. It emerged out of the context of the sinful, unjust realities of South Africa and in part reflects its conversation with the Theological Declaration of Barmen that was hammered out in a similar context of evil. Belhar is a cry for the true biblical gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ to be proclaimed and lived in the church and world. It reflects a Christian community that is truly prepared “to undertake this mission even at the risk of losing its life, trusting in God alone as the author and giver of life, sharing the gospel, and doing those deeds in the world that point beyond themselves to the new reality in Christ” (G-3.0400, Book of Order).

The Special Committee to study the Belhar Confession believes that this Confession from South Africa has a profoundly important message for our church and will continue to speak to every new generation. Its biblical roots and Reformed theological perspective will strengthen our confessional tradition by guiding us in our study of the Bible, in our theological reflection, liturgical practice, evangelistic outreach, making of disciples, works of social justice, and our mission of peacemaking to the world.

Therefore, we, the Special Committee to study the Belhar Confession, are convinced that the Belhar Confession should be included as one of our confessional standards. We prayerfully commend the Belhar Confession to the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) for inclusion in our Book of Confessions. To that end, we recommend further the excellent study guide for the church by Eunice T. McGarrah, Study of The Belhar Confession and Its Accompanying Letter, published by the Office of Theology and Worship and available online at (domain address here). The Belhar Special Committee would urge that the PC(USA) use this publication in every presbytery and congregation for study and reflection for the period 2010 through 2012. [Note: If the GA votes for inclusion, presbyteries will have completed voting by Spring 2011]. It is our hope that the larger church will see, hear, and embrace the good news to which the Belhar Confession bears such strong witness.

Grace and Peace

Attachment 2

Confession of Belhar

September 1986

1. We believe in the triune God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, who gathers, protects and cares for the church through Word and Spirit. This, God has done since the beginning of the world and will do to the end.

2. We believe in one holy, universal Christian church, the communion of saints called from the entire human family.

We believe

- that Christ’s work of reconciliation is made manifest in the church as the community of believers who have been reconciled with God and with one another;
- that unity is, therefore, both a gift and an obligation for the church of Jesus Christ; that through the working of God’s Spirit it is a binding force, yet simultaneously a reality which must be earnestly pursued and sought: one which the people of God must continually be built up to attain;
- that this unity must become visible so that the world may believe that separation, enmity and hatred between people and groups is sin which Christ has already conquered, and accordingly that anything which threatens this unity may have no place in the church and must be resisted;
- that this unity of the people of God must be manifested and be active in a variety of ways: in that we love one another; that we experience, practice and pursue community with one another; that we are obligated to give ourselves willingly and joyfully to be of benefit and blessing to one another; that we share one faith, one hope; together serve God in this world, and together fight against all which may threaten or hinder this unity;
- that this unity can be established only in freedom and not under constraint; that the variety of spiritual gifts, opportunities, backgrounds, convictions, as well as the various languages and cultures, are by virtue of the reconciliation in Christ, opportunities for mutual service and enrichment within the one visible people of God;
- that true faith in Jesus Christ is the only condition for membership of this church;

Therefore, we reject any doctrine

- which absolutizes either natural diversity or the sinful separation of people in such a way that this absolutization hinders or breaks the visible and active unity of the church, or even leads to the establishment of a separate church formation;
- which professes that this spiritual unity is truly being maintained in the bond of peace while believers of the same confession are in effect alienated from one another for the sake of diversity and in despair of reconciliation;
- which denies that a refusal earnestly to pursue this visible unity as a priceless gift is sin;
- which explicitly or implicitly maintains that descent or any other human or social factor should be a consideration in determining membership of the church.
3. We believe
   • that God has entrusted the church with the message of reconciliation in and through Jesus Christ; that the church is called to be the salt of the earth and the light of the world; that the church is called blessed because it is a peacemaker; that the church is witness both by word and by deed to the new heaven and the new earth in which righteousness dwells;
   • that God’s lifegiving Word and Spirit has conquered the powers of sin and death, and therefore also of irreconciliation and hatred, bitterness and enmity; that God’s lifegiving Word and Spirit will enable the church to live in a new obedience which can open new possibilities of life for society and the world;
   • that the credibility of this message is seriously affected and its beneficial work obstructed when it is proclaimed in a land which professes to be Christian, but in which the enforced separation of people on a racial basis promotes and perpetuates alienation, hatred and enmity;
   • that any teaching which attempts to legitimate such forced separation by appeal to the gospel, and is not prepared to venture on the road of obedience and reconciliation, but rather, out of prejudice, fear, selfishness and unbelief, denies in advance the reconciling power of the gospel, must be considered ideology and false doctrine.

Therefore, we reject any doctrine
   • which, in such a situation sanctions in the name of the gospel or of the will of God the forced separation of people on the grounds of race and color and thereby in advance obstructs and weakens the ministry and experience of reconciliation in Christ.

4. We believe
   • that God has revealed himself as the one who wishes to bring about justice and true peace among people;
   • that God, in a world full of injustice and enmity, is in a special way the God of the destitute, the poor and the wronged;
   • that God calls the church to follow him in this; for God brings justice to the oppressed and gives bread to the hungry;
   • that God frees the prisoner and restores sight to the blind;
   • that God supports the downtrodden, protects the stranger, helps orphans and widows and blocks the path of the ungodly;
   • that for God pure and undefiled religion is to visit the orphans and the widows in their suffering;
   • that God wishes to teach the church to do what is good and to seek the right;
   • that the church must therefore stand by people in any form of suffering and need, which implies, among other things, that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream;
   • that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged; that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others.

Therefore, we reject any ideology
   • which would legitimate forms of injustice and any doctrine which is unwilling to resist such an ideology in the name of the gospel.

5. We believe that, in obedience to Jesus Christ, its only head, the church is called to confess and to do all these things, even though the authorities and human laws might forbid them and punishment and suffering be the consequence.

Jesus is Lord.

To the one and only God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, be the honor and the glory for ever and ever.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 16-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

Item 16-12 is the Report of the Special Committee on the Belhar Confession, and recommends inclusion of the Belhar Confession in The Book of Confessions.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 16-12 be approved.
Rationale

The ACREC sees the theological importance of the Belhar’s three emphases and the need of the church for such a statement at this time to give us perspective on issues that divide us from one another and separate us from God through sin. The ACREC is pleased, then, to advise approval of the report of the special committee, Item 16-12. The members of this committee studied the confession and its accompanying letter closely, and is unanimously recommending the confession’s inclusion in The Book of Confessions.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 16-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 16-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the report and advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to approve Item 16-12.

Rationale

See ACWC’s rationale for Item 16-01.

---

Item 16-13

[The assembly approved Item 16-13. See p. 8.]

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) answer Item 16-13 with the following response:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) answer the request with the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.4001b:

Throughout our Constitution the term “office” refers to the office of elder, deacon, or minister of the Word and Sacrament, or to persons elected to the positions of moderator, clerk, trustee, or treasurer of a congregation or governing body. Services of ordination and/or installation, such as those envisioned in W-4.4001b, appropriately require a brief statement of the nature of the office or offices to which candidates are to be ordained or installed. In those cases where W-4.4001b applies to commissioning services for persons not otherwise being ordained or installed to one of the church’s offices, it is appropriate for the minister presiding at such a service to offer a brief statement of the nature of the commissioned service.

Rationale

This recommendation comes as the result of a request received by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution from a pastor in the Presbytery of Peace River. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution does not initiate business before the Assembly. However, pursuant to G-13.0112, the Stated Clerk must submit to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution all questions requiring an interpretation of the Book of Order by the General Assembly. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution, in turn, must report its findings and any recommendations it has to the General Assembly. The Assembly is free to adopt, amend or decline to approve the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

1. Question Presented to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution:

   Item 16-13 from the pastor from Presbytery of Peace River presents the following question upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

   a. Would the last sentence of W-4.4001b more properly say “The minister presiding shall state briefly the nature of the ministry to which the person is being ordained, installed or commissioned?”

   The questioner notes that the section includes instructions regarding the contents of services of ordination and/or installation for elders, deacons, and ministers of the Word and Sacrament, as well as commissioning services for certified Christian educators, commissioned lay pastors, and others.

2. Findings

   Pursuant to G-13.0112d, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the questions presented:
With respect to the question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question presents a question in which authoritative interpretation of W-4.4001b is advisable.

The questioner rightly notes that the use of the term “office” in the final sentence of W-4.4001b would seem to imply that all persons listed earlier in the paragraph are being ordained, installed, or commissioned to an “office.” However, the Book of Order otherwise limits the use of the term “office” to elders, deacons, ministers, moderators, and governing body clerks. Persons in certified service in the church do not, by virtue of that service alone, occupy an “office.” Hence the inclusion of the term “office” in a context applying to persons in certified service not otherwise elected to office seems overly broad.

Implications for the proposed Form of Government: Approval of Item 16-13 would have similar implications for the proposed Form of Government that it would have on the current Form of Government.

Item 16-14
[The assembly approved Item 16-14. See pp. 8, 9.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve Paul T. Roberts as president and dean of Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary.

Rationale

General Assembly approval of the Reverend Paul T. Roberts’ appointment as president and dean of Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary is required by “A Plan for the Governance and Funding of the Theological Institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” which was approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986), and by the seminar’s current bylaws.

Paul Roberts was appointed president and dean of Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary in May of 2010 in Atlanta, Georgia. Previously Dr. Roberts has served as interim president and dean of Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary. Roberts also served for more than ten years as pastor of the Church of the Master in Atlanta, Georgia. He has been a leader among alumni.

Roberts is a member of the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta and holds degrees from Princeton University (BS, 1985) and Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary (M.Div., 1996).

Item 16-15
[The assembly approved Item 16-15. See pp. 8, 9.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve Michael Jinkins as president of Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary.

Rationale

General Assembly approval of the Rev. Dr. Jinkins’ appointment as president of Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary is required by “A Plan for the Governance and Funding of the Theological Institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” which was approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986), and by the seminary’s current bylaws.

Michael Jinkins was called as president of Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary in June of 2010. Dr. Jinkins has served Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary as an administrator and professor since 1993, and as dean since 2004. He has been ordained in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for twenty-nine years and joined the Austin Seminary faculty following fourteen years in pastoral leadership and mission service within several congregations in the State of Texas.

As an author of 12 books and more than 100 articles, essays, chapters, reviews, and papers in academic, professional, and ecclesial publications, Dr. Jinkins is well respected for his contributions to the life of the church and the academy and in many ecumenical circles.

Dr. Jinkins is a member of Mission Presbytery and holds degrees from Howard Payne University (BA, 1975), Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary (M.Div., 1979), Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary (D.Min., 1983), and University of Aberdeen, (Ph.D., 1990 in Systematic and Historical Theology).
Item 17-Self-Study ACSWP

Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) Self-Study Report for the 219th General Assembly (2010)

The Presbyterian Church is under obligation to show how... Christian principles apply to all social, moral, economic, national and international relationships... that responsibility for ... this vital and far-reaching task be lodged with a group of socially-minded and consecrated men and women, authorized by the General Assembly...and that the group so appointed be clothed with authority commensurate with their responsibility.” (Minutes, PCUSA, 1936, Part I, p. 199)

I. Introduction

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) presents the following report as a measurement of performance for the six-year review period of January 1, 2004, through December 31, 2009. Previous examinations of the church’s social witness structures have occurred in the 1936 study quoted above, and subsequently in 1949, 1977, and 1993.

The ACSWP welcomes the task of self-assessment. A critical first step in this task is the identification of the organizational goals to be measured. Social witness is part of both the preaching and the leadership of the church. Preliminary Principles in the Book of Order contain a great social witness vision of the purpose of the church in relation to its members and its neighbors. Ultimate goals of social witness are its contributions toward the achievement of two of the great ends of the church—specifically, “the promotion of social righteousness” and “the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world” (Book of Order, G-1.0200).

The ACSWP serves the church and the leadership of both the General Assembly (GA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) by providing carefully reasoned arguments and forceful theological justifications for the church’s response to critical social issues. These are guided by a sense of the church’s independence and integrity as found in The Scots Confession, The Westminster Confession of Faith, and The Theological Declaration of Barmen. Further rationale for ACSWP’s role in the church is stated in our twentieth century confessions. In the words of The Confession of 1967,

In each time and place, there are particular problems and crises through which God calls the church to act. The church, guided by the Spirit, humbled by its own complicity and instructed by all attainable knowledge, seeks to discern the will of God and learn how to obey in these concrete situations” (The Book of Confessions, 9.43).

Congruent with the review standards, this self-study seeks to demonstrate that over the 2004–2009 review period, ACSWP has demonstrated “fidelity to mission and partnership” and “effectiveness of services.” [The General Assembly’s review standards are listed in Appendix A.]

In submitting this report, ACSWP invites readers to think about how important it is that the church not be silent in the face of tragedy, injustice, and the denial of responsibility. The church is asked to address these situations with wisdom, hope, and courage, even when its membership is not entirely of one mind.

A. Report Resources and Content

The chief resources for this study are the texts of the church’s confessions, ACSWP minutes, and Minutes of the General Assembly that provide an ethical orientation for the work of church agencies. Church leaders also have been surveyed by the Research Services office of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), in a manner similar to other review processes, noting general levels of awareness of and agreement with ACSWP’s work. Survey respondent comments were made available to the self-study writing team and selected information from the comments has been incorporated into this assessment.

In order to assess ACSWP’s contributions over the review period, it is necessary to include in this introduction to the self-study both an explicit understanding of the overall function of ACSWP as advisor on social witness policy of PC(USA) and an understanding how this advisory function is expected to be performed in specifically mandated activities.

After introducing ACSWP’s mandated functions, this self-study report is organized into five sections regarding ACSWP’s:

1. Primary PC(USA) Relationships;
2. Accomplishments and Contributions;
3. Leadership in Social Witness;
4. Challenges and Limitations; and
5. Future Objectives.
B. Social Witness and Social Policy Witness

It has been the practice of Reformed Christians to care for the reform of both self and church within the broader community, and to be concerned with “the establishment of social righteousness.” The function of ACSWP is to help the church’s representative bodies speak with wisdom and forethought on challenges to Christian conscience.

This function of social witness has been integral to the Reformed tradition and part of the Presbyterian church’s life since the first General Assembly’s letter to President Washington on public morality in 1789. This function has been structured in a variety of ways subsequent to the 18th century. Appendix B presents a brief chronology of how the task of developing social witness policy has been structured in the life of the Presbyterian church in the United States.

The fundamental denominational structure as defined in the Design for Mission was organized around the concept of mission embodied in The Confession of 1967. That confession’s most explicit ethical section lifts up four concerns: peace, economic justice, racial justice, and “chaos in family life.” The adoption of The Book of Confessions in 1967 also brought forward much explicit moral teaching in The Second Helvetic Confession, The Heidelberg Catechism, and The Scots Confession. Overall, these confessions strengthened the connection between theology and ethics in the church and affirmed a place for the church’s moral voice in society.

The charter for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is the document Vision for Social Policy and Social Witness: Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness, adopted by the General Assembly in 1993. That report updates previous approaches to social policy-making in the church in light of A Brief Statement of Faith (1991). The approach described in this document has been designed to provide the best possible discernment, reflection, and analysis to the General Assembly and its agencies and hence to the church as a whole, and to do this on a reasonably timely, cost-effective, and participatory basis. Presbyterian social witness requires taking a long view, as each separate policy statement or advice and counsel memo draws on the rich legacy of Reformed social thought.

C. Assigned Specific Functions (See Appendix D also)

To assist the church in its role of making social witness, the GAMC Manual of Operations assigns the following specific functions to ACSWP:

a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions study papers, social involvement reports, or Advice and Counsel Memoranda on the church’s social witness for study and recommendation to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council, or on its own initiative; seek concurrence of the council relative to financial implications on plans for studies.

b. Advise General Assembly Mission Council on matters of social witness policy or strategy, including interim statements concerning pressing social issues, the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly. Facilitate two-way communication with all parties throughout policy development and advisory processes.

c. Prepare special studies at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council, or its Ministries on matters of social witness.

d. Work cooperatively with the Ministries and all governing bodies in coordinating the interdependent process of social policy formation, implementation, and monitoring.

e. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its representative committees on overtures, commissioner resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that recommend policy direction or action on social witness.

f. Maintain an up-to-date and accurate Social Policy Compilation of General Assembly social witness policy and provide information to the church as requested.

g. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret the social witness policies of the GA.

h. Identify facets of the church’s social witness that enable or obstruct effective action. Analyze, in cooperation with the General Assembly Ministries, the effectiveness of social witness in governing bodies, institutions, and the General Assembly Mission Council. After consulting entities that have primary ministry responsibility and the General Assembly Council, report to the General Assembly on the advisory committee’s findings, together with recommendations for improving social witness.

i. Report directly to the General Assembly because of the need to maintain and advance a prophetic witness of the church.

In these ways ACSWP counsels the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council on the use of the church’s corporate voice as an advocate for justice, peace, and environmental sustainability. The Structural Design for Mission complements Vision for Social Policy and Social Witness: Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness. In its description of the church’s organization, this document reaffirms ACSWP’s location in the policymaking rather than program implementation areas of the General Assembly Mission Council. (The organizational chart included as Appendix C illustrates ACSWP’s location external to the programmatic entities within the GAMC.)

While ACSWP is not a program entity, PC(USA) may develop its programs in response to an action approved by the General Assembly on studies or recommendations developed by ACSWP. For example, a number of the church’s programs in the Compassion, Peace, and Justice program area, including those of peacemaking and child advocacy, were initiated in response to the General Assembly’s approval of ACSWP studies and recommendations. Other programs have been shaped by recommendations from studies of their topic areas, e.g., the Presbyterian Hunger Program and Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI). Recommendations for new program emphases and areas can also be directed toward other agencies under the authority of the General Assembly, such as the recently accepted recommendation to include an immigration lawyer within the Office of the Stated Clerk.

D. Process of Policy Development

Study teams of church member experts volunteer their time to develop position statements that provide the basis for recommendations that the assembly may approve with or without amendment, receive (more or less for study), or disapprove. Subject specialist consultants are also employed to draft documents, in consultation with the study groups. The ACSWP as a whole reviews the study teams’ reports and determines their readiness for submission to the General Assembly (GA) or the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

II. Primary PC(USA) Relationships

Because ACSWP’s function is carried out in collaboration with other PC(USA) agencies and committees, an accurate assessment of ACSWP’s fidelity to its mission during this review period requires detailed description of ACSWP’s primary PC(USA) organizational relationships.

A. Relationships with General Assembly and General Assembly Mission Council

As described in the assigned functions, ACSWP responds to requests by the General Assembly for studies and recommendations. The ACSWP is also mandated to alert the church to significant concerns (such as wars, for example), and to consider the prophetic dimension that is present in all of the church’s life and mission. The ACSWP is specifically mandated to support the prophetic voice of the church, but not to serve as that voice in itself. Rather, guided by the Holy Spirit, ACSWP offers its recommendations to the shared conscience of the church as it seeks the mind of Christ. The General Assembly, like every other council of the church, has a prophetic voice as it seeks to witness to the Jesus Christ who is Prophet, Priest, and King. Social witness policies and other statements approved are documented in the minutes of those councils.

The Hebrew prophets and much of Jesus’ teaching are the basis for Christian concern for justice. Fundamental, too, to the Jewish and Christian faiths is the pattern of having prophets play a role separate from that of kings. To apply this fundamental pattern today, both within the church and within the larger society, the prophetic function requires autonomy in relation to the central power of the organization. Within the church, the separate elected committee structure of ACSWP allows it self-direction, while the administrative structure places its staff under the purview of the hierarchy of authority. Within society, the church’s independence is crucial lest it be co-opted by powers of any persuasion. The church’s ability to undertake an informed analysis and critique, based on the Gospel understanding of God’s reign, is where social witness is manifested as a key component of the Good News: “God alone is Lord of the conscience and [has] left it free from the doctrine and commandments of men [women] which are in anything contrary to his Word, or beside it, in matters of faith or worship” (Book of Order, G-1.0301; see also The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.109).

It is important to recognize that most “mainline” Protestant denominations have devised some regular administrative process for handling inherently challenging justice issues. An “applied-ethics” department of some kind is attached to the central leadership, together with a process for providing moral guidance on issues affecting members’ lives. Again, due to Reformed commitments to conscience and to covenant, the PC(USA) maintains a corporate witness that does not claim infallibility but nonetheless speaks for the General Assembly as a whole.

Framed by this PC(USA) role, ACSWP functions as a standing committee with direct access to the General Assembly and to the General Assembly Mission Council. The ACSWP has twelve members who are elected by the General Assembly for terms of four years, renewable once. Its members are chosen for their own experience in and commitment to social witness, professional expertise in social ethics and fields frequently involved in social questions, and for their diversity of background and viewpoint, including theological diversity. Currently all committee members hold masters, doctoral, or legal degrees, consistent with the skill sets found among many members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The ACSWP’s work is reported regularly to the General Assembly Mission Council (with whom it shares three full members) and it presents a narrative report and minutes of its meetings to every General Assembly for its review. Stated in the GAMC Manual of Operations is a requirement that ACSWP members meet annually with representatives of the GAMC Executive Committee for strategic reflection and anticipation of social witness policy concerns. However, this meeting did not occur in each of the years under review. The ACSWP has been concerned to re-establish its communications with the GAMC, and has recommended resuming annual meetings with the GAMC Executive Committee. In September 2008 and September 2009, at the request of ACSWP leadership, meetings with GAMC leadership took place as both entities recognized the need for joint strategy. Both GAMC and ACSWP leadership see the importance of ethical witness as part of leadership, as well as the need to be strategic in a time of many competing interests and a suffering of the common good. The ACSWP has also appreciated the willingness of the GAMC to include time on its docket regularly to inform GAMC members of current work. Integral to this relationship with the GAMC has been the leadership of the Justice Committee and the staff expertise of the executive administrator, supervisor of the ACSWP coordinator.
B. Relationships with the Advocacy Committees

Over the review period ACSWP has profited from productive collaborative relationships with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC). Such relationships are important for social witness because ACSWP and the advocacy committees have distinct but complementary functions with regard to the promotion of social justice in the church and in society. Using the lists of assigned functions found in the GAMC Manual of Operations, Figure 1 presents a schema comparing the areas of social witness focus and the functional emphases of each of the three committees. The different levels of emphasis are judged from content analyses of the lists of functions for each committee. (The data from which the schema is made are included as a comparison chart in Appendix D.)

The complementarity of the mandated assignments is most important for understanding the relationships between the committees. First, the advocacy committees are charged with specific foci (gender and racial ethnic concerns) while ACSWP is mandated to address a wide array of social justice issues. Second, both advocacy committees have large monitoring and advocacy roles vis-à-vis the church as a whole and a more focused nurturing role vis-à-vis their particular focal communities. Their advocacy is to be in the spheres of both church and the social order, and they build on the overall body of policies and previous positions of the General Assembly developed by ACSWP or in collaboration with ACSWP. Most important, the advocacy committees need to identify changes in the lived experience of each of their constituencies and to recommend new issues for attention by ACSWP as well as other Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and GAMC committees, staff, or task forces. The ACSWP, on the other hand, does not advocate on the behalf of any specific constituency and its monitoring of policy implementation is less emphasized in its listed functions than its role as an adviser who informs and recommends policy.

The ACSWP depends on the knowledge and contributions of both ACREC and ACWC to hold its work accountable to the concerns of racial and ethnic and gender justice. Over the review period, issues such as employment, war, and immigration have had gender and racial ethnic dimensions that needed to be included in good social policy. A recent example of collaborative work is the resolution God’s Work in Human Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation developed with ACWC.

Collaboration includes the ways in which the committees communicate and work together. As they evolved through the 1980s, the Advisory Council on Church and Society sent liaisons to the meetings of the two advocacy committees and they reciprocated. This important way to learn about the work of the committees continued and occurred often during the present review period. In the last six years, ACSWP members have attended approximately 85 percent of ACREC and ACWC meetings. The advocacy committees also have had regular attendees at ACSWP meetings.

These liaisons actively engage in ACSWP discussion and contribute important insights from their constituencies to the work of ACSWP. Often, as at the most recent ACSWP meetings, liaisons from ACREC and ACWC seek to share their specific concerns and their work in progress. For example, in October 2009 the ACREC liaison brought to the attention of ACSWP members the fact that a disproportionate number of seminary professors who had lost their positions in the recent recession are persons of Hispanic racial ethnic heritage. The ACSWP examined the overall value of Hispanic professorial representation in relation to this growing ethnic population and advised the ACREC representative to consider asking the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) to look systemically at the issue. The loss of professors of Hispanic racial ethnic heritage was considered by ACSWP to have potential impact for the church’s social witness as it is often professors of racial and ethnic heritage who fully communicate and interpret General Assembly (GA) policies to seminary students as well as contribute to the field of social ethics used to develop GA policy.

A tradition of holding coordinated and parallel ACREC, ACWC, and ACSWP meetings once a year was reduced to once every two years during the review period. This decrease of face-to-face meeting time is unfortunate, but has been necessary as a result of budget decreases. With the reduction of common meeting time, the roles of the liaisons have become especially important. All three of the joint meetings in the review period were held in Louisville for optimum consultation with program staff involved in the range of issues that all three committees consider. In meeting together, the committees’ different areas of expertise and emphasis have been quite evident, though they have been joined in principle on matters coming before the General Assembly. In addition to the biennial joint meetings, the committees work together at Advice and Counsel meetings in advance of the General Assembly. In these joint Advice and Counsel meetings, efforts have been made to streamline material and decisions by grouping and rephrasing topics for the commissioners so that material is not repeated.

Several ACSWP studies completed in the review period have included participation by advocacy committee members or their nominees in the ACSWP study groups. This collaborative work resulted when the work proposed received attention from more than one committee. For example, the resolution on the Gulf Coast (Post-Katrina), Struck Down But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future, involved hearings and consultations with ACREC.

The report submitted to the 219th General Assembly (2010) by the Review Committee of the Advisory and Advocacy Committees concurs with this positive assessment of cooperation. The review committee members interviewed both the leaders and members of all three committees. The responses of both ACREC and ACWC interviewees were very positive about the relationships between each of the advocacy committees and ACSWP.

III. Accomplishments and Contributions

The ACSWP products take the form of documents that are submitted to the GA or GAMC for approval, interpretation, and dissemination. “Forming Social Policy” in the General Assembly Manual lists the following five types of documents to be developed by ACSWP:

- Policy Statements. Developed in response to General Assembly action, position statements can take the form of longer proposed “policies” that develop principles based on biblical and confessional resources, review history and data, and provide a theological and ethical framework for church strategies on major questions.

- Resolutions. These policy documents, usually shorter than full policy statements, apply previously approved policies to particular matters, such as applying church human rights policy to a particular national or regional crisis.

- Study Papers. The General Assembly can request that an issue be studied or ACSWP can determine that an emerging issue is important enough to stimulate church-wide study of a social concern. Sometimes studies are conducted as part of a multi-year process leading to recommendations in light of church-wide or more focused feedback. Each policy statement and most resolutions also include a rationale section as a reasoned and grounded basis for GA positions. Study papers provide such foundation for policy statements and resolutions.

- Social Involvement and Monitoring Reports. These documents address issues of urgency and importance, and may analyze ACSWP’s own role in addressing a given subject. Monitoring reports examine how the church is applying its social policies in its program work. Monitoring of program work is often not put into formal reports, however, but is shared in ongoing consultation and cooperation with program areas.

- Advice and Counsel Memoranda. These statements provide informed comment that applies existing policies of the General Assembly to new decisions. Of practical help to the commissioners, the memoranda often suggest ways to combine overtures so that the assembly does not need to vote repeatedly on similar matters. The memorandum assemble relevant data, descriptions of past and present church practice, and theologically informed comment on possible consequences and public policy implications. Such memoranda usually recommend concurrence or non-concurrence, based on the relevant policy, analysis, or consequences. Advice and Counsel memoranda may also be addressed to General Assembly Mission Council members as it deliberates, prepares recommendations for, or implements policies of the General Assembly.

The ACSWP has been requested to develop all five types of documents during the review period 2004–2009. These accomplishments are described below by document type. The tables in each section list the work assigned to ACSWP by the three assemblies during the review period. These accomplishments demonstrate ACSWP’s “fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly.” Work carried out over the review period also gives testimony to efforts by this committee to exhibit “a constant faithfulness to and in fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA).”

A. PC(USA) Policy Statements

Three policy statements developed by ACSWP were approved by the General Assembly during the review period (see Table 1). All three policies focused on the systemic political and economic issues that impact families and individuals in U.S. society and recommend how our church should respond to the needs of these groups.

Table 1. Policy Statements Developed and Approved in the Review Period
Two of these statements are linked in their content. The first, Living into the Body of Christ: Towards Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities, focuses on ministries with people with disabilities. The second statement, Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness focuses on ministries with persons who often have specific disabilities related to serious mental illness. These policy statements resulted from multi-year processes involving persons of diverse expertise from across the church. They involved widely distributed study materials and reflection upon the responses to these materials. While all statements include recommendations for congregational involvement as well as public policy advocacy, these two statements are particularly devoted to helping congregations in their ministries with persons frequently excluded from church life. Here the focus is on pastoral care and charitable living, recognizing that justice begins in right relationships. These are specific, theologically informed resources that show how to combine pastoral and prophetic elements. With the closure of the Health Ministries Office and the shift of Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA) to a more free-standing operation, these reports provide for continuity in the provision of resources by the church.

B. PC(USA) Resolutions

Much ACSWP work in the past six years has been the development of resolutions—statements that apply approved social policy to specific situations. Table 2 lists these resolutions submitted to the General Assembly.

These resolutions are not all long papers. The Social Creed, for example, fits on one page, admittedly tightly! This resolution, although primarily developed by Presbyterians, has been adopted by the ecumenical movement, multiplying its influence. While the statement is short, individuals and congregations that wish to study and use the document have been directed to two books published by Westminster/John Knox Press that accompany the statement, one of prayers and one of in-depth essays. A booklet, Connecting to the Creed, has also been developed as have posters.

C. PC(USA) Study Papers

A third set of accomplishments are study papers developed during the review period. These papers, which were submitted in 2004 and 2008, are listed in Table 3.

D. PC(USA) Social Involvement and Monitoring Reports

Due to reorganization in the GAMC justice area and vacancies in the Presbyterian Washington and UN offices, as well as a decrease in joint consultation with program staff, monitoring reports have been fewer in the later years of the review period as the church’s capacity to produce them has been curtailed. The most recent of these reports was completed in the fall of 2008 subsequent to ACSWP’s meeting in Detroit. This report was shared with the GAMC and with ACSWP’s on-line network. It was designed as an interim response to the current economic crisis to encourage concern and action in the face of challenges to Christian faith and witness in Detroit.

This was similar to monitoring actions in the past, but completed with no funds assigned by GA. E. Advice and Counsel Memoranda

To inform the General Assembly process, ACSWP provides policy interpretation as a context for considering overtures from presbyteries, commissioners’ resolutions, proposals by agencies and corresponding bodies through Advice and Counsel (A&C) memoranda. Table 5 in Appendix E lists the A&C statements written in each General Assembly (GA) year of the review period and notes the decision of the GA in relation to the advice in each A&C. Overall, the GA agreed with the majority of the advice in the A&C.

In applying the church’s accumulated social witness policy decisions, however, many A&C memoranda suggest both wording changes to reflect previous policy and program recommendations, often reached after consultation with presbytery representatives and staff persons of the agency affected. In the case of one A&C addressing twelve overtures on Israel and Palestine sent to the 2008 assembly, the assembly accepted ACSWP’s A&C as the basic strategy for grouping, combining, and editing most of the overtures. This streamlined the process of the Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and helped avoid redundancy in the final action. At the same time, the assembly did not utilize all of the A&C advice and wording, declining to take action on two of the overtures.

It is noteworthy that most A&C’s agree with all or most of a given proposal. The goal of the A&C documents is to show how a recommendation may or may not work, to show policy precedents, to raise and address objections, or to outline implications. This ACSWP function is intended to help the commissioners make informed decisions. When the A&C opposes a given course of action, it often proposes an alternative that might represent something of a “win-win” compromise.

Another frequent situation that results in an A&C is when an overture requests that a study be done by a special committee. While ACSWP can in many cases carry out studies less expensively than can special committees, it will often leave it to the General Assembly to determine where to assign the work so as not to be “self-serving.” (This was particularly the case in 2008 when six special committees were appointed.) The trade-off is sometimes a price differential of $25,000 to $50,000, depending on the number of years of work envisioned and number of members and staff to be involved. At the same time, special committees are not as guided by the social policy formation rules of the 1993 Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness document. Consequently, in some cases shorter timeframes and more limited amounts of money may be appropriated and other personnel co-opted to help staff a given special committee.

In assessing the fidelity to its mission and the effectiveness of its service, ACSWP looks first to how the General Assembly responds to its offerings. All but one of the fourteen resolutions submitted to the past three General Assemblies have been approved. The exception was in 2008 when the General Assembly approved a similar set of recommendations on the Iraq war forwarded by a presbytery, but even then it attached ACSWP’s study paper in support of its action. When the reports are approved, given the policy development mandate of ACSWP’s work, its primary task has been completed. Its responsibilities are also completed when assemblies ask for significant modifications in the committee’s reports before approving them. In such cases, engagement, even controversial engagement, is part of the discernment process of the church. Furthermore, as listed in Table 5, the GA has concurred with the vast majority of the Advice and Comment statements provided to GA commissioners at the past three General Assemblies.

During the review period ACSWP has been linked to the General Assembly’s stands against the Iraq war and for justice in Palestine. The General Assembly’s environmental witness for renewable energy and against fossil and nuclear fuels is also rightly linked to the ACSWP’s work, as well as every assembly’s human rights update and the concern for economic justice that reflects the stance of the recent confessions.

Financial realities have pressed especially hard during the past three years. In 2009 ACSWP’s budget had been reduced to about $300,000 from $327,394 in 2004. Resolutions, often now carried out over longer periods due to staffing constraints, are also done at a quarter to a third the cost of policy statements ($30,000–40,000 versus $120,000–150,000). The ACSWP’s output is quite large for its small staff (four persons until the loss of the logistics and technology administrative assistant in mid 2006). The support staff expertise from Bonnie Hoff, formerly executive secretary to the president of Southern (Baptist) Seminary, has helped manage this large output. It is an accomplishment that ACSWP is extremely productive and cost-effective in its expenditure of its approximately $300,000 annual budget. Notably ACSWP has successfully stayed within budget for all of the past six years. The ACSWP has been able to do more with less at many points during this review period.

This self-assessment led to much good discussion and some revision of the structure of ACSWP’s subcommittees and procedures, especially in light of the new potential of the internet and fiscal realities. The committee changed a Personnel and Budget subcommittee into one focused on tracking study teams and report preparation, and designated the Coordinating Committee to be the Advice and Counsel subcommittee for the every-other year General Assembly. An Interpretation and Communication subcommittee continues, but a new subcommittee on projects such as curriculum development and consultations was developed.

IV. Leadership in Social Witness

In addition to fulfilling its mandate by developing social policy and providing advice and comment to the GA and GAMC, ACSWP has exhibited important leadership in “guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources” of social witness. (Assessment criterion listed in Appendix A —A.2) This leadership is evidenced in five types of activities presented below:

1. Leadership in Applying Policies to Emergent Issues. The ACSWP exhibits leadership in its efforts to keep the church current with topics addressed in the past. For example, ACSWP has helped both Stated Clerks and Moderators during the review period with public statements addressing human rights issues, military interventions, and issues of social justice, often also working with Washington and Presbyterian UN Office staff. To provide a different form of guidance, ACSWP initiated a briefing on human rights and humanitarian law, including a theological framing of these concerns, in the spring of 2009. On a larger scale, changing social conditions and trends can often require revision or updating of prior policies and recommendations. One example is the report, The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming, approved by General Assembly in 2008. The last comprehensive study of this issue was in 1981, although a 1990 study on Restoring Creation had reaffirmed basic principles and dealt with the environment more broadly. In such efforts, ACSWP is proactive and able to bring to the attention of GA and GAMC potential areas where social witness will be required of the church: the issue of torture, for instance.

2. ACSWP Staff Leadership with GAMC Staff and Elected Leaders. The ACSWP staff work continuously with GAMC staff and elected members and OGA staff to interpret social witness policies. Each year:
   a. Both the ACSWP coordinator and associate staff attend General Assembly Mission Council meetings, most often with the Justice Committee. The staff provides updates on projects to keep GAMC elected members aware of social witness opportunities and challenges.
   b. The associate and coordinator both sit at “tables” with program staff, providing policy bases for projects and helping develop applications of General Assembly actions.
   c. The associate coordinates the production of the Human Rights Update, working with Global Mission regional liaisons, the Washington Office, and particularly with the Presbyterian UN Office.
   d. The coordinator consults with the Stated Clerk on proposed statements and letters done in fulfillment of General Assembly actions and in response to current events and crises.
Leadership in Policy Interpretation Using Presentations and Trainings: In all six years, the members and staff of Dissemination of PC(USA) Social Witness Statements Leadership Provided to Educators. The ACSWP reaches out to other mainline and evangelical churches: its members have sought to learn from Evangelical Christian efforts of rescue and rehabilitation with sex trafficking victims and women's organizations (notably Presbyterian Women) have initiated advocacy efforts. The ACSWP staff and elected members have engaged in dialogue about the place of justice in evangelism overseas.

Currently this effort is in the area of human rights and human trafficking, an area where other mainline churches and women’s organizations (notably Presbyterian Women) have initiated advocacy efforts. The ACSWP staff and elected members have engaged in dialogue about the place of justice in evangelism overseas.

V. ACSWP Challenges and Limitations

The ACSWP has persistently confronted challenges and limitations in this review period. Its three major challenges and limitations are described in this section: (1) dissemination of PC(USA) social witness documents; (2) criticism and controversy as a perennial risk of ACSWP “doing its job”; and (3) engaging youth and young adults in social witness policy.

A. Dissemination of PC(USA) Social Witness Statements

One major challenge and limitation involves the responsibility and resources to communicate and interpret PC(USA) social witness policies, resolutions, and study papers. This dissemination task has not been a mandated direct responsibility of ACSWP. Rather the GAMC Manual of Operations states that ACSWP should assist others in their responsibility. The ASCWP is assigned the responsibility to “Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret the social witness policies of the General Assembly” (GAMC Manual of Operations, p. 21). The ACSWP staff works with these General Assembly (GA), Office of the General Assembly (OGA), and General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) leaders whose responsibility it is to communicate and interpret social witness policy. Additionally there is the expectation among many church leaders that it is ACSWP’s responsibility (over and above its more limited mandate) to more broadly communicate and interpret PC(USA) documents. The ACSWP staff and elected members have also perceived a great need for additional general communication and interpretation of the church’s social witness statements once they are approved by General Assembly.
In the attempt to meet this need and fulfill expectations to assume some responsibility for dissemination of PC(USA) statements of social witness, ACSWP has made the following efforts during the review period to communicate and interpret PC(USA) social witness policies, resolutions, and study papers:

- Mailed Policy, Resolutions, and Study Paper Documents. Complimentary copies of policies were sent to more than 10,000 Presbyterian congregations, 171 presbyteries, 16 synods, the 10 Presbyterian theological institutions, and General Assembly commissioners. As in 2006, all major 2008 policies were put on CD (in coordination with OGA) and mailed to all congregations. Three hundred copies of the policies regarding witness with persons who have disabilities and persons who have serious mental illness were distributed to the networks of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA), twelve members of ACREC, twelve members of ACWC, the members of the GAMC, and others. These policy statements have been used to strengthen the church’s disability and serious mental illness mission and are used by both church and secular organizations.

- Study Guide. Subsequent to the approval of the policy statement, Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness, a congregational study guide was developed. The document assists congregations to learn the PC(USA) policy and consider ways in which the congregation might respond. New to such study guides, this four-session study also includes time and ideas for participants to plan and conduct a worship service that highlights this social witness as a congregation of hospitality to persons with mental illness and their families, a community of healing and of advocacy for such marginalized populations.

- Church & Society. This magazine was a vehicle used to communicate PC(USA) policies and study papers to both local congregants as well as seminary professors and students. Its name was chosen to match a prior name of ACSWP, the Council on Church & Society. The ACSWP staff had long served on the editorial board of this journal that published six times per year. After the magazine was ended in October 2006, ACSWP helped close the office, salvage publication stock, and market back issues on its website. This journal was a unifying factor among GAMC programs, especially in the Peacemaking and Justice ministries’ areas, and helped link ACSWP to these programs. It took in approximately $30,000 per year in subscriptions and sales of back issues used as adult education resources.

- Internet Communication. While ACSWP improved the fairly limited website that existed prior to 2006, it has been a mixed achievement. The website provides access to a variety of articles written about the work of ACSWP by the Presbyterian News Service as well as articles written by staff. A link to this Internet communication is http://www.pcusa.org/acswp/news.htm. Use of the Internet should enhance dissemination as most recent statements are downloadable at no cost. Email notes are sent to a list of potentially interested individuals as a mechanism to alert individuals about postings on the website. The number of members of the ACSWP e-group has grown from approximately 200 in early 2006 to 2,778 as of December 2009.

- Video Material. A 28-minute documentary, Toward a New Social Awakening, on the Social Creed (surveying social witness from 1908 to 2008) has been developed, posted on the webpage, advertized, and sent to all middle governing bodies, ethics professors, and other groups.

Comments from the recent survey conducted by Research Services regarding the work of ACSWP indicate that there are church leaders who know and use the PC(USA) documents. For example, respondents mentioned using the study guide on serious mental illness policy, the Social Creed, the resource From Homelessness to Hope: Constructing Just, Sustainable Communities for All People, the paper on A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the Twenty-First Century, and The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming resolution. Still, knowledge about PC(USA) social witness statements continues to be a challenge as survey results of governing body executives, GA commissioner, and leaders of local congregations indicate continued limited awareness of the social witness of the church. One attempt to meet this challenge is a recommendation in the 2010 Report of the Review of the Three Advisory and Advocacy Committees to designate a GAMC staff person to take additional responsibility for dissemination of social witness policy. If the recommendation is implemented it is likely that the shared responsibility of dissemination by GAMC and ACSWP would be clarified and resources to perform this important task enhanced.

B. ACSWP as a “Lightning Rod”

The General Assembly Manual recognizes that ACSWP can be a “lightning rod” at times, and that this can be the case precisely when ACSWP is doing its job. The beginning of this review period was a particular time of such challenge for ACSWP. That year the General Assembly approved a policy of corporate engagement with companies in Israel/Palestine that contemplated divesting of securities in those companies specifically profiting from the Israeli occupation of Palestinian lands. In that year as well, ACSWP went on a long-planned visit to several Middle Eastern countries to learn if an updated policy statement should be written in light of quickly changing realities, including the Iraq war. While in Lebanon, an elected member’s side comment to a representative of Hezbollah was picked up on videotape and presented in various ways to media in Israel, Muslim countries, and in the United States. In the subsequent heat of public reactions, the ACSWP coordinator and another GAMC executive were dismissed. But, due in large part to the strength of the ACSWP’s elected membership and the...
ACSWP staff team at the time, ACSWP maintained its deliberative process and the position of ACSWP coordinator was permanently filled in 2005.

The ACSWP and GAMC drew some lessons from this process. For ACSWP there was and is understandable caution in relating to the press. Little use of the interview format has been made since that time, though some pod-casting has begun. On the GAMC side, following the appointment of the new coordinator, changes were made in the selection process to equalize the representation of GAMC and ACSWP members on the search committee (leaving flexibility for those who serve on both bodies).

On issues of social witness with a potential to spark conflict and public criticism, ACSWP strives for discretion while maintaining commitment to its mandate. Facing critical issues and taking stands are necessary for healthy leadership. Conflict avoidance at the top can weaken an organization, while unnecessary conflict can be divisive. Proactive responses must be prepared for tough decisions of all kinds, especially when integrity and morale of the whole church may be affected. Both GAMC and ACSWP leadership see the importance of ethical witness as part of leadership, as well as the need to be strategic in a time of many competing interests. The church’s core identity depends on the integrity of its witness; “by their fruits” remains the watchword. The church’s individual congregations need to be healthy, but the church also needs stands, campaigns, and symbols of Presbyterian identity and activity that transcend localities and regions, and grasp the imaginations of young people.

Because social witness inherently includes differing opinions and normal controversy, ACSWP works in a milieu of persistent criticism. Such criticism is evidenced in the survey results provided by Research Services for this review. Specifically some respondents reported that ACSWP is politically biased and lacks sufficient balance in its advisory capacity to the church. In addition to these survey responses, there is also steady criticism from a subset of ACSWP meeting observers—some of whom are paid staff of nondenominational organizations that seek to change the PC(USA) approach to social witness. These individuals attend ACSWP meetings under the church’s open meeting policy. With some regularity, this particular set of observers has publicly reported ACSWP’s deliberations in an unfavorable light, occasionally passing judgment on some of ACSWP’s individual volunteer members. In an attempt to hear criticism in a potentially more constructive way, recent effort has been made to provide opportunity for dialogue between ACSWP members and observers at ACSWP meetings. This milieu of persistent criticism, however, has required and likely will continue to require forbearance and forgiveness among both elected ACSWP members and ACSWP staff.

C. Engaging Youth and Young Adults in Social Witness Policy

The biggest challenge before ACSWP is shared broadly with the GAMC’s social witness programs, including the Presbyterian United Nations and Washington Offices. This challenge is how to serve new generations of the church in faithful yet more innovative ways, not only with new technology, but with new ways of engaging young people. Especially as younger evangelicals have come to share many views of justice, particularly racial and environment justice, they welcome the Gospel that contains a social conscience. For example, the student organization, Intervarsity, now speaks of Jesus and justice frequently together. The justice conscience gives their witness a credibility that seems right for the whole church.

The ACSWP recognizes the need of the church to develop new ways to witness to a younger generation who know much less of Bible and Christian faith, but who thirst for a deeper understanding of justice and love. The redemptive power of God that we know in Christ is mocked and ignored if it is not connected to justice and social vision. The challenge is to communicate and sustain a church-wide conversation when relationships and programs have been weakened and memories and traditions lost. Fortunately, the General Assembly’s social witness agenda has been on target in many areas including environmental issues and green energy, racial justice, the Iraq war, universal health care availability, greater economic equality, an end to new forms of usury, and a renewed commitment to education. In each of these areas, the church has done its homework and ACSWP stands ready to help the church strengthen its voice and credibility among youth and young adults.

A related challenge is to more fully engage youth and young adults in the development of policy because of the unpaid time required to attend ACSWP meetings. Employment and family duties compete for volunteer time and energy. It has been easier to engage persons whose careers and families are at later stages and can allow the travel and meeting time necessary to fully participate in ACSWP meetings. The engagement of a good number of youth and young adults in policy development remains an unmet challenge, but one that will receive explicit attention in the new decade.

VI. FUTURE OBJECTIVES OF THE ACSWP

Christians in the U.S. continue to occupy a critical role in the world, both in relation to secular modernity, which would ignore or demean the Gospel, and in relation the many issues of justice and environmental sustainability. Will the church be part of the solution or part of the problem? Amid this time of great cultural and social transition, PC(USA) holds the potential to play an influentially positive role. With wisdom and courage, we pray that it may play an energizing and evangelizing role.
In order to help the PC(USA) be faithful in this process of change—aware that our touchstone is a cross of love and not a crown of power—ACSWP seeks to continue to do theology with its ethics. The leadership of the church must be theologically informed and linked to the best thinking in a range of disciplines. The ACSWP perceives its continuing mandate as providing well-reasoned and credible reports with recommendations for faithful action. These are not done in isolation from the church’s life and mission; rather, they must be part of what the church offers to God and God’s mission in Christ to the oikoumene, the whole inhabited earth.

In practical terms, ACSWP has given itself a set of goals for the near term:

1. Continue to support the tradition of the General Assembly as a source of wisdom and a celebration of unity for Presbyterians, helping it represent the whole gospel for the whole church.

2. Help create a new forum for discussion and engagement across the church, particularly to help persons struggling with current economic challenges by sharing “confession driven” and parish-connected thinking on ways to face potential social as well as environmental crises.

3. Complete the transition to greater cyber service within the new PC(USA) website offerings, updating and making accessible the best of the past output while engaging new challenges. On health policy, for example, members should be able to access pastoral and prophetic discussions of basic rights, services, and cost trade-offs.

4. Complete new interpretive resources on the Social Creed for the 21st Century and Just Globalization: Justice, Ownership, and Accountability. If the update of the nature and value of human life study, On Living a Human Life Before God is approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010), resource materials will also be developed for congregations to assist in moral discourse on related topics.

5. In consultation with GAMC leadership and program areas, and the concerned thinkers in our colleges and seminaries: (a) develop new thinking in the area of peacemaking and international relations, especially in light of climate change and natural resource impacts, and (b) help strengthen the campus witness of the PC(USA) by connecting students with social-ethical priorities.

6. Assist the international mission agencies of the church in their work on the ethical and social dimensions of our witness and evangelism.

7. Provide analysis of ecumenical social teaching in relation to the World Communion of Reformed Churches and in relation to enhanced ecumenical cooperation and church unity efforts in the U.S.

In the medium term, ACSWP’s role will depend on the shape of the denomination, and whether it pursues significant ecumenical partnerships. Economically and demographically, it may be argued that church partnerships with reasonably similar denominations could be a fruitful medium term way to preserve connectional systems, seminaries with serious educational commitments, and an engagement with the mainstream of U.S. culture.

The church has a very challenging decade ahead. As church leaders consider the theme of this 219th General Assembly (2010)—“Out of the believer’s heart shall flow rivers of living water.” (John 7:38)—it is the belief of ACSWP members and staff that the future work of this committee will contribute to the re-envisioning of what it is to be church. The spirit of Jesus the Christ is the living water that will direct and sustain this work of social witness policy development and the social witness of PC(USA).

Appendix A

Standards for Review of Assembly Permanent, Advocacy and Advisory Committees and Commissions*

A. Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

1. Each committee or commission was created by the church and exists to serve and support the church’s mission in a particular area. Each committee or commission is expected to exhibit a constant faithfulness to and in fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA).

2. The basic process of the committee or commission should demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly. The committee or commission should exhibit leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources in which the committee or commission acts.

3. The committee or commission should exhibit practical cooperation with the other agencies or committees of the church in areas of overlapping responsibility and opportunity.

4. The committee or commission should provide timely responses to directives and requests from the General Assembly.

B. Effectiveness of Services

The services of the committee or commission are consistent with its assembly or constitutional mandate.
1. The committee or commission has a defined and consistent process for completing its work.

2. The committee or commission has a regular process of self-evaluation of its services.

3. The committee or commission employs a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large.

4. The committee or commission utilizes current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission.

5. The committee or commission has developed a vision and plans for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and context of the PC(USA).

Appendix B

Brief History of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

Part of the committee’s history has involved program activity as well as policy formation. This outline includes antecedents in both the Board of Home Missions and the Boards of Christian Education in both of the denominations united in 1983. The word “Advisory” does not indicate that the committee’s recommendations do not favor certain clear moral positions; rather, when added from 1970–1987, and from 1993 forward, the term emphasizes the policy rather than program function.

In 1903, faced with rising numbers of immigrants and industrialization, the Board of Home Missions created a Workingmen’s Department, which soon became a Department of Church and Labor. In 1908, the director of that department, Charles Stelzle, was one of those present at the founding meeting of the Federal Council of Churches who helped develop the “Social Creed of the Churches,” a foundational social policy document inspired by the Social Gospel movement. Stelzle was also the initial head of the department of Immigration. In 1912, both Labor and Immigration were included in a Bureau of Social Service. The “Home Board” continued to do urban and immigrant outreach until 1922–23 when it became a primary part of the Board of National Missions. The (1922–23 reorganization combined thirteen boards into four; the Women’s Home Mission Board, also merged into National Missions, was in the early 20s the largest board in fund-raising terms).

In 1906, the General Assembly approved a Permanent Committee on Temperance, which soon became a board, and then was renamed the Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare. It was the Temperance Board that started a journal of its social and moral concerns called The Amethyst, in September of 1908.

In 1920, following the great success of the Prohibition movement in outlawing alcohol, the Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare began increasingly to emphasize other moral concerns, including child labor, prison reform, marriage and divorce, and social hygiene. In the 1922–23 reorganization, the board became the Department of Moral Welfare within the Board of Christian Education.

In 1931, as the Depression deepened, the Board of National Missions created a Committee on Social and Industrial Relations, building on the bureau and then Commission on Social Service.

In 1934, after the repeal of Prohibition in 1933, the Department of Moral Welfare changed the name of its publication to Social Progress, focusing increasingly on economic and peace concerns though never abandoning a concern for liquor, tobacco, gambling, and other vices.

In 1936 the Boards of Education and National Missions developed an inter-board Commission on Social Education and Action to bring unity to the pronouncements and programs those and other boards were developing on social concerns.

[That the Presbyterian Church is under obligation to show how... Christian principles apply to all social, moral, economic, national and international relationships... that responsibility for... this vital and far-reaching task be lodged with a group of socially-minded and consecrated men and women, authorized by the GA...and that the group so appointed [Department of Social Education and Action of the Board of Christian Education] be clothed with authority commensurate with their responsibility" (Minutes, PCUSA, 1936, Part I, p. 199).

This becomes the clearest precursor of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. In 1944, additional commission members were added from the Board of National Missions.

In 1935 and 1936, on a somewhat parallel track in the former Presbyterian Church, U.S., the General Assembly was adopting policies from its Committee on Moral and Social Welfare that changed the doctrine of the “spirituality of the church” to affirm the “Lordship of Christ” in all of life (Church & Society, Nov–Dec 1999, “Lessons of the Past,” Vernon Broyles, p. 17).

In 1944, the Social Education and Action Committee’s Report on Industrial Relations led to the formation of the Presbyterian Institute for Industrial Relations, both a continuing education and training center for ministers (similar to clinical pastoral education today) and an influence on ecumenical urban-industrial mission in Asia and Latin America. Initial statements on race relations began with a 1946 call for desegregation stronger than the previous Race Relations Sundays and Brotherhood Days of the 1930s.

In 1958, the union of the United Presbyterian Church of North America and the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America was accomplished with both social witness staffs joining in the Social Education and Action (SEA) Department of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.

In 1960, the SEA Department became the Department of Church and Society, to embody an intent to affect the society through structural and social change. Similar name changes marked other denominations: the United Methodist Church retains its Board on Church and Society. This approach reflects some of the theological stance of Christian Realism, aware of power, interests, and social movements. In 1970, the journal of moral and social concerns was renamed, Church & Society magazine.

In 1966, in the former PCUS, the Council on Church and Society was established under the Board of Christian Education.
The adoption of the Confession of 1967, with its emphases on mission and reconciliation, provides a basis for re-organizing national structures (a “confession-driven” church). Its explicit naming of peace and racial and economic justice offers a thematic approach to social ethics different from interpretations of the 10 Commandments found in older Reformed Confessions.

In 1972–73, with consolidation of boards into three agencies in the UPCUSA, the Advisory Council on Church and Society was developed (along with a parallel Advisory Council on Discipleship and Worship), with the directors of both bodies serving at the top level of GAMC leadership. The categories of policy and resolution rather than pronouncement or deliverance came to be formalized in 1977 to connect better to concrete programs and specific communication strategies.

In 1974, the General Assembly Mission Board of the PCUS established the Council on Theology and Culture. This council combined functions of both UPCUSA advisory councils. The council worked closely with the Division of Corporate and Social Mission, and contributed to its ethics education occasional periodical, Response-Ability.

In 1983, the Plan for Reunion combined elements from both predecessor churches, confirming that a social witness function would be contained in the reunited church’s structure and that all previous policies of the General Assembly would be honored in the combined denomination. The memberships of both the Advisory Council on Church and Society and the Council on Theology and Culture were combined in the transition period in the Committee on Social Witness Policy.

In 1993, after three years of study, Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness includes a further name change. It was at this time that “Advisory” was again added to the committee’s name. Two things are perhaps most significant: the recommendations build on the new A Brief Statement of Faith, and the study part of the report emphasized discernment, which was picked up in a somewhat different way in the more recent “PUP” report on the peace, unity, and purity of the church. Organizationally, the director of ACSWP became a coordinator who sat with the leadership team of the former National Ministries Division director.

In 2006, the re-structuring of the General Assembly Mission Council concentrated three previous ministry divisions into one. The ACSWP retained three GAMC members in its own membership and its ability to choose its staff was diluted a bit. Of considerable consequence, Church & Society magazine was discontinued, though with ACSWP able to steward its legacy to some degree. This ends the ninety-eight-year life of a vehicle that often enriched and publicized the church’s social witness policy formation (The Amethyst 1908–1920); Moral Welfare (1920–1934); Social Progress (1934–1969); and Church & Society (1970–2006).

Item 17-Self-Study GACER

General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations Self-Study

I. IDENTITY AND MISSION

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) functions to give a high profile to the vision of ecumenical involvement and work as central to the gospel and key to the life of the church. It plans and coordinates, in consultation with the agencies and governing bodies of the church, the involvement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in ecumenical relations and work. The foundational commitment of the church remains, as it has through more than 200 years of ecumenical mission and witness, Jesus’ prayer of John 17: “that they may all be one.” That search for unity is not optional, though the obstacles are also not insignificant.

The GACER seeks to connect the ecumenical efforts of all governing body levels of the church and provide a common point for all ecumenical efforts with those beyond our church. The goal of GACER is to:

- keep a unity of vision that includes the ecclesiastical, programmatic, public advocacy and witness, ecumenical, and denominational (organizational) parts of our ministries and commitments,
- articulate the Reformed and Presbyterian identity in the midst of our ecumenical commitments, and
- promote awareness of the unity of the church as an exhibition of the kingdom of heaven to the world and a foretaste of the unity of the whole human family.

The GACER assists the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in fulfilling its commitment to its ecumenical vision and stance that together, with Christians in every time and place, Presbyterians confess belief in one, holy, catholic, and apostolic church …

- welcoming diverse patterns of the visible unity of Christ’s church, seeking concord in essential things: faith, sacraments, mission, and ministry;
- participating in mission and witness globally with ecumenical church partners, and in mission and witness nationally with regional councils, local associations, and neighboring congregations;
- engaging in bilateral and multilateral dialogues with other churches and traditions to remove barriers of misunderstanding and establish common affirmation;
- working for the union or reunion of separate churches in the Presbyterian and Reformed family;
- reaching out to unfamiliar traditions and associations of churches; and
- searching for the fuller expression of the visible unity to which we are called.

The GACER gives guidance to General Assembly agencies on new opportunities to strengthen the relationships with other faith communities and on strategies for fulfilling the General Assembly mandates on interreligious relationships. As Christians, we remain open to the working of God’s Spirit among people of other religious traditions in their individual and corporate lives. As we are called by Jesus Christ, we are prepared to dialogue and cooperate everywhere with people of good will on behalf of justice, peace, and the common good, and pursue the journey of faith with Christ wherever we find ourselves, in whatever company, all in each place.

II. THEOLOGICAL RATIONALE

The theological rationale for ecumenical relations in the PC(USA), and by extension, for oversight of such relations by the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER), is a multidimensional understanding that runs deep and long in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and in its antecedent churches and organizations. Several major themes are summarized in the document, “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) (Attachment A).
Several biblical texts are foundational to our church’s ecumenical commitment:

- John 17:21, expressing Jesus’ prayer for the unity of the church,
- 2 Corinthians 5:19, our call to be agents of reconciliation, and
- Ephesians 4:3–4, Romans 12, and 1 Corinthians 12, where we are encouraged to maintain the bond of unity in the one body of Christ.

It is clear from Scripture and our confessions that the unity of the church is God’s doing, a gift of God in Jesus Christ. Our divisions, though they may obscure our unity, cannot undo what God has already accomplished for us. When we come together at ecumenical tables, we are seeking to make visible what, by the grace of God, is already the case: We are one in Christ.

From the earliest days of European settlement in North America, there has been a dynamic tension between the distinctively Reformed identity claimed by Presbyterians and our confession of “one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church” that embraces the larger community of believers and churches. This has played out over the years in varying degrees of emphasis on a Presbyterian “brand” in doctrine and polity, and a simultaneous commitment to unity in Christian ministry and mission. Central to this discussion is the Lund principle that churches should do together all that is possible in good conscience, affirming the importance of this principle as part of the framework for ecumenical policy in the coming years.

III. OUR CHANGING ECUMENICAL LANDSCAPE & ITS IMPLICATIONS

Our commitment to an ecumenical vision in this time and place involves a study of the changing ecumenical landscape. One dimension of that landscape is the growing set of internal tensions coupled with diminished denominational identity within traditional mainline churches, raising up significant intra-denominational challenges ecumenically in addition to the challenges of external relationships with other Christian bodies.

We also note what some see as a media-driven deepening of ideological polarities within U.S. society, sometimes reflected in the “red” and “blue” region shorthand. If economic and other forces are intensifying the coloration of the map, then the task of ecumenism is even more important.

A demographic shift in the global church from the north to the south has reshaped the dynamics of the ecumenical movement in a number of ways. Most importantly, the flow of influence is no longer from north to south or even west to east, but from every part of the world to every other part of the world. This has meant that ecumenical conversation partners are shaped geographically as well as denominationally.

In this regard, contextualized realities have become as important as confessional considerations; thus, the PC(USA) needs to include new and different partners to address the needs of today. The new partners include:

1. Churches made up of new immigrants bringing their languages and traditions from home, churches that are now a part of the PC(USA) context. New immigrants bring different understandings of the church and the world, shaped by the cultures of the places they have left. Their visions and understandings can infuse and enrich our own and help the PC(USA) to see the world in new ways.

2. Faith-based service and justice coalitions that are not denominationally circumscribed. Groups such as Habitat for Humanity, Bread for the World, and the Heifer Project respond to human suffering through emergency relief and development programs to help heal a divided world. Many Presbyterian congregations support these organizations.

3. The constellation of new service and justice groups that have emerged in the modern world and exhibited by the explosive growth of nongovernmental organizations since World War II. Many of these, Christian or church-based in origin but now secular—or secular or other-religious from their foundation—are doing the traditional work of humanitarian aid often associated with Christian mission.

4. Churches that have been a part of the conciliar movement, including the National and World Councils of Churches, along with their related networks such as Church Women United and the World Student Christian Federation. Also included are those churches, some of which are “post-denominational” and most of which have not participated in the traditional conciliar organizations. These churches are helping to create cooperative ecumenical ties across a broader spectrum of the Christian family, such as the Global Christian Forum (GCF) and Christian Churches Together (CCT) here in the United States. The merger of the Reformed Ecumenical Council and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to form the World Communion of Reformed Churches is yet another example of efforts to broaden the ecumenical table.
5. People of other faiths and religious traditions. In a world where fear of the “other” exacerbates violence and suffering, working in partnership with them is of central importance. We are called by God to join with all those willing to work for the healing of the whole earth and the whole human family, and thus our level of interreligious engagement is becoming increasingly important.

The purpose of the ecumenical movement is to help make manifest God’s intention for the household of God. In the past, churches have often limited that vision to a unified Church that would help bring about a unified world or even unify the world within it. The ecumenical vision that is part of God’s vision is actually much larger. John 10:10b describes the vision as God’s desire that the inhabitants of the household of God “may have life, and have it abundantly.” This is a vision of justice and peace that allows space for all of God’s creation to live life in its fullness. God is continually active in bringing loving wholeness to creation, where all can live in peace. God is especially attentive to those who have been excluded from the fullness of life and calls the church to cooperate in this process.

The Holy Spirit, the Advocate whom Jesus promised, invites us to this work. Dialogue with churches of the Pentecostal movement is essential, as well as attending to the often-surprising movements of the Spirit in our churches and ecumenical bodies. The discernment of God’s vision for the household of God is a gift of the Spirit, since we understand the household of God to cut across all human lines. Biblically speaking, Pentecost was a unique moment when the Holy Spirit acted in an amazing way, enabling the church to communicate across differences and to practice a new kind of hospitality. Living with this gift of the Spirit in our present moment in history encourages us to hear the voices of people long silenced. Enabled to read the signs of the time, the church becomes empowered by the Spirit to champion a theology of life by amplifying voices that contend with life-denying forces. In this way, the church may become a “blessing to the nations” and offer hope for healing, reconciliation, and justice in the earth and the economy.

Reframing ecumenism in the face of new contextual realities requires a more carefully nuanced ecumenism that is adjusted to organizational and structural changes, often as consequences of globalization, whether this is the compression of space (made possible by modern forms of transportation) or of time (due to the Internet and other forms of communication technology).

Our Reformed theology in light of our changing context must now be drawn to the two contemporary challenges for ecumenical relationships in our world:

1. We need a more developed theology, or theologies, for interreligious work, and a focus for theological reflection on the work of the Spirit in human consciousness and in the world (foreshadowed in Paul’s argument about God’s work among all humanity in the early chapters of Romans).

2. We need a more developed theology that helps guide our work as we network with other ecclesial and non-ecclesial bodies, whether religious or secular. Much of this theological work and reflection might be developed in response to the document, “The Nature and Mission of the Church,” set forth for ecumenical reflection by the World Council of Churches. This document clearly looks for a church aligned with the mission dei (mission of God), one in which the true identity of the church is eschatological but worked out in time.

IV. GACER ACCOMPLISHMENTS

The work of GACER under the auspices of the General Assembly has been marked by new opportunities and continuing challenges. These have been a consequence both of changes in the ecumenical landscape and changes within the PC(USA). They are reflected in our conciliar relationships, bilateral and multilateral ecclesial relationships, interreligious relationships, and partnerships and organizational structures to implement the ecumenical agenda of the PC(USA).

1. Within the PC(USA)

The 211th General Assembly (1999), upon recommendation of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council (now General Assembly Mission Council), created the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER). This new committee replaced the Advisory Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations and “Special Committees of the General Assembly” with ecumenical mandates.

2. Conciliar Level

The PC(USA) holds membership as an ecclesial body in the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the Caribbean and North American Area Council of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the World Council of Churches, and the National Council of Churches of Christ, all of which have faced organizational and fiscal challenges. Elected representatives from the PC(USA) on these councils and staff members working with them have contributed to a sense of renewal in their mission and financial stability.
3. Multilateral Ecclesial Relationships

The 209th General Assembly (1997) approved A Formula of Agreement between the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Reformed Church in America, and the United Church of Christ. This was a historic agreement of Full Communion, the result of thirty-five years of dialogue among these churches. The Lutheran-Reformed Coordinating Committee has overseen the implementation of this agreement, and closer collaboration and cooperation have emerged in shared ministries between congregations.

In January 2002, the Consultation on Church Union culminated its decades of work by being transformed into Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC), with the goals of expressing unity in Christ and combating racism together.

The PC(USA) has been an active and energetic participant in CUiC through the body’s coordinating council and its task forces on ministry, racial justice, and local/regional work. As churches in the context of the United States, CUiC member communions share a long history of a call to racial reconciliation. Even as we commit to answer God’s call to racial reconciliation, however, a breach of relationship has occurred within the fellowship as some of the churches have recently stated that they have not experienced CUiC as a place of racial reconciliation. The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church has severed their relationship with CUiC, but all recognize that as churches in covenant relationship, we have not sufficiently attended to racial injustice as a church dividing issue and have not faithfully fulfilled this mark of our covenant relationship.

At a national plenary gathering in 2008, the churches determined that in the face of this disconnect between intent and impact, they would take time to grieve this breach in our covenant relationship, understand how racism operates both within our CUiC relationship and the wider church, and discern how God’s call to racial reconciliation and justice is served through CUiC as a fellowship of churches.

4. Bilateral Ecclesial Relationships

The sixth round of Reformed-Catholic dialogue (U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops) concluded in 2001, with a focus on pastoral issues in marriages between members of the Roman Catholic Church and Reformed churches. In response to the papal encyclical, Ut Unum Sint, a delegation from the PC(USA) entered into conversation with the Vatican in December 2000 and March 2001. The response of the PC(USA) was presented in the paper, “The Successor to Peter.” Several recommendations from this conversation were implemented through the 213th General Assembly (2001).

The seventh round of Reformed-United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) dialogue, mandated by the 215th General Assembly (2003), began meeting that same year. This dialogue also included the Christian Reformed Church in North America, the Reformed Church in America, and the United Church of Christ. The dialogue was charged to work on developing a means for the mutual recognition of baptism and to explore issues related to the Eucharist. The proposal for mutual recognition of baptism was approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and ratified by the presbyteries. Unfortunately, the USCCB did not approve the agreement. Because the USCCB has not approved the agreement, it will now become a document archived for study and future dialogue, but will not have authoritative standing in any of the above churches. The Common Agreement on Mutual Recognition of Baptism, along with the study document These Living Waters stands as a record of our dialogue and an offering for future study and dialogue. We recognize that Reformed congregations and Roman Catholic parishes have long since recognized the baptisms in one another’s churches. We anticipate that this will continue, despite our current inability to formally reach consensus on a national level. The bilateral dialogue is now beginning to explore issues related to the Eucharist.

The Moravian-Reformed dialogue was mandated by the 212th General Assembly (2000). The dialogue began in April 2002 with the following goals: (1) to reach an understanding of each tradition’s ministry of oversight; (2) to explore areas of cooperative work in global, national, and local settings so that our congregations may have greater knowledge of each other and our cooperative work; and (3) to seek common agreements that could lead to establishing Full Communion between the Moravian Church and one or all of the Reformed churches. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved entering into a covenant relationship with the Moravian Church. The Northern and Southern Provinces of the Moravian Church will act upon this agreement at their respective synod meetings in 2010.

The Episcopal-Presbyterian bilateral dialogue was mandated by the 212th General Assembly (2000). The focus of the dialogue was the reconciliation of ministries between the two churches. This bilateral dialogue worked closely with the Ministry Task Force of Churches Uniting in Christ. While unable to achieve full reconciliation of ministries, the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved mutual recognition of our ministries and this agreement was ratified by the presbyteries. It was also approved by the Episcopal Church General Convention in 2009. The next round of dialogue will focus on further study and dialogue in the areas of diaconal ministries, historic episcopate, the office of elder, and other related subjects as a continued effort toward the full reconciliation of our ministries and interchangeability of our ministers.

The Joint Committee on Presbyterian Cooperation Between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Korean Presbyterian Church in America was mandated by the 204th General Assembly (1992). It was charged to foster greater unity of witness between our two churches and to explore the possibility of eventual union between the two denominations. A proposal to enter covenant relationship was approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and ratified by the presbyteries. The covenant has also been adopted and ratified by the Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad (formerly in America). Proposals for the orderly exchange of ministers and congregations are in the process of being developed.

The Joint Cooperative Committee with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in America and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church was mandated by the 212th General Assembly (2000) and charged to enter church-to-church conversations searching for means to strengthen mutual relationships. The work of this cooperative committee culminated in holding concurrent General Assemblies in 2006 to commemorate the 300th anniversary of Presbyterian witness in the United States.

The GACER convened an ecumenical consultation in 2007, bringing together a broad cross-section of the PC(USA) and representatives from our full communion partners, to assess the current ecumenical landscape and consider ways the PC(USA) might strengthen and revitalize its ecumenical commitment. Several broad themes emerged from this consultation:

(a) Reclaiming the historic ecumenical commitment that we are called to do all things together, except those things that, in conscience, we need to do separately;
(b) Calling upon the church to engage a new dialogue between our core ecumenical commitments and emerging forms of church life;
(c) Calling the whole church to a commitment to justice in the economy and the earth;
(d) Calling the church to be peacemakers between building bridges of dialogue and common work for peace and justice with people of other faiths;
(e) Celebrating ecumenism at the local level;
(f) Continuing the work of peacemaking in a war-torn world.

The principal result of this consultation was a broad consensus that led to the development of “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” which will guide the ecumenical work of the church through the next decade.

5. Interreligious Relationships

The GACER is responsible for a change in the General Assembly Standing Rules to allow representatives from other religious traditions to attend General Assembly and participate in the life of our church at the national level. Over the last decade, GACER has grown in its capacity to engage interreligious relationships with more intentionality. A subcommittee of GACER is now focused on our church’s interreligious commitments.

6. Ministry and Formation

In recent years, GACER has worked to strengthen ecumenical formation within the PC(USA) by producing educational resources for congregations (e.g. most recently a study guide on “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),”), developing a network of ecumenical liaisons with middle governing bodies, promoting ecumenical reception of full communion agreements, and encouraging the participation of young adults in the ecumenical movement and its conciliar bodies.

7. Partnerships and Organizational Structures

Throughout its work, the General Assembly staff seeks to work ecumenically with counterparts in other denominations, ecumenical councils, and project-specific task groups that involve ecumenical partners. Significant areas of ecumenical cooperation are seen in the areas of disaster relief and development, national and international public witness and advocacy, national and international hunger concerns, theological engagement, youth and young adult ministries, communications, and international mission partnerships. These partnerships are not only significant for shaping the mission of the PC(USA), but also for bringing PC(USA) resources and insight to the work of our ecumenical partners. A key component has been the understanding that we “do mission in partnership,” which is one of the ways the PC(USA) seeks to realize the ecumenical imperative of the Lund Principle.

V. AREAS FOR IMPROVEMENT

In order for GACER to accomplish the tasks the General Assembly has outlined for it in “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” several arenas of work will need to be strengthened in the next few years.

A. Living Constructively with the Tension Between the Academic and the Practical

Historically, the search to discover our unity in Christ through the exploration of doctrinal differences among the churches has been seen as an academic exercise. Theologians and ecclesiologists have met in bilateral and multilateral dialogues, some of which have continued for decades, to seek common ground on matters of theology. As a result, ecumenism is perceived by many in the church as something academicians do, without practical consequences for the life of the church.

On the other hand, ecumenism is a very practical matter. When full communion agreements are entered into by churches, there are consequences: new relationships among brothers and sisters in the faith who were once divided; the sharing of the Eucharist in places where it has not been shared; and the orderly exchange of ministers of Word and Sacrament among churches that have not enjoyed the benefits of receiving ministers from the other tradition, for example.

Until recently, GACER’s work tilted towards the academic side of ecumenical engagement by finding experienced persons to participate in bilateral and multilateral dialogues and sharing the results of these dialogues with the General Assembly for its approval. A number of these dialogues, as mentioned previously, have resulted in significant agreements.

More recently, GACER has taken initiative on the practical side of ecumenical engagement by producing resources, securing ecumenical liaisons with middle governing bodies to build communication networks, and developing strategies to facilitate ecumenical formation at the local level.

As we move into the future, GACER believes that it must find ways to live constructively with the tension between the academic and the practical. While different seasons of church’s life will require different emphases, GACER wants to lift up both the academic work of ecumenical engagement and the practical work of implementation for the church as a whole, recognizing that both are critical components of the church’s ecumenical life and witness.

B. Increased Programmatic Focus

Given the staff reductions within the General Assembly Mission Council related to ecumenical programmatic work in recent years, GACER sees the need to move more proactively into developing a programmatic thrust and educational resources that were once the sole purview of the GAMC. These include study resources related to our church’s conciliar relationships and full communion agreements, and increased attention to the need for ecumenical formation throughout the denomination. Appropriate faculty at PC(USA) seminaries and others should be brought into this process.

C. Strengthening Ecumenical Reception at the Local Level

While the PC(USA) has invested considerable resources over the last several decades to participate in bilateral and multilateral dialogues, some of which have led to full communion agreements, less effort has been invested in implementing the results of these agreements at the local level. Cutbacks in staff, along with the lack of an overarching strategy for implementation, have contributed to this disparity.

The GACER should develop an implementation strategy for ecumenical reception, in partnership with middle governing bodies, and then provide initiative, coordination, and two-way communication in order to assure that that the church’s ecumenical agreements are fully embraced throughout all levels of the church’s life.

D. Broadening and Strengthening Interreligious Relationships

Interreligious relations in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) take place primarily through global, national, and local efforts that should be better connected and strengthened. The maintenance of formal relations between the church and organizations of other religious communities (e.g., the Islamic Society of North America, or Union for Reform Judaism, Buddhist Churches of America) is important, and provides useful links among national leaders. At the same time, the maintenance and expansion of local relationships, which are often less institutional and more related to specific agendas for action or peace-building, is critical for the health of our local cities and towns, and for the face-to-face engagement of our communities. National efforts could more effectively involve a wider cross-section of participation, and thereby better support local efforts. Local efforts could more effectively share the models of what they are learning and doing with others across the denomination, and with the national church, in order to energize and resource the efforts of others. Global, national, and local efforts would benefit from more sustained theological reflection, both among the Christians involved (for greater understanding of the significance of this work for Christian faith), and as an interreligious endeavor (to learn more clearly how it is we are theologically significant for one another). All of this also needs to be done in the context of the dynamic interreligious realities of our ecumenical partners in other parts of the world.

E. Improving Relationships Between GACER and the GAMC

In October 2009, a group of eight elected representatives from the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations and the General Assembly Mission Council met for the purposes of building relationships between GACER and the GAMC and to foster the fulfillment of our Presbyterian ecumenical calling in our mission program and financial commitments.

The committee identified many dynamics at work in the church at this point in time:
Decreased funding for basic mission support, resulting in staff cuts and reduced financial support for ecumenical agencies.

Tendency to shift focus from commitments to conciliar agencies (international, national, state, and regional councils of churches) to local, bilateral or multilateral church-to-church engagement.

Decreased understanding of the importance of ecumenical ministry at all levels of the church—coupled with limited efforts at ecumenical formation by pastors and middle governing body leaders.

False split between matters of inter-church relations (Faith and Order) and cooperative ministries (Life and Work).

In spite of these dynamics, the members of this group felt that there was much at stake in keeping ecumenical ministry at the center of the church’s life. Working in partnership with one another, beginning with GAMC and GACER elected members and staff, is one important first step in strengthening the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as it lives out the ecumenical vision that all might be one (John 17:21).

As the GACER and GAMC continue responding to the changing context and landscape of ecumenism, both are encouraged by the possibilities of further dialogue and closer relationship. Both affirm our denomination’s commitment to exploring ecumenical activity in its many forms throughout the church at the national, regional, and local levels.

As the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to listen in new ways to what the Spirit is saying to the whole church, GACER and the GAMC make the following commitments:

1. The GAMC approves the adding of an advisory member of GAMC from GACER. This person will be named by GACER.

2. Facilitate study and conversation at a GAMC meeting of “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (document approved by the 218th General Assembly 2008), and plan an overlapping meeting between GACER and GAMC (with the possibility of also including the middle governing bodies).

3. Pending GACER engagement with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), the chairs of the GAMC and COGA will appoint a task force, to include a representative from GACER, to: (a) forge structural relationships between the GAMC and OGA and (b) explore the potential programmatic consequences for both the GAMC and OGA.

F. Strengthening Relationships with All Agencies of the General Assembly

The process of engagement over the last year between GACER and the GAMC leadership can serve as a model for GACER and it seeks to build a constructive partnership with all six agencies of the General Assembly over the longer term.

G. Improving Linkages with Ecumenical Dialogues and Conciliar Bodies

Historically, GACER has overseen the process of General Assembly appointments to ecumenical dialogues and to conciliar bodies (such as the National Council of Christian Churches in the U.S.A.). In order to provide better communication and strengthen the linkages with these groups, GACER now believes it is important that a part of its membership includes PC(USA) representatives from both ecumenical dialogues and conciliar bodies with which the church has relationships.

VI. ADEQUACY OF OUR MANDATE

The General Assembly mandate for the GACER was originally approved by the 211th General Assembly (1999) upon the recommendation of the General Assembly Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The GACER replaced the former Advisory Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations and “Special Committees of the General Assembly” with ecumenical mandates. One of the goals of the new GACER was to consolidate the work of special committees of the General Assembly with ecumenical mandates that reported directly to the assembly into one ongoing permanent committee. Other goals included giving greater coordination and high profile to the ecumenical involvement of the PC(USA) as central to our life and witness to the gospel.

One of the significant changes in the movement from the Advisory Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations was the dropping of primary accompaniment for Interfaith Relations. The GACER has responsibility to “give guidance to General Assembly agencies on new opportunities to strengthen the relationships with other faith communities and on strategies for fulfilling the General Assembly mandates on interfaith [interreligious] relationships” but does not have power to make recommendations directly to staff or the General Assembly on matters of interreligious relationships.
The central mandate of the GACER remains strong and important to the life of the PC(USA). It would be strengthened with a mandated focus on interreligious relationships. Since the formation of GACER, the complexity of interreligious relations in the world and the need for more attention to interreligious cooperation and relationship-building in the wider ecumenical arena, have dramatically increased. Currently, particular interreligious matters that require attention are cared for by the General Assembly Mission Council. There is a need for an elected body to oversee the involvement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in interreligious relations and work; to connect the interreligious efforts of all governing body levels of the church; to provide a common point for all interreligious efforts connecting us with those outside our church; and to articulate the Reformed and Presbyterian identity in the midst of our interreligious relations. The GACER is positioned well to do this work in the wider context of our ecumenical mandate. It would be appropriate to include responsibilities for both ecumenical and interreligious relationships in the overall mandate of GACER. With this change it would be appropriate to change the name of GACER to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relationships.

VII. PROCESS OF SELF-STUDY

In the spring of 2009, GACER appointed a subcommittee to oversee the process of self-study. The subcommittee implemented a number of strategies to review the work GACER and to gather feedback from several constituencies for this report. The subcommittee:

1. reviewed the minutes of GACER over the past decade, along with all other public documents and reports that the committee produced;

2. reviewed General Assembly-approved reports related to GACER’s work, including The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);

3. developed survey instruments, in collaboration with Research Services, that were sent to all commissioners to the 218th General Assembly (2008) and more than fifty individuals who have been a vital part of GACER’s work, including former committee members and chairpersons, participants in ecumenical dialogues, and conciliar bodies.

The process of self-study for GACER has been a productive experience for the committee, helping it celebrate both its considerable accomplishments over the last decade as well as identify areas for future work.

Endnote

1. The third world conference on Faith and Order in Lund, Sweden (1952) issued this challenge, “should not our churches ask themselves whether they are showing sufficient eagerness to enter into conversation with other churches, and whether they should not act together in all matters except those in which deep differences of conviction compel them to act separately?” This principle has been adapted in many forms as the Lund Principle and often is formulated as “we should do together all things except those in which deep differences of conscience demand that we do separately.”

Item 17-Self-Study COTE

Committee on Theological Education Self-Study Report to the 219th General Assembly (2010), Fall 2003—Fall 2009

Prologue

Even in the early moments of our developing nation, the Presbyterian church—one of the earliest and most influential churches during and beyond the colonial period—steadfastly planted educational institutions in order to nurture the stewardship of the mind. Further, because of the church’s historic commitment to an educated clergy, Presbyterian theological institutions began springing up as early as 1794, when the earliest predecessor institution to Pittsburgh Theological Seminary was founded, and 1812, when Princeton Theological Seminary was founded. Some of these theological institutions closed over time, merged with other schools, or shifted from the preparation of clergy to other missions; but eleven of them have flourished and continue to be relevant resources for the PC(USA).

In 1983, when the two largest Presbyterian bodies reunited, finally healing a rupture brought about by the American Civil War, the seven seminaries of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (UPCUSA) (the so-called “Northern Presbyterian Church”) combined with the four seminaries of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) (the so-called “Southern Presbyterian Church”). The UPCUSA seminaries were Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, Princeton Theological Seminary, McCormick Theological Seminary (1829), University of Dubuque School of Theology (1852), Louisville Theological Seminary (aligned dually with both denominations and dating back to 1853), Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary (1867), and San Francisco Theological Seminary (1871). The PCUS seminaries were Union Presbyterian Seminary (1812), Columbia Theological Seminary (1828), Louisville Theological Seminary, and Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary (1902). Since reunion the General Assembly has established renewable covenant agreements with two additional seminaries with historical ties to the PC(USA)’s predecessors—Auburn Theological Seminary (1818) and the Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico (1919).

Although “theological education” takes place in many venues across the church, most notably in congregations week in and week out, the focus of the work of the COTE is the ministry of theological education expressed through the mission and work of the theological schools related to the PC(USA) whose primary calling is the preparation and enhancement of women and men for ministry in the church of Jesus Christ. The ten theological schools of the PC(USA) named above and the two in covenant agreement are vital centers of teaching and learning. Collectively these schools have more than 3,000 students in degrees ranging from the Master of Divinity (MDiv) and other master’s degrees to the Doctor of Ministry (DMin) and Doctor of Philosophy (PhD). These students are prepared by about 250 full-time faculty as well as by scores of adjunct professors. The library resources of these schools represent some of the most important collections in the United States and the world. The scholarly work of seminary faculty members regularly appears in curriculum, journals, and books that support the work of pastors and teachers across the church.

Although preparation of leaders for the PC(USA) is the historical mission of these schools, students from many other denominations and from churches around the world are attracted to our seminaries because of the rich theological resources and the strong history of scholarship and teaching. The schools offering PhD programs (Princeton and Union) are important providers of faculty for theological schools in the United States and around the world. Of the twenty largest Doctor of Ministry programs in the United States, four are from “mainline” denominational traditions; three of those are Presbyterian schools (Columbia, McCormick, and San Francisco). While the degree programs that these schools offer are similar, each school responds to the unique needs of the church in its region and seeks to provide a distinctive focus in its education so as to enhance the range of resources available to the church.

The theological schools of the PC(USA) represent collectively one of the strongest systems of theological education of any denomination. Even after the devastating economic challenges of 2008–2009, our seminaries are among the strongest in the United States in terms of financial reserves. Much of this strength is due to the stewardship of the seminaries’ board of trustees, made up almost entirely of members and officers of the PC(USA). Their dedication and professional expertise has greatly contributed to the robust character of the schools.

The Committee on Theological Education is a fairly recent phenomenon. Established in 1986, this committee of seminary presidents selected by seminary boards and ministers and elders elected by the General Assembly has become a unique governing body in the world of theological education and in the church at-large. This is not a council of the seminaries, but a committee of the church not fully elected by the church. The largest project of the Committee on Theological Education is the Theological Education Fund (TEF), the only denomination-wide way PC(USA) seminaries are funded. On average, less than 2 percent of annual seminary operating budgets is funded by the TEF, and only about 20 percent of our congregations normally participate in this specific appeal.

Introduction

The Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as amended by the 216th General Assembly (2004), states:

The General Assembly Mission Council ensures the continuation of a committee that includes representatives of each Presbyterian theological institution, and that will review the effectiveness and stewardship of the schools on behalf of the church, will exercise the governance responsibilities of the church to the schools, and will encourage and enhance cooperation among the church’s theological schools. The committee will be provided direct access to the General Assembly Mission Council and the General Assembly. (Manual, 2010, p. 19, Organization for Mission, Section V.F.1.)

The 198th General Assembly (1986) voted to adopt the report and recommendations of the Special Committee on Theological Institutions (CTI) that established the Committee on Theological Education (COTE), a committee of the church rather than a council of the seminaries.

The Committee on Theological Education will be responsible: a) to further the cause of theological education in the church; b) to provide a vehicle through which individual theological schools can coordinate their activities and report to the church; c) to provide for official communication from the church to the schools; d) to preserve the freedom of the schools for the benefit of the church; e) to assure visible representation of theological education at high levels of the church’s organization. (Minutes, 1986, Part 1, p. 267)

With this same action, thirteen functions of COTE were assigned:

1. To develop and maintain a comprehensive overview of theological education from the perspective of the whole church;

2. To identify, develop, and propose strategies for a systemic approach to theological education with the denomination;

3. To serve as an advocate before the whole church for theological education and to interpret the mission of the denomination’s theological schools to the whole church;
4. To provide a way for the church’s needs to be addressed to the denomination’s theological schools;
5. To review the effectiveness and stewardship of the schools on behalf of the church;
6. To encourage and enhance cooperation among the theological schools of the denomination;
7. To relate to governing bodies and agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), particularly those which have responsibilities for theology and worship, for education, for candidacy, and for leadership development of pastors and church members;
8. To maintain appropriate relationships with those responsible for theological education in other branches of the church catholic;
9. To prepare an appropriate formula for disbursement of funds [from the Theological Education Fund and other restricted funds and endowments] to the theological schools of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and to advocate for their financial support;
10. To recommend to the General Assembly those theological schools that qualify as members of the Committee on Theological Education;
11. To maintain relations with educational and ecumenical associations that share common concerns with the committee;
12. To serve as an agency of the denomination for relating to theological schools and agencies other than those of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and
13. To report directly to the General Assembly.

With this new committee, an increased emphasis on cooperation among the seminaries and between the seminaries and the PC(USA) was born, improved communication and information sharing was prioritized, the independent nature of and ownership of the seminaries was affirmed, and a new way of supporting the seminaries financially was developed. The 205th General Assembly (1993) reaffirmed the 1986 purpose and functions of the COTE after a comprehensive review and report by the Special Committee to Study Theological Institutions (CSTI).

I. Governance

A. Governance within COTE

1. Members

The committee consists of a majority of members elected by the General Assembly, serving four-year renewable terms, and representatives, usually presidents, of each related seminary. Together these elected and institutional members constitute the COTE for the benefit of the church and the schools. There are three membership categories: Elected/Church-at-Large, Institutional Representatives, and Corresponding Members.

   a. Elected Committee Members (Eleven Plus Two Elected by the GAMC)

Currently serving are the following:

   Class of 2010 (elected by General Assembly): Joseph Doh, Mesa, Arizona; Kenneth E. Kovacs, Catonsville, Maryland; Fran Lane-Lawrence, Wheeling, West Virginia; K. Nicholas Yoda, Lakewood, Ohio; Chandler Stokes, Berkeley, California.

   Class of 2012 (elected by the General Assembly): Vilmarie Cintrón-Olivieri, San Juan, Puerto Rico; Terry Holland, Fresno, California; Mindy Douglas Adams, Nashville, Tennessee; Max Sherman, Austin, Texas; Kathy Wolf Reed, Nashville, Tennessee; Landon Whitsitt, Liberty, Missouri.

b. COTE Institutional Representatives (Ten Currently Serve)

The theological schools are selected by General Assembly as recommended by the COTE, and representatives are selected by institutions.

Institutional representatives: Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Theodore J. Wardlaw, president, Austin, Texas; Columbia Theological Seminary, Stephen A. Hayner, president, Decatur, Georgia; University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, Jeffrey F. Bullock, president, Dubuque, Iowa; Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Dean K. Thompson, president, Louisville, Kentucky; McCormick Theological Seminary, Cynthia M. Campbell, president, Chicago, Illinois; Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, William J. Carl III, president, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Princeton Theological Seminary, Iain R. Torrance, president, Princeton, New Jersey; San Francisco Theological Seminary, Laird Stuart, interim president, San Anselmo, California; J. C. Smith Theological Seminary, Paul T. Roberts, interim dean, Atlanta, Georgia.

c. Corresponding Members

Five currently serve with voice but no vote on the committee.

In covenant with the General Assembly: Auburn Theological Seminary, Katharine R. Henderson, president, New York, New York; Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico, Sergio Ojeda-Cárcamo, president, San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Corresponding Member as Designated by the General Assembly: Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation, Gary Eller, President, Omaha, Nebraska.

Invited Annually by the COTE for the Last Six Years: Fuller Theological Seminary, Ron Kernaghan, Pasadena, California; Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary, Alvin Padilla, South Hamilton, Massachusetts; Memphis Theological Seminary, Daniel J. Earheart-Brown, Memphis, Tennessee.

2. Officers/Executive Committee—Those Currently Serving

Officers serve two-year terms (General Assembly to General Assembly), have the power to appoint new members to serve on subcommittees and to fill temporary vacancies, and are chaired by the committee chair.

a. Chair of COTE and Executive Committee of COTE—Fran Lane-Lawrence

b. Vice-Chair of COTE—Vacant (Phil Butin served until January 31, 2009)

c. Chairs of Subcommittees:

   (1) Institutional Review Committee—Chaired by Kenneth Kovacs

   (2) Implementation & Interpretation—Chaired by Nicholas Yoda

   (3) Interschool & Mission Cooperation—Chaired by Bill Carl

   (4) Theological & Church Concerns—Chaired by Cynthia Campbell

The tradition of the COTE has been to rotate the chair of the committee from institutional representatives/presidents to elected/church-at-large members. Chairs over the last six years demonstrate this pattern: The Reverend Dr. Liza Hendricks, presbytery executive—Western Reserve; the Reverend Dr. Samuel Calian—former president of Pittsburgh Theological Seminary; the Reverend Dr. James Kitchens—pastor of Second Presbyterian Church, Nashville, Tennessee; the Reverend Dr. Laura Mendenhall—former president of Columbia Theological Seminary; the Reverend Dr. Joel Weible—pastor of Pee Wee Valley Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Kentucky; and the Reverend Fran Lane-Lawrence—executive director of Laughlin Memorial Chapel, Wheeling, West Virginia. The chair-elect is the Reverend Dr. Theodore J. Wardlaw, president of Austin Presbyterian Seminary.

3. Nominating Committee (appointed by chair of COTE to nominate COTE officers directly to the committee as a whole).

4. Meetings

   a. Regular meetings are held once in even-numbered years and twice in odd-numbered years, are scheduled by the executive committee, customarily near a PC(USA) seminary campus on a rotating basis, and are approved by COTE.

   b. Past and upcoming meetings and locations: (A new regular meeting schedule has been established.)

      (1) April 6–8, 2003—Louisville Seminary, Louisville, Ky.
(2) November 12–13, 2003—San Francisco Theological Seminary, Claremont, Calif. (Southern California).

(3) November 8–10, 2004—McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, Ill.

(5) October 24–26, 2005—Austin Seminary, Austin, Tex.

(6) November 13–5, 2006—University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, Dubuque, Iowa.

(11) November 16–18, 2009—San Francisco Theological Seminary, San Anselmo, Calif.

c. Special meetings may be called as needed by the executive committee or by written request of at least three other committee members.

d. A quorum is fifteen (15) voting members.

e. The coordinator is responsible for the preparation and distribution of minutes of the committee and of its executive committee.

B. Relationship to the General Assembly Mission Council

As quoted in the introduction above, the 216th General Assembly (2004) reestablished direct reporting relationships to the General Assembly (GA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The relationships between the GAMC, the GA, the COTE, and the member schools is best described as NOT one of authority over, but in dialogue with so “the freedom of the schools for the benefit of the church” can be “preserved.”

1. The COTE directly reports via a corresponding member of the GAMC who is an institutional member of COTE (a seminary president or dean on a rotating basis) selected by COTE.

2. Two GAMC members, appointed by the GAMC, are elected/voting members of COTE.

3. The Office of Theological Education is a part of the General Assembly Mission Council staff.

C. Relationship to the General Assembly

1. The COTE directly reports to the General Assembly via the chair of COTE, who is a GA corresponding member.

2. All of the PC(USA) seminary presidents are invited to serve as corresponding members of the General Assembly.

II. Staff

The Office of Theological Education currently includes four (4) full-time staff persons and a network of sixteen (16) contract staff, plus more than one hundred and fifty (150) volunteers who serve in judicatories throughout the country on behalf of COTE and the Theological Education Fund.

A. Full-Time Staff

1. Coordinator for Theological Education and Seminary Relations: The Reverend Dr. Lee Hinson-Hasty. The coordinator reports to the director of Theology Worship and Education. The coordinator is the primary staff person to COTE and the lead staff person for the Office of Theological Education. (The GAMC pays 100 percent of salary and benefits.)

2. Associate for Theological Education and Seminary Relations: The Reverend Dr. Rose Eileen Niles. The associate is the lead staff person for interpreting the Theological Education Fund. She leads more than 150 volunteers and 16 contract staff who serve as “advocates before the whole church for theological education and to interpret the mission of the denomination’s theological schools to the whole church.” Together they raise close to two million dollars annually that is distributed by an agreed-upon formula to PC(USA) seminaries and pays for network and other interpretation expenses. (The Theological Education Fund [TEF] pays 85 percent of salary and benefits of the associate.)

3. Program Assistant for Theological Education and Seminary Relations: Rob Fohr. The program assistant relates directly with the seminaries and staff on a daily basis and partners with the coordinator to manage the work of COTE and the Office of Theological Education. (The GAMC pays 100 percent of salary and benefits.)

4. Administrative Assistant for Theological Education and Seminary Relations: Cindy Pope. The assistant works closely with the associate to support the work of the Theological Education Seminary Support Network and assists with COTE and office projects as needed. (The TEF pays 100 percent of salary and benefits.)

B. Other Staff

1. Contract Staff Funded by the TEF

a. Marketing and promotional material firms for TEF as determined by staff in consultation with the Implementation and Interpretation Committee.

b. Fifteen (15) regional representatives (train and support volunteer TEF presbytery representatives).

2. Adjunct Staff from GAMC and OGA as Invited by COTE

a. Director, Office of Vocation—Marcia Clark Myers.

b. Director, Theology Worship and Education—Joseph D. Small.

III. Budget

More than 60 percent of the Office of Theological Education budget, not counting the Theological Education Fund (TEF) allocation to PC(USA) seminaries, is funded by the Theological Education Fund. This includes salaries, benefits, and program. The General Assembly Mission Council funds the remaining portion (not quite 40 percent). This GAMC budget includes the cost of governance for the Committee on Theological Education meetings rather than the per capita budget of other General Assembly committees.

IV. History, Mission, and Purpose

The Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as amended by the 218th General Assembly (2008) states:

> The General Assembly Mission Council ensures the continuation of a committee that includes representatives of each Presbyterian theological institution, and that will review the effectiveness and stewardship of the schools on behalf of the church, will exercise the governance responsibilities of the church to the schools, and will encourage and enhance cooperation among the church’s theological schools. The committee will be provided direct access to the General Assembly Mission Council and the General Assembly. (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, p. 19; Organization for Mission, V.F.1.)

The 198th General Assembly (1986) voted to adopt the report and recommendations of the Special Committee on Theological Institutions (CTI) that established a committee of the church rather than a council of the seminaries.

Specific COTE assigned functions were designated by the 198th General Assembly (1986). With the creation of COTE, an increased emphasis on cooperation among the seminaries and between the seminaries and the PC(USA) was born, improved communication and information sharing was prioritized, the independent nature and ownership of the seminaries was affirmed, and a new way of supporting the seminaries was developed—the Theological Education Fund (TEF).

In 1993 these assigned functions were reaffirmed by the 205th General Assembly (1993) with the approval of a report by the Special Committee to Study Theological Institutions (CSTI). The CSTI report was distributed to PC(USA) seminaries as well as to middle governing bodies with a cover letter from the then Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, James Andrews. Stated Clerk Andrews highlighted that the CSTI report encouraged seminaries “to continue to study in-depth the issues raised in the report, and to give serious consideration to the issues raised in the report, and to give serious consideration to the suggestions made by the special committee in planning for the future.” We have found that although many of these issues have been addressed, some have not, some have been addressed that are not named, and many new issues are arising for theological schools at an astounding and rapidly increasing rate.

In the letter from the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) accompanying the CSTI distributed to presbyteries it goes on to “commend the eleven Presbyterian theological institutions for their faithful and energetic efforts to serve the whole church, especially those areas where the special committee research shows they have been most effective in recent years: innovative programs for new constituencies; identification of resources to secure the future of theological education; and cooperative efforts among the schools.” The COTE affirms this to continue to be true.
Worth highlighting, however, is the ability of our schools to “identify[y] resource to secure the future.” Declining denominational support has made gifts from individuals and foundations more and more important over the last thirty years. This began more than twenty years ago even when the pre-reunion denominations had distinctly different denominational relationships and funding patterns of their seminaries. In the old “Northern” church, their primary accountability and funding relationships were with the General Assembly, and in the old “Southern” church, the denominational identity and funding were expressed through organic relationships with one or more regional synods. In the wake of reunion, the pattern in the larger predecessor church—in which the relationships were expressed at the General Assembly level—was adopted, and is now expressed through the Committee on Theological Education and, in terms of funding, through the Theological Education Fund. Residual cultural differences can still be felt—for example, through Princeton Seminary’s genuinely national reach, or through the formerly “Southern” schools’ often palpable sense of regional constituencies.

In other ways, too, each seminary has unique accents, emphases, and institutional priorities. All of them, however, are memory-bearing institutions that hold in common the historic Presbyterian and Reformed sense of the life of the mind dedicated to the glory of God. They also hold in common the seminary’s role in bequeathing, from one generation to another, the apostolic tradition that nourished the earliest churches. This tradition presumes such information as scriptural study, theology, church history, liturgics, homiletics, and the pastoral arts, and formation in the deeply-rooted life and reality of Christian practices and faithful living. While contemporary life demands that seminary curricula also be attentive to the challenges of technology, business and financial management, training in conflict resolution, entrepreneurial skills, and other such matters, in the coming years these needs will need to be balanced with the expectation that the enduring ancient values, texts, and traditions of the ages not be ignored. With respect to the landscape of American theological education, there is a growing refrain within the gamut of Christian faith communities, but especially within the more entrepreneurial expressions of mainline and evangelical Christianity, that is calling for what is finally a “trade school” approach to preparing future pastors and servants of the church. When the PC(USA) seminaries are challenged to respond to this refrain, they will need to balance it with the ongoing urgency of passing on the vital substance and content of a faith that was, in turn, handed down to us.

Practically speaking, our seminaries are more nimble than in times past with respect to modes of delivery of theological education. Two of them, Union and San Francisco, have degree-granting additional campuses. Others, including McCormick, Pittsburgh, and now Columbia, have options for classes at night and on weekends. One of them, Dubuque, has a Master of Divinity program offered largely online. Virtually all of the PC(USA) seminaries have distance-learning capabilities. Almost all of our Presbyterian seminaries also offer other educational opportunities for continuing education of all as well as certificate and commissioned lay pastor training.

More and more, our seminaries also balance the preparation for full-time Christian service with the equally necessary role of contributing to the faith of the church and equipping the work of all Christians. Through lay institutes, special workshops and lecture series, certificate programs, and a variety of other resources, the seminaries’ faculty, staff, and campuses endeavor to demonstrate ongoing attentiveness to the changing needs of the church and other communities of faith.

At stake in all of these dimensions of our seminaries’ lives is that fundamental obligation of bearing a memory. Barbara Brown Taylor once drew a distinction between ink and blood, and lamented that Christians often try to solve their conflicts by turning to the Bible until “defending the dried ink marks on the page becomes more vital than defending the neighbor.” In response to such a sad reflex, she made this corrective statement: “The whole purpose of the Bible, it seems to me, is to convince people to set the written words down, in order to become living words in the world for God’s sake.” She concluded: “For me, this willing conversion of ink back to blood is the full substance of faith” (Barbara Brown Taylor, Leaving Church: A Memoir of Faith [HarperSanFrancisco, 2006], pp. 106–107).

V. Self-Study Process

In its October 2007 meeting at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, the COTE voted to establish a Self-Study Task Force to assess the work of the committee for the six years to be reviewed: Fall 2003 through Fall 2009.

A. Task Force Members

The members of the task force nominated by the COTE Nominating Committee and elected were as follows:

The Reverend Dr. Theodore J. Wardlaw: Self-Study Task Force convener; institutional representative on COTE; president and professor of Homiletics, Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Austin, Texas; minister member of the Presbytery of Grace, Synod of the Sun.

The Reverend Dr. Kenneth Kovacs: elected member on COTE (Class of 2010); pastor, Catonsville Presbyterian Church, Catonsville, Maryland; minister member of the Presbytery of Baltimore, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic.
The Reverend Dr. Cynthia M. Campbell: institutional representative on COTE; president and Cyrus McCormick Professor of Church and Ministry, McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, Illinois; minister member of the Presbytery of Chicago, Synod of Lincoln Trails.

The Reverend Neal Presa (Resigned in Spring 2008): elected member on COTE (Class of 2012); pastor, Middlesex Presbyterian Church, Middlesex, New Jersey; minister member of the Presbytery of Elizabeth, Synod of the Northeast.

Elder Vilmarie Cintrón-Olivieri (Replaced Neal Presa on the task force in Fall 2008): elected member on COTE (Class of 2012); elder, Iglesia Presbiteriana en Hato Rey, San Juan, Puerto Rico; Presbytery of San Juan, Synod of Boriquén (Puerto Rico).

B. Meetings

The task force met periodically over the course of the last two years, largely during meetings of the Committee on Theological Education, via conference call, and face-to-face in Louisville, Kentucky, for three days in August of 2009.

C. Staffing

The staff in the Office of Theological Education worked closely and cooperatively with the Office of the General Assembly and PC(USA) Research Services as they independently studied the effectiveness and fidelity to mission of the COTE. The Reverend Dr. Lee Hinson-Hasty, coordinator for Theological Education and Seminary Relations, served as the primary staff person.

D. Research

Three research projects initiated by the task force assisted us in the evaluation of the committee’s effectiveness of service and the fidelity to its mission.

1. The task force closely reviewed the following COTE documents dated 2003–2008:
   b. Review by the 205th General Assembly (1993) in the approved report by the Special Committee to Study Theological Institutions (CSTI).
   c. Undergirding mandates and policies.
   e. Membership rosters.
   f. Meeting evaluations (initiated in Fall 2005).
   g. Minutes of all meetings.
   h. The COTE reports to the General Assembly.

2. The task force led a process that engaged the committee itself. During the April 2009 meeting, the Committee on Theological Education broke into five small focus groups to evaluate the committee’s five General Assembly (GA) assigned purposes and fifteen GA assigned functions. Members of the Self-Study Task Force facilitated five focus groups, each of which consisted of three to five COTE members, including one PC(USA) national staff member who served as recorder. Each group met for sixty to ninety minutes, engaging in discussion and evaluating one of COTE’s five GA assigned purposes. The results, “Summary of COTE Focus Groups on Assigned Purpose and Functions” are available upon request from the Office of Theological Education, coordinator, Lee Hinson-Hasty, lee.hinson-hasty@pcusa.org.

3. The task force met face-to-face in August 2009 to draft a report to submit to the committee and ultimately to the General Assembly, and to briefly engage another COTE task force reviewing the Theological Education Fund (TEF).

As a result,

a. The publics and constituents of the committee were clarified, and the perceptions of effectiveness of service to assigned purposes and functions were recorded and analyzed;

b. The task force was given an additional charge by the COTE:
“As the task force formulates a report for the November (2009) meeting and ultimately the General Assembly the following areas need to be addressed, including possible recommendations:

“(1) Clarity on the Mission and Role of COTE,
“(2) Membership and Structure of COTE,
“(3) Stated Meeting Norms,
“(4) Coordination of Seminary Resources.”

The task force reviewed the additional COTE charge immediately above (3.b.) and came to the following conclusions:

- Further study was needed and the assistance of an outside research firm would be a first step. A firm was contracted for this service, and the results are forthcoming.
- A report other than the self-study would be needed but would not be ready before Fall 2010. This report should be in response to the November 2009 TEF Review, the report and recommendations of the Joint Committee on Leadership Needs (COGA, GAMC, and COTE) due in February 2010, and other research accomplished by an outside firm and PC(USA) Research Services by Spring 2010.

VI. Commendations and Accomplishments

The self-study by the COTE from the Fall of 2003 through the Fall of 2009 found the following accomplishments of COTE worth commending:

A. The COTE fulfilled all governance responsibilities outlined above.

B. The COTE developed friendship and raised funds for benefit of churches and seminaries.
   1. Almost two million dollars a year was raised from close to 2,000 churches annually.
   2. Conducted annual “Thank You” calls and sent related communications to donor congregations; provided an opportunity for COTE members to hear directly from congregations and vice versa.

C. Consulted and/or collaborated with:
   1. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC),
   2. General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC),
   3. Presbyteries Cooperative Committee on Examination of Candidates (PCCEC),
   4. Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA),
   5. Presbyterian Tentmakers,
   6. Urban Theological Educators Roundtable,
   7. Worldwide Ministries, GAMC,
   8. National Hispanic Caucus.

D. Financially supported the following cooperative projects through the Theological Education Fund:
   1. Entrance into Pastoral Ministry Project,
   2. Pastoral Leadership Search Effort of the Fund for Theological Education, 2005,
   3. Advocates for Ministry Program, 2005–2007,
   4. Pedagogies of African American Presbyterians, 2008,
   5. Faculty and Faculty Dean Consultation with the Presbyteries Cooperative Committee on Examinations of Candidates, 2006,
   6. Korean American Presbyterian Theological Educators,
   7. Online Supervised Ministry Tools.

E. Financially supported the following projects with GAMC funds:
   1. Award for Excellence in Theological Education, each General Assembly,
2. Site visits to four seminaries,
3. Seminary and church conversations with COTE, COGA, and GAMC to each Presbyterian seminary except Johnson C. Smith,
4. Commissioned Lay Pastor Study of Educational Programs posted at www.pcusa.org/clp,

F. Other committee projects worth noting:
1. Endorsed and/or assisted with the following projects:
   a. PC(USA) Office of Vocations Pastoral Residency Proposal,
   b. Presbyterian AIDS Network Seminary Consultation,
   c. Study of Seminarian Healthcare,
   d. Background Checks for Seminarians.
2. Cosponsored cooperative courses:
   a. Annual “Leaders for a Connectional Church” with GAMC, COGA, and Louisville Seminary in the Presbyterian Center during the January term,
   b. “Presbyterian Principles and Practice” during each General Assembly,
   c. American Waldensian Society with Union Presbyterian Seminary,
   d. Interfaith Youth Core with McCormick Theological Seminary.

G. Commended “A Common Word Between Us and You” to COTE member institutions for study, October 2007.

H. Revised and recommend renewed covenants on behalf of the General Assembly with
   1. Auburn Theological Seminary,
   2. Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico.

I. Discussed in-depth the following/resourced by
   1. Seminary trustees/Barbara Wheeler, Auburn Center for the Study of Theological Education,
   2. Growing seminarian debt/Tony Ruger and Barbara Wheeler, Auburn Center,
   3. Distance education/Charles Willard of the Association of Theological Schools,
   4. Pastoral formation/Charles Wiley, Marcia Clark Myers and Barbara Wheeler,
   5. Funding theological education/Tony Ruger, Auburn Center,
   6. The future of theological education and the PC(USA)/committee members.

J. Approved or revised the following policies and/or manuals and posted them on the Internet:
   1. COTE Manual of Operations—standardizing the format and policies,
   2. Meeting Development Guidelines—making our meetings more accessible and transparent,
   3. Joint Presbyterian Seminary Display Guidelines,
   4. COTE Communications Policy and Procedures,
   5. Cross-Registration/Exchange Policy,
   6. Cooperative Grant Guidelines and Application Process,
   7. Consistent meeting schedule—starting in Fall 2010.

VII. Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

A. Does the COTE, as it was created by the church, serve and support the church’s mission in a particular area? Does the COTE demonstrate a constant faithfulness to and fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA)?
Yes, the COTE serves and supports the church’s mission by “furthering the cause of theological education,” as one of its purposes states. According to the Self-Study Focus Groups, COTE effectively addresses this purpose through the interpretation and communication with congregations that support the Theological Education Fund (TEF), providing for the collegial and cooperative relationships of the seminary presidents and the effectiveness of the Office of Theological Education staff. Also, COTE demonstrates constant faithfulness to and fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the church by complying with two of its purposes by being a vehicle of the theological schools for their coordination of activities and serving as a channel of communication from the church to the schools and vice-versa. According to the Self-Study Focus Groups, the effective implementation of these two purposes is seen in ongoing faculty group’s inter-seminary/cooperative staff groups, joint displays in conferences and assemblies, a joint seminary view book, presidents gatherings, relationship building, good communication from staff, liaisons to seminaries, and seminary site visits, among others.

B. Does the basic process of the COTE demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly? Does the COTE exhibit leadership in guiding the Church in engagement with the work and resources in which the COTE acts?

According to our research, the answer is yes with room for improvement. Our functions are less clear and focused than the committee would like for them to be. They have not changed in more than twenty years and are in need of revision. We are in the process of revising them and appreciated this opportunity to revisit our core mission and mandate. We have found that a number of the recommendations in our 1986 founding document (CSI) as well as the 1993 comprehensive study (CTSI) may assist us as we imagine the future that God is leading us toward. There are foundational issues and items that need to be revisited as COTE moves into an ever-changing future.

One area of growing strength is the cooperation and collegiality among the PC(USA) seminaries, their staff, students, boards, and especially their presidents.

C. Does the COTE exhibit practical cooperation with the other agencies or committees of the church in areas of overlapping responsibility and opportunity?

Yes, the COTE has regular engagement and partnership with various agencies, entities, committees, governing bodies, and other organizations of and related to the PC(USA). Most notable is how the office that staffs the committee is integrated into the Theology Worship and Education ministry area of the General Assembly Mission Council. The GAMC sends two member liaisons as full voting members to COTE, and COTE sends one corresponding member to each GAMC meeting. Constituent committees of the GAMC, especially the Vocations Committee, are consistent partners and collaborators on issues related to pastoral formation and leadership needs. The Joint Committee on Leadership Needs, initiated by COTE in response to the GAMC and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), is an outstanding example of the collaboration and cooperation in this area. The Office of Vocations embodies the GAMC and COGA partnership as it is a joint office of the COGA and the GAMC; this office staffs committees on ministry and committees on preparation for ministry. Studies such as the Commissioned Lay Pastor Study were done with this office. The COTE regularly partners with the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on (ordination) Examinations of Candidates by welcoming staff to each meeting, hearing regular reports, passing on concerns, and working together to improve the exam process for everyone involved. Other organizations named above including the General Assembly Nominating Committee, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, National Hispanic Latina/o Caucus, and others have been welcomed and responded to promptly.

One area of concern is fulfilling our charge “to assure visible representation of theological education at high levels of the church’s organization.” Discussions about becoming a permanent committee of the General Assembly, placement of the office in the GAMC structure, as well as seeking per capita funds for our governance expenses have faltered. In the coming years, these issues will need to be addressed.

D. Does the COTE provide timely responses to directives and requests from the General Assembly?

Yes. COTE submits timely, complete, succinct, and regular reports to the GAMC, the General Assembly. Our reports have been reviewed and accepted each time without amendment.

VIII. Effectiveness of Service

A. Does the COTE have a defined and consistent process for completing its work?

Yes. The COTE Manual of Operations and the Agenda Development Guidelines, along with other policies and procedures described in the COTE Manual of Operations, provide for the accomplishment of our mission and mandates. Staff support in the area of raising funds for the Theological Education Fund is critical for the committee’s success. Furthermore, staff coordination of complex institutional, agency, global, national, regional, and local relationships is essential to our success.
Our research shows that COTE is mostly effective in accomplishing the functions assigned by the General Assembly. One area of growth is determining how the committee might best assess the “stewardship and health of the schools” while also “preserving the freedom of the schools for the benefit of the church.” Each school is guided by an independent board that is ultimately responsible for its respective school.

In terms of our responsibility for “furthering the cause of theological education in the church,” we have faltered in the area of raising funds to support the schools. In any given year, not quite 20 percent of PC(USA) congregations give to the General Assembly established Theological Education Fund (TEF). Fewer than half have given in the twenty-year history of the fund. Although many give as much as or more than the 1 percent of their congregational mission or outreach budget to this special appeal, most do not. The GAMC Mission Funding Plan does not highlight this need, which has been reaffirmed by General Assemblies and congregations year in and year out. Plans to enhance the Theological Schools Endowment Fund and other strategies must be reconsidered and prioritized by the committee and the church as a whole if we are to maintain the high quality of the education and the relationship to the PC(USA) theological schools.

B. Does the COTE have a regular process of self-evaluation of its services?

Yes and no. We have a regular process for evaluating our meetings and projects. We do not have a regular process in place to evaluate our effectiveness beyond this self-study now required each six years. See recommendation in IX. Recommendations and Conclusions below.

C. Does the COTE employ a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large?

Yes, with congregations and national governing bodies. Electronic and print materials from the committee abound, including a Web site, online log (blog), e-mail newsletter, social networking communications, and a dedicated toll-free phone number. Possibly more effective is our committee itself, the institutions represented, and the TEF Seminary Support Network of more than 150 Presbyterians committed to learning more about our schools and theological education, passing that information on in their judicatories, visiting a campus annually, and raising funds for the TEF. Thank-you phone calls from committee members and regular mailings to congregations and resource centers, including mailings of attractive posters and multimedia resources, all reach the larger church and are well-received, according to our research of those who use them. Digital media tracking shows consistent growth in viewing and use of these resources, especially over the last two years (2007–2009). A better communication strategy with middle governing bodies, including those responsible for the nurture, care, and formation of ministers in the presbyteries, is needed.

One difficult area of communication is that seminaries are just one partner in theological education, which takes place regularly in congregations as well. Seminaries and the COTE stand ready to assist, but are not, as often is perceived, the only ones leading this effort and creating the leadership and educational ethos of the PC(USA).

D. Does the COTE utilize current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission?

Yes. See question C above.

E. Does the COTE have a developed vision and plan for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and context of the PC(USA)?

Yes, a collaborative plan is in place that is being guided by forthcoming recommendations from the following projects:

1. Joint Committee on Leadership Needs;

2. a continuing Self-Study Task Force charge to clarify the mission and role of COTE, advise the committee on possible adjustments to the membership and structure of COTE, possible recommendations on stated meeting norms, and new ways to better coordinate seminary resources;

3. a review of the Theological Education Fund; and

4. research conclusion by PC(USA) Research Services and an independent firm contracted by COTE that are each currently conducting research with key constituents.

Specifics of the plan are expected in the Fall of 2010.

IX. Conclusions and Recommendations

The COTE is a unique committee in the life of the PC(USA) and one that navigates complex relationships on a daily basis for the benefit of PC(USA) congregations, governing bodies, and seminaries. The committee seeks to listen to church and respond appropriately. As leadership becomes increasingly valued by culture and church, the relationships, initiatives, communications, and responses of the Committee on Theological Education, we believe, will only become more critical for the health and well-being of all.

We believe that what Robert Lynn said is as true today as it was over twenty years ago:

Make no mistake about it. What happens today in the theological schools will affect the church in the decades to come. As the seminary goes, so goes American Protestantism. Or, to put it another way, God’s script for the 21st century is being partly written right now in such institutions as our Presbyterian theological schools.

Based on this report, COTE is taking the following actions:

1. The establishment of an ongoing Strategic Planning and Effectiveness Committee of COTE consisting of three or more current and/or former committee members that reports to the executive committee and no less than annually to the COTE. This committee would be charged with conducting ongoing evaluation and visioning for the COTE, including the six-year reviews by the General Assembly.

2. The reevaluation of the functions assigned to COTE and its mission, role, and structure with results to be reported to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

3. The reinvestment in ways to ensure the funding of theological education for the benefit of the church and the seminaries.

4. The sharing of this self-study with PC(USA) seminary boards and other interested parties.

17-Self-Study GANC

General Assembly Nominating Committee Self-Study

I. A Reformed Understanding of “Calling to Service:” Foundational to the Work of the General Assembly Nominating Committee

“... Let them be carefully chosen by the Church or by those delegated from the Church for that purpose in a proper order without any uproar, dissension and rivalry” (The Book of Confessions, Second Helvetic Confession, 5.150).

The Second Helvetic Confession speaks of calling pastors, but its advice also covers the calling of all Christians to various forms of service in the church. Although the church uses the terms “nomination” and “election,” the church is not proposing candidates and conducting campaigns in the manner of the American political system or the nomination processes of some other denominations. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is engaging in a prayerful personal and communal process of discerning God’s call.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee (GA Nominating Committee, GANC) does not simply propose candidates for election. Instead, it presents to the General Assembly the conclusions of its discernment—the persons who, in its judgment, are called by God for particular service at a particular time in the life of the church. The GANC’s judgment is not final, for the General Assembly itself is responsible for exercising its own discernment, affirming or altering the committee’s proposals. Ultimately, God’s call is made known through the “concurring judgment of a governing body of the church” (Book of Order, G.6-0106a).

God’s call to service on a national board or agency may come to a person individually or through the counsel of others. When a person’s sense of call is presented to the GA Nominating Committee, it joins many others in a pool of persons much larger than the positions of service that need to be filled. Thus, the GANC engages in a serious process of discernment, correlating personal gifts and the church’s needs. The GANC’s singular and essential task is to assist the General Assembly in discerning God’s call for particular individuals to serve the church in special ways. The Book of Order states:

To ensure careful nominations of members of such boards, agencies, and committees as the General Assembly shall from time to time designate, the General Assembly Nominating Committee shall propose nominees to the General Assembly for such bodies. (G-13.0111)
Indeed, the process of nominating, electing, and serving contributes to the faithfulness and effectiveness of the whole church. Because the church is the Body of Christ, every call is important to its proper functioning. (“But as it is, God arranged the members in the body, each one of them, as he chose. If all were a single member, where would the body be? … The eye cannot say to the hand, ‘I have no need of you,’ nor again the head to the feet, ‘I have no need of you,’” 1 Cor. 12:18–21). Each person’s call to serve (whether issued by the GANC through the assembly’s election, the GA Moderator’s appointment, or by other means) contributes in some part to the fulfillment of the church’s mission. Consequently, the GA Nominating Committee has more than the welfare of each entity (board, agency, committee, commission, and council) to which it nominates in its sight. It also understands that through its process of careful nomination and election, it assists the organization and structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to live more faithfully as the Body of Christ.

The PC(USA) is more fully that living Body of Christ when it “give[s] full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and … provide[s] means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life” (Book of Order, G-4.0403). The task of calling forth those whose particular gifts are underutilized and whose perspectives are underrepresented is integral to the discerning work of the GANC. It ensures that voices from every sector within the church have a place at the decision-making tables of the church.

God calls plain folk from ordinary places to do extraordinary work with God’s people.
God called Abraham and Sarah to pack their belongings and sojourn to a new land.
So Abraham and Sarah packed up and answered God’s Call

II. Faithfulness to the Mission

“The call of Christ is to willing, dedicated discipleship. … Discipleship is a gift and a commitment, an offering and a responsibility” (Commissioning service from the Book of Occasional Services).

As Christians, we are called to respond to 1 Peter 4:10, “Like good stewards of the manifold grace of God, serve one another with whatever gift each of you received.” An important task of the church is to help its members discover their gifts for service and their calling to particular ministries. While some members are eager to claim their gifts and offer them to the church, others need a bit more encouragement. (One thinks of Jonah who required considerable coaxing by God!) The GA Nominating Committee lifts up the common belief in the priesthood of all believers, that all are gifted by God and called to service, as it seeks to present for election available individuals who reflect a broad range of gifts and perspectives in service to more than thirty entities of the General Assembly.

The members of the GANC (one residing in each of the sixteen synods, nominated by the Moderator of the General Assembly, and elected by the General Assembly) arrive at this ministry with different perspectives, experiences, and personalities. Yet GANC members answer the same call to discern those whom God has called to serve, understanding that God works through both individuals and groups elected to serve on behalf of the whole church. Central to the work of the committee is a commitment to confidentiality. A core strength of its process and deliberations is a high level of trust within the committee as well as with applicants and those who provide references for the applicants.

A. Getting the Job Done

1. The Nomination Process

Not infrequently you will hear people complain about the never-ending use of committees in the Presbyterian Church…; The notion that we are called to be together has led Presbyterians to conclude that this is how we should make decisions: not independently or unilaterally, but together. Decisions are shared among the various members or governing bodies for the good of the whole, because together we are the body of Christ. (Presbyterian Polity for Church Officers, Third Edition, Gray &Tucker, p. xii)

The Book of Order entrusts the GA Nominating Committee with the responsibility of ensuring a careful process for nominating persons equipped for service on the thirty-one entities to which it makes nominations.

The GANC solicits from each entity a description of its work, skills and qualifications for its membership, and time required for meetings and other assignments. This material is posted on the website www.pcus.org/nominations—providing potential applicants with the information they need as they discern God’s call to service. Along with subsequent correspondence on needed skills and abilities from each entity, this information assists the GANC as it evaluates the qualification of candidates for consideration.

The GANC uses an application-based process where persons wishing to be considered for service share their sense of Christian commitment, interest, skills and gifts, as well as church and professional experience by completing an application form.
The committee’s discernment includes careful consideration of applicants’ responses on this required form, assessment of personal and governing body references, review of entities needs and goals, and consideration for fair representation. All are instrumental in the nomination of persons to the slate presented to the General Assembly. The GANC selects its slate of nominees for each General Assembly election from approximately 300 applications that it has received. Nominees are also presented to fill vacancies due to an incumbent’s completing her/his term and for mid-term vacancies due to resignation, death, or other causes, and to fill at-large, middle-governing body, caucus, ecumenical, and liaison positions.

A considerable percentage of the nominations brought to commissioners at each General Assembly are persons who are being re-nominated to an additional term. Re-nomination to a second term on an entity is not automatic, however. The GANC determines whether or not to re-nominate a person based on a variety of factors, including an honest evaluation of the person’s contribution to the work of the entity.

Completed application forms are sent to each member of the GANC throughout the open application period. In addition, a copy of the application is sent to the specified committee or entity. Reference forms are sent to the committee member who resides in the synod of the applicant and are also made available to all GANC members when the committee meets to make nominations. All GANC members are eligible to propose names of applicants with complete files for each open at-large or middle governing body slot.

Prior to the General Assembly a brief descriptive paragraph for each nominee is made available on the GANC website, with printed copies available during the General Assembly. The report provided by the GANC to the General Assembly identifies each nomination as filling an at-large position (AL), a designated presbytery (P), or synod (S) position, or another entity linkage such as GAMC. In addition, the report includes diversity information following the name of each nominee and a chart describing the diversity composition of the entity to which the General Assembly is electing members. This enables General Assembly commissioners to immediately assess the effectiveness of the church’s mandate to give expression to the full diversity of its membership. The chart below is typical of this kind of diversity information.

| Mariana Pardo (D) (YA) | HFE | 26–35 | Milwaukee | LAK | AL NEW |

1. Gender and Ordination Category:
   - FC—Female Minister of the Word and Sacrament
   - FE—Female Elder
   - FL—Female Church Member
   - MC—Male Minister of the Word and Sacrament

   - D—Disability

4. Youth/Young Adult designations:
   - Y—Youth (GA Committee on Representation; 25 years or younger when nominated)
   - YA—Young Adult (35 years or younger when nominated)

Following the General Assembly, the GANC notifies persons who were elected, as well as notifying those who were nominated but, through the floor nomination process, were not elected. Because all applications for nomination are considered “active” for two consecutive General Assembly cycles, applicants who are eligible for nomination and election by the next General Assembly election are so advised. Persons whose application for nomination has expired are also notified. Each member of the committee, as well as the manager for General Assembly Nominations, assumes individual responsibility for communicating with his or her respective synod and the applicants who reside in the synod.

2. Ensuring Careful Nomination

The Book of Order (G-13.0111a) charges the GA Nominating Committee “to ensure careful nomination of members of such boards, agencies and committees as the General Assembly shall … designate. …” Defining “careful nomination” informs and shapes how the GANC conducts its work in order to accomplish the tasks described above and to remain faithful to the church’s mission.

First and foremost, “careful” means prayerful. The GANC is a worshipping community that continually seeks God’s guidance in all facets of its work. Each meeting’s very full agenda is punctuated by multiple times of worship and prayer throughout each day. Seeking to discern the Spirit’s leading as members consider and deliberate over each vacancy and potential nominee is a constant reality.

“Careful” means being open to the Spirit and the wisdom of the General Assembly. In addition to presenting its slate of nominees to the General Assembly, the GANC also provides an orderly and fair process for receiving nominations from the floor of the assembly, thereby modeling the committee’s openness to the Spirit as it moves through the assembly, resulting—on occasion—in the election of persons other than those presented in the GANC report.

“Careful” means paying attention—listening.

Listening to one another; listening to what the words on the application form strive to communicate; listening to the stated needs and desires of various entities; listening to both explicit and nuanced references and appraisals; listening for the voices of the non or underrepresented; listening to the voice of the General Assembly and its expressed priorities.

“Careful” means balancing multiple criteria and concerns. The GANC is committed to the vision of the church as expressed in G-3.0401b: “The Church is called … to a new openness to its own membership, by affirming itself as a community of diversity, becoming in fact as well as in faith a community of women and men of all ages, races, and conditions, and by providing for inclusiveness as a visible sign of the new humanity.” In seeking those best equipped to serve, the committee considers carefully the inclusiveness requirements outlined in the Book of Order or mandated by the General Assembly: racial ethnic, geographic, various disabilities, theological, marital status, and age diversity, as well as gender and clergy/lay balance (see Book of Order, G-4.0403). The committee is also sensitive to the needs for specific expertise expressed by the entities themselves. Nominations may be made that do not fulfill these expressed preferences or needs when the priorities of the whole church take precedence. At times the committee must weigh the perceived needs of an entity against the needs and welfare of the whole church, such as working toward theological and other diversity representations. Addressing the interests and concerns of entities and the Book of Order mandates for diversity and inclusiveness is a balancing act that the GANC takes seriously, faithfully, and carefully.

“Careful” means consulting and receiving counsel. The GANC does not work in a vacuum. Rather, the committee constantly seeks input from entities to which nominations are made, from middle governing bodies, from the General Assembly Committee on Representation, and from others. Further elaboration of these relationships is described below in the section, “B. Partners in Mission.”

B. Partners in Mission

Inherent in the GA Nominating Committee’s work and its faithfulness to the mission of the church is the necessity of being in partnership with groups that express various aspects of the church’s life. To that end the GANC is in partnership with the following groups:

1. The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR)

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is required by the Constitution to “advise the General Assembly Nominating Committee of any need for nominations in particular categories needing increased representation (G-13.0108). The GANC willingly seeks GACOR’s advice and counsel. Several times between General Assemblies, the GANC gives GACOR the opportunity to review the diversity composition of every entity as well as the applications for nomination of racial ethnic persons, youth, and persons living with disability who are in the pool of potential nominees. This process assists the GACOR to fulfill its advocacy role. The General Assembly Committee on Representation’s advice and counsel is always welcomed, reviewed, and considered as the GANC selects its nominees. In addition, the GACOR is provided the opportunity to review the committee’s slate of nominees before it is presented to the General Assembly for election. Members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee meet in joint consultation with GACOR members on an annual basis to share common interests and to strategize ways to encourage, educate, and empower persons to become fully active in the life, ministry, and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
2. Advocacy and Affinity Groups, Racial Ethnic Caucuses

Through conversation and engagement with racial ethnic caucuses, advocacy and affinity groups, and with the support and assistance of GACOR, the GANC constantly strives to increase the number of racial ethnic persons, persons with disabilities, and persons with differing theological perspective in its pool of applicants.

3. Middle Governing Bodies

Members of the GANC are encouraged to relate actively to middle governing bodies, by contacting the nominating committee of the synod in which the members reside and making themselves available to meet at least biennially with the appropriate synod body in order to review the nomination process. The governing body of every applicant for nomination is requested to provide the GANC with a requisite appraisal of the potential nominee. The GANC takes these appraisals seriously as it assesses suitability for service. For vacancies on entities that require representation from specific synods or presbyteries, the GANC depends largely (although not exclusively) upon middle governing bodies to propose several names from which the GANC will select one to nominate. Such partnership requires mutual honesty, trust, and confidentiality.

4. Entities to Which the GANC Makes Nominations

The GANC sends copies of every application form to the entity for which the applicant wishes to be considered. In addition, every entity is assigned a liaison member of GANC and is invited to be in contact directly with its liaison so that the nominating process can be explained and the GANC member can learn firsthand of the skills and expertise needed. The committee also invites all General Assembly entities to submit a written report biennially concerning the specific needs of the entity regarding its membership.

The following are typical samplings from the advice and counsel letters received from various entities:

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on proposed nominees for election to membership on the [name removed to respect confidentiality] … A review of members continuing to serve in 2010 and 2012 revealed a number of skills and experiences needed in new members: law, finance, fund development, ecumenical experience, ministry experience with youth and older adults [etc.] … After careful review of the proposed nominees …, we believe the following persons will best fit [our] needs…

As we assess it, [name removed to respect confidentiality]… will need new members that have collective skills and/or experience in middle governing body work … ecumenical background and interest, legal skills … We also see it as an opportunity to get a broader age range on the committee … Thank you for your consideration.

Thank you for the opportunity to share with the GANC both the needs of the [name removed to respect confidentiality] … and recommendations for persons whom [we] believe will help to strengthen our work.

While the GANC takes seriously such advice and counsel, the committee is not bound by any specific nominee recommendations or requests. As previously stated, there are times when the committee must carefully weigh the desires of an entity against other competing interests or requirements. Re-nominations to a second, four-year term are not made automatically, but depend to a significant degree upon an evaluation instrument completed by the entity on which the member serves.

C. Encouraging Others to Respond to Their Call to Service

The GA Nominating Committee works continuously to deepen and widen the pool of persons interested in and capable of serving General Assembly entities. Acquiring applicants with greater knowledge, skills, and experience relevant to the work of the various entities to which nominations are made will deepen the pool. Increasing the number of applications, especially from those who represent the broad diversity of individuals in our church, will widen the pool. Although the GANC does not specifically recruit individuals for vacant positions, it strives to inform Presbyterians at all levels of the church of the many and diverse opportunities for service, and makes every effort to encourage those wishing to be considered for service to engage in the nomination process.

- The GANC website (www.pcusa.org/nominations) provides the following:
  - information on the nominating process;
  - a list of positions open for election;
  - an online application that is easy to use, safe, secure, and relatively quick;
  - a description and purpose of each entity to which the committee makes nominations, along with skills and expertise needed, and anticipated time requirements;
  - a place to request a paper or electronic form for those unable to access application forms via the web.
III. Challenges Facing the GANC

“God called David to be king even though he was Jesse’s youngest son.
So Samuel anointed David and he rose up to be a great king.”

Time demands and needed support: Service on the various entities of the General Assembly all require time—time that may amount to as much as several weeks a year just for meetings. For certain entities, many additional hours of work between meetings are also required. For some persons it may mean forfeiting vacation or family time. Young adults or persons new to a job, especially, may find it more difficult to take leave from their employment than older, more established employees. Time away from employment may incur loss of wages. In almost every case, national travel is involved, which can be costly in additional time spent away from home. Travel for persons with certain disabling conditions may be especially challenging. The need or cost for childcare or other dependent care may be a significant obstacle to service or even to applying.

Diversity and other considerations: The GANC may face potential challenges when ensuring that specific entity requirements are met such as ordination status, geographic location of the person serving, gender balance, theological perspective, racial or ethnic representation, or other. For some members of the denomination, language or cultural barriers may keep them from applying for service. Methods of meeting, time requirements, and child support needs (above) often discourage young adults from applying for service. Although the Book of Order requires it and the church is committed to it, there is no way to easily identify theological diversity. There are no standard definitions to which everyone could or would agree. As one applicant put it, “I consider myself to be biblically and theologically conservative, but socially progressive from a faith perspective.” Nominating persons with disabilities can, likewise, be challenging because disabling conditions recognized by the federal Disabilities Act may not be considered a disability by one living with the condition. Consequently, the “disability” box on the application form may go unchecked. Or, for a variety of reasons, other applicants may intentionally choose not to identify their disability.

Re-nomination and changing patterns of volunteerism: Two very different and opposing norms regarding length of service present challenges to the GANC’s work. Because it is generally expected that people who have been elected once to a committee will be re-nominated for an additional term, a committee will frequently recommend a re-nomination, even if the committee’s needs have changed or the member is no longer contributing positively to its work. Unfortunately, when the recommendation involves such a person, the work of the committee may suffer. Furthermore, when many people serve multiple terms, the opportunity for new persons to offer their gifts to the church through the nomination process is diminished. On the other hand, the committee has also noted significantly changing patterns of volunteerism. While people once welcomed the idea of being on a committee for an extended period of time, this is not the case for many people today.
They prefer making commitments to short-term assignments that are not available on the entities to which the GANC nominates. Ordinarily, terms are at least four-years long.

- Engaging the nominations process: Many members of the denomination do not know about committees for which they may have expertise and interest. Others who are aware of opportunities well-suited to their gifts and skills simply do not hear or experience God’s call to service. Oftentimes people are more interested in the “big name” committees and less interested in the less prestigious committees. Some may also be unaware of how the process for nomination works, and some just don’t have the patience to work through the process. Some pastors and presbyteries prefer to retain their best talented pool of people and, consequently, do not encourage them to apply for service at the General Assembly level.

- Technology: Although we live in an age of electronic communication, and many of the church’s entities conduct much of their work electronically, we still live in a betwixt-and-between world where not everyone has access to the internet or has the computer skills to feel comfortable working electronically.

- Unmet expectations: The GANC often receives far more applications for a particular committee or agency than there are vacancies to be filled. Many middle governing bodies expect that they will have a turn being represented on various GA entities in a fairly short period of time. However, given that there are almost 200 middle governing bodies, a longer time period is often required. The particular gifts, skills, and experience of many applicants in the GANC pool of potential nominees simply do not match the needs of the entity on which they are seeking service. Failure to be nominated or disappointment with committee experience can and sometimes does lead to misunderstanding, distrust, discontent, and even cynicism about the nominating process.

- Floor nominations: While the GANC fully supports the ability of the General Assembly to make GA commissioner nominations from the floor, experience shows that sometimes these nominations are not carefully and thoughtfully made. Therefore, they have the potential of being an obstacle to the well-being of the affected entities. Some floor nominees have been recruited on very short notice and have not fully understood the work of the committee or agency. Consequently, if they are elected they are unable to offer what is needed. Some floor nominees have not been given the opportunity to consider carefully the scope of the commitment that is required, and find that they are unable to meet the time and energy demands. Some persons are nominated because a particular group within the church feels disenfranchised or that their voices have not been heard and they feel the nominating slate is not addressing that need. More often than not these new members do not complete a full term of service, thus limiting personal and committee effectiveness.

There are many opportunities for service and people willing to respond. Yet these and other challenges remain. Some obstacles are beyond the power of the GANC to overcome, but the committee continues to work within these realities to present those persons who, in its judgment, are called by God for particular service at a particular time in the life of the church.

> God said, “Go down, Moses, and tell Pharaoh to let my people go.”

> Moses said, “No, Lord, not me. I’m a terrible speaker.”

> God said, “Aaron your brother will speak for you.”

> So Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt and into freedom.

IV. Evidence of Effectiveness

> “Well done, good and trustworthy servant; you have been trustworthy in a few things, I will put you in charge of many things…” (Mt. 25:23; RSV).

Just as Jesus judged the servants who had invested their talents wisely so as to multiply their worth, so the GANC is judged on how effective it has been in fulfilling its constitutional and General Assembly mandates, thereby enriching and expanding the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A).

There are several criteria by which the evidence of effectiveness may be evaluated.

A. Statistical Information

Hans Rosling, a Swedish professor of International Health, gave an address, “How to Unveil the Beauty of Statistics.” He told his audience that he was going to show them something very beautiful. Rosling then projected the score of Chopin’s Nocturne on a screen. He went on to say, “But… few people will appreciate it if I only show the notes. Most of us need to listen to the music to understand how beautiful it is. But often that’s how we present statistics; we show the notes and we don’t play the music. “Don’t just show the notes, play the music!” Technology offers a variety of ways to display statistical information, to bring the data to life.
1. Diversity of Nominees

Statistics cannot adequately express the beautiful, rich diversity of members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Neither can the church’s commitment to inclusivity be adequately displayed by statistical categories of persons serving on the various entities of the church. We only hear the music when the broad spectrum represented on the agencies, boards, committees, commission, and councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) engage in mission and ministry. The GA Nominating Committee takes care to make nominations that are consistent with the vision for inclusivity “as a visible sign of the new humanity” (G-3.0401b). Statistics of the last three General Assembly elections sing a melody of effectiveness.

2. Entity Membership 2004–2010 General Assemblies

   a. Racial Ethnic Diversity

   The Book of Order calls us to live in a church where persons of all racial ethnic groups are guaranteed participation and representation in the decision-making of the church. To this end, statistical goals are assigned to some entities, i.e. 20 percent of the membership of the General Assembly Mission Council must be racial ethnic persons, while the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People must be composed of no less than 51 percent racial ethnic members, and the General Assembly Committee on Representation must be no less than 56 percent members of color.

   With the election of persons at the 2004, 2006, 2008 General Assemblies, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s entities were composed of 30.5 percent, 35.5 percent, and 35.4 percent racial ethnic members respectively. The largest numbers of racial ethnic members were African American, followed by Asian American members, and persons of Hispanic/Latina/Latino heritage. Native American Presbyterian and those of Middle Eastern descent are represented by lower percentages.

   The GANC will continue to work with the General Assembly Committee on Representation, the racial ethnic caucuses, and racial ethnic leaders to identify persons of color for service on General Assembly level committees. We seek to respond to the call for racial ethnic church growth in the membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), understanding that increasing the number of people of color serving in elected service is an important witness to our commitment to enhance the rich diversity of our church.

   b. Age Diversity

   The largest numbers of persons serving are not of retirement age. The largest group is in the 56–65 age range, followed by the 46–55 age category, and then those 66 years old and older. Less than fifteen percent of members fall into the 36–45 age group; half as many in the 26–35 group. Not surprisingly, only 5–10 persons 25 years old and under have served during the periods 2004, 2006, and 2008.

   In conversation with seminaries, and presence at Youth Triennium, young pastor events, and other gatherings of younger persons, the GANC continues to encourage the participation of youth and young adults. Their voices are critical to effective decision-making in the church. However, the current methods of meetings, meeting patterns, childcare/dependent policies, terms of service, etc. often discourage persons under age forty-five from applying for service.

   c. Persons Living with Disabilities

   For the years 2004, 2006 and 2008, only five persons serving on GA entities identified themselves as persons living with disabilities—a minuscule number. While the GANC is aware of the many challenges it faces in increasing this number, it remains committed to continued work with the General Assembly Committee on Representation and other appropriate bodies to increase the number of persons living with disabilities serving on General Assembly entities.

   d. Ministers of the Word and Sacrament and Church Members

   The Book of Order mandates that consideration should “be given to the nomination of equal numbers of ministers (both men and women), laymen, and laywomen.” During 2004, 2006, and 2008, ministers of the Word and Sacrament made up 37, 40, and 44 percent of entity membership with twice as many men as women. Church members, female and male, made up the difference in nearly even numbers. Because ministers of the Word and Sacrament submit applications for nomination in larger numbers than do elders and church members, the pool of ministers is broader than the pool of elders and church members. Consequently it is more difficult to achieve the directed one-third, one-third, one-third division of membership outlined in the Book of Order.

   e. Geographic Diversity

   In order to provide greater inclusiveness in the governance of the church, the Book of Order provides that persons from diverse geographical areas shall be guaranteed participation and access to representation in the church’s decision-making. The GA nominations process includes an analysis of the number of persons currently serving on General Assembly entities, the number of open positions, and the number of Presbyterians in each synod. Together with a rotation system for presbytery representation, this analysis provides a method for ensuring the equitable geographic distribution of applicants for service on all GA level entities.

3. Resignations and Vacancies Filled in Between General Assemblies

   The Organization for Mission outlines procedures for filling vacancies created when persons can no longer serve in positions to which they were elected or appointed. “Any vacancy in a position for which the General Assembly Nominating Committee makes nominations may be filled until the next succeeding General Assembly by appointment of the Moderator of the General Assembly upon advice by the nominating committee that the committee has decided to present the name of the appointee to the next session of the General Assembly as its nominee for the position” (Manual, 2010, p. 12, Organization for Mission, IV.C.1.h.).

   During the period of 2004–2008, forty-one persons resigned from service. Most persons resigned for personal reasons, including health concerns and family or work responsibilities.

B. Responses to Referrals and GA Actions

   During the period covered by this review, the GA Nominating Committee responded thoughtfully to actions of the General Assembly, helping to ensure careful nominations.

1. Biennial Assemblies

   Eight years ago, the General Assembly voted to move from annual to biennial assemblies beginning with the 217th General Assembly (2006).¹ This action required GANC to realign and convert terms for seats on almost thirty entities. The General Assembly provided for a limited number of adjustments and extensions for the terms of persons serving on General Assembly entities.²

   The GANC engaged in two years of study, consultation, and negotiation with General Assembly entities. As a result of this work, the GA Nominating Committee brought to the 216th General Assembly (2004) a reconfiguration of the classes for all persons currently serving on a General Assembly entity to which it made nominations.³ All this was done while the GANC strove to ensure that Book of Order mandates for diversity and balance were met while also maintaining continuity and history. As entities adjusted to the new configuration, the need for minor adjustments was recognized and forwarded to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

2. New Structure for General Assembly Council (Now General Assembly Mission Council)

   The GANC consulted with the General Assembly Council’s Governance Task Force in 2005 as it prepared to propose a new structure for the council. The GANC was given latitude by the 216th General Assembly (2004) to bypass the constitutional requirements for membership on the GAC (G-13.0202) during the transition “with the goal of being in compliance after the 218th General Assembly (2008).”⁴ The GANC worked swiftly to bring to the 218th General Assembly (2008) a slate of nominees for the General Assembly Council that complied with G-13.0202.

3. Form of Government Task Force

   A task force was created by the 216th General Assembly (2004) to undertake a revision of the Form of Government.⁵ The assembly directed that Moderators of the 215th, 216th, and 217th General Assemblies (2003, 2004, 2006) to consult with the GA Nominating Committee as they appointed the FOG Task Force. The GANC provided the Moderators with names of potential candidates, and the moderator of the GANC met with the Moderators via conference call as they considered appointments to the task force.

4. Towards Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities

   “Living Into the Body of Christ: Towards Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities,” a policy paper approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006), instructed the General Assembly Nominating Committee to encourage middle governing bodies to increase the percentage of qualified persons living with disabilities serving on General Assembly level committees by 1 percent per year through the year 2016.⁶ As members of the GANC consult with synod and presbytery nominating committees and committees on representation they encourage those groups to identify persons living with disabilities and to support them for service at the General Assembly level.

5. Theological Diversity

   The 217th General Assembly (2006) referred to the GA Nominating Committee the “desirability of theological diversity in the membership composition” of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.⁷ The committee responded to the 218th General Assembly (2008) that determining the “different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition” (G-4.0403) of applicants is difficult but that the GANC, relying on a close reading of the application forms and appraisals, had paid particular attention to theological diversity in its nominations and will continue to monitor the theological diversity of the advocacy committee’s membership. The GANC has re-written the Application for Nomination form so that applicants have the opportunity to express more explicitly their biblical, theological, and social perspectives.

C. Survey Results—Learnings

As part of its self-evaluation, the GANC conducted an informal survey of randomly selected elected members, middle governing body executives and stated clerks, and commissioners to the previous three General Assemblies. The survey was designed to provide the GA Nominating Committee with insight into the ways persons experience the General Assembly nominations process. The following results provide the GANC with significant information as it reviews its work:

1. Elected Members Currently or Formerly Serving

More than 90 percent of staff and elected leadership of the entities to which the GANC makes nominations indicated that they understand the GA nominations process. However, only 75 percent of these leaders think their membership understand it.

More than 75 percent of those responding to the survey consulted with and provided advice and counsel to the GA Nominating Committee before the election process. Yet only 66 percent were confident that the GANC used this advice and counsel in its discernment process. The GANC will explain more clearly the ways in which entity advice and counsel is a factor in the committee’s discernment process.

Sixty percent of entities have a process for encouraging persons to apply for service. The GANC will continue to encourage entities to take advantage of this partnership possibility.

When staff and elected leadership were asked if the skills of elected persons matched the needs of the entity almost 25 percent said “no.” However, when surveying members currently serving or formerly serving on entities, all the respondents answered that their skills matched very well or well. The GANC will explore this discrepancy.

The GANC will explore this discrepancy.

Most persons became aware of a vacancy on agencies, boards, committees, commissions, and councils through the encouragement of people in leadership positions rather than through print or electronic media. The GANC presence at church conferences and events and engagement with other groups and leaders continues to be a priority.

Slightly more than 33 percent of respondents spend more than twenty days a year serving on their entity. While most respondents indicated that the time given to service is what they expected, a significant minority indicated that the time exceeded their expectations. The GANC will stress to applicants the importance of reading the entity description and will encourage entities to provide complete descriptions of their work, including the time requirements.

The GANC asked persons to note any obstacles to their service. Comments included:
   a. Some congregations are not supportive of their pastor’s service.
   b. Travel requirements, time requirements, and meeting patterns are burdensome.
   c. Lack of dependent care.
   d. Inadequate orientation for service.
   e. Youth/young adult and persons of color sometimes feel marginalized.

This data support the challenges identified in “III. Challenges Facing the GANC.” The GANC hopes that previously approved policies that support youth and young adults, persons with childcare and other dependent needs, pastors, and church members as they seek to participate more fully in the church’s decision-making will be implemented more broadly across the church. The GANC continues to encourage entities to have more thorough orientation.

2. Middle Governing Body Leadership

More than ninety percent of middle governing body leadership knows and understands the GANC’s mandate, responsibilities, and process. However, only fifty percent knew who the GANC member from their synod was. About 25 percent feel that information about the process is not effectively disseminated. The GANC will increase its direct contact with presbytery and synod executives and stated clerks sharing information about the process and upcoming vacancies.

3. General Assembly Commissioners

Eighty percent of commissioners did not feel called to service on a GA level entity after serving as a General Assembly commissioner.
GANC Members

While the work of the GA Nominating Committee is not complicated it, is multifaceted and multilayered, and so the learning curve may be steep. Members of the GANC must know the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its polity, understand Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) structure, and value diversity. In addition, members must work collegially, honor confidentiality, and possess strong organizational communication and computer skills.

All current and former GANC members responding to the survey said that the orientation they received prepared them for participation in the committee’s work. One respondent said, “I think that the orientation has helped as best as it can to prepare me to make nominations. It’s a somewhat confusing process the first time around and, as with many things in life, the only real way to learn it well is to actually go through it.”

All former and current GANC members agreed that the committee had built trust and community as it accomplished its work. The GANC and staff work hard to create an environment where its members—persons of different racial and ethnic backgrounds, ages, physically abilities, marital condition, and theological perspectives—can carefully and faithfully discern God’s call to persons to service on GA level entities.

The majority of GANC members believe that adequate time is available for receiving and reviewing applications and reference materials, and for reviewing committee descriptions and needs, membership and demographic information, etc. All felt that the time allotted for notifying nominees and communicating their responses to other members and staff was adequate. While the majority of members felt that the two minute time limit on internal GANC nomination speeches was adequate, one-third thought that faithful discernment required more time for presentation of persons’ qualifications. One possibility for addressing this issue may be to prepare members so they can craft nomination speeches ahead of the meeting. This deserves further exploration and the GANC leadership and staff will follow up accordingly.

The GANC members seem comfortable with the nomination process. Before the church moved to biennial assemblies, members had the opportunity to propose nominations in five nominating cycles. This provided the opportunity both to develop skills and have multiple nomination cycles to employ those skills. The GANC members now make nominations in only three nomination cycles. Moreover, the GANC used to meet three times a year but now meets only once a year due to budget reductions. Members cited committee dynamics, camaraderie, and trust as important components in the nominations process. It takes extra energy and creativity to ensure that these components are not lost as the number of face-to-face meetings is reduced. Although they felt that electronic meetings and conference calls were adequate supplements for some GANC business, respondents were clear that face-to-face meetings were more conducive to the practice of discernment.

The majority of GANC members and former members expressed appreciation for the helpful ways in which the staff prepared for and supported the committee’s work and its members. When questioned, members acknowledged both the ways in which their participation had contributed to the General Assembly nominations process and the ways in which the committee process and their own participation could be enhanced. Several members commented that their skills were helpful in refining the GA nominations process. One member mentioned the pressure of having to nominate to more than thirty entities, and wondered if the number of entities to which the GANC nominates could be reduced. Another member yearned for a greater number of applicants that would fit all categories. Every GANC member, current and former, responded “Yes” to the question “Has your faith and commitment to the mission of the PC(USA) been strengthened by your participation.”

Changes to the Process

The General Assembly nominations process is just that—a process. It exists to help manage a multifaceted system of soliciting persons for service, identifying and cataloguing entity membership and needs, and matching the gifts of applicants and entities for service to the larger church. Without a clear process to guide and inform persons wishing to serve and those making decisions about who serves, identifying leadership in the church would be difficult and confusing for everyone. The GANC regularly reviews its processes, procedures, and practices. It is always open to suggestions from its own membership, members of other entities, and other concerned persons.

During the past six years improvements to the nominations process included:

- changes to the Application for Nomination form including updating and refining the online application process,
- expanded biographical information on nominees brought to the General Assembly,
- a procedure for notifying persons who have not been nominated in the current cycle,
- a new commissioner nomination procedure at General Assembly,
Experience with biennial General Assemblies, consultations with General Assembly agencies, and the GANC self-study have led to some recommendations for change in the General Assembly nominations process. These are summarized below. The full text of these recommendations can be found in Items 03-14, 03-15, and 05-05.

1. Amendments to G-13.0111

   a. The Book of Order stipulates that the GA Nominating Committee give consideration to the nomination of equal numbers of ministers (both men and women), laymen, and laywomen. The GA Nominating Committee is recommending a return to traditional Presbyterian practice of one-half ministers and one-half church members, both women and men.

   b. The GA Nominating Committee is also recommending that the membership for Book of Order committees and commissions be amended to require that these entities be composed of equal number of ministers and elders, both women and men.

2. Amendment to the Organization for Mission

   The GA Nominating Committee has proposed to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly that it consider an amendment to the Organization for Mission that will clarify the amount of time persons completing service on a GA entity must wait before they are eligible again for nomination for service.

3. Amendment to the Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

   The GA Nominating Committee has proposed to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly that it consider an amendment to the Standing Rules which would provide that the Moderator of the General Assembly appoint members of special committees in collaboration with the General Assembly Nominating Committee.

A. Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities: Strengthening Presbyterian Social Witness

   Social witness is part of what it means for the church to be “salt” and “light” in the world today. Coming from Jesus’ words in Mt. 5:13–14, the images of Salt & Light also give name to the ACSWP on-line newsletter. They undergird the committee’s faithfulness to its charge:

   The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), as a servant of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), develops, interprets, and monitors policies that encourage and challenge the Church and society to reflect and act in faithful response to God’s call to do justice. (Mission Statement, approved October 2002 in El Paso, Texas)

   This brief narrative summarizes the committee’s responsibilities, its procedures and personnel, its accomplishments and activities.

   In every age, the Spirit calls on the church to discern afresh God’s redemptive purpose in our particular time and place in history. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s work is to help the church discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in relation to contemporary society. In this work, the ACSWP and its task forces draw upon a great wealth of resources:

- the voices of the biblical text;
- the wisdom of theological discourse;
- the guidance of the Reformed confessions;
- the tradition of past policy statements;
- the insights of sociopolitical disciplines;
- the advice of members and all governing bodies of the church;
- the insights of people who are poor, victims of existing policies, and those who have not had a voice in councils of the church; and

Social witness can occur at many different points: in a church session, in a presbytery, in an advocacy group, in the participation of Christians in mission, in a meeting of the ecumenical church, in an individual Christian’s brave refusal to “go along” with injustice.

For Presbyterians, however, decisions about the church’s social witness are made by persons elected to serve in governing bodies (session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly). As councils of the church meet, the elected persons are commissioned “… not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ …” (Book of Order, G-4.0301d). The advisory committee’s structure and function go back to 1936 when “consecrated” and justice-oriented persons from the Boards of Christian Education and National Missions were elected to a Social Education and Action Committee.

In providing service and resources to meet the needs of congregations, middle governing bodies, and the General Assembly, ACSWP members find guidance in the mission statement quoted above. Theologically grounded ethical reflection is part of the salt and light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The ACSWP engages with the grassroots in assisting the General Assembly to discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in a world that remains too grim for too many. At the same time, the committee’s membership contains persons with expertise in theology, social ethics, and various other disciplines, more than half of whom hold advanced degrees.

Making a personal social witness begins with very individual ways of growing and developing as a Christian—prayerfully studying the Scriptures, being inspired by Jesus, the prophets, and courageous stands of the church, gaining insight from past ethical witness, connecting one’s faith with others in the Christian community, and then being faithful in the world beyond the church. The ACSWP seeks to be a partner in the ministry of reconciliation, for “each member [who] is the church in the world …” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.38).

The churchwide work of the ACSWP is based on ethical guidance from the Scriptures, The Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order. The 1993 General Assembly policy statement, Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness (OGA-93-019), provides extensive documentation of key biblical passages and is a useful document in congregational interpretation of the ACSWP and its mission.

All of those biblical texts have a common theme. The Gospel says that to confess Jesus Christ as Lord is to believe that God can and has overcome the powers of sin in the world. Christians do not work alone, but join the Lord Jesus Christ who is already at work in our world. John Calvin said that social concern, expressed by action on behalf of our neighbors, is a central part of the faith. Our historic confessions, the work of theologians, and the actions of 218 General Assemblies have reaffirmed that message. Our faithfulness as Reformed Christians means action.

This year, the ACSWP also performed a self-study of its work and participated in a three-committee review with the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). We encourage the interested reader to look at the self-study, which includes both qualitative and quantitative analysis. These reviews led to much good discussion and some revision of the structure of ACSWP’s subcommittees and procedures, especially in light of the new potential of the internet and fiscal realities. The committee changed a Personnel and Budget subcommittee into one focused on tracking study teams and report preparation, and designated the Coordinating Committee to be the Advice and Counsel subcommittee for the biennial General Assembly. An Interpretation and Communication subcommittee continues, but a new subcommittee on projects such as curriculum development and consultations was developed.

Since the 218th General Assembly (2008), the committee met at Ghost Ranch, New Mexico; Detroit, Michigan; Berkeley, California; Washington, D.C.; Phoenix, Arizona; and Louisville, Kentucky. At each place, the committee met with representatives of the presbyteries and organizations and congregations doing vital forms of social witness, including immigrants’ rights networks, environmental theology programs, Native American ministries, urban church projects, programs to end gun violence, peacemaking and human rights networks, etc. In Detroit, this led to a social involvement report bringing to that de-industrialized context some of the analysis from the 2008 report on the Post-Katrina Gulf Coast, Struck Down, But Not Destroyed.

Procedures and Personnel

In support of the work of the assembly, the ACSWP is given direct access to the assembly as it meets biennially. Between sessions of the assembly, the ACSWP also assists the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), and other agencies of the church as their work involves the development and interpretation of social witness policy.

The committee carries out its responsibilities in five major ways. They are the

1. development and recommendation of new social witness and policy for approval by the General Assembly;
2. interpretation and communication of the General Assembly’s social witness and policy, both to the church and the world at large;
3. provision of advice and counsel to the entities and governing bodies of the church on matters of social witness policy when developments merit social-ethical attention;
4. provision of advice and counsel to the General Assembly when it meets as a governing body (in oral and memorandum form); and
5. monitoring of peace and justice concerns per mandates from the General Assembly.

The ACSWP develops and recommends new social witness and policies primarily in response to referrals from the General Assembly (GA) and its entities, and in a manner consistent with the Manual of the General Assembly, “On Forming Social Policy.” This policy development requires depth of theological reflection, breadth of input, and diversity of participation. Before a policy statement is approved, extensive consultation is mandated at all stages of development. Thus, the committee’s work is connected to the concerns of Presbyterians gathered in worshiping and serving communities across the land.

The committee’s Advice and Counsel group carries out the task of providing advice and counsel at the meeting of the General Assembly (GA). This group of elected committee members, together with other staff and resource persons from several General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and Office of the General Assembly (OGA) entities, advises commissioners in assembly committees and other entities about social policies applicable to issues before the assembly. It may also comment on the need or direction for future social policy. Advice and counsel is provided throughout the meeting, through “Advice and Counsel Memoranda,” by oral testimony before assembly committees, and informally. The ACSWP chair or a co-chairperson is a corresponding member to both the GA and GAMC. This chair or co-chairperson can offer advice and counsel if called upon in these meetings. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) consists of twelve members, nine of whom are at-large members elected by the General Assembly from the whole church and three who are General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) members. The members are: Gloria Albrecht (co-chair), Detroit, Michigan; Donna C. Bradley, Tucson, Arizona; Dianne L. Briscoe, Denver, Colorado; David Cortes-Fuentes, Claremont, California; Christine M. Darden, Hampton, Virginia; Jean Demmler, Denver, Colorado; Marsha Fowler, Altadena, California; Esperanza Guajardo, San Antonio, Texas; Ronald J. Kernaghan (co-chair), Pasadena, California; John Knapp, Birmingham, Alabama; William Saint, Fairfax, Virginia; and Linda D. Scholl, Memphis, Tennessee. In the fall of 2008, Michael Castronis, a member appointed by the former General Assembly Council (GAC) resigned from the committee. The GAC appointed Linda Scholl to fill this vacated position. On September 11, 2009, Lewis S. Mudge, an at-large member from Berkeley, California, died. The Moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008) appointed David Cortés-Fuentes to fill the position vacated by Dr. Mudge’s sudden death. Staffing for the committee includes Christian T. Iosso, coordinator; Belinda M. Curry, associate; and Bonnie M. Hoff, senior administrative assistant.

2. Accomplishments

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) members and staff make themselves available for interpretive events as requested and as time allows. Such events included preaching at the Texas Conference of Churches, San Antonio’s Beacon Hill Presbyterian Church, and the Swarthmore (Pa.) Presbyterian Church. The committee welcomes inquiries through its office in Louisville. All governing bodies, churches, and members are encouraged to use the “Presbyterian Social Witness Policy Compilation,” which contains the core of the assemblies’ social policy statements since 1946. It is revised regularly to meet the needs of the church and can be downloaded from the worldwide web at (www.pcusa.org/acswp).

The ACSWP holds a stated meeting following each General Assembly to discern and prioritize its work; periodically between the assemblies, to review progress on papers and projects; and in January before an assembly, to edit and approve final drafts for submission to the assembly. This year the committee has prepared the following reports to strengthen current social witness policies.

- Gun Violence and Gospel Values: Mobilizing to Respond to God’s Call;
- Becoming an HIV and AIDS Competent Church: Prophetic Witness and Compassionate Action;
- Living Through Economic Crisis: The Church’s Witness in Troubled Times (A Social Involvement Report);
- Loving Our Neighbors: For Equity and Quality in Public Education (K–12);
- Neither Poverty nor Riches: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church (Study);
- Human Rights Update (focus on Immigrant Detention, Human Trafficking, and Torture);
- ACSWP Self-Study Report for the 219th General Assembly (2010).

In preparing this year’s General Assembly reports, ACSWP took into consideration the comments and reflections shared by individual Presbyterians and adult education classes, General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) program ministry areas, and other bodies within our church.

The ACSWP continues to explore ways to use the new web technologies to enhance the communal conversation and consensus-building that strengthens our shared social witness. The committee revised the resource section of its website in the fall of 2009. In addition, the committee revised the look of its e-list letter.

From 2008–2009, the committee assisted the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) in the publication of the following reports: Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness (PDS #02-052-09-003), From Homelessness to Hope: Constructing Just, Sustainable Communities for All God’s People (PDS #02-052-09-002), God’s Work in Women’s Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation (PDS #02-052-08-004), Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform (PDS #02-052-08-003), The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming (PDS #02-052-09-001). These resources can be downloaded at http://www.pcusa.org/oga/publications or http://www.pcusa.org/acswp/resources.htm. The committee developed Connecting to the Creed—a guide for understanding and applying the centennial ecumenical Social Creed (PDS #02-052-09-004). Creative posters and educational materials were developed in the Presbytery of Hudson River, and Korean and Spanish versions were developed. Conferences and presentations on the Social Creed have occurred in Texas, Arizona, New York, and Ohio. We lift up especially the fine discussion series and videotapes of the Pinnacle Presbyterian Church in the Presbytery of Grand Canyon (Phoenix area). The National Council of Churches has also lifted up the Social Creed.

The ACSWP has also participated in the primarily evangelical theological dialogue group, Envision, following its co-sponsorship of Envision 08 at Princeton Seminary and Princeton University. Contact and consultation with a variety of evangelical and ecumenical mission groups occurred in Thailand in connection with work on the issue of human trafficking. Articles by ACSWP staff have been published in the Presbyterian Outlook, Theology Today, Presbyterians Today, the Mission Yearbook, Horizons, as well as in the publications of entities of the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council.

Since the last General Assembly biennial meeting, ACSWP co-sponsored two events at the Stony Point Center, Stony Point, New York. In the fall of 2008, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program (PPP), the Presbyterian United Nations Office (PUNO), the Presbyterian Peacemaking Fellowship (PPF), the Stony Point Center, and ACSWP sponsored a peacemaking colloquium on “Gun Violence and Gospel Values.” Comments and reflections from this event were recorded and shared with the members of ACSWP’s Gun Violence Work Group. Over the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday weekend 2010, ACSWP co-hosted with the Stony Point Center a colloquium on Accra and Belhar Confessions. That event was co-sponsored by the Covenanting for Justice working group of North America, bringing together representatives from most Reformed churches in Canada and the United States along with several representatives from the Caribbean Reformed family.

The ACSWP works collaboratively with the six mission and ministry areas of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), other entities of the GAMC, and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). The ACSWP has liaisons from the Compassion Peace and Justice ministry area, and from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC). When possible, the committee spends time with local church members, relevant presbytery committees, and with ecumenical contacts during its stated meetings.

Last year, ACSWP made available 150 complimentary copies of Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness to the participants at the Pathways to Promise: Interfaith Ministries & Mental Illness 2009 Faith-Based National Summit held in Belleville, Illinois, September 28–October 1, 2009. Mental illness concerns were the major health justice topic addressed at this event. Three hundred complimentary copies of this policy statement were distributed to the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA). And a complimentary copy of this policy resource was distributed to each PC(USA) congregation, presbytery, synod, and theological institution, as well as the institutions in covenant relationship with the PC(USA). The committee assists in organizing an annual gathering of the Theological Educators for Presbyterian Social Witness (TEPSW). This group is composed primarily of Christian ethicists currently or formerly serving in seminaries and other educational institutions related to and/or in covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Since the last General Assembly, the committee assisted with two such gatherings. In the fall of 2008, the TEPSW met at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary (LPTS), Louisville, Kentucky. The fall 2009 meeting was held at McCormick Theological Seminary (MTS), Chicago, Illinois. Columbia Theological Seminary (CTS), Decatur, Georgia, is the location for the 2010 gathering.

The ACSWP will focus on emerging social witness issues and future priorities at its summer 2010 stated meeting. Other responses by the committee to General Assembly (GA) work may be found in the responses to referrals section of the reports to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

B. General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations Agency Summary

1. Purpose

The purpose of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) is to give a high profile to the vision of the ecumenical involvement and work as central to the gospel and key to the life of the church; plan and coordinate, in consultation with the agencies and governing bodies of the church, the involvement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in ecumenical relations and work; connect the ecumenical efforts of all governing body levels of the church; provide a common point for all ecumenical efforts connecting us with those outside our church; keep a unity of vision that includes the ecclesiastical, programmatic, ecumenical, and denominational parts of our ministries and commitments; articulate the Reformed and Presbyterian identity in the midst of our ecumenical commitments; promote awareness of the role of the unity of all humankind in the search for the unity of the church; and promote the unity of the church as an exhibition of the kingdom of God to the world.

The committee is composed of sixteen members, elected by the General Assembly, ecumenical members, the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council, and other ex-officio members.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations held its fall regular meeting on October 9–11, 2008, at the Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Louisville, Kentucky. The meeting was called to order with prayer and brief introductions. The following are highlights of the meeting:

a. Fall 2008 Meeting

The GACER meeting began its work in worship lead by Krystin Granberg.

Worship was followed by an educational presentation by Robina Winbush. She reviewed the history and foundations of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations, including information regarding the mandate for the committee and changes in the committee’s mandate throughout the years. As part of this educational session, Krystin Granberg and Carlos Malavé presented a PowerPoint overview of the actions of the 218th General Assembly (2008).

On this first day, the Executive Committee of GACER introduced the plan of action for the following two years.

As is the practice of the GACER, the committee dedicated a section for theological reflection. Robina Winbush introduced the Reverend Aimee Moiso, Santa Clara University Campus Ministries and member of GACER, and Dr. Caudio Carvalhaes, assistant professor of Worship and Preaching at Louisville Theological Seminary. Each of them presented a theological reflection on the Ecumenical Policy Statement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), “From Conception to Reception.” Following the theological reflections, the committee engaged in conversation with the presenters.

The GACER heard from the recently elected Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, Gradye Parsons, regarding what his views are on the life and hope of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Recommendations for Schedule of Work was approved by the committee. The recommendation included a proposal that the committee have one meeting in 2009 in Geneva. The location of this meeting would provide the opportunity for the educational formation of the committee members and also access to the staff of the ecumenical organizations present in Geneva. Because of this decision, the GACER decided to only hold two face-to-face meetings during this two year period, with the understanding that subcommittees and the executive committee would be committed to work between meetings through conference calls and emails.

b. Other GACER Related Activities, Reports, and Actions

1. The GACER conducted, as required by previous General Assembly actions, a review of the PC(USA) relationship with WARC-CANAAC, which is being presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The GACER approved the following members of the review committee: Jerrod Belton Lowry, chair; Ruy Costa; Eileen Lindner; Jeanne Choy Tate; and Catrelia Hunter.

2. The GACER voted to appoint an investigative committee to look into the allegations made in overtures by the Presbyteries of Peace River and Missouri Valley regarding the Evangelical Presbyterian Church. Part of this investigation will be considering what, if any, role WARC should play in addressing these issues. The GACER approved the following members of the investigative committee: Krystin Granberg, chair; Terry Epling; Catherine Kotfila (Alternate Mark Labberton); Jeffery Vamos (Alternate Ryan White); Eugene Turner; Joy Kaufman; and George Wilkes.

3. The GACER voted to appoint the following persons to serve on the Implementation Committee for the KPCA/PCUSA Covenant Agreement: Samuel Kim, Yu Bang Lee, Paul Kim, Young Lee Hertig, Linda Culberston, and David Choi.

4. The GACER voted to recommend that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve a dialogue with the Seventh-day Adventists Church, pending a request to staff for a detailed prospectus outlining details of the purpose, timeline, and subjects to be addressed by the dialogue.

5. The Interfaith subcommittee of GACER discussed the possibilities of having a church consultation on interfaith relations. Staff and GACER members were asked to forward to the subcommittee chair ideas they have on how to conduct this consultation.

6. The GACER approved the appointment of Lemuel Garcia-Arroyo and Sarah McCaslin to serve on the PC(USA) delegation to the Unifying Council of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) and the Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC) in Grand Rapids, Michigan, June 18–28, 2010.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) was convened on Sunday, May 24, 2009, with dinner at 6:30 p.m. at the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey, Switzerland, by its Chairperson George Telford. While at the Ecumenical Institute, the committee met students and faculty. Dr. Ioan Souca, director of the institute, shared information about the history and program of the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey. Oomman Thomas gave the opening prayer. At the end of the GACER meeting, some of the committee members stayed in Geneva for the celebration of the Calvin 500th Anniversary by the WARC and the Swiss Federation of Churches.

a. Spring 2009 Meeting

The GACER gathered for worship at the Ecumenical Centre in Geneva, Switzerland, at 8:30 a.m., on Monday, May 25, 2009. Following worship, Theo Gill, a Presbyterian serving in the World Council of Churches, led the committee on a talking tour of the Ecumenical Centre and its history. After the tour, Robina Winbush introduced Dr. Ishmael Noko, general secretary of the Lutheran World Federation, who brought greetings to the GACER.

During the first morning of the meeting, the committee heard presentations by Dr. Puleng LenkaBula, consultant to the Covenanting for Justice Program of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches and lecturer, and Dr. Rogate Mshana, executive secretary for Poverty, Wealth and Ecology Programme of the World Council of Churches. Dr. Mshana spoke regarding issues relating to WARC Covenanting for Justice and the Earth and the Accra Confessions, highlighting some of the ecumenical collaborative initiatives and theological issues that have been involved in the process. Dr. LenkaBula addressed the committee regarding issues of poverty and wealth. She distributed several documents, including a background document on the AGAPE (Alternative Globalization Addressing People and Earth) Process and the follow-up among churches and the ecumenical family. Following the presentations by Dr. LenkaBula and Dr. Mshana, the committee was led in a discussion by Chris Iosso and Sara Lisherness on how the PC(USA) has been engaged in the process of receiving the “Covenanting for Justice and the Earth.” During lunch, the GACER had the opportunity to meet some of the senior staff of the World Council of Churches (WCC).

The committee was informed that the GACER is up for review as mandated by the General Assembly and that part of the review process requires that GACER do a self-study. Chairperson George Telford appointed a subcommittee to do the self-study as follows: Scott Anderson, chairperson; Lemuel Garcia-Arroyo; Rodney Peterson; Barbara Dua, New Mexico Council of Churches executive director. The subcommittee has begun its work. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, Gradye Parsons, explained the process for the self-study.
The GACER heard presentations on the Call to Be One Church and the Nature and Mission of the Church documents from Dr. John Gibaut, director of Faith and Order for the WCC, and member of the Anglican Church of Canada; and Dr. Odair Pedroso-Mateus, staff of Faith and Order and member of the Independent Presbyterian Church of Brazil. The GACER will prepare and forward to the WCC a formal response to these documents.

During the second day, the GACER heard a presentation about issues related to violence and globalization around the world from the Reverend Dr. Shanta Premawardhana, director, Office of Inter-religious Dialogue and Cooperation of the World Council of Churches; and Dr. Rima Barsoun, associate for Christian-Muslim Relations. Dr. Premawardhana shared a document entitled, “Useful Documents on Interfaith Dialogue on the WCC Website,” and a book entitled, Hermeneutical Explanations in Dialogue: Essays in Honour of Hans Ucko. Following the presentations, Damayanthi Niles, a member of GACER, responded on behalf of the committee. Niles response was followed by discussions and conversations.

On the third day of meetings, Cliff Kirkpatrick (president of WARC), Setri Nyomi (WARC general secretary), and Peter Borgdorf (president of the Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC)) addressed the committee and shared information regarding the proposed union of WARC and REC and plans for the upcoming Uniting General Council in Grand Rapids.

The committee had the opportunity to meet young adult interns from some of the ecumenical agencies, among them: Emma Halgren, Australia, intern with WCC Communications and Visitor's Program; James Macharia, Kenya, intern with Decade to Overcome Violence living letters; Packiaraj Asirvatham, India, intern in Faith, Science & Technology; Mark Taylor, Scotland, intern with WCC Youth Program; Natalie Maxson, Canada, program executive for youth/young adults.

During the meeting the GACER welcomed the Reverend Eleanor Giddings Ivory, past director of the PC(USA) Washington Office; Rev. Giddiness, director of Public Witness for the WCC; and The Reverend Dr. Martin Robra, director of Ecumenism in the 21st Century of the World Council of Churches. They gave a presentation on Advocacy and Relationships as an ecumenical issue.

b. Other GACER Related Activities, Reports and Actions

(1) The GACER authorized its moderator to appoint a small task group to engage in a process of conversation with the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The conversation will address overall GAMC ecumenical participation and commitments. The committee asked for this report to be presented for revision and adoption at its winter 2010 meeting.

(2) The Interfaith subcommittee reported that the consultative process with Jewish leaders was completed, a draft of the study now in process would be completed by December 2009 and expected to be approved at the winter 2010 meeting. Issues and themes were identified on the Study on Christian-Muslim Relations. A small consultation will be held on July 13–16, 2009.

(3) The GACER approved the invitations to three other faith or religious traditions to send representatives to the 219th General Assembly (2010) as observers: The National Council of Synagogues, The Islamic Society of North America, and an American Indian Organization from one of the Nations in Minnesota.

(4) The GACER voted to endorse the colloquium on the “Accra and Belhar Confessions in Conversation,” sponsored by ACSWP and Stony Point as a relevant educational opportunity for understanding our ecumenical life together and to encourage participation of Reformed ecumenical colleagues.

(5) The committee approved a request for staff to produce a draft response to the WARC Covenanting for Justice process for the Grand Rapids Uniting Council.

(6) The GACER will request that every presbytery name an ecumenical liaison. This person will serve as liaison between the presbyteries and the GACER and the Department of Ecumenical and Agency Relations.

(7) The committee approved a recommendation to receive resources and written presentations on the World Council of Churches (WCC) Poverty, Wealth and Ecology Program (PWE), including the Proposed Statement on Eco-Justice and Ecological Debt and the AGAPE Consultation—The Links Between Poverty, Wealth and Ecology: Ecumenical Perspectives in Latin America and the Caribbean. These reports are to be forwarded to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), requesting that ACSWP review these documents in light of General Assembly policy and prepare a report that will be received by the GACER Executive Committee to provide feedback to the WCC (through the PWE reference group and other means). These reports are also to be forwarded to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) requesting that Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry (CPJ), through its environmental program, hunger program, and other appropriate offices, review these documents, identify ways that the GAMC is addressing these concerns in its life and ministry, then prepare a report that will be received by the General Assembly Mission Council and forwarded to GACER to provide ways of engagement with the WCC.

(8) The GACER received a report on the progress of the Task Group on the Evangelical Presbyterian Church.
(9) The GACER received a report that, because of the Office of the General Assembly reductions in budget for 2009/2010, a decision was made to decrease $96,000 from the National Council of Churches givings. In regards to this, it was voted that there be a consultative process with the GACER Executive Committee and COGA before the OGA staff makes a decision regarding a change in financial commitment to ecumenical bodies.

(10) The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations nominates to each General Assembly churches to be invited to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the subsequent assembly, ten overseas churches and five churches within the United States. The committee voted to nominate five churches within the U.S. and forward these nominations to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The churches approved are: Reformed Church in America, Moravian Church (Northern and Southern Synods), Church of the Brethren, Progressive National Baptist Convention, and the Assemblies of God.

(11) The GACER approved a recommendation to form a task group to engage with the General Assembly Mission Council for the purposes of building relationships between GACER and the General Assembly Mission Council to foster the fulfillment of our Presbyterian ecumenical calling in our mission program and financial commitments.

c. Bilateral Dialogues and Joint Committees Reports

(1) The committee received a report that the Agreement with the Korean Presbyterian Church in America (KPCA) was approved by both, the PC(USA) and the KPCA.

(2) Robina Winbush, Associate Stated Clerk, gave an overview and update on the Bilateral Agreement with the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops. The Catholic Reformed Dialogue had forwarded a Common Statement on Baptism. The GACER then forwarded the document to the 218th General Assembly (2008) to be received as an ecumenical agreement. The document was approved by the assembly and forwarded to presbyteries for ratification. Since that time, indication has been received from the US Conference of Catholic Bishops staff that the USCCB could not approve the document. The committee requested from a staff and a committee member to prepare a formal report to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The report was to be approved at the February 2010 GACER meeting.

(3) The GACER engaged in discussion regarding the implications for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on how to engage in a discernment process and what needs to be communicated to partners in Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC). The committee also discussed a rift in CUiC related to historically black churches, including possible advice and counsel GACER may want to give to the Stated Clerk when he meets with CUiC Heads of Communions.

4. Ministry and Accomplishments (Winter 2010)

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) met in Louisville, Kentucky, on February 4–6, 2010, for its winter meeting.

6. Bilateral Dialogues and Joint Committees Reports

C. General Assembly Nominating Committee

God calls plain folk from ordinary places to do extraordinary work with God’s people.¹

The call of Christ is to willing, dedicated discipleship. Our discipleship is a manifestation of the new life we enter through baptism. Discipleship is both a gift and a commitment, an offering and a responsibility (Commissioning Service Book of Occasional Services).

The General Assembly Nominating Committee mandate is charged in the Book of Order, G-13.0111, with ensuring “careful nomination of members of such boards, agencies, and committees as the General Assembly shall from time to time designate.”

Through the General Assembly’s nominations process, the church has the benefit of selecting, from the varied gifts and services of Presbyterians, the most qualified persons to serve on General Assembly level entities; persons who can serve the whole church with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee makes nominations to more than thirty entities. It

• presents to the General Assembly for election, nominees for at-large vacancies on General Assembly entities;

• submits to the General Assembly for election, nominees from persons proposed by synods and presbyteries in consultation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee for rotation vacancies or for middle governing body representation on General Assembly entities; and

1. Text citation is not provided in the document.
transmits to the General Assembly the names of persons from General Assembly entities for their representatives (linkages) to other General Assembly entities.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee works continuously to broaden and deepen the pool of persons interested in and capable of serving General Assembly entities. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is blessed with a wealth of faithful disciples of Christ. The Spirit calls Presbyterians to serve at all levels of the church’s life—congregations, synods, and presbyteries, and the General Assembly.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) guarantees full access to the participation in the decision-making processes of the church (G-4.0403). This commitment to the ministry of the whole people of God moves Presbyterians to respond to God’s call for service—to use their gifts for the life and mission of the church. In cooperation and consultation with the General Assembly Committee on Representation, the General Assembly Nominating Committee gives careful consideration to Book of Order mandates that persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions, be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision-making of the church (G-4.0403 and G-13.0108). The GANC follows, whenever possible, Book of Order guidelines, G-13.0111, that consideration shall be given to the nomination of equal numbers of ministers, laymen, and laywomen, except where other membership is mandated by the Book of Order. The GANC also encourages synods, presbyteries, and other linking entities to keep Book of Order mandates in mind as they submit persons for nomination.

1. Accomplishments in 2008–2010

The GANC continues to connect with Presbyterians—through meetings of presbytery and synod nominating committee, participation and attendance at national and regional conferences, engagement and correspondence with leaders at all governing body levels of the church—in order to inform Presbyterians of the many and diverse opportunities for service. In addition to face-to-face engagements, individuals, congregations, presbyteries, and synods can find a listing of positions open for election on the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s website: www.pcusa.org/nominations. The website provides information on the General Assembly nominations process and descriptions of each entity to which the committee makes nominations. These descriptions are written by each entity and contain information on the purpose of the entity, skill sets and expertise needed, and time requirements for service. They are a useful tool for helping potential candidates determine whether or not their particular gifts and abilities are a match with the identified needs of a specific entity at this particular time.

Instead of printing its standard brochure, during the 2008–2010 season the GANC created an attractive information card that advertised the committee’s website. The GANC information card includes the names and contact information for members of the GANC and a cloud of words descriptive of a ministry of service on a General Assembly level entity. This card is available at no cost at most major Presbyterian conferences, upon request to the General Assembly nominations office in Louisville, and disseminated to all middle governing bodies.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee solicits applications for nomination to at-large positions from all governing bodies, other official Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) groups, and individual Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) members. Presbyteries and synods provide the names of persons to be considered for nomination to middle governing body positions on the various committees, boards, and commissions where such membership is mandated.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee encourages those wishing to be considered for service on a General Assembly level committee to apply online via its website. The online application is an easy to use, safe and secure, and a relatively fast way to file. While this is the preferred way to apply, women and men who find that they are not able to use this method are able to obtain either an electronic or paper version of the application form for their use.

Through participation at conferences, conversations and engagement with the General Assembly Committee on Representation, racial ethnic caucuses, affinity groups, individual contact at all middle governing body levels as well as with pastors and elders across the denomination, the General Assembly Nominating Committee strives to increase the number of racial ethnic persons and persons with differing theological perspectives in its pool of applicants.

Most persons serving on General Assembly agencies, committees, or entities are members of a congregation or a presbytery of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Several committees include within their membership persons who are not Presbyterian: the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations, the National Committee on the Self-Development of People, and the review committees on General Assembly agencies.

About a year before it meets to make nominations, the GANC publishes on its website and mails to each presbytery and synod a list of vacancies to be filled. Additionally the GANC website provides instructions, committee descriptions, and information about the nominations process.
Persons interested in being considered for service on a General Assembly level committee and persons who wish to suggest persons for consideration may do so by submitting an application for nomination form either online at the GANC’s website, electronically via an email version of the application form, or by completing and returning a printed version of the form. As of February 1, 2008, approximately 300 applications were received for almost 130 positions of which only 90 are at-large vacancies. Applications remain active for two General Assembly cycles.

The application process requires that applicants ask three evaluators to complete a reference form regarding the applicant’s abilities, gifts, and experience. A reference is also solicited from the governing body for each applicant. The references are treated in confidence and are critical in the discernment process the members of the GANC use. All application forms are shared with each General Assembly Nominating Committee member. Each member of the General Assembly Nominating Committee has access to the confidential appraisal materials for all applicants.

The nominating committee maintains a rotation system by which synods and/or presbyteries nominate persons to serve on the Mission Development Resources Committee, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and the National Committee on the Self-Development of People, as well as a rotation system for presbytery representation on the General Assembly Mission Council, as outlined in the Organization for Mission. It is important to remember that nominations for these middle governing body positions are made from proposals received from presbyteries or synods—through their regular nominating process.

In 2009, the majority of presbyteries approved an amendment to the Book of Order that resulted in the deletion of G-13.0107. Prior to that time, the GANC was required to consider only a pool of applicants proposed by affected synods when it nominated to the General Assembly Committee on Representation and the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission. Although synods may continue to submit names of persons for the GANC’s consideration, the General Assembly Nominating Committee has opened the process to allow Presbyterians from the church at-large to apply to be considered for the nomination to these entities as long as they are from the affected synod.

Members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee relate actively to middle governing bodies and General Assembly entities throughout the year. Each General Assembly Nominating Committee member serves as a liaison to the nominating committee of the synod in which the member resides. Each member attends at least one synod or synod nominating committee meeting every other year to explain the nominations process.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee invites all General Assembly entities to send a written report biennially concerning the specific needs of the entity regarding nominees presented to the General Assembly. In addition, the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s liaison member is available to meet with the entity or be in contact by telephone or mail at the entity’s invitation, so that the nominating process may be explained and that the skills and expertise needed by the entity are identified. This information, along with advice and counsel received from the General Assembly Committee on Representation, assists the General Assembly Nominating Committee in its work.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee continues to be concerned about the needs of persons with disabilities, persons with children and/or other dependents, and youth and young adults on entities of the General Assembly. The General Assembly Nominating Committee and the General Assembly Committee on Representation are committed to working together to discover persons with disabilities, youth, and young adults who are willing to be considered for service on General Assembly committees and agencies. The General Assembly Nominating Committee and the General Assembly Committee on Representation note that many applicants do not identify themselves as persons with disabilities even when a disability does exist. Thus, the number of persons with disabilities serving the church on committees at the General Assembly level is actually higher than reported. The General Assembly Nominating Committee will continue to seek ways to encourage persons living with disabilities to make this information available.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee shared with the 218th General Assembly (2008) its concern that there was an increase in the number of persons who have resigned from elected service because of a variety of obstacles. Resignations continue to increase as many demands, including pressures of family and work life, affect the ability of members to continue to serve at the General Assembly level.

The Organization for Mission provides that terms for most agencies, committees, or entities are four years, with eligibility to serve an additional four-year term. Re-nomination to a second term is not automatic. The GANC uses several factors in determining whether or not to re-nominate a person. Key in this discernment process is an evaluation instrument completed by the agency, committee, or entity on which the member serves, diversity issues, special skills and expertise needed by the agency, committee, or entity to respond to assigned mandates.

In preparation for review by the 219th General Assembly (2010), the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s executive committee appointed a work group to engage in a study of the GANC’s work and process for the last six years. This work group consisted of current members Janet Schlenker, who served as chair of the work group; James Madson; Mike Reyes; and former members William King and Susan D. Krummel. Valerie Kiriishi Small served as staff. The writing subteam consisted of Janet Schlenker, Susan D. Krummel, and Valerie Kiriishi Small.
The Self-Study Work Group met May 2009 via conference call; June 2009 via electronic GoToMeeting; August 2009 in Chicago, Illinois; and January 2010 via email correspondence; and once more prior to the General Assembly. The writing group met in November 2009 in Minneapolis, Minnesota; December in Denver, Colorado; and February 2010 in Louisville, Kentucky.

Since the 218th General Assembly (2008), there have been four meetings of the nominating committee: January 2009 in Tucson, Arizona, October 2009 via conference call; February 2010 via conference call; and March 2010 in Seattle, Washington. A joint meeting of members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee and the General Assembly Committee on Representation was held in November 2010 in San Diego, California. New members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee participated in one of two intensive orientation meetings in Los Angeles, California, in October 2008 and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in November 2008.

2. Membership

There are sixteen members on the General Assembly Nominating Committee—one member residing in each of the sixteen synods. The General Assembly, upon the nomination of the General Assembly Moderator, elects the members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee. Members serve a six-year term. The following officers were elected and served in 2008–2010: James Madson, elder, Synod of Mid-America, moderator; Emily McGinley, church member; Synod of Lincoln Trails, vice-moderator; David Bennett, minister, Synod of the Northeast, secretary. The other members of the committee are: Joan Carpenter, elder, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii; Frank Deming, minister, Synod of Mid-Atlantic; Warner Durnell, minister, Synod of Living Waters; Cindy Edwards, church member, Synod of Alaska-Northwest; Carnell Hampton, minister, Synod of the South Atlantic; Roger Howell, elder, Synod of the Covenant; Richard Kampa, elder, Synod of the Southwest; Catherine Purves, minister, Synod of the Trinity; Mike Reyes, elder, Synod of the Pacific; Janet Schlenker, minister, Synod of the Rocky Mountains; Lita Simpson, elder, Synod of the Sun; Elona Street-Stewart, elder, Synod of Lakes and Prairies; and Jose Torres Hernandez, elder, Sinodo Presbiteriano Boriquen en Puerto Rico.

The office of the General Assembly Nominating Committee is located in the Office of the General Assembly, 100 Witherspoon Street, Louisville, KY 40202-1396. Assistant Stated Clerk Valerie Kiriishi Small, elder, serves as the manager for General Assembly Nominations.

D. Committee on Theological Education Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) has the responsibility for developing and maintaining a comprehensive plan for theological education from the perspective of the whole church. The committee seeks to identify, develop, and propose strategies for a denomination-wide approach to theological education. The committee serves as an advocate for theological education, seeking to support the seminaries and to strengthen them for their mission in the world. The Committee on Theological Education can be seen as a two-way communication link between the denomination and its graduate theological institutions. Voting members of the committee include thirteen people elected to represent the church at large and a representative from each of the ten seminaries related directly to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Corresponding members of COTE include: representatives from Auburn Theological Seminary and from the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico (both institutions related to the General Assembly through covenant agreements negotiated every six years); a representative of the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation, and representatives of two non-Presbyterian seminaries invited by the committee.

2. Accomplishments

a. Interschool and Seminary/Church Cooperation

(1) Joint Committee on Leadership Needs
In April 2009, a Committee on Theological Education initiative established a Joint Committee on Leadership Needs with the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA). Each group was represented on the joint committee, whose charge was to comprehensively examine the current cultural context of twenty-first century North America and outline strategies for the development of church leaders. The resulting report “Raising Up Leaders for the Mission of God” is an “invitation to the PCUSA to dream again, to have hope, to be in conversation about the questions this report raises, and partner to empower leaders for the mission of God in the world.” The report was endorsed by the GAMC and COGA in February 2010 and is available on the internet.

(2) Cooperative Courses

The Office of the General Assembly, San Francisco Theological Seminary, and COTE continue to sponsor a class for seminarians entitled “Presbyterianism: Principles and Practices” during General Assembly. More than fifty students from five seminaries registered in 2008. Each January COTE sponsored, in cooperation with Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary and the General Assembly Mission Council, a January-term course for seminarians entitled “Leaders in the Connectional Church.” More than fifty students from seven seminaries in 2009 and 2010 took the course. With the help of presbyteries and seminaries, the Office of Theological Education has encouraged committees on preparation for ministry to urge candidates under their care to take advantage of these opportunities to learn firsthand about our denominational programs and polity. Course tuition for courses may be paid via the committee’s Presbyterian Seminary Exchange Program.

(3) A Committee on Theological Education Self-Study

As part of the now regular review process of the General Assembly, COTE conducted and separately submitted to the 219th General Assembly (2010) a comprehensive review with recommendations for improvements.

(4) The Award for Excellence in Theological Education

The Award for Excellence in Theological Education was established by the Committee on Theological Education in 1996 to honor a person biennially who has made an outstanding lifetime contribution to theological education in and for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The award is normally presented during the meeting of the General Assembly. The COTE has selected Barbara G. Wheeler, the director of the Center for the Study of Theological Education at Auburn Theological Seminary and former president of Auburn, to be recognized in 2010. Wheeler’s thirty-year service at Auburn Theological Seminary, the authoring and editing of books and studies including Being There: Culture and Formation in Two Theological Schools, numerous Auburn Studies, and generously donating her time, expertise, research, and service to COTE for decades are only a few examples of the excellence in theological education she continues to offer the PC(USA), the ecumenical church, and the entire theological education enterprise.

(5) Other Cooperative Projects

The COTE, through Theological Education Fund special project funds, sponsored a grant requests for

- Calling for the Order of the Day, Pedagogies of African American Theologians: Led by Katie Cannon and Marsha Sulligan Haney, this conference brought together more than 200 theologians and church leaders to empower and resource African American congregations, leaders, and theologians in 2008.

- PC(USA) Korean American Theological Initiative: This initiative is led by Paul J. Huh at Columbia Seminary and is in a process that seeks to bring together Korean American church leaders and theologians to develop resources for church and leadership formation including an online journal, curriculum suggestions, a scholars conference, and a grant writing-seeking resource.

- Online Supervised Ministry Project: This project of the Presbyterian and Reformed Theological Field Educators Caucus (PRTFE) seeks to improve online supervisor training for seminary students that could be used by all the participating schools. Susan Fox at Union Presbyterian Seminary directs this project that is in process.

b. Funding for Seminaries Related to the PC(USA)

Implementation and interpretation of the Theological Education Fund (1% Plan), which is the sole source of denomination-wide support for the ten PC(USA) seminaries and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico, continues to be an important task for COTE and the Office of Theological Education. The Theological Education Fund (TEF) was established by the 198th General Assembly (1986) and was first implemented in 1989. Throughout the twenty-one years of the TEF’s operational life, more than 47 million dollars has been contributed by more than half of the PC(USA) congregations contributing at some time during this history. In 2008, more than 1,790 PC(USA) congregations and middle governing bodies made voluntary contributions to the Theological Education Fund. As a result, $1,524,914 in TEF monies were distributed to eligible schools in 2009 according to a formula developed and monitored by the COTE Institutional Review Sub-committee on which only elected members not representing seminaries sit. In 2009, more than 1,709 of PC(USA) congregations and middle governing bodies contributed, and $1,501,230 will be sent to support our schools in 2010. While the real number of contributing churches declined, we celebrate that 103 churches have given consecutively for all twenty-one years. Also, in 2009 we had eighty-nine newly contributing churches. The TEF helps underwrite quality theological education at our seminaries to provide for the leadership of the wider church.

A Seminary Support Network includes more than 130 enthusiastic volunteers and representatives from presbyteries and synods who advocate on behalf of the seminaries with passion for the message: “Seminaries and Churches Together—For Generations to Come.” Participation at annual network training conferences continues to grow. Fifteen network synod level representatives continue to work on a contract basis to make possible improved regional coordination for the Seminary Support Network. Pastors, clerks of sessions, presbytery resource centers, and designated contact persons in PC(USA) congregations received interpretive materials about our seminaries and requests for support of the Theological Education Fund. Some of the new resources include an e-newsletter focusing on sharing stories about the mission and impact our seminaries are engaging to transform lives, and a joint viewbook that presents, in one resource, an overview of all our Presbyterian seminaries. In the 2009–2010 academic year, the COTE approved a pilot program to add one student representative from each of the twelve PC(USA)-affiliated seminaries to the Seminary Support Network. We are excited about the energy and future direction of this ministry.

In cooperation with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, active promotion of the Theological Schools Endowment Fund has continued to grow at a modest pace. The Theological Schools Endowment Fund provides opportunity for individuals to contribute monies to benefit our Presbyterian seminaries through gifts and bequests. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) Foundation manages this fund.

c. Charter Changes in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Theological Institutions

One of the governance functions assigned to COTE by the Report of the Special Committee on Theological Institutions approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986) is the reporting of charter changes by the individual schools to the General Assembly. Four seminaries reported changes in their charter or other constitutional documents since the 218th General Assembly (2008). (1) Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary

“Article II

“The corporation is a non-profit corporation, no part of the income of which is distributable to its members, directors, or officers. In the event of the dissolution of the corporation, its assets shall be distributed to the succeeding corporation or to the Synod of the Sun of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), or their successor as the Board of Trustees shall then direct.

“Article IV

“The purpose for which the corporation is organized is to serve as an instrument of service in the Kingdom of God, primarily for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), for the glory of God and to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ. Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary is a seminary in the Presbyterian-Reformed tradition whose mission is to educate and equip individuals for the purpose of the Seminary shall be the education of qualified persons for the ordained Christian ministry and other forms of Christian service, and leadership; to employ its resources in the service of the church; to promote and engage in critical theological thought and research; and to be a winsome and exemplary community of God’s people.

“Article V

“The street address of the registered office is 100 East 27th Street, Austin, Texas, 78705, and the name of its registered agent at such address is Herman A. Harren or Kurt A. Gabbard.

“Article VI

“The Seminary shall be under the direction and control of the Synod of the Sun of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), related to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and to the Synod of the Sun of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through a Board of Trustees. The Trustees of the Seminary shall make a report annually to the Synod of the Sun. The Board shall also report annually to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) whose relation to the Seminary is advisory. The relationship of the Board of Trustees to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is advisory, except that the General Assembly shall confirm the election of the President of the Seminary.

“Article VII
“The corporation has no members. The governing body of the Seminary shall be a Board of Trustees consisting of thirty-three (33) members, all of whom shall be in full communion with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), except that the Board may authorize up to three members or who are members of other Christian communities. Membership on the Board of Trustees shall be arranged in classes of ten (10) each, serving terms of three years’ duration, one class being elected annually. Eight All members of each class shall be elected by the Synod of the Sun; two members of each class shall be elected by the Board of Trustees itself. The current trustees are:

“Article VIII

“Amendments to the Articles of Incorporation may be enacted at any stated meeting of the Board of Trustees by a vote of three-fourths of the members in attendance, provided notice of such proposed amendments be submitted in writing to each trustee at least two weeks prior to such a meeting. Such amendments must be ratified by the Synod of the Sun, and shall become effective when filed with the Secretary of State as provided by law.”

(2) Pittsburgh Theological Seminary

At the May 2009 meeting of the board of directors, the Nominations Committee made a recommendation to expand the number of directors to thirty-nine. To accomplish this, the constitution was amended and the board approved this recommendation on November 11, 2009.

Other amendments were made to recognize that new permanent committees were established and certain officers were re-titled as vice presidents. Another amendment eliminated the specified academic year as June 1 to May 31. This does not change the academic year; it simply allows the seminary to adopt a different year in the future, should it desire to do so, without having to amend the constitution to do so. All of these amendments were approved by the board on November 11, 2009.

The above changes had a corresponding effect on the bylaws so they were amended in line with above and approved by the board on November 11, 2009.

(3) Princeton Theological Seminary

“There shall be a Board of Trustees (“Board”) ordinarily consisting of between twenty-five (25) and thirty-five (35) thirty (30) and forty (40) persons, with the actual number serving at any particular time to be determined by the Board. All members of the Board shall be members of Christian churches. Approximately one-half of the trustees shall be ordained ministers of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and approximately one-half shall be communicant (lay) members of that a Christian Church. All but a maximum of five (5) of those members shall be members of a Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregation or ministers of Word and Sacrament of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Normally, any trustees who are ordained ministers and not members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall be graduates of the Seminary. If, however, a lay member of the Board should change his or her place of residence, creating in the judgment of the Board an undue hardship for him or her to retain participatory membership in a congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Board at its discretion may permit that person to retain membership on the Board, provided he or she shall assume and continue affiliation with a congregation of another reformed denomination in correspondence with the General Assembly of said Church; but not more than two (2) persons shall serve simultaneously under this exception. The officers of the Board shall be a chair, a vice chair, a secretary, and such others as the Board may from time to time determine, each of whom shall be a minister or an elder of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The number, names and addresses of the Trustees constituting the current Board are as set forth on Schedule A, attached hereto.”

(4) San Francisco Theological Seminary

Bylaws article IIIc.2: “The Board at its annual meeting shall elect persons to hold the office of trustee for a five year term, or due to a vacancy, for the unexpired portion of the term of a trustee.”

d. Reports from Individual Institutions

The Committee on Theological Education brings to the assembly a narrative report from each of the ten seminaries related to the PC(USA), Auburn Theological Seminary, the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico and the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation.

(1) Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary

In July 2009 Austin Seminary received a $1.3 million challenge grant from philanthropist Robert T. Priddy to benefit The College of Pastoral Leaders; in response the seminary has received a $250,000 grant from the James A. “Buddy” Davidson Charitable Foundation. The Reverend Dr. K.C. Ptomey, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church, Nashville, for twenty-seven years, was installed as the new holder of the Louis H. and Katherine S. Zbinden Chair of Pastoral Ministry and Leadership. In December, following a two-year review processes, Austin Seminary received re-accreditation from both the Association of Theological Schools (ATS) and the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS). In the spring of 2010, a feasibility study was undertaken regarding a potential fund-raising campaign for the seminary.

(2) Columbia Theological Seminary

Stephen Hayner, professor of evangelism and church growth, became Columbia’s ninth president, effective July 1, 2009, and the new environmentally friendly student residence hall opened. Faculty members named to endowed professorships include Rodger Nishioka; Christian education; Anna Carter Florence, preaching; and Pamela Cooper White; pastoral theology, care, and counseling. Joseph L. Roberts Jr., pastor emeritus of Atlanta’s historic Ebenezer Baptist Church, was called to head the Wade P. Huie Center for Preaching. For outstanding Christian service in ministry, the alumni/ae association presented awards to Joanna Adams, George Telford, and Brad Smith. Alumna Sara Covin Juengst received the Award for Excellence in Theological Education at the 218th General Assembly (2008). To support the S3 program for pastors, now in its seventh year, Columbia received a $648,863 Lilly grant.

(3) University of Dubuque Theological Seminary (UDTS)

The Distance Master of Divinity Program at the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary continues to grow. Inaugurated in August 2007, the program currently has students from twenty-six presbyteries and four denominations. The largest cohorts are from Florida, Texas, and Colorado. The five-year degree program allows participants to take the majority of classes via the Internet. Two-thirds of the classes are taught online, while the remaining credits are earned in residency at the Dubuque campus. The curriculum and faculty mirror the residential program of the seminary. The UDTS is the only seminary of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to offer a Master of Divinity Distance Education Program accredited by the Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada.

(4) Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary

Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary is grateful to have begun its 157th academic year welcoming the largest incoming class, in our first-degree programs, in nearly a decade. The seminary attributes this significant breakthrough in enrollment to our growing scholarship program, our new vocational identity brand (The Power of Welcome), and generative programs such as the new Black Church Studies Program. Following an extensive self-study period of nearly two years, the seminary was reaffirmed for accreditation, without notation, for a period of ten years by the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS) and the Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada (ATS), which noted “distinctive strengths” following their site visit. During the remainder of the academic year, the seminary will recognize the numerous contributions of President Dean K. Thompson, who will retire from the presidency in August 2010. During his six-year tenure, Thompson’s leadership has resulted in significant growth at Louisville Seminary, including the calling of five new faculty, the development of a more diverse faculty and administration, new scholarships, and the development of 60 percent of the board of trustees. At the same time, he has navigated Louisville Seminary through several painful decisions that resulted from the national economic downturn, while preserving the seminary’s core mission of teaching and learning.

(5) McCormick Theological Seminary

McCormick responded to the nationwide recession by reaffirming its commitment to providing affordable theological education that is Reformed, ecumenical, urban, and cross-cultural. Innovations in its curriculum include new masters degrees in Urban Ministry and Discipleship Development as well as the Certificate in Executive Leadership. The Lilly-funded Common Ground Project builds on the AADVENT Project by providing resources to Asian American, Latino/a, and African American faith communities. Key additions to the seminary’s leadership include the election of Dr. Luis Rivera as dean of the faculty and vice president for academic affairs, the first Latino/a dean of a PC(USA) seminary. Dr. David Esterline was appointed director of the Institute for Cross-Cultural Theological Education, which ensures cross-cultural skills in all McCormick graduates. Dr. Frank Yamada joined the faculty as associate professor of Hebrew Bible and director of the Center for Asian American Ministry, while Dr. Jeff Japinga was named associate dean for the Doctor of Ministry Program.

(6) Pittsburgh Theological Seminary

Pittsburgh Theological Seminary has welcomed two new faculty members. Edwin Chr. van Driel is assistant professor of theology and Audrey Thompson is assistant professor of homiletics. Through the seminary’s World Mission Initiative Program, cross-cultural experiences are a significant part of the seminary experience for 75 percent of our M.Div. students. The Summer Youth Institute continues to challenge high school youth to explore theology and consider ministry as a vocation. A total of 392 youth have participated in the program, with approximately 20 percent matriculating to seminary following college graduation. This summer, improvements to the front of the campus will provide accessibility and a welcoming appearance for the community and will be a first step in carrying out a campus master plan.
(7) Princeton Theological Seminary

In 2008, Princeton Seminary initiated a new Master of Divinity curriculum that reconceives the original Princeton formula of “piety and learning” as “formational scholarship.” New courses ground theological learning not only in the texts of faith, but in the contexts of faith, contexts that are changing rapidly in the American church and the world. A reduction in required credit hours from ninety to seventy-eight allows for more in-depth study, for the awareness that theological education and spiritual formation are inextricably linked, and for short terms in January and May taught by outstanding practitioners in the church and Princeton faculty, including courses in places like Taize, France, Palestine, and India.

(8) San Francisco Theological Seminary

The 2008–09 year was pivotal for SFTS that included unprecedented challenges. The seminary’s board of trustees, created a Resource Allocation Task Force to study the economics of SFTS, which were not in equilibrium. By this, the seminary owned the fact that its annual sources of income were not meeting its annual sources of expenses. The seminary retained outside consultants to help it navigate this process of internal assessment. The study was well under way when the stock market crashed in November 2008. Between November 2008 and February 2009 the seminary’s endowment declined in value from $60 million to $40 million. This setback came on top of the financial struggles the seminary was already facing. Now, with less income from its endowment, the seminary was facing annual deficits of $2 million. The board of trustees recommended a two-year budget decrease of $1.5 million. It further authorized the business office to study the outcome of selling off campus student and faculty housing and building replacement housing on the seminary’s core campus.

(9) Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary

On August 15, 2009, Dr. Mark Lomax concluded his two-year tenure as interim dean of the seminary. Shortly thereafter, the Reverend Paul T. Roberts began his ministry in that position. Rev. Roberts also serves as pastor of Atlanta’s Church of the Master Presbyterian Church. The Reverend Dr. Robert M. Burkins, pastor of Elmwood United Presbyterian Church of East Orange, New Jersey, currently serves as the chair of the board of trustees. The seminary’s 2010 Founders Day was observed in conjunction with the annual alumni conference on March 2–4, 2010.

(10) Union Theological Seminary and Presbyterian School of Christian Education (Union Presbyterian Seminary)

At its May 2009 meeting, the Board of Union Theological Seminary and Presbyterian School of Christian Education voted to change its name to Union Presbyterian Seminary. The change, accompanied by a new logo, will officially take effect on July 1, 2010. Union Presbyterian has also adopted a new five-year strategic plan (2009–2014). The strategic plan calls for a new curriculum that will offer a program of theological education for the twenty-first century. The work of a Faculty Curriculum Task Force is well underway. Curricular focus has already begun; the seminary has committed its resources to the M.Div., M.A.C.E., dual M.Div/M.A.C.E, Th.M., and Ph.D. degrees. With exciting new programmatic ventures envisioned and a vibrant new capital campaign projected, Union Presbyterian Seminary eagerly anticipates engaging the future God has in store for us.

(11) Auburn Theological Seminary

The years 2008–2010 has been a time of great progress for Auburn Theological Seminary. In the past two years the Center for Church Life has worked with more than 200 clergy and lay leaders across sixteen denominations, furthering its mission to help church leaders deepen their understanding of their faith and equipping them to assume more active roles in public life. Our Center for the Study of Theological Education developed a series of resources for financial planning including the DVD, Are You Mortgaging Your Ministry?, for seminarians and the published research report, Great Expectations, which informs fundraising in theological schools. Our Face to Face program now brings seventy Christian, Jewish, and Muslim students across the world together to model peacemaking strategies. In 2009, Auburn celebrated the exemplary ministry of exiting President Barbara Wheeler as she turns to directing Auburn’s Center for the Study of Theological Education full-time and offered a warm welcome to our new leader, President the Reverend Dr. Katharine Henderson.

The Reverend Dr. Katharine Rhodes Henderson is the president of Auburn Theological Seminary, an institution founded in 1818 with a history of commitment to progressive social causes from abolition of slavery to women’s rights. Author of God’s Troublemakers: How Women of Faith Are Changing the World (Continuum, 2006), Henderson is an international leader in theological education. She has pioneered programs for excellence in religious leadership of all faiths and progressive moral leadership in the public square.

(12) Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico

Since the 218th General Assembly (2008), the seminary was engaged in completing the self-study to present to our two accrediting bodies; the Association of Theological Schools and the Middle States Association. In addition, we completed the state’s license renewal process with the Puerto Rico Council of Higher Education. In 2009 the seminary was successfully reaccredited and licensed for another ten-year period. In the process, the seminary was commended for its faithful use of resources to accomplish its educational mission and for assessing the ways in which this mission is accomplished on behalf of the church and society at large. In 2009 the seminary launched a long-range plan to organize events for the next ten years to promote its vision and celebrate its mission towards its centenary commemoration in 2019.

(13) Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation

The Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation is the successor organization to the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Omaha, which closed in 1943. While we have no degree programs, the Foundation provides numerous educational events and scholarship opportunities for Presbyterian seminarians, clergy, commissioned lay pastors, and church leaders. Our scholarships, for example, are offered on a competitive basis to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) inquirers and candidates who are attending any of our ten denominational seminaries. We are continuing to provide high-quality conferences in several states that focus on critical issues for those who lead our churches and other institutional ministries. In addition, we are partnering with the University of Nebraska-Omaha to offer a noncredit distance education course in church administration to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) clergy and commissioned lay pastors in our thirteen-state region.

In 2009, the Foundation contributed significant funds to leadership development programs to benefit the broader church. We donated $133,000 to the support of a variety of lifelong learning programs for the servants of the church. We also provided $86,000 for grants and scholarships to seminarians. Starting in 2009, we eliminated our grant repayment program and turned all of our seminary student support into scholarships. We are maintaining that policy in 2010 and increasing our funding to lifelong learning programs.

The Foundation has an actively managed endowment and a committed board of directors. Through their efforts and the generous support of congregations and individual gifts, we hope to fulfill our mission, which is, “to seek, develop, and support excellence in Christian Leadership through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”
Item 18-01

[The assembly disapproved Item 18-01. See pp. 54, 55.]

On Directing the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Extend Benefits to Same-gender Spouses and Domestic Partners—From the Presbytery of Boston.

The Presbytery of Boston respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to issue the following directive to the Board of Pensions and its directors:

The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directs the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to modify its policies regarding coverage of dependents to ensure that applications for enrollment will be accepted and honored for same-gender spouses and domestic partners of church personnel who are or will be covered by its Benefits Plan and programs. Upon application by a member, the Board of Pensions shall enroll as a dependent a same-gender spouse, a partner joined in civil union, or a domestic partner—and their dependent children—depending upon the state law governing the status of the couple’s relationship, and adopting policies and definitions that do not penalize couples according to their state of residence.

Rationale

The 218th General Assembly (2008) voted overwhelmingly (516 to 151) to take the following action:

1. Renew and strengthen the long-standing Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) commitment to equal protection under the law for lesbian and gay persons and the 216th General Assembly (2004)'s affirmation of the right of same-gender persons to civil union and, thereby, to all the benefits, privileges, and responsibilities of civil union.

   a. Recognize that married couples enjoy more than 1,000 protections, benefits, and responsibilities that are denied to committed couples in same-gender partnerships and their children.

   b. Recognize that equality under the law does not discriminate against some committed couples but sees that same-gender partners also have access to all protections, benefits, and responsibilities of civil union.

   c. Request the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Council, and other representatives of the PC(USA) to urge state legislatures and the federal government to apply the principle of equal protection to same-gender couples and their children.

In the same vote they determined to “[s]upport congregations, sessions, and ministers of Word and Sacrament who are seeking to extend pastoral care as well as outreach and evangelism to same-gender couples and their nontraditional families who are more and more our neighbors on our streets and our fellow members in our pews…”—and our workers in the church office, we might add (Minutes, 2008, p. 259). The benefits and privileges referred to surely must include medical insurance, retirement benefits, and the like.

However, the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) extends benefits only to spouse and dependent children while adopting a narrow interpretation of this coverage of spouses of church personnel (clergy as well as lay personnel):

“Based on current law and Church policy, the Board would not accept an application to enroll a legally married same sex spouse. The Benefits Plan is governed by Pennsylvania law which does not recognize as valid a marriage other than one between a man and a woman. The Board of Pensions, as a corporation related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), also strives to administer the Benefits Plan to comport with the normative values of the church, insofar as legally possible. Pennsylvania’s definition of marriage is consistent with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”

Since 1977, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor denominations have called for protection against social and economic discrimination based upon a person’s sexual orientation.

It is hypocritical for the church to exempt ourselves from the principles of equal protection that we are urging government agencies and businesses to adopt; Jesus Christ exhorted his disciples with the metaphor of the speck and the log (Mt. 7:3–5). Many government agencies and private corporations already extend benefits to domestic partners of their employees. The church cannot be less generous than these secular entities and claim to practice what we preach. Members of the Benefits Plan and programs, whether ministers of Word and Sacrament or lay employees, are entitled to equal pay for equal work, including coverage for their dependents.

Because state laws vary widely for same-gender couples, and equity demands that persons not be discriminated against by the PC(USA) based on where they live, one legal definition of an eligible partner will not be sufficient; the intent of this action is to provide coverage for long-term, committed, same-gender couples (and their children) who have availed themselves of the form of recognition of their relationship available to them in their state.

Common documentation requirements allow for an employee to claim eligibility by providing one or more of the following:
• Partnership affidavit (as defined by the Board of Pensions)
• Municipal domestic partnership registration
• State domestic partnership registration
• State civil union license
• State marriage license
• Marriage license issued in other countries

The Board of Pensions, in its feasibility study submitted to the 217th General Assembly (2006) (Section f, Conclusion), indicated that it is feasible to implement this directive with a slight increase in the dues of approximately 1 percent of effective salary, and estimated that it would take about eighteen months to implement (Section g, Implementation Plan).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 18-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 18-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 18-01 be approved.

Rationale

In numerous statements over the last two decades, the church has stated its support for civil and legal rights for homosexual persons that are equal to those of heterosexual persons. The 208th General Assembly (1996) urged the Stated Clerk to consider filing friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation that would give civil rights to same-sex partners (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p.122). Moreover, in its policy on families and the church’s support for families of many forms, Transforming Families, the church stated, “… Despite lack of agreement among Presbyterians regarding same-sex families, children of such couples need the same advocacy, protection, and respect that we encourage for all children” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p.776). For the church to deny equal benefits to the domestic partners of employees and to their children is clearly inconsistent with church policy.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 18-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 18-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture.

Rationale

In order for our church to maintain its integrity, we must do ourselves what we long have encouraged others to do. We cannot continue to deny coverage under the guise that it follows state law in Pennsylvania where our offices are located. This overture speaks for justice, and we must support it and extend benefits to all committed partners and dependent children.

Our Stated Clerk, the Reverend Gradye Parsons, laid out a concise and coherent reasoning for celebrating President Obama’s hospital visitation directive for same-gender partners in his statement posted 20 April 2010. His words are apt for considering the need for same-gender benefits as well:

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has long supported equal access to civil rights for all our sisters and brothers. Indeed, in 1978, the Presbyterian General Assembly wrote “there is no legal, social, or moral justification for denying homosexual persons access to the basic requirements of human social existence.” We are all children of God with inherent rights and human dignity.

Presbyterian General Assemblies have urged the passage of laws to prohibit discrimination based on the sexual orientation of a person in the areas of employment, housing, and public accommodations. Most recently, the 218th General Assembly (2008) “renewed and strengthened the long-standing Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) commitment to equal protection under the law for lesbian and gay persons … and their children.”
This overture calls for equal provision and protection under the law for lesbian and gay children of God. Since the PC(USA) is committed to this already, it seems approving this overture is the only option.

BOARD OF PENSIONS COMMENT ON 18-01

Comment on Item 18-01—from the Board of Pensions.

Item 18-01 from the Presbytery of Boston would direct the Board of Pensions (the Board) to extend benefits to the same-gender partners of members of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the Plan) and dependent children of those partners. This overture is similar in intent to Item 18-06 from the Presbytery of New Castle. The Board’s comments to the two overtures are also quite similar, differing only in the sections that address the specific language of the overture.

Overview

Introduction

The Board does not take a position on the policy issue of whether to extend benefits to same-gender partners or not, but will follow the normative values of the church in so far as legally possible. The Board believes that these matters must be decided by the church through action of the General Assembly.

With that in mind, the Board seeks to achieve four ends with this comment:

1. to explain the structure of the Benefits Plan, introducing commissioners to its several components,
2. to suggest edits for clarification in the recommendation’s language,
3. to make clear to the General Assembly how the Board would interpret the recommendation, implement the changes, and administer the benefits, should the assembly approve the overture, and
4. to inform the General Assembly of the total cost of implementing the overture (an increase of up to 1 percent of Benefits Plan dues) and request approval in advance from the General Assembly for the Board to adopt a 0.4 percent increase in pension dues. (General Assembly approval is not required for the additional dues increases, 0.5 percent in medical dues and 0.1 percent in death and disability dues, that may be required to cover the cost of the additional benefits.)

Benefits Plan Background

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was established to provide retirement, disability, death, medical, and optional benefits to members of the Benefits Plan, their eligible dependents, and beneficiaries. The section numbers below refer to sections of the Benefits Plan itself.

The Medical Plan provides healthcare coverage to the member, his or her spouse, and eligible children (Sec. 13.2). For traditional coverage, the church employer pays 19.5 percent of the employee’s effective salary for the coverage. Effective salary includes cash compensation, any housing allowance, and certain fringe benefits. The dues are the same regardless of whether the coverage is for a single person or a family.

The Pension Plan provides:

• a monthly retirement benefit for the member for the duration of his or her life, and
• a survivor’s pension benefit to the member’s eligible survivors (paid to the eligible survivors surviving in the first of the following classes: an eligible surviving spouse; unmarried dependent children under age of twenty-one; dependent parents; unmarried dependent siblings). To be an eligible spouse, the marriage must have taken place before the member’s receipt of his or her first retirement income payment or at least one year prior to the member’s death.

The Pension Plan does not offer a single life annuity benefit option and there is no reduction in the retirement income benefits of the member to provide the normal survivor’s pension benefit (50 percent of the annual pension credits accrued) to the member’s eligible survivors. If there is no eligible survivor, no survivor’s pension benefit is paid (Sec. 9.1–9.2).

The church employer pays 11 percent of an employee’s effective salary for Pension benefits.

The Death and Disability Plan provides:
Salary Continuation benefits payable to the member’s designated beneficiary(ies). If no designation is on file, it is paid to the eligible survivors (by class: surviving spouse of marriage of at least one year in duration; unmarried dependent children under age of twenty-one or totally disabled dependent children; children regardless of age). In default thereof, the benefits are paid to the estate (Sec. 10.1).

Lump Sum Death Benefit paid to the member’s survivors (in the same classes described for the survivor’s pension in 9.2). If a member dies without an eligible survivor, a Lump Sum Death Benefit in an amount equal to 100 percent of the lesser of the member’s Death Benefit Basis or $90,000 shall be paid to the member’s estate.

Children’s Education Benefit payable to each of the member’s children who are under the age of twenty-five. This benefit is $9,000 a year for each of the first four years of study beyond high school during which such child is in full-time attendance at an accredited school, college, university, or other institution of higher learning. The maximum aggregate benefit for any one child is $36,000.

The church employer pays 1 percent of an employee’s effective salary for Death and Disability benefits.

If the overture is approved, eligible same-gender partners and their children would be eligible to receive the survivor benefits described above.

Suggested Edits for Clarification

a. The Board recommends changing the word “directs” in the first sentence of Item 18-01 to “urge”, and the word “shall” in the second sentence to “is urged to”. The General Assembly, by creating an independent, incorporated Board of Pensions to be responsible for benefits, vested in that board the responsibility for decisions on matters under its jurisdiction. It would serve neither the Board nor the church to have decisions of the incorporated Board of Pensions subject to appeal to the unincorporated, ecclesiastical General Assembly. The General Assembly has control of the Board by virtue of the requirements that it elects each director of the Board and confirms the election of a new president of the Board.

b. The Board recommends that the phrase “same-gender” be inserted prior to each occurrence of the words and phrases “spouse”, “partner joined in civil union”, and “domestic partner”. The terms “spouse”, “civil union”, and “domestic partner” have varying definitions in different states, some states include domestic partners of the opposite sex. In its consultation with the presbyteries proposing and concurring with the overture, it became clear that the intent of the presbyteries was to secure coverage for same-gender couples. The insertion of these words is intended to clarify that benefits are to be extended to same-gender couples, and not to unmarried opposite-gender couples. Benefits are already available to opposite-gender couples through marriage.

c. The Board recommends that the phrase which begins “depending upon the state law governing...” be struck and replaced with the following: “basing their coverage at a minimum on their having fulfilled the requirements of the laws of the state in which they reside to obtain the status of a same-gender couple, and on the Board of Pensions having adopted policies and definitions that recognize the state law differences in the treatment of same-gender couples.” This replacement would clarify that all couples enrolling for benefits must seek the maximum civil endorsement of their relationship legally permissible in their state and city of residence. Those couples who live in states where same-gender marriage is legal must be married to be eligible for benefits, those in states where civil unions are legal must have a civil union to be eligible for benefits, etc. Couples must get as close to marriage as is permitted in their situation.

The church has spoken out for civil rights including benefits for “committed couples” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 259), but not for couples who have failed to demonstrate a public and lasting commitment to each other. This provision would seek to ensure that a lasting commitment has been made.

Please see the end of this comment for a version of the recommendation that addresses each of these concerns.

Interpretation, Implementation, and Administration

Interpretation:

The Board, in a feasibility study on same-gender domestic partner benefits that was reported to the 217th General Assembly (2006), has defined several terms. Absent contradictory direction from the General Assembly, the Board will define terms as follows:

a. Domestic partners: “… two individuals, over the age of eighteen and not related by blood in any way that would prevent [either of them from] being married to each other if they were of the opposite sex, who are of the same sex, not married or part of another domestic partnership, and have agreed to live in a long-term committed relationship with each other” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 87).

b. Long-term Committed Relationship: one in which “... the couple has made an express commitment to each other that is equivalent to the promises made by a couple in a civil marriage ceremony, if such ceremony were permitted by law for a same-sex couple. Such a commitment is demonstrated if the couple is cohabitating (unless employment or a medical reason necessitates a separate living arrangement); has agreed to accept financial responsibility for each other’s living expenses; and is [presenting themselves] to the public as having made such a commitment. In jurisdictions where a civil union, domestic partner registry, or other form of official declaration is available for same-sex couples, the couple has fulfilled the requirements of the Law to obtain such official status” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 87).

The question of whether to enroll same-gender partners of ministers of Word and Sacrament, elders, and deacons in the Plan must be addressed by the General Assembly. The Board also notes that the Book of Order at G-6.0106(b) declares that “[t]hose who are called to office in the church [including elders, deacons, and ministers of the Word and Sacrament.] are to lead a life in obedience to Scripture and in conformity to the historic confessional standards of the church. Among these standards is the requirement to live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman (W-4.9001), or chastity in singleness.” With this constitutional mandate in mind, and absent contradictory direction from the General Assembly, the Board would exclude all ministers of the Word and Sacrament from eligibility to enroll a same-gender spouse or same-gender domestic partner.

Implementation:

In its feasibility study, the Board noted that, as this change would necessitate significant revisions to the Board’s administrative processes, computer database structures, and many communication instruments including publications and websites, the timeline for implementation is eighteen months from the date of General Assembly approval. Additionally, the Board will implement a new benefits administration system during 2011. Making these changes effective January 1, 2012, would alleviate the significant costs that would be required to implement these benefits in both the legacy system and the new system.

Should the General Assembly approve language urging the extension of benefits as described in the overture, the Board will implement the changes necessary to offer benefits under the Plan, effective January 1, 2012.

Administration:

Prior to enrollment, the Board will require verification of the relationship, either through a copy of a civil government document or an affidavit. In jurisdictions where civil marriage, civil union, domestic partner registry, or other form of official declaration is available for same-gender couples, this documentation would be required to enroll a same-gender partner. For those in jurisdictions where such official documentation is not available, the Board will require an affidavit documenting the partnership signed by both parties. Policies will be put in place to ensure that the requirements for enrollment are equivalent for same-gender couples and opposite-gender couples.

As with any enrollment of a dependent, the Board will require the signature of an official at the employing organization.

The Board also notes the following challenge for administrative structures of the church in administering these benefits. The benefits that are provided to the domestic partner are taxable; as these benefits would not flow from a federally-recognized marriage, the imputed value of the medical benefits is taxable to the employee. The taxes payable are federal income, FICA for lay persons and SECA for ministers—by both the employee and the employing organization—and, in some cases, state income taxes. Churches and employing organizations will be required to report the financial value of the benefits coverage on the employee’s W-2 forms. The administrative requirements of tracking and reporting these values would present challenges and increased costs for particular churches and employing organizations across the church.

Costs of Implementing the Recommendation

As noted in the rationale of the overture, the implementation of this recommendation would carry with it an increase in Plan dues for all members of 1 percent. As a portion of this increase would be allocated to the Pension Plan, and General Assembly approval is required in advance of any increase in Pension Plan dues prior to taking effect, the Board recommends that the General Assembly consider the dues increase as part of the recommendation, so as to not divorce the action from its costs. The Board estimates that 0.4 percent of the dues increase would be allocated to the Pension Plan, 0.1 percent to the Death and Disability Plan, and 0.5 percent to the Medical Plan.

Conclusion and Recommended Substitute Language

While reiterating that the Board does not take a position on the policy issue of whether to extend benefits to these same-gender partners or not, the Board does encourage the General Assembly to consider language that is as clear and unambiguous as possible. The language recommended by the Board to capture all of the concerns raised in this comment, and structured to serve as a motion to strike and replace, is:
The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to

1. continue its churchwide gifts program, as well as utilize the Foundation’s subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., for the benefit of churches, church organizations, and individuals who wish to use the foregoing to make gifts as an expression of Christian faith and stewardship;

2. continue promoting appropriate investment in New Covenant Funds, organized with participation by the Foundation in July 1999, which are managed in a way that is consistent with the social-witness principles of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and

3. explore and initiate ways to enhance its expertise and capacity in support of planned and deferred giving (including wills emphasis) and to explore the services of New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., and New Covenant Funds, that will allow these programs and entities to be ever more effective contributors toward the fulfillment of the Great Commission for the Glory of God.

Rationale

Each year, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation trustees ask the General Assembly to endorse the Foundation’s work in support of mission and ministry throughout the church. This unbroken series of affirmations allows the Foundation to confidently pursue its ministry among congregations, presbyteries, synods, related organizations, and individual Presbyterians. General Assembly validation of our vital work on behalf of mission and ministry is essential to our effectiveness throughout the church.

A total of $72.8 million was made available through the Foundation for mission in 2009. Additionally, as a ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Foundation’s efforts to nurture the accumulated resources of Presbyterians to further the mission of the church, call us to grow the resources that support mission giving for the future. New gifts and accounts amounting to almost $16.8 million, including $2.2 million in life income plans, and $14.6 million in current gifts, were received over the course of the year.

These striking results are a testament to the power of giving witnessed by the Foundation as it lives its goal of bringing people and mission together. Because of the generosity of faithful Presbyterians, over the past five years the Foundation has made available more than $385.9 million for the work and mission of the church.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) confirm the election of the Reverend Thomas F. Taylor by the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation for a four-year term as Foundation President and Chief Executive Officer.
The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation Board of Trustees appointed a presidential search committee chaired by Elinor Hite, former Foundation board chair. The membership of the committee included Timothy Clark, Foundation board chair, and Trustees David Davis, Karen Garrett, Paul Lee, Samuel McNairy, Roscoe Overton, and Barbara Sarjeant, as well as former Foundation Board Chairs Lynwood Battle and Steve Martin.

Following an extensive search, the committee identified and recommended the Reverend Dr. Thomas F. Taylor as a candidate for the position of President and Chief Executive Officer of the Presbyterian Foundation.

On November 9, 2009, the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Foundation unanimously, and with gratitude to God, called and elected the Reverend Dr. Thomas F. Taylor to a four-year term as President and Chief Executive Officer of the Presbyterian Foundation subject to the confirmation of the General Assembly.

The Reverend Dr. Taylor comes to the Presbyterian Foundation from the General Assembly Mission Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), where he served as deputy executive director for Mission. In that role, Taylor oversaw six ministry areas that administer the mission work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s national offices in more than one hundred countries.

The Reverend Dr. Taylor was ordained to the ministry in 1995 and is a member of the Presbytery of San Gabriel. In his capacity as ordained minister, Taylor last served as senior minister at Glenkirk Presbyterian Church in Southern California. Prior to his twelve-year tenure as a pastor, Taylor practiced as a litigation attorney in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Taylor received his undergraduate degree with honors in history from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he also earned his Juris Doctorate in law. Taylor received his Masters of Divinity from Yale University-Divinity School and his Ph.D. from Fuller Theological Seminary in Intercultural Studies, where he continues to teach social justice as adjunct faculty.

Item 18-04

[The assembly approved item 18-04. See pp. 54, 55.]

The Board of Pensions recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) grant permission to the Board of Pensions to evaluate and determine the future use, including any possible disposition, of the cluster of retirement homes in Los Gatos, California, known as El Sombroso Oaks without further review or approval by the General Assembly.

Rationale

The Board of Pensions believes that taking this action is appropriate and will enable the Board of Pensions to best serve retired ministers who depend on the Assistance Program for their well-being.

The Homes Program of the Board of Pensions is more than one hundred years old. When it began, many ministers lived in manses during their active years of service and faced the challenge of finding affordable housing upon retirement. The program offered retirement housing at a moderate cost to ministers with modest incomes and without housing for their retirement years. At the height of the program, the Board of Pensions owned some 375 houses, apartments, and congregate living units in various locations across the country. While this program provided a needed service to retired ministers though the years, the current circumstances of retired ministers have changed significantly. Ministers’ retirement incomes have increased due to improvements in the Pension Plan and more ministers now own homes. In addition, the network of Presbyterian-related retirement communities (the Presbyterian Association of Homes and Services for the Aging), which did not exist when the Board of Pensions’ Homes Program began, offers similar or greater services to retired ministers than those available through the Board of Pensions’ Homes Program.

In recognition of these circumstances, the Board of Pensions initiated the Housing Supplement Program. This program provides financial assistance to retired ministers who have modest incomes so that their housing costs do not exceed a reasonable percent of their retirement income. In contrast to a program of owning houses or apartments, the Housing Supplement Program provides greater flexibility to retired ministers to live where they wish, in the geographic region of their choosing, and either independently in their own home or in a retirement community.

It has been and continues to be the intention of the Board of Pensions to both anticipate the changing housing needs of retirees and ensure the continued care of the current residents of homes owned by the Board of Pensions.

In recognition of these changing needs, the Board of Pensions requested permission from the 200th General Assembly (1988) to change the Homes Program from one based solely on Board of Pensions-owned homes to one based on housing assistance supplements. The General Assembly approved the strategic direction of the Homes Program and authorized the sale of properties then owned and received thereafter with the proceeds going to the Housing Supplement Program. The General Assembly withheld the sale of two housing communities operated by the Board of Pensions and instructed it to continue its “ownership and management of the clusters at Morganwood (Swarthmore, Pennsylvania) and El Sombroso Oaks (Los Gatos, California) with no further sale of these clusters without General Assembly approval” (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 97).

Upon recommendation of the Board of Pensions, the 214th General Assembly (2002) approved the sale of the retirement homes at Morganwood (Minutes, 2002, Part I. p. 19). The proceeds from that sale went to the Housing Supplement Program, enabling the Board of Pensions to support both the residents at Morganwood and the larger community of retirees. Through the Housing Supplement Program, the Board of Pensions provides subsidies to retirees who were residents of Morganwood at the time of the sale and those residents have expressed satisfaction with the new arrangement.

In addition, upon recommendation of the Board of Pensions, the 215th General Assembly (2003) approved an affiliation agreement between Southern California Presbyterian Homes (SCPH) and Westminster Gardens (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 49). This agreement, which took effect in May 2004, transferred responsibility for day-to-day operations of Westminster Gardens from the Board of Pensions to SCPH. This transfer permitted the two entities to each serve the residents of Westminster Gardens in the way they are most capable; SCPH as owner and manager of the facility, and the Board of Pensions, through its Housing Supplement Program, as a safety net for retirees with housing needs. As with the Morganwood residents, the Board of Pensions provides transitional subsidies to residents of Westminster Gardens who have need of financial assistance through the Housing Supplement Program. The residents of Westminster Gardens have been pleased with the new arrangement.

El Sombroso Oaks, the cluster of homes in Los Gatos, California, is the last remaining cluster of homes owned and operated by the Board of Pensions. The Board of Pensions continues to care for both the residents and the property. However, consistent with its General Assembly-approved strategic direction, it is important for the Board of Pensions to evaluate the property at El Sombroso Oaks and determine the best future use of the property.

Because of the biennial General Assembly schedule (with a two-year period between meetings), the restrictions placed on the Board of Pensions by the 200th General Assembly (1988) make it difficult for the Board of Pensions to address issues related to El Sombroso Oaks in a timely and efficient manner. The current restriction, which requires General Assembly approval for any sale, could create uncertainty for up to twenty-four months after a potential decision to make a change at El Sombroso Oaks, leaving the Board of Pensions in an uncertain predicament and the residents with unnecessary anxiety as to the effect of a decision on their lives.

The information above, including the Board of Pensions’ intent to seek a release of the General Assembly approval requirement, has been shared with the residents of El Sombroso Oaks. The Board of Pensions will continue to share information with the residents about any changes proposed for El Sombroso Oaks.

Therefore, the Board of Pensions requests that the restriction that “no further sale of these clusters without General Assembly approval” be removed to provide more flexibility to the Board of Pensions in evaluating and making decisions regarding the property at El Sombroso Oaks. As with Morganwood and Westminster Gardens, any decisions made by the Board of Pensions will be made in consultation with the residents and with the assurance that the future care of current residents will be a significant consideration in any decision.

Item 18-05

[The assembly approved Item 18-05. See pp. 54, 55.]

Report of the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee.

The Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) do the following:

1. That the RFRC be reauthorized by the General Assembly.

2. That the RFRC be composed of seven members appointed by the Moderator of the General Assembly, including two representatives designated by the Foundation Board, two representatives designated by the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), and three members appointed by the Moderator who are not involved in either agency and have an understanding of the applicable principles in both Reformed theology and civil law, and that each member’s term of service be six years.

3. That the committee chair be one of the members appointed by the Moderator who are not involved in either agency and that the committee chair serve at the Moderator’s request.
4. That meetings of the RFRC be held electronically (by teleconference or video-conference) whenever possible.

5. That the RFRC meet every six months, or as meetings are needed. The chair will be responsible for scheduling meetings.

6. That the RFRC present a written report to each General Assembly and that the committee chair or another representative of the RFRC be available to respond to questions or concerns of the assembly.

7. That the RFRC use the following process should an issue between the GAMC and the Foundation not be resolved.

Proposed Procedures for the General Assembly
Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (“RFRC”)

I. The RFRC shall meet upon referral of a dispute concerning the “restricted nature of particular funds or other disputes pertaining to use and expenditures of restricted funds” (alternate resolution to Item 08-21, Recommendation A.1., Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 720–21) that is filed in the Office of the Stated Clerk and presented to the chair of the committee, with copies to the committee members and the non-referring agency, in “good order.” Originals of all documents, briefs, and accompanying exhibits shall be filed in the Office of the Stated Clerk.

a. The meeting schedule shall be set by the committee chair and any business of the committee may be conducted telephonically or by videoconference.

II. A matter referred to the RFRC will be considered to be in good order when referred to the committee chair with a certification signed by the Executive Director of the GAMC or the Foundation President, with a copy provided to the non-referring party for that party’s signature, that the process set forth in Paragraph 39.019 of the 1996 Joint Report to the General Assembly (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 618), as modified by Item 08-21 of the 218th General Assembly (2008), has been followed and that the process has not resulted in resolution of the dispute.

a. The RFRC requires that a joint certification be signed by the Executive Director of the GAMC and the Foundation President that the process set forth in Paragraph 30.019 of the 1996 Joint Report to the General Assembly (as modified by Item 08-21 of the 2008 General Assembly) has been followed and that the process has not resulted in resolution of the dispute. The certification requirement is intended to encourage dialogue prior to referral.

b. Within thirty days of the time of referral, the certifying/moving party will file a brief with exhibits regarding the matter in dispute and its rationale as to how the dispute should be decided (that shall be no longer than thirty pages, 12 point type and double-spaced). The brief shall contain a summary of issues, a statement of relief sought, a statement of facts, and an argument. All relevant source documents should also accompany the filing. If all necessary documentation, including exhibits, cannot be provided under these page restrictions, the party may ask the committee chair for approval to exceed the thirty-page limit with respect to exhibits only.

c. Upon receipt of a brief as described in II(b), the committee chair will notify the non-certifying/moving agency that it has thirty days from notice to file a brief with exhibits regarding the matter in dispute and its rationale as to how the dispute should be decided (that shall be no longer than thirty pages, 12 point type, and double-spaced). This response shall contain a summary of issues, a statement of relief sought, a statement of facts, and an argument. All relevant source documents should also accompany the filing. If all necessary documentation, including exhibits, cannot be provided under these page restrictions, the party may ask the committee chair for approval to exceed the thirty-page limit with respect to exhibits only.

d. Within fifteen days of receipt of the non-moving party’s response, the moving party shall be entitled to file a reply (that is not more than five pages in length, 12 point type, and double-spaced). If all necessary documentation cannot be provided under these page restrictions, the party may ask the committee chair for approval to exceed the five-page limit.

III. Within fifteen days of receipt of the moving party’s reply or decision not to file a reply, the committee chair, in consultation with the RFRC, will determine whether an oral presentation of the issues would be beneficial to the RFRC and may, at the chair’s discretion, schedule oral presentation (that may be made telephonically or by videoconference) before the RFRC. If additional information is believed by the RFRC to be necessary, the chair will request it in writing to both parties and will specify the time within which it is to be provided. Copies of any correspondence will be provided to the Office of the Stated Clerk.

IV. Either after oral arguments, if requested, or after the presentation of briefing papers and any rebuttal, the committee shall meet to consider the matter referred. The matter will be decided by majority vote of the committee.
a. The agencies will be notified in a timely manner in writing of the decision and will be provided a sufficient explanation of the rationale for the decision by the RFRC at the time of notification so that the parties and the General Assembly can understand the decision as well as the basis of the decision. Dissents from the majority ruling will be permitted, provided the dissenter(s) participated in the deliberations. A copy of the decision will be provided to the Office of the Stated Clerk, recorded in the minutes of the RFRC, and be made public as soon as possible following the end of the meeting.

b. The RFRC, as part of its decision, may require that a cy pres or other equivalent action be filed by one or both of the parties in the appropriate court.

c. Once a decision is rendered, either party may pursue a cy pres or declaratory judgment action in civil court; in other words, where issues remain disputed, either or both parties may file a cy pres or other equivalent action in the appropriate court.

V. Nothing in these rules will prevent the parties from resolving the issue(s) between themselves at any point in the process.

VI. When the confidentiality of the subject matter is impeding the open work of the RFRC, its meetings may be closed. Meetings may be closed only after serious consideration and by a majority vote of all members present. Such closure must be limited in time and scope to matters described in 3(a) of the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy. In closed meetings, only voting members and other persons invited by the RFRC are to be present. The reason(s) for closing must be announced before closure and also must be recorded in the minutes.

VII. The parties can communicate about the issue(s) at any time with their two respective appointed committee members. Ex parte communication with the Moderator’s appointees regarding the issue(s) is prohibited; communication with the Moderator’s appointees regarding administrative or procedural matters is permitted and should ordinarily be directed to the committee chair.

VIII. The RFRC will respect legal confidentiality restrictions on either party.

IX. All costs of the RFRC shall be equally paid by the parties.

X. The RFRC shall establish a quorum at each meeting and a majority for each vote according to the most recent version of Robert’s Rules of Order.

XI. The RFRC may, at its discretion, employ outside legal counsel.

Endnote 1. If the certification is filed by one agency head, then clearly that agency is the “certifying/moving party.” If the certification is signed by both agency heads, then they shall designate one of the agencies as the moving party for purposes of the referral.

Rationale

This report and its recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

The purpose of the General Assembly Mission Council (the “GAMC”), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, and the Presbyterian Foundation (the “Foundation”) is to serve our Lord by strengthening the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The GAMC and the Foundation presented to the 218th General Assembly (2008) their disagreement on issues concerning the appropriate expenditure of restricted funds for the mission of the church. The GAMC and the Foundation went to the General Assembly seeking direction and the hope for reconciliation. As part of its response to that request for direction, the General Assembly established the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) to create a process to be used should an issue between the GAMC and the Foundation not be resolved.

The General Assembly directed that, in conducting any review requiring their intervention, the RFRC will be guided by the following principles. Pursuant to the 1986 Deliverances, the missional responsibility and the fiduciary responsibility under civil law rests with the General Assembly. Thus, all the agencies of the General Assembly (GA) are bound to follow the directives and priorities of the GA. The GA vests the responsibility for implementation of program-related mission with the GAMC, and the Foundation pledges to respect that role. The GA vests the responsibility for fiduciary review in the Foundation, and the GAMC pledges to respect that role. Both the Foundation and the GAMC must comply with applicable laws.

The General Assembly further directed that the RFRC create a process to be used should an issue not be resolved in accordance with the amended 1996 agreement (1996 Joint Report of the General Assembly Council and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 618). The RFRC must specifically recognize and address the fiduciary responsibilities by which the Foundation and the GAMC are required to operate under civil law, and where issues remain disputed, the Foundation and the GAMC shall file a cy pres or other equivalent action in the appropriate court.

The RFRC recognizes and celebrates that the substantial majority of funds that the Foundation and the GAMC together disburse to beneficiaries for the mission of the church are handled cooperatively, collegially, efficiently, and without disagreement.

Item 18-06

[In response to Item 18-06, the assembly approved an alternate resolution with comment. See pp. 54, 56.]

On Directing the Board of Pensions to Extend Benefits to Same-Gender Spouses and Domestic Partners—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

[Alternate Resolution:

[That the 219th General Assembly (2010):

1. Urge the Board of Pensions to adopt amendments to the Benefits Plan to extend eligibility for spousal and dependent benefits under the Plan to Benefits Plan members, their same-gender domestic partners, and the children of their same-gender domestic partners, on the same basis as, and equivalent to, benefits made available to Benefits Plan members, their spouses, and the children of their spouses.

2. Approve an increase in dues for the Benefits Plan of up to 1 percent, effective January 1, 2012, to be allocated among the plans of the Board of Pensions, including but not limited to the Pension Plan, as the Board, in its sole discretion, deems necessary to fund the cost of the additional benefits. Should the Board not implement these benefits for any reason, approval of the increase in dues is rescinded.

[Comment: That the Board of Pensions be highly urged to provide relief of conscience, to be implemented simultaneously with these actions, for those congregations for whom these actions cause a moral dilemma.]

The Presbytery of New Castle respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to issue the following directive to the Board of Pensions and its directors:

The 219th General Assembly (2010) directs the Board of Pensions to make benefits available to church employees, their domestic partners, and the children of their domestic partners on the same basis as, and equivalent to, benefits made available to church employees, their spouses, and the children of their spouses.

Rationale

The 218th General Assembly (2008) voted overwhelmingly (516 to 151) to take the following action:

1. Renew and strengthen the long-standing Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) commitment to equal protection under the law for lesbian and gay persons and the 216th General Assembly (2004)'s affirmation of the right of same-gender persons to civil union and, thereby, to all the benefits, privileges, and responsibilities of civil union.

   a. Recognize that married couples enjoy more than 1,000 protections, benefits, and responsibilities that are denied to committed couples in same-gender partnerships and their children.

   b. Recognize that equality under the law does not discriminate against some committed couples but sees that same-gender partners also have access to all protections, benefits, and responsibilities of civil union.

   c. Request the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Council, and other representatives of the PC(USA) to urge state legislatures and the federal government to apply the principle of equal protection to same-gender couples and their children. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 259)

In the same vote the commissioners pledged to “…[s]upport congregations, sessions, and ministers of the Word and Sacrament who are seeking to extend pastoral care as well as outreach and evangelism to same-gender couples and their nontraditional families who are more and more our neighbors on our streets and our fellow members in our pews…” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 259). And they are our workers in the church office. Health insurance and retirement benefits are fundamental benefits and privileges offered to married couples in the marketplace and within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Consistency with the foregoing action of the General Assembly requires extension of the benefits, privileges, and responsibilities to all domestic partners and the children of each partner.

Since 1977, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor denominations have called for protection against social and economic discrimination based upon a person’s sexual orientation.

It is hypocritical for the church to exempt itself and its adherents from the principles of equal protection that we are urging government agencies and businesses to adopt. Jesus Christ exhorted his disciples with the metaphor of the speck and the log (Mt. 7:3–5). Many government agencies and private corporations already extend benefits to domestic partners of their employees. The church cannot be less generous than these secular entities and claim to “… do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with [our] God” (Mic. 6:8b).

The Board of Pensions, in its feasibility study submitted to the 217th General Assembly (2006) (section f, Conclusion, of the report), indicated that it is feasible to implement this directive with an increase in the dues of approximately 1 percent of effective salary, and estimated that it would take about 18 months to implement (section g, Implementation Plan).^2

Endnotes

1. The Board of Pensions, in its feasibility study conducted on this question, defined “domestic partners” as “… two individuals, over the age of eighteen and not related by blood in a way that would prevent being married to each other if they were of the opposite sex, who are of the same sex, not married or part of another domestic partnership, and have agreed to live in a long-term committed relationship with each other.” “Long-term Committed Relationship” is further defined as one in which “… the couple has made an express commitment to each other that is equivalent to the promises made by a couple in a civil marriage ceremony if such ceremony were permitted by law for a same-sex couple. Such a commitment is demonstrated if the couple is cohabiting (unless employment or a medical reason necessitates a separate living arrangement); has agreed to accept financial responsibility for each other’s living expenses; and is presenting itself out to the public as having made such a commitment. In jurisdictions where a civil union, domestic partner registry, or other form of official declaration is available for same-sex couples, the couple has fulfilled the requirements of the Law to obtain such official status” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 87).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 18-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 18-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 18-06 be approved.

Rationale

In numerous statements over the last two decades, the church has stated its support for civil and legal rights for homosexual persons that are equal to those of heterosexual persons. The 208th General Assembly (1996) urged the Stated Clerk to consider filing friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation that would give civil rights to same-sex partners (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p.122). Moreover, in its policy on families and the church’s support for families of many forms, Transforming Families, the church stated, “… Despite lack of agreement among Presbyterians regarding same-sex families, children of such couples need the same advocacy, protection, and respect that we encourage for all children” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p.776). For the church to deny equal benefits to the domestic partners of employees and to their children is clearly inconsistent with church policy.

BOARD OF PENSIONS COMMENT ON ITEM 18-06

Comment on 18-06—From the Board of Pensions.

Item 18-06 from the Presbytery of New Castle would direct the Board of Pensions (the Board) to extend benefits to the same-gender partners of members of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the Plan) and dependent children of those partners. This overture is similar in intent to Item 18-01 from the Presbytery of Boston. The Board’s comments to the two overtures are also quite similar, differing only in the sections that address the specific language of the overture.
Overview

Introduction

The Board does not take a position on the policy issue of whether to extend benefits to these same-gender partners or not, but will follow the normative values of the church in so far as legally possible. The Board believes that these matters must be decided by the church through action of the General Assembly.

With that in mind, the Board seeks to achieve four ends with this comment:

1. to explain the structure of the Benefits Plan, introducing commissioners to its several components,
2. to suggest edits for clarification of the recommendation’s language,
3. to make clear to the General Assembly how it would interpret the recommendation, implement the changes, and administer the benefits, should the General Assembly approve the overture, and
4. to inform the General Assembly of the total cost of implementing the overture (an increase of up to 1 percent of Benefits Plan dues) and request approval in advance from the General Assembly for the Board to adopt a 0.4 percent increase in pension dues. (General Assembly approval is not required for the additional dues increases, 0.5 percent in medical dues and 0.1 percent in death and disability dues, which may be required to cover the cost of the additional benefits.)

Benefits Plan Background

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been established to provide retirement, disability, death, medical, and optional benefits to members of the Benefits Plan, their eligible dependents, and beneficiaries. The section numbers below refer to sections of the Benefits Plan itself.

The Medical Plan provides healthcare coverage to the member, his or her spouse, and eligible children (Sec. 13.2). For traditional coverage, the church employer pays 19.5 percent of the employee’s effective salary for the coverage. Effective salary includes cash compensation, any housing allowance, and certain fringe benefits. The dues are the same regardless of whether the coverage is for a single person or a family.

The Pension Plan provides:

• a monthly retirement benefit for the member for the duration of his or her life and
• a survivor’s pension benefit to the member’s eligible survivors (paid to the eligible survivors surviving in the first of the following classes: an eligible surviving spouse; unmarried dependent children under age of twenty-one; dependent parents; unmarried dependent siblings). To be an eligible spouse, the marriage must have taken place before the member’s receipt of his or her first retirement income payment or at least one year prior to the member’s death.

The Pension Plan does not offer a single life annuity benefit option and there is no reduction in the retirement income benefits of the member to provide the normal survivor’s pension benefit (50 percent of the annual pension credits accrued) to the member’s eligible survivors. If there is no eligible survivor, no survivor’s pension benefit is paid (Sec. 9.1–9.2).

The church employer pays 11 percent of an employee’s effective salary for Pension benefits.

The Death and Disability Plan provides:

• Salary Continuation benefits payable to the member’s designated beneficiary(ies). If no designation is on file, it is paid to the eligible survivors (by class: surviving spouse of marriage of at least one year in duration; unmarried dependent children under age of twenty-one or totally disabled dependent children; children regardless of age). In default thereof, the benefits are paid to the estate (Sec. 10.1).

• a Lump Sum Death Benefit paid to the member’s survivors (in the same classes described for the survivor’s pension in 9.2). If a member dies without an eligible survivor, a Lump Sum Death Benefit in an amount equal to 100 percent of the lesser of the member’s Death Benefit Basis or $90,000 shall be paid to the member’s estate.

• a Children’s Education Benefit payable to each of the member’s children who are under the age of twenty-five. This benefit is $9,000 a year for each of the first four years of study beyond high school during which such child is in full-time attendance at an accredited school, college, university, or other institution of higher learning. The maximum aggregate benefit for any one child is $36,000.

The church employer pays 1 percent of an employee’s effective salary for Death and Disability benefits.
If the overture is approved, eligible same-gender partners and their children would be eligible to receive the survivor benefits described above.

Suggested Edits for Clarification

a. The Board recommends changing the word “directs” in the first sentence to “urge.” The General Assembly, by creating an independent, incorporated Board of Pensions to be responsible for benefits, vested in that board the responsibility for decisions on matters under its jurisdiction. It would serve neither the Board nor the church to have decisions of the incorporated Board of Pensions subject to appeal to the unincorporated, ecclesiastical General Assembly. The General Assembly has control of the Board by virtue of the requirements that it elects each director of the Board and confirms the election of a new president of the Board.

Should the General Assembly approve language urging the extension of benefits as described in the overture, the Board will implement the changes necessary to offer benefits under the Plan, effective January 1, 2012.

b. The Board recommends that the phrase “church employees” be struck both places it occurs and replaced with “Benefits Plan members.” The Board covers many church employees under the Plan, but not all of them. There are many employees of particular churches and other employing organizations who are covered by other benefits programs or who are not offered benefits. This change would clarify that this recommendation is intended to apply to those already enrolled, or who become eligible for enrollment, in the Plan.

c. The Board recommends that the phrase “same-gender” be inserted prior to each occurrence of the phrase “domestic partner.” In its consultation with the presbyteries proposing and concurring with the overture, it became clear that the intent of the presbyteries is to secure coverage for same-gender couples. The insertion of these words is intended to clarify that benefits are to be extended to same-gender couples, and not to unmarried opposite-gender couples. Benefits are already available to opposite-gender couples through marriage.

Please see the end of this comment for a version of the recommendation that addresses each of these concerns.

Interpretation, Implementation, and Administration

Interpretation:

The Board, in a feasibility study on same-gender domestic partner benefits that was reported to the 217th General Assembly (2006), has defined several terms. Absent contradictory direction from the General Assembly, the Board will define terms as follows:

a. Domestic partners: “… two individuals, over the age of eighteen and not related by blood in any way that would prevent [either of them from] being married to each other if they were of the opposite sex, who are of the same sex, not married or part of another domestic partnership, and have agreed to live in a long-term committed relationship with each other” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 87).

b. Long-term Committed Relationship: one in which “… the couple has made an express commitment to each other that is equivalent to the promises made by a couple in a civil marriage ceremony, if such ceremony were permitted by law for a same-sex couple. Such a commitment is demonstrated if the couple is cohabitating (unless employment or a medical reason necessitates a separate living arrangement); has agreed to accept financial responsibility for each other’s living expenses; and is [presenting themselves] to the public as having made such a commitment. In jurisdictions where a civil union, domestic partner registry, or other form of official declaration is available for same-sex couples, the couple has fulfilled the requirements of the Law to obtain such official status” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 87).

The question of whether to enroll same-gender partners of ministers of Word and Sacrament, elders, and deacons must be addressed by the General Assembly. The Board also notes that the Book of Order at G-6.0106(b) declares that “[t]hose who are called to office in the church [including elders, deacons, and ministers of the Word and Sacrament,] are to lead a life in obedience to Scripture and in conformity to the historic confessional standards of the church. Among these standards is the requirement to live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman (W-4.9001), or chastity in singleness.” With this constitutional mandate in mind, and absent contradictory direction from the General Assembly, the Board would exclude all ministers of the Word and Sacrament from eligibility to enroll a same-gender spouse or same-gender domestic partner.

Implementation:

In its feasibility study, the Board noted that, as this change would necessitate significant revisions to the Board’s administrative processes, computer database structures, and many communication instruments including publications and websites, the timeline for implementation is eighteen months from the date of General Assembly approval. Additionally, the Board will... implement a new benefits administration system during 2011. Making these changes effective January 1, 2012, would alleviate the significant costs that would be required to implement these benefits in both the legacy system and the new system.

Should the General Assembly approve language urging the extension of benefits as described in the overture, the Board will implement the changes necessary to offer benefits under the Plan, effective January 1, 2012.

Administration:

Prior to enrollment, the Board will require verification of the relationship, either through a copy of a civil government document or an affidavit. In jurisdictions where civil marriage, civil union, domestic partner registry, or other form of official declaration is available for same-gender couples, this documentation would be required to enroll a same-gender partner. For those in jurisdictions where such official documentation is not available, the Board will require an affidavit documenting the partnership signed by both parties. Policies will be put in place to ensure that the requirements for enrollment are equivalent for same-gender couples and opposite-gender couples.

As with any enrollment of a dependent, the Board will require the signature of an official at the employing organization.

The Board also notes the following challenge for administrative structures of the church in administering these benefits. The benefits that are provided to the domestic partner are taxable; as these benefits would not flow from a federally-recognized marriage, the imputed value of the medical benefits is taxable to the employee. The taxes payable are federal income, FICA for lay persons and SECA for ministers—by both the employee and the employing organization—and, in some cases, state income taxes. Churches and employing organizations will be required to report the financial value of the benefits coverage on the employee’s W-2 forms. The administrative requirements of tracking and reporting these values would present challenges and increase costs for particular churches and employing organizations across the church.

Costs of Implementing the Recommendation

As noted in the rationale of the overture, the implementation of this recommendation would carry with it an increase in Plan dues for all members of 1 percent. As a portion of this increase would be allocated to the Pension Plan, and General Assembly approval is required in advance of any Pension Plan dues prior to the increase taking effect, the Board recommends that the General Assembly consider the dues increase as part of the recommendation, so as to not divorce the action from its costs. The Board estimates that 0.4 percent of the dues increase would be allocated to the Pension Plan, 0.1 percent to the Death and Disability Plan, and 0.5 percent to the Medical Plan.

Conclusion and Recommended Substitute Language

While reiterating that the Board does not take a position on the policy issue of whether to extend benefits to these same-gender partners or not, the Board does encourage the General Assembly to consider language that is as clear and unambiguous as possible. The language recommended by the Board to capture all of the concerns raised in this comment, and structured to serve as a motion to strike and replace, is:

“That the 219th General Assembly (2010):

1. Urge the Board of Pensions to adopt amendments to the Benefits Plan to extend eligibility for spousal and dependent benefits under the Plan to Benefits Plan members, their same-gender domestic partners, and the children of their same-gender domestic partners, on the same basis as, and equivalent to, benefits made available to Benefits Plan members, their spouses, and the children of their spouses.

2. Approve an increase in dues for the Benefits Plan of up to 1 percent, effective January 1, 2012, to be allocated among the plans of the Board of Pensions, including but not limited to the Pension Plan, as the Board, in its sole discretion, deems necessary to fund the cost of the additional benefits. Should the Board not implement these benefits for any reason, approval of the increase in dues is rescinded.”

Item 18-07

[The assembly disapproved Item 18-07. See pp. 54, 56.]

On the Medical Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Medications Requiring Pre-Authorization—From the Presbytery of Sierra Blanca.

The Presbytery of Sierra Blanca overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to require the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:
1. Post in a prominent place on the Board of Pensions Web site a complete list of medications requiring pre-authorization under the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in order to facilitate the ability of members to obtain medicines prescribed by their physician.

2. Affirm in a public manner that the requirement of pre-authorization of certain medicines is not an attempt on the part of the Board of Pensions or its agents to deny appropriate medical care or to ration medical care to the members of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

3. Adjust the terms of the Benefits Plan so that in the event a member’s physician is unable to come to agreement with the Board of Pension’s agents concerning a medication requiring pre-authorization, that the member be allowed to purchase the medication prescribed by his or her physician at the non-formulary rate.

_Rationale_

With the growing shortage of physicians and the increasing demand for medical care, many physicians are unable to respond quickly to prescription issues that arise when pre-authorization is required. Posting a list of medicines requiring pre-authorization will better enable patients to obtain, in a timely manner, appropriate medical care. The increasing demands upon physicians and the rigidity of the current pre-authorization system often result in a _de facto_ denial of medical care to patients who have been prescribed medicines requiring such pre-authorization. In some instances the delay caused by the requirements of pre-authorization can become life threatening. A mechanism needs to be in place to allow for exceptions to be made to the policy in a timely manner.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 18-07

_Advice and Counsel on Item 18-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)._

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 18-07 be approved with the following changes: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

1. Post in a prominent place on the Board of Pensions Web site a complete list of [formulary] medications requiring pre-authorization under the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in order to facilitate the ability of members to obtain medicines prescribed by their physician.

2. [Affirm in a public manner that the requirement of pre-authorization of certain medicines is not an attempt on the part of the Board of Pensions or its agents to deny appropriate medical care or to ration medical care to the members of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)] [Add to the Benefits/Prescription drugs Web page an expanded explanation of the program and its formulary; and the short-term, specialty, step-therapy, and pre-authorization medication programs].

3. Adjust the terms of the Benefits Plan so that in the event a decision on a medication requiring preauthorization has been submitted but remains in process, that the member be allowed to purchase one prescription of up to fifteen days of medication at the non-formulary rate [a member’s physician is unable to come to agreement with the Board of Pensions’ agents concerning a medication requiring pre-authorization, that the member be allowed to purchase the medication prescribed by his or her physician at the non-formulary rate].

_Rationale_

The Board of Pensions prescription drug Web pages currently post an abbreviated formulary listing the most commonly prescribed medications. Consistent with current practice, a formulary identifies covered medications and thus by their exclusion also identifies all non-covered medications, that is, medications that would require pre-authorization. Medications are subsequently added to the formulary as they are developed and prove efficacious. As new drugs are developed and approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) on a daily basis, it is not feasible or possible to attempt to maintain a negative list of medications, that is, a list of medications excluded from the formulary.

While the current Web page description of the drug program is adequate, it is spare and may not address general informational questions Benefits Plan members may have regarding categories of covered drugs. Members are provided a telephone number to inquire about drug plan coverage and specifics relative to their own individual coverage. An expanded explanation of the drug plan and its facets would benefit the Plan members.

It is compassionate and reasonable to allow a single, one-time only, medication purchase of a fifteen day supply of prescribed medication at the non-formulary rate for cases of an as-yet unresolved pre-authorization that have been instituted in a timely manner.
ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 18-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 18-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 18-07 overtures that the 219th General Assembly (2010) require the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to list on its website a complete list of medications requiring preauthorization, affirm publically that preauthorization of medications is not intended to deny or ration medical care to members of the Benefits Plan, allow members to purchase prescribed medications at the non-formulary rate should the physician be unable to come to an agreement with the Board of Pensions agents concerning a medication requiring pre-authorization.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture with the following revisions: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Sierra Blanca overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to require the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Post in a prominent place on the Board of Pensions Web site a complete list of [formulary] medications [requiring pre-authorization under the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in order to facilitate the ability of members to obtain medicines prescribed by their physician] [to replace the current abbreviated list].

2. [Affirm in a public manner that the requirement of pre-authorization of certain medicines is not an attempt on the part of the Board of Pensions or its agents to deny appropriate medical care or to ration medical care to the members of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)] [Add to the Benefits/Prescription drugs webpage an expanded explanation of the program and its formulary; and the short-term, specialty, step-therapy, and pre-authorization medication programs].

3. Adjust the terms of the Benefits Plan so that in the event a [member's physician is unable to come to agreement with the Board of Pension's agents concerning] [decision on] a medication requiring pre-authorization [has been submitted but remains in process], that the member be allowed to purchase [the medication prescribed by his or her physician] [one prescription of up to 15 days of medication] at the non-formulary rate.”

Rationale

The Board of Pensions prescription drug web pages currently post an abbreviated formulary listing the most commonly prescribed medications. Consistent with current practice, a formulary identifies covered medications and thus by their exclusion also identifies all non-covered medications, that is, medications that would require pre-authorization. Medications are subsequently added to the formulary as they are developed and prove efficacious. As new drugs are developed and approved by the FDA on a daily basis, it is not feasible or possible to attempt to maintain a negative list of medications, that is, a list of medications excluded from the formulary.

While the current webpage description of the drug program is adequate, it is sparse and may not address general informational questions Benefits Plan members may have regarding categories of covered drugs. Members are provided a telephone number to inquire about drug plan coverage and specifics relative to their own individual coverage. An expanded explanation of the drug plan and its facets would benefit the Plan members.

BOP COMMENT ON 18-07

Comment on Item 18-07—from the Board of Pensions.

Item 18-07 from the Presbytery of Sierra Blanca would require the Board of Pensions (the Board) to post information on its Web site about medications requiring pre-authorization, clarify its intent in requiring pre-authorization for certain medications, and adjust the terms of the Medical Plan in a particular way.

The Board of Pensions respectfully advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) to disapprove Item 18-07.

Should the 219th General Assembly (2010) wish to concur with the intent of the overture, the Board recommends changing the word “require” in the first sentence to “urge”.

The General Assembly, by creating an independent, incorporated Board of Pensions, responsible for benefits, vested in that board the responsibility for decisions on matters under its jurisdiction. It would serve neither the Board nor the church to have decisions of the incorporated Board of Pensions subject to appeal to the unincorporated, ecclesiastical General Assembly. The General Assembly has control of the Board by virtue of the requirements that it elects each director of the Board and confirms the election of a new president of the Board.
Rationale

An integral part of the Board of Pension’s Medical Plan, the Prescription Drug Program provides Plan members with coverage for medications prescribed by their physicians. Under this program, provided by Express Scripts (ESI) on behalf of the Board of Pensions, members share the cost of medically necessary drugs in the form of copayments, which vary in accordance with the medication they take and the pharmacy used to fill their prescription.

In accordance with the terms of the Plan, some drugs are subject to prior authorization. This is designed to limit costs for both the member and the Plan, while ensuring that members receive safe and effective medications.

Prior Authorization

The drugs identified for prior authorization are generally those that are very costly, potentially risky, or can be used inappropriately. Some of the more common examples of these drugs are: Epogen, Procrit, Aranesp, Regranex, Tazorac, Forteo, Remicade, Topamax, Zonegran, infertility medications, and growth hormones. When members present prescriptions for these drugs, and others on the prior authorization list, the pharmacist is notified that certain clinical information must be obtained from the prescribing physician before the prescription can be filled. The goal is to ensure patients receive appropriate medications for their diagnoses.

Implementing the prior authorization program saved the Medical Plan more than $480,000 in 2008 and just under $550,000 in 2009.

Overture’s Specific Recommendations

1. Point one of the overture requests that the Board “post in a prominent place on the Board of Pensions Web site a complete list of medications requiring pre-authorization …” (Item 18-06).

   Detailed information about the Prescription Drug Program is already prominently provided on the Pensions.org Web site. By following the logic of the site, members can move easily from Benefits and Assistance to Prescription Drugs to Program Overview.

   On the Program Overview Page, which includes descriptions of the special programs, including Prior Authorization, there is a prominent link to several related publications:

   • Guide to Your Healthcare Benefits For Medical Plan Members
   • 2010 Drug Formulary

   Specialized assistance is also available directly through ESI, where a pharmacist may be reached 24 hours per day, 7 days per week. In addition, the Board of Pensions Member Services Team is available Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. ET. Should a member need personal help to resolve a complex prescription drug claim issue, the Board’s Member Advocate is available during those same hours.

2. Point two of the overture requests the Board to “affirm in a public manner that the requirement of pre-authorization of certain medicines is not an attempt on the part of the Board of Pensions or its agents to deny appropriate medical care or to ration medical care to the members of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” (Item 18-07)

   The Board’s Statement of Mission, Vision, and Values reflects the approach that it takes to its service to Plan members:

   Mission

   Our mission is to provide to qualifying members who serve the community of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) pension, healthcare, death and disability benefits as well as financial assistance.

   Vision

   As guided by Scripture to love and care for one another, the Vision of the Board of Pensions is to actively seek and find ways to serve our members in ever improving ways that honor the confidence of our community of faith. (1 Corinthians 12)

   Shared Values

   We Value

   • Our common confession that Jesus Christ is our Lord and Savior
   • Our community of faith
• Shared responsibility of the community for members’ needs
• The highest ethical standards
• Our fiduciary obligations
• Exemplary stewardship
• Keeping the confidence of our constituencies
• Providing quality service
• Good corporate citizenship
• Respect for all (Board of Pension Statement of Mission, Vision, and Values, www.Pensions.org)

No attempt to deny appropriate medical care or to ration medical care has ever been made by the Board.

3. Point three of the overture would direct the Board to “adjust the terms of the Benefits Plan so that in the event a member’s physician is unable to come to agreement with the Board of Pension’s agents concerning a medication requiring pre-authorization, that the member be allowed to purchase the medication prescribed by his or her physician at the non-formulary rate” (Item 18-07).

The right of members to appeal in the Medical Plan is outlined in Administrative Rule 1201, which is available on the Board’s Web site, Pensions.org. Implementing the change requested by this point of the overture would, in effect, circumvent the appeals process and automatically overturn first-level decisions.

The Board acknowledges that this change would save a few Plan members money in copayments, but reminds the General Assembly that these costs would not go away. Instead the costs would be shifted from individuals to the community. In order to cover these costs, the Board estimates that the annual deductible for each Plan member, and each Plan member’s dependent(s), would have to be increased to cover the additional expenses to the Plan. Depending on usage levels of this provision, these increases could be significant.

 Regarding Review and Revision of the Organization for Mission Regarding Responsibilities of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and Its Executive Director, and the Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk.

The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010)

1. Approve and delegate to the appropriate body a review of and possible revisions to the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with attention specifically given to the roles and responsibilities of the General Assembly Mission Council and its Executive Director, and the Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk;

2. Until such review and clarification takes place, the Committee on Review of the PC(USA) recommends that the Stated Clerk, as the one agency head who is elected by the General Assembly, be affirmed by the General Assembly and its agencies as the one who speaks with one voice for the General Assembly and, as stipulated in the Organization for Mission, “shall promote the harmony and efficiency of the General Assembly and its agencies in cooperation with the General Assembly Mission Council and its Executive Director, with special attention to relationships between General Assembly entities, and with synods, presbyteries, and sessions” (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, Organization for Mission, IV.B.2.n., p. 10). [See Item 18-B, section XIII.D. of the Report of the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), p. 1309.]

Rationale

The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) perceives a lack of clarity, potential confusion, and a possible impediment to effective collaboration in the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). On the one hand, Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stipulates in Section V.:

The General Assembly Mission Council shall advise and respond to the General Assembly on priorities, programs, and strategies for addressing matters of concern for the Ministries of our church. The primary purpose of the General Assembly Mission Council is to lead and coordinate the total mission program. It will cultivate a style of work that emphasizes coordination among ministries; flexible deployment of resources to match changing needs; allocation of funding to reflect stated goals; concluding as well as initiating programs; attention to the needs and gifts of congregations; effective relationships with all governing bodies; and holding the vision described without reverting to old patterns. (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, Organization for Mission, V., p. 17)
The Review Committee of the PC(USA) perceives a lack of clarity in this language, specifically in the use and meaning of “Ministries of our church” and “total mission program.” It is the sense of the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that this language refers specifically to the “Ministries” and “total mission program” particularly delegated to the oversight of the GAMC rather than to the broader and more inclusive mission of the whole church, including all General Assembly agencies. The language seems, nonetheless, ambiguous and confusing.

On the other hand, Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stipulates in Section IV.B.2.n.: “The Stated Clerk shall promote the harmony and efficiency of the General Assembly and its agencies in cooperation with the General Assembly Mission Council and its Executive Director, with special attention to relationships between General Assembly entities, and with synods, presbyteries, and sessions” (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, Organization for Mission, IV.B.2.n., p. 10).

This confusion lends itself potentially to competition, which becomes an impediment to collaboration.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 18-08

Comment on Item 18-08—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC)

The General Assembly Mission Council asks the 219th General Assembly (2010) to consider the GAMC comment on Item 18-B as they deliberate on Item 18-08.

Item 18-09

[The assembly approved Item 18-09. See pp. 54, 55.]

Regarding the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee.

The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve

1. continuation of the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) for at least two years;

2. continuation and expansion of efforts to strengthen communication and cooperation between the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Foundation regarding restricted funds resolution and the reporting of related progress to the RFRC no less than annually; and

3. the suggestion that, should clarification of roles become necessary, the RFRC consider obtaining a legal review from a qualified attorney related neither to the GAMC/PC(USA) or the Foundation regarding the relative responsibilities of the GAMC and the Foundation. [See Item 18-B, Section XIII.F.2. of the Report of the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), p. 1335]

Rationale

The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) met with representatives of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Foundation. Additionally, the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) consulted with the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) through its moderator. The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) observes that the two agencies have distinctive roles regarding the restricted funds in question. The GAMC is the organization that, in many cases, distributes and/or uses restricted funds generated for mission. The GAMC has responsibility, on behalf of the General Assembly, to oversee and implement the General Assembly’s mission priorities and directives. The Foundation, on the other hand, has a fiduciary responsibility to donors to ensure that funds are used as stipulated by the donor of the gift. At best, the two agencies provide something of a check and balance regarding responsible use of the restricted funds. Occasionally, however, the GAMC and the Foundation have disagreed on matters pertaining to use of the funds, i.e., whether or not the uses of funds fit the parameters and requirements in which and with which the gift was made to the Foundation.

The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) emphasizes that every effort must continue to be made to ensure a healthy and collaborative relationship between the GAMC and the Foundation regarding use of restricted funds. Strong and effective communication between the two agencies and the leadership of the agencies is imperative. Our most recent communication from the leaders of the GAMC and the Foundation indicates increased commitment to collaboration and documents encouraging developments, including:
• Regular meetings between the Executive Director of the GAMC and the Interim President and Chief Executive Officer of the Foundation;

• Formation of a Working Group of GAMC members and Foundation trustees and formalization of a covenant to strengthen the working relationship between the two agencies;

• Establishment of mutual access to the respective data bases of the two agencies, thus strengthening communication and reducing opportunities for confusion and conflict;

• Cooperative work between the agencies to better understand restrictions and reporting requirements of federal regulatory organizations and to resolve related differences of interpretation between the agencies, to the end that funds are made available for mission;

• Cooperative work between the agencies to better understand both current restrictions of funds and priority needs for new funds as they are established;

• Monthly reports from the Foundation to the GAMC regarding endowment fund details;

• Increased sharing of ideas and best practices regarding information technology and services;

• Monthly meetings between representatives of the legal departments of the two agencies;

• Expanded software capability that allows staffs of both agencies to input, view, and track information on interagency issues.

Progress is documented in the joint letter submitted by executive leaders of the GAMC and the Foundation, and affirmed by their respective boards, to the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It is included in Appendix III of Item 18-B, the report of the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms and encourages these efforts. The committee commends the obvious commitment of the executive leaders of the GAMC and the Foundation to the improvement of communication and working relationships as a model and example for other GAMC and Foundation staff members. Geographic separation of these two agencies makes such commitments all the more important. Face-to-face communication, joint worship, relationship building, and collaboration will benefit other departments and organizational levels of the two agencies.

At the time of the work and report preparation of the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) has had an organizational meeting and has met with representatives of both the GAMC and the Foundation. They have not, however, been called upon for resolution of any disputed issue. It is, therefore, too early to make any judgment upon the effectiveness of the RFRC. Theoretically, nonetheless, the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) sees potential need and value of continuing the existence of the RFRC. Should disagreement arise between the GAMC and the Foundation, the existence of a third party to assist and attempt resolution clearly benefits the whole church. Legal intervention, though potentially necessary and helpful, should be avoided if possible.

Item 18-10

[The assembly approved Item 18-10. See pp. 54, 55.]

Regarding Future Reviews of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Its Six Agencies.

The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve that the review of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies, focusing broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in working collaboratively to implement the General Assembly’s mission directives, be integrated into the cycle of individual agency reviews. The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) suggests that such a review committee be appointed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018). [See section XIII.G. of Item 18B, the Report of the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).]

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 08-22. Recommendation from the Committee on Review of the General Assembly Council to the 218th General Assembly (2008) to Create a Review Committee to Review the Service of the Whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Its Six Agencies in Implementing the General Assembly’s Mission Directives (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 23, 25, 727–28).

Part of the rationale stated:

While the separate review of each of the six agencies is a helpful practice and has fostered improvements, this Review Committee observed that no one in the current system is charged with looking at the overall effectiveness of the whole. Coordination among the six agencies is voluntary and not always effective. Such a review should focus broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in implementing the General
Assembly’s mission directives and should not duplicate the more detailed work of the individual agency review committees. Particular attention should be given to how or if these agencies work cooperatively and where or if there is duplication of services in the system. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 727)

The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) believes that this review is an important part of the entire review process and should be included in the cycle of the individual agency reviews.

Item 18-11

[The assembly approved Item 18-11. See pp. 54, 55.]

Regarding the Review of Biennial Assemblies.

The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the referral of the following issues to the committee to be appointed by the 219th General Assembly (2010) to review biennial assemblies, recommending that the General Assembly include such review of the way we conduct General Assembly in the scope of this committee’s work.

The Committee on Review of the PC(USA) perceives a call and cry for a new way of understanding and being General Assembly, which includes:

1. Increased time given to worship, study, and discernment of who we as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are, who we are called to be, and what we are called to do, all done with the prayer that God’s Spirit will unify, renew, energize, and mobilize the church for ministry, mission, and witness. This commitment of time to worship, study, and discernment will better prepare the General Assembly to wrestle with difficult and sometimes controversial, but nonetheless important matters that deserve and demand consideration.

2. More effective management of the amount of time and energy that the General Assembly commits to issues of legislation and policy development, so that increased time and energy may be given to the above focus. Such management may require a greater willingness of the General Assembly to allow prescribed work to be done and actions taken at committee level.

3. Increased attention given by General Assembly to mission prioritization, resulting in a manageable number of identifiable mission directives/priorities that are determined for the whole church, to which General Assembly agencies, middle governing bodies, congregations, and individuals can commit and cooperate. The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recommends that the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly collaboratively guide and ensure such a process, drawing upon other agencies and resources as appropriate and as directed by the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and commended in Item 18-B, Section VI.D. of the Report of the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (p. 1321).

4. Clarification of who communicates, manages, and oversees the collaborative implementation of those mission directives on behalf of the General Assembly, a role and responsibility that the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) sees residing with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly in cooperation with the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, Organization for Mission, IV.B.2.n., p. 10).

5. Consideration of the feasibility and/or desirability of having one voice designated to speak for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and/or some entity designated to hold the church as a whole, particularly the General Assembly agencies, accountable for decisions and commitments made by the General Assembly.

Rationale

The 214th General Assembly (2002) directed that a committee be appointed by the 219th General Assembly (2010) to evaluate biennial General Assemblies. During the course of its work, the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) heard interests and concerns that related to the format and business of the General Assembly. The Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) included these issues in its report, but it believes these items should be considered by the committee that will be appointed by the 219th General Assembly (2010).

[See Item 18-B, Section XIII.H. in the Report of the Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), p. 1336.]
Item 18-12

[In response to Item 18-12, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 54, 56.]

[Alternate Resolution: The 219th General Assembly (2010) urges the Board of Pensions to develop a plan to ensure that funds from any Relief of Conscience churches do not go to fund abortions through any avenue.]

Commissioner’s Resolution. On Discontinuing Payment for Abortion as a Covered Benefit in the Board of Pensions Medical Benefits Plan.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) urges the Board of Pensions to discontinue paying for induced abortion as a covered benefit in its Medical Benefits Plan (unless a licensed physician documents that it is necessary to preserve the physical life of the mother).

Rationale

Discontinuing the coverage of abortion in the Board of Pensions (BOP) Medical Benefits Plan (the Plan) would better reflect the current policy on abortion (1992), and it would bring to an end the problem of the Plan both covering abortion and being mandatory. It would end the complicity in the taking of human life by abortion for those Presbyterians who find abortion deeply offensive.

Scripture and the confessions teach us that the value of the unborn comes from God, who created us in His own image. The church is called to cherish and protect human life as beloved by God and belonging to Him.

The Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion acknowledged in its 1992 report that Presbyterians are deeply divided about abortion. They called the church to hold within its fellowship those of different views. The policy itself reflects these different views. On the one hand, it states that “the strong Christian presumption is that, since all life is precious to God, we are to preserve and protect it;” on the other hand, it states that “the considered decision of a woman to terminate a pregnancy can be morally acceptable” (E.1.l,e.).

The policy also identifies circumstances in which abortion would not be morally acceptable:

- as a method of birth control,
- as a convenience or to ease embarrassment,
- for gender selection,
- to obtain fetal parts (E.1.f.–g).

It also states that if an abortion is the decision, “it is preferable for it to happen earlier rather than later [in pregnancy]” (E.1.h.). Elaborating on that last point, the 204th General Assembly (2006) issued a clear statement against late term abortions: “We affirm that the lives of viable babies—those well enough developed to survive outside the womb if delivered—ought to be preserved and cared for and not aborted.”

While the General Assembly policy on abortion reflects differing views and finds some abortions morally unacceptable, the Medical Benefits Plan reflects none of these restraints. There are no limitations, no exclusions. The Plan covers all abortions, for any reason, at any stage of pregnancy. An abortion claim does not need to meet the BOP’s usual guidelines for medical necessity. If a proper claim form is filled out and signed by a licensed physician, the abortion procedure is deemed “medically necessary” and the claim is paid.

Membership in the Plan is mandatory for all installed pastors. It is the tithes and offerings of church members that pay the dues for the pastor’s membership in the Plan. Science tells us that from the moment of fertilization, each embryo is a genetically separate, totally unique, and distinctly human life; and many Presbyterians believe that life ought to be nurtured and protected and not aborted. Many Presbyterians face a serious moral dilemma—a true crisis of conscience—upon discovering that their church’s Medical Plan provides unrestricted abortion coverage and uses their own tithes and offerings to do so. Many other Presbyterians still have not discovered this fact.

The General Assembly and the BOP responded to this repeated concern with plans for “relief of conscience” (ROC). The plans approved in 1992 and 1996 were not acceptable because they did not protect the contributions of church members from paying for abortions. As one elder commented: “This is the second time the BOP has proposed a relief of conscience measure which is acceptable mainly to those who do not have a conscientious objection to abortion.”

In 1996, responding to two overtures, the General Assembly acknowledged the “serious and urgent concern of those seeking relief of conscience” and recommended to the BOP that they “pursue open, substantive and responsive dialogue with ROC congregations,” in accordance with the 1992 Policy on Abortion, p.16: “We urge church entities to affirm procedures by which particular churches may be assured that their mission funds will not be used in violation of conscience on this issue.”

In 1998, the General Assembly approved the BOP’s third try at a Relief of Conscience Plan, and asked them to communicate with churches about it. One letter went out in 1999 and not much else, until the General Assembly directed the BOP in 2008 to include information about the ROC Plan in their annual reports and other publications. The 2009 Annual Report shows 500 Relief of Conscience churches out of 10,751 in the PC(USA). For a program in effect since 1992, those numbers suggest that there are many people in the pews whose tithes and offerings are being used to pay for a Medical Benefits Plan that covers abortion without their knowledge.

No plan for merely separating streams of money can fully satisfy the issue of conscience for those Presbyterians who believe abortion is morally wrong. Their conscience is still offended by being spiritually and covenantally joined to a church body that pays for abortion.

The problem is that the default position has been to pay for abortion. The burden of taking action has been upon those whose conscience is violated. This is contrary to the teaching in Scripture that urges us to voluntarily limit our own freedoms of conscience in order to protect those whose conscience is not free (Rom. 14:20–23).

After twenty-three years of paying for abortion in the Medical Benefits Plan, it is time to change the default to no abortion coverage. No longer would the plan both cover abortion and be mandatory, which has been the problem. The Relief of Conscience program would no longer be needed.

Discontinuing the coverage of abortion would not prevent any woman from obtaining an abortion. Presbyterians who favor coverage of abortion could request that the Board of Pensions set up a voluntary fund to receive donations to assist plan members with abortion-related expenses.

In Summary: Discontinuing the coverage of abortion would better reflect the current policy on abortion, and it would solve the problem of the Plan both covering abortion and being mandatory. It would allow Presbyterians to freely give to the health benefits of their pastor without participating in the taking of human life by abortion that is deeply offensive to them.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 18-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 18-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 18-12 be disapproved.

Rationale

This commissioners’ resolution is based on an incomplete and somewhat distorted representation of the church’s policy on problem pregnancies and abortion, adopted by the 204th General Assembly (1992), Do Justice, Love Mercy, Walk Humbly (Micah 6:8). Furthermore, this resolution would be a substantial alteration of church policy. The church’s policy clearly identifies areas in which Presbyterians have diverse points of view, specifically in our interpretation of Scripture and on the question of when human life begins. It clearly calls for the church to “maintain within its fellowship those who, on the basis of a study of Scripture and prayerful decision, come to diverse conclusions and action” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, Paragraph 27.089).

However, the policy recognizes that “Problem pregnancies are the result of, and influenced by, so many complicated and insolvable circumstances that we have neither the wisdom nor the authority to address or decide each situation” (Ibid, Paragraph 27.090). Therefore, it strongly affirms “the ability and responsibility of women, guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies” (Ibid, Paragraph 27.091). Obviously, the policy would not then expect an insurance provider to adjudicate the specific circumstances of each individual abortion claim.
In order to assure that women facing problem pregnancies can prayerfully consider and access a full range of reproductive options, including the option of abortion, the policy opposes laws that would criminalize abortion. In discussing the role of the state, the policy states: “No law or administrative decision should limit access to abortions” (Ibid, Paragraph 27.131). Furthermore, the policy “Advocate[s] universal access to health care so that pregnant women and their families with few economic resources might feel assured that their own and their children’s health will be protected” (Ibid, Paragraph 27.121).

Clearly, the church’s policy is one that honors the diversity among us by protecting each woman’s ability and responsibility to make good moral decisions about her pregnancy, including the decision to continue it and, when necessary, the decision to end it. Access to insurance coverage is one component supporting a woman’s ability to consider a full range of reproductive options. Denial of such coverage, as low-income women have experienced under Medicaid, causes women who have decided to terminate a pregnancy to postpone the procedure for several weeks as they try to find the money to pay for it. The church’s policy clearly states that when abortion is necessary it should occur earlier rather than later (Ibid, Paragraph 27.096). Access to insurance coverage is key to this timing.

In response to those Presbyterian churches and minister members of presbyteries who are self-paying Benefits Plan members who, in good conscience, find abortion to be deeply offensive, the church has developed a Relief of Conscience Plan (1998) by which the dues paid by Relief of Conscience (ROC) members are separated and carefully tracked by the Board of Pensions so that they are not used to pay for abortion-related procedures. Abortion claims are paid from the non-ROC stream; all other medical claims are then paid from the combined remainder. In addition, a dollar amount equal to the prior years’ abortion claims is set aside to help pay for the Adoption Assistance Grant program. Currently, 500 of the 10,500 Presbyterian churches participate in the ROC.

The commissioners’ resolution states that this separation of dues does not “fully satisfy the issue of conscience for those Presbyterians who believe abortion is morally wrong” as they are “offended by being spiritually and covenantally joined to a church body that pays for abortion.” In other words, their conscience seems to require that the Medical Benefits Plan not cover abortions, that no one’s dues be used to pay for abortions—unless there is documentation that it is necessary to preserve the physical life of the mother, a restriction more severe than the church’s late-term abortion policy (2006) that calls for the protection of a woman’s life and health. They suggest a voluntary fund to which Presbyterians could contribute that the Board of Pensions would use to help pay for abortion-related expenses of members.

This proposal would violate the core principles articulated in the church’s problem pregnancy policies: that in our diversity we support the ability and responsibility of women to make these difficult decisions according to their consciences and we support the necessary social conditions that protect women’s ability to consider and weigh all options—including the option of abortion. The proposal would deny to the vast majority of Board Of Pensions’ members and their families coverage for this choice—regardless of the circumstances—except when they can document the threat to a woman’s physical life.

Rather than seeking unity in spite of our differences, this proposal insists on shaping the Medical Benefits Plan according to one view among the many that can be found within our church family. The ACSWP advises disapproval.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 18-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 18-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) concurs with the Advice and Counsel of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, strongly advising the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 18-12 be disapproved with the following Rationale.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) notes the following issues with Item 18-12.

1. Contrary to the consistent witness of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), this resolution diminishes and ultimately eliminates a woman’s ability to make decisions and utilize her own moral agency to make choices for her life.

2. Access to health care should never be limited by gender. This resolution suggests a plan whose coverage explicitly discriminates based on gender.

3. The plan suggested by this resolution presents an issue of privacy for women seeking to terminate a pregnancy, as they are required to substantiate that there is a threat to their health when seeking an abortion.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 18-12

Comment on Item 18-12—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The General Assembly has discussed and debated the issues relating to problem pregnancies and abortion for many years.¹
The Board of Pensions administers the Benefits Plan consistent with the normative values of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), which affirm the right of a woman to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies. This means that legal medical procedures related to the termination of pregnancy are covered by the Medical Plan, with the admonition that:

Consistent with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s affirmation of the ability and responsibility of a woman to make good moral choices regarding problem pregnancies, the Medical Plan reimburses medical costs for abortion procedures, subject to plan limits. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) further affirms that abortion should not be used as a method of birth control, for gender selection only, or solely to obtain fetal parts for transplantation. See Minutes, 204th General Assembly (1992), available upon request from the Board of Pensions.

Churches and employing organizations that object, as a matter of conscience, to the use of their dues for abortion procedure costs may apply for Relief of Conscience. Monies offset from Medical Plan dues of employers that have applied for and received Relief of Conscience are deposited in the Board’s Assistance Program and are used to help provide Adoption Assistance Grants to plan members. For more information regarding this administrative policy and Adoption Assistance Grants, contact the Board of Pensions.

Item 18-A

[The Assembly Committee on Board of Pensions, Foundation, & Presbyterian Publishing approved Item 18-A. See pp. 54, 55]

The Board of Pensions recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) receive the following report regarding the amendments to the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Plan”) that the Board of Pensions adopted since the 218th General Assembly (2008).

Rationale

1. Benefits Plan Amendments

The process for amending the Plan is established in the plan document (Article XIX). The Board of Pensions (Board) has the sole discretion and authority to adopt amendments. Certain amendments are not effective until approved by the General Assembly; most amendments are effective on the date specified by the Board and need only be reported to the General Assembly.

- Amendments to the Pension Plan (Articles VI, VII, VIII and IX) that are in the nature of a benefit reduction or a Pension Plan dues increase are only effective upon approval of the General Assembly. The Board must provide written notice of its intent to submit such Pension Plan amendments to the General Assembly and the Plan members, local churches and presbyteries at least sixty (60) days prior to the commencement of the General Assembly.
• All other amendments to the Plan adopted by the Board must be reported to the next succeeding General Assembly and to the Members, local churches and presbyteries in a reasonable manner.

Since the 218th General Assembly (2008), the Board has not adopted any amendment to the Pension Plan that requires the approval of General Assembly prior to becoming effective.

Since the 218th General Assembly (2008), the Board granted a disability benefit increase for Plan Year 2009 and adopted certain amendments to the Pension, Medical, and Retirement Savings Plans. A summary of the amendments to the Plan is provided below. The effective dates of the amendments are noted. The verbatim text of the Plan amendments is available from the Corporate Secretary of the Board of Pensions.

A letter advising the Benefits Plan members, local churches and presbyteries of this report and the amendments was mailed on April 2, 2010. The letter and a complete copy of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (2010) are available on the website of the Board at www.pensions.org or by calling 1-800-PRES-PLAN (1-800-773-7752).

2. Pension Plan Amendments

a. Experience Apportionment Grants

The Pension Plan provides in Sec. 7.3 that the Board may determine, in its sole discretion, that sufficient Pension Plan assets have accumulated, due to favorable investment and actuarial experience, over and above those required for actuarial reserves, general contingency reserves and other special reserves, to grant an experience apportionment. Due to the decline in the value of the Pension Portfolio, which is due to the economic recession and losses in the financial markets in 2008 and 2009, the Board of Pensions determined that there were not sufficient assets in hand at the end of Plan Years 2008 and 2009 as a result of cumulative favorable investment and actuarial experience to grant an experience apportionment in either year.

b. Other Pension Plan Amendments

Direct Rollovers: Sec. 8.12 of the Pension Plan was added to specify the types of plans into which a member or other beneficiary who is entitled to a lump sum distribution from the plan may direct the distribution be transferred. This provision was added to comply with applicable law. Lump sum distributions from the Pension Plan are only available for small benefit cash-outs and pension settlements. This amendment was effective as of January 1, 2009.

3. Death and Disability Plan Amendments

a. Disability Benefit Increases

The Death and Disability Plan provides in Sec. 11.3(h) that the Board may determine, in its sole discretion, that sufficient Death and Disability Plan assets have accumulated, due to favorable investment and actuarial experience, over and above those required for actuarial reserves, general contingency reserves, and other special reserves, to grant a disability benefit increase.

Due to the decline in the value of the Death and Disability Plan reserves, which is due to the economic recession and losses in the financial markets in late 2008 and 2009, the Board of Pensions determined that there were not sufficient assets in hand at the end of Plan Year 2008 as a result of cumulative favorable investment and actuarial experience to grant a disability benefit increase.

At its March 2010 meeting, the board of directors determined that the Death and Disability Plan fund had sufficient Death and Disability Plan fund assets and reserves in hand at the conclusion of Plan Year 2009 to grant a disability benefit increase. The Board approved a 3 percent (3 %) increase in disability benefits for those receiving such benefits on December 31, 2009, beginning July 1, 2010.

b. Other Death and Disability Plan Amendments

Minimum Salary Continuation Benefit: Sec. 10.1 was amended to increase the minimum Salary Continuation Benefit for retired and terminated vested members from $6,000 to $8,000. This amendment was effective as of January 1, 2009.

4. Medical Plan Amendments

Since the 218th General Assembly (2008), the Board revised and restated the Medical Plan provisions in an effort to simplify the plan design and respond to changes in benefits, vendors, and federal and other laws. Many of the changes were editorial in nature and did not involve the substance of the Medical Plan benefits. The substantive amendments were:

a. Habilitative Services: Secs. 13.1(j)(16), (20), (21) and 13.9 were amended to add a new benefit program for children with certain developmental disabilities (autism spectrum disorders, cerebral palsy, Down Syndrome, Intellectual Disability, and Spina Bifida). The program includes a separate medical necessity definition and describes the specific types of covered services (e.g., applied behavior analysis and specialized therapies) that will be covered by the program. These amendments were effective as of January 1, 2010.

b. Mental Health and Substance Abuse Parity: Secs. 13.1(l), 13.7(f), 13.9(a)(6) and (7) were amended to restructure the coverage of mental health and substance abuse benefits to assure full parity with medical/surgical benefits under the Medical Plan in compliance with The Paul Wellstone and Pete Domenici Mental Health Parity and Addiction Equity Act of 2008, which became effective as of October 2009. These amendments were effective as of January 1, 2010.

c. Waiver of Coverage for Spouses and Eligible Dependents: Secs. 13.2(a) was amended to authorize the Board of Pensions to permit a member with traditional program coverage to waive coverage under the Medical Plan for a spouse or eligible family member with comparable employer-provided or military services group health coverage. There is no reduction in the dues paid by the church or employing organization if a waiver is granted. Reenrollment is permitted upon loss of the comparable coverage (within 63 days of loss of coverage) or as of January 1st of any enrollment period. This amendment was effective as of October 1, 2009.

d. Benefit Reimbursement Improvements: Secs. 13.4, 13.5, 13.6, 13.9(b)(20) and (24), 14.3(b) and (c) were amended to simply the office visit copayments, network/non-network deductibles, copayments and out-of-pocket maximum provisions for the medical, surgical, mental health, substance abuse, and prescription drug benefits under the Medical Plan, to raise the lifetime maximum reimbursement limit to $3,500,000, and to delete the exclusion for elective inpatient admissions on weekends. These amendments were effective as of January 1, 2010.

e. HIPAA Amendments: Sec. 13.16 was amended to update the Plan’s provisions relating to the use and disclosure of Plan members’ and their beneficiaries’ protected health information under the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (“HIPAA”), as amended in February 2009 by the Health Information Technology and Clinical Health Act (“HITECH”). This amendment was effective as of February 17, 2010.

5. Supplemental Death Benefits

Article XVI and Sec. 16.1 thereof were amended to change the name of the program from “Optional Death Benefits” to “Supplemental Death Benefits” and to give the Board of Pensions discretion to designate amounts of coverage for which members could subscribe for themselves, their spouse, and eligible children. Following this amendment, the Board of Pensions authorized an increase in the member’s maximum benefit level from $200,000 to $300,000. These amendments were effective as of January 1, 2009.

6. Retirement Savings Plan

Under the authority granted in Article XVII of the Benefits Plan, the Board of Pensions administers an optional defined contribution known as the Retirement Savings Plan (“Savings Plan”). The Savings Plan documents were amended by the Board to comply with the final U.S. Treasury Department regulations under Section 403(b) of the Internal Revenue Code.

In addition to amending and restating the Savings Plan to comply with the final regulations, the following amendments were adopted to reflect plan design changes as well as to comply with changes in federal law.

a. Eligible Employees: The definition of “Eligible Employee” was amended, effective as of September 1, 2008, to eliminate the twenty-hour service requirement for participants. Employing organizations may still elect to impose hour requirements for employer contributions to the Savings Plan.

b. Lost Payees: The Savings Plan was amended, effective as of June 27, 2009, to reflect that any person entitled to a benefit or payment under the Savings Plan who cannot be located within two years after becoming entitled to such benefit or payment forfeits the entire balance of his or her account. The Savings Plan previously provided that a benefit could only be forfeited after six years. This change was made to reduce the length of time that the Board must search for a participant or other person before forfeiting his or her benefit and to avoid the possible application of states’ unclaimed property and escheat laws.

c. Required Minimum Distribution Relief: The Savings Plan was amended effective as of January 1, 2009, to provide required minimum distribution relief to participants for the 2009 calendar year, as permitted under the Worker, Retiree, and Employer Recovery Act of 2008.

d. Foreign Missionary Participants: Roth contribution provisions for foreign missionaries were removed from the Savings Plan so as to avoid additional fees and administrative procedures. No Savings Plan participants made Roth contributions to the Savings Plan prior to the adoption of this amendment. These amendments were effective as of January 1, 2009.

e. QCCO and Non-QCCO Plan Documents: The Board amended and restated the Savings Plan, effective as of January 1, 2009, and adopted two separate Plan documents: one applicable to churches and qualified church-controlled organizations (“QCCOs”) and the other for non-QCCOs because non-QCCOs are subject to additional regulatory requirements.
This bifurcated plan structure is designed to prevent a non-QCCO’s possible failure to comply with the nondiscrimination requirements of the final regulations from disqualifying the entire Savings Plan. Accordingly, each non-QCCO adopts the non-QCCO plan document as a single employer plan for its employees only and is responsible for conducting the applicable nondiscrimination tests and assuring compliance with the Code requirements for non-QCCOs. Complete copies of the amended and restated Savings Plan for churches and QCCOs and non-QCCOs, as well as the verbatim text of the amendments listed above, are available from the Board’s website or upon request from the corporate secretary.

a. Allocation of Reserves in Welfare Plans: Secs. 18.1 and 19.6 were amended to give the Board of Pensions the discretion to set dues for the Death and Disability Plan and allocate excess assets among the Death and Disability, Medical Plan (including Medicare Supplement) and optional plans. These amendments were effective as of October 1, 2008.

b. Unclaimed Benefits: The benefit forfeiture provisions in Sec. 18.4 of the Plan and the Savings Plan were amended to permit forfeiture of benefits due to lost payees to plan reserves within two years. This amendment was effective as of June 27, 2009.

c. Recoupment of Benefit Overpayments and Limitations of Liability: Secs. 18.10 and 18.11 of the Plan were amended to authorize more expressly the Board’s right to recoup benefit overpayments and to limit the liability of the Board where the Board or its agents acted in good faith and based upon information available to the Board or its agent at that time. These amendments were effective as of October 1, 2009.

Item 18-B

[The Assembly Committee on Board of Pensions, Foundation, & Presbyterian Publishing approved Item 18-B. See pp. 54, 55.]

Report of the General Assembly Review Committee of the Whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

I. Committee Formation and Membership

The 218th General Assembly (2008) elected a Review Committee of the Whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (referred to henceforth as the Review Committee and PC(USA), respectively). Members elected by the 218th General Assembly (2008) (GA) included: Clemente H. Anzaldua; Leslie Day-Ebert (resigned for personal reasons during the course of the review); Elinor K. Hite; Jose R. Irizarry; Yubang (Joshua) Lee; John G. McFayden (moderator); Irvin S. Moxley; Sandra L. Peirce; Kevin L. Porter; Alvin N. Puryear; Earldean Robbins; Allison K. Seed; Thomas C. Sheffield; and Judith Wellington. Staff assigned to support the work of the committee: Frank Maloney, Executive Vice President, Board of Pensions and Kay Moore, Office of the General Assembly.

The Review Committee represented the rich diversity of the PC(USA) with five elders and nine pastors; six women and eight men; four African Americans, one Asian American, one Native American, two Latino/Hispanic Americans; and six Caucasians. The Review Committee also reflected a rich breadth and depth of experience, composed of members who had worked closely with each of the six agencies. Additional biographical information and experience appears in Appendix I.

II. Committee Charge

Actions referred to the Review Committee:

- Item 08-21: The 218th General Assembly (2008) directed that the need for the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) and resolution of the respective roles and responsibilities of the Presbyterian Foundation and the GAC be included as items of business for the Six Agency Review Committee to handle (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p.720).

- Item 08-22: In response to a recommendation from the Committee on Review of the General Assembly Council, the assembly created a “review committee to review the service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies in implementing the General Assembly’s mission directives” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 727).

Articulating a rationale for Item 08-22, the Review Committee of the General Assembly Council observed:

While the separate review of each of the six agencies is a helpful practice and has fostered improvements, this Review Committee observed that no one in the current system is charged with looking at the overall effectiveness of the whole. Coordination among the six agencies is voluntary and not always effective. Such a review should focus broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in implementing the General Assembly’s mission directives and should not duplicate the more detailed work of the individual agency reviews committees. Particular attention should be given to how or if these agencies work cooperatively and where or if there is duplication of services in the system. This review committee observed that some agencies are not working well together, but also that there are some beneficial cooperative efforts. These happen on a voluntary ba-
The Review Committee process consisted of five committee meetings at the Presbyterian Center in Louisville, Kentucky, supplemented by additional meetings, conference calls, and preparation as follows:

- November 12–13, 2008: orientation to charge and organization for the task.
- February 9–11, 2009: meetings with and presentations by executive and elected leaders of all six agencies—Board of Pensions (BOP), General Assembly Mission Council (so identified by action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) and referred to in this report as the GAMC), Office of the General Assembly (OGA), Presbyterian Foundation (Foundation), Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program (PILP), and Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC); met with Perry Chang of Research Services to design a survey for gathering broad input related to the review.
- April 21, 2009: Review Committee representatives meet with synod executives in Kansas City, Missouri.
- June 15–17, 2009: follow-up meetings and interviews with executive and elected leaders of all six GA agencies; met with Perry Chang and Gail Quets of Research Services to harvest and interpret survey results; met jointly with representatives of the GAMC and the Foundation to discuss progress on resolution of restricted funds issues; developed an outline and timeline for preparation of the Review Committee’s report.
- Summer 2009: report development.
- September 29, 2009: conference call to discuss report development and recommendations.
- October 13–14, 2009: meeting for review of draft report.
- November 18, 2009: conference call to review revised draft report.
- November 2009: distribution of draft report to agency leaders for review and comment.

IV. Limitations of the Review

The Review Committee was charged to review the service of the whole PC(USA), with particular attention given to its six agencies and issues of collaboration and duplication between agencies. The rationale for referral of Item 08-22 to the Review Committee also notes relations with other governing bodies in implementing mission directives of the GA.

The Review Committee received no specific parameters regarding the period of time being reviewed. Based on the precedent of agency reviews being conducted every six years, the Review Committee looked primarily at the period of time from 2004 through our meetings with agency leaders in February and June of 2009 and the writing of our report in the fall of 2009.

The Review Committee focused on working relationships among the six agencies, but also conducted conversations with representatives of middle governing bodies, specifically with synod executives and members of the Association of Executive Presbyters. Further input was gathered through a survey that included a broad range of constituencies identified in the survey summary included in this report. While impossible to realistically include the “whole church” in the review, the process allowed wide and diverse input from the “whole church.”

Of further note: there is reference in the rationale of 08-22 to “mission directives” of the GA. There is no formal or consolidated specification of mission directives of the GA. The Review Committee assumes this comment refers to the broad range of directives that come from the assemblies. The Review Committee focused broadly on relations between the GA agencies themselves, and relations between the agencies and middle governing bodies (MGBs). We did not attempt to track the gamut of unspecified mission directives from the GA.

V. Ecclesiology

The Church is the body of Christ; Christ is the head (1Corinthians 12; Book of Order, G-1.0100). The PC(USA) seeks to be a visible manifestation of Christ’s Church in the world by the way it orders itself and responds to God’s call to ministry.
and mission in the world. When the church orders its relationships in ways that maintain the body’s good health, it makes a faithful witness to the world. Therefore, the PC(USA) is called to be faithful by ordering the body so that each part, graced with its own unique and particular gifts, contributes to the well-being of the whole body. Sustaining the order and health of the body is not just a means toward institutional preservation; it is our Christian witness to a fragmented world.

The church embodies its faith through its own wholeness and thus provides a visible sign of what the human race will be if it responds to God’s gracious love in community. The church exists not simply so that each member of the body can perform a differentiated mission, but as a “provisional demonstration of what God intends for all of humanity” (Book of Order, G-3.0200). In The Confession of 1967, we affirm:

The church orders its life as an institution with a constitution, government, officers, finances, and administrative rules. These are instruments of mission, not ends in themselves. Different orders have served the gospel and none can claim exclusive validity. A presbyterian polity recognizes the responsibility of all members for ministry and maintains the organic relation of all congregations in the church. It seeks to protect the church from exploitation by ecclesiastical or secular power and ambition. Every church order must be open to such reformation as may be required to make it a more effective instrument of the mission of reconciliation. (The Book of Confessions, 9.40)

The development of a caring community may be the most important and essential task of those who do ministry on behalf of the PC(USA). It may be possible to address challenges and disagreements within the church without breaking the community if, beyond self-interest, self-concern, and independent projects, we are willing to live first and above all in the call to maintain the health and integrity of the whole body. The sacramental breaking of the bread and sharing of the cup bind us to Jesus Christ, who went beyond self-interest and surrendered his life to reconcile all creation with God. Following him, the leadership of the church has a sacramental responsibility to experience and extend reconciliation, starting with the mending of severed relations among those who share this responsibility.

This report is an invitation to consider and celebrate the gifts, accomplishments, and opportunities bestowed upon the agencies the PC(USA) has charged to carry out specific functions of Christ’s body. It is an invitation to avoid the sin of alienation by practicing reconciliation within a context of care, love, and mutual respect. As the church is reformed, the agencies of the PC(USA) must practice a sacramental ecclesiology, through which God’s reconciling purposes become the church’s gift and witness to the world.

VI. Standards for the Review

The Review Committee was not provided standards for review, such as those that exist for the individual agency reviews. In discussing and discerning its charge, the Review Committee identified the following standards that shaped and informed the review of the six PC(USA) agencies:

A. The mission of each agency is aligned with the goals and values of the overall mission of the PC(USA) as set by GA directives.

B. The agencies have leaders at key positions who set the vision, direction, and culture of collaboration as a strategic priority.

C. The agencies press beyond communication and consultation to genuine collaboration and, where appropriate and/or directed by GA, agree to shared agendas and work together toward fulfillment of shared goals. Individual agencies avoid unilateral decisions, made without consultation and collaboration, which affect all agencies and the whole church.

D. Each agency maintains open and regular communication with, and provides timely and appropriate access to information to, other agencies and PC(USA) constituencies, including MGBs.

E. The agencies are aware of agreed processes for problem-solving and non-adversarial dispute resolution within the structure of the PC(USA).

F. Each agency has conducted a thorough evaluation of the potential gains and risks associated with collaborative endeavours.

G. Agencies show clear evidence that they collaborate in a spirit of mutual appreciation, trust, and respect with shared understandings of the nature of their collaboration.

H. Agencies seek pragmatic solutions to their respective operational challenges by relying on the assets, resources, and strengths of other agencies.

I. Agencies deliver inclusive communication resources (printed and electronic) that meet accessibility standards. Accessibility standards include, but are not limited to: awareness of audience’s level of familiarity with content of communication; facilitation of the reader/listener/observer’s easy navigation through information; appealing and attention-grabbing resources; and comprehensive information that provides clues for follow-up and referral (i.e. links to other agencies).
VII. Survey Summary

In October 2008, the Review Committee contracted with Research Services to conduct a survey of eleven constituencies of the PC(USA):

- Leaders of the PC(USA)’s six national agencies;
- Randomly sampled commissioners who attended GAs in 2004 and 2006;
- Synod and presbytery executives, stated clerks, and moderators;
- Leaders of randomly sampled congregations;
- Leaders of randomly sampled racial-ethnic congregations, new church developments, ministries, missions, outreach- es, chapels, and Bible studies;
- Seminary administrators, faculty members, and trustees of twelve PC(USA)-related seminaries;
- Members of the eleven GA permanent, advocacy, and advisory committees;
- Presbyterian Men national and regional leaders;
- Presbyterian Women national and regional leaders;
- Randomly sampled Presbyterian youth and young adults;
- Association of Presbyterian Christian Educators (APCE) members or recipients of the APCE newsletter.

Response rates from these eleven groups ranged from a high of 60 percent for national agency leaders to a low of 11 percent for Christian educators.

Analyses of the survey responses indicate:

- Persons in the various PC(USA) constituencies are more familiar with the BOP, GAMC, OGA, PPC than they are with the Foundation and PILP.
- Levels of awareness of, participation in, and satisfaction with ministries that at least two PC(USA) national agencies jointly sponsor or support vary widely.
- Presented with the possible duplication of services between and confusion about the identities of the GAMC and the OGA, Presbyterians dislike the status quo but do not agree on what to do about it: whether to merge the two agencies, eliminate duplication of services, or educate Presbyterians about the agencies’ different functions.
- Presbyterians exhibit ambivalence about confronting duplication of services among national agencies and other PC(USA)-related organizations. Few Presbyterians were able to identify examples of duplication of services beyond the five listed on the survey. Few Presbyterians identified the elimination of the duplication of services as a high priority.
- Relatively few Presbyterians believe that clearly defining for non-Presbyterians what it means to be Presbyterian is important.
- Presbyterians are not in agreement about whether or not agencies should offer competing resources and services. However, it is clear that Presbyterians want agencies to offer services to congregations and individual Presbyterians. Very few want to leave these activities only to congregations, presbyteries, and non-PC(USA) organizations.
- Although Presbyterians believe that the six national agencies do some things well, relatively few believe that the agencies do the following well: maintain the trust of Presbyterians around the country, revitalize and strengthen the ministry of and mission of the PC(USA) as a whole, and strengthen ministry at the congregational level.
- Among respondents who suggested changes to improve the PC(USA), relatively more favor: focusing on diversity, focusing on evangelism, focusing on mission, focusing on youth or young adults, communicating more effectively, improving the Web site, cutting expenses and decentralizing the denomination, promoting leadership development among laypeople, and resourcing congregations.

Detailed survey results are available at http://www.pcusa.org/committeeonreview/.
The agencies jointly submitted a report to the Review Committee that self-identifies their respective charges, identifies collaborative work of the agencies, and suggests future opportunities for collaboration and increased effectiveness. The Review Committee found the report helpful and encouraging. It is included as Appendix II.

IX. Review Committee Summary Reports Regarding General Assembly Agencies

[The Review Committee notes that these summary statements (in alphabetical order of the agencies’ names) are not exhaustive, reflecting input from the agencies and the Review Committee’s observations at a particular point in the review process, culminating in our interviews with agency leaders in February and June of 2009. The work and collaborative efforts of the agencies are dynamic and continuing, so the General Assembly committee that receives this report will want to request updates from the agencies.]

A. Board of Pensions (BOP)

The Board of Pensions (BOP) is the legal entity responsible for the benefits and assistance programs for PC(USA) clergy, lay employees, and their families. Its core mission, delegated by the GA, is to design and administer benefits plans and assistance programs, and receive, invest, and disburse funds to support them. An important underlying principle of the Benefits Plan’s design, which includes pension, healthcare, death and disability plans, is its “community nature”—the commitment of the PC(USA) as a community to share the cost of benefits for all Plan members and their families. Dues are assessed based on the member’s effective salary, subject to minimum and maximum amounts that vary by type of benefit, generating dedicated funds from which the needs of all participants are met.

The Board of Pensions annually collects in excess of $200 million in dues, pays out almost $500 million in benefits, and in 2007 granted more than 1,000 assistance payments totaling approximately $5.8 million. The healthcare and death and disability plans are self-insured by the Board of Pensions, and thus sensitive to similar risks and economics as an insurance company. The pension plan is heavily funded from long-term investment gains. The healthcare plan is pay as you go. The assistance programs are funded by one-half of the Christmas Joy Offering, and by other gifts, legacies, and contributions. No dues money is expended on assistance programs.

The Board of Pensions is accountable to the GA in that the GA elects directors of the BOP and confirms the appointment of the BOP’s president-CEO with authority to reject such appointment. The directors of the BOP, not the GA, oversee the management of the BOP. The BOP and its directors and officers, as trustees of the Benefits Plan, are subject to a fiduciary duty of care, which is owed to the Plan members and their beneficiaries. They make decisions solely and exclusively for the benefit of the members of the Benefits Plan and their families and do so with high legal standards of care and prudence. This fiduciary responsibility distinguishes the BOP from some other agencies related to the GA. In considering the BOP’s effectiveness in implementing the GA’s mission directives, we note that the focused nature of the BOP’s mandate limits opportunities for collaboration in such implementation. However, we also note that the BOP has been creative in seeking avenues, within its mission, to support the broader goals and needs of the church. Because the essence of the BOP’s core mission is to support clergy and church employees, it has sought to do so by programs geared toward supporting and strengthening clergy and church leaders. These programs include:

Seminary Debt Assistance Program—Aid to newly ordained ministers serving small churches through grants to help repay educational debt.

Middle Governing Body Grants—Matching grants to MGBs to provide training in practical skills for ministers, (such as congregational and staff leadership, budgeting, financial management, strategic planning, and conflict resolution) which are not typically part of a seminary’s curriculum.

Sabbath Sabbatical Support Grants—A three-year pilot program, administered in cooperation with MGBs, allowing small church pastors to seek stipends of up to $3,000 toward sabbaticals.

Support for First Call Programs—Assistance with financial and educational resources for pilot programs that prepare pastors for first calls; offered in cooperation with the GAMC and several synods and presbyteries.

Presbyterian CREDO—A program that provides opportunities for clergy to examine significant areas of their lives and discern prayerfully the future direction of their vocations as they respond to God’s call in a lifelong process of spiritual practice and transformation. An eight-day conference, CREDO helps ministers examine spiritual, vocational, financial, and health aspects of their ministries, directly addresses issues of clergy burnout and stress, and offers a means of coping with certain professional challenges. It is based on a core belief in the saving power of the Gospel as expressed in the baptismal covenant. In 2010 there will be six conferences.

Annual Regional Benefits Consultations—Gatherings that provide opportunities for engagement among a substantial cross section of MGB staff and key elected leaders. These consultations serve as a forum to test new ideas and foster ongoing conversation about the mission and effectiveness of the BOP. For several years, the Stated Clerk, the Executive Director of the GAMC, the President of the BOP, and the Executive Vice President of the BOP have presided at breakout groups to allow participants from MGBs to address questions and comments to the agency executives. Beginning in 2010, all agency heads will be invited to participate in these breakout groups. Each year since 2004, the BOP and the Office of Vocation (of GAMC and OGA) have worked together to prepare workshops addressing topics relevant to strengthening our clergy, and the BOP has produced booklets that capture the essence of these thought-provoking discussions. Nearly 20,000 copies of each booklet have been distributed throughout the PCUSA. Topics have included: Supporting Mid-Career Pastors (2005); Conversations on Candidacy (2006); Transitions in Ministry (2007); and Building Congregations (2008).

Pastor Advisory Council—Fourteen heads of staff of large congregations from across the PCUSA, representing 30,000 congregants from ten synods, advise the BOP management.

Regional Representatives—Eight Regional Representatives, based across the country, who work closely with churches and MGB personnel to provide information about the BOP and encourage financial support for the Assistance Program. They also serve, along with other staff, as liaisons to various national Presbyterian organizations.

Executive Presbyter Forums—About a dozen executive presbyters, selected on a rotating basis, who counsel the BOP about proposed or needed initiatives.

Improved Communication with Members—Technological advances employed to improve the BOP website, including “Benefits Connect,” a secure, online site that permits members to access personal and benefits information.

Other Collaborations—The BOP has representation on, and fully participates in, the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) Committee. The GAMC and the OGA participate in staff advisory committees for the BOP’s CREDO, Seminary Debt Assistance, and MGB Grant programs. The BOP also collaborates with these agencies on the Presbyteries Pastoral Care Network, the Healthy Ministry Conference (a biennial CPM/COM/Seminary Conference), and a joint research project on CPMs and COMs and depression among candidates and ministers. The BOP further collaborates with the other agencies in sponsoring the National Pastors Sabbath.

The BOP has participated in discussions among representatives of the six agencies to explore opportunities to enhance collaboration in the areas of church relations, communications and marketing, and funds development. The Review Committee affirms the importance of these areas for collaboration, but notes with disappointment that the six-agency discussions have not continued in 2009 and that discussions have not resulted in actual change or the desired results.

Challenges—the BOP recognizes several challenges and is seeking creative responses:

- Increasing legislation and regulation of benefit plans and not-for-profit organizations can affect the design and cost of benefits and plan administration.
- Managing the risks and economics of the healthcare plan in the current healthcare economic environment.
- Being attentive to possible future problems stemming from the increase in age of new entrants into the ministry, which results in shorter careers and issues regarding adequacy of current pension replacement ratios.
- The issue of clergy compensation and its effect on the level of benefits provided.
- Increasing fund development revenues in order to maintain and increase funding for current assistance programs and to fund needed new programs.
- Recruitment of nominees to its board of directors with requisite skills to oversee its complex regulatory, benefits design, investment, and financial operations.

B. General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC)

Purpose—The primary purpose of the GAMC is to lead and coordinate the total mission program of the PCUSA (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, Organization for Mission, V., p. 17). The 218th General Assembly (2008) recommended (and the presbyteries subsequently approved) inserting “Mission” to the General Assembly Council’s name as a way of highlighting this primary purpose (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 617).

History and Operations—The two denominations that merged in 1983 to form the PCUSA had legacies of being “intentional in revising mission policy and program in response to the leading of the Holy Spirit and a changing world context,” however their agency structures were not necessarily compatible (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, Organization for Mission, I. History of the Structure for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), p. 1). The GAC held its first meeting on June 15, 1983. As it sought to continue being faithful in its call to mission, the uniting GA (1983) launched a period of discernment that led to a “Life and Mission Statement” for the PCUSA, adopted by the 197th General Assembly (1985) (Mi-

In subsequent years, the church’s discernment of its vision of mission, and that vision informing the form and function of the GAMC continued. As a result, the GAMC sees its mission as:

- fulfilling its responsibilities as explicated in the Book of Order (G-13.0201), namely:
  a. to cultivate and promote the spiritual welfare of the whole church;
  b. to provide resources to support equal employment opportunity and affirmative action for members of racial ethnic groups, for women, for various age groups, for persons regardless of marital condition (married, single, widowed, or divorced), and for persons with disabilities;
  c. to develop and propose, for General Assembly approval, the mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities of the General Assembly Mission Council, doing so by taking into account the mission work being done by sessions, presbyteries, and synods, and to propose for General Assembly approval an accompanying budget that will implement the mission work plan of the General Assembly Mission Council;
  d. to act in those specific matters assigned to the General Assembly Mission Council by the General Assembly or this Constitution, acting always according to previously enacted General Assembly policies, reporting fully to each subsequent General Assembly its actions;
  e. to perform such additional responsibilities and duties as may be assigned by the General Assembly. (Book of Order 2009-2011)

The GAMC advises and responds to the GA on priorities, programs, and strategies for addressing matters of concern for the ministries of the church (“Joint Agency Submission to the Special Review Committee on the Service of the Whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), October 2008”). These ministries are clustered into six “ministry areas”: (1) Compassion, Peace, and Justice; (2) Evangelism and Church Growth; (3) Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women; (4) Theology Worship and Education; (5) Vocation, jointly with the OGA; and (6) World Mission. Whereas the staff of the GAMC is aligned along these ministry area lines, the elected GAMC committees are configured around five “goal areas”: (a) Evangelism; (b) Discipleship; (c) Justice; (d) Vocation; and (e) Stewardship. This organization is intended to lessen opportunities for what is often referred to as “silo effect.” When staff reported to committees aligned in the same structure, information sharing, collaboration, and synergy were less likely. Under the current design, a committee focused on a particular goal area (e.g., Justice) can work to see how that goal could be more effectively accomplished across several relevant ministry areas (Compassion, Peace, and Justice and Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries).

Every two years, the GAMC presents a Mission Work Plan to the GA with strategic goals to give direction to the ministries and more specific operational goals to implement these directives. The GAMC also prepares a budget accounting for how the directives will be funded. At the same time, the GAMC receives scores of referrals from the GA that need to be accommodated into the General Assembly Council’s ongoing work. This often requires an adjustment to the Work Plan to reallocate human and financial resources.

The office of Middle Governing Bodies (MGBs) is a joint office of the GAMC and the OGA, serving to connect those offices to synods and presbyteries and to address the myriad connections that those agencies have with MGBs in the course of their service to the church. In addition, the GAMC shares support and other services with other agencies (such as communications and funds development, human resources, information technology, finance, legal, and audit).

Accomplishments and Collaboration—In addition to the change in the General Assembly Council’s organizational structure to minimize “silo effect” and the inclusion of “Mission” to its name, the GAMC has undertaken other measures to increase communication and focus both within the agency and across the denomination:

- In its role of nurturing the ongoing process of discernment of vision (as it relates to the structures and practices by which the church carries out mission in our current context), the GAMC was instrumental in developing two GA actions that set the framework for the mission of the entire PC(USA):
  ○ Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide: Approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), this document articulates the PC(USA)’s commitment to growth—not just in numbers, but foundationally growth in evangelism, discipleship, servanthood, and diversity (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1238).
  ○ An Invitation to Expanding Partnership in God’s Mission: This covenant, signed by individuals representing a broad range of Presbyterian-related mission organizations at a January 2008 gathering,
• proclaims the biblical values that inform our understanding of mission and how we are to live those values out;
• commits the signers to work cooperatively in their various approaches to mission;
• calls the church to prayer and specific tasks to incarnate the spirit of the covenant; and
• invites others to join in this new collaborative model of mission.

- Areas of collaboration with other agencies include:
  - GAMC and PPC: The Office of Theology and Worship participates on the Presbyterian Hymnal Project, with support from Research Services. The GAMC staff members serve as advisors for elsewhere the ThoughtfulChristianforYouth.com.
  - GAMC and PILP: The PILP administers the Church Loan Program (CLP) on behalf of GAMC, and PILP serves as a resource for the mission grants program in connection with the Mission Development Resources Committee, which oversees the program.
  - GAMC and BOP: The Office of Vocation (GAMC/OGA) and the BOP have identified various programs for the support and nurture of ministers of Word and Sacrament conducted by national agencies, with the intention of coordinating assistance for clergy across the range of career stages.
  - GAMC and OGA: The Big Tent Conference, which for the first time brought together ten PC(USA) conferences in June 2009, was a joint effort planned and implemented by the GAMC and the OGA. The GAMC resources the Stated Clerk on social witness and other policy statements. In addition to the other shared and support staff already mentioned, an ecumenical staff team coordinates both the ecclesiastical aspects of our ecumenical engagements (which are the responsibility of the OGA) and our mission engagements through the GAMC.
  - GAMC and Presbyterian Foundation: Significant funding for GA mission comes from endowments held, and gifts made, through the Foundation. Accordingly, the staffs of these two agencies work together on a nearly daily basis to assure that funds are available for GA mission and are expended in accordance with applicable laws and donor restrictions.

Opportunities—The GAMC is exploring opportunities for greater collaboration as follows:
  - Several GAMC offices are participating in the planning of PPC’s product offering, PresbyterianLeader.com.
  - With the OGA, the GAMC is in conversation with their counterparts in other denominations to discuss opportunities for further collaboration with them.
  - The GAMC and the Foundation are exploring further collaboration in funds development.

A fuller enumeration of these and other examples of collaboration (existing and proposed) can be found in the Joint Agency Submission to the Special Review Committee (Appendix II).

Challenges—The GAMC entities such as Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) are in the forefront of vital mission initiatives across the world. Nonetheless, the Review Committee’s survey reflects a surprising lack of knowledge across the church’s MGBs, seminary leaders, ministers, and GA commissioners regarding the structures and programs of the church. This challenge calls for more effective communication and interpretation strategies.

The current economic environment and trends toward designated giving have contributed to a sense of increased competition for financial resources to fund mission. In addition to the efforts already described that the GAMC has undertaken to engage other mission entities in covenant and collaboration, the agency is addressing the challenge of interpreting to the church the history as well as the new story of Presbyterians in mission.

With limited financial resources comes the need to prioritize and focus on things the GAMC does well. This may require painful choices, but the GAMC recognizes the importance of two-way communication with all parts of the church in discerning these priorities and fostering relationships with all parts of the church in order for meaningful honest communication to exist.

The GAMC and the Foundation have experienced levels of disagreement regarding use of endowment-generated funds designated for PC(USA) mission support. Challenges and opportunities for increased collaboration are addressed elsewhere in this report.

C. Office of the General Assembly (OGA)

Call and Structure—Bringing the church together is at the heart of the OGA’s work. In carrying out this call, the OGA experiences consistent and constant tensions. First, there is a sense of being both invisible and essential. The OGA is an essential part of who we are as a church. It is the servant of our governance. It is the agency that nurtures and supports our unique way of making decisions at the biennial GAs and within every congregation. It is the support for the network of relationships with and among MGBs. It is the caretaker of our history and heritage. It is the agency that nurtures those who are preparing for and seeking to do ministry. It is the agency that serves, cares for, and ministers to present and future leaders of the church.

This call is carried out first through the work of the Stated Clerk, who is the continuing ecclesial officer of the GA and chief executive officer of the OGA. The Stated Clerk preserves and defends the Constitution and supports the decisions, actions, and program of the GA. The Stated Clerk also gives advisory opinions concerning the meaning of the Constitution and the meaning of the actions of the GA. The Stated Clerk is assisted by other staff, consisting of eight department directors, all of them Associate Stated Clerks. The departments are Constitutional Services; Ecumenical and Agency Relations; History; Communication, Development, and Technology; GA Meeting Service; and Office of the Stated Clerk, which includes MGB Relations and the Department of Vocation, both shared with the GAMC.

Clearly this is essential and critical work for the health, ministry, and mission of the church. Ironically, however, the Review Committee has discovered that the OGA is one of the “invisible” agencies of the church. In the Review Committee’s survey, the OGA ranked, even with GA commissioners, as being only “generally” or “somewhat” familiar.

The OGA staff, including the Stated Clerk, spends much time consulting with the church. It is reported, for example, that Church Leadership Connection staff consult regularly with ministers, presbytery staff, and committee leadership regarding leadership searches. Additionally, OGA conducts listening sessions throughout the church in an effort to be in touch with and responsive to Presbyterians. In spite of all that activity and commitment to relationship, the OGA remains relatively unknown.

A second tension with which the OGA lives is between “efficiency and effectiveness.” Increasingly the church asks for greater efficiency, even questioning the validity of GA itself. However, the call that the OGA seeks to carry out is not to be merely efficient. Rather it is to be effective. Specifically, it is to assure that church governance and discipline are orderly and fairly implemented, ensuring that each voice in the church is given adequate and appropriate hearing.

Collaboration—The OGA leaders indicate that there are informal mechanisms for collaboration with other agencies. For example, regular gatherings between the executives and chairs of the boards of each agency have provided support and encouragement for collaborative work. More obvious collaboration is seen in major initiatives like the Big Tent Conference in 2009, which brought together what had been ten separate conferences, and the National Pastors Sabbath.

Given the “invisibility” issue noted, many in the church have difficulty identifying how and where the OGA (and other agencies, as well) have or have not collaborated. There is, however, a clear, yet undefined, desire to eliminate duplication of services. Part of that desire may arise from a confusion of names and activities. For example, both the OGA and the GAMC collect statistics, but the function and purpose of their respective statistical research vary. The OGA only collects statistics and reports them to the church. The GAMC collects statistics and also analyzes the results. The Review Committee detected, both in feedback received and in survey results, that people across the PC(USA) express both a desire for eliminating duplication and a desire for choices in resources, a paradoxical state that could lead easily to duplication.

Challenges—One continuing challenge for the OGA is the need for consistent and increased education. The high priority identified by survey respondents for communication and the relatively low level of knowledge held across the church about the OGA and its work and responsibilities shape the need and direction for this challenge. Current methods of communication seem to be ineffective in increasing knowledge of the OGA. Discovering new, creative, and substantial methods is needed.

The second challenge has more to do with the whole church and less to do with the OGA specifically. Since the OGA is responsible for measuring the overall health of the church, there is a challenge of finding new and creative ways to determine “how we are doing” as a church. Numbers only tell part of the story. Stories and narrative reports come closer to the truth of what the church is and how it is doing. For example, each year at the GA, because of how the church voices concerns and works with one another, a vendor or employee from outside church literally reports being converted to Christ and feeling called into the PC(USA). The whole church is challenged to explore how such stories can move from being “marketing medium” toward becoming clear measures of the meaning and progress of the church.

A third set of challenges relates to the meetings of GA. When GA meets, its agenda is determined primarily by work referred to it by past assemblies and overtures from presbyteries. As the national representative gathering of the whole church, the GA could be the most important element in determining the church’s vision and the one that shapes future direction. This shift presents many challenges to the OGA and, in fact, to the whole church. How can GA continue to be responsive to the needs, questions, and issues that arise from the church and avoid perpetuating a “top down” model of church leadership and, at the same time, also become a visionary body that speaks to the church? If that is a correct direction for the GA, what role should the OGA play in guiding the church in that direction and “designing a process of discerning and designating mission priorities”? Further, if vision and mission priorities could be set by GA for the whole church, how is ownership by the whole church formed and who, as noted previously, would be the “keeper of the vision”? How can commissioners become more significant interpreters of that vision and the work of the whole church and how can the OGA support them?
D. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (Foundation)

History and Operations—The Foundation is a corporate entity that is a fiduciary for the GA, provides investment services, holds title on behalf of the church regarding the investment assets of the church, provides a deferred giving and wills emphasis program, and assures that there is strict adherence to the wishes and restrictions of donors and others who have entrusted funds to its care. In essence, its work and mission for the whole church is to “…cultivate, attract, and manage financial resources of individuals and institutions to serve Christ’s mission” (http://www.presbyterianfoundation.org/about_us/3/mission_statement.aspx). Its tag line is Bringing People & Mission Together.

In 1953, GA directed the Foundation to “carry out a church-wide educational and interpretive program … and to solicit deferred gifts and bequests for the immediate and future benefit of the Church.” That mandate has been reaffirmed by subsequent GAs through 2008. To support this mandate, the Foundation produces a full program of resources available free of charge to congregations so that they may promote the importance of remembering the church as part of Christian estate planning. Millions of dollars are left to churches and the PC(USA) as a result of these efforts. The Foundation serves as fiduciary for more than 7,000 endowment funds and receives gifts in other forms that benefit the mission and ministry of the PC(USA).

In approximately one-third of the assets where the Foundation is a fiduciary corporation, the GAMC either has an interest as beneficiary or serves as the Foundation’s agent for administration and disbursement of funds made available. In 2008, the Foundation made available to the GAMC more than 23 million dollars. The partnership between the GAMC and the Foundation ensures the proper investment of funds, that donor designations are followed, that government regulations are met, and that funding is provided for the mission of the church. This segregation of duties between the Foundation and the GAMC provides independence and integrity to the process of distributing moneys that donors have entrusted to the church for its mission. The Foundation also serves as the fiduciary to the Church Loan Program and for the Jarvie Commonweal Service Committee (which successfully serves the elderly in the New York City area).

Opportunities—In conversations with representatives of the other agencies, the following were key shared insights:

- the Foundation is held in high regard among some church individuals, but is not widely known;
- the Foundation is known for its integrity and wide-reaching mission impact;
- the Foundation sees itself as a funds development arm for mission, not as a mission arm of the church;
- there is tension between the Foundation and the GAMC regarding funds “ownership”;
- the whole church would benefit from more unified funds development efforts.

Accomplishments and Agency Collaboration—Since our initial meetings, there have been notable accomplishments in collaboration between the Foundation and the GAMC, including regular meetings of the agency heads, the respective legal/operational teams, and establishment of the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee. The RFRC will serve as an important and constructive safety valve. The Foundation believes that both agencies will cooperate dramatically where questions regarding funds restrictions can be resolved short of involving the RFRC. These matters are addressed further elsewhere in this report.

More than 1.7 million dollars in foreign funds have been released in July 2009 alone and the GAMC has completed the downloading of its payment chains into a computer program. The Foundation was also instrumental in creating a two-day meeting at the Foundation offices for the heads of the Foundation, the GAMC, the OGA, and the BOP, resulting in a decision to convene the field forces of these four agencies, plus invitations to the other two agencies, for a 2010 event in Louisville to educate and inform roughly eighty field representatives on the missions, funding needs, and initiatives of all six agencies.

The Foundation also offers, free of charge, the Mission & Ministry Profiles, which provide the PC(USA) and related entities with the opportunity to share information about the organization’s goals and mission initiatives. Profiles are on the Foundation’s website (http://presbyterianfoundation.org). As of September 2008, more than 190 mission and ministry organizations had posted a profile.

Challenges—The above summary represents some of the opportunities and challenges faced by the Foundation and current accomplishments taken toward increased collaboration and productivity. An analysis of structure and reporting relationships would indicate that there are opportunities for greater clarity and efficiencies between the agencies while maintaining the integrity of each. The current checks and balances afforded by the denomination’s governance structure are healthy. Clearly, both the Foundation and the GAMC are now working collaboratively and cooperatively to exercise wise and useful judgments within the checks and balances of the Constitution and deliverances. It is paramount that the collaborative efforts continue.

Centralized funds development efforts may also prove beneficial if such can be approached absent turf and personalized agendas. There are also synergies to be gained in sharing of specified investment arenas.
E. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP)

History and Operations—The purpose of the PILP is to offer low-cost loans to congregations and middle governing bodies (MGBs) to enable them to purchase, renovate, and expand worship and mission space, and to promote the growth of the church. The PILP was funded initially with a $4 million grant that was withdrawn from the $50 million fund. The $50 million fund is a Church Loan endowment fund. By 1998 PILP was fully operational.

There are two primary sources for the loans made through PILP: Endowment Funds and Investor Funds. Having one entity—PILP—administering both the Endowment and Investor funded loans simplifies the process for the borrowing congregations and MGBs.

The Endowment Funds are gifts to the denomination from Presbyterians. For more than 165 years these gifts have provided congregations with low-cost loans. The Foundation is the fiduciary of these endowment funds, and the PC(USA) acts as the Foundation’s agent for disbursement and administration of the loan funds. The PC(USA), A Corporation has engaged PILP as PC(USA), A Corporation’s agent to disburse and administer the loans issued from these funds. The loan policies for the use of these funds are set by the Mission Development Resources Committee of the GAMC. The PILP, in turn, has an operating agreement with the PC(USA) to administer these loan policies and to manage the loan portfolio of the CLP.

A second source of loan funds is Investor Funds. The PILP’s investors are the other GA agencies, congregations, governing bodies, and individuals. These investors purchase Term Notes or Denominational Account Receipts, with the expectation that the principal will be repaid with interest. The sales of Term Notes are regulated by State Securities Administrators and the General Offering Circular must be approved in each state. Since its founding, PILP has received more than $137 million in investments from GA agencies, individuals, congregations, and governing bodies. The current balance of investments net of redemptions is more than $75 million.

Congregations and MGBs are obligated to repay their loans, usually in monthly payments of principal and interest. The repaid interest on loans made from Investor Funds is PILP’s source of income to pay interest to its investors, to cover its operating costs, and to build additional capital for future loans. The PILP does not draw on mission funds of the PC(USA).

The PILP’s governing body is a fifteen-person board of directors that is elected by the GAMC and confirmed by the GA. Candidates for the board of directors are nominated by the GAMC, the Foundation, synods, presbyteries, the GA Nominating Committee, and the PILP Board. The highly diverse board is composed of clergy, bankers, accountants, financial advisors, and other persons with required and needed expertise.

The PILP’s staff includes two ordained ministers, three elders, and one trustee, all of whom are involved in the mission of local congregations and their presbyteries. Staff members are skilled in funds development, marketing services, credit operations and analysis, and loan operations.

Accomplishments and Agency Collaboration—By most measures, PILP has been successful in achieving its mission of providing low-cost loans to congregations and MGBs to expand mission space and to promote the growth of the church. Moreover, PILP has accomplished its mission, in part, through collaboration with other entities of the PC(USA).

Accomplishments—As indicated above, PILP administers loans made from both the Endowment Funds and the Investor Funds. The PILP assumed responsibility for the former in 2000. This administrative consolidation of the two programs created a more efficient process for the GA and for borrowers. Congregations and MGBs now have one application, one set of documents, one closing and mortgage, and one loan payment, all through one contact point. All loans are on one system for uniform reporting.

From July 2000 through June 2009, the Coordinated Loan Program (endowment funds and investor funds) disbursed more than $201-million in loans. The current balance of outstanding loans is more than $168 million. This figure does not include $11-million in pending construction loans or $9.6-million in commitments pending closing.

Operationally, in 2008 the program experienced its eighth consecutive year in which revenues exceeded expenses.

Collaboration—As indicated above, through an operating agreement, the PC(USA), A Corporation has engaged PILP as its agent to administer the Church Loan Program. The PILP is compensated from the endowment funds of the Church Loan Program via fees that the PC(USA), A Corporation assesses these funds. Through a customer service agreement, PILP purchases legal, accounting, information technology, and human resource services from the GAMC.

Several of PILP’s larger investors are governing bodies and agencies of the GA. The PILP began selling Term Notes in 1996. The GAC and the Foundation gave a commitment to invest a total of $10-million in the same year. In 2000, the Foun-
The program collaborates with synods that have investment and loan programs. The PILP does not seek funds from individual investors from the Synods of Alaska/Northwest and Mid-America since both have pre-existing programs for individuals. Likewise, investments are not sought from congregations and presbyteries in the Synods of Alaska/Northwest, Mid-America, and Pacific since all three have pre-existing investment programs for congregations and presbyteries. In working to better define its mission and eliminate duplication, the Synod of Lincoln Trails decided to close down its investment and loan program. In 2005, PILP began the process of transferring the mission of the Synod of Lincoln Trails Capital Improvement Program to PILP’s Coordinated Loan Program. The Synod of Mid-America has been a participant in several PILP loans.

The PILP participates in national and local programs to help build the church in ways beyond loans per se. It was one of the sponsoring agencies of the National Pastors’ Sabbath in 2009; it is a part of an interagency task force to develop a national strategy and network for recruiting racial ethnic and female candidates for management positions in the agencies; and it conducts workshops on project feasibility for presbyteries.

The PILP gathers data from congregations through the Annual Statistical Reports and shares these data as well as inquiries with Church Financial Campaign Services (CFCS).

Opportunities—As shown in the survey commissioned by the Review Committee, PILP was one of the least recognized agencies of the church. For an entity that depends on investors for a significant portion of its revenues, this is not a positive sign.

There are several reasons why many Presbyterians probably do not know about PILP. These include: (1) congregations undertake building projects about once every twenty years and most pastors provide leadership for no more than one or two building projects during their active ministry; (2) awareness of GA resources available for assisting with building and financing capital projects is not urgent until a project presents itself; and (3) PILP is a relatively young entity having been operational for only twelve years.

Fortunately, the PILP management team recognizes this problem and strives to be the first resource that comes to mind when congregations develop building plans and when presbyteries seek to help congregations with these plans. Among PILP’s initiatives in this regard are: to provide initial consultations with congregational leadership; to increase awareness in participating presbyteries and synods through presentations, visits, etc.; to maintain its relationship with CFCS; to increase the circulation of the PILP newsletter; to participate in national events for church development leaders; and to expand direct mail and e-mail communications with governing bodies.

As PILP becomes better known and its capital base grows accordingly, it will have the opportunity to further reduce the margin between the cost of funds and lending rates, thereby enabling PILP to be even more effective in providing low-cost loans.

Challenges—Despite the many accomplishments of PILP since 1995 and its future potential, it does have challenges that could impact its future. Currently identified challenges include:

- PILP will need additional capital to grow as rapidly as the demand for new loans.
- The Foundation and PC(USA) must resolve their differences regarding the endowments of the Church Loan Program.
- Financial challenges in MGBs may result in a diminished capacity to guarantee loans and maintain investments in PILP.

F. Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC)

Mission and Organization—By action of the 205th General Assembly (1993), PPC was constituted to “serve the needs of the PC(USA) for educational and theological materials and for promoting the mission of the PC(USA) by publishing theological books for a wide audience” (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 455). The PPC’s mission statement, revised in 2003, declares that “building on the Reformed tradition, the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation seeks to glorify God by contributing to the spiritual and intellectual vitality of Christ’s church. To that end, PPC publishes resources that advance religious scholarship, stimulate conversation about moral values, and inspire faithful living.” The current mission statement surrenders the original language that pointed specifically to PPC’s pivotal service to “Presbyterian congregations” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, 42.001, pp. 44, 619).

The PPC publishes resources under six imprints, each targeting a particular audience. These imprints are WJK Press, which publishes academic books with broader ecumenical appeal; Geneva Press, which publishes Presbyterian resources for leaders and congregations; These Days, which provides daily devotions in printed format; Theology Today, a scholarly journal published in partnership with Princeton Theological Seminary; The Thoughtful Christian (TTC), a series of multi-themed online studies for adults and youth; and The Presbyterian leader.com, a web-based resource for training Presbyterian leaders.
Online resources currently produced by PPC provide materials in response to the increasing instructional needs of congregations, thus enhancing the curricular material produced by the Office of Congregational Ministries (OCM) of the GAMC. In 1996 the PPC, by action of the GA, transferred publication of curricular material for congregational education (PREM) to GAMC. Given the challenges of curricular publishing and distribution confronting the GAMC, there have been conversations about either placing the curricular publishing venture of the PC(USA) in the hands of PPC or arranging a collaborative model of production between GAMC-OCM and PPC. At this point, both parties acknowledge that keeping curricular production separate is beneficial for the mission and purpose of both organizations, especially as PPC understands it own editorial autonomy.

While production of educational material in “curricular format” by PPC can be seen as a duplication of or competition with curricular publishing from the GAMC, it has been generally recognized that: the format in which the studies are provided are unique to PPC and are not replicated anywhere in the PC(USA) system; there is an ample audience for varied curricular material; and that such initiatives are in accordance with both GA mandate and PPC’s mission.

The Review Committee’s survey demonstrates that PPC products are well-known among target audiences, but less known in other audiences. Those who were surveyed at academic institutions, for example, knew well the WJK products, but were less aware of TTC. The most immediate users of PPC resources were aware of PPC and its work—seminary faculty, Christian educators, and congregations. General Assembly commissioners were generally aware of PPC due to the display of resources at GA meetings. Leaders of national agencies, synods, and presbyteries are less knowledgeable about PPC’s work.

The PPC is financially self-sustaining in an era when other religious publishing agencies are experiencing decline. Over the past seven years, PPC has achieved an average annual surplus of more than $500,000 on publishing operations, allowing PPC to contribute to mission projects of the PC(USA). The PPC will fund $2.5 million in development expenses for the next Presbyterian hymnal.

Additionally, PPC will continue to support its own benevolence programs, including: Books without Borders, which provides books to seminary libraries in developing countries; Disaster Relief, which helps reestablish collections of congregational or seminary libraries lost to natural disasters; Equipping the Saints, which provides pastoral resources for new clergy; the Robert Bohl Racial Ethnic Internship, which encourages gifted racial-ethnic seminary students to enter religious publishing; and the Price Gwynn III Church Leadership Series. These benevolence programs are realized through partnerships with various offices of the OGA and the GAMC.

Corporate Partnerships—As a self-sustaining agency and an ecumenically recognized religious publisher, PPC has established partnerships outside the six PC(USA) agencies to promote and enhance its mission. Currently, PPC publishes a twelve-volume lectionary commentary entitled Feasting the Word in collaboration with Columbia Theological Seminary. It also publishes the academic journal Theology Today in partnership with Princeton Theological Seminary. The Review Committee encourages PPC to explore similar collaborations with other PC(USA) seminaries, thus benefitting from the wealth of scholarship present at our theological institutions.

The PPC partners with recognized and emerging authors to provide the theological diversity needed for the interfaith, interdenominational, and scholarly comprehensiveness required to maintain the prominence and credibility of its titles. This collaboration has been helpful in developing the wide spectrum of adult studies represented in the TTC imprint. Through TTC, PPC has achieved ecumenical endorsement and promotion from the United Methodist Church, the United Church of Christ, The Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and the Episcopal Church.

The PPC has partnered with Cokesbury, the publishing arm of the United Methodist Church, to provide warehousing, customer marketing, and distribution. This partnership has raised issues among some Presbyterian customers who prefer to receive product information and purchase directly from PPC. While PPC is clear about the business rationale of this partnership, the average Presbyterian may find it difficult to recognize where to acquire Presbyterian resources. Responding to this concern, PPC reestablished a bookstore and product information section within their offices at the PC(USA) Center. The partnership with Cokesbury, however, has proved mutually beneficial. Cokesbury conducts book displays at Presbyterian events, is PPC’s largest buyer, and pays commission on sales to Presbyterians.

Interagency Collaboration—The PPC provides both counsel and support to PC(USA) agencies developing resources for church nurture and development. In collaboration with the GAMC, PPC has published the Book of Worship in Spanish and is currently considering publishing similar resources in Spanish and Korean. In collaboration with the OGA, PPC produced the official Bible Study Pack for the 218th General Assembly (2008) and recently launched an online resource, The Presbyterian Leader, with resources for elders, deacons, and other church officers. The Presbyterian Leader will include an online worship planner for worship leaders. There are also plans to distribute Westminster John Knox and Geneva study books (i.e. The Bible from Scratch, The Bible for Everyone, Presbyterian Questions and Answers) as curriculum options through the Congregational Ministries Publishing of the GAMC.

The most significant collaboration underway is publication of the next Presbyterian hymnal, authorized by the GA (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 11, 1142), in partnership with the Office of Theology and Worship and the Presbyterian Association of Musicians. Cost for development and distribution of the new hymnal will be borne by PPC, which has allocated $2.5 million to this venture.
Other initiatives of interagency engagement include PPC’s presence at PC(USA) events like the Big Tent, APCE, and the National Pastors’ Sabbath.

Some agencies, like the GAMC, are required to invest funds with the Foundation. Other agencies, like PPC, have historically chosen to do so in a spirit of partnership. The PPC, however, has experienced concerns about the investment performance and fee structure of the Foundation (a concern expressed to the Review Committee by others, including MGB representatives). In a spirit of partnership and collaboration, PPC and the Foundation discussed these concerns. As of the time the Review Committee is preparing this report, however, PPC no longer invests funds with the Foundation. The Review Committee is aware, as of the time this report is being finalized, that the Foundation has gone through several major transitions and has made substantive adjustments to its strategic plan. The GA committee that receives this report will want to hear of such developments in an update from the Foundation.

According to the Review Committee’s survey, PPC is a little-known PC(USA) agency. Survey respondents were largely unaware of PPC’s collaboration with other agencies. Given the high priority assigned by respondents to ecumenical commitment, PPC is missing an important opportunity to communicate its unique ecumenical connections to assist other GA agencies in their ecumenical endeavors.

An area identified as a top priority by those surveyed and indeed a mandate of GA for all its agencies is the PC(USA) commitment to diversity. The PPC acknowledges that its materials and publications need to be more diverse. Toward that end, the Review Committee encourages PPC to engage a viability study about publications for a more diverse market in terms of theological perspective, race, and ethnicity.

The PPC should communicate more effectively with the whole church their mission work and their collaborations with the GAMC and the OGA to produce materials for forming Presbyterian identity and informing mission. To this end, PPC should make better use of its web page as a communication platform and not just a marketing “catalogue.” The PPC web page could provide information about its history and relationship to the PC(USA), as well as its mission.

X. Conversations with Middle Governing Body Representatives

In addition to the survey contracted by the Review Committee (summarized in Section VII of this report and available online at http://www.pcusa.org/committeeonreview/), two venues provided opportunity for input regarding the Review Committee’s assigned task from MGB leaders:

- On April 21, 2009, two representatives of the Review Committee met with synod executives.
- A group of Review Committee members hosted a telephone conference call with representatives of the Association of Executive Presbyteries on June 26, 2009.

Both conversations provided opportunity to discuss the collaborative efforts of the six agencies, the accomplishments and failings of individual agencies, and ways the agencies specifically interact with MGBs. Insights from these conversations have been incorporated in the report and recommendations.

XI. GAMC, Presbyterian Foundation, and Restricted Funds Resolution Committee

Regarding the referral of Item 08-21, the Review Committee met with representatives of the GAMC and the Foundation. Additionally, the Review Committee consulted with the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) through its moderator. We observe that the two agencies have distinctive roles regarding the restricted funds in question. The GAMC is the organization that, in many cases, distributes and/or uses restricted funds generated for mission. The GAMC has responsibility, on behalf of the GA, to oversee and implement the GA’s mission priorities and directives. The Foundation, on the other hand, has a fiduciary responsibility to donors to ensure that funds are used as stipulated by the donor of the gift. At best, the two agencies provide something of a check and balance regarding responsible use of the restricted funds. Occasionally, however, the GAMC and the Foundation have disagreed on matters pertaining to use of the funds, i.e., whether or not the uses of funds fit the parameters and requirements in which and with which the gift was made to the Foundation.

The Review Committee emphasizes that every effort must continue to be made to ensure a healthy and collaborative relationship between the GAMC and the Foundation regarding use of restricted funds. Strong and effective communication between the two agencies and the leadership of the agencies is imperative. Our most recent communication from the leaders of the GAMC and the Foundation indicates increased commitment to collaboration and documents encouraging developments, including:

- Regular meetings between the Executive Director of the GAMC and the Interim President and Chief Executive Officer of the Foundation;
- Formation of a Working Group of GAMC members and Foundation trustees and formalization of a covenant to strengthen the working relationship between the two agencies;
• Establishment of mutual access to the respective data bases of the two agencies, thus strengthening communication and reducing opportunities for confusion and conflict;

• Cooperative work between the agencies to better understand restrictions and reporting requirements of federal regulatory organizations and to resolve related differences of interpretation between the agencies, to the end that funds are made available for mission;

• Cooperative work between the agencies to better understand both current restrictions of funds and priority needs for new funds as they are established;

• Monthly reports from the Foundation to the GAMC regarding endowment fund details;

• Increased sharing of ideas and best practices regarding information technology and services;

• Monthly meetings between representatives of the legal departments of the two agencies;

• Expanded software capability that allows staffs of both agencies to input, view, and track information on interagency issues.

Progress is documented in the joint letter submitted by executive leaders of the GAMC and the Foundation, and affirmed by their respective boards, to the Review Committee. It is included in Appendix III of this report. The Review Committee affirms and encourages these efforts. The committee commends the obvious commitment of the executive leaders of the GAMC and the Foundation to the improvement of communication and working relationships as a model and example for other GAMC and Foundation staff members. Geographic separation of these two agencies makes such commitments all the more important. Face-to-face communication, joint worship, relationship building, and collaboration will benefit other departments and organizational levels of the two agencies.

At the time of the Review Committee’s work and report preparation, the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) has had an organizational meeting and has met with representatives of both the GAMC and the Foundation. They have not, however, been called upon for resolution of any disputed issue. It is, therefore, too early to make any judgment upon the effectiveness of the RFRC. Theoretically, nonetheless, the Review Committee sees potential need and value of continuing the existence of the RFRC. Should disagreement arise between the GAMC and the Foundation, the existence of a third party to assist and attempt resolution clearly benefits the whole church. Legal intervention, though potentially necessary and helpful, should be avoided if possible.

To that end, the Review Committee will include in its recommendations and observations: the continuation of the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee; continuation and expansion of efforts to strengthen communication and cooperation between the GAMC and the Foundation regarding restricted funds resolution and the reporting of related progress to the RFRC no less than annually; and the suggestion that, should additional clarification of the respective roles of the GAMC and the Foundation become necessary, the RFRC consider obtaining a legal review from a qualified attorney related neither to the GAMC/PC(USA) or the Foundation regarding the relative responsibilities of the GAMC and the Foundation. [See Item 18-09 of the 219th General Assembly (2010).]

XII. The Desire for One Voice to Speak for the Church

The rationale for Item 08-22, the 218th General Assembly (2008)’s action to establish this Review Committee, focuses on coordination among the six agencies of the PC(USA), noting that such coordination is “voluntary and not always effective.” In conversations with participants in the review process (agency representatives, middle governing body representatives, and survey participants), as well as in its own discussions, the Review Committee perceives a need and an expressed desire for someone or some entity to promote and ensure the collaboration of all agencies, as appropriate, as well as middle governing bodies and sessions, toward realization of the General Assembly’s mission priorities. Many people speak of the desire to have “one voice” that speaks for the PC(USA).

Furthermore, the Review Committee has heard and affirms a strongly expressed desire to have a “comprehensive mission priority” for the PC(USA). Such mission prioritization must come from the General Assembly itself. The Review Committee thinks that a person or entity must be unambiguously identified with the responsibility for promoting and ensuring the collaboration of the whole church, including as appropriate the six agencies of the PC(USA), toward the realization of the mission priorities of the church.

The Review Committee perceives a lack of clarity, potential confusion, and a possible impediment to effective collaboration in the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). On the one hand, Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stipulates in Section V.:
The Review Committee perceives a lack of clarity in this language, specifically in the use and meaning of “Ministries of our church” and “total mission program.” It is the Review Committee’s sense that this language refers specifically to the “Ministries” and “total mission program” particularly delegated to the oversight of the GAMC rather than to the broader and more inclusive mission of the whole church, including all GA agencies. The language seems, nonetheless, ambiguous and confusing.

On the other hand, Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stipulates in Section IV.B.2.n.: “The Stated Clerk shall promote the harmony and efficiency of the General Assembly and its agencies in cooperation with the General Assembly Mission Council and its Executive Director, with special attention to relationships between General Assembly entities, and with synods, presbyteries, and sessions” (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, Organization for Mission, p. 10).

In summary, the Review Committee perceives confusion and potential conflict regarding the respective roles of

- the General Assembly Mission Council and its Executive Director; and
- The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk.

The confusion perceived by the Review Committee relates quite possibly to the 218th General Assembly (2008)’s Item 08-22, the rationale of which indicated that prior agency reviews received questions regarding “the rationale for the separation of the GAC and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).” The confusion lends itself potentially to competition, which becomes an impediment to collaboration.

XIII. Conclusions, Observations, and Recommendations

The Review Committee sees a desperate need for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—through the General Assembly and its agencies, as well as other governing bodies—to enthusiastically claim its identity and clearly define its mission. It is not our task as a committee to do this. It is the task of the whole church, a task of discernment, grounded in worship, study of Scripture, and prayer. This is a task that never ends, for which the General Assembly can and must provide leadership. Once we claim that identity and our particular mission, however timeless or time-bound they may be, we need to clearly, creatively, and expansively communicate them to the whole church so that all can joyfully and effectively work together toward accomplishing the work of God’s kingdom entrusted particularly to us, here and now.

It is our hope that such unity rooted in our identity in Christ and such a clear call to mission shaped and sustained by the Spirit will glorify God, renew the PC(USA), and attract others to be a part of what God is doing in and among us. To such ends, we humbly make the recommendations that follow this prayer by George MacLeod, founder of the Iona Community, cited in Christ of the Celts: The Healing of Creation by J. Philip Newell (Paulist Press, 1997, p. 92):

Give us grace in our changing day
To stand by the temple that is the present church,
The noisome temple
The sometimes scandalized temple that is the present church, Listening sometime to what again seems mumbo jumbo
Make it our custom to go
Till the new outline of your Body for our day
Becomes visible in our midst.

A. There is good and sufficient reason to keep the six agencies as separate but interrelated entities. Based on data gathered through conversations with agency leaders, a survey, conversations with middle governing body leaders, and its own deliberations, the Review Committee perceives neither a compelling case nor an obvious will or desire for serious structural reorganization of General Assembly agencies. The Review Committee’s conclusion is not intended to preempt or prohibit such considerations if and when they are deemed needed and appropriate, but the review does not lead us to such a recommendation at this time. That being noted, the Review Committee sees ways in which interagency collaboration can be improved, cases where there is a perception of redundancy that calls for better communication of the respective agencies’ peculiar and distinctive roles, and situations that may call for further delineation of responsibilities.

B. There have been and continue to be good faith efforts for constant, cordial, cooperative, and collaborative ministry for the glory of God, the strengthening of the church’s ministry and mission, and the good of God’s creation. The Review Committee affirms these, and encourages both their continuation and continued development so that all agencies and governing bodies covenant together to cultivate and promote the spiritual welfare of the whole church.

C. The Review Committee recommends that collaboration with other agencies and MGBs be included specifically as a standard or criterion for the periodic reviews of each General Assembly agency and of each agency head.
D. The Review Committee recommends a review of and possible revisions to the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with attention specifically given to the roles and responsibilities of the General Assembly Mission Council and its Executive Director and the Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk. Until such review and clarification takes place, the Review Committee recommends that the Stated Clerk, as the one agency head who is elected by the General Assembly, be affirmed by the General Assembly and its agencies as the one who speaks with one voice for the General Assembly and, as stipulated in the Organization for Mission, “shall promote the harmony and efficiency of the General Assembly and its agencies in cooperation with the General Assembly Mission Council and its Executive Director, with special attention to relationships between General Assembly entities, and with synods, presbyteries, and sessions” (Manual of the General Assembly, 2010, Organization for Mission, IV.B.2.n., p. 10). [See Item 18-08 of the 219th General Assembly (2010).]

E. The Review Committee perceives significant levels of confusion between consultation and collaboration. While good communication and sharing of ideas are valued, they are not in and of themselves enough. Beyond such consultation, commitment to shared priorities and united efforts to accomplish shared mission objectives are at the heart of collaboration. The Review Committee recommends that the Office of the General Assembly include in the agenda of each General Assembly a joint report from the six General Assembly agencies that documents their collaborative accomplishments.

F. Prime areas for new, continued, or increased cooperation and collaboration include:

1. Presbyterian Foundation/General Assembly Mission Council collaboration as documented in the report and in the Clay/Valentine letter included in Appendix III. The Review Committee affirms the progress noted in this letter and emphasizes the importance of continuing such efforts and progress through current and future leadership transitions.

2. To support and facilitate such collaboration between the Presbyterian Foundation and the General Assembly Mission Council, and to help resolve differences when needed, the Review Committee responds to Referral 08-21 with the recommendation that the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee continue to function for at least another two years. [See Item 18-09 of the 219th General Assembly (2010).] The Review Committee sees encouraging signs of progress in negotiating the complex relationship between the GAMC and the Foundation, but nonetheless suggests that, should clarification of roles become necessary, the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee consider obtaining a legal review from a qualified attorney related neither to the General Assembly Mission Council/Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or the Foundation regarding the relative responsibilities of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Foundation.

3. Commitments and efforts of the Foundation and the General Assembly Mission Council, through the appointed workgroup, for improved cooperation and collaboration between the two agencies. The Review Committee recognizes that this workgroup has particular and peculiar issues to address, and affirms the focus and intentions of the agencies and the workgroup. The Foundation/GAMC workgroup could be a model upon which all agencies create a workgroup that focuses on collaboration, or that commitment might be formally recognized as an objective of the current gatherings of chief executives and elected chairs from the six agencies. In one way or another, the Review Committee recommends the formal recognition that collaboration among agencies is a priority, for which all agencies hold themselves accountable.

4. The Review Committee received indications of dissatisfaction with the Foundation’s investment returns and fee structure, as well as concerns about the Foundation’s perceived emphasis on mutual funds. Apart from these management issues, there appears to be a more fundamental concern about how the Foundation views its funds development mission, or the limitations of that mission. The Foundation seems to view its role primarily as an investment advisor; whereas certain other agencies require or expect a more traditional fund-raising approach. The lack of a centralized approach to funds development among the agencies may be confusing and discouraging to potential donors. The Review Committee recommends that these issues be explored with the objective of achieving a more coordinated, collaborative, and cohesive approach to funds development.

5. As noted in Appendix III, there will be a convening of field staff of all agencies in January 2010, in Louisville. As the Review Committee prepares this report, it is with hope that the January convention will have a broad and inclusive agenda, focused on the recognition that all of the General Assembly agencies are in it together—the positive and conscious realization that what each agency does is for the benefit of the whole church. The Review Committee notes with concern the manner in which the General Assembly Mission Council recently deployed regionally-based development associates to expand funding for General Assembly mission. While applauding the motivation of funding mission, the Review Committee recommends that the GAMC affirm a clear commitment to, and together with other agencies take affirmative steps toward, collaboration that goes beyond communication between agencies and includes collaborative planning and funds development. This manner of collaboration is identified as important by all six agencies in their joint report (Appendix II), by middle governing body representatives, and by the General Assembly in its charge to the Review Committee.

6. The Review Committee recommends a meeting or meetings of agency heads and chairs to further focus on collaboration. This meeting should include an educational component on what collaboration really means and involves, as well as a critical assessment regarding obstacles to and opportunities for collaboration. The meeting or meetings should specifically address collaboration regarding funds development, communications, and church relations, all of which are identified as priority opportunities for collaboration in the report jointly submitted to the Review Committee (Appendix II). Agencies should consider use of a consultant to lead the meeting(s).

7. The need for more effective branding of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its agencies—who they are; what they do; how they collaborate; and a sense of common identity and shared mission commitments among the agencies.

G. The Review Committee recommends that a review of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies, focusing broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in working collaboratively to implement the General Assembly’s mission directives, be integrated into the cycle of individual agency reviews. The Review Committee suggests that such a review committee be appointed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018). [See Item 18-10 of the 219th General Assembly (2010).]

H. The Review Committee perceives a call and cry for a new way of understanding and being General Assembly, which includes:

1. Increased time given to worship, study, and discernment of who we as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are, who we are called to be, and what we are called to do, all done with the prayer that God’s Spirit will unify, renew, energize, and mobilize the church for ministry, mission, and witness. This commitment of time to worship, study, and discernment will better prepare the General Assembly to wrestle with difficult and sometimes controversial, but nonetheless important matters that deserve and demand consideration.

2. More effective management of the amount of time and energy that the General Assembly commits to issues of legislation and policy development, so that increased time and energy may be given to the above focus. Such management may require a greater willingness of the General Assembly to allow prescribed work to be done and actions taken at committee level.

3. Increased attention given by General Assembly to mission prioritization, resulting in a manageable number of identifiable mission directives/priorities that are determined for the whole church, to which General Assembly agencies, middle governing bodies, congregations, and individuals can commit and cooperate. The Review Committee recommends that the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly collaboratively guide and ensure such a process, drawing upon other agencies and resources as appropriate and as directed by Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and commended in VI.D.

4. Clarification of who communicates, manages, and oversees the collaborative implementation of those mission directives on behalf of the General Assembly, a role and responsibility that the Review Committee sees residing with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly in cooperation with the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (note the citation from Organization for Mission in prior item XIII.D. above).

5. Consideration of the feasibility and/or desirability of having one voice designated to speak for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and/or some entity designated to hold the church as a whole, particularly the General Assembly agencies, accountable for decisions and commitments made by the General Assembly.

6. The Review Committee recommends referral of these issues to the committee to be appointed by the 219th General Assembly (2010) to review biennial assemblies, recommending that the General Assembly include such review of the way we conduct General Assembly in the scope of this committee’s work. [See Item 18-11 of the 219th General Assembly (2010).]

- Thomas C. Sheffield: clergy; Denver Presbytery; pastor to the presbytery; prior service includes pastor, Presbyterian Church in Morristown, N.J.

- Judith Wellington: clergy; associate pastor, La Mesa Presbyterian Church, Albuquerque, N.Mex.; prior service includes associate presbytery for Native American Ministries in the Presbytery of Grand Canyon; work with San Francisco Theological Seminary and Cook School in Tempe, Ariz.; elementary school teacher on the Gila Reservation in Arizona and at St. Francis Indian School in South Dakota; and member of the Synod of the Southwest’s Ministry Review Task Force.

Appendix II. Joint Agency Submission to the Special Review Committee on the Service of the Whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ("PC(USA)"")

October 2008

Context

The 218th General Assembly (2008) formed a “Special Review Committee on the Service of the Whole of the PC(USA)” (the “Review Committee”).

The assembly approved the recommendation of the Committee on Review of the General Assembly Council “that the 218th General Assembly (2008) create a review committee to review the service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies in implementing the General Assembly’s mission directives. This review committee should be nominated according to procedures articulated in the Organization for Mission at section IV.D.1. ‘Committees of the Assembly.’ … This report shall be made to the 219th General Assembly (2010)” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 727).

The comment of the Review Committee of the General Assembly Council noted that While the separate review of each of the six agencies is a helpful practice and has fostered improvements, this Review Committee observed that no one in the current system is charged with looking at the overall effectiveness of the whole. Coordination among the six agencies is voluntary and not always effective. Such a review should focus broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in implementing the General Assembly’s mission directives and should not duplicate the more detailed work of the individual agency review committees. Particular attention should be given to how or if these agencies work cooperatively and where or if there is duplication of services in the system. This review committee observed that some agencies are not working well together, but also that there are some beneficial cooperative efforts. These happen on a voluntary basis with no recommendation that this occur regularly throughout the system. This review committee also heard some people questioning the rationale of the separation of the GAC and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 727–28)

The General Assembly also took action directing the Six Agency Review Committee to consider as items of business “[t]he need for the [Restricted Funds Resolution Committee] (RFRC) to continue, the resolution of the respective roles and responsibilities of the Foundation and the GAC, as well as the manner in which they are carried out . . .” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 721).

This submission is intended to provide to the Review Committee some background on the mission of each of the respective agencies, the services provided by them, and areas of cooperation and collaboration among the six agencies. We have summarized the collaborative efforts undertaken by the six agencies since 2001, collaborative efforts currently underway, and efforts planned for the immediate future.

While each agency has its respective roles and responsibilities, the agencies recognize their mutual role to further the interests of the denomination at the national level. Each of the agencies reports to the General Assembly and is to follow its direction limited only by the constitution of the PC(USA) and applicable secular laws and regulations.

Finally, this submission suggests several areas of opportunity both for service improvement to our various constituencies as well as further opportunities for synergy and cooperation among the respective agencies.

Additional Background Documentation Available

Exhibit I, found below, lists other background information which is available to the committee upon request.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (“A Corp”).

While not considered one of the six agencies, A Corp is the principal legal corporation of the PC(USA). It receives, holds, and transfers property and facilitates the management of the church’s corporate affairs. All voting members of the GAC serve as members of the board of directors of A Corp. The officers of A Corp include a president, an executive vice-president, and a chief financial officer (“treasurer”), one or more vice-presidents, a secretary, a controller, and an associate treasurer. The president is elected by the board of directors for a term of four years subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Ordinarily, the offices of the president and the treasurer are held by the Executive Director of the GAC and the Deputy for Shared Support Services, respectively. Responsibility for managing the activities of this corporation is assigned to the Deputy for Shared Support Services and other Shared Support Services staff who are elected officers of the corporation under the direction of the president.

The OGA is part of A Corp. All income beyond per capita received by the OGA from sales, bequests, gifts, or from any other source, is transmitted to the treasurer of A Corp.

Mission of Each Agency

Office of the General Assembly (“OGA”). The Stated Clerk is the continuing ecclesial officer of the General Assembly, and chief executive officer of the Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). As an officer of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk preserves and defends the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and supports the decisions, actions, and programs of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk gives advisory opinions concerning the meaning of the provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the meaning of the actions of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk conducts the general correspondence of the PC(USA). All items of correspondence directed to the PC(USA) or to the General Assembly are routed to the Stated Clerk.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (“COGA”) is composed of fifteen persons. This committee is empowered to carry out the General Assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk and the OGA; to assure the accountability of the Stated Clerk to the General Assembly during the interim between sessions of the assembly; and to provide linkage with the GAC.

The Stated Clerk is assisted by other staff, consisting of eight department directors, all of them Associate Stated Clerks: Departments of Constitutional Services; Ecumenical and Agency Relations; History; Communication, Development, and Technology; GA Meeting Services; Department of the Stated Clerk (which includes both Middle Governing Body Relations and the Department of Vocation, which are functions that are shared with the GAC).

The responsibilities of the Stated Clerk and the OGA are crafted to support the well-being of the whole church. They include the planning and execution of the General Assembly; providing advice and training to middle governing body officers and to congregations (sessions and elders); publishing and distributing the minutes of the General Assembly, the GAC, the Foundation, and the COGA; the search for fair and inclusive representation; protection of the rights of all; enabling mechanisms for dispute resolution and church discipline; care for congregations and pastors; promotion of the balanced presentation of ideas, preparation and retention of accurate records and management of the facilities of the Presbyterian Historical Society; membership on or relationship to appropriate committees, commissions, and agencies of the General Assembly; representing the PC(USA) in ecumenical structures in which the denomination participates; preparation and examination of ministers of Word and Sacrament and Christian educators; and preparation of a biennial budget (Per Capita) in consultation with COGA and the GAC.

The OGA has staffing and budgeting responsibility for eight GA permanent committees and/commissions: Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, Permanent Judicial Commission, Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Historical Society, General Assembly Committee on Representation, Advisory Committee on the Constitution, Advisory Committee on Litigation, General Assembly Nominating Committee, Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates. The Stated Clerk also has responsibility for any commissions and special committees named by the General Assembly.

General Assembly Mission Council (“GAMC”). The primary purpose of the General Assembly Mission Council is to lead and coordinate the total mission program of the PC(USA). The GAMC advises and responds to the General Assembly on priorities, programs and strategies for addressing matters of concern for the ministries of the church. Responsibilities of the GAMC according to the Book of Order, G-13.0201 include the following:
a. to cultivate and promote the spiritual welfare of the whole church;

b. to provide resources to support equal employment opportunity and affirmative action for members of racial ethnic groups, for women, for various age groups, for persons regardless of marital condition (married, single, widowed, or divorced), and for persons with disabilities;

c. to develop and propose, for General Assembly approval, the mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities of the General Assembly Mission Council; doing so by taking into account the mission work being done by sessions, presbyteries, and synods, and to propose for General Assembly approval an accompanying budget that will implement the mission work plan of the General Assembly Mission Council;

d. to act in those specific matters assigned to the General Assembly Mission Council by the General Assembly or this Constitution, acting always according to previously enacted General Assembly policies, reporting fully to each subsequent General Assembly its actions;

e. to perform such additional responsibilities and duties as may be assigned by the General Assembly.

Every General Assembly, the GAMC receives scores of referrals to be acted upon and reported to subsequent General Assemblies.

The GAMC carries out its ministries through offices of: Theology Worship and Education; Evangelism and Church Growth; Compassion, Peace, and Justice; World Mission; Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women; and Vocation (the latter being a joint office of GAMC and OGA). The office of Middle Governing Bodies (“MGB’s”) is also a joint office of the GAMC and OGA and serves to connect those GA offices to synods and presbyteries, in addition to the myriad connections that those agencies have with MGB’s in the course of their service to the church. These are supported by Communications and Funds Development, Shared Services such as human resources, information technology and finance, and Legal and Audit. In addition, the GAMC provides staff support for three General Assembly committees: Advocacy Committee for Women. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. Two of the PC(USA)’s conference centers, Ghost Ranch and Stony Point, are part of the GAMC. The GAMC provides certain administrative and support functions such as information technology and building services for other agencies in the Presbyterian Center.

Approximately 3 percent of the funding of the GAC comes from per capita; the remainder from basic mission support (15 percent), church-wide special offerings such as One Great Hour of Sharing (15 percent); other specific appeals such as Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (25 percent); bequests, annuities and endowments (25 percent), sales of resources and conferences (11 percent), Presbyterian Women and other sources (6 percent). A summary of funding sources and uses is attached as Exhibit III (attached as review-committee-of-ga-entities-exhibit-II-and-III.pdf).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the “Foundation”). The Foundation is a legally responsible fiduciary corporation for the PC(USA) and engages in a church-wide program for the development and administration of current and deferred gifts to the PC(USA) and many of its related institutions. The Foundation has a wholly owned subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., and is the sponsor of a family of socially responsible mutual funds, the New Covenant Funds.

The Foundation reports directly to the General Assembly and is to follow its direction to the extent that such direction is lawful.

The primary responsibilities of the Foundation assigned to it by the General Assembly are:

- To receive and hold the restricted and unrestricted monies given to the PC(USA).
- Subject to the directions of the denomination’s Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee and consistent with its fiduciary responsibilities, to prudently invest the funds entrusted to it.
- To follow the wishes and restrictions of donors and others who have entrusted funds to its care.
- To utilize A Corp. as its agent for the purpose of disbursing unrestricted income or unrestricted principal of invested funds (and restricted income or restricted principal to the extent specifically authorized by the Foundation’s board of trustees).
- To conduct church-wide wills emphasis and planned giving programs through its staff of development officers.

Board of Pensions (“BOP”). The BOP is the legally responsible corporate body established under a civil charter for the purpose of administering the pension and benefits program of the PC(USA). It is required by its bylaws, a Pension Plan Trust Agreement, and other Benefits Plan documents to administer these programs for the sole and exclusive benefit of its participants and members.

The responsibilities assigned to the Board of Pensions by the General Assembly are:

- The design and administration of a comprehensive program of retirement, death, disability, medical, and optional benefits for ministers, missionaries, and other church workers.
- The design and administration of a program of financial assistance to help meet needs that are beyond the scope of the pension and benefits program.
- The establishment and operation of a retirement housing program for eligible retirees and their spouses.
- The receipt, investment, and disbursement of the funds required to support these plans and programs for the sole and exclusive benefit of members and beneficiaries of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and other beneficiaries of the assistance and retirement housing programs.

Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (“PPC”). The PPC’s heritage dates back more than 170 years. It maintains a commitment to publishing resources that “advance religious scholarship, stimulate conversation about moral values, and inspire faithful living.” The PPC is the official denominational publisher of the PC(USA). It is financially self-sustaining. It publishes materials both for the PC(USA) and a broad ecumenical audience around the world. The PPC’s materials represent a diverse range of religious, social, and cultural points of view directed to four distinct audience groups: church leaders, congregations, scholars, and students. The PPC maintains a backlist of more than 1,700 titles and publishes more than eighty books and one hundred resources each year under its three imprints: Westminster John Knox Press, Geneva Press, and www.theThoughtfulChristian.com.

The PPC is governed by its board of directors, which reports to the General Assembly. The corporation’s president and publisher is an ex-officio member of the board.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Corporation, Inc. (PILP”). The PILP is a Pennsylvania Corporation that is governed by a board of directors who are elected by the GAMC from nominations by the GAMC, the Foundation, middle governing bodies, and at-large nominees. The PILP offers unsecured, interest-bearing investments in all fifty states, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. In general, any individual and any organization related to the PC(USA) may invest in PILP. Money generated by investments is used to fund capital project loans to congregations, governing bodies, and related entities for construction, refurbishing or purchase of church facilities. The PILP administers the Endowed Church Loan Program under an operating agreement with A Corp. The PILP reports to the General Assembly.

Table of Board of Director Interlocks. Common funding, shared mission roles, and traditions carried on from prior organization models have resulted in an identified need for some board of director interlocks among the agencies. Not all agencies require an interlock. These arrangements are working satisfactorily to date. Existing interlocking arrangements are detailed on the following chart.

Examples of Agency Work in Support of Other Agencies and the PC(USA).

In the mid-1990s, the Reverend John Buchanan, then Moderator of the General Assembly, was instrumental in establishment of an informal table of agency heads and board chairs (the “Chairs and Executives”). The purpose was twofold: to provide a forum for agency leadership to resolve interagency conflicts and to discern ways to work in concert and advance the common interests of the PC(USA). Since then, an important long-term collaborative effort has been initiated at this table to assure strong leadership in future years.

Building Church Leadership for the Future. In 2003, at a Chairs and Executives meeting, upon the suggestion of the Stated Clerk, the group agreed that it would be appropriate as a denominational initiative to consider developing a broad outline of the steps our agencies might consider to initiate conversations and actions to help build church leadership for the future. This began and continues as an aspiration for the benefit of the whole denomination. At its October 2003 directors meeting,4 the Board of Pensions (“BOP”) held a special, one-day session devoted to the topic. Our goal was to look at current events, our own strengths and weaknesses and within this context define the role of the Board of Pensions, in collaboration with other GA agencies, in pursuing this initiative. At present, this initiative is focused on strengthening our clergy.

To this end, BOP formed a task force of clergy (comprised of both directors and staff) to review the myriad materials available on attraction and retention of persons to the pastoral ministry7. One of the working assumptions of the task force was that there is a relationship between quality clergy and church membership. Another was that it is better to identify action steps for building leadership, than to point fingers or blame uncontrollable influences. In other words, there are plenty of excuses not to act, but it is better to take action than not. One conclusion stood out clearly: every agency, every middle governing body, every session, and every Presbyterian has a role, if not a duty, to help build future church leaders.

Each year since 2004, BOP and the Office of Vocation (of the GAC and the OGA) have worked together to prepare workshops held during BOP Regional Benefits Consultations discussing topics relevant to strengthening our clergy. A booklet summarizing the discussions and promoting the ideas generated has been published each year, and nearly 20,000 copies of each such booklet have been distributed throughout the church. Topics have included: Supporting Mid-Career Pastors (2005); Conversations on Candidacy (2006); Transitions in Ministry (2007); and Building Congregations (2008).

At a follow-up meeting of the Chairs and Executives in 2006, representatives of several Presbyterian seminaries joined the discussion. It became clear that one of the problems confronting pastors (especially pastors of smaller churches) was the lack of practical skills training... in certain areas such as time management, financial management, conflict resolution, project management, stress reduction, and other related areas. This gap resulted in notable increases in stress among the clergy and an increase in stress-related disabilities among clergy. Stress was noted as a significant factor in decisions by pastors to leave the parish ministry. The BOP expects to expand its member education programs through online “e-learning” modules available through its website. The GAC already provides e-learning through its website. The BOP (in consultation with middle governing bodies, staff of the General Assembly Council, and the Office of the General Assembly) subsequently adopted a new assistance program to provide matching grants to groups of presbyteries that raise funds for practical skills training for pastors. The BOP also initiated a new benefit program, “Presbyterian CREDO”: an eight-day conference for clergy to reflect on their financial, physical, vocational, and spiritual health.

Since 2001, the GAC, the OGA, and the BOP have worked together (and in collaboration with middle governing bodies, seminaries and other church leaders) to survey active pastors to discern areas where the agencies could improve pastors’ lives. It is difficult to find funding for new development programs for clergy through middle governing bodies or within existing agency budgets. It is, however, consistent with the role of BOP assistance programs to help support individual church workers in their vocation. Consequently, with income generated by a generous bequest to BOP Assistance Funds, BOP has been able to fund several new pilot programs in support of clergy professional development.

In addition, there have been several other efforts, both individually and jointly in connection with this initiative. For instance, BOP and GAC provide funding for Clergy Colleague Groups, which are local forums for pastors to get together informally to discuss matters of mutual concern.

The GAC works in partnership with each of the other agencies in numerous and various ways. For example, the GAC and OGA provide staff resources and support for the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations and have an ecumenical staff team composed of staff of both agencies to coordinate the ecclesiastical aspects which are OGA responsibility, and the mission engagement, faith and order, and other mission aspects that are GAC responsibility. The GAC frequently provides support to the Stated Clerk on policy and issues such as international and justice matters. Other agencies are often participants in GAC organized conferences, some of which have been mentioned in other parts of this document. The GAC and the Foundation work together to assure that restricted funds of the church are used in compliance with laws and donor designations. The PILP administers church loan programs on behalf of the GAC, and they jointly support the GA’s Mission Development Resources Committee, which provides mission program grants for congregation development. The Executive Director and the Stated Clerk frequently join in meeting with various entities and groups in the church. For example, over the past two years, they have participated jointly in consultations with PC(USA) seminaries in an initiative to strengthen relationships and synergies between the General Assembly and our seminaries. They, along with the Moderator, also often join in messages to the whole church. Other examples are mentioned elsewhere in this document.

Examples of Shared Projects by the Foundation. The Foundation has sponsored numerous stewardship conferences, Presbyterian Women gatherings, the Presbyterian Older Adult Ministries Conference, and others. In addition, the Foundation staff has provided content and speakers at conferences throughout the denomination.

The Foundation has consistently reached out to partner with agencies, middle governing bodies, local congregations, and Presbyterian-related organizations to develop and increase funding for mission. Some examples are its Wills Emphasis program first created in 1953; its Mission & Ministry Profiles program to elevate the awareness among all Presbyterian’s interested in learning more about the denomination; and the Youth Mission Initiative (“ymiLIVE”) to bring together generations of Presbyterians to connect and engage with others throughout the PC(USA) and to promote awareness of the Foundation and its mission.

Examples of Shared projects by PPC. Staff of PPC, OGA, and GAC are discussing ways the agencies can work together to develop the www.ThePresbyterianLeader.com website.

The PPC works in partnership with other parts of the General Assembly. Most notably, PPC is partnering with the GAC’s Office of Theology and Worship and the Presbyterian Association of Musicians to develop the denomination’s next hymnal and to publish twelve volumes in the Foundations of Christian Faith series, which was adopted as the adult component of the denomination’s We Believe curriculum in 2003–2005.

Although PPC receives no mission dollars from the PC(USA), it contributes toward the overall mission of the denomination through its benevolence programs. Its “Equipping the Saints” program provides complimentary “care” packages to newly ordained Presbyterian ministers. The PPC works in partnership with the OGA and the GAC to provide packages of free resources to new church developments and to churches that have suffered the effects of natural disasters through its In the Beginning and Disaster Relief programs. In cooperation with the GAC’s World Mission program, PPC provides publications to twenty-five international seminaries in second and third-world countries.

In 2008, PPC partnered with the GAC’s Office of Youth Ministries to develop studies for youth that are available on www.TheThoughtfulChristian.com. The studies allow youth and their leaders to discuss a range of topics including confirmation, faith formation, peer pressure, bullying, consumerism, and environmental justice. The Office of Youth Ministries has recently consulted with PPC on the development of studies for parents, which will be added to the site in January 2009.

Other Focused Collaboration Efforts by All Agencies

Joint Agency Annual Report. Each year since 2001 the agencies have published a joint annual report to the church highlighting the major developments of the past year and briefly outlining the responsibilities of each agency to inform those that may not know our role or understand our respective missions. The agencies also collaborate on orientation of General Assembly commissioners on the work of the agencies using the Joint Agency Annual Report as a primary resource.
Joint Sponsorship of Conferences and Gatherings. The National Pastor’s Sabbath was planned, sponsored, and developed jointly by all six agencies. The National Pastor’s Sabbath has been seen among pastors and governing bodies as a shining example of shared ministry, unity of vision, and common endeavor accomplishing valuable goals in ministry to pastors for the good of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Annual Agency Staff Offsite Meetings. In 2007 and 2008, the agencies held offsite meetings to develop agreement on collaboration initiatives in several areas: Funds Development, Church Relations, Communications, and Marketing. Several dozen staff attended. The results of the offsite meetings raised several opportunities for improved collaboration. In 2008, the focus was on defining deliverables from the collaborative groups. The result of these meetings will be for the agencies to work more closely together in the context of bettering the whole denomination. This will require that each agency, as part of its annual business or mission plan, agree on definitive objectives and assignment of responsibility for completion of certain tasks necessary for completion of the objectives. With clear direction supported by agency heads, it is reasonable to expect visible progress in the ensuing years.

Denominational Funds Development. For several years, working through the Chairs and Executives Table, the agencies have recognized the need for an organized funds development model for the denomination. Currently, the Presbyterian Historical Society, the Foundation, the GAC, and the BOP have some in-house capability, principally for single agency funds development, however that alone is insufficient for the purposes of the denomination, which is suffering from revenue shortfalls at every level.

While the agencies share common systems and have developed protocols for interagency cooperation in funds development, the agencies all recognize that this effort will fail at the outset if it is not planned well and supported by a large consensus of interested parties. Currently, agency discussions about possible alternative courses of action are in the formative stages.

Church Relations and Communications. For several years, the Stated Clerk, the Executive Director of the GAC, and the President of the Board of Pensions have presided at breakout groups at the BOP Regional Benefits Consultations. These twelve breakout sessions allow about forty participants from middle governing bodies at each session to address any question or comment to the agency executives that is on the minds of the participants. This has proven to be a valuable communications initiative, and has had a positive impact on church relations. For 2009 and succeeding years, all agency heads have been invited to participate in these breakout groups.

Five of the six agencies include a church relations specialist. While the specific responsibilities vary from agency to agency, together the assigned staff have developed a number of activities in common, regular meetings for shared communication, some specific activities to assist interagency communication, especially at the level of staff leadership, and common appearance within and interpretation to the church at large.

Vision for Growing Christ’s Church Deep and Wide. In 2008, at the initiative of the General Assembly Mission Council, the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved a vision statement for growth and evangelism in the PC(USA). This vision statement, among other things, foresees fostering church growth in four areas: evangelism, discipleship, servanthood, and diversity. There is clearly a role for each agency to contribute to the aspirations expressed in this resolution. The Chairs and Executives table has discussed the importance of polishing and ways to promote the “Presbyterian Brand” in order to increase the credibility of the denomination as it carries out this important vision.

Mission Responsibility Through Investment (“MRTI”). For many years, both staff and Directors of the GAC, the Foundation, PILP, and BOP have worked with the denomination’s MRTI Committee to further socially responsible investment of the substantial assets of the PC(USA) and related entities. Issues such as divestment of securities of companies engaged in arms production, alcohol, and gambling, among others, as well as active proxy voting and shareholder resolution campaigns have worked to coordinate our social justice norms with our active investment policies.

Establishment of a Youth Committee at the General Assembly. In order to keep the voice of Presbyterian Youth alive and heard throughout the denomination, the 218th General Assembly (2008) incorporated a Youth Committee into the roster of working committees of the assembly. Encouraging and listening to those who are youth today, will help build a strong foundation for church leadership for the future.

Support for Clergy. The Office of Vocation has worked collaboratively with BOP staff to support ministers of Word and Sacrament in a number of ways. They have initiated the “Ministry Staff Team,” which includes GAC, OGA, and BOP staff. During a 2008 cross-agency gathering, they reviewed the programmatic initiatives made by the agencies to support ministers through and throughout the important transitions in their lives.

The GAC, BOP, and OGA participate in staff advisory committees for BOP’s CREDO program, Seminary Debt Assistance, and Middle Governing Body Grant programs. Joint research project on CPMs and COMs, and depression among candidates and ministers is underway. These agencies also collaborate on the Presbyteries’ Pastoral Care Network and the Healthy Ministry Conference (a biennial CPM/COM/Seminary Conference).

There are numerous other examples of agencies working together such as the National Elders Conference (GAC, OGA, PPC), the committee to develop a new Presbyterian hymnal (PPC, GAC), new church initiatives (GAC, PILP), the Church Transformation Conference (GAC, PILP, OGA), and the COM/CPM conference (BOP, GAC, OGA).

Future Opportunities for Collaboration and Effective Service

Immigration Matters. The nascent but growing trend toward establishment of immigrant congregations in the United States is yet another opportunity for Presbyterians to grow Christ’s church. While funding, degree of immigrant affiliation with the PC(USA), and unaccustomed cultural norms are apparent hurdles to be leapt, our experiences and grand traditions with foreign missionaries as well as domestic evangelism during the 19th century in rural America should be carefully examined to see whether some successes of the past can be adapted to today and tomorrow.
Church Development. This subject is important in two strategic respects: growing existing churches and developing new churches. It is integral to many of the initiatives and aspirations described elsewhere in this submission. Among the issues for the agencies are defining and reaching consensus on their roles and expectations given the roles and expectations for the various other levels of mission (local congregations and middle governing bodies). Efforts related to church development are highly related to our leadership, ministry delivery, and funds development initiatives.

Defining and Developing New Ways of Delivering Ministry. As the number of small congregations increases or as congregational demographics change, we must be sensitive to new ways of delivering ministry. We must consider the increasing number of commissioned lay pastors and other alternative ways to lead worship. We must think of developing new programs to include these lay leaders in the life of the denomination, to train them, and to provide resources in support of changing ministry and demographics.

Conferences: Large and Small. Connection through personal engagement has long been a valuable and foundational principle of the PC(USA). The church has long since agreed that forums in addition to the General Assembly are important to gain understanding and consensus on furthering our mission and mutual interests. Examples of conferences and tables established by the agencies include regular meetings of the agency heads and separate meetings of the agency chief operating officers, various groups assembled by the Board of Pensions to which other agency representatives are invited, the biennial National Pastors Conference, the Big Tent Event, various meetings organized by either the General Assembly Council or the Office of the General Assembly. Ever-increasing travel costs may dictate future consideration of alternatives to in-person gatherings.

Web Based Services. Currently, the www.PC(USA).org website covers only the GAC, OGA, and PILP. The GAC has launched a project to overhaul that enormous and complex website. As part of that project, all six agencies will join in a common main page or entry site. The BOP, the Foundation, and the PPC will maintain their own websites, but a user will be able to click through from www.PC(USA).org to reach those. In this way, the agencies will provide a common face to the church and others seeking information and connection with the PC(USA).

Conflict Resolution and Avoidance. The Chairs and Executives table group continues to this day, and its discussions have had positive and tangible results, including such items as governance, a joint agency annual report, focus on building church leadership for the future, a National Pastors Conference in off-years of the General Assembly, ways to improve middle governing body relations, Funds Development Protocols, and proactively avoiding possible areas of future conflict. This table, taken with regular periodic meetings of the agency heads and the interim work of the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee, should continue to serve as a way to avoid or help resolve conflict.

Other Governance Considerations. If properly empowered (either formally or by consensus), the Chairs and Executives table represents a real opportunity for effective joint planning, decision making, and allocation of resources among agencies without the disruption and cost of prolonged agency reorganization initiatives. There are many effective models of multilayered organizations and associations that use a smaller operating committee format to provide coordinated and effective leadership.

Legal Issues and Traditions to Keep in Mind

Foundation Perspective: In 1799, the GA decided to separate the trustee functions from the commissioner functions and create the Foundation. Since that time, the Foundation has been charged by the denomination to act as a fiduciary and has had the responsibility to ensure that endowment funds are administered properly and in accordance with donors’ restrictions. The Foundation’s basic duties have evolved since its creation through the reorganizations of 1923, 1958, 1972, and 1986.

The 198th General Assembly (1986) implemented a “Deliverance Implementing a Design for the Corporate Structure of Certain Agencies of the General Assembly” (the “Deliverance”). The Deliverance created the Foundation (the “Fiduciary Corporation”) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (the “Central Treasury Corporation” or “CTC”) by virtue of a division of the Foundation and established the responsibilities of each entity relative to restricted funds.

The Deliverance clearly established the Foundation’s two primary functions (in addition to gift development) as overseer of medium and long-term denominational investments and as overseer of the disbursement of restricted funds entrusted to its care. As noted elsewhere in this submission, A Corp. has the responsibility to receive, hold, and maintain non-fiduciary property of the denomination, act as the disbursing agent for the Foundation of unrestricted GAC funds, and certain restricted funds.

The Foundation also has a fiduciary responsibility under civil law to act solely in the best interest of the beneficiaries of its various trusts and quasi trusts.

Board of Pensions Perspective: The Board of Pensions has remained a separate corporate entity through the numerous restructurings and mergers of the denomination. Unlike the other agencies, whose missions are to serve the denomination, the Board of Pensions owes its primary duty to the Plan members and their beneficiaries. The Board of Pensions holds the assets of the Pension Plan for the sole and exclusive benefit of the Plan members. As a separate corporate entity, the duty to comply with the laws and regulations applicable to pension, medical, disability, death benefits, and related programs is the sole responsibility of the Board of Pensions. Also, as structured, the risks and liabilities of administering benefit plans are limited to the Board of Pensions and do not extend to the commissioners of the General Assembly or other General Assembly agencies. The Board of Pensions is also subject to numerous trust and accounting standards relative to valuation of the assets, including alternative investments, held in its investment portfolio.

a. to cultivate and promote the spiritual welfare of the whole church;

b. to provide resources to support equal employment opportunity and affirmative action for members of racial ethnic groups, for women, for various age groups, for persons regardless of marital condition (married, single widowed, or divorced), and for persons with disabilities;

Summary and Conclusions

- The GAC Review Committee posed two questions: first, whether there is inappropriate duplication of services in the system, and second, whether the rationale separating the GAC and the OGA is appropriate. This submission has addressed areas where the agencies have worked together in the best interests of the denomination. While certain agencies share internal resources, especially in Louisville, agency collaboration has evolved from a very practical observation that we simply cannot afford to duplicate our services to the church. As to the second question, this submission has outlined the roles and responsibilities of the OGA and GAMC in some detail. Their roles, when examined closely, are clearly distinct—simply stated, the role of the former is ecclesiastical, judicial, ambassadorial, and political (in the sense of “polity”); the role of the latter is to be the mission arm of the church, both at home and abroad.

- Program funding at every level of the church is an issue of strategic importance. It is clear that the church needs a continuing national funds development function to assist in funding national and international mission, clergy development, and other appropriate programs at the local, regional, and national levels.
- It is of strategic importance that the denomination, at all levels, work together to build church leadership for the future.
- The denomination needs to do a better job of telling its story and bringing credence to the “Presbyterian Brand”: in short, it has to build the confidence of its constituencies. Successful public relations are best built from a strong and trustworthy foundation. In the church that requires balancing the freedom of the pulpit at the individual level, with a responsible voice at the institutional level. Denominational communications and public relations need to be developed in a way that appeal to today’s congregants and represent both respect for the grand traditions of the past and a vision for the future.
- In an era of small church proliferation (whether from diminishing attendance, immigrant congregations, or new church development) it is important for the national agencies to take a leadership role in discerning new ways of supporting these churches both financially and in delivering ministry to them in new ways.
- The most effective service delivery by national agencies requires both time and resources, especially qualified human resources. In the PC(USA), effective use of our technological and financial resources is most dependent upon human leadership resources that are persons called to serve as colleagues with dedication, creativity, perspicacity, and professionalism. In addition to being able to recruit and retain qualified management, it is in the best interests of the denomination for each agency to be in close conversation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee, as the leadership and experience of elected board members does have a lasting influence on the culture and effectiveness of an agency. Furthermore, it can work to the advantage of an agency for a board chair to serve for several successive years, if possible, in order to provide institutional memory and management accountability over time.

Respectively submitted,

Joint Letter from Richard Clay, Interim President and Chief Executive Officer of the Presbyterian Foundation, and Linda Valentine, Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council.

September 23, 2009

The Rev. John McFayden Chair,
Six Agency Review Committee
First Presbyterian Church of Arlington Heights
302 N. Dunton Avenue
Arlington Heights, IL 60004

Dear John:

We write this letter to you on behalf of our respective agencies to witness the spirit of joint cooperation and enterprise between the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (Foundation). We understand and appreciate the work of the Six Agency Review Committee. We intend by this letter to provide a useful overview of the cooperation that has developed between the two agencies in the areas of leadership, operational, legal and development relationships.

Leadership

The relationships among all six agencies depend hugely upon the abilities of their leadership to work together constantly, cordially, collaboratively and cooperatively. We have made concerted efforts in recent months in this regard.

We have had regular breakfasts and dinners with each other over the past eight weeks. There have been cordial, frequent and open communications between us. The staffs of both agencies have been meeting regularly in order to give careful attention to various inter agency issues. A joint meeting of the two agency heads, our general counsels and several of our operations people took place on August 11, 2009, at which time action items and agendas were agreed upon. Another meeting is scheduled for October 1, 2009.

The Working Group of Foundation trustees and GAMC members, which was established to “a) examine the relationship between the GAC and the Foundation including structures, roles, and responsibilities, and define the terms for a successful working relationship; and b) establish an ongoing process to continue to work proactively with the executive leadership to resolve matters of mutual interest; “, met and
The Foundation and the GAMC have worked effectively and collaboratively to share information in the following ways:

- Access to Records. As mentioned above, we have worked to develop more transparent systems such that each agency can access the information it needs to more effectively carry out its mission work. The teams that worked on the systems initiatives worked very effectively and developed strong relationships with one another.

- New Funds. The Foundation's operations area and the GAMC mission and accounting areas work closely to ensure both agencies understand the endowment funds and any donor designations associated with the endowment funds. As new endowment funds are established at the Foundation, the Foundation's operations department transmits that fund's information to the GAMC so that funds can be expended as soon as possible in a manner consistent with the donor's designations. This helps the GAMC carry out its role in deploying funds given by donors to support mission.

- Three Year Estimates. The Foundation and the GAMC accounting areas have worked on a process over the last year where the Foundation's accounting area provides the GAMC with distribution estimates for the endowment funds. These estimates are for the next three years and are very helpful to the GAMC in its budgeting process.

- Monthly Reports. Our accounting areas work very closely to understand the details of endowments and other funds so that we account for them properly. We have discussions and provide detail reports on the endowment funds. The Foundation sends the GAMC an electronic file monthly that contains all account transactions and market values for all the accounts. The accounting areas also discuss the latest financial accounting standards to help each other determine the implications of those accounting standards.

- Audits. We provide various and numerous information to each other's external auditors.

- Investment of Endowment Funds. We have increased the dialogue regarding assets held by the Foundation that benefit the GAMC and how they are invested. Reporting from the Foundation has been improved and both agencies are committed to having frequent communications and face-to-face meetings at least quarterly to discuss investments and investment performance.

- Information Services. The Foundation and GAMC Information Services teams have met periodically to exchange ideas. We have toured each other's data centers and we have talked about issues that we both experience. The IS teams have shared information on network virtualization which has been mutually beneficial. The IS teams from both agencies have assisted each other with information on software products, Windows domain security information and other IS related issues. The IS teams are excited about the opportunity to work closer together and possibly even assist each other with disaster recovery and business continuity planning in the future.

Legal

- The 218th General Assembly (2008) established the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) as a safety valve in the event the agencies are unable to reach agreement with respect to restricted funds. Both agencies met with the Committee, and indeed the current interim President and CEO served as one of the Foundation's representatives at the organizational meeting of the committee before he took on his current position. We believe that both agencies will cooperate effectively where questions as to funds restrictions can be resolved short of invoking the RFRC. The RFRC's guidelines are set up in such a way that both parties have every encouragement to seek mutual resolution before jointly certifying to the RFRC that it needs to consider an issue. And both agencies understand and agree that the RFRC's rules provide that in the rarest circumstances the avenue of a civil declaratory judgment action or cy pres is appropriately available in the event either agency, for fiduciary reasons, cannot accept the RFRC's decision. The Foundation and GAMC legal departments cooperate in the filing of cy pres actions in court in Indiana to obtain court approval for changes to impossible or impracticable restrictions on endowment funds. While the Foundation prepares the filings and takes them to court, the GAMC, in its role as the mission agency, recommends the change to the restriction.

• The Foundation and the GAMC legal departments have established monthly standing meetings to review the church loan funds restrictions, have agreed upon several restrictions and will continue to seek resolution of remaining issues. The Foundation and the GAMC have recently worked together on the filing of joint OFAC licenses to speed the process and ensure that we, together, maintain current licenses enabling funds to be distributed overseas on a more timely basis.

• Project Management System. We have agreed upon a common project management software system that will enable staffs of both agencies to input, view and track information on the progress of issues relating to inter agency issues. Implementation has begun.

Development

• On August 6-7, 2009 the heads of the Foundation, the GAMC, the OGA and the Board of Pensions met for two days at the Foundation's offices. While the meeting covered many educational and informational issues, it also resulted in a decision to convene the field forces of these four agencies, plus invitations to the other two agencies, for a two day event in Louisville to educate and inform roughly 80 field force representatives on the missions, funding needs, and initiatives of all six agencies. This meeting will take place on January 12-13, 2010 in Louisville. In conjunction with this initiative by the agency heads, the development leadership from the Board of Pensions, GAMC, the Foundation and the Presbyterian Historical Society have met twice to plan how the agencies can collaborate and coordinate fundraising efforts. All are committed to this collaboration/coordination.

• The Foundation's chief development officer participated on September 15, 2009 in GAMC development officer training to share how the GAMC and Foundation interact to meet the needs of donors.

The inter-workings of the FDN and the GAMC are complex, with thousands of funds, numerous constituent corporations, legal and accounting laws, rules and regulations and donative documents, two boards and two staffs that also relate to numerous other constituents in the church and beyond. We are pleased with the progress on so many issues and in staff to staff communications. We continue to have a long list of issues and projects, and as issues are resolved and projects completed, new ones will emerge. Continued vigilance and commitment to positive, collaborative working relationships will be essential.

Conclusion

We believe that there is much to celebrate. We have worked diligently to bring our respective agencies to this point. Thank you for the work and guidance of the Six Agency Review Committee. We look forward to receiving its report.

Sincerely yours,

Endnotes

1. Much of the current organizational structure for mission was approved by the 205th General Assembly (1993). The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program (PILP) and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) were formed or restructured by deliverances to later General Assemblies. A current organization chart is attached as Exhibit II (attached as review-committee-of-ga-entities-exhibit-II-and-III.pdf).
2. The 218th General Assembly (2008) recommended that the name of the GAC be changed to the General Assembly Mission Council. That change will take effect upon approval of a majority of the presbyteries expected in 2009.
4. The meeting was moderated by a representative of BoardSource, an independent consulting firm to not-for-profits.
5. It did not review (nor was it aware of) materials relating to attracting or retaining lay church leaders. Some key findings of this task force were included in BOP’s 2003 report to the General Assembly.
6. The Joint Annual Report was initiated by the agency heads after identifying a need for a tool to describe the roles and accomplishments of the national agencies for persons who might be otherwise unaware of the agencies or their roles.
7. The Presbyterian Foundation has a staff of twenty-two development officers throughout the nation. The Foundation does not develop funds for itself or for any particular agency. The Foundation Board of Trustees is currently studying ways to optimize the development function of the Foundation to further grow mission funding for the PC(USA).
8. New Covenant Funds, a family of socially conscious mutual funds sponsored by the Foundation, plays a prominent role in highlighting the church’s MRTI activities. As a publicly traded mutual fund family, their investments are consistent with the church’s social witness principles so that fund investors may integrate their faith and their financial goals.
10. The Foundation also has independent duties to beneficiaries of the trusts and quasi trusts it holds.
11. These laws include the Internal Revenue Code provisions relating to defined benefit and 403(b) plans, HIPAA and the many federal laws regulating medical and other welfare plans, Medicare and Medicare Part D regulations and subsidy compliance responsibilities, and certain state trust and other laws.
12. Agency employment is as follows: GAC—420 (plus 200 foreign mission personnel); OGA—49; BOP—200; FDN—100; PILP—14; PPC—35.
Comment on Item 18-B—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) expresses its appreciation for the work of the General Assembly Review Committee of the Whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the opportunity of each agency individually and the agencies collectively to engage with the committee, and the affirmation of the committee of the recent and current efforts by the agencies in “… constant, cordial, cooperative, and collaborative ministry for the glory of God, the strengthening of the church’s ministry and mission, and the good of God’s creation…” (Item 18-B). The General Assembly Mission Council recognizes that we are all agencies of the PC(USA), and that our responsibilities are interrelated. Having said that, each agency also has distinct roles and responsibilities, and we need to be vigilant in both coordinating and collaborating with each other and in fulfilling our particular roles and responsibilities. The GAMC provides comments in particular on two recommendations in the report, the first regarding roles and responsibilities, and the second regarding funds development.

Regarding Roles and Responsibilities (Item 18-B, Section XIII.D.)

The GAMC welcomes the review and possible revision of the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), with attention specifically given to the roles and responsibilities of the GAMC and its Executive Director, and the Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk.

As currently identified, the Stated Clerk has a responsibility to promote cooperation and collaboration among the General Agencies based on that role’s description in the Organization for Mission. The General Assembly Mission Council has a responsibility to bring mission priorities to the General Assembly according to the Organization for Mission. The General Assembly Mission Council recognizes the Stated Clerk’s role in speaking for the entire church on matters of policy and policy. The staff of the GAMC often resource the Stated Clerk in, for example, interpreting and responding to issues of social witness policy, or that affect international mission partners. On the other hand, the GAMC is charged with responsibility for implementing mission directives and programs of the General Assembly.

To avoid further confusion, the GAMC asks that the 219th General Assembly (2010) affirm the role of the GAMC with respect to mission prioritization, as currently found in the Organization for Mission:

The General Assembly Mission Council shall advise and respond to the General Assembly on priorities, programs, and strategies for addressing matters of concern for the Ministries of our church. The primary purpose of the General Assembly Mission Council is to lead and coordinate the total mission program… (Organization for Mission, Section V, page 17.)

Regarding Funds Development (Item 18-B, Section XIII.F.5)

While funding to denominational mission has declined over decades, Presbyterians are giving more to mission than ever before. In recognition of changes in giving trends, the GAMC realizes the importance of engaging in new funds development strategies. The GAMC affirms its commitment to collaborative funds development and has been working together with the other agencies in a number of ways. Some of the collaborative efforts include, for example:

- a joint collaboration by the agencies to design and develop the new Web site homepage for pcusa.org, for which the GAMC provided the majority of funding;
- a January 2010 meeting of development and senior staff of all agencies (approximately one hundred participants) titled “One Church,” during which development and other staff became better acquainted in order to foster good working relationships and share information and objectives;
- ongoing meetings and collaborations between the Foundation and GAMC funds development staffs for training, sharing of strategies, and planning of particular initiatives;
- all agencies are members of the grass roots Kaleidoscope Stewardship network and participated in planning and conducting of its Stewardship Conference. 2010; directly after Stewardship Kaleidoscope the GAMC held another Faith and Generosity training session with the Lake Institute of Philanthropy, inviting field staff of other agencies in attendance at the conference (this was the third such seminar organized by the GAMC to which other agency representatives have been invited);
- all agencies are participating in the review and endorsement of Stewardship in Reformed Tradition as specified by Funding Christ’s Mission Throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) passed by 218th General Assembly (2008); and
- the Board of Pensions and GAMC are participating in the special offerings project of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force, with a report to be made to the 220th General Assembly (2012).
A. The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) 2008–2009 Agency Summary

Marking the 293rd anniversary of the beginning of the work now carried on by this board and presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010) meeting in Minneapolis, Minnesota, July 2010.

The responsibilities assigned to the Board of Pensions by the General Assembly are:

• The design and administration of a comprehensive program of retirement, death, disability, medical, and optional benefits for ministers, missionaries, and other church workers.

• The design and administration of a program of financial assistance to help meet needs that are beyond the scope of the pension and benefits program.

• the establishment and operation of a retirement housing program for eligible retirees and their spouses.

• The receipt, investment, and disbursement of the funds required to support these plans and programs for the sole and exclusive benefit of members and beneficiaries of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and other beneficiaries of the assistance and retirement housing programs.

This report incorporates by reference the 2008 and 2009 Annual Reports of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in which the financial information for the Board of Pensions and the plans and programs it administers is presented.

1. The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) provides pension benefits, death and disability benefits, medical benefits, optional benefits (supplemental death benefits, supplemental disability benefits, dental coverage, long-term care insurance, and a retirement savings plan), and a retirement and financial planning education program. The Book of Order (G-14.0534) mandates that all ministers of the Word and Sacrament in installed positions must participate in the Benefits Plan. A particular church may also enroll other church employees in the Benefits Plan. Ministers of the Word and Sacrament in non-installed positions and employees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or affiliated organizations may also be enrolled in the Benefits Plan.

The Affiliated Benefits Program (ABP) offers the same benefits, including the Retirement Savings Plan but excluding the Pension Plan, to employing organizations for certain non-mandated employees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or affiliated organizations.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) approved changes to the Benefits Plan amendment process to accommodate biennial meetings of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The right to amend the Benefits Plan is reserved solely to the Board of Pensions. Amendments to the Plan that constitute a reduction in Pension Plan benefits or an increase in Pension Plan dues are effective only upon approval by the General Assembly. The bylaws of the Board of Pensions require approval of a two-thirds majority of directors present at a duly constituted meeting to amend the Pension Plan except for a benefit reduction or a dues increase (which amendments require the approval of the General Assembly). The Board of Pensions must provide sixty days’ notice to the General Assembly, Plan members, local churches, and presbyteries of any amendment requiring General Assembly approval and reasonable notice of any other amendment to the Benefits Plan.

2. The Community Nature of the Benefits Plan

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), administered by the Board of Pensions, is designed to care for and protect the community of Benefits Plan members as a whole.

An employing organization’s cost of providing benefits for its employees enrolled for pension, medical, death, and disability benefits is not based on their marital status, gender, family size, or age. The dues contributed by the employing organization are instead based on a percentage of the participating members’ salaries and represent that organization’s share of the cost of protecting the entire community. The salaries used to determine the dues for the Pension Plan, the Death and Disability Plan, and the Medical Plan are subject to both minimum and maximum salary amounts.

In order to assist lower-paid employees, no employee accrues benefits at less than the median salary for his or her employment classification (i.e., ministers of the Word and Sacrament, lay exempt, lay non-exempt). Deductibles and copayment maximums are also set as a percentage of salary to lessen the impact on lower-paid members. In order to contain members’ out-of-pocket healthcare costs, there are caps on medical deductibles and copayment expenses for higher paid members.

Affiliated Benefits Program medical dues are uniformly determined based on the medical claims experience of the overall group. Dues for individual members are based on the specific cost sharing policy of their employing organization and the participation levels selected by the member. Some members may choose employee-only coverage, while others may choose to cover an entire family. This flexibility is one of the key advantages of the Affiliated Benefits Program.

3. Pension Plan and Death and Disability Plan

Towers Watson, actuarial advisors for the Board of Pensions, reported that there continued to be sufficient funds on hand to meet the obligations to current and future retirees and disabled members as of December 31, 2009, the most recent valuation of the programs.

   a. Pension Experience Apportionment and Disability Benefit Increases

Each year the directors of the Board of Pensions have the responsibility of determining whether the Pension Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should grant an experience apportionment. An experience apportionment is a permanent increase in the retirement benefits of all Plan members, including active, retired, terminated vested, and eligible survivors.

The decision to grant an apportionment is a way for the Pension Plan to share favorable actuarial and investment experience with Plan members. This sharing of experience is an unusual, if not unique, feature of the Plan. It involves a balance between near-term benefit improvement and long-term security of future benefits.

The Board of Pensions has several overriding objectives in determining the experience apportionment:

- maintain the solvency of the Plan,
- protect the benefits of both active and retired Plan members against the impact of inflation, and
- achieve generational equity—meaning that, on a cumulative basis throughout its active and retirement years, one group of Plan members should not fare materially better or worse in the granting of apportions than any other group.

Unlike the Pension Plan experience apportionment, the disability benefit increase applies only to benefits currently being paid to disabled members. Most active members will not become disabled and will never receive disability benefits.

The purpose of granting a disability benefit increase is to protect the benefits paid to disabled members against the impact of inflation. Other than determining the adequacy of the contingency reserve to support the granting of an increase, the key considerations in arriving at an appropriate recommendation for a disability benefit increase are the annual change in cost of living and the rate at which the incomes of active church workers are increasing.

For descriptions of the processes used in determining whether to grant an experience apportionment or a disability benefit increase, see Item 18-A. The decisions made in 2008 and 2009 are described in detail there.

For the years 2000 through 2009, the following table shows the number of ordained minister Plan members with at least fifteen years of service who retired at or after age sixty-five and the average annual amount of their pensions at the time of retirement. By applying the experience apportionments granted over the past ten years, the Benefits Plan has been able to fulfill its intent to shelter both pension credits and retirement income from the inroads of inflation. The average pension with an inflationary increase based solely on the CPI is shown for comparison.

b. Other Changes to the Pension Plan, Death and Disability Plan, and Optional Programs

Details of other changes made to the Pension and Death and Disability Plans and various Optional Programs are offered in the Board of Pensions’ recommendation regarding the amendments to the Benefits Plan (Item 18-A).

4. Medical Plan

Medical Plan dues and benefit changes made prior to 2008 and moderating healthcare trends resulted in favorable financial results for the 2008 and 2009 Plan years. Because the Medical Plan’s fund balance was above the target reserve levels, the Board of Pensions was able to hold dues at 19.5 percent for each of these years. The Book of Order mandate that called and installed pastors participate in the Benefits Plan has contributed significantly to the financial stability of the Plan because of the inherent avoidance of adverse selection.

In order to maintain the Affiliated Benefits Program (ABP), a self-supporting component of the Medical Plan, dues increases of 9.2 percent and 7.8 percent were approved in 2008 and 2009 respectively. With relatively stable enrollment, the ABP claims experience has been more consistent and predictable in recent years, giving the Board of Pensions the advantage of presenting reasonable trend increases to employing organizations in markets where there is otherwise considerable volatility. That volatility in the small employer insurance market has, in recent months, created some renewed interest in the ABP, suggesting that it remains a viable option for many churches and other employing organizations interested in providing benefits, including comprehensive medical coverage, to their employees.

Dues for the Medicare Supplement Program remained stable in 2008. However, uncertainty concerning the future levels of Vacancy Dues and Post-Retirement Service Dues and increasing medical costs caused the Board of Pensions to restore the Medicare Supplement Program dues to the 2005 level, effective January 1, 2009. As a result, dues increased $20 per participant per month. Continued qualification for the Medicare Retirement Drug Subsidy has provided nearly $6 million per year in 2008 and 2009 for this program, against subscription dues revenue of $22 million and $24 million, respectively. At more than 17 percent of the program’s total cost, this revenue support continues to be significant. Moderating prescription drug trends have also helped to mitigate the need for more substantial increases in the Medicare Supplement Program dues.

Despite the relative financial strength of the Medical Plan through the end of 2009, it is anticipated that increasing healthcare trends, declining enrollments, and an aging population will inevitably lead to deteriorating financial results. In anticipation of this deterioration and with the objective of maintaining the Medical Plan’s viability given the current cost structure, the Board of Pensions in 2008 began to examine some change opportunities in design, funding, and administration. This study, which was undertaken with the support of Milliman Inc., the Medical Plan’s actuary, sought to examine the Plan in the context of its underlying principles: call neutrality, community nature, uniform coverage, and mandated participation. This analysis, which extended into 2009, was structured around basic objectives that included plan simplification, maximizing efficiency, and cost effectiveness in plan administration, integration of high-performing vendors, and real-time data aggregation.

In 2008, the Board of Pensions’ continued focus on health management and member wellness led to the approval of a design initiative that called for $0 co-pay on all preventive services, including office visits for annual wellness exams and related testing. This enhancement to the Medical Plan, which ensures that preventive services for all members and their dependents are covered 100 percent by the Medical Plan, was effective on January 1, 2009.

A summary of all of the additional Medical Plan design changes approved by the Board of Directors at its June 2009 meeting, including a specific response to General Assembly concern about coverage for children with special needs, follows:

a. Effective October 1, 2009

Plan members were granted the option to decline healthcare coverage for spouses and dependent children who have other comparable employer group or military service coverage. In order to preserve the integrity of call neutrality, the exercise of this option does not result in a dues change.

b. Effective January 1, 2010

The definition of medical necessity was expanded to include habilitative services for children with congenital developmental disabilities such as Down syndrome and autism.

In compliance with the Mental Health Parity Act, a series of provisional changes was instituted that will result in significantly improved integration of medical and behavioral health benefits and the promotion of cost-effective network use.

The Prescription Drug Program was modified to eliminate the annual deductible, adopt a fixed generic drug co-pay, increase the brand non-formulary co-pay, and increase the annual copayment maximum.

The chart below illustrates in greater detail the Medical Plan changes, all of which have been captured in a restated Benefits Plan document that was approved by the Board of Directors at its October 2009 meeting.

Maximizing efficiency and cost effectiveness in Medical Plan administration requires a disciplined approach to third-party vendor procurement, contracting, and performance monitoring. The relationship of the Board of Pensions with other church benefits boards through the Church Benefits Association remains an important part of a strategy to maximize purchasing power and vendor management. In 2008, the Board of Pensions joined forces with some of the larger denominations in order to negotiate a new contract with CIGNA Behavioral Health (CBH), renegotiate a favorable early renewal with Express Scripts (ESI), and begin work on a contract renewal with Highmark.

The Board of Pensions’ relationship with CBH began in 2006 as a cooperative purchasing agreement with two other denominations: the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and the Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod. The relationship with CBH has subsequently been expanded to include other denominations. While services and prices are separately established for each denomination, the coalition provides a forum for exploring best practices and strengthens the ability to negotiate favorable pricing overall. Currently, mental health services represent approximately 3 percent of the Board of Pensions’ total expenditures for healthcare benefits.

The formal contract renewal date with ESI was January 1, 2010. Because of significant industry-wide improvement in pharmacy benefit manager contract terms since the last renewal, the coalition initiated early renewal discussions in 2008. New contract terms were successfully negotiated that provide for a reduction in Prescription Drug Program costs of approximately 10 percent, representing a net savings of almost $5 million annually to the Medical Plan. These savings emanate from deeper discounts on ingredient cost, lower administrative fees, and higher manufacturer rebates. These improved terms were contingent on a two-year extension of the contract through 2012.

Despite these significant cost reductions, plan design continues to be the most important vehicle for controlling prescription drug expenses. Consistent with prior years, the Board of Pensions Prescription Drug Program costs in 2008 and 2009 represented approximately 21 percent of the total healthcare expenses. Positive impact on trend came from the mail order initiative, effective January 1, 2008, and reported in the 2006–2007 Agency Summary of the Board of Pensions. As a result of this initiative, utilization of ESI’s mail order program for maintenance medications more than doubled in 2008 and 2009, generating significant Medical Plan savings. As conversion to this delivery system increased, the generic fill rate also increased. Since members are currently absorbing approximately 30 percent of the cost of prescription drugs as copayments, the savings resulting from the increased use of generics is significant for them as well.

Highmark, the Board of Pensions’ third-party administrator of the Blue Card® program, continued to deliver on its commitment to provide network efficacy, measured by both broad member access and deep provider discounts. Combined savings for the Medical Plan and its members generated by network use was in excess of $130 million in 2008, with similar results in 2009. It was expected that a merger between Pittsburgh-based Highmark and Philadelphia-based Independence Blue Cross would result in the leveraging of resources and greater economies of scale. Coincident with the CBA coalition’s early contract negotiations with Highmark, however, both organizations withdrew their merger applications from the Pennsylvania Insurance Department. Despite this abrupt change in the negotiating environment, the final administrative services only contract, which covers the Board of Pensions’ Medical Plan and Medicare Supplement Program, resulted in reduced fees for 2010 and 2011, with a return to the 2009 fees in the 2012 plan year, a net savings of approximately $500,000 over the three-year contract period.
Concurrent with the contract negotiations with these major third-party vendor partners, the Board of Pensions independently conducted a thorough market review and bidding process with ten best-in-class health management providers. After a thorough review process, ActiveHealth Management emerged as the vendor best positioned to meet the priorities of the Board of Pensions: member centric and integrated service; an intelligent, data-driven model; a strong communication partnership; and cost effective service delivery. The Board of Directors’ approval of a three-year contract, effective January 1, 2010, was the first step in a meticulous transition process designed to ensure a seamless transition for Plan members and their families from CareAllies to ActiveHealth Management. ActiveHealth Management provides a full spectrum of health management services, from pre-certification to case and disease management. By electronically integrating each member’s diverse clinical information into a personal health record and assigning a single nurse to work with the member and the member’s family over time, ActiveHealth Management will be able to identify and appropriately follow-up on any possible gaps in the quality of medical care. All of this information will be treated with absolute confidentiality. With a “care engine” that receives and processes patient-specific data each day from multiple third-party providers, this vendor offers rich analytic and reporting tools that deliver targeted interventions, support members’ efforts to improve their self-care, and enable the Board of Pensions to better evaluate future program initiatives and benefit design alternatives.

The Board of Pensions’ commitment to successful integration of the work of these vendor partners resulted in the 2008 launch of what has become an annual event—a vendor summit. Bringing these key vendors together for a daylong meeting in Philadelphia, the Board of Pensions identified principal objectives that are central to their shared responsibilities: improving Plan member experience and achieving optimal health outcomes. The 2009 Vendor Summit focused on establishing ActiveHealth Management’s responsibility for managing data exchanges and integrating individual vendor capabilities, vital to their ability to ensure a more streamlined and clinically satisfying member experience, and ultimately, better overall health outcomes.

Despite the best efforts of the Board of Pensions to integrate vendor services, there is a growing recognition that the increasing complexity of navigating the world of healthcare can result in significant member frustration and even compromised care. In 2008, the desire of the Board of Pensions to support members in this complex and confusing environment led to the creation of a new staff role, that of Member Advocate. The principal responsibility of the Member Advocate is to help members work their way through procedural and substantive claim issues in a way that maximizes the value of the benefits to which they are entitled. With a customer-centric focus, solid Medical Plan knowledge, strong relationships with key vendor partners, and excellent communication and problem solving skills, the Member Advocate helps members navigate resources and resolve claim issues.

As the debate on healthcare reform evolved in Congress and specific bills were finally approved by the House and Senate late in 2009, staff members worked closely with colleagues in the Church Alliance to protect the broad interests of “church plans.” While there is uncertainty about the future of healthcare reform and its impact on the Medical Plan and related programs, the Board of Pensions is committed to responding in the best interests of Plan members and their employing organizations. The year 2010 will be a time to closely monitor legislative actions in order to begin the work of understanding and analyzing the impact of a reformed healthcare system on the Medical Plan. But, because it is likely that any legislation will be phased in over a period of one to three years, the Board of Pensions expects that abrupt reaction to change will not be required.

5. Assistance Program

a. Overview

The Assistance Program of the Board of Pensions values the commitment and sacrifice of the men and women who are called to serve the church. The program acts as a safety net to meet the urgent and emergency financial needs of church workers and their families, consistent with the Board of Pensions’ mission in support of the ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Assistance Program is designed to help address the financial needs of employees and retirees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that are beyond the scope of the Benefits Plan.

No Benefits Plan dues are used for the Assistance Program. Support for this program includes gifts, legacies directed to the Board of Pensions, endowment income, and half of the Christmas Joy Offering.

The Assistance Program consists of a small retirement housing program and several financial assistance programs.

b. Retirement Housing Program

The Retirement Housing Program was initiated in 1883 to provide housing for eligible ministers. This program consists of the Homes Program, which offers affordable housing in properties owned by the Board of Pensions, and the Housing Supplement Program, which gives financial assistance to help retirees maintain their own homes or move to retirement communities.
The Homes Program

Persons who have served in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for twenty years or more are eligible for the Homes Program. Rents in this program are structured so that residents pay according to their ability, contributing the lesser of:

- thirty percent of their total annual income, excluding post-retirement earned income, or
- an appraised fair rental value of the home.

The Homes Program presently consists of one individual home in Lakeland, Florida, and twenty-two houses in a cluster called El Sombroso Oaks in Los Gatos, California. Homes related to various governing bodies of the church also provide services under contract with the Board of Pensions.

Transition to the Housing Supplement Program

More ministers are purchasing homes during the course of their ministry than in earlier generations. This reality has lowered the demand for church-related retirement housing. Recognizing this shift, the Board of Pensions requested permission from the 200th General Assembly (1988) to change the Homes Program from one based solely on homes owned by the Board of Pensions to one based on housing assistance supplements. The General Assembly approved this change in strategic direction and authorized the sale of properties then owned and received thereafter, with the proceeds going to the Housing Supplement Program. The General Assembly withheld approval for the sale of two housing communities operated by the Board of Pensions and instructed it to continue its “… ownership and management of the clusters at Morganwood (Swarthmore, Pennsylvania) and El Sombroso Oaks (Los Gatos, California) with no further sale of these clusters without General Assembly Approval” (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 97).

The 214th General Assembly (2002) approved the sale of Morganwood, a cluster of twenty-nine housing units. On October 29, 2003, an agreement of sale for Morganwood was signed with Swarthmore College, a Quaker-affiliated institution adjacent to the Morganwood property. The proceeds from the sale are used to support the Retirement Housing Program and provide subsidies to current Morganwood residents. Under the agreement of sale, the current residents are entitled to continue living in their units until they choose to vacate them or at the expiration of twenty years from the closing date (January 14, 2004), whichever is earlier. The Board of Pensions provides subsidies to the continuing Presbyterian residents of Morganwood who are related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Board of Pensions. These subsidies totaled approximately $149,980 for 2008 and $129,120 for 2009. Each year, the Board of Pensions reviews the subsidies with the residents to determine their future needs.

Similarly, the 215th General Assembly (2003) approved an affiliation agreement between Southern California Presbyterian Homes (SCPH) and Westminster Gardens. The agreement was signed by all parties and the certificate of authority was received from the Department of Social Services in California, effective May 4, 2004.

Westminster Gardens, Duarte, California, was established in 1949, by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., to care for retired missionaries. Since its founding, this retirement community has been available for retired church workers and their spouses. The denomination assigned responsibility for the oversight of the affairs of Westminster Gardens to the Board of Pensions in 1972.

Under the terms of the affiliation agreement, the Board of Pensions is providing rent subsidies to residents who are related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Board of Pensions. The total amount of the subsidy was $189,650 in 2008 and $140,000 in 2009. These payments were in addition to the direct assistance provided to qualifying residents under the Board of Pensions Income and Housing Supplements Programs.

c. Financial Assistance Programs

The financial assistance programs go to the heart of Christian discipleship: serving people in need in the name of Jesus Christ. They provide emergency and on-going financial aid for members of the pension and healthcare plans and, for some programs, other employees of Presbyterian churches. They also work to strengthen future leadership for the church by providing strategic assistance and support to pastors.

In recent years, the Board of Pensions has introduced a number of pilot programs as it seeks to be more proactive in addressing the needs of church workers. These pilot programs are intended to complement the traditional assistance programs.

The financial assistance programs have been organized under three overarching categories:

(1) Caring for Church Workers: Urgent Financial Needs

(a) Shared Grants

These grants are designed to meet the financial needs that an active or retired church worker is unable to handle. The objective is to help the person who has a financial problem with everyday needs or medical/dental costs not covered by the Benefits Plan or insurance. A grant is shared by a governing body and/or an employing organization and the Board of Pensions. Annual Shared Grants are usually approved for a calendar year but are disbursed monthly. Other Shared Grants are approved for a one-time payment or can be a monthly disbursement for a period of less than a calendar year.

(b) Emergency Assistance Grants

These grants are provided for one-time, special needs when no other financial resources are available. At times, members may have special needs that are beyond the scope of the Benefits Plan. Occasionally, governing bodies and employing organizations are unable to participate in a Shared Grant because of insufficient funds.

(c) Adoption Assistance Grants

These grants are distributed to members of the Benefits Plan who adopted a child (under age twenty-one) on or after January 1, 2006. One grant of $3,000 is given for each eligible adopted child to help defray the cost of the adoption. The monies for these grants come from gifts to the Assistance Program and the receipts from the Relief of Conscience Plan.

(d) Transition-to-College Assistance Grants

These grants are distributed to eligible members of the traditional Benefits Plan who have a child enrolled as a full-time freshman at an accredited college or university and whose adjusted gross income is below twice the churchwide median salary. The grants are meant to help mitigate transitional, one-time expenses, such as the purchase of a computer, dorm room furnishings, and other expenses that are not covered by traditional financial aid.

(2) Caring for Retired Church Workers: Financial and Housing Needs

(a) Income Supplements

These supplements are designed to raise the monthly income of retired church workers and their surviving spouses whose total annual income from all sources is below levels established by the Board of Pensions. The guidelines for the Income Supplement program are reviewed each year. The guideline levels for 2009 were $26,160 for a single person and $31,380 for a married couple. This was a 1.8 percent increase over the previous year.

(b) Housing Supplements

These supplements provide financial assistance to help eligible retirees and their surviving spouses remain in their own homes or move to a retirement facility in a location of their choice. Each year the guideline for the Housing Supplements program is reviewed. The maximum annual income level guideline for Housing Supplement eligibility in 2009 was $36,000. This program is the financial assistance component of the Retirement Housing Program.

(3) Caring for Pastoral Leadership: Leadership and Retention

(a) Seminary Debt Assistance Grants

These grants are provided to ministers of the Word and Sacrament who have graduated from seminary or theological school and are serving in the first seven years of ministry after ordination. To be eligible, a minister of the Word and Sacrament must be in a full-time, called, pastoral position in a PC(USA) church of fewer than 150 members. An eligible minister may receive a grant of up to $1,500 per year for up to four years to help repay loans incurred while pursuing education leading to a Master of Divinity degree.

(b) Middle Governing Body Grants

These are matching grants of up to $15,000 that are provided to a synod or a group of three or more presbyteries to help them conduct continuing education events focused on practical skills and leadership training for pastors.

(c) Sabbath Sabbatical Support Grants

These grants are designed to help pastors serving congregations of fewer than 200 members take sabbaticals that will strengthen their skills and renew their ministries. The grants are for $3,000. This program is administered in cooperation with the synods and presbyteries.

(d) Presbyterian CREDO

This program is modeled after a very successful program of the Church Pension Fund of the Episcopal Church. Its mission is to provide opportunities for clergy to examine significant areas of their lives and to prayerfully discern the future direction of their vocation as they respond to God’s call in a lifelong process of practice and transformation. A Presbyterian CREDO conference provides time for clergy to step back from the non-stop pace of ordained ministry. It provides a foundation for participants to embrace wellness and prayerfully discern the direction of their personal and professional lives. Each participant commits to extensive reflection through pre-conference instruments and surveys that focus on personal and professional wellness. The eight-day curriculum is designed to trigger personal discovery through guided reflection, introspection, and dialogue. In 2008 and 2009, seven Presbyterian CREDO conferences were held each year, serving a total of over 350 participants. Twenty-one conferences have been held over the past five years.

d. Financial Considerations

The downturn in the financial and investment markets in 2008 and 2009 had an adverse effect on the Assistance Program assets and spending formula. In response to this situation, the Board of Pensions has evaluated and repositioned its programs in order to ensure the long-term financial health of the Assistance Program. Primary consideration has been given to maintaining the need-based (safety net) programs. Other programs will be evaluated based on the stated mission of the Assistance Program, the individual benefit to eligible participants, and the overall benefit to the mission and ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

In addition, a number of specific cost reduction actions were taken: the grant award for the Seminary Debt Assistance Grant program has been reduced from $2,500 per year to $1,500 per year for new applicants, effective June 1, 2009; the annual budget for the Middle Governing Body Grant program was reduced from $300,000 to $150,000 effective January 1, 2010; and the Presbyterian CREDO program postponed a planned expansion of the program in 2010 until a future date.

e. Funds Development

In response to the continuing and emerging needs of ministry and the challenges facing those who serve the church, the Board of Pensions has begun a more deliberate phase in its funds development effort.

The Christmas Joy Offering remains a vital financial support to the Assistance Program, and the Board of Pensions continues to work with the Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges and the General Assembly Mission Council staff to promote this denomination-wide offering. However, since the receipts from the offering have declined over recent years and Benefits Plan dues are not used for the Assistance Program, the Board of Pensions has determined that additional financial support, beyond half of the Christmas Joy Offering, is required to meet the increasing demands on existing programs and to fund new programs to meet emerging needs.

To ensure communication with other national entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that are also seeking contributions, the Board of Pensions and the other national agencies developed the “Principles of Funds Development.” In 2003, the agency heads agreed to use these principles as a basis for coordinating their efforts.

The Board of Pensions has selected a theme for funds development communications (“Keeping Our Promises”) and established the online capability for contributions through the Board of Pensions Web site, www.pensions.org. It also established a planned giving initiative to encourage deferred gifts. A Gift Acceptance Policy has been approved.

The Board of Pensions anticipates that the continued support of the Christmas Joy Offering and its funds development efforts will ensure that there will be sufficient resources in the future to “keep our promises” to provide assistance and leadership training to the men and women who have faithfully served the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

6. Conflict of Interest and Ethics

The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has policies covering conflicts of interest and ethics. The directors and employees have complied with those policies.

B. Report of the New Covenant Trust Company, N.A.

New Covenant Trust Company, N.A. (NCTC) was chartered January 2, 1998, as the first nationally chartered trust company owned by a not-for-profit foundation. The NCTC serves as back-office service provider for the Foundation and the endowment funds it holds as fiduciary for the benefit of the General Assembly, local congregations, and other Presbyterian-affiliated organizations. The company also serves as investment adviser to New Covenant Funds and trustee of various types of trust instruments in which there is a Presbyterian or Presbyterian-related beneficial interest. The board of the NCTC has enacted policies and procedures to ensure compliance with banking and securities law and provides oversight of the delivery of trust services to the Presbyterian community.

The Foundation and NCTC consistently strive to deliver superior service to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and seek to enhance the vehicles available to Presbyterians to express their Christian faith and generous stewardship. We are also exploring ways to partner with Presbyterian and related organizations in the delivery of enhanced trust services, such as personal trusts, wholly charitable trusts, and charitable remainder trusts. The NCTC accepts IRA accounts and provides life and legacy financial planning. These estate-planning devices provide an opportunity to care for loved ones while providing for planned giving opportunities.
The following individuals have been confirmed by former General Assemblies and continue in their service as Directors of New Covenant Trust Company, N.A.

1. Foundation Trustees

   Sharon Z. Fesler, retired, White, female, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Lincoln Trails.

2. Former Foundation Trustees

   Lynwood L. Battl, Jr. retired, Black, male, single, lay, over 50, Synod of the Covenant; George J. Hauptfuhrer III, investment adviser, White, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of South Atlantic; Robert A. McNeely, retired, Black, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Southern California; Richard J. Seiwell, (former adjunct trustee), investment adviser, White, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of the Trinity; B. Cary Tolley III, tax attorney, White, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of South Atlantic.

3. OGA Designee

   Doska D. Ross, OGA staff, White, female, single, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters.

4. GAMC Designee

   Currently, there is a vacancy in the position for the GAMC designated board member while we await a nomination by the GAMC.

5. Other

   Bruce K. Dudley, estate planning attorney, White, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters; Susan R. Ingram, manager, Treasury, White, female, married, lay, over 50, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic; Robert E. Leech, White, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Lakes and Prairies.

C. Board of Pensions’ Bylaw Amendments

The Board of Pensions reports to the 219th General Assembly (2010) the following amendments to the Bylaws of the Board of Pensions (as set forth below). [Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

Section 4.1. Executive Committee. The Executive Committee shall consist of not less than seven (7) Directors including the Chairperson, the Vice Chairpersons and the Chairperson of each of the following nine eight committees: Investment, Healthcare, Assistance, Pension, Social Responsibility and Church Relations, Legal, Personnel, Board Development and Governance, and Audit and Compliance, together with such other Directors as may be appointed by the Chairperson. It shall meet at the call of the Chairperson of the Board of Directors. In the interim between the regular meetings of the Board of Directors, the Executive Committee shall perform the duties of and have all the powers vested in the Board of Directors. Any action of the Board taken by the Executive Committee pursuant to this interim authority shall be duly recorded in the minutes of the Corporation and reported to the full Board of Directors at the next meeting. A quorum consisting of a majority of the Directors of the Executive Committee shall be necessary to constitute a duly authorized meeting.

Section 4.3. Social Responsibility and Church Relations Committee. The Social Responsibility and Church Relations Committee shall consist of those Directors serving as regular or alternate Directors of the General Assembly Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, and any other Directors designated by the Chairperson of the Board of Directors. It shall advise the Board of Directors with respect to questions of social responsibility in investment and matters relating to Church Relations.

Section 4.5. Assistance Committee. The Assistance Committee shall consist of not less than five (5) Directors of the Board of Directors. It shall develop for the Board of Directors’ approval the policies according to which the Board’s programs of financial aid and retirement housing supplements and CREDO program are to be administered. The Committee shall also be responsible for the oversight of the funds development and gift administration programs of the Board. The Committee shall regularly review the recommendations of the Board’s staff for financial aid and/or retirement housing supplements to individuals in light of the established policies and recommend proper action to the Board of Directors.

The Committee shall also develop for the Board of Directors’ approval the policies according to which such retirement housing units as may from time to time be owned by the Board shall be administered. It shall review and recommend to the Board of Directors proper action of the following: (1) the acquisition or disposition of retirement housing units; (2) the annual operating budget of each retirement housing unit; and (3) proposed expenditures for maintenance, repairs, alterations or improvement of retirement housing units which exceed an amount to be set by the Committee from time to time.
Section 4.9. Audit and Compliance Committee. The Audit and Compliance Committee shall consist of not less than five (5) Directors. It shall receive, review and report to the Board of Directors the results of the independent annual audit of the accounts of the Corporation and management letter and shall recommend to the Board of Directors proposed changes and other responsive actions based upon such review. It shall meet periodically with the Director of Internal Audit to assure that proper controls and security are being observed at the Corporation. In consultation with the Legal Committee, it shall be responsible for the oversight of the Board’s Compliance Program. It shall perform such other duties as the Board of Directors or the President may designate from time to time.

Section 4.10. Personnel Committee. The Personnel Committee, which shall be a subcommittee of the Executive Committee, shall consist of not less than three (3) Directors of the Board of Directors. The committee shall make recommendations to the Board of Directors on matters of personnel. It shall perform such duties in connection with personnel as the Board of Directors may designate from time to time. It shall confer with the President on personnel matters as the Board of Directors deems necessary, or as the President may designate from time to time.

Section 4.11. Informal Committee Action. If all the Directors of a committee shall severally or collectively consent, in writing, to any action to be taken by the Committee, such action shall be a valid committee action as though it had been authorized at a formal meeting of such Committee.

On Designating May 1 Every Year as a Day of Prayer for Healing—From the Presbytery of Upper Ohio Valley.

The Presbytery of Upper Ohio Valley overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to set aside [May 1st] every year [as] a day of prayer for healing [and wholeness and suggests that this be done in conjunction with the day currently designated on the Presbyterian Planning Calendar as Health Awareness Sunday]. Local churches and communities are encouraged to gather together and offer prayer for the discovery of ever more effective means of treatment. These gatherings may be an occasion to give thanks for the lives of saints who have died; prayers for healing for those who are currently receiving treatment; as well as prayers for doctors, nurses, and scientists who are seeking to bring healing and hope.

Rationale

More than half a million Americans die every year of cancer.

The World Health Organization predicts, “Cancer rates could further increase by 50 percent to 15 million new cases in the year 2020, according to the World Cancer Report, the most comprehensive global examination of the disease to date.”

Jesus healed the sick and called upon his church to pray for healing.

The Revelation to John promises an end to suffering, dying, and grief as a sign of God’s ultimate victory.

GAMC COMMENT ON 19-01

Comment on 19-01—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is charged with the annual review and approval of programmatic emphases celebrated by the church and published in the Presbyterian Planning Calendar.

The GAMC uses these “Guidelines for Programmatic Emphases”:

The life and worship of the local church finds its rhythm in the seasons of the church year as they reflect the life of the Lord and relate to our faith narrative found in Scripture. At the same time, the people of God do not live in isolation. The context of Christian ministry and worship is the world in which we live. The faith community proclaims that God is sovereign over all creation, acts in history, revealed in Scripture, and at work in our world today. Each congregation has the responsibility through its session to respond to the work of God’s Spirit in the life of the community, presbytery and region. Our sense of Christian vocation leads us in a variety of responses through mission service and spiritual formation. Programmatic emphases are those opportunities for church-wide participation and focus on the whole church’s mission together.

The following criteria reflect the theological and liturgical grounding in which our programmatic emphases are rooted.

1. Approved emphases will demonstrate a commitment to the liturgical calendar, the lectionary, and the programmatic needs of the denomination.

2. The church’s liturgical calendar with particular attention to Advent and Christmas, the Season of Lent and Easter Sunday, as well as historic feasts of Epiphany, The Transfiguration, the Day of Pentecost, Trinity Sunday, and The Festival of Christ the King provides an historical and theological framework for shaping the rhythm and life of our church.

3. Ecumenically shared emphases will receive primary consideration.

4. The Mission Work Plan of the General Assembly [Mission] Council provides a framework for understanding church-wide mission. In order to give substance and meaning to these designated observances, programmatic emphases should relate to and be supported by the Mission Work Plan.

5. In order to be fair to all General Assembly Mission Council programs, requests will be reviewed for overlap and redundancy. Each program team will normally have no more than one programmatic emphasis, and is responsible for providing interpretive resources.

6. Since the church in God’s world must be cognizant of its relationship with other world religions and the culture in which it exists, major Jewish, Islamic, and secular holidays will be included for information.

Each year, the first Thursday of May is designated as a “National Day of Prayer” in the Presbyterian Planning Calendar, following the annual date established by federal law. If the General Assembly would like to add a day of prayer for healing to the list of special days, the GAMC suggests that the overture be referred to the General Assembly Mission Council for coordination with other emphases, based on these criteria.

On Encouraging All Presbyterians to Know Their HIV Status—From the Presbytery of New York City.

The Presbytery of New York City, recognizing that the HIV and AIDS pandemic is a critical matter for our faith and God’s justice, overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to encourage all Presbyterians, especially ministers of the Word and Sacrament, ordained elders and deacons, to “Know Their Status” and to work with the Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN) to provide voluntary HIV testing at all General Assembly level conferences and at least annually at presbytery meetings.

Rationale

“Silence kills, stigma kills.”
Archbishop Desmond Tutu, July 2004

In the United States and around the world people not only fail to get tested for HIV but fear getting tested. In the United States more than 1 million people are estimated to be HIV positive, but fully 25 percent do not know their status because they have never been tested. Fear combined with stigma has helped fuel the AIDS pandemic globally as people fail to promote prevention and access the treatment they require.

Lack of testing and treatment particularly imperils spouses, especially women. In Kenya, for example, 450,000 married couples are estimated to be “discordant” (i.e., one is infected, usually the man, and the other not). The UNAIDS warns that globally 5 million women, primarily married women, are endangered because they and their partner do not know their HIV status.

Key leaders of the church provide a great witness when they willingly and publicly undergo voluntary testing for HIV. The recent voluntary HIV tests taken by the Lutheran bishops sent a clear message to clergy and laity in the United States and around the world, that testing is critical if we are to address and slow this pandemic. When then Senator Barack Obama journeyed to Kenya, he and his wife Michelle voluntarily and publicly were tested as a way to demonstrate to the public the importance of testing and of everyone “knowing their status.”

Presbyterian leaders undertaking voluntary HIV testing would serve to highlight the HIV and AIDS pandemic, help break down the stigmatization and the stranglehold of fear associated with HIV and AIDS, and encourage all PC(USA) members and partners to “Know Their Status.”

“For the churches, the most powerful contribution we can make to combating HIV transmission is the eradication of stigma and discrimination ...” The Ecumenical Response to HIV/AIDS in Africa, World Council of Churches 2001.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 19-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 19-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 19-02 be disapproved.

Rationale

While the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) stands in solidarity with these presbyteries and with Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN), disapproval is recommended on the following grounds:

Since February 2006, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) have recommended universal testing of pregnant women and of all persons admitted to the hospital on an “opt out” basis. Special permission is no longer required for HIV testing, though pregnant women and patients must be informed that they will be tested. Hospitals have moved toward implementation of these recommendations. Thus testing is being done on a basis that captures both persons at risk as well as those not at risk in a way that is manageable and cost-effective within the health care system. Combined with self-referred voluntary testing in non-hospital settings, testing for insurance purposes, and testing done on all military applicants and personnel, a broad section of American society is already being tested for HIV infection, at least some of whom are Presbyterian.
Of the approximately 56,000 reported annual new HIV infections, 53 percent are related to male-to-male sexual contact, 31 percent to high risk heterosexual contact, 4 percent to male-to-male sexual contact with injected drug use, and 12 percent to injected drug use. These four categories of new infection are behaviorally based. While testing of any person who falls in an at-risk category is warranted, the demographics of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) officers do not represent the demographic at behavioral risk of infection, and thus universal testing of church officers is not warranted and would not represent good stewardship of medical resources. In addition, testing at General Assembly would present significant issues of privacy and confidentiality and could raise concerns regarding violations of G-6.0106b.

We recognize the social utility of prominent leaders seeking testing even in the absence of all risk factors for infection, and would thus encourage persons such as the Moderator of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of GAMC, and prominent pastors to be publically tested. Such testing by these leaders might help to lessen the stigma of testing and encourage those who believe themselves to be at risk to undertake voluntary testing.

Approximately one-in-five persons in the U.S. who are infected with HIV are undiagnosed. CDC analysis finds that “… the greatest gaps in knowledge [are] among racial/ethnic minorities, males exposed through sexual contact, and youth. Further, the study quantifies the total burden of undiagnosed infection by racial/ethnic and risk groups, indicating that substantially greater numbers of African Americans and gay and bisexual men are living with undiagnosed HIV infection than other populations.”

Based on CDC analysis, in the absence of exposure, symptoms, membership in a high-risk group, or at-risk behavior, voluntary testing would be more effective and less burdensome to the health care system if targeted toward at-risk populations rather than advocated for all persons attending General Assembly, or all pastors, elders or deacons.

Item 19-03

[In response to Item 19-03, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 72, 73.]

[Alternate Resolution:

[The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms females’ right and capacity to make responsible decisions regarding their sexual lives, including the right to use contraception, to reject sexual activity, to continue a pregnancy, or when necessary to end a pregnancy; condemns the injustice of any force, coercion, or violence against females to compel pregnancy, the continuation of pregnancy, sterilization, or abortion; commends and encourages those who provide shelter, medical care, and counseling for females subject to domestic violence and coercion in reproductive issues; and instructs the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate this concern and commitment to the Congress of the United States and the state legislatures, urging them to expand support for women’s shelters and transitional housing for women and children fleeing domestic and all other acts of violence, and to adopt legislation that provides adequate means of prosecuting those who perpetrate violence against females.

In light of the many forms of violence perpetrated against women, the 219th General Assembly (2010) condemns violence against women in all forms and under all circumstances as violations of God’s will for women and men, whether that violence is perpetrated by a stranger or by an intimate partner, and commends and encourages all persons who provide shelter, counseling, and other forms of assistance for women experiencing coercion and violence.]

On Making a Statement Regarding Violence Against Pregnant Women—From the Presbytery of Boise.

The Presbytery of Boise overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) to do the following:
1. Condemn assaults, attempts, and actual acts of pressure, force, violence, and coercion upon a pregnant female, especially where the activity inflicts mental or physical injury or death on the pregnant female.

2. Acknowledge that the voices of pregnant females and their unborn children are weak and many times powerless to combat acts of violence and coercion thereby depriving females of personal choice, leaving them physically and mentally victimized as well as spiritually damaged.

3. State that the PC(USA) affirms that pregnant females are precious to God and as Christians we share a common commandment to exercise care, compassion, and to seek justice on behalf of our pregnant sisters who are subjected to assaults and batteries that injure or kill them and their unborn children. The media and court systems record that the purposes behind the violence include: acts to destroy evidence of child molestation or incestuous activities; acts to eliminate personal responsibilities or inconvenience to the perpetrator’s lifestyle; dislike for biracial unborn children; or desire to destroy pregnant females.

4. Commend and encourage the work of congregations, sessions, and ministers of Word and Sacrament who are proactively providing shelter, medical care, and counseling for pregnant females who have experienced such pressures, force, violence, and coercion.

5. Call for identification of assaults, attempts, and acts of force, violence, and coercion upon a pregnant female as violations against females, children, and creative acts of God. A report on the incidents of violence against vulnerable pregnant females shall be included as part of the regular human rights reports to the General Assembly.

6. Instruct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate with each state legislative body and to the U.S. Congress by sending a copy of this overture, together with a letter urging them to adopt legislation that recognizes the special vulnerability of pregnant females and to protect them from assaults, attempts, and acts of force, coercion, and violence, that inflict physical or mental injury, or death, on the pregnant female.

Rationale

Victimization

There are certain things in our society that we keep hushed up and from which we turn away our eyes so that we might purposely remain in ignorance. But evil does not go away by pretending that it does not exist or by hoping that someone else will fix the problem.

The use of force, violence, or coercion against pregnant females to effectuate an abortion are brought before our eyes in media reports that often recount the human tragedies as if they are nonfiction stories with bizarre entertainment value.

The media reports note that the purposes of force, violence, or coercion against pregnant women include efforts to destroy evidence of child molestation or incestuous activities, to eliminate personal responsibilities or inconvenience to a perpetrator’s lifestyle, to destroy disliked biracial unborn children, or to eliminate the disliked pregnancy. This victimization and our passivity to it is one of the silent disgraces of our society. It takes courage and fortitude to examine the record of hate and abuse to pregnant females in the United States and to be instruments that bring God’s good grace, healing, and justice.

Sometimes the stories of violence against pregnant females are reported with sensational headlines such as “Pregnant Woman Killed and Baby Cut Out of Her Womb” but even the news reports that do not use such dramatic words reflect a deep brokenness in our culture. They draw our averted eyes back to the reality of abusive activity that is a nightmare for those females who are being terrorized. Consider a simple handful of reports that demonstrate the scope of such cases:

- A father who impregnated his daughter demanded she abort in order to hide his incestuous, predatory activity.¹
- A man kicked a pregnant female in the stomach, suffocated her, and mutilated her body because she would not abort their child and a child would interfere with his bachelor lifestyle.²
- A work supervisor badgered a worker to get an abortion because her preborn baby was biracial.³
- A female who refused to get an abortion was repeatedly punched in the stomach and kicked with steel-toed boots to induce an abortion.⁴
- A female assistant coach was given the choice of aborting her baby or losing her job.⁵
- An incestuous stepfather forced his stepchildren to abort to hide his child molestation activities.⁶
- A man who did not want to pay child support murdered a pregnant female using a pipe bomb.⁷
- A mother held her daughter at gunpoint to make the daughter have an unwanted abortion.⁸
19 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON HEALTH ISSUES

• An African American woman had her mouth gagged and she was restrained by an abortionist after she screamed that she did not want an abortion (lawsuit for ethnic harassment, intimidation, and medical malpractice for the abortion was filed June 17, 2009).

• A teacher kidnapped and murdered a 14-year old pregnant student to avoid rape charges and child support payments.

1. Pressure Results in High Incidence of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder

We need to take time to examine some facts before making a conscious decision of whether we will avert our eyes again and ignore the plight of the pregnant female who is experiencing coercion, force, and violence. We are grateful that some women are blessed and able to escape from coercive and dangerous situations.

Finally, the other silent voice in the face of the violence against a pregnant woman is the preborn child. According to the March of Dimes, battering during pregnancy is the leading cause of birth defects and infant mortality, in fact more birth defects are caused by such violence than all birth defects that are caused by all the diseases for which people are routinely inoculated.

2. Coercion and Pressure Ramp-up to Violence and Deadly Force

The pressure and coercion experienced by a pregnant female can escalate to force and even deadly violence if the female refuses to submit to the pressures and coercion of others. A study of pregnancy-associated deaths in Maryland from 1993–1998 revealed that homicide was the leading cause of the pregnancy-associated deaths.

Females who are subjected to coercion and violence are robbed of their personal choice about their pregnancy. The Supreme Court case of Roe v. Wade provided that the pregnant woman not only has a constitutional right to choose an abortion but also a personal right to be free in whatever choice she made to do with her body. That includes the right to be free from pressures, assaults, coercion, and violence as to the choice of whether she will preserve the life of her preborn child.

The pregnant female who wants to have her child is denied her Roe constitutional right to personal freedom in the face of pressures, coercion, force, or violence. She must either submit to the violence, injury, or death, or submit to an unwanted abortion that also has medical risks and permanent loss of her preborn child.

The freedom of personal choice is truly missing for a victimized, pregnant female.

4. Our Call to See and Hear and Act

Pregnant females, as a class, easily become invisible, nonpersons. Many people are awkward around pregnant females, unsure of how to relate to them thus contributing to their isolation just when they need assistance and attention to help them with assaults, coercion, force, and violence. And, as seen in even the handful of accounts recited above, victimization of pregnant females exists across all economic and societal groups of females, including the young, the sexually molested, those carrying biracial preborn children, those who are racially ethnically targeted, those married and unmarried, and those who are otherwise voiceless, invisible, and unable to defend themselves.

We have a clear call to see, hear, and be proactive in praying, speaking up, defending, and seeking justice for terrorized pregnant females. Scripture chides us as to our complacency:

How long will you judge unjustly and show partiality to the wicked? Give justice to the weak and the orphan; maintain the right of the lowly and the destitute. Rescue the weak and the needy; deliver them from the hand of the wicked. (Ps. 82:2–4)

The Lord saw it, and it displeased him that there was no justice. He saw that there was no one, and was appalled that there was no one to intervene. (Isa. 59:15b–16)

As Christians, let us take up this task of intercession on behalf of victimized pregnant females.

Commend and Encourage Congregations to Care for Victimized Pregnant Females

There are congregations, sessions, and ministers of Word and Sacrament who are proactively providing shelter, medical care, and counseling for pregnant females who have experienced such pressures, force, violence, and coercion; these should be commended for their work and other PC(USA) congregations encouraged to join in efforts to pray and care for those pregnant females who have already been victimized.

Much prayer and careful study is needed in the effort to stop and eradicate the core evil in our society that generates acts of pressure, coercion, force, and violence against vulnerable pregnant females.
There is no systematic recordation of the violence or number of murders perpetrated against a woman because she is pregnant. We obtain much of our information from media accounts that provide reports of the disgust, anger, and violence of a perpetrator toward the victim for being pregnant.

The media account of the Laci Peterson murder (California, 2004) not only brought the problem to the public attention but that the tracking of murders of pregnant females that are perpetrated because of a pregnancy are lacking and/or under-counted. These violent deaths slip through administrative counting processes due to inherent difficulties in tracking and connecting a criminal conviction for murder that may occur years after a recordation of the death of the pregnant female. In addition, it is not essential to elicit testimony at the criminal trial that the perpetrator inflicted deadly violence on the pregnant woman due to the existence of a pregnancy so the connection is lost and an undercounting occurs.13

The undercounting, or even non-counting, means that there is limited awareness of the extent of the problem except through localized media coverage that elicits such information. Social injustice will not be addressed when we are not aware of it except for reading fleeting sensationalized media accounts.

Need for Legislative Action

Human institutions are to work out God’s justice on earth; human government is charged with the function of restraining evil and preserving life. It is through faithful and obedient Christians that the state becomes aware of the need for justice and how to incorporate true justice in accordance with God’s good design into society.

As Christians we are to take up a cross of caring and responsibility that resists evil, cruelty, and brutality. We are to come to the aid of the voiceless, innocent, and weak. We are to take a stand against the distortion of social justice and the demeaning of the imago Deo in humanity. We acknowledge His sovereignty over all relationships. Holiness requires a servanthood of engagement with our culture, not just passive observance of what the state deems an acceptable level of restrain of oppression or evil.

In April 2008, the State of Idaho became the first—and only—state in the United States to pass a law that made it a crime to threaten or inflict physical injury on a pregnant female for an abortion (Chapter 388 of the 2008 Statutes of Idaho). For the first time in the United States, the pregnant woman was given a means of justice against her assailant; but this right exists in only one of the fifty states.

Even this initial endeavor by one state to provide justice for the pregnant female is weak in that the penalty under the Idaho statute for conviction of injury to the female is a fine of up to $1,000 and/or sentence of up to six months in jail. The legal penalties that we set reflect our values. It is especially striking that the Idaho penalty for perpetrating force or violence on a pregnant female for an abortion is even less than:

- mutilating a public record (up to $1,000 fine and/or 5 years in prison; ID statute 18-3202)
- offering a bribe to a municipal officer ($1,000 fine and 5 years in prison; ID statute 18-1309)
- burning forest land ($50,000 fine and 10 years in prison; ID statute 18-906).

There is a need to urge all state and federal legislative bodies to enact statutes to provide real justice for the victimized pregnant female. The constitutional rights of Roe v. Wade are of no value to a pregnant female facing coercion and violence when there has been no federal, and only one state legislature, that has statutorily embodied enforcement provisions and penalties for coercing and victimizing pregnant women for the purpose of causing an unwanted abortion.

Effectuating social justice must include a partnership with the governing bodies that will clearly stand together with the church in seeking justice for the victimized pregnant female.

Advice and Counsel on Item 19-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 219th General Assembly (2010) that Item 19-03 be answered by approving the following substitute recommendation: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“[The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms women’s moral right and moral capacity to responsibly determine their reproductive lives, including the right to use contraception, to reject sexual activity, to continue a pregnancy, or when necessary to end a pregnancy; condemns the injustice of any force, coercion, or violence against women to compel pregnancy, the continuation of pregnancy, sterilization or abortion; commends and encourages those who provide shelter, medical care, and counseling for women subject to domestic violence and coercion in reproductive issues; and instructs the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate this concern and commitment to the Congress of the United States and the state legislatures, urging them to expand support for women’s shelters and transitional housing for women and children fleeing domestic violence.]

Rationale

A good deal of research documents the use of violence and coercion for the purpose of imposing reproductive control over women in order to achieve the reproductive goals of their intimate partners. ACSWP advises that Item 19-03, which focuses on violence intended to terminate a pregnancy, be answered with a substitute recommendation that expands the response of the PC(USA) to include condemnation of any physical or emotional violence and coercion intended to control women’s reproductive choices.

Item 19-03 appropriately raises the important issue of physical and emotional assaults and threats of assault or other forms of harm against women who are pregnant. Some research has indicated that intimate partner violence increases during pregnancy. The Centers for Disease Control report that 4 percent to 8 percent of pregnant women report violence during pregnancy—most likely a low figure since most domestic violence is not reported. While research indicates numerous motivations for such violence, Item 19-03 brings our attention to violence that is intended to terminate the pregnancy against the woman’s will. Even when such violence does not lead to the horrific examples noted in Item 19-03, this abuse may lead to a miscarriage, preterm labor and birth, and injury to both the woman and the fetus. Women experiencing abuse in the year before or during a pregnancy are much more likely to report other health issues: including high blood pressure, kidney and urinary tract infections, and depression.

The intent to control women’s reproductive lives also takes other violent forms. For example, intimate partners may use physical and emotional violence, coercion, and threats against pregnant women who seek an abortion. Women who are not pregnant may be subject to unwanted sexual intercourse, the refusal of their partners to use condoms, threats of violence if they use contraception to avoid pregnancy, and the refusal of their partner to pay for contraception or to allow access to reproductive health care. Termed “birth control sabotage” in the research literature, these abuses increase the likelihood of unintended pregnancy. The vicious cycle continues as women whose pregnancies are unintended are four times more likely to suffer increased abuse.

All such attempts to impose reproductive control are justly condemned. Do Justice, Love Mercy, Walk Humbly (Micah 6:8), the report of the Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion, adopted by the 204th General Assembly (1992) affirms “…the ability and responsibility of women, guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, in the context of their communities of faith, to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 368, 27.091) and the church’s support of “…full and equal access to contraceptive methods …” (Ibid., 27.118) as well as “…universal access to health care…” (Ibid., 27.121). Turn Mourning into Dancing, the church’s statement on healing domestic violence (213th General Assembly, 2001), defines domestic violence as “…always a violation of the power of God intended for good. It is a pattern of assaultive and coercive behavior, including physical, sexual, and psychological attacks as well as economic coercion …” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 235, 25.044). This policy provides numerous recommendations for the church’s public witness as well as for pastoral and congregational responses.

The ACSWP advises against advocating specific legislation “…that recognizes the special vulnerability of pregnant females and to protect them from assaults, attempts, and acts of force, coercion, and violence, that inflict physical or mental injury, or death, on the pregnant female…” (Item 19-03, #6). It is unclear how such legislation would differ from existing laws against assault and murder or how such legislation would actually protect women from assault. Supporting the expansion of services that aid women in getting help, including protection and shelter, seems more likely to prevent harm and facilitate healing.

On Taking a Stand Against Forced and Coerced Abortions—[Decisions on Ending or Continuing a Pregnancy]—From the Presbytery of Prospect Hill.

The Presbytery of Prospect Hill overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) to declare that we stand with all women against the injustice of any forced or coerced abortions [and the injustice of any forced or coerced decisions to carry a pregnancy to term].

Rationale

The 1992 abortion policy document, Problem Pregnancies and Abortion, states, “The strong Christian presumption is that since life is precious to God, we are to preserve and protect it.” It also affirms our confidence in women to “make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies.” And it states that “no law should condone mandatory or forced abortion or sterilization.”1

In some cases, coercion escalates to threats against the woman’s life, physical restraint during the abortion procedure, or being taken forcibly, even at gunpoint, to an abortion clinic.2 Even medical providers are sometimes guilty of subtle coercion when couples receive a difficult prenatal diagnosis and may pressure the couple to choose abortion as the “right thing” to do.

God’s people are called to speak out against violence and injustice. We are sent into the world as the reconciling community of Christ to disclose “man’s inhumanity to man and the awful consequences of its own complicity in injustice.” The church is called to live and serve society as a living confession of Christ as Lord.3

In Psalm 82:2 we read: “How long will you judge unjustly and show partiality to the wicked? Give justice to the weak and the orphan; maintain the right of the lowly and the destitute. Rescue the weak and the needy; deliver them from the hand of the wicked.” And again in Isaiah 59: 15b-16: “The Lord saw it, and it displeased him that there was no justice. He saw that there was no one, and was appalled that there was no one to intervene.”

The PC(USA) upholds the value of the individual conscience before God and its right to be free of coercion.

When an individual woman faces the decision whether to terminate a pregnancy, the issue is intensely personal, and may manifest itself in ways that do not reflect public rhetoric, or do not fit neatly into medical, legal, or policy guidelines. Humans are empowered by the spirit prayerfully to make significant moral choices, including the choice to continue or end a pregnancy. Human choices should not be made in moral vacuum, but must be based on Scripture, faith, and Christian ethics. For any choice, we are accountable to God; however, even when we err, God offers to forgive us. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 905)

Becoming an HIV and AIDS Competent Church: Prophetic Witness and Compassionate Action—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

[Editor’s Note: In adding mention of Hepatitis B and C to its approval of a report on HIV/AIDS and the church, the 219th General Assembly (2010) also acknowledges the dangers of co-infection with Hepatitis B and C and other blood-borne diseases, and encourages at-risk persons to take appropriate precautions, noting that exposure patterns and treatment protocols differ markedly. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approve the following measures in response to the HIV and AIDS pandemic:

1. Approve the “Resolution on Becoming an HIV and AIDS Competent Church: Prophetic Witness and Compassionate Action.”

2. Receive the background rationale (to be included in the Minutes).

3. Encourage the PC(USA) to advocate on behalf of, create, and engage in educational programs that reduce the stigma, discrimination, and fear of persons who have been diagnosed as HIV positive as a method to encourage honest disclosure and prevent the further spread of the virus.

4. Challenge the PC(USA) to become an HIV and AIDS competent denomination at all levels of the church and in all its ministries, combining emphasis on compassionate care with action to dismantle the social inequalities that create marginalized populations at great risk, by doing the following:

   a. Call upon congregations to accept the challenge to become an HIV and AIDS competent church by studying the HIV and AIDS related policies and resources of the PC(USA), becoming

      (1) knowledgeable about the root causes and social determinants of HIV and AIDS risk and vulnerability, including encouraging all Presbyterians, especially ministers of Word and Sacrament and church leaders, to be tested in order to be a visible example to all people and help eliminate the stigma associated with HIV and AIDS testing;

      (2) proficient in being a welcoming community for all of God’s children;

      (3) compassionate in providing pastoral care for persons living with, or affected by, HIV and AIDS; and

      (4) prophetic in advocating for social policies that address the social inequalities creating increased risk of infection, nationally and globally.

   b. Direct the appropriate entities of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), in consultation with the Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN), the Racial Ethnic Caucuses of the PC(USA), the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), to develop:

      (1) denominational standards defining the marks of HIV and AIDS competent congregations and ministries, in accordance with PC(USA) policies and in collaboration with ecumenical partners in HIV and AIDS ministries; and

      (2) a study guide that provides pastors, church educators, elders, deacons, mission workers, youth and young adults, and lay persons with practical examples of how to discuss and thoughtfully examine, with cultural proficiency and sensitivity, HIV and AIDS issues, including the role of social structures examined in this report, as well as the role of responsible sexual behaviors, through Bible studies, worship, liturgy, preaching, pastoral care, and social justice advocacy.

   c. Call upon presbyteries to include pastoral training related to HIV and AIDS competency as part of a qualified candidate’s preparation for ministry.

   d. Commend Presbyterian theological seminaries that have incorporated HIV and AIDS education into their community life.

   e. Urge Presbyterian theological seminaries to expand their programs to develop HIV and AIDS competency in preaching, pastoral care, and social witness.

   f. Call upon the members of the PC(USA) and congregations to renew our commitment to the following:

      (1) being a welcoming community for all of God’s children;

      (2) engaging in anti-homophobic educational programs;
(3) providing responsible sex education for our children, including such topics as healthy relationships, harm-reduction practices, comprehensive sex education, and abstinence;

(4) encouraging safe sex practices, including condom use;

(5) encouraging and/or providing pastoral care for persons living with HIV and AIDS; and

(6) calling for universal health care.

Urge the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to critically assess the profit margins of drug companies that develop drugs for treating HIV and AIDS and include in its report to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) a recommendation on appropriate percent margins the church may want to consider when investing its resources with companies that profit from drugs designed to treat HIV and AIDS.]

[h.] [g.] Commend the work in the area of HIV and AIDS undertaken by the International Health and Development (IHD) ministry area of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), the Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN) of the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA), Presbyterian Women (PW), the Peacemaking Program, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), and the Racial Ethnic Caucuses of the PC(USA).

[i.] [h.] In light of the social determinants that impact the spread of HIV and AIDS described in this report, challenge all entities of the PC(USA) to identify within themselves and their ministry areas the practices and policies through which they can address these underlying forces of poverty, racial inequality, gender inequality, or human rights violations, nationally and internationally, as appropriate: for example, by supporting basic development projects that allocate resources in a manner equitable to women.

[j.] [i.] Direct the Presbyterian Washington Office (PWO) and the Presbyterian United Nations Office (PUNO) to advocate to the appropriate national and international tribunals

(1) that drug treatment and other treatment and prevention modalities for HIV and AIDS, including condom distribution, be made readily accessible, particularly in rural areas, and more easily affordable or free to destitute people living with HIV and AIDS;

(2) that government establish partnerships with pharmaceutical companies to enable the free or low-cost distribution of anti-retro viral drugs, nationally and internationally;

(3) that the U.S. government increase funding for critical HIV and AIDS research including research focused on (a) infants and children, (b) the risk behaviors of teenagers and comprehensive sexuality education curriculum for teens, and (c) underreported, indigenous, and special-needs populations;

(4) that the social determinants of HIV and AIDS vulnerability inform all HIV and AIDS research and policies;

(5) that U.S. global health diplomacy be expanded to inform all foreign assistance programs focusing on the factors that lead to good health for all people and the eradication of the social determinants of disease (such as poverty, food insecurity, gender inequality, and the violation of human rights); and

(6) that the overall vision of worldwide diplomacy raises the global health diplomacy to parity with other leading values such as trade and commerce.

[k.] [j.] Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate to the president of the United States, the chairpersons of the Senate and House standing committees on Appropriations and Foreign Relations, and the administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, the Church’s support within U.S. foreign assistance programs benefitting HIV and AIDS -infected countries for (a) expansion of HIV and AIDS prevention activities, including condom distribution, and (b) government partnerships with U.S. pharmaceutical companies to enable free and low-cost distribution of anti-retro viral drugs.

Rationale

This report and recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 10-02. On Directing the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to Develop and Fund a Comprehensive HIV and AIDS Policy for the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of the Pacific (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 58, 59, 1078–82).
The 218th General Assembly (2008), “recognizing that the HIV and AIDS pandemic is a critical matter of our faith and God’s justice … directed the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in consultation with appropriate General Assembly Council staff, PC(USA) networks, and church partners, to develop and fully fund a comprehensive study on HIV and AIDS for the PC(USA), recommending compassionate action and giving prophetic witness regarding issues related to people living with HIV and AIDS in the U.S. and around the world, and report to the 219th General Assembly (2010) (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 58–59, 1078–79).

Having consulted with appropriate entities of the church, a work group was appointed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to draft a report responding to the 218th General Assembly (2008) referral. The members of this group included: Delfin W. Bautista, Kezia L. Ellison, Marsha Fowler, Ann Hayman, James A. Lemons, and Clive Neil. Kathryn L. Smith served as consultant on this project. Staff support to the group was provided by Belinda M. Curry, associate for policy development and interpretation for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Introduction

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has maintained a faithful witness to the vicissitudes of HIV (human immunodeficiency virus) and AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) since the mid 1980s. We have charted a course from continent to continent, from gay to heterosexual populations, from the point of view of caregivers to concrete suggestions about how local congregations can get involved, to formulating a Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN) and establishing a special focus on AIDS in the International Health and Development (IHD) ministry area of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). We have studied this pandemic, Presbyterian Women (PW) have journeyed, and mission dollars have been given to AIDS-related causes. The PC(USA) has aimed to study and address this issue with the needs of those infected and affected by this pandemic always at the forefront of our study, reflection, ministry, and practices. Almost thirty years from the advent of this virus we know a great deal—we know what it is and how it is transmitted, we know how to prevent its spread with use of condoms and needle-exchange programs, yet despite this knowledge there will be an estimated 53,000 new cases of HIV reported in the United States this year. We found ourselves looking deeply into the new faces of this disease and have realized that there are many “powers and principalities” at play: not new germs, not uncaring churches, not failed care giving, not a lack of profound and even prophetic social witness policy, but the ever constant presence of poverty, gender inequality, human rights violations, and the constellation of stigma, prejudice, and unjust discrimination and marginalization.

This report presents the PC(USA) with a concise but comprehensive look at HIV and AIDS thirty years after it made its first blip on our epidemiological radar screens. We begin with an overview of the development of the HIV and AIDS epidemic in the United States and globally and the church’s response. From this overview, we report on the present context of the global pandemic as it appears in the U.S. and other regions of the world. We turn to Scripture for comfort, guidance, hope, and a prophetic vision of how to respond most faithfully. We then examine the marginalizing social forces that foster the spread of HIV: poverty, racism, sexism, homophobia, stigma, and discrimination. We see how cultural and religious beliefs can contribute to the greater vulnerability of some groups, extending the power of this pandemic. As we journey toward examining the dynamics of unequal social power, we lift up and highlight populations that have been historically underreported or mis-categorized. This leads us to a social analysis and an assessment of our current situation where we address the implications of the dynamics of these powers and principalities for us as a church, nation, and world. Finally, we return to our theme and goal: that the PC(USA) become an HIV and AIDS competent denomination defined by the merging of compassionate care, so well developed in current church policies and resources, and prophetic witness, now focused on the dynamics of unequal power nationally and globally, with the recognition that attention to both is necessary to stop the tragedy of this pandemic.

I. The Development of a Pandemic and the Church’s Response

A. The Development of a Pandemic

In the U.S., AIDS was perceived as a gay man’s disease by the time its clinical manifestation was recognized and the HIV lentivirus was isolated in the early 1980s. Soon thereafter, AIDS was recognized among injecting drug users and Haitians, then among transfused hemophiliacs, and, subsequently it was discovered that it could be passed from mother to fetus. By January 1983, it was recognized that the disease could be passed through heterosexual sex. That same year, European reports identified two separate epidemic populations: homosexual persons, and persons from Central Africa who had no associations with homosexual sex, injection drug use, or blood transfusion. By the end of 1984, 7,699 AIDS cases and 3,665 AIDS deaths were reported in the United States, 762 cases in Europe, and 108 cases in the United Kingdom. By the end of 1985 it became known that AIDS could be transmitted through breast-feeding and AIDS had been reported in every region of the world. There were 20,303 cases reported to the World Health Organization (WHO), of which 15,948 were in the U.S. alone. Today, worldwide, there are 33 million people living with AIDS, 2.5 million of whom are children; globally 25 million people have died due to AIDS-related complications. The HIV infection and AIDS have affected and infected persons of every age, sex, marital status, socioeconomic status, sexual orientation, ethnic, and racial group throughout the world; no demographic has remained untouched. This enormous suffering cries out again for compassionate action and prophetic justice.
B. The Church’s Response

As this pandemic swept across the world, fear arose and with this fear came stigma, prejudice, unjust discrimination, and social marginalization. Church response began prior to reunion (1983) when the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. first explored a “new medical syndrome identified and designated as Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (A.I.D.S.).” The 195th General Assembly (1983) advocated for (1) justice, (2) media coverage of the disease, and (3) funding for medical research.

In the mid 1980s, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) began to study myriad issues related to HIV and the accompanying AIDS illnesses. The 196th General Assembly (1984) affirmed that these illnesses should neither be viewed as “punishment for behavior deemed immoral nor as an excuse for discrimination and oppression.” The 200th General Assembly (1988) called again on Presbyterians to show unbiased and genuine compassion for persons living with HIV and AIDS in a resolution titled To Meet AIDS with Grace and Truth. Recognizing that HIV and AIDS were thought to be affecting primarily the gay male community; the assembly declared that “all people are precious to God” and urged legislative action “to protect the human and civil rights of persons infected by the HIV, persons perceived to be at risk for such infection, and persons with AIDS or ARC (AIDS Related Complex); [and] urge[d] thorough efforts to investigate, document, and prevent prejudice and violence against all persons who have AIDS or are perceived to be at risk for AIDS.”

The church also recognized the harsh reality that unless sufficient resources were allocated within the United States and around the world, both the church and society would soon grapple with the majority of individuals likely contracting the HIV virus through heterosexual contact. It urged attention to the spread of HIV “among drug addicts, their sex partners, and babies” and the development of national strategies for preventive education, civil rights protections, and financing of care.

By 2001, the church had fully recognized that AIDS was now a global pandemic disproportionately affecting women and children, particularly women and children of color. The church responded by working in partnership with the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations (UN), and in ecumenical and interfaith collaborations demonstrating the love of God and advancing the status of women. Two years later PC(USA) AIDS policy shifted to the African continent. Through the 215th General Assembly (2003) approval of the Resolution on Africa, Presbyterians were challenged to “engage in hands-on mission projects that provide care for people living with … AIDS in Africa” and, further, to “advocate boldly for more just and extensive application of human rights principles and pronouncements by governments, nongovernmental organizations, private … organizations, and religious institutions globally and in Africa.”

For almost three decades, the voice of the Presbyterian church has been strong and clear, calling local congregations and other governing bodies to engage in compassionate, nonjudgmental care, and to respond to those facing a life with HIV and AIDS with respect, support, compassion, and nonjudgmental assistance. Our policies have called upon us to witness to injustice, to do justice, and to promote prevention. The General Assembly has directed our General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to work with our legislatures creating public policies and funding that provides ready access to lifesaving drug treatment for those affected by HIV and AIDS. We have produced numerous resources to enable individuals and churches to break the silence and to counter the negative theology often surrounding these issues. We have supported the Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN), the International Health and Development (IHD) ministry area, and other caring organizations of the PC(USA) including Care Teams. Presbyterian Women have been especially active in these efforts through their support of mission and their global exchange programs.

Yet, since the first cases of HIV and AIDS were recognized in 1981, more than “sixty million people have been infected with the human immunodeficiency virus; nearly half have died and the toll on individuals, families, communities, and entire nations has been profound.” In its reach and devastation this pandemic is among the worst infectious scourges in human history. The church is challenged again to sharpen its prophetic witness and deepen its compassionate action.

II. The Current Context of the HIV and AIDS Pandemic

To construct compassionate ministries of justice and healing, it is important to understand the many faces of HIV and AIDS today. It is particularly important to identify social and cultural factors that increase the risk and vulnerability of specific populations to infection. This section provides data on the regional expanse of the pandemic and identifies some of the social and cultural forces at work in that expanse.

A. The United States

From the early 1980s to the present, the number of persons living with HIV in the U.S. is more than 1.1 million, with approximately half of those having developed AIDS. Though a cure is not yet available, advances in treatment have changed AIDS from an inevitably terminal illness to a chronic illness. While the incidence of new infections has declined from its peak in the 1980s and has been stable since 2000, there are 53,000 new cases of HIV infection annually in the U.S. The largest number of cases of HIV infection and AIDS is found among Caucasians. However, in some racial and ethnic communities the percentage of those with HIV is higher than the percentage of Caucasians with HIV.
Patterns of HIV transmission are also shifting. While most new infections in the U.S. are diagnosed among gay and bisexual men, heterosexual transmission across the age spectrum now accounts for a larger share. Women, particularly women of color, represent about 30 percent of new HIV infections. Rates of newly diagnosed infection are increasing among senior citizens who, often because of divorce or the death of a spouse, find themselves becoming sexually active with new partners for the first time in decades. New infections due to contaminated needles from drug use have declined significantly and now represent only a small proportion of new infections. Routine and accurate HIV antibody testing of blood, blood products, tissue, and semen has made the transmission of HIV via blood transfusion, organ transplant, and artificial insemination a rare occurrence. Antibody testing and effective antiretroviral therapy have brought a significant decline in maternal-to-fetus transmission of HIV.

It is of great concern, however, that racial and ethnic minorities, particularly Blacks and Latinos, have been disproportionately affected by HIV and AIDS throughout this epidemic, representing the majority of new infections and those living with HIV and AIDS, of new AIDS cases, and of AIDS deaths. For example, Blacks accounted for 56 percent of AIDS deaths in 2005. Young adults and teens continue to be at higher risk for infections predominantly transmitted sexually. Younger gay and bisexual men between the ages of thirteen and twenty-nine are at particularly high risk accounting for almost 40 percent of the infections among gay and bisexual men. Other groups face underreporting and, therefore, potentially less access to preventive education and medical treatment. (See Section V. Underreported U.S. Populations.)

Understanding the forces that create these disparate patterns of infection and death is imperative if our church is to fulfill its mandate of prophetic witness and compassionate ministry to people living with HIV and AIDS. Understanding that HIV and AIDS is a pandemic impacting any one of us, as pastors, elders, deacons, and laity, is essential to our becoming an HIV and AIDS competent church in which stigma and discrimination have no place.

B. The Global Context

Globally, the prevalence rate of HIV infection among 15–49 year olds has plateaued but at an unacceptably high level. AIDS continues to be the leading cause of death worldwide. Men who have sex with men (MSM), injection drug users, and prostitutes are still at high risk of becoming infected. However, the majority of new infections worldwide arise from heterosexual sex. Moreover, HIV and AIDS is the scourge of the global poor. Of the approximately thirty-three million people worldwide living with HIV and AIDS, 96 percent reside in countries with low per-capita incomes, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa. Such countries are beset by other enormous problems including infectious diseases, food insecurity, and poverty. The subsections below highlight regions with emerging epidemics indicating not only the magnitude of the pandemic, but also illustrating the widespread and devastating effects of one virus on various mission areas of the church. To respond with compassionate action and prophetic witness in its global health ministries, the church is challenged to recognize the forces that are changing the face of HIV and AIDS and respond with care that is culturally and linguistically appropriate.

1. Sub-Saharan Africa

In many regions of the African continent, AIDS is the number one cause of death and has led to a surge in cases of TB (mycobacterium tuberculosis), which is the leading cause of death for people with HIV. Women, in particular, are at higher risk due to greater biological susceptibility, constrained access to diagnosis and treatment services, gender inequalities, and sexual violence. Of the approximately 2.5 million children globally living with HIV, 90 percent live in sub-Saharan Africa. Of the more than fifteen million children under eighteen who have been orphaned as a result of HIV and AIDS, approximately 11.6 million live in sub-Saharan Africa. The PC(USA) International Health and Development (IHD) ministry area works closely with African church partners, contributing both personnel and monetary resources. Cultural and socioeconomic forces impacting the face of HIV and AIDS in Africa are discussed in Section IV.B.2, Social, Cultural, and Religious Barriers to Diagnosis and Treatment, Global; and IV.C. Economic Forces.

2. Asia and India

Although Africa has the largest number of people living with HIV, South and Southeast Asia are some of the fastest growing regions for the epidemic. There may be as many as six million Asians infected with HIV. Since many Asian countries suffer from low per-capita incomes, dramatic inequities in income distribution, gender inequality, and poor healthcare infrastructure, providing high-quality medical care to those in need is difficult. The high rate of infection among 15–19 year-old girls reflects women’s powerlessness to control the terms of sexual contact within and outside of marriage. Moreover, while fidelity after marriage is required for many Asian women, many men are not bound by such norms. The Joint United Nations Programme (UNAIDS) on HIV and AIDS estimates that 2.4 million people are living with HIV in India. In the southern states, HIV is “primarily spread through heterosexual contact,” and in the northeastern states HIV infection is highest among “injecting drug users and sex workers.” India’s National AIDS Control Organisation (NACO) has focused public campaigns on the reduction of stigma and discrimination and the promotion of services with special emphasis given to women and youth, who are particularly vulnerable. According to the U.N. agency for women, UNIFEM, marriage is among the highest HIV and AIDS risk factors for southern African women and Indian women, largely as result of male infidelity. India’s efforts to increase HIV and AIDS prevention, education, and access to treatment face challenges, including client compliance with treatment schemes and access to life-saving medicines, appropriate follow-up with patients, socioeconomic and nutritional support, and reduction of stigmatizing attitudes among health staff.

3. Latin America and the Caribbean

The rate of infection and the number of individuals living with the disease in Latin American and Caribbean countries is lower than that in African countries, but some studies suggest that it has the second fastest growing rate of infections today. Rates of infection vary from country to country. As in Africa and Asia, sociopolitical conditions make the disease deadly. For example, 250,000 people acquire HIV infection in the region every year and 120,000 deaths occur annually due to AIDS-related illnesses exacerbated by lack of access to life-saving medicines and adequate health care. Poverty, lack of adequate education, including comprehensive sexual health education, and widespread social stigma and discrimination, contribute to these numbers. While the infection tends to concentrate in urban areas among men who have sex with men, many of these men also have sex with women. Thus, as in the U.S. and globally, Latin America is experiencing a feminization of the epidemic with rates of heterosexual transmission increasing and a greater number of women being infected. Social mores limit women’s ability to negotiate safer sex practices with husbands/partners and increase their rates of infection. The need is growing for health-care centers and education programs that provide intervention strategies that are culturally and linguistically appropriate and inclusive (especially among indigenous populations).

4. Eastern Europe

The UNAIDS reports that “since 2001, HIV prevalence in Russia, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia has roughly doubled, making the region home to the world’s most rapidly expanding epidemic.” The instability and socioeconomic issues of this region in the mid 1990s lead to increased rates of injection drug use, which acted as a gateway for the HIV epidemic. To curb the pandemic in this region, there have been increased efforts to encourage needle exchange programs and HIV and AIDS education, especially among sex workers.

5. Global Sex Trafficking

The relationship between HIV and AIDS and international sex trafficking exposes the deadly interconnection between a virus (HIV) and multiple social factors, including poverty, gender subordination, the demand for young girls who are often from ethnic and indigenous populations, unequal and ineffective cross-border law enforcement, and the sex trade industry. In fact, the HIV and AIDS pandemic itself has created a demand among male clients for ever-younger partners or virgins to avoid becoming infected themselves, or in the mistaken belief that having sex with a virgin will cure a person of AIDS. Available research estimates the numbers of trafficked women and children to be in the 100,000 to 250,000 range in 2009. Recent findings from South Asia illustrate the high prevalence of HIV among sex trafficking victims, a rate higher than their non-trafficked counterparts.

Physiological differences make women as much as two-to-four times more susceptible than men to contracting the disease through heterosexual sex. Political, social, and cultural inequality compound the vulnerability of women and girls who are coerced, tricked, or sold into commercial sex. Risk of infection soars as women and girls are forced to endure multiple sexual contacts without the power to insist upon condom use. Injuries and abrasions heighten physical vulnerability to AIDS transmission, particularly for the youngest whose bodies are still immature. These same factors heighten the risk of infection from other sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), the presence of which heightens the risk of contracting HIV by up to a factor of ten.

The vulnerability of trafficked women to sexually transmitted diseases may be compounded by their inability to speak or understand the language in a foreign land, their poverty and indebtedness, and their lack of freedom of movement—in short, enslavement that impedes access to health care or prevention information and education. The PC(USA) has extensive prostitution- and trafficking-related social witness policy. In the face of the HIV and AIDS pandemic, nothing less than the elimination of sex trafficking is required. Thus, the 218th General Assembly (2008) instructed the Stated Clerk to communicate with the United States Department of Homeland Security (a) to urge the development of methods to recognize and arrest traffickers; (b) to urge the development of methods to identify forged passports and visas in order to limit the number of trafficked victims brought into the United States. … to find ways to urge agencies in other countries to stop traffickers from enticing women with the promise of jobs in other countries, and by promoting false marriage.

III. Where Scripture Calls Us to Be: Compassionate in Action, Prophetic in Witness

A. Compassionate Action

Scripture speaks to all of us, to all those living with HIV and AIDS: those of us infected and those of us affected. It speaks words of comfort and tenderness to those who face their own mortality. It speaks with knowing experience about the fragility of life and the grief of loss: lost joys, lost hopes. It gives voice to the grief that can lead to anger, frustration, or a sense of profound meaninglessness. It understands the desire for death to come swiftly. Our ancient forebears experienced all this agony and gave us voice to cry out in despair. Job, when suffering pain all over his body, groaned, “… I would choose strangling and death rather than this body” (Job 7:15 NRSV). He then lashed out at God, saying, “I loathe my life; I would not live forever. Let me alone, for my days are a breath” (Job 7:16 NRSV). So some of us may cry. Others have cried out with the Psalmist in despair: “O my God, … do not take me away at the mid-point of my life” (Ps.102:24 NRSV). Those moments of wanting to give in to pain and loss are powerful. So also are the times of our bitterness and complaint. (Job 7:11)

Yet, our faith assures all of us, those living with HIV and AIDS and those of us affected by HIV and AIDS, that God is walking through that valley of the shadow of death with us (Ps. 23:4).

Thus, right after the outburst of pain, we hear the Psalmist proclaim, “Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless [the Lord’s] holy name” (Ps. 103:1 NRSV). In that moment of blessing and of proclaiming blessing, the weight of our mortality can be lifted and we recognize the grandeur and wholeness of God’s intentions for us. Living with mortality often involves this moving from despair to blessing, from anguish to thankfulness, and back again. The crucified Christ, who cried out in the Garden of Gethsemane when faced with his own impending mortality, joined us in this very human condition when he cried out as well, “Father, if you are willing, remove this cup from me; yet, not my will but yours be done” (Lk. 22:42 NRSV). We are told that then there appeared an angel from heaven to bring him comfort (Luke 22:43). So we cry out as did Jesus, both to pray for God’s mercies and to proclaim blessings upon God who suffers with us. And in the midst of our anguish and despair, God is there to comfort us and give us hope.

Job’s story of suffering also reminds us that cruel tragedies fall on both the good and evil and that life is indeed a breath for all of us. Before being stricken, Job had it all—wealth, status, family. Yet, as good a man as he was, he had never recognized that hardship and calamity can fall on anyone. He was not prepared when it fell on him. Too often we hear, or perhaps we repeat, the voices of Job’s friends insisting that he must have brought this suffering on himself. Such accusations too often result in discrimination, derision, and the unjust treatment of people living with HIV and AIDS. Job teaches us to recognize that sorrow and loss is neither an indication of moral failure nor of some impediment to God’s loving presence with us. In the face of HIV and AIDS, we encourage one another to reject guilt and self-recriminations. Specifically, we must reject any use of Scripture that would label anyone living with disease as impure or unclean. (See Appendix A.)

Ultimately, Scripture offers a message of comfort for those living with HIV and AIDS. God grieves with us; God mourns with us; God suffers with us in and through Christ. We respond in faith, standing with one another in our grief and loss, as in joy. Some of us will pray when some of us cannot. Some of us will praise, when some are inconsolable. This is the meaning of ecclesia—the people gathered together as one. Let the people of God understand that love and trust are at the center of our response to God, as love and compassion are central to our response to neighbor. We know that healing in the gospels is always an act that challenges the forces of destruction and proclaims a new way of understanding God’s vision of wholeness in the world. Our God is a God who proclaims reversal of all status claims. Those whom society segregates to the margins are those whom God embraces and to whom God assigns great honor. As such, Scripture offers the highest dignity to those who are living with HIV and AIDS and the challenges—physical, emotional, and spiritual—this condition, and society in many cases, presents. Truly, there is dignity here, an image of God at work in our midst. This is the message of hope: that God is a God in whose loving compassion we can have absolute faith and trust.

B. Prophetic Witness

The Hebrew prophets, angered by the suffering of the poor around them, declared the word of God against the ruling elite and the structures by which they legally impoverished the poor, the widows and orphans, and the strangers in their midst. Central to the preaching of Jesus and the ancient prophets of Israel was the proclamation of God’s covenant with us and its ramifications on us. Covenant places an expectation upon a collective people to structure ourselves in a way that strives to represent, albeit inadequately, the values of the kingdom, that is, the reign of God. Today, we are becoming increasingly aware that the church must heed the call to reform the social structures impacting all of those living with HIV and AIDS. To take up this responsibility as a church is to reflect our understanding of our covenant with God, those kingdom values, and their place in our hearts.

Jesus gave prophetic witness to the ethics of the reign of God in five ways: (1) teachings on prayer and liturgy; (2) parables; (3) behavior at banquets; (4) healings; and (5) denunciations of religious leaders. Each of these is uniquely germane to the discussion about what the church is called to be in the face of this HIV and AIDS pandemic and to the prophetic reformation of social structures it is called to proclaim.

1. Prayer and Liturgy

The Lord’s Prayer and the Beatitudes are two liturgical hymns that contain, in concise and beautifully paralleled form, the essential ethical values of the reign of God. The Lord’s Prayer begins with an address to God as our Divine Parent, whom we address together in unison. Hence, the very notion of God, in Christian understanding, is tied in with the pronouncement that we are responsible for one another as children of a single Divine Parent. To the extent, then, that we desire to know God, we are thus called upon to know and to be accountable in relationship to all God’s people. As such, even to be able to claim to know God as “our Father” is to proclaim our kinship with those who live with HIV and AIDS as God’s beloved children.
After calling on God collectively as God’s family, we proclaim, “hallowed be your name” (Mt. 6:9, NRSV). The ancient prophets have long called God’s people Israel to “hallow,” or “sanctify,” God’s name. How is this to be understood? In Ezekiel, God proclaims the desire to sanctify God’s own name in and through God’s people (Ezek. 36:23). This is an awe-inspiring covenantal move on God’s part. It is in Israel that God has elected to sanctify, to make God’s name holy, before the world. As Christians, we gladly accept this covenantal responsibility as well—that in us God chooses to demonstrate to the world God’s own holy nature. The responsibility is upon us to live in a way that consciously reflects that nature.

How do we reflect God’s holy nature? Ezekiel called on Israel to follow God’s statutes and justice, “by whose observance everyone shall live” (Ezek. 20:13, NRSV). By embracing and committing ourselves to advocate for justice, we will find life! In this way, we sanctify God’s name before the world.

Five times in Deuteronomy (10:18, 24:19, 24:20, 24:21, 27:19) God calls on Israel to care for those who are on the margins of society—“the stranger, the orphan, and the widow,” thus reinforcing the essence of God’s justice. Five times the Deuteronomist makes clear that central to living out the ethics of the reign of God is to create a just society in which the needs of those who are the most vulnerable are met—and not just minimally but at a level that actually causes them to rejoice in the midst of God’s people (Deut. 16:11–14). To what extent are we, as the collective people of God, creating environments in which those of us living with HIV and AIDS, here and throughout the world, truly rejoice in our midst? This would be the vindication of God’s name as Scripture defines it. This is what it means to proclaim together, “hallowed be your name.”

The Lord’s Prayer is a collective prayer that ultimately calls for God’s reign, power, and glory to be made manifest as God’s will is done “on earth as it is in heaven” (Matt. 6:10, NRSV). As such, we are to understand that our willingness to do God’s will is made visible as we work to free one another from the conditions wearing us down. In freeing one another, we hallow God’s name in the midst of the people and act out God’s will here on earth—the justice of God.

Likewise, the Beatitudes, clearly a liturgical proclamation, look forward to the eschatological inversion of all the status signifiers in the world. The poor, the mourners, the meek, the hungry and thirsty, the merciful, the pure, the peacemakers, and the persecuted are those who receive joy and blessing in the eschatological reign of God. The list comprises people who have little or no status in our collective social consciousness. The corollary message is that God’s people are to seek concrete ways to welcome, bless, and celebrate those whom society delegitimates to its outer margins. Not only in the United States, but worldwide, those living with HIV and AIDS suffer discrimination, derision, and disenfranchisement. For a people who seek to enact the ethics of the reign of God, it is imperative that we hear clearly the voices of persons living with HIV and AIDS, here and throughout the world. Together we can actualize the values of the reign of God, sharing the suffering, attending to the needs. Blessed are the vulnerable, for it is they, prior to the strong, who shall know the reign of God.

2. Parables

Likewise, in the parables, Jesus often taught about the nature of the reign of God. In Luke, the opponents of Jesus had just been humiliated because those whom they considered impure were coming to listen to Jesus. As a response, Jesus taught them three parables which Luke has clustered together in his gospel. They are the parables of the lost sheep, the woman with the lost coin, and the prodigal son (Lk. 15:1–7; 15:8–10; 15:11–32). In every case, the message is that those whom our religious communities assign to the social margins are the very people who are valued, even treasured, within the ethics of the reign of God.

These parables challenge the power wielded by those in the religious social center of society—the power to marginalize and to disenfranchise those whom, for whatever reason, the social center has deemed unbefitting to represent the values that they espouse. That is a powerful and sobering message for Christians today, for we clearly create or tolerate social models that disenfranchise, silence, and marginalize people whom we have determined do not model, either in their social status, their lifestyles, or their appearance, the values that we choose to espouse. This behavior, claims Jesus, is antithetical to the values of the reign of God. More profoundly, it is behavior that denies God. As Jesus reminds us in Matthew: “just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me” (Mt. 25:35–45, cf. 40).

3. Behavior at Banquets

Jesus continued to challenge the social center in his teaching about behavior at banquets. In the ancient Mediterranean world, banquets provided an important means for patrons to honor their clients and for clients to reciprocate with greater honor for patrons. It was a system in which status was ascribed within a closed social group. Those on the outside of the patron/client relationship had no hope of gaining access. Instead, they were relegated to a place of shame and degradation. It is this honor/shame social system that Jesus most strongly attacked in the banquet stories.

Whether it be tax collectors and sinners whom Jesus welcomed (Lk. 5:29–32), or the poor and the physically maimed (Lk. 14:12–14), or simply the uninvited (Lk. 14:15–24), Luke’s message is clear. It is people on the collective margins, and not those who enjoy high status in the current honor/shame system, who receive honor according to the ethics of the reign of God. Jesus’ claim was that to publicly assign honor or shame to people based on the group’s social norms was wrong. So, for example, if people could not reciprocate or represent in their bodies the prevailing social norms, they were assigned lower status. We too, as the people of God in the world today, must reexamine our social structures and ask to what extent they are serving a similar purpose—a purpose antithetical to the ethics of the reign of God.

4. Healings

Healings in the gospels are some of the most misunderstood acts carried out by Jesus. As Jesus healed and restored health, he also demonstrated the ethics and the values of the reign of God, inscribing those values on the very bodies of those who were healed.

Thus in the healings in the synagogues of the man with the unclean spirit, the man with the withered hand, and the woman bent over with a crippling condition, we see healings occurring in the place where the people of God gathered to pray and to discuss Scripture on the Sabbath (Mk. 1:21–28; 3:1–6; Lk. 13:10–17). In every case, the event of healing enacted the inclusion of those who found themselves on the margins of the people of God. In each case, the healing story is preceded and followed by Jesus’ teaching about the nature of the reign of God. Jesus exhorted God’s people to seek the things of God’s reign, which results in wholeness, inclusion, enfranchisement, and expanding the center of the community of faith so that all might be included. To the extent that we, the worshipping community, enfold and enfranchise those whom society places on its margins, we are enacting the coming reign of God. In the church’s compassionate and prophetic response to those living with and affected by HIV and AIDS today, the church is learning to become more fully and faithfully the people of God.

In the past, it has been assumed that Jesus did away with the purity laws when he healed people. In the book of Leviticus, it is commanded that no one who has a “blemish,” or “defect” may approach to make an offering—this included those who are blind, lame, maimed, or have skin diseases (Lev. 21:17–20). In this system, God’s holiness exercised a centripetal force—the closer one approached to God’s sanctuary, the more whole in body one was expected to be in order to reflect God’s own holiness. Jesus, on the other hand, proposed a notion of holiness whose force was centrifugal; that is, the holiness emanated outward from God’s presence to enfold the “outcasts of Israel” (Ps. 147:2, NRSV)—those who under a particular interpretation of Leviticus had become marginalized. In this vision, God’s holy presence is still inscribed on the bodies of the people, but the force of God’s holiness is now centrifugal rather than centripetal—emanating out rather than converging in. In like manner, God’s people are called to embody the centrifugal, inexhaustible force of God’s emanating holiness by being sources of healing and wholeness to those bodies whom society has relegated to the margins in shame.

5. Denunciations of Religious Leaders

The final category to consider is that which comprises Jesus’ woes and denunciations. First, Jesus denounced those who put a “stumbling block” before the “little ones” whom the religious center had deemed to be less suitable to reflect its values (Mt. 18:6–9). Without question, this challenges us to take up new initiatives in support of justice toward persons living with HIV and AIDS—in support of those marginalized, the vulnerable ones, in today’s globalized cultures.

Jesus also very purposefully heaped denunciations upon the religious leaders of his day, who, Jesus said, addressing them, “lock people out of the kingdom of heaven” (Mt. 23:13). He added, “You do not go in yourselves, and when others are going in, you stop them” (Mt. 23:13; see also Mt. 23:14–33; Mk. 12:38–40; Lk. 11:52; 20:47). He proclaimed, “… you tithe mint, dill, and cumin, and have neglected the weightier matters of the law: justice and mercy and faith. It is these you ought to have practiced without neglecting … others” (Mt. 23:23).

The church is faced with the reality that these shattering pronouncements are directed precisely at us—at religious people who sometimes create social spaces into which people cannot enter, because we make our social religious space uncomfortable for them. We acknowledge that, although our ritual and liturgical actions are moving and powerful, we are often unaware of how they may also become a reflection of our own needs. Without intending it, we may create spaces others cannot enter.

The goal to become an HIV and AIDS competent church recognizes our desire to live as Jesus taught as well as our recognition of our unintended inadequacies. If our task, as the collective children of “our Father in heaven,” is to enact the ethics of the reign of God in our behaviors toward all of God’s children, including the vulnerable among us—whether it be in North America, Africa, Asia, South America, Australia, or Europe—including persons infected and affected with HIV and AIDS, then we are called to be healed and made whole even as we work to enfranchise and give voice to those who live with life-threatening conditions.

These values are gospel values: from the five-fold call to protect the outsiders, the orphans, and the widows in Deuteronomy, to the call of Ezekiel to vindicate God’s name by doing what is just, to the Spirit-anointed proclamation of Isa. 61:1, which announces good news to the poor, dressing the wounds of those whose hearts are shattered, and declares emancipation and release to those who are held captive and imprisoned. This is the center of the call to be a people of God who enact the ethics of the reign of God in our midst. It is a privilege, a responsibility, and a mandate upon our covenantal commitments to live in community with one another, creating life, hope, and healing for all.
C. Reformed Tradition

Compassionate action and prophetic witness come together in the Presbyterian church’s recognition of the covenantal claim upon our corporate life. In the Book of Order the church is called to “… the promotion of social righteousness; and the exhibition of the Kingdom [Realm] of Heaven to the world.” Yet The Book of Confessions reminds us that we, as well as the whole world, are implicated in the injustices perpetrated by social structures, in the tyrannies and idolatries to which humankind is prone. We “… rebel against God; we hide from our Creator. Ignoring God’s commandments, we violate the image of God in others and ourselves, accept lies as truth…. We deserve God’s condemnation.” We are thus required, in recognition of our sin and complicity and as “… the people of God to work for the transformation of society by seeking justice and living in obedience to the Word of God.” Jesus’ imprecations upon religious leaders call us to be faithful in “… unmask[ing] idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.” As the Book of Order enjoins, the Church is to be “Christ’s Faithful Evangelist” by concretely:

(3) participating in God’s activity in the world through its life for others by (a) healing and reconciling and binding up wounds, (b) ministering to the needs of the poor, the sick, the lonely, and the powerless, (c) engaging in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression, hunger, and injustice, (d) giving itself and its substance to the service of those who suffer, (e) sharing with Christ in the establishing of his just, peaceable, and loving rule in the world.

The Church is called to undertake this mission even at the risk of losing its life, trusting God alone as the author and giver of life, sharing the gospel, and doing those deeds in the world that point beyond themselves [sic] to the new reality in Christ.

In obedience to God, as followers of Christ in the Reformed tradition, we must abhor the injustices that perpetrate harm upon the poor of the world now living and dying of HIV and AIDS. As we are reminded by The Confession of 1967,

The reconciliation of [humankind] through Jesus Christ makes it plain that enslaving poverty in a world of abundance is an intolerable violation of God’s good creation. Because Jesus identified himself with the needy and exploited, the cause of the world’s poor is the cause of his disciples. The church cannot condone poverty …. A church that is indifferent to poverty, or evades responsibility in economic affairs, is open to one social class only, or expects gratitude for its beneficence makes a mockery of reconciliation and offers no acceptable worship to God.

IV. Marginalizing Social Forces:

A. Poverty, Sexism, Intimate Partner Violence, Racism, and Homophobia

The immediate cause of HIV infection and its progression to AIDS is microbial. The task is (1) to intervene at the point of transmission to prevent new infections, and (2) to administer a therapeutic drug regimen to those who have already been infected in order to prevent progression to AIDS or transmission, especially to nursing infants. By doing so, it should be possible eventually to make new infections rare and to limit AIDS to a long-term, chronic illness. In fact, much has been done through public education, rapid and accurate testing, condom availability, needle exchange programs, safe blood to transfuse, and treatment for pregnant or nursing women.

Yet, if a simple microbiological approach to HIV and AIDS worked, the disease would have long since been stopped in its tracks. Instead, it now involves more than thirty-three million people worldwide who are living with HIV and AIDS and it is growing. Another twenty-five million have already died of AIDS. Clearly more is needed, but what?

A microbiological approach fails to take into account the social determinants of the infection or disease. Issues of sex, race, age, class, gender identity, domestic violence, and poverty are brought to the fore by the HIV and AIDS epidemic. One cannot truly grasp the complexity of HIV and AIDS today without considering these underlying and exacerbating constructs.

The patterns of HIV and AIDS infection parallel the manifestations of social injustice, inequality, and marginalization that God and our Reformed tradition call us to unmask and redress. These injustices increase both risk and vulnerability to HIV and AIDS. As the church has called Presbyterians to welcome persons living with HIV and AIDS with compassionate ministry, the church must now speak forcefully about those social conditions that increase risk and vulnerability and contribute to the expansion of the pandemic. In this report we can only begin to name and decry these conditions.

1. Poverty

For both women and men, there is a reciprocal relationship between poverty and HIV and AIDS: the presence of poverty ensures increased vulnerability to and risk factors for HIV and AIDS while at the same time the presence of HIV and AIDS brings about poverty. This is true at the level of nations as well as individuals. Thus, in the U.S. and abroad, the pandemic increasingly affects poor women of color. Poverty brings horrible choices to women—sometimes exchanging sex for a better place in the food line, as described by a member of our International Health and Development (IHD) staff. When women are infected, children too are profoundly affected, if not also infected. Limited resources must stretch to cover medications (more on that follows), nutrition worsens, children are withdrawn from school to become caregivers, and another generation is doomed to poverty. Barnett and Whiteside, writing about children with HIV and AIDS, note more broadly that “AIDS deepens poverty and increases inequalities at every level, household, community, regional and sectoral. The epidemic undermines efforts at poverty reduction, income and asset distribution, productivity and economic growth. AIDS has reversed progress towards international development goals because of the influence it has on all development targets.” Thus, men and women who are poor, the world’s most marginalized people, have the added burden of living with HIV that further reinforces their poverty and entraps another generation. The prevention of HIV and AIDS has become dependent upon the reduction of poverty and the reduction of poverty depends upon the reduction of HIV and AIDS. The same relationship pertains to other infectious diseases such as malaria and tuberculosis. Poverty always exists in combination with other marginalizing forces, as will be noted below.

2. Gender Inequality and Intimate Partner Violence

According to a report released on November 9, 2009, by the World Health Organization (WHO), millions of women die each year from conditions that could be avoided—if they were men. In addition to hazards like female infanticide and maternal deaths, women are more likely to contract HIV on exposure, suffer from domestic abuse and depression, and lack access to basic health care that could help them survive. (See Section IV. B. Social, Cultural, and Religious Barriers to Diagnosis and Treatment and Appendix B “Gender Inequality and the Persistence of HIV and AIDS.”)

The WHO report lifts up five key areas of concern: (a) widespread inequities between men and women in developed and developing nations; (b) the lack of recognition for sexuality and reproduction as central to women’s health (c) the toll of chronic diseases, injuries, and mental illness on health care maintenance, (d) the lack of a fair start for all girls as critical to the health of women, and (e) that societies and their health systems are simply failing women. Globally, HIV is the leading cause of death and disease in women of reproductive age. Some studies show that women are more likely than men to acquire HIV from an infected partner during unprotected heterosexual intercourse. Yet, many cultures condone sex between young women and older men who are more sexually experienced and more likely to be infected with HIV.

Intimate partner violence is an important, but often neglected, factor contributing to the spread of HIV and AIDS among women in many countries. Despite national and international laws against rape and other forms of assault, the failure of governments to enact marital rape laws, combined with cultural norms and practices subordinating women’s roles within the family and society, inevitably contribute to the spread of HIV and AIDS among women. Violence in sexual acts creates tears through which the virus enters. In some African countries, for example, the high incidence of infection among married women infected by their husbands is often the result of the wives’ inability to demand the use of condoms; and/or to refuse sexual relations with their husbands for fear of violent retaliation. Enactment of marital rape laws without enforcement, however, will not stop the spread of HIV and AIDS among married women. While Presbyterians have condemned the prevalent use of violence in patriarchal cultures, violence against women remains a hidden problem with great human and health-care costs.

Because they are less likely to be part of the formal labor market, women lack access to income, job security, and the benefits of social protection, including access to health care. Within the formal workforce, women often face challenges related to their lower status, discrimination and sexual harassment. They have to balance the demands of paid work and work at home, giving rise to work-related fatigue, infections, mental illness, and other problems. Yet, it is women who bear the responsibility for caring for children, the sick, and the elderly in most cultures.

Lessons can be learned from bold national initiatives that have sought to address social inequality and exclusion in ways that promote gender equality and women’s health. For example, Chile’s multisectoral and integrated approach to social protection for the poor includes a universal program for early child development. Chile Creece Contigo (Chile Grows with You) includes access to child care, education, and health services to help young children achieve their optimal physical, social, and emotional development, while enforcing the right of working mothers to nurse their babies with supportive employment.

3. Racism

Presbyterians have condemned the power of racism for decades: “People of good will have long recognized that eradicating the sin of racism from church and society is a high priority. It cannot be done without sacrifice. Experience has taught that people cannot leap from centuries of racial polarization into a new vision. It is a long journey that will require discernment, prayer, and worship based action.”

And yet, structural racism still plays a significant role in propagating the spread of HIV and AIDS. In urban areas, racism relegates racial minority groups into segregated neighborhoods of concentrated poverty lacking access to jobs, adequate education, secure housing, medical insurance, and health care. Black and Latino Americans are disproportionately affected by HIV and AIDS and that disparity has widened over time. Blacks account for more new HIV infections, AIDS cases, people estimated to be living with HIV disease, and HIV-related deaths than any other racial ethnic group in the U.S. Analysis of national household survey data found that 2 percent of Blacks in the U.S. were HIV positive, higher than any other group. The epidemic has had a disproportionate impact on Black women, youth, and men who have sex with men (MSM), and its impact varies across the country. Moreover, Blacks with HIV and AIDS may face greater barriers to accessing care than their White counterparts. For example, a variety of studies show that Blacks and Hispanics are less likely than Whites to receive certain diagnostic tests and medications.
For similar reasons HIV and AIDS has disproportionately affected the Hispanic/Latino American population. According to the CDC: “Hispanics/Latinos comprise 15 percent of the U.S. population but accounted for 17 percent of all new HIV infections occurring in the United States in 2006. During the same year, the rate of new HIV infections among Hispanics/Latinos was 2.5 times that of whites. In 2006, HIV and AIDS was the fourth leading cause of death among Hispanic/Latino men and women aged 35–44.” Furthermore, “the rate of new AIDS diagnoses among Hispanic/Latino men is three times that of white men, and the rate among Hispanic/Latina women is five times that of white women.”

Although many Latinos are Spanish speaking, there are language, dialect, and cultural differences that impact the effectiveness of public health messages.

Unintentional racism can also cause Latinos, Hispanics, Native Americans, Asians, and Pacific Islanders to be lost or hidden in the statistics or underreported in research. The diversity within the Asian and Pacific Islander population has made effectively reaching these communities and quantifying the pandemic difficult. “Although Asians and Pacific Islanders account for approximately 1 percent of the total number of HIV and AIDS cases” they are a population in which HIV and AIDS diagnoses are increasing—unlike the rest of the U.S. population. Native Americans and Alaska Natives also face similar issues of underreporting due to cultural diversity and dispersion between rural/reservation and urban settings. “...[When] population size is taken into account, this population in 2004 was ranked 3rd in rates of AIDS diagnoses, after African Americans and Hispanics. The rate of AIDS diagnoses for this group has been higher than that for whites since 1995.”

4. Homophobia

From the beginning of the epidemic, HIV and AIDS were associated with gay men. AIDS was called the gay plague, gay cancer, and Gay Related Immune Deficiency (GRID). As a result, there has been an enduring association between the stigma of HIV and AIDS and the stigma of homosexuality. Predominantly negative attitudes toward homosexuality have influenced people’s attitudes and behavior toward people with HIV in general, and gay and bisexual men in particular. As early as 1978, the PC(USA) stated: “Persons who manifest homosexual behavior must be treated with the profound respect and pastoral tenderness given to all people of God. There can be no place within the Christian faith for the response to homosexual persons of mingled contempt, hatred, and fear that is called homophobia.”

The association between HIV and AIDS and homosexuality has affected how governments and institutions have reacted (or, more accurately, failed to react promptly, adequately, and consistently) to HIV and AIDS. The issue of intimate partner violence within the gay community has been neglected and unacknowledged by most social institutions. The few studies that have been done on this growing problem indicate that violence among gay/lesbian couples is just as common as among heterosexual couples (with the added threat to those living with HIV and AIDS of the use of denied access to care as a weapon). As early as 1978, the Presbyterian church stated that homophobia is a sin. We continue to contend that homophobia is a sin and must be eradicated from our faith-based traditions.

5. Stigma, Prejudice, and Unjust Discrimination

Inequality affects people in society through the vehicles of stigma, prejudice, and unjust discrimination. The HIV-related stigma has been defined as, “a process of devaluation of people either living with or associated with HIV and AIDS.” Prejudice is an “unreasoned dislike, hostility, or antagonism” towards another. Discrimination makes distinctions between individuals, but when rooted in prejudice is unjust. Persons who are stigmatized and who suffer unjust discrimination are consequently often socially marginalized. Stigma, prejudice, unjust discrimination, and social marginalization represent forms of social power that further the risk and vulnerability to HIV and AIDS in several ways:

- Fear of stigma or discrimination can deter people from seeking testing thereby undermining prevention efforts. It can also deter those with HIV infection from seeking information or education, engaging in safe sex, disclosing their HIV status to sexual partners, seeking treatment, or following through with a treatment regimen.
- In some instances, national or local laws, such as immigration laws, discriminate against persons infected with HIV or who have AIDS. In the U.S. restrictions against the immigration of noncitizens, or travel by noncitizens, with HIV and AIDS will end in 2010.
- Work places, health-care settings, and voluntary associations (including churches) can be places of profound HIV-stigma, prejudice, and discrimination. For example, some health insurance may exclude HIV and AIDS, may charge a super-premium, or may deny insurance based on a preexisting condition such as HIV and AIDS is seen as a providing serious financial exposure. In some instances, physicians, nurses, and hospital staff have been shown to be agents of HIV-related stigma.
- Laws that criminalize injecting drug use, men having sex with men, and prostitution deter the persons involved from seeking testing or treatment and are a barrier to prevention and treatment.
- Housing discrimination can lead to further marginalization and homelessness both of which increase HIV risk and make treatment difficult for those who are infected. When a person does not have stable housing, they may engage in risky...
behaviors to ensure a place to sleep. People living with HIV and AIDS may be forced to move because of discriminatory practices or relegated to “affordable” housing that may interfere with their access to continuous care or drug assistance.68

- Laws against HIV-related discrimination or crimes against persons with HIV and AIDS are not always enforced.69
- Nongovernmental networks of persons advocating for those living with HIV and AIDS often lack any kind of meaningful financial or resource support.70

B. Social, Cultural, and Religious Barriers to Diagnosis and Treatment

There are cultural, traditional, ethnic, religious, and social norms and practices that affect attempts at prevention, diagnosis, and treatment and that foster the spread of HIV and AIDS. It is not within the scope of this report to do more than to name and briefly comment on some of the issues to which an HIV and AIDS competent church needs to be sensitive.

1. United States. Every nine and a half minutes, a person in the U.S. becomes infected with HIV.71 Yet, of the, 1.1 million people living with HIV in the U.S., one in five persons does not know they are infected. Why do people not know their status? Is it fear, apathy, or a combination of these and other factors?

The Kaiser Family Foundation conducted a survey in the spring of 2009 on public opinion about HIV and AIDS and found that most people, especially young adults, do not feel that they are at risk for HIV infection. People also reported hearing less about domestic HIV and AIDS now than five years ago. Concern about contracting HIV is reported to be higher in the African American community and has remained steady since 2000; yet, the concern of African American youth has dropped from 54 percent in 1997 to 40 percent in 2009.72 In a national culture that is dictated by trends, HIV has decreased in “popularity” since the early 1990s. However, there has not been a drastic improvement in the overall statistics, and the epidemic has become worse for certain populations including African American women, youth, young men of color who have sex with men, and Hispanics/Latinos.

It is this focus on risk instead of vulnerability, from both an individual and a public health perspective, that has been one of the barriers to increased HIV testing and diagnosis. Risk is defined as “the probability or likelihood that a person may become infected with HIV.” Vulnerability “results from a range of factors outside the control of the individual that reduce the ability of individuals and communities to avoid HIV risk.”73 Although there has been discussion about incorporating HIV tests into comprehensive health screening and care—allowing those at risk and those vulnerable to be tested—the predominant message has been to focus on testing populations who are at high or increased risk. While identifying and screening high risk groups provides important information related to public health trends, it may lead to a false sense of security for large segments of our population who do not fall into particular risk categories.

Cultural beliefs affect a population’s HIV risk. These include beliefs about sexuality, the body, women’s roles, and what is appropriate to discuss and with whom. Silence about sexuality, the body, matters of sex, and HIV and AIDS is a barrier in many cultures and subcultures in the U.S. The role of religion in open conversations about sexuality, sexuality education, and issues of HIV transmission may positively influence risk factors in the spread of HIV and AIDS.74

One of the major barriers to diagnosis for people of faith is the various debates about contraception and condom use. Often promoting condom use is seen as promoting sex; however, the issue is much more complex. The PC(USA) has strong policy on the efficacy of condom use in the prevention of transmitting HIV, but also must emphasize the need for broad use, including for married couples. For example, there are serodiscordant couples (one partner is HIV positive, the other is not) that must be encouraged to use condoms in order to prevent the spread of the virus to the HIV negative partner. These couples need support and guidance, especially when it comes to family planning. Although the phrase has become taboo, serodiscordant couples must truly plan to have children whether naturally, through in vitro fertilization/another biomedical method, or through adoption.75 The church and its leadership must be prepared to guide families through these difficult life choices, and promote healthy and safe relationships (including male and/or female condom use), instead of reinforcing gender roles. Promoting condom use is not about promoting sex, it is about promoting a healthy life; and by not advocating for the use of condoms within and outside of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), innocent people are put at risk.

2. Global

The following practices, which can be found in many cultures around the world, are highlighted because they increase the risk of HIV infection and contribute to the changing face of the HIV and AIDS pandemic. As the global migration of people increases, many nations face a growing presence of customs with which they are unfamiliar and which, perhaps, they find to be a violation of their own values.

a. Underage Female Marriage

The World Health Organization (WHO) notes that the incidence of HIV and AIDS among young females, specifically adolescent females in developing countries is growing at an alarming rate. Their 2004 report states:
Of substantial consequence, yet largely ignored, is the fact that the majority of sexually active girls aged 15–19 in developing countries are married, and these married adolescent girls tend to have higher rates of HIV infection than their sexually active, unmarried peers. Thus married adolescent girls not only represent a sizeable fraction of adolescents at risk, but they also experience some of the highest rates of HIV prevalence of any group.

The research of Clark and co-workers found that in Kenya and Zambia marriage greatly increases a young girl’s likelihood of becoming HIV seropositive. Their research finds that:

… early marriage increases coital frequency, decreases condom use, and virtually eliminates girls’ ability to abstain from sex. Moreover, husbands of married girls are about three times more likely to be HIV-positive than are boy friends of single girls. Although married girls are less likely than single girls to have multiple partners, this protective behavior may be outweighed by their greater exposure via unprotected sex with partners who have higher rates of infection. These results challenge commonly held assumptions about sex within marriage.

b. Female Genital Mutilation or Cutting

Currently there is some debate over which phrase should be used to describe this custom. However, it is estimated that an additional three million young females are subject to some form of cutting of their genitals each year. This practice is deeply rooted in culture and religion, including the Christian religion in some regions. The reasons for the practice are many and varied. Female genital mutilation or cutting is associated with a heightened risk of HIV infection because of the often unhygienic means by which the cutting is done. The resultant sewing, scarring, and risk of tissue tearing on penetration also increases the risk of contracting HIV.

c. Wife Inheritance

Wife or widow inheritance is “The union of a widow to a male relative of her deceased spouse, by which she becomes his wife and property along with the land and property from her husband’s death.” This East African practice began as a means for a community to care for its widows and served to protect those women who had lost their husband. The widow would not remarry. Her husband’s family would take responsibility for her and her children for meeting their needs for food, clothing, shelter, education, protection, and so forth. The responsibility would fall to a married male relative of her deceased husband (e.g., brother-in-law, cousin-in-law) who would take her into his home. There was a taboo against sex with the relative’s widow. Over time, however, this taboo fell and is seen to be a significant contributing factor to the spread of HIV in East Africa. If the widow’s husband had died of AIDS and she were seropositive, her “inheritor” would become infected, and would subsequently pass the infection to his own wife.

d. Widow Cleansing

Widow cleansing is “forced sex between a widow and a man compensated to have sex with her, which is thought to cleanse the widow of her dead husband’s spirit. It may also refer to a widow having sex with the male relative of her deceased husband.” As in widow inheritance, if a woman’s husband had died of AIDS and she were infected, HIV would be passed to the “cleanser” (sometimes a designated village cleanser or relative of her deceased husband) with whom she had sex and then from him to other women with whom he had sex (e.g., his wife) or other women whom he “cleansed.” This practice was seen as … a way to break with the past and move forward—as well as an attempt to establish a family’s ownership of the husband’s property, including his wife. It also prevents women from inheriting property that has been their family’s main source of support.

e. Infant/Virgin Rape

In some regions a prevailing myth is that sex with/rape of a virgin (a female child) or infant rape will cure one of HIV and AIDS.

f. Polygamy When the Husband Is HIV Positive

Polygamy can increase the risk of HIV transmission to all of the wives and potentially to the infants of breast-feeding wives.

g. Prohibitions Against Male Circumcision

Large clinical trials in Africa indicate that male circumcision can decrease the risk of men from becoming infected with HIV through heterosexual intercourse. In the face of compelling scientific evidence, the WHO/UNAIDS have called for an expansion of safe male circumcision practices. While approximately 30 percent of the world’s men are circumcised, worldwide there are non-circumcising societies, cultures, ethnicities, traditions, and religions that resist circumcision on cultural grounds, even for medical reasons.
C. Economic Forces

1. Biomedical Scientific Research: Searching for a Cure and Promoting Prevention

We are essentially faced with two options: to cure the patient and to prevent infection. The first, a cure, has remained elusive. HIV and AIDS differ from other viral infections, such as polio, in that it directly attacks the immune system itself, effectively damaging the body’s ability to fight the virus. The virus also has the ability to replicate and mutate very rapidly, developing drug resistance quickly, and to hide within human host cells, evading the immune system and drugs. In 1995, a new class of antiretroviral drugs (protease inhibitors) was introduced, followed by other drugs that attacked the virus in new ways and which were then used in combination therapy. These drugs have dramatically reduced mortality rates and prolonged life spans. But to date it has not been possible to find a drug that would kill every virus in the body of an infected individual, so that a course of treatment would be weeks or months, rather than a lifetime. At this point, there is no cure on the horizon.

Prevention, the second option, has been tackled from many different angles. There are a number of proven HIV-prevention and harm reduction strategies: behavior modification, condom use, antiretroviral treatment to prevent mother to baby HIV transmission, clean syringe and needle exchange for drug users, and screening of blood and blood products for transfusion. Although there is debate over the efficacy of male circumcision, large clinical trials in Africa indicate that male circumcision can help prevent men from becoming infected with HIV through heterosexual intercourse.

In the developing world and particularly among people who are poor everywhere, prevention becomes more complex. Access to health care and preventive education is extremely limited creating enormous challenges to the provision of appropriate information and education, rapid testing, expensive pharmaceuticals in complex combination therapy, monitoring of compliance and disease status, and adequate nutrition. Despite this complex array of issues, individuals, organizations, and programs, including the PC(USA) International Health and Development (IHD) ministry area, are engaged in heroic efforts to overcome these hurdles.

The National Institutes of Health has identified the priorities for research, and has allocated more than $3 billion toward various facets of research and training related to HIV and AIDS in 2010. A significant portion of this funding is directed at research—basic, clinical, translational, social, behavioral, and epidemiological. Such research is essential to overcome the HIV pandemic. It is critical that the church understand the importance of research in combating this pandemic, and that every means be used to advocate for increased funding of research on HIV and AIDS globally.

2. Pharmaceuticals

Now that people are living much longer lives with HIV and AIDS, it has become one of the most expensive chronic diseases. In the U.S., most HIV positive individuals can receive coverage and care through private insurance, Medicaid, or a state AIDS Drug Assistance Program (ADAP). The average cost of one HIV medication per month is $500 and can go as high as $2315 per month. Most people with HIV are on more than one medication at a time, so even with insurance or state programs, the out-of-pocket cost can still be high. There are also state differences in who may qualify for treatment and what drugs they can receive. For example, there are sixty-nine approved drugs on Kentucky’s ADAP drug list compared to 130 approved drugs on Indiana’s list. Indiana’s drug list includes three options for antinausea drugs (a frequent side-effect from antiviral medications) compared to only one option for ADAP qualifiers in Kentucky. In addition to such discrepancies, if a person living with HIV and AIDS wants to move to a different state, they may not be able to receive coverage for their medications, or due to paperwork, face discontinuity of care.

In developing countries, the issue is about getting appropriate treatments into countries in the first place. According to AVERTing HIV and AIDS (AVERT), an international HIV and AIDS charity, “the availability of cheap antiretroviral drugs has been instrumental in treatment scale-up for resource-poor settings hard hit by the AIDS epidemic. Four million people in low- and middle-income countries are currently receiving drugs to treat HIV and AIDS.” This would simply not have been possible without a reduction in the price of anti-retrovirals, and other strategies in which the U.S. Global Health Initiative has played a significant role. Despite significant advances, a number of problems related to the price of anti-AIDS drugs remain. Not all drugs to treat AIDS are available at a suitably cheap price for poor countries, meaning that many of the newer, more effective drugs are only available in the West. At a cost of $10,000–15,000 per person per year, these drugs are not only too expensive for the vast majority of infected people in resource poor countries, but, more often than not, are too expensive for those in developed countries.

It is an ethical imperative that life-saving medications be made available to developing countries at the lowest cost possible. These essential medications must then be given to patients, the majority of whom are impoverished, at no cost. Currently, only one third of the people who need antiretroviral therapy are receiving it. While some pharmaceutical companies provide Highly Active Antiretroviral (anti-HIV Therapy) (HAART) directly to developing countries at markedly reduced costs, these efforts have been inadequate. Companies have also provided drug formularies to generic companies in India to produce low-cost medications; however, quality control and international patent laws remain an issue.
The pharmaceutical industry is enormously and famously profitable. In 2002 the combined profits for the ten drug companies in the Fortune 500 ($35.9 billion) were more than the profits for all the other 490 businesses put together ($33.7 billion).\(^9\) Surely, this industry must assume greater responsibility for ensuring adequate treatment of all people infected with HIV throughout the world, from making low-cost medications available to pursuing more research related to the pediatric populations. The world simply cannot afford more HIV infections. Beyond the pure costs of drugs and related health care, the toll on individuals, families, communities, and entire nations is enormous.

V. Underreported U. S. Populations

While HIV and AIDS is a global pandemic, it continues to be a U.S. epidemic. The surveillance system in the U.S. is now considered one of the most complete with respect to infectious and communicable diseases, but it is not without blind spots. Problems with reporting point to issues of ethics and power that result in many populations and demographics being underreported and mischaracterized. Below we focus on the intersection of some of these populations and HIV and AIDS.

A. Demographic Groups

1. Native Americans

American Indians and Alaska Natives surveillance statistics are substantially less reliable for several reasons. These include incomplete surveillance data, non-reporting of data collected by Indian Health Services, racial misclassification and underreporting, and avoidance of testing because of concerns for confidentiality in a closed-community where one would likely be tested by friend, relative, or acquaintance in a reservation health facility.\(^98, 99, 100\)

2. Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders

According to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), “In recent years, the number of AIDS cases diagnosed among Asians and Pacific Islanders has increased steadily. Although Asians and Pacific Islanders account for approximately 1 percent of the total number of HIV and AIDS cases in the thirty-three states employing long-term, confidential name-based HIV reporting, the Asian and Pacific Islander population in the United States is growing.”\(^101\)

Among Asians and Pacific Islanders, there are many nationalities—Chinese, Filipinos, Koreans, Hawaiians, Indians, Japanese, Samoans, Vietnamese, and others—many cultural factors, much socioeconomic diversity, and more than one hundred languages and dialects. Because many Asians and Pacific Islanders living in the United States are foreign-born, they may experience cultural and language barriers to receiving public health messages. Additionally, many health surveys are administered only in English (and perhaps Spanish), a situation that may cause miscommunication or exclude Asians and Pacific Islanders who do not speak English from demographic statistics. In addition, these persons may also be mis-categorized or even missed in statistical counts so that their demographics are skewed.

3. Transgender, Transsexuals, Lesbian Communities

Statistics for HIV and AIDS are likewise unreliable for transgendered people who are likely greatly under-counted because they live their lives across the gender spectrum and may self-identify as female, male, trans-women or trans-men, non-operative transsexuals, transvestites, or cross-dressers, among others.\(^102\) Thus tracking MTF’s (Males-to-Females) by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) HIV classification system has failed with MTFs showing up as either men who have sex with men or heterosexual women. Researchers maintain that transgender-specific categories need to be included on all federal and local data collection forms. In spite of the lack of a large volume of definitive research, it is believed that HIV prevalence among trans-women is higher than estimates from studies with gay men, as well as injection drug users of the same age.\(^103\)

Transphobia is blamed for the lack of reporting, study, research, and care given to the MTF population. As a result of pervasive transphobia, transgenders are denied access to social support, housing, employment, healthcare, education, and other resources, in addition to a lack of inclusion and accurate demographic reporting.\(^104\)

There is very little medical documentation of woman-to-woman sexual transmission of AIDS. However, according to the Lesbian AIDS Project of the Gay Men’s Health Crisis (GMHC), a significant number of women who identify primarily as lesbians have contracted AIDS through intravenous drug use or heterosexual sex.\(^105\) The HIV and AIDS cases related to WSW (Women who have Sex with Women) are the results of engaging in high-risk behaviors that place them at risk for HIV transmission. “These risks are exacerbated by racial disparities in health care access, as well as by homophobia, sexism, and stigma,” said Marjorie J. Hill, chief executive officer of GMHC. “We seek to clarify confusion regarding lesbians and WSW risk in order to create visibility for this marginalized subpopulation of women.”\(^106\)

4. HIV and AIDS in Rural America

Stigma is a serious problem for people with HIV and AIDS in all communities, but particularly in rural areas. According to the Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex, Gender and Reproduction, “people with HIV and AIDS in rural communities carry an extra burden with their disease in that many are stigmatized as unworthy of community support and adequate health care.\textsuperscript{107} People diagnosed with AIDS who live in rural areas now account for 8 percent of all cases nationwide, up from 5 percent in 1996. Despite these growing numbers, most AIDS control strategies have focused on urban communities.\textsuperscript{108} Further, it must be noted that many people living with HIV and AIDS in rural communities struggle with access to adequate medical treatment and services as result of a serious shortages in doctors, nurses, dentists, and the overall healthcare workforce.

B. \textit{HIV and AIDS in Prisons and Jails}

The Joint United Nations Programme on HIV and AIDS (UNAIDS) notes that “in most countries around the world HIV prevalence is higher among prisoners than in the general population.”\textsuperscript{109} Incarcerated individuals face a peculiar situation in that their rights and actions are limited; however, risk behaviors for HIV infection and transmission still occur in detention. Prisoners may lack access to protective measures, be subject to violent conditions, including rape, and have inadequate health services.\textsuperscript{110} In some countries, lack of knowledge about HIV transmission also perpetuates the problem.

More than 2.2 million persons are in U.S. prisons where HIV and AIDS is up to five times more prevalent than in the general population.\textsuperscript{111} Although inmates comprise only 0.8 percent of the U.S. population, it is estimated that 20–26 percent of those with HIV infection pass through a correctional facility each year.\textsuperscript{112} Many with HIV and AIDS are addicted to illicit drugs and contracted HIV prior to incarceration through needle sharing, sex trading, or unprotected sex with multiple partners. In fact, the U.S. National Commission on AIDS noted that “policies that mandate confinement for drug-related offenses primarily are responsible for ... dramatic increases in imprisonment.”\textsuperscript{113, 114, 115} Lawrence Greenfeld at the Bureau of Justice found that one in four inmates in the system has engaged in some form of substance abuse.\textsuperscript{116} Many had engaged in intravenous drug use,\textsuperscript{117} the second most prevalent mode of HIV transmission.

In the Mahon focus group study, inmates reported that both men and women engage in a range of sexual behaviors between prisoners as well as prisoners and guards.\textsuperscript{118} Although there has been debate over prisoners’ rights, and whether providing condoms and clean needles promotes sexual activity and drug use, it is ultimately the community that suffers when these individuals return home and spread the virus. Exposure to HIV and AIDS infection should not be used as a deterrent or form of punishment for engaging in prohibited sexual behavior while incarcerated. In some facilities, HIV counseling, testing, and partner notification programs have been implemented for adults. But very few facilities make available the means for reducing the risk by distributing condoms, dental dams, exchanging needles, or providing bleach for cleaning needles. Despite overwhelming evidence that condom use prevents the transmission of HIV, U.S. prison officials continue to limit the availability of condoms. The H.R. 1429, the “Stop AIDS in Prison” Act, introduced in the current Congress by Representative Maxine Waters, would require the Bureau of Prisons to provide non-mandatory HIV tests of all Federal prison inmates upon entering prison and being released from prison, prevention education, and comprehensive treatment for those who test positive.\textsuperscript{119}

C. \textit{U.S. Military Personnel}

1. \textit{Active U.S. Military Personnel}

In 2008, 1.445 million persons were on active duty in the U.S. military: Army, Navy, Marines, Air Force, and Coast Guard. Another 839,000 are in the selected Armed Forces, National Guard and Reserves.\textsuperscript{120} To begin with, it should be noted that the prevalence of HIV infection among U.S. military personnel is lower than that of the general population for three reasons: “homosexual men and male and female intravenous-drug users are underrepresented in military personnel. Second, persons with hemophilia are not medically eligible for military service. Third, seropositive military recruit applicants are denied enlistment.”\textsuperscript{121} Yet, those in the active military are confronted by the HIV and AIDS pandemic in unique ways. A 1996 study reported that the U.S. Army found a behaviorally related increase in vulnerability to HIV infection among our military personnel. “Risk factors include high rates of sexual partner change, elevated rates of STD, relatively low rates of condom use with prostitutes and other “casual” partners, and significant mixing between groups having high- and low-risk behavior patterns, as well as higher and lower HIV prevalence.”\textsuperscript{122} The military has responded with an aggressive testing program. Active duty U.S. military personnel have been tested for HIV infection since 1986. Since 2004, the U.S. military has required HIV testing of all military personnel every two years.\textsuperscript{123}

Deployment offers other risks. Information regarding the level of risk of HIV exposure in areas of deployments as well as in areas of future deployments is not always available. While the military maintains its own blood supplies, it must rely upon warm blood transfusions or local supplies when devastating circumstances outstrip their supply, heightening the risk of HIV infected transfusion.\textsuperscript{124} Another issue revolves around continued HIV testing and assessment of HIV subtypes infecting active forces and overseas populations during foreign deployments; such monitoring is essential to ensuring adequate treatment, care, and research.\textsuperscript{125} An HIV test is now uniformly required at least every two years.\textsuperscript{126} This is frequent enough to intervene between infection and the progression to AIDS, but may not be frequent enough to track HIV exposure. An issue affecting both active military and veterans is the correlation between Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) and high-risk behaviors such as substance abuse. Post Traumatic Stress Disorder and substance abuse working in tandem may lead to impaired decision-making thereby creating the potential for increased exposure to HIV and other blood borne pathogens.\textsuperscript{127}

2. \textit{U.S. Military Veterans}

As the country’s largest provider of HIV-related care, the Veteran’s Health Administration (VHA), through a network of hospitals and clinics, has enabled many HIV-positive veterans to afford healthcare and obtain regular treatment. However, serious concerns regarding the adequacy of medical care and HIV testing at the Veterans Affairs (VA) hospitals and clinics have arisen.\textsuperscript{128} For instance, following positive tests of veterans for HIV and Hepatitis B and C, Congress and the Department of Veterans Affairs launched a full-scale investigation into the adequacy of care provided by three southeastern VA hospitals that potentially put thousands of veterans at risk of infection due to exposure to unsterilized medical equipment used in colonoscopies and other medical procedures.\textsuperscript{129} Further, in the face of an ever-increasing population with various and complex physical disabilities, as well as often facing “challenges of substance abuse, mental health problems, and financial issues,” it is clear that the VA lacks sufficient resources and personnel—specifically doctors, nurses, chaplains, counselors, and social workers—to meet the diverse and various physical, mental, and emotional needs of veterans.\textsuperscript{130}

Regarding HIV testing, the VA currently tests only those patients who request HIV testing in writing, those receiving care for “intravenous drug abuse and diseases associated with HIV” or are “otherwise at high risk for HIV infection.”\textsuperscript{131} Recognizing that the HIV-positive rate in veterans is greater than the general population\textsuperscript{132} and that too many veterans are leaving VA care without knowing they are HIV positive, advocates and political officials have worked tirelessly to change the law requiring the VA to offer pre-test counseling and a signature consent, which further creates barriers and stigma around testing. Accordingly, in reevaluating testing policies, the CDC has strongly encouraged the VA to recognize that “general consent for medical care should be considered sufficient to encompass consent for HIV testing.”\textsuperscript{133}

VI. The Dynamics of Power and the Persistence of HIV and AIDS

As new methods of prevention and treatment are discovered and developed, we must not add them to old patched wineskins. A truly comprehensive approach to the root causes and social determinants of HIV and AIDS risk and vulnerability requires an entirely new wineskin: an examination of the disparities in power that perpetuate those social determinants nationally and internationally. It also requires that we ask if we in any direct or indirect way have contributed to reinforcing poverty and its consequences. Unmasking sin and idolatries in society and the church requires political will, moral commitment, the courage of our faith convictions, and the illumination and aid of the Holy Spirit.

The surpassing causes of increased risk and vulnerability to HIV and AIDS are poverty, gender inequality, human rights violations, and the constellation of stigma, prejudice, unjust discrimination, and social marginalization with its attendant disenfranchisement. The commonality between and among all these causes is the unequal distribution of power. Our failure to address these inequalities will lead to the failure of our attempts to address the incidence and effects of HIV and AIDS. A few demonstrative examples are useful here:

- Legal and undocumented immigration and ethnic and religious conflicts around the world have led to the marginalization of peoples in many countries. Those with power address the needs of the majority or empowered population. Those relegated to lower social standing are excluded from economic and social participation, as well as from educational and health resources. This has led to their suffering systematized poverty and discrimination, and prejudice holds them there. These conditions substantially increase the risk and vulnerability to HIV and AIDS of these communities. Given their social standing, the stigma associated with HIV and AIDS often further leads these communities to become the focus of blame for the presence of the virus in the society, further separating them from the resources that would reduce their vulnerability.

- International agencies that act in the name of assistance, but often with greater global agendas, bear responsibility for using their power in ways that exacerbate the conditions in which HIV and AIDS spreads. For example, structural adjustment policies required of borrowing countries mandated rapid reductions in government expenditures forcing governments to undertake cuts in the most immediately available categories, usually social expenditures on health, sanitation, education, water delivery systems and purification, welfare, and more. These policies, with their dramatic short-run impacts on employment and expenditures, rapidly created the conditions for the spread of the disease. For example, cuts to health care in response to structural adjustment policies have been shown to be correlated with a rise in HIV and AIDS and mycobacterium tuberculosis (MTb).\textsuperscript{134}

- In addition to the immediate impacts on employment, health, and poverty, these cuts in social expenditures have had profoundly gendered effects. The burden of providing for health, sanitation, and welfare (regarded as “women’s work”) has fallen disproportionately on women, often women already living in abject poverty. As jobs have moved into urban areas, rural men have left for cities, leaving women and children behind to fend for themselves. Already suffering from typically unequal sexual power relations that increase their risk and vulnerability, these women have also borne this increased vulnerability through their economic standing. This has likewise increased the vulnerability of children to disease, lack of education, and food insecurity.\textsuperscript{135}
Further, these international organizations insisted on trade adjustment, including the reduction of trade barriers, enhancements in the rights of foreign investors, market deregulation, and privatization. The PC(USA) has addressed these issues in several of its recent policies, including Hope for a Global Future (1996) and Resolution on Just Globalization (2006). The imposition of these trade rules left developing countries vulnerable both domestically and internationally. Their bargaining position was severely compromised with regard to their ability to protect their share of economic gains. This has led to the long-run institutionalization of economic disparities, the entrenchment of foreign business interests at highly unfavorable terms, and the restructuring of production toward export markets and away from the provision of domestic consumption goods. Studies confirm that these conditions create a moderate-term increase in vulnerability to HIV and AIDS.\textsuperscript{136, 137, 138}

Future globalization policies must include explicit consideration of their impact on vulnerable groups and the costs of increasing HIV and AIDS risk and vulnerability among these groups. Briefly, such areas of concern include the following.

- The current structure of international intellectual property rights. Literally holding the power of life and death, these fiduciary relationships are the shareholders of firms, not to those most at risk and vulnerable to the disease.

- Current agricultural policies have resulted in a worldwide growth of urban poverty and slums by shifting jobs to urban areas. Men, who seek jobs in the cities leaving their families behind, provide conditions where sex trade—and HIV infection—may flourish. Poor women in urban areas are deeply affected as they may be unable to secure any work other than that provided by participation in the sex trade in these cities, and engage in “survival sex.” This circular migration of men and women for economic reasons has compounded the spread of HIV infection as people move from their rural family setting to urban work settings, and back, moving from spousal to non-spousal partners and back to spousal sexual partners increasing the risk and vulnerability of wives to contracting HIV infection from their husband.

- Food aid policies. As Christians we are enjoined to “feed the hungry.” It seems counterintuitive to say that utilizing our crop surplus to support “food aid” internationally (not referring to emergency relief) can harm those whom we would wish to help. Yet, it can. Shipping food to developing nations that is free or below market price, undercuts that nation’s farmers. They cannot compete and are driven out of work, off their farms, and into poverty.\textsuperscript{139} Alternatively, they may be driven to produce stigmatized or unlawful alternative cash crops such as opium poppies or khat.\textsuperscript{140}

Reducing these power differentials requires renunciation, reconciliation, and forgiveness in order to halt the advance of a common enemy, a universal foe that threatens every group in society. Some differentials exist because of individual and social avarice, greed, and sin. Freedom from these requires repentance, or lacking that, resistance to, and the condemnation and rejection of, those who would withhold life from others to enrich and empower themselves. Some disparities of power exist because of the economic success of some through effective effort at creating value. Overcoming these requires humility, compassion, and love, a choice by the powerful to not use power for their own advantage, but to the advantage of those affected by HIV and AIDS.

Paul Farmer writes, “… we must remember that effacing the inequality of outcomes is not the same as eliminating the underlying forces of inequality itself.” He goes on to quote economist, Amartya Sen: “when we assess inequalities across the world in being able to avoid preventable morbidity or escapable hunger, or premature mortality, we are not merely examining differences in well-being, but also in the basic freedoms that we value and cherish.”\textsuperscript{141} “In a very real way, inequality itself constitutes our modern plague.”\textsuperscript{142}

The new wineskin that must be sewn is to examine the ways in which we knowingly or unknowingly participate, directly and indirectly, in the maintenance of our own power and in the perpetuation of a differential of power that keeps us at the center of abundance and power and others at the margins amidst poverty, powerlessness, and the deadly advance of HIV and AIDS.

VII. Becoming an HIV and AIDS Competent Church

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has long affirmed the need for ecumenical and interfaith dialogue and collaboration (\textit{Book of Order}, G-15.0101-G-15.0104).\textsuperscript{143} In the face of enormous injustice, immense suffering, and the death of millions of God’s children, God calls the PC(USA) to partner collaboratively with other churches and faith communities to respond to the HIV and AIDS pandemic with prophetic vision, faithful imagination, just action, and loving compassion. Since 2008, the World Council of Churches (WCC) has campaigned to promote “HIV-competent churches.” In working systemically, particular HIV-competent churches are called to develop the institutional and theological capacity as well as leadership and resources needed to respond to the pandemic. Going beyond HIV-competent churches, we must be an HIV-competent denomination. The PC(USA) as a whole is challenged to learn from, partner with, and strategically collaborate with other churches, faith communities, governmental, business, and civil organizations to comprehensively address the HIV and AIDS pandemic (\textit{Book of Order}, G-15.0105).

The World Council of Churches (WCC) defines “an ‘HIV competent church’ as a church that has first developed an \textit{inner competence} through internalization of the risks, impacts and consequences and has accepted the responsibility and imperative to respond appropriately and compassionately. In order to progress to outer competence, there is need for \textit{leadership}, knowledge and resources. Outer competence involves building theological and institutional capacity in a socially relevant, inclusive, sustainable and collaborative way that reduces the spread of HIV, improves the lives of the infected and affected, mitigates the impact of HIV and ultimately restores hope and dignity” [italics in the original].

Creating a denomination that is HIV and AIDS competent is a big challenge, but a great necessity. And it should be noted that the specific responses for HIV competent churches will vary from church to church and denomination to denomination. Presbyterians must ask themselves:

- “Do I know enough about HIV and AIDS to make informed decisions and help my local congregation develop the educational programs and outreach ministries that will make this world a better place for people living with HIV and AIDS?” This harkens back to the earlier question posed in this report, “Do those with HIV and AIDS delight in the work and witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) related to our HIV and AIDS policies and programs?”
- What are the best practices for individuals, churches, and denominations that are competent in issues related to HIV and AIDS? For Presbyterians this knowledge comes from study, research and policy formation, hands-on experience, and faith in God’s love to bring hope and to heal.
- How are our common assumptions and practices unintentionally, even indirectly, helping to maintain unjust structures of poverty, racism, sexism, homophobia, stigma, and discrimination?

The World Council of Churches manual (WCC) titled, Beacons of Hope: HIV Competent Churches a Framework for Action, spells out several benchmarks for competency related to the HIV and AIDS pandemic, including:

1. Pastoral Care

Encouraging neighborhood congregations to engage in systems that ensure home visits, opportunities for fellowship, marriage enhancement programs, pre- and post-marriage counseling and safe places for people living with HIV to frequent are suggested, lifting up widows, widowers, and single parents as needing particular attention.

2. Preaching

The preaching of worthy and well-informed sermons on the HIV pandemic and creating worship services with liturgies, prayers, and orders of worship that include silence, contemplation, words, songs, dances, and practices that celebrate life, love, and the hope that faith brings to all of life’s struggles need also to be lifted up, including prayers for those living with HIV and AIDS.

3. Education

Another characteristic of HIV competent denominations is the development of prevention materials designed to keep people safe and HIV-free. Creating sexually healthy congregations; producing sexuality education curriculum that is medically accurate, biologically sound, and culturally sensitive. Local congregations are encouraged to hold frank discussions about the social factors leading to creating risk and vulnerability for HIV infection such as the use of condoms, clean needles and syringes. Individually and collectively dealing with high-risk cultural practices and reaching out to those who are at risk are all critical components of HIV competency.

Offering hands-on care to folks living with HIV and AIDS in our local churches and neighboring communities and identifying youth who are at risk, infected, or affected by HIV, are also called for in churches that are HIV competent. The critical aspect of treatment, availability of clinics, and the staggering cost of HIV and AIDS medicines are also of concern to HIV competent churches. The best practices for an HIV competent pastor might include the ability to refer a pregnant woman and her spouse to a neighborhood clinic for screening and other services. An HIV competent congregation might take on the responsibility for dispensing medications or creating a space for HIV testing, and an HIV competent denomination would indeed decry through its social witness policies drug manufacturers making gross profits from the manufacturing of antiretroviral drugs for treating AIDS.

The PC(USA) has developed through its social witness policy much of the criteria found in the WCC document even though the Beacon of Hope manual is not specific to the PC(USA). Presbyterian churches and agencies have been faithfully responding to the HIV and AIDS pandemic since the early 1980s. Christian education and youth group curriculum has been developed. Presbyterian Women (PW) at all levels of the church have responded through education, prayer, Bible study, and mission work to the HIV and AIDS pandemic globally. Local congregations have engaged in hands-on ministry with people living with AIDS and their families. The PC(USA) has affianced meaningfully and respectfully with other denominations and world faiths to create policies and programs that address HIV and AIDS globally. These are all benchmarks of an HIV and AIDS competent church.

4. To Become an HIV and AIDS Competent PC(USA): Compassionate Care and Prophetic Witness

It will be critical for the PC(USA) to develop coherent criteria for Presbyterian HIV competent local congregations in the form of a study guide for implementing these best practices, instilling the inner competencies of individual church folk, and then facilitating and leading to the institutional and outer competency required to defeat this disease. A denomination that recognizes and accepts the imperatives of HIV for itself, its individual members, and its congregations has the knowledge, willingness, and experience to respond in an inclusive, effective, and prophetic manner. In addition, an HIV and AIDS competent church goes to toe to toe with the powers and principalities of poverty, discrimination, stigma, and violence. It does not shy away from controversial issues. It recognizes the role of the church in the Reformed tradition to challenge and reform social structures. It accepts the unique role that it can play, not only in bringing help, but strong policies; offering prayer, and compassionate action; doing what is right, and proclaiming a prophetic witness.

VIII. Conclusion

Our foundational values compel us to make the HIV and AIDS pandemic one of our highest priorities as a denomination. In our recommendations, not only do we lift up and ask to continue the excellent work that has been carried out in our existing PC(USA) social witness policy, but we prophetically also extend it to take much more seriously the social, institutional, and economic factors that come more fully under the ethical scrutiny of the gospel. This includes more rigorously pursuing the underlying issues of poverty. We must continue to advocate that discrimination on the bases of gender, race, class, and/or sexual orientation be highlighted as antithetical to the gospel witness and that programs that challenge these discriminatory forces be well-funded, especially in the context of HIV and AIDS education. We cannot ignore the structural problems that exacerbate HIV and AIDS among the underreported and those who are incarcerated. It means evaluating drug company profits as they affect access to treatment for persons living with HIV and AIDS. Our challenge is to keep people living with HIV and AIDS central in our focus, to create life-giving communities of faith in our own neighborhoods while avoiding a national myopia that privileges Western needs over those of other regions. Too often social policy is focused on the visible rather than the vulnerable—the viable rather than the vanquished. Our challenge is to take seriously the biblical mandate to become a community that cares for the interests of the most vulnerable—to cause them to rejoice and to vindicate God’s name by placing their interests at the center of our focus. Our success will be measured not by the amount of money we amass or by the amount of notoriety we may receive on behalf of our brothers and sisters living with HIV and AIDS, but rather by the extent to which those whom HIV and AIDS have relegated to the social, political, or economic margins now gain honor, dignity, and fullness of life.

Appendix A

Two Biblical Questions

When Christians face living with HIV and AIDS, there are two questions they may ask of the Bible: (1) Are the biblical purity codes regarding blood pertinent to persons living with HIV and AIDS? (2) Is there a parallel with leprosy (in Hebrew, tzara’at)? The answer to both is, decidedly, “No.” Many, for instance, point to the woman with the hemorrhage of blood in Mark 5:25–34 in order to claim that Jesus has overruled purity codes from the Bible. Sadly, this has resulted from a very real misunderstanding about biblical law in general and the purity codes specifically. First of all, in Mark 5, we are never told whether the woman’s hemorrhage was menstrual or whether it came from another part of her body, which would not convey impurity. Secondly, we are told in Leviticus 15:11 that, by washing her hands, the woman would not have conveyed ritual impurity to those she touched. Moreover, Mark mentions “the crowd pressing in” upon Jesus and, we can assume, upon the woman as well (v. 31). Clearly, they were not concerned about impurity. Finally, Jesus never mentions impurity in the story. Instead, the story is about healing and wholeness. Jesus, in healing her, focused only on her health and freedom from affliction. So for those persons living with HIV and AIDS, the message of Mark 5 is a message of healing. It is not one that implies impurity associated with blood.150

Additionally, to make explicit a connection between persons living with HIV and AIDS, which is a blood-borne virus, on the one hand, and those suffering from various discharges in Leviticus, on the other, carries with it a whole host of problems—biomedical, cultural, literary, and interpretive.151 We are saddled with a long history within Christianity of exaggerating the social effects of biblical law in Jesus’ day and of imagining social stigma when there was none.152 The message of Mark 5 is that God desires healing and wholeness for God’s people, pure and simple.

Likewise, those living with HIV and AIDS have no reason to draw a parallel between their situation and the ancient biblical condition of leprosy, or tzara’at. First, to make a comparison with HIV and AIDS is to import a whole host of inappropriate or mistaken assumptions into the conversation.153 Secondly, tzara’at had to do with ritual and cultic exclusion from the Temple, an issue that it is far from clear would have been of great concern in distant Galilee, in the gospels, and certainly of no concern today. Moreover, to raise the issue, even if to do so in the context of encouraging people to embrace our sisters and brothers living with HIV and AIDS, is to imply an association between our sisters and brothers and the ancient stigma of leprosy—an association that is not warranted in the biomedical evidence, the symptoms, or the biblical scholarship. Hence, in trying to argue against that stigma, we introduce an association in people’s minds that is clearly not warranted. Peter said it well in Acts 10:28, “God has shown me that I should not call anyone profane or unclean.”

Appendix B

Gender Inequality and the Persistence of AIDS

Structural, that is legal, inequalities as well as those of custom and culture also raise risk and vulnerability. Since the 1980s, the largest rise in HIV and AIDS has occurred among women and adolescent girls. In contrast to the myth of “safety in marriage,” it has been said for many women around the world, the greatest risk for HIV infection is marital sex. Gender inequality, that is, a power differential between men and women, puts women at particular risk of HIV infection in some very specific ways.
• Sociocultural norms often restrict women’s access to information about sex and reproduction. Even when women, including married women, have access to information and condoms, women cannot negotiate their conditions of sex: “gender norms that prescribe unequal and more passive role for women in sexual decision making undermine women’s autonomy, expose them to sexual coercion, and prevent them from insisting on abstinence or condom use by their male partners.”\(^\text{154}\) Paul Farmer notes “… risk of acquiring HIV does not depend on knowledge of how the virus is transmitted, but rather on the freedom to make decisions. Poverty is the great limiting factor of freedom indeed, gender inequality and poverty are far more important contributors to HIV risk than is ignorance of modes of transmission or ‘cultural beliefs’ about HIV.”\(^\text{155}\)

• In addition to being unable to demand condom use from her partner, wives in serodiscordant couples often have no access to a husband’s screening results and are unable to protect themselves from infection.

• In many low- and middle-income nations, women and girls are systematically restricted in access to general education, securing their continuing dependence upon men for their economic and general welfare, including access to health and medical resources. Employment external to the home may be culturally or legally proscribed.

• In some regions a prevailing myth is that sex with/rape of a virgin (young girl) will cure one with HIV and AIDS.

• Traditional cultural norms for males often expect and accept or condone early and multiple sexual involvement, multiple contemporaneous sexual partners, multiple marriages, extramarital sex, drug and alcohol use, and gender violence including wife beating. “Widespread violence against women not only represents a global human rights crisis but also contributes to women’s vulnerability to HIV.”\(^\text{156}\) These male gender norms are not limited to low- and middle-income nations as the sex trade that arises around U.S. military bases in other nations gives evidence.

• In many nations, male dominance and the subordination of women is structural and codified in law.

• In some nations, neither budget nor policy, nor custom, allow for women’s full and free access to HIV preventive services.

• Rape of women remains a tool of warfare.

The highest concentration of people living with HIV/AIDS are in the Caribbean and Atlantic Coast (Haiti, Honduras, and Guyana being the highest) with lower rates in non-coastal countries and areas. Colombia, Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru, and Venezuela have a total population of approximately 120 million people with an estimate of 400,000 people living with HIV. It is estimated that of the 64 million people living in the southern region of Latin America consisting of Argentina, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay, approximately 180,000 were living with HIV as of 2005. Additionally, due to social taboos around sexually-related issues in Latin America, infection rates among sex workers and MSM populations are scattered and underreported.

28. Francisco I. Bastos, et. al. For example, in El Salvador women are infected with HIV at a ratio of 1.5 times that of their male counterparts.

Ukraine bears the brunt of the epidemic with 1.6 percent of Ukrainians infected, most of whom are injection drug users as well as sex workers and their sexual partners. HIV prevalence among sex workers ranges from 4 percent in the capital, Kiev, to 24 percent in Donetsk, and 27 percent in Mikolayev.

80. Obaid, Thoraya Ahmed. Promoting Gender Equality: Frequently Asked Questions on Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting. NY: United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA). http://www.unfpa.org/gender/practices2.htm/top. According to Obaid, the reasons for this practice are varied, including “… Psychosexual reasons: FGM/FGC is carried out as a means to control women’s sexuality (which is argued to be insatiable if parts of the genitalia, especially the clitoris, are not removed). It is thought to ensure virginity before and fidelity after marriage and/or to increase male sexual pleasure … . Sociocultural and Cultural reasons: FGM/FGC is seen as part of a girl’s initiation into womanhood and as an intrinsic part of a community’s cultural heritage/tradition. Various myths exist about female genitalia (e.g. that if uncircumcised the clitoris will grow to the size of a penis; FGM/FGC would enhance fertility or promote child survival, etc) and these serve to perpetuate the practice … . Hygiene and aesthetic reasons: In some communities, the external female genitalia are considered dirty and ugly and are removed ostensibly to promote hygiene and aesthetic appeal … . Religious reasons: Although FGM/FGC is not sanctioned by either Islam nor by Christianity, supposed religious prescripts (e.g. the mention of ‘Sunna’ in the Koran) are often used to justify the practice … . Socioeconomic factors: In many communities, FGM/FGC is a prerequisite for marriage. Where women are largely dependent on men, economic necessity can be a major determinant to undergo the procedure. FGM/FGC sometimes is a prerequisite for the right to inherit. FGM/FGC may also be a major income source for practitioners.” See also: www.unfpa.org/adolescents/gender.htm. ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 19-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 19-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 19-05 be approved.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns concurs with the recommendations of Item 19-05 and offers these comments:

- An inordinate number of racial ethnic people are affected by the aids pandemic.
- Churches in the community could and would be encouraged to offer or house programs to educate, test, counsel, serve, and become outpatient treatment centers for the victims.
- Church members would be encouraged to volunteer as helpers, aids, and, in some instances, testers and educators.
- Encourage churches and people to become support centers and leaders for those living with HIV/AIDS.
- Equip churches and members to move beyond service to attack root causes of the pandemic.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 19-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 19-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with Item 19-05 and advises that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve this overture.

Rationale

The report from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), Becoming an HIV and AIDS Competent Church: Prophetic Witness and Compassionate Action, clearly and authoritatively summarizes many issues for the church, our country, and the world related to the pandemic of HIV and AIDS.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns supports the report and emphasizes the incredible effect the disease has begun to have on women. According to the Well Project, many women are undiagnosed, or not in care, and UNAIDS (Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS) estimates that women accounted for half of the estimated 33 million HIV-positive people in the world in 2007.1 In the United States, HIV has hit the African American and Hispanic communities hard. They make up 25 percent of the U.S. female population, yet accounted for 82 percent of all female HIV/AIDS cases in the U.S. in 2006.2 In a study in India, almost 90 percent of the HIV-positive women interviewed were infected by their husbands.3 Seventy-six percent of African American women in the U.S. were infected by heterosexual sex.4

Women generally have a faster disease progression and are more likely than men to develop both AIDS and bacterial pneumonia. They have more care-giving responsibilities and are vulnerable economically. Addressing women’s needs for HIV prevention, treatment, and care is vital for curbing the epidemic.

On Full Access to HIV/AIDS Prevention and Treatment Services in U.S. Correctional Facilities—From the Presbytery of Missouri River Valley.

The Presbytery of the Missouri River Valley respectfully overtures the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send a letter to President Barack Obama that urges the Department of Justice to implement comprehensive HIV prevention and treatment services in all Federal prisons;

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to send a letter to all fifty governors urging the implementation of comprehensive HIV prevention and treatment services in all state prisons and county correctional facilities; and

3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to allocate the resources necessary for the Washington Office, in partnership with other programs, to host a briefing for a grassroots audience that addresses the changing face of HIV/AIDS in America, and underscores the need for comprehensive HIV/AIDS prevention and treatment services in all correctional facilities.

[Financial Implications: 2010: $0; 2011: $36,000; 2012: $0 (Unrestricted—GAMC)]

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) continues to empower its congregations to respond to the changing face of HIV/AIDS in communities with acts of compassion and justice. In 2002, the United Nations office of the church and the Office of International Health Ministries co-hosted a conference that addressed the international dimensions of the HIV/AIDS pandemic. It is time for a follow-up educational opportunity that focuses on the changing face of HIV/AIDS in the United States. It was a wake up call for many Americans when the media reported that the HIV infection rate in our nation’s capital of 3 percent was comparable to some sub-Saharan African countries. If we are to effectively confront the domestic HIV/AIDS crisis, we need to improve the health care systems in our correctional facilities. Far too many prisoners do not receive access to comprehensive HIV/AIDS prevention, testing, and treatment.

The United States reached a painful milestone in 2004 when the number of Americans behind bars surpassed the number of American family-owned farms (2.1 million).¹ There continues to be a disproportionate number of African Americans in our correctional facilities (42 percent of prison population versus 13 percent of the general population).² The HIV infection rate in our prisons is 2.5 times greater than the general population.³ These demographics help explain the alarming increase of HIV infections rates in our African American communities.

Throughout incarceration and upon release, HIV testing and treatment must be an integral component of the correctional healthcare services. Several Supreme Court rulings have made it clear that constitutionally, when someone is incarcerated, the respective government agency is required to provide adequate healthcare. In 2009, the Georgia legislature set a new precedent by mandating that all state prisoners are to be afforded HIV prevention and treatment services.⁴ The call from Micah to seek justice, love kindness, and walk humbly requires that we respond to the changing face of HIV/AIDS in America. This should include comprehensive HIV/AIDS prevention and treatment services for all prisoners. Access to these services is a key variable in efforts to reduce the HIV infection rates in African American and Latino communities, where thousands of prisoners are released each year.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 19-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 19-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 19-06 be approved.
Rationale

The ACREC agrees with Human Rights Watch that a catastrophic result of “the war on drugs” is the huge growth in the number of inmates who are incarcerated for nonviolent crimes. As the overture states, a disproportionate number of these inmates are African American. This fact also applies to the Hispanic community. As more and more people are arrested for drug-related offenses and spend time in prison, the numbers of HIV/AIDS infections rise not only in prisons but also in the communities to which they return. These communities are indeed the racial ethnic communities who receive smaller and smaller allocations of resources to handle what is an epidemic in places like Washington, D.C., and could grow to become an epidemic in other locations.

Ecumenical and Interfaith Guests to the Assembly

The Presbyterian Church (USA) understands that we are part of a wider body of Christ and are intentional in our relationships with other Christian churches both in the United States and globally. The General Assembly is delighted to welcome visitors from other churches and the world community.

There are three categories of ecumenical visitors.

Each year, the General Assembly votes to invite fifteen churches to name ecumenical advisory delegates to the following year’s assembly. Five of these churches are based in the United States, and ten are based outside the USA. Occasionally, circumstances prevent one or more of the churches from sending a delegate in the designated year. The 11 ecumenical delegates at this assembly are listed on page 8. As advisory delegates, they have a voice in plenary and voice and vote in committee.

Denominations are invited to name one ecumenical representative to act as an official observer of the General Assembly. In addition three national organizations of other religious traditions in the US are invited to name an Interfaith representative to the General Assembly. Unofficial visitors are welcomed as ecumenical guests. These two categories participate in a wide range of self-selected activities during their stay.

The following ecumenical delegates, representatives and visitors will be in attendance:

Ecumenical Advisory Delegates:

| Elder Robson Nyirenda                           | Bishop John White                              |

1. Papers in General

   a. The General Assembly shall consider only those papers delivered to the Stated Clerk in compliance with Standing Rule A and any other papers whatsoever that have been delivered to the Stated Clerk. Ordinarily, such papers shall have been forwarded to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly.

   b. All papers intended for consideration by the General Assembly that are forwarded to the Stated Clerk and postmarked less than sixty days, but no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be reviewed by the Stated Clerk, who shall determine whether or not to refer them to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. The Stated Clerk shall report to the committee regarding those papers not referred.
2. Reports of Entities, Commissions, and Committees

Reports Deadline

a. All reports from entities, commissions, and committees of the General Assembly shall be delivered to the Stated Clerk on or before 120 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall publish these reports (print or electronic) and distribute them so that they shall reach the commissioners thirty days before the convening of the General Assembly.

Budget Consultation

b. An entity, commission, or committee submitting a report with a recommendation that affects the work or budget of another entity(ies) shall submit evidence that a consultation has been held with the affected entity(ies).

Appropriate Background Information

c. Committees, agencies, or corporations presenting reports shall provide the appropriate background information necessary to interpret or understand the recommendations or responses to referrals to the members of the General Assembly committees to which the business is referred. Any and all documents or publications referred to in these reports that require approval by the assembly for publication and distribution to the church, including but not limited to curriculum, study papers/guides, position papers, and program resources, shall be made available to commissioners at the time the reports are published.

Report Length

d. All reports shall be limited to ten thousand words except the report of the General Assembly Mission Council, the length of which shall be determined by the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council. A request for an exception to the length of a report shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk no later than forty-five days prior to the deadline for the submission of the report and shall include the anticipated length of the report. The Stated Clerk may assess a fee of the entity or committee whose report exceeds ten thousand words for the costs incurred in printing and distributing the excess pages. Payment of the fee shall be submitted to the treasurer of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation. If the Stated Clerk and the representatives of any body are unable to agree, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall determine the length of the report.

3. Overtures

Definition

a. Overtures are items of business that must have been approved by a presbytery or a synod and shall request the General Assembly to take a particular action, or approve or endorse a particular statement or resolution. (See Book of Order, G-11.0103t(3).)

Writing Overtures

b. The stated clerk of a presbytery or synod considering an overture to the General Assembly shall:

(1) Examine the most recently published Minutes of the General Assembly to determine if a similar overture has already been passed.

(2) Consult with the Office of the General Assembly to determine whether the desired action has been voted by any previous General Assembly.

(3) Consult with the Office of the General Assembly to determine whether a similar overture has already been proposed in order that the presbytery or synod may concur with the existing overture.

(4) Draft the overture in the following form:

“The Presbytery of ________________ overtures the [# of the assembly] General Assembly [(year)] of the PC(USA) to [state the specific action the General Assembly is asked to take].”

To this shall be appended a rationale, stating the reasons for submitting the overture.
A.3.c.–A.4.a.

Submitting Overtures

c. Submitting Overtures

(1) Overtures proposing an amendment to the Constitution or requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order (see Book of Order, G-18.0301a and G-13.0112c) must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, and shall be promptly referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (see Book of Order, G-13.0112d and G-18.0300).

(2) All overtures that have financial implications for current or future years’ budgets must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly. Overtures with financial implications not received within the designated time limit shall not be considered, but shall be returned to the originating governing body.

(3) All other overtures intended for consideration by the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly.

(4) Overtures not received within the designated time limits shall not be considered, but shall be returned to the originating governing body for reconsideration.

(5) Presbyteries or synods submitting overtures with a recommendation(s) that affects the work or budget of a General Assembly entity(ies) shall submit evidence that the affected entity(ies) has (have) been consulted. If such evidence is not submitted, the Stated Clerk shall recommend that the overture be received and referred to a future session of the General Assembly so that consultation may take place.

(6) In the event that the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly receives an overture similar to one already proposed (excluding the rationale), she or he shall inquire of the presbytery or synod in question whether it would be willing to concur with that existing overture or desires to withdraw the overture. A presbytery or synod concurring with an overture may submit additional rationale for its action, provided that it does not duplicate the rationale provided by the overturing body. The concurrence and any additional rationale will be printed with the original overture in the Reports to the General Assembly.

Distributing Overtures

d. Overtures that do not propose constitutional amendment or interpretation, and that are postmarked at least sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be published (print or electronic) in the reports distributed by the Stated Clerk. Overtures received in the same manner, postmarked no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be distributed to the commissioners before the convening of the General Assembly.

Overture Advocate

e. Overture Advocate

(1) Each presbytery or synod that submits an overture shall notify the Stated Clerk of the name of a commissioner or some other person in attendance at the General Assembly who has been designated as the advocate for the overture. The overture advocate shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. (See Standing Rule E.2.)

(2) In the event that the assembly refers an overture to a General Assembly entity for further consideration (and not simply for implementation), the presbytery or synod submitting the overture shall be invited by the Stated Clerk to designate an overture advocate for the assembly meeting at which the entity’s response to the overture is presented. The overture advocate shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. (See Standing Rule E.2.)

4. Communications and Resource Material

a. Communications and resource material provide comment or advice on business already under consideration by the assembly and shall neither contain nor constitute business to be considered by the assembly. Communications may be directed to the General Assembly
(1) by entities of the General Assembly that desire to comment on a single item of business coming before the General Assembly from any source other than their own entity, but which do not introduce new business,

(2) by organizations in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds membership, and

(3) by other denominations in correspondence with the General Assembly.

b. All communications intended for consideration by the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly.

c. Resource material (except for previously published books), including advice and counsel memoranda from advocacy and advisory committees, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the assembly meeting, who shall then publish (print or electronic) and distribute the material to all commissioners prior to the assembly.

d. Advice and counsel memoranda are resources prepared by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns for the purpose of providing information about existing policy, current work on specific topics, recent developments, and other factors useful to commissioners as they consider issues before the assembly.

5. Advisory Committee on the Constitution Report

a. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall report to the General Assembly its findings along with its recommendations on all questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order, including proposals for constitutional change. “The General Assembly shall vote on the recommendations, and may amend or decline to approve them” (Book of Order, G-13.0112d). The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall report any editorial changes made to the Book of Order since its last report to the General Assembly.

b. The report of the committee shall be presented directly to the General Assembly. The General Assembly may take action on the recommendations immediately, or it may refer them to an assembly committee for consideration by that committee and report to the General Assembly for action later during the same session of the General Assembly.

6. Entity and Synod Minutes

a. Entities and synods required to submit minutes for review by the General Assembly shall submit such minutes on a calendar year basis so as to present minutes of all meetings for the calendar year (from January 1 through December 31) preceding the year in which is held the session of the General Assembly to which such minutes are submitted. The minutes shall contain the attestation that they have been approved by the entity or synod submitting them in the manner regularly in use within that body.

b. Minutes of General Assembly entities will be reviewed in accordance with the “Guidelines for Preparation of Minutes of Agencies” as printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Minutes of the synods will be reviewed in accordance with “Guidelines for Reviewing Synod Records” as printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. In addition, the provisions of Book of Order, G-9.0409, shall apply, including whether:

1. The proceedings have been correctly recorded;
2. The proceedings have been regular and in accordance with the Constitution;
3. The proceedings have been prudent and equitable;
4. The proceedings have been faithful to the mission of the whole church;
5. The lawful injunctions of the General Assembly have been obeyed. (Book of Order, G-9.0409)
7. Presbytery Reports

Each presbytery shall act upon all papers sent to the presbytery to be voted upon in ample time to permit the stated clerk of the presbytery to mail the results to the Stated Clerk so that they are received no later than two weeks before the convening of the General Assembly. The response of the presbytery shall be mailed to the Stated Clerk by certified mail.

8. Commissioners’ Resolutions

Who May Propose

a. Any two commissioners may propose an item of new business, known as a commissioners’ resolution, for assembly consideration by delivering it in writing to the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk’s designee. No commissioner may sign more than two resolutions.

Deadline

b. The Stated Clerk shall determine and announce at the first meeting at which business is conducted the deadline for receipt of commissioners’ resolutions. The deadline shall not be earlier than twenty-four hours after the assembly has convened.

Existing GA Policies

c. In the preparation of a resolution, commissioners are urged to be aware of existing General Assembly policies relevant to their proposal and, where appropriate, to make reference to these policies.

May Not Amend Book of Order

d. Commissioners’ resolutions shall not contain business that requires an amendment to or interpretation of the Constitution (see Book of Order, G-18.0301(a)).

Already Before Assembly

e. The Stated Clerk shall not transmit as new business any resolution that deals with matters of business already before the General Assembly, nor transmit any resolution whose purpose can be achieved by the regular process of amendment and debate.

Same Issues as Previous Assembly

f. Should the commissioners’ resolution deal with substantially the same issue considered by one of the two previous sessions of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall recommend that the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures take one of the following actions on the commissioners’ resolution: “refer to a subsequent assembly,” “decline for consideration,” or “take no action.”

Referral

g. If the proposed resolution does deal with new business, the Stated Clerk shall transmit it to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures with a recommendation for its referral.

Referral Declined

h. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures may decline to refer proposed items of new business if it decides that the matters proposed are already before the assembly or that the purpose of the proposals can be reached by the process of amendment and debate. Proposed items of business not referred, whether declined by the Stated Clerk or the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, shall be identified in the first report of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures distributed to commissioners after the period docketed for committee meetings, with a brief description of the content and a statement of the reasons for declining the proposed business. Twenty-five percent of commissioners present and voting is required to overturn action of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures to decline, take no action, or refer a commissioners’ resolution to a subsequent assembly. If a commissioners’ resolution affects a substantial change in an existing social witness policy, the Stated Clerk should recommend to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures that it be referred to the next General Assembly.
1. Commissioners
   a. Election
      i. Each presbytery shall elect commissioners to the General Assembly in accordance with Book of Order, G-13.0102. The number of commissioners attending General Assembly will be based on the number of active members, including resident clergy members of presbytery. The figures for active members will be taken from the information recorded in Minutes of the General Assembly, Part II, Statistics of the year in which per capita apportionment is assessed for the year in which General Assembly meets.
   b. List Delivered by 120 Day Deadline
      i. Presbyteries shall elect commissioners in sufficient time to permit the list of commissioners to be delivered to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are commissioned.
   c. Able to Attend
      i. Ministers and elders considered for election as commissioners must be able to be in attendance for the duration of the General Assembly.
   d. Entitlements, Expenses
      i. Commissioners shall be entitled to speak under the rules, and to vote and present motions in meetings of the General Assembly and of assembly committees to which they are assigned. Commissioners shall be reimbursed for approved expenses.
   e. Newly Created Presbytery’s Commissioners
      i. In the case of a newly created presbytery, the presbytery shall be entitled to elect commissioners to the General Assembly if the qualifying enrollment of ministers and congregations in that presbytery shall have been completed by December 31 of the year preceding the assembly meeting (see Book of Order, G-13.0102).

3. Corresponding Members
   a. Definition
   b. Entitled to Speak, Not Vote

4. Advisory Committee on the Constitution

5. Other Participants
   a. Special Guests
   b. Ecumenical Representatives
   c. Resource Persons
   d. Presbytery Staff
   e. Ecumenical Visitors
   f. Interfaith Representatives

6. List of Participants
Alternates

f. Presbyteries may elect alternates in number up to, but not exceeding, the number of commissioners to which the presbytery may be entitled. Such alternates shall be seated with other visitors to the assembly.

2. Advisory Delegates

Definition

a. Advisory delegates are persons who are active members in one of the constituent churches or governing bodies of the General Assembly (or, in the case of ecumenical advisory delegates, of a denomination of Christians designated by the General Assembly) who are selected to attend the meeting of the General Assembly in an advisory role so that the assembly may be assured of hearing and taking cognizance of their special viewpoints.

Categories

b. There shall be four categories of advisory delegates: youth, theological student; missionary, and ecumenical. The expenses of each advisory delegate shall be paid by the General Assembly (see Standing Rule I.3.) on the same basis as the expenses of commissioners (see Standing Rule B.2.f.(2) below for exception).

Voting Privileges

c. Advisory delegates shall be assigned to assembly committees as voting members and shall have the privilege of the floor of the General Assembly without vote. Only voting members shall have the privilege of proposing or seconding a motion. When certain issues come before a plenary session of the General Assembly, the advisory delegates may be polled prior to the vote of commissioners to determine their advice.

Young Adult Advisory Delegates

d. Young Adult Advisory Delegates

   (1) Each presbytery shall appoint an active member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), who shall be between the ages of seventeen and twenty-three years on the date the General Assembly convenes, to be a young adult advisory delegate.

   (2) Each presbytery will request each candidate for young adult advisory delegate to submit an application/questionnaire and be interviewed by an appropriate presbytery committee in order to ensure the selection of the best qualified person to serve as young adult advisory delegate. The youth ministries staff shall prepare and distribute to each presbytery a sample/suggested questionnaire for use in reviewing candidates for election as young adult advisory delegates.

   (3) Presbyteries shall elect young adult advisory delegates in sufficient time to permit the list of advisory delegates to be delivered to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected.

Theological Student Advisory Delegate

e. Theological Student Advisory Delegates

There shall be a delegation of theological student advisory delegates each year: two from each of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); one from each of the theological institutions in a covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and one each from three selected other theological seminaries. The selection process for these delegates is as follows:

   (1) Each theological institution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall nominate three students who, at the time of the General Assembly, will have at least one year of study remaining in their degree program. Two of these students shall be designated by the institution as delegates and the other student shall be designated as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery, or a student nominated by the Presbyterian School of Christian Education. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected, who shall transmit the names of the two students to be delegates to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

   (2) Each theological institution in covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall nominate two students who, at the time of the General Assembly, will have at least one year of study remaining in their degree program. One of these students shall be designated by the institution as the delegate and the other student as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected, who shall transmit the name of the delegate to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

(3) All non-Presbyterian theological schools represented by corresponding members on the Committee on Theological Education and one additional non-Presbyterian theological seminary shall be asked to nominate one theological student advisory delegate and one alternate. The additional non-Presbyterian seminary shall be chosen on a rotating basis, descending alphabetically, from those that have at least twelve Presbyterian enrollees (either inquirers or candidates under the care of a presbytery) as of October 1 in the year preceding the assembly. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected, who shall transmit the name of the delegate to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

(4) Nominated students shall have at least one more year of study following the assembly remaining in their degree program. The Stated Clerk shall forward the name of the nominated students to the presbyteries of jurisdiction for election and confirmation.

f. Missionary Advisory Delegates

(1) There shall be eight missionary advisory delegates who shall be chosen by the Worldwide Ministries Division from persons who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and mission personnel assigned by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in another country in which this church is engaged in mission. To the degree possible, the selection shall provide a global geographical representation with no two delegates representing the same country or geographical area and rotating the geographical representation. The Worldwide Ministries Division shall notify the Stated Clerk at the time these persons are named.

(2) The expenses to the General Assembly of each missionary advisory delegate shall include transportation only from the point of entry or domicile of the delegate in the United States and return.

g. Ecumenical Advisory Delegates

There shall be up to fifteen ecumenical advisory delegates. Ten of these delegates shall be from churches outside of the United States. No more than five shall be from member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. Ecumenical advisory delegates shall be selected by the highest ecclesiastical authorities of their churches, in response to the invitation of a previous General Assembly. The assembly shall extend such invitations at the recommendation of the General Assembly Mission Council upon nomination by the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.

3. Corresponding Members

a. The following persons shall be corresponding members: Moderators of earlier General Assemblies; the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other members of the staff of the Office of the General Assembly as designated by the Stated Clerk; the members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly; the members of the GAMC Executive Committee and staff of the General Assembly Mission Council, and of the divisions and related entities designated by the council; all members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution; the executives of synods; one person designated by each entity reporting directly to the General Assembly, including permanent, special, and advisory committees (additional persons may be designated by such bodies if authorized by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly); and the presidents (or their designee) of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and seminaries related by covenant agreement.
Entitled to Speak, Not Vote

b. Corresponding members shall be entitled to speak, under the rules, in meetings of the General Assembly and of assembly committees on matters related to the work of the body represented, but they may neither vote nor present motions.

4. Advisory Committee on the Constitution

During the General Assembly, three or more members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution [this committee] shall be present at the session of the General Assembly to advise the General Assembly and its Moderator on constitutional matters (Book of Order, G-13.0112e).

5. Other Participants

Special Guests

a. The assembly, out of honor, courtesy, recognition, and the need for information and resource material, may recognize other persons as guests or observers. As such, they may be invited by the General Assembly to speak to the assembly for the purpose of conveying greetings or messages, or bringing enlightenment or information germane to the decision-making process. An assembly committee may extend a similar invitation at its own meeting.

Ecumenical Representatives

b. Ecumenical representatives are individuals sent at the initiative of another church to be the official representative of that church. The Stated Clerk shall announce to member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches the date and place of the next meeting of the General Assembly. When officially certified through appropriate ecclesiastical channels at least forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, these persons shall be welcomed as guests of the General Assembly and introduced to the governing body through the report of the assembly committee addressing ecumenism. The assembly shall assume the expense and housing of such guests on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.

c. The assembly may welcome persons invited by the General Assembly Mission Council or another entity of the General Assembly for the purpose of establishing or affirming particular ecumenical, mission, or program relationships, or assisting the entity in the presentation of particular items of business. Any expense reimbursement shall be the responsibility of the inviting entity.

d. The presbytery’s executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery’s stated clerk shall be supplied with all reports and materials related to the General Assembly, but shall not be entitled to speak in plenary meetings or in meetings of assembly committees unless called upon by a moderator to provide information.

e. Ecumenical visitors are individuals attending a session of the General Assembly at their own initiative. These persons are welcomed to the assembly as unofficial visitors. The assembly shall assume no expenses for these ecumenical visitors.

Resource Persons

c. The assembly may welcome persons invited by the General Assembly Mission Council or another entity of the General Assembly for the purpose of establishing or affirming particular ecumenical, mission, or program relationships, or assisting the entity in the presentation of particular items of business. Any expense reimbursement shall be the responsibility of the inviting entity.

d. The presbytery’s executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery’s stated clerk shall be supplied with all reports and materials related to the General Assembly, but shall not be entitled to speak in plenary meetings or in meetings of assembly committees unless called upon by a moderator to provide information.

e. Ecumenical visitors are individuals attending a session of the General Assembly at their own initiative. These persons are welcomed to the assembly as unofficial visitors. The assembly shall assume no expenses for these ecumenical visitors.

Interfaith Representatives

f. Interfaith Representatives—Three observers of other faiths or religious traditions, who shall be representatives chosen by recognized religious bodies of non-Christian religious traditions and/or faith communities shall be present at the assembly at the invitation of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations. The interfaith representatives shall be present with the church in its deliberations, and to speak to the assembly for the purpose of conveying greetings or messages, or bringing information germane to the decision-making process. The assembly shall assume the expense of housing and on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.

6. List of Participants

Upon request, the Stated Clerk shall make available the list of participants registered for a session of the General Assembly to entities of the General Assembly, governing bodies of the denomination, educational institutions, ministers of the Word and Sacrament, elders, and independent organizations composed primarily of members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). A fee will be charged for lists or mailing labels to cover the costs incurred for printing, postage, and handling.

4. Tentative Docket

1. Assembly Committee Structure
   a. The Stated Clerk shall propose the number and designation of assembly committees to the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall present the proposed committee structure to the General Assembly for consideration and ratification at the first assembly meeting at which business is transacted. In making these proposals, the Stated Clerk shall consult with the appropriate General Assembly entity or entities, and may consult with other persons.
   b. The Stated Clerk shall propose to the General Assembly for appointment the names of persons to serve as committee assistants for the duration of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall consult with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly before recommending persons to serve as committee assistants. Persons proposed shall not be commissioners to the General Assembly or staff members of entities of the General Assembly or any person who is a member of the General Assembly Mission Council or any person who is a member of any other entity of the General Assembly. A committee assistant shall be appointed to provide staff services to each assembly committee. The appointments shall be made in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0403.
   c. The Moderator of the preceding General Assembly shall appoint a commissioner to be moderator and a second to be vice moderator of each committee. Final appointment shall be made only after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and then also with representatives of the General Assembly Committee on Representation regarding the inclusivity mandated in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 and G-9.0104. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees, including any committees dealing with finance and budgets, shall be elders. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees should be women. No more than one person from any one presbytery may be appointed to serve as a moderator or vice moderator. All synods shall be equitably represented.
   d. The moderators and vice moderators of the assembly committees, as a group, shall function as the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. The moderator and vice moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall function as the moderator and vice moderator of this committee as well. This committee shall report to the assembly for its action at the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business.
Orientation

e. The Stated Clerk shall conduct an orientation for moderators, vice moderators, and committee assistants of assembly committees no less than three weeks prior to the convening of the General Assembly. The orientation shall include information regarding business likely to be referred to each committee; suggested procedures for dealing with business referred to committees, especially the use of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised; utilization of available resources, both persons and materials; and preparation and presentation of assembly committee reports. The Stated Clerk, following consultation with the General Assembly Mission Council, may invite persons designated by the council as General Assembly resource coordinators to participate in the orientation. During this orientation, the Assembly Committee on Business Referral shall meet and carry out the duties given it by these rules. The Assembly Committee on Business Referral shall also meet, if necessary, just prior to the convening of the assembly and its function shall end at the convening of the assembly.

2. Assigning Commissioners to Assembly Committees

a. Forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner and advisory delegate to one of the assembly committees by the random selection process described in this standing rule.

b. No later than thirty days before the convening of the assembly, commissioners shall receive the number and designation of committees. At the same time that the number and designation of committees is communicated, the Stated Clerk shall notify each person of the assignment, the time of their first meeting, and the necessity to confirm appropriate housing and travel arrangements.

c. The Stated Clerk shall provide a list of the assignments to those who need it to facilitate the work of the General Assembly.

d. Commissioners and advisory delegates shall be assigned to assembly committees by random selection as follows:

   (1) The Stated Clerk shall divide the presbyteries into six regional districts. Each district shall be composed of one or more presbyteries so arranged that, insofar as possible, the presbyteries in the district have contiguous boundaries and the numbers of commissioners in the several districts are approximately equal. Within each district the presbyteries shall be arranged alphabetically. The commissioners from each presbytery shall be listed alphabetically in two parallel lists: the first containing the names of the ministers of the Word and Sacrament; the second, the elders. In those cases where the presbytery has not designated commissioners, the position shall be listed as vacant so that the name may be inserted later when the Stated Clerk is notified. The names of moderators and vice moderators of assembly committees shall be removed from the list and the names below them shall be moved up to fill the vacated positions. The minister commissioners and vacant positions for minister commissioners shall be numbered in sequence. The list of elder commissioners in each district shall be rotated downward so that no elder commissioner is opposite a minister commissioner from the same presbytery. Separate lists of groups identified in Book of Order, G-4.0403, shall be prepared, insofar as it may be practical, to assure the most equitable distribution of such commissioners to the various committees in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0402.

   (2) The Stated Clerk shall list the young adult advisory delegates in one list arranged in the alphabetical order of the presbyteries that designated the delegates. In any case where the presbytery has not designated a young adult advisory delegate, the position shall be listed as vacant so that the name may be inserted later when the Stated Clerk is notified.

   (3) The Moderator shall pick by lot a number from one to ten. This number shall identify the number of the name in the first column of names in each district in which the assignment will begin. It will also identify the number of the young adult advisory delegates in which assignment will begin.
(4) The Moderator shall then pick by lot a second number equal from one to the number equaling the total number of committees. This number shall identify the assembly committee in the order in which the committees are arranged in the standing rules to which the first assignment of members shall be made.

(5) The assignment of members of the assembly committees shall then proceed in sequence. When initial assignments have been made to all committees in sequence so that the committees with the fewest number of commissioners are full, additional assignment shall be made to the other committees in the same manner, until all commissioners and young adult advisory delegates have been assigned to committees.

(6) The Stated Clerk shall assign missionary advisory delegates and ecumenical advisory delegates to assembly committees in consultation with those delegates. Ordinarily not more than two persons in each of these categories shall be assigned to any one assembly committee.

(7) Theological student advisory delegates will be assigned to committees at the same time and in the same way as are commissioners to ensure their full participation and attendance.

(8) Names of commissioners and advisory delegates received after these assignments have been made shall be inserted in the appropriate position in the original list and assigned to the committee to which that position was assigned.

for referral by the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. If, after that committee makes its recommendation, the presbytery or synod still disagrees with the referral recommendation, the presbytery or synod shall notify the Stated Clerk, in writing, of its disagreement. The overture advocate will then be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture at a special meeting of the Assembly Committee on Business Referral that shall be held no more than twenty-four (24) hours prior to the convening of the assembly.

4. Tentative Docket

a. The Stated Clerk shall submit to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a tentative docket. After making any necessary adjustments, this committee shall present a proposed docket to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral so that it may recommend the docket to the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business.

b. The reports and recommendations of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly regarding the initial docket of the General Assembly and referrals of business shall be referred to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, along with any items of business not included in them (see Standing Rules I.4.b.(3) and I.4.b.(4)). Review of the minutes of the synods pursuant to G-13.0103l and of statement(s) of compliance with decisions of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission by governing bodies, reported by the Stated Clerk pursuant to IV.B.2.d. of the Organization for Mission, shall be assigned to the same assembly committee. Following the convening of the assembly, such matters shall be directed to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

g. The only persons who shall be permitted access to the commissioner and advisory delegate seating area during plenary sessions are commissioners, advisory delegates, assistants enrolled by the Stated Clerk to assist commissioners having a disability warranting assistance, the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other staff and assembly assistants who are assigned responsibilities that require access to this area, including assisting at the floor microphones, delivery of official messages to commissioner and advisory delegates, and locating commissioners who are needed on the platform. The Stated Clerk will provide special credentials for the particular staff and assembly assistants who are authorized to enter the commissioner/advisory delegate seating area. Registered presbytery staff may have access to the seating area to contact their commissioners and advisory delegates during breaks in business.

2. Quorum

At the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business, the Stated Clerk shall recommend to the General Assembly that the roll call of commissioners be established by registration. Alternately, the Stated Clerk may call the roll of commissioners and advisory delegates by calling the names of absentees as they appear on the roll. After any needed corrections have been made, the Stated Clerk shall announce whether or not a quorum is present (see Book of Order, G-13.0105). When commissioners and advisory delegates subsequently register, they shall be seated by the General Assembly. A commissioner who has not registered may not be seated and may not vote.

3. Committee Moderators and Overture Advocates Meeting

The Office of the General Assembly shall, on the first business day of the assembly, before committees meet to consider business, organize a forum where assembly committee moderators shall meet with overture advocates to discuss procedures for participation in committee discussion of business related to the overturer they are advocating.

1. Committee Leadership and Support

   a. The moderator shall preside over the committee’s deliberations. The moderator may request the vice moderator to preside and to assist in the work of the committee.

   b. Each committee shall have available to assist in its work a recorder appointed by the Stated Clerk. The recorder shall be appointed from a pool of individuals who will already be attending the General Assembly, including staff members, local volunteers, and others. The recorder shall keep an accurate record of the actions of the committee with the votes on each indicating the number of committee members voting in the affirmative, or negative, or those abstaining; and shall assist in drafting the committee report.

   c. Each committee shall have available to assist in its work a committee assistant. The committee assistant may address the committee offering suggestions regarding procedure, but shall not participate in its deliberations on any issue before the committee as an advocate of one position or view regarding its action. The committee assistant shall assist the committee in securing desired resources.
2. Procedures for Assembly Committee Meetings

Open Meetings
a. Meetings of assembly committees shall be open to the public (as space permits) provided, however, that the committee may go into executive session at any time in accordance with the Open Meeting Policy, printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Ordinarily, the committee assistant will be expected to remain with the committee in executive session.

Parliamentary Procedure
b. The deliberations of the committee shall be conducted in accordance with Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised.

Use of Resources
c. Each committee shall determine the use to be made of the resource material or resource persons available to assembly committees. Each assembly committee shall determine whether or not to permit the distribution of particular materials to the committee members.

Preparation of Resource Material
d. Resource material (except for previously published books or interpretive brochures), including advice and counsel memoranda, that provides background or advice on items of new business, including commissioners’ resolutions, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the assembly committee leadership team prior to presentation to the assembly committee to which the business has been referred. A hard copy of this resource material, accompanied by a disk copy, shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall consider any request that is made to distribute this resource material to the full assembly.

Privilege to Speak
e. During the deliberations of the committee, in contrast to public hearings, only the following persons, having been recognized by the moderator, may speak:

   (1) Members of the committee;

   (2) Committee assistant;

   (3) Persons with special expertise, including elected members or staff members of General Assembly entities;

   (4) Overture advocates and signers of commissioners’ resolutions;

   (5) Persons invited by the committee through a majority vote of the committee; and

   (6) Representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, who may speak to overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, or other business on which the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has presented advice or recommendations, or matters that propose amendments to the Constitution, or that affect compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution.

   (7) In the event that business being considered by an assembly committee has been referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution for advice, representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall be entitled to speak.

   (8) The committee moderator shall provide that the total time allotted to persons, other than members of the committee, who speak for or against a recommendation be equal so far as possible.

Overture Advocates/Signer of Commissioners’ Resolution
f. Overture advocates and one signer of each commissioners’ resolution shall be responsible for being available at the time selected by any assembly committee considering the matter. The overture advocate or one of the signers of a commissioners’ resolution shall be entitled to speak, as an individual (or in cooperation with other overture advocates in a pre-arranged presentation), to the background and intent of the overture or resolution immediately after the motion is made and seconded, placing the overture or resolution on the floor of the committee or subcommittee.
Responsibilities of Overture Advocate

| g. | Overture advocates who have been designated by their presbytery or synod to speak to the response from a General Assembly entity to a referral of an overture shall be responsible for being available at the time selected by the assembly committee considering the response. The overture advocate shall be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture" or as asked for clarification by the committee concerning the original intent of the overture. |

3. New Business

| a. | Each assembly committee shall consider only matters referred to it by the General Assembly. No assembly committee may initiate new business except as it relates to the business of the particular assembly committee. |
| b. | New business initiated in an assembly committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution or requiring an interpretation of the Constitution by the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-18.0301b and G-13.0112c) shall be referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly. |
| c. | Any other new business initiated in an assembly committee that touches upon constitutional matters (Book of Order, G-13.0112e) shall be communicated in writing to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and the Stated Clerk. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall consider each matter so referred and report its findings and recommendations, which may include proposals for constitutional change, to the assembly committee and the Stated Clerk. The assembly committee shall vote on the recommendations and may amend or decline to approve them. The advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these matters shall be transmitted to the General Assembly with the report of the assembly committee. |
| d. | Recommendations and reports to the assembly regarding such new business must be approved in assembly committees by three-fourths of the committee members voting on the matter. |
| e. | New business, other than that described in this standing rule, must be presented in accordance with Standing Rule A.8. |
| f. | New business initiated in an assembly committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution (Book of Order, G-18.0301a and b) or requiring an interpretation of the Constitution by the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-13.0112c) shall be referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly. Any other new business initiated in an assembly committee that touches upon constitutional matters (Book of Order, G-13.0112e) shall be communicated in writing to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and the Stated Clerk. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall consider each matter referred and report its findings and recommendations (which may include proposals for constitutional change) to the assembly committee and the Stated Clerk. The advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these matters shall be transmitted to the General Assembly with the report of the assembly committee. |

4. Organizational Meeting

| a. | Ordinarily, the initial meeting of each assembly committee shall be an organizational meeting in private session for up to one hour for the purpose of developing intergroup dynamics and determining procedural matters, such as approval of the committee’s agenda and consideration of the style in which the committee plans to operate. |
b. During this executive session, business items before the committee shall not be discussed or acted upon.

5. Public Hearings

Schedule

a. Each committee, with the exception of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, shall schedule at its convenience one or more public hearings on matters before it.

Time Limits for Presentations

b. The committee may limit the time for the presentation by any person during a public hearing, including an elected member or staff member of an entity of the General Assembly. If the time allotted for the public hearing is not sufficient to accommodate all the persons wishing to speak, a method shall be approved by the assembly committee that ensures that an equal number of persons on each side of an issue have an opportunity to speak. Any person denied the right to speak at the hearing may appeal to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures on the basis that the method employed in selecting speakers was not fair.

Hearing Form

c. Any person who wishes to be heard in a public hearing shall sign up on a hearing form, posted in a public place in the building in which the assembly is being held, no later than the close of business on the second day of the General Assembly or one hour after the subsequent referral of business to the committee by the General Assembly. The location of hearing forms shall be announced during the first session of the assembly. In the event that an issue is expected to be controversial, those wishing to speak shall be asked to indicate whether they wish to speak for or against the recommendation.

6. Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures

Responsible for Referral of Business

a. This committee shall neither retain any items of business for its own consideration, nor suppress any matter that comes before it. However, business that substantially duplicates matters already before the assembly may be declined by this committee and reported to the assembly with a statement of the committee’s action.

Coordination Between Committees

b. This committee shall keep itself informed of the subjects being considered by the other assembly committees, and, when any subject is taken up by more than one committee, this committee shall advise the moderators of those committees regarding ways to avoid redundant or inconsistent recommendations.

Distribution of Materials

c. This committee shall determine whether or not particular materials may be distributed to the commissioners and delegates to the General Assembly, and specify the time and manner of distribution of any authorized by it. Particular materials distributed in assembly committees shall not be distributed to the full assembly without the approval of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, including the time and manner of distribution.

Requests to Schedule Event

d. The committee shall review requests from entities of the General Assembly, governing bodies, other entities related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in any way, or coalitions in which this denomination or any of its entities participate, to schedule meetings, briefings, hearings, or other events of any kind during those hours when the General Assembly or its committees are in session.

7. Reports of Assembly Committees

Writing the Report

a. The moderator, vice moderator, committee assistant, and recorder, together with such other persons as the moderator may designate, shall draft the report of the committee following the sample form provided by the Stated Clerk.

| Minority Report | h. Minority Report

(1) A minority of the members of an assembly committee, or an individual member of an assembly committee, may submit in writing views that differ from those in the committee report. If the moderator of the committee shall affirm in writing that the positions expressed as recommendations for action by the assembly in a written minority report were presented to the whole committee during its consideration of the matter, the Stated Clerk shall reproduce the minority report and distribute it with the report of the committee.

(2) A minority report must be appropriate for consideration as a substitute motion (see Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised, 2000, p. 510).

1. Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures Reports
   a. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall report at the beginning of each meeting, recommending any necessary changes in order of business and any referrals it may have considered since its last report.

   b. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures may, at any time, recommend limits on debates or changes in the docket to facilitate the handling of business. The reports of the committee shall take precedence over any other business, including orders of the day.
Review Minutes

This committee shall review the minutes of the General Assembly daily, report to the General Assembly any suggested corrections, and recommend approval of the minutes. The minutes shall be posted on the church’s website and two printed copies of the minutes shall be posted in different places during the following day for examination by commissioners. The minutes of the meetings of the General Assembly during the last two days of its session shall be submitted for review and approval within ten days after the adjournment of the General Assembly to a subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Requests for Communicating with Assembly

- d. Requests for the privilege of communicating with the General Assembly shall be referred to this committee, which shall confer with persons making such requests about the time and the manner in which their concerns may be brought to the attention of the General Assembly. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall recommend to the General Assembly a response regarding any possible presentation to the assembly. At the time any such recommendation is acted upon, any commissioner may request that an opposing view be heard, and the assembly shall consider and act upon the matter.

Referral of Protests

- e. Protests expressing disagreement with an action or failure to act on the part of the General Assembly shall be referred to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, which shall decide whether or not the protest is decorous and respectful. Should the committee decide the protest is decorous and respectful, the protest shall be entered in the Minutes. The committee may prepare an answer to be printed with any protest so entered (see Book of Order, G-9.0304).

2. Reports of Assembly Committees

- a. Copies of the reports of assembly committees (print or electronic) shall ordinarily be distributed to commissioners no later than the close of the meeting prior to the one at which they are to be considered. The Stated Clerk shall arrange for the reproduction and distribution of reports.

- b. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in consultation with the Stated Clerk, shall docket adequate time for the reports of committees, including ample time for debate and action. If a report requires more time than docketed, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall consult with the committee for additional time to complete consideration of the report.

- c. Committee moderators should move the approval of recommendations with minimum comment, and material in the commissioners’ printed resources shall not be read.

- d. The financial effect of each recommendation on budgets previously approved or under consideration shall be clearly presented at the time that the recommendation is considered by the assembly.

3. Minority Reports

- a. In order to be considered by the assembly, a minority report shall not only set aside the majority report but also be able to stand as a full and complete substitution for the majority report recommendations. A minority report shall be moved as a substitute only after the majority report has first been moved. When this happens, the assembly shall first consider (and may amend) the majority report. When consideration of the majority report is completed, the assembly may then consider (and may amend) the minority report. Further efforts to perfect each report shall be held to a minimum in order that the assembly can concentrate instead on the issue of whether to make the proposed substitution.

- b. The moderator of the committee, or another member of the committee, shall present reasons supporting the committee’s recommendation. They may be presented before any minority report is moved or presented during the narrative report of the committee, or presented during debate on the question of whether or not the substitution shall become the main motion. (See also Standing Rule E.7.h.)
4. Committee Reports on the Budget

- a. At the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business following the meetings of assembly committees, the assembly shall hear a report on the per capita budget from the committee that has reviewed that budget.

- b. On the final day of the assembly, an amended per capita budget that incorporates the financial implications of actions taken by the assembly shall be presented to the assembly for approval.

5. Plenary Meeting Procedures

- a. In debate on any pending matter, no commissioner or delegate shall be allowed to speak more than three minutes until all other commissioners or delegates who desire to speak on the pending matter have been heard.

- b. The General Assembly shall ordinarily decide questions by electronic voting. The Moderator may also call for unanimous consent by voice vote or show of hands. Assembly committees may recommend the use of a consent agenda for portions of their reports. In all cases, the right of any commissioner to call for one of the other forms of voting or to remove any item from the consent agenda shall be preserved.

- c. In view of the relative ease in which studies and programs may be approved, commissioners and other assembly committee members are cautioned to be mindful of the effort required of staff and elected members to carry out the General Assembly’s instructions.

- d. When the General Assembly is in plenary session, questions that touch upon constitutional matters, including rulings on questions of order involving constitutional matters requested by the Moderator, shall be handled in accordance with Book of Order, G-13.0112e. These questions shall be referred in writing by the Moderator to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall consider each matter referred and make recommendations directly to the General Assembly through the Moderator.

- e. Use of cellular telephones is prohibited during meetings of the General Assembly and meetings of the assembly committees. During these meetings, pagers may be used only in the silent mode.

- f. Emergency messages will be relayed to a commissioner or advisory delegate during plenary meetings by way of a written message delivered by one of the Stated Clerk’s designated staff or assembly assistants.

- g. Any person permitted to remain during any executive session is expected to agree to be bound by the confidentiality required of commissioners.

6. General Assembly Nominating Committee

- a. Unless the General Assembly shall have made some other provision, the nominating committee shall present to each session of the General Assembly a nominee for election to each vacancy on the entities of the General Assembly that shall exist because of a scheduled end of term, resignation, death, incapacity to act, change of residence, or any other reason.

- b. The General Assembly Nominating Committee may decline to submit a nomination(s) to a particular vacancy(s) when requested to do so by the affected entity because of an expected merger of entity or a transfer of duties between entities in order to reduce the number of persons serving on a particular entity(s).
Nominating from the Floor

- Nominating from the Floor

  (1) Nominations by commissioners shall be in order unless the vacancy is required to be filled upon nomination from some other source.

  (2) When any nomination for service on a General Assembly committee, council, or board comes from the floor of the assembly, the commissioner making the nomination will provide the General Assembly Nominating Committee, no later than 48 hours after the convening of the General Assembly, with pertinent information about the person whose name is being presented, as well as the name of the particular person nominated by the nominating committee whose nomination is being challenged. Such information shall be provided on the “Nomination by Commissioner Form” provided for use at the assembly and available from the Stated Clerk.

  (3) In the event that there are nominations from the floor, the election shall proceed as follows:

    a. The General Assembly will deal with one challenged position at a time.

    b. The name of the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s nominee shall be placed in nomination by its moderator. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall call upon the commissioner who is placing a nomination from the floor to put that name in nomination.

    c. Once the names are placed in nomination, the order of speaking shall be first, the commissioner or a designee speaking on behalf of the floor nominee and second, the General Assembly Nominating Committee member or a designee speaking to its nominee. Both the commissioner (or designee) and the General Assembly Nominating Committee member (or designee) shall speak from the platform. Such speech shall not exceed three minutes in length. There shall be no other speeches seconding the nomination of any nominee.

    d. Without further discussion or debate, the General Assembly will move to vote.

7. Docket Time for Special Greetings

- When the Head of Communion of a member church of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the World Council of Churches, or the National Council of Churches is in attendance at a session of the General Assembly as an ecumenical advisory delegate or as an ecumenical representative, and proper notice is provided, the assembly shall provide up to five minutes of docket time to each such Head of Communion to present a greeting to the assembly.

- The placing of this greeting on the docket will be assigned by the Stated Clerk.

8. Announcements and Nonofficial Printed Materials

- Only announcements connected directly with the business of the General Assembly shall be read from the platform and all notices shall be submitted either to the Moderator or the Stated Clerk for approval. Telegrams and special letters shall be reported to the General Assembly only at times to be designated by the Moderator.

- Printed materials that are not official business before the General Assembly may be distributed at authorized booths in the General Assembly Exhibit Hall. Other distribution is permitted in the mailboxes provided for commissioners and advisory delegates, and also can be handed out twenty-five feet or more from entrances to the building in which the General Assembly meets.
9. Distributing Study Documents

a. Whenever the General Assembly itself shall require the distribution of a document for study (whether the proposal originates through the recommendation of an entity, the presentation of an overture or resolution, or arises during the conduct of the assembly’s business) with a request for a response (whether the response is sought from individuals, congregations, governing bodies, organizations of any kind, or any combination of these), the study document shall be accompanied by resource materials, bibliography, and aids as set forth in the document “Forming Social Policy,” Section 5, printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Along with a response instrument and the resource materials, bibliography, and aids, the document shall be distributed on a schedule that provides for the study guide and all accompanying material to be in the possession of the proposed respondents for a minimum of twelve months before the due date of the response.

b. The entity to be responsible for receiving the responses and reporting to the General Assembly the summary of the responses shall be identified in the material. The report on the responses to the study may be presented no earlier than to the General Assembly that convenes in the second year after the session of the General Assembly that approves the study.

10. Forming Social Policy

The entities of the General Assembly, including its committees, commissions, and special committees, shall be governed by the document, “Forming Social Policy” printed in the Manual of the General Assembly, when that entity is considering making a social witness policy.

11. Peaceful Demonstrations

a. Peaceful demonstrations shall be allowed twenty-five or more feet outside of the entrances to the building in which General Assembly meets.

b. Spontaneous or planned demonstrations by individuals or groups are prohibited inside the building where the General Assembly meets. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall declare all demonstrations that occur in plenary session out of order and, if demonstrators fail to immediately disband and desist, may recess the General Assembly to a fixed time and place. This rule does not prohibit the spontaneous or planned celebration of an action of the General Assembly or of any event in the life of the church.

1. Moderator of the General Assembly

Title/Functions

| (1) The Moderator of the General Assembly is an ecclesiastical officer, along with the Stated Clerk, of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A). The ministry of the Moderator is grounded in the ministry of baptized persons and in the particular ordained ministry of elders and ministers of the Word and Sacrament. |
| (2) The title of the Moderator is “The Moderator of the [number] General Assembly [(year)] of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” |
| (3) The Moderator of the General Assembly is a commissioner of the General Assembly. |
| (4) When the Moderator presides at the assembly, it is to be a sign of the bond of unity, community, and mission in the life of the church. During the period between assemblies, the Moderator serves as an ambassador of the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, telling the story of the church’s life and upholding the people of God through prayer. |
| (5) The Moderator shall preside over the General Assembly that elects him or her, and over the meetings of the next General Assembly until a successor is elected. The Moderator possesses the authority necessary for preserving order and for conducting efficiently the business of the governing body (Book of Order, G-9.0202). |
| (6) The Moderator and the Vice Moderator shall submit a written report of their work to the session of the General Assembly at which their successors are installed. |

Election

| (1) Each person nominated to serve as Moderator of the General Assembly must be a commissioner to the General Assembly. Action by presbyteries to endorse candidates for Moderator of the General Assembly shall not take place until after the adjournment of the immediately preceding assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall provide resourcing and orientation for Moderatorial candidates. |
| (2) Ordinarily, no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the assembly, the Moderatorial candidates will announce the name of a commissioner each has selected to offer to the assembly to confirm as Vice Moderator. |
| (3) The following campaign procedures shall be observed: |
| (a) Candidates should budget campaign spending of no more than $1,500, excluding travel and meeting expenses related to their candidacy. Each candidate shall submit to the Stated Clerk an itemized statement of expenses, including travel and meeting expenses related | to his/her candidacy and in kind contributions. This statement shall be submitted to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly prior to the convening of the General Assembly. This information shall be distributed to commissioners and advisory delegates prior to the election of the Moderator. The statement of expenses of all candidates shall be kept on file in the Office of the General Assembly following the meeting of the General Assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall not reimburse a candidate for campaign expenses, but shall assume expenses involved in printing and distributing material submitted for information packets as outlined in Standing Rule H.1.b.(3)(e).

(b) In order to encourage reliance on the leading of the Holy Spirit in the selection of the Moderator, no candidate shall send a mailing of any campaign materials, print or electronic, to commissioners and/or advisory delegates or permit such a mailing to be sent, nor shall candidates or their advocates contact commissioners and/or advisory delegates by telephone.

c) Distribution of written campaign materials at General Assembly outside of the candidate’s room shall be limited to printed materials placed in mailboxes.

d) On the day of the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall provide a room for each candidate where commissioners and advisory delegates may meet and talk with the candidate.

e) Not less than fifteen days before the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish for commissioners and advisory delegates an electronic information packet containing the following material regarding each candidate for Moderator who is known to the Stated Clerk and who wishes to be included:

   (i) A photograph, a biographical sketch, a personal statement by the candidate that includes a statement regarding the candidate’s sense of call to the office,

   (ii) A written presentation by the presbytery having jurisdiction over the candidate, if that governing body has endorsed the candidate,

   (iii) An announcement of the commissioner each candidate has selected to be presented to the assembly for confirmation as Vice Moderator if the candidate is elected,

   (iv) The responses of the candidate to a questionnaire developed by the Stated Clerk.

The layouts for the presentation under this standing rule (as outlined above) may be chosen by the candidates, but all material including photographs submitted for each presentation shall be provided in electronic format as well as print. The material shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk no less than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly for reproduction and distribution, and shall be accompanied by a statement indicating the willingness of the candidate to serve as Moderator, if elected.

Each proposed Vice-Moderator candidate who wishes to be included may send biographical information and a photograph in electronic format.

(4) The Moderator of the General Assembly shall be elected in the following manner:

   (a) When the General Assembly is ready to elect its Moderator, only one speech shall be made placing in nomination the name of each nominee. The speech shall be made by a commissioner to the General Assembly. Such speech shall not exceed five minutes in length. There shall be no speeches seconding the nomination of any nominee. The order of speaking shall be determined by lot, the drawing conducted by the most recent Moderator attending the General Assembly.

   (b) After nominations are closed, each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to address the General Assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the concerns that nominee feels to be the most important for the church. The nominees shall speak in the same order as the presentation of nominating speeches.

   (c) At the conclusion of all the presentations by the nominees, they shall respond to questions from the floor. The first question shall be addressed to the nominee who spoke first in the original presentation, and the same question shall then be put to the other nominees in the same order in which they spoke earlier. The second question shall be directed to the second nominee in this order and then to each of the other nominees in sequence. Each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to answer each question. This process shall continue for a period not to exceed the number of nominees times fifteen minutes, or for one hour, whichever is shorter, unless terminated earlier by vote of the General Assembly.

(d) Where there is only one nominee for Moderator, the election may be by acclamation. Where there is more than one, the election may be by secret ballot in one of the following ways:

   (i) Each commissioner shall vote by means of an electronic voting system. The Stated Clerk shall advise the Moderator of the totals. The Moderator shall announce the result of the vote as tabulated. If no nominee has received a majority of the whole vote, another vote shall be taken in the same manner. When one nominee shall have received a majority, the Moderator shall announce the result and declare the nominee to be elected.

   (ii) If the assembly votes to use paper ballots, the Stated Clerk shall provide ballots and assign no fewer than ten commissioners to act as tellers, collecting and counting the ballots. The results shall be given to the Stated Clerk who shall report the totals to the Moderator who shall announce them to the assembly.

(5) The Stated Clerk shall provide a service of installation for the newly elected Moderator as the last item of business at the session in which the Moderator is elected. The family of the newly elected Moderator and all present previous Moderators shall be invited to the platform. The service shall use the order of service for “Installation of Governing Body Officers and Staff” from the Book of Occasional Services. The processional banner of the Moderator shall precede the newly elected Moderator into the assembly. The Moderator’s cross and stole shall be presented by the most recent serving Moderator. A representative of the presbytery of the Moderator’s membership shall ask the questions of installation. The newly elected Moderator invites a person to lead the prayer of installation. The most recent serving Moderator gives the charge, a hymn is sung by the assembly, and the newly elected Moderator gives the benediction.

Vice Moderator

c. Vice Moderator

   (1) Ordinarily, no later than forty-five days before the convening of the assembly, a Moderatorial candidate shall announce the selection of a commissioner who will be proposed to serve as Vice Moderator. At the next business session of the assembly following the election of the Moderator, the Moderator shall propose to the assembly the name of the commissioner for Vice Moderator. After a brief speech by the person selected, the assembly shall immediately proceed to vote on his or her confirmation. Should there be no confirmation, the Moderator shall bring another commissioner’s name for confirmation to the next business session of the assembly. The Stated Clerk shall provide a service of installation for the newly elected Vice Moderator.

   (2) The Vice Moderator represents the assembly at the request of the Moderator. When the Vice Moderator serves in this capacity, all those duties incumbent on the Moderator shall be expected of him/her.

   (3) The Moderator may request the Vice Moderator to preside and to assist in the performance of other functions of the Moderator during and following the General Assembly.

Vacancy

d. Vacancy in the Office of the Moderator or Vice Moderator

   (1) Should the office of the Moderator of the General Assembly become vacant, the Vice Moderator shall fulfill the functions of the Moderator. In such circumstance, all constitutional obligations and functions as prescribed by the Standing Rules of the General Assembly and the Book of Order shall be incumbent upon the Vice Moderator of the General Assembly.

   (2) Should the office of the Vice Moderator of the General Assembly also become vacant, the most recent living Moderator shall fulfill the functions of the Moderator as specified in the Constitution of the church.
2. Stated Clerk of the General Assembly

a. Title and Functions of the Stated Clerk at the General Assembly

(1) The title of the Stated Clerk is “The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and may be used by the incumbent until a successor is elected and takes office.

(2) The Stated Clerk is accountable, through the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, to the General Assembly for the performance of the duties of the office, and shall present to each meeting of the General Assembly a report on the state of the church.

(3) The Stated Clerk is responsible for all matters related to the sessions of the General Assembly and all other matters relative to and arising from the General Assembly for which no other assignment has been made.

(4) The Stated Clerk shall also be responsible for guidance of the procedures for candidates seeking the office of Moderator, and for supervision of the election of each Moderator.

(5) In accordance with directives from previous General Assemblies and in consultations with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council, and other General Assembly agencies, the Stated Clerk is authorized to decide on matters pertaining to facilities and special events that must be established before the first meeting of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

(6) The Stated Clerk shall receive all reports, communications, overtures, and any other materials appropriate for General Assembly consideration. The Stated Clerk shall recommend to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, for presentation to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, a referral of such items of business coming before the General Assembly (Standing Rule C.3.e.).

(7) The Stated Clerk shall prepare for consideration of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a proposed docket for the General Assembly’s consideration of its business (Standing Rule C.4.a.). The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall present the proposed docket to the first meeting of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures so that it may recommend a docket to the commissioners at the first business session. The docket presented to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall provide a time early in the General Assembly for a report by the Stated Clerk on the state of the church, and for a report by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

(8) The Stated Clerk shall propose to the General Assembly the number of assembly committees and a name for each committee after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the appropriate General Assembly entity or entities (Standing Rule C.1.). The Stated Clerk shall present the committee structure to the General Assembly for ratification at the first business session. Each commissioner and advisory delegate shall be assigned by random selection to one assembly committee at least forty-five days before the opening date of the General Assembly (Standing Rule C.2.).

(9) The Stated Clerk shall provide opportunity for orienting the commissioners, advisory delegates, and others taking part in the session of the General Assembly. The use of Robert’s Rules of Order, sources of parliamentary advice, and the availability of resource persons and materials to facilitate their work should be part of the orientation.

(10) The Stated Clerk shall be the parliamentarian for the meetings of the General Assembly, or arrange for the service of a professional parliamentarian.

(11) The Stated Clerk shall transmit to the governing bodies and agencies of the assembly, persons who presented business to the assembly, and others affected by the assembly’s actions, a report on actions of the General Assembly on matters pertaining to their concerns. The Stated Clerk shall transmit to the presbyteries all assembly actions on which the presbyteries are requested to take action.
(12) As soon as practicable after the adjournment of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish the assembly’s proceedings and other documents as the assembly may direct in an appropriate format (i.e. print or electronic) to be determined by the Stated Clerk.

Election

b. Election of the Stated Clerk

(1) The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) requires the election of a Stated Clerk and the standing rules describe the procedures for the election. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be elected for a term of four years and is eligible for reelection to additional four-year terms. The Stated Clerk is accountable to the General Assembly for the performance of the assigned functions.

(2) The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be elected in the manner described in this standing rule. No member of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly or other persons involved in this procedure as a member of the search committee or as a person providing staff services to the committee may be considered for nomination as Stated Clerk. The incumbent Stated Clerk may not participate in any way in the election process described in this standing rule. In the year there is an election of a Stated Clerk, the Moderator shall appoint a temporary Stated Clerk during the period of the election at the General Assembly.

(3) The General Assembly that meets prior to the end of the term of a Stated Clerk shall elect a Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.

(a) The slate of nominees for the review/nomination committee shall consist of the following: three members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (nominated by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, one of whom shall serve as moderator of the committee), one member of the General Assembly Mission Council (nominated by the General Assembly Mission Council), and five at-large members nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee in the following categories: one governing body stated clerk and four persons (two elders and two clergy) from among commissioners who have attended an assembly in the past six years. The General Assembly Nominating Committee shall present to the assembly for election the slate of nominees for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. The slate presented shall reflect the denomination’s commitment to inclusiveness.

(b) Nominations from the floor for the nomination committee shall be in order following the distribution of the printed list of proposed nominees by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and a declaration by the Moderator that the names are in nomination. Names placed in nomination from the floor shall be in opposition to a particular name of an at-large member placed in nomination by the General Assembly Nominating Committee, and must be in the same category (H.2.b.(3)(a)). More than one person may be placed in nomination from the floor in opposition to an at-large nominee.

(c) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be responsible for providing the nomination committee with an up-to-date position description.

(d) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly will ensure that an adequate budget for the nomination process is provided in the Office of the General Assembly and shall designate staff services for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.

(e) The nomination committee shall begin its work no later than 300 days before the start of the assembly that will elect the Stated Clerk.

(f) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be responsible for conducting the end-of-term evaluation of the Stated Clerk.

(g) The nominating committee shall announce that persons seeking the position of Stated Clerk shall file a completed application form and a resume or personal information form (PIF) with the committee 180 days before the opening of the General Assembly.

If the incumbent wants to be considered, he or she will notify the committee in writing and submit a current resume or PIF 180 days before the opening of the General Assembly. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall provide a copy of the end-of-term evaluation to the Stated Clerk Nominating Committee.

(h) Additional written material may be requested by the committee. No one may be nominated to serve as Stated Clerk who has not provided an application to the committee.

(i) The committee shall review and evaluate all applications to determine the constitutional eligibility of the candidates. Any candidate who is determined to not be eligible will be notified in writing within forty-five days of receipt of their resume or PIF.

(j) The committee shall interview all eligible candidates using the same methodology and select one as the committee’s recommendation. All members of the committee shall ordinarily participate in the interview. The committee shall declare its nominee no later than sixty days before the opening of the General Assembly.

(k) Any of the applicants for the position of Stated Clerk, including the incumbent Stated Clerk if not the nominee of the committee, who wish to be placed in nomination against the nominee of the committee shall declare their intention to the committee to do so no later than forty-five days before the opening of the General Assembly.

(l) At the convening of the General Assembly, the Office of the General Assembly shall distribute to commissioners and advisory delegates an information packet containing the following material regarding each candidate for Stated Clerk who wishes to be included:

(i) A photograph, a biographical sketch, a personal statement by the candidate, including a statement regarding the candidate’s sense of call to the office,

(ii) The responses of the candidate to a questionnaire developed by the committee based upon issues that will be before the church as presented in business to be considered by the General Assembly.

(iii) The material submitted shall be typewritten on paper 8-1/2 x 11 inches in size. The layouts for the presentation under this standing rule (as outlined above) may be chosen by the candidates, but the copy submitted for each presentation shall be provided in one color on one side of one sheet. The material shall be submitted to the Office of the General Assembly no less than thirty days before the convening of the General Assembly for reproduction and distribution and shall be accompanied by a statement indicating the willingness of the candidate to serve as Stated Clerk, if elected.

(m) The candidates may not distribute any other materials, print or electronic, including flyers, buttons, tokens or other objects that would denote a campaign for the office of Stated Clerk.

(n) Other organizations supporting the candidacy of a particular candidate may not distribute materials electronically, through the mail, or at the General Assembly with the knowledge, support, or permission of that candidate. Should a candidate discover that an organization is advocating or campaigning for him or her, it is expected that the candidate will request that organization to cease its activities. The same expectation will be true of organizations that are critical of a particular candidate for Stated Clerk.

(o) Each candidate will be provided a place to meet and talk with commissioners and advisory delegates two days before the election. Only information provided by the Office of the General Assembly may be distributed in those rooms. Other materials, apart from that packet, are not permitted. Each candidate for Stated Clerk will be allowed to post the times when he/she will be available for conversation in that room.

(p) Any questions concerning interpretation of the election process outlined in H.2.b. shall be determined by the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.

(4) The General Assembly, by majority vote, shall elect the Stated Clerk in the following manner:

(a) Within forty-eight hours of the convening of the assembly, the Stated Clerk Review/Nomination Committee shall place in nomination a single nominee.
(b) The Moderator shall then invite other nominations from those who have completed the nomination process. Only one speech, made by a commissioner or a member of the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee not to exceed five minutes in length, shall be made to nominate each nominee. There shall be no speech seconding any nomination. Each person nominated from the floor shall reaffirm a willingness to serve as Stated Clerk, if elected.

(c) In the event there are no other nominations, the election shall proceed immediately as follows:

(i) The nominee for Stated Clerk shall be given an opportunity to address the assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the nominee’s views regarding the functions and work of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

(ii) The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. Time allocated shall not exceed fifteen minutes. The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the nominee for Stated Clerk. The time allocated should not exceed fifteen minutes, after which the voting shall take place.

(d) In the event there are other nominations, the election shall proceed as follows:

(i) The election of the Stated Clerk shall take place as the first order of business on the next to last day of the assembly’s session.

(ii) Each nominee shall be given an opportunity to address the assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the nominee’s views regarding the functions and work of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. The nominees shall speak in the same order as the presentation of nominating speeches.

(iii) The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the nominees for Stated Clerk. The first question shall be addressed to the nominee who was nominated first and the same question shall then be put to the other nominees in the same order in which they were nominated. The second question shall be directed to the second nominee in this order and then to each of the other nominees in sequence. Each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to answer each question. This process shall continue for a period not to exceed the number of nominees times fifteen minutes, or for one hour, whichever is shorter, unless terminated earlier by vote of the General Assembly, after which the voting shall take place.

(5) Should there be a vacancy in the office of the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Nominating Committee shall propose to the assembly, if the assembly is in session, members for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee, or shall propose to the Moderator for appointment, if the assembly is not in session, to a Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. This committee shall be composed of members as outlined in Standing Rule H.2.b. and begin the process of a search for a candidate for Stated Clerk. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall designate an acting Stated Clerk until such time as a Stated Clerk is elected.

(6) The Stated Clerk Nomination Committee shall be dismissed at the adjournment of the session of the General Assembly at which the committee presents a nominee for Stated Clerk.

(7) A new Stated Clerk shall normally assume office thirty days after the adjournment of the assembly. A longer period of transition between Stated Clerks may be negotiated by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, but shall not exceed ninety days.

Acting Stated Clerk

In case of the incapacity, resignation, or death of the Stated Clerk, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall designate an Acting Stated Clerk until such time as the Stated Clerk is able to resume the duties or the General Assembly elects a new Stated Clerk. The person so designated may be one of the Associate Stated Clerks or another person eligible for election as Stated Clerk.

d. Associate Stated Clerks

The General Assembly may elect one or more Associate Stated Clerks as the General Assembly shall determine. The Stated Clerk shall nominate persons to fill each such office after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The term of office shall be four years, subject to reelection at the pleasure of the General Assembly.

   d. Sponsorship of Events

3. Reimbursing Commissioner Expenses
   a. Reimbursement/Per Diem
   b. Reimbursement for Alternate Commissioner

4. Assembly Meeting Work Group
   a. Membership
   b. Responsibilities

1. Date and Place of Meeting

   a. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall meet on the date and at the place fixed by the preceding General Assembly for a period, which shall be known as a session of the General Assembly, preferably between May 15 and July 31, subject to the possibility of change (see Standing Rule I.4.b.(10) and Book of Order, G-13.0104, for exceptions). The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall recommend to the General Assembly for its action the date and place of meeting six years hence and any necessary changes in dates and places of meetings previously set. Should action regarding date or place of meeting become necessary at a time when the General Assembly is not in session, this committee is empowered to fix a new date or place of meeting.

   b. The host body for any session of the General Assembly shall be a presbytery(s) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Any presbytery that desires to invite the General Assembly to meet within its bounds shall forward an invitation to the Stated Clerk no later than May 1 of the year that is seven years prior to the earliest effective date of the invitation.

   c. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall determine the criteria that render a place an eligible site for a meeting of the General Assembly, including the requirement that all meeting arrangements shall be made to facilitate full participation by persons with disabilities. These criteria may be obtained from the Office of the General Assembly.

   d. In order to distribute the benefits experienced from hosting a General Assembly meeting throughout the church, the place of meeting shall be rotated among the following four areas (unless prevented by financial or other practical considerations):

      • Area A: Synod of Alaska/Northwest, Synod of the Pacific, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii, Synod of the Rocky Mountains, Synod of the Southwest;
      • Area B: Synod of the Sun, Synod of Lakes and Prairies, Synod of Mid-America;
      • Area C: Synod of Living Waters, Synod of Lincoln Trails, Synod of the Covenant;
      • Area D: Synod of South Atlantic, Synod of Puerto Rico, Synod of the Northeast, Synod of the Trinity, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic.
2. Meeting Arrangements

Arrangements and Housing
a. The Stated Clerk shall oversee all arrangements for the meeting and housing of the General Assembly, including: the assignment of time and place for all special events and public meetings connected with or scheduled at the time of the General Assembly; the assignment of time and place for exhibits at the General Assembly; and the assignment of commissioners, advisory delegates, and others to hotels and other accommodations.

Assembly Assistants
b. The Stated Clerk shall appoint persons to serve as assembly assistants for the duration of the General Assembly. Persons appointed shall not be commissioners to the General Assembly or staff members of entities of the General Assembly. Assembly assistants shall be assigned to particular tasks to facilitate the work of the General Assembly. The appointments shall be made in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0403.

Simultaneous Interpretation
c. The Stated Clerk shall arrange for the simultaneous interpretation of proceedings into Spanish and Korean languages for any participant during plenary meetings of the General Assembly. This service shall also be provided during assembly committee meetings, services of worship, and other events during the assembly for commissioners, advisory delegates, ecumenical guests, and, when possible, for other participants.

Sponsorship of Event
d. An event scheduled before, during, or immediately following a session of the General Assembly and extending an invitation to any or all participants of the assembly shall clearly identify the sponsor or sponsoring organization(s) in any invitations, announcements, or other publicity about the event.

3. Reimbursing Commissioner Expenses

Reimbursement/Per Diem
a. The approved reimbursement for the travel expenses, food, lodging, and other approved expenses of commissioners at the sessions of the General Assembly shall be paid by the treasurer or the treasurer’s designee. The treasurer shall have the authority to deposit funds for such purposes in a bank or trust company where the General Assembly is to be in session. Commissioners shall be reimbursed by means of individual checks upon receipt of a voucher on a form provided by the treasurer. The Stated Clerk shall recommend to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly the amount of any per diem. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall set the per diem, and the Stated Clerk shall publish such per diem in the materials (print or electronic) provided to the commissioners. The treasurer shall determine the manner in which such checks shall be distributed and shall announce the place or places where such checks may be cashed.

Reimbursement for Alternate Commissioner
b. The Office of the General Assembly shall reimburse an alternate commissioner for cost of meals (as specified in the per diem expenses for the particular session of the assembly to which the person is commissioned) during the period in which the alternate is actually seated as a commissioner. The total of the payments to the two persons shall not be larger than payment to a single commissioner attending the full assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall reimburse either the original commissioner or the alternate who replaced the original commissioner for the costs of transportation and other approved expenses, but not both. It shall be the responsibility of the two individuals, with the assistance of the presbytery that elected them, to determine an appropriate division of the costs, whether reimbursement was in cash or a prepaid ticket was provided. Both persons shall be listed in the Journal as commissioners, with an indication of the period during which they served.

4. Assembly Meeting Work Group

Membership
a. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall establish a work group on assembly arrangements to be composed of designated members from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council. The moderator of the Committee on Local Arrangements, and the moderator and vice moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures (when selected) shall be nonvoting members of the committee at all meetings in which matters will be considered that affect their particular work. This work group shall be assigned responsibilities (1) through (10) in this Standing Rule I.4.b.

Responsibilities

b. Responsibilities

(1) Review the evaluation of each General Assembly session secured by the Stated Clerk.

(2) Outline the programs for future General Assemblies sufficiently in advance to ensure an orderly progression of themes and emphases and to ensure the appointment of significant speakers and other program participants.

(3) Review and present to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral a recommendation regarding the Stated Clerk’s proposed docket for the next session of the General Assembly.

(4) Review and present to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral a recommendation regarding the Stated Clerk’s proposed referral of each item of business to an appropriate assembly committee.

(5) Assist the Moderator regarding the appointment of a commissioner to be the moderator of each assembly committee and a commissioner to serve as vice moderator of each assembly committee.

(6) Consult with the Moderator regarding the planning of all worship at the General Assembly.

(7) Coordinate the programmatic aspects of each General Assembly session, ensuring that adequate time is provided for the business that must be transacted.

(8) Review requests from entities of the General Assembly, governing bodies, other entities related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in any way, or coalitions in which this denomination or any of its entities participate to schedule meetings, briefings, hearings, or other events of any kind during those hours when the General Assembly or its committees are in session.

(9) Prepare a report, including recommendations on the docket and the referral of assembly business, to be printed and distributed with other materials provided to commissioners.

(10) Review and present to the General Assembly for its action the date and place of meeting six years hence and any changes in dates and places of meetings previously set.
Special Meetings of the General Assembly

1. Method of Calling
   a. Petition’s Subject Matter
   b. Resolution Form
   c. Not Called for Discussion Only
   d. Resolved 1 or 2 Days
   e. Full Text on Each Page of Petition
   f. Consult with Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures
   g. 120-day Requirement

2. Signatures
   a. Verification of PC(USA) Membership
   b. Verification of Signature
   c. Removal Request
   d. Failure to Reply
   e. Verification Process Report

3. Date and Location
   a. Report of Decision to Call Meeting
   b. COGA Sets Date and Place
   c. Expense Plan
   d. Letter of Notification

1. Method of Calling

The Book of Order permits the calling of special meetings of the General Assembly (G-13.0104). The method of calling a special meeting is the required number of commissioners submitting a petition with the full text of the resolution to the Moderator of the General Assembly.

- Petition’s Subject Matter
  a. A special meeting may be called providing the petition’s subject matter falls within the General Assembly’s responsibilities. (G-13.0103).

- Resolution Form
  b. The urgent matter shall be brought in the form of a resolution or resolutions, stating the specific action proposed to be taken by the commissioners at the special meeting and shall include the reasons for proposing the decision to be made.

- Not Called for Discussion Only
  c. A special meeting may not be called for the purpose of discussion only.

- Resolved in 1 or 2 Days
  d. The matters should be able to be resolved in a session of one or two days.

- Full Text on Each Page of Petition
  e. The full text of the resolution shall appear on each page of the signed petitions.

- Consult with Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures
  f. The Moderator may consult with the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures to determine any questions concerning whether the resolution meets the criteria for a called meeting or concerning the specific actions in the proposed resolution. This may take place by conference call.

- 120-day Requirement
  g. Resolutions requiring or proposing constitutional interpretation are subject to the 120-day requirement in G-13.0112c. The 120-day requirement begins upon receipt of the petition by the Moderator. The Moderator may consult with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) to determine any questions concerning whether the resolution requires a constitutional interpretation.
2. Signatures

The Book of Order establishes the minimum number of signatures to require a called meeting. The Moderator, upon receipt of the petition, shall ask the Stated Clerk to complete the following within thirty days:

- Verification of PC(USA) Membership
  - a. Send each presbytery stated clerk or clerk of session a letter verifying the current Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) membership of the individual signatory to the petition.

- Verification of Signature
  - b. Send each signatory to the petition a letter of verification asking the commissioner to verify the signature on the petition and if the commissioner concurs with the purpose of the request as stated in the resolution.

- Removal Request
  - c. During the verification process, a commissioner may request removal of his or her name from the petition by notifying the Stated Clerk.

- Failure to Reply
  - d. After all reasonable efforts to establish contact have been made, the name of a commissioner failing to reply to the letter of verification shall be removed from the petition.

- Verification Process Report
  - e. The Stated Clerk shall report to the Moderator the results of the verification process.

3. Date and Location

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly has the responsibility to fix the date and place of a meeting of the General Assembly when the General Assembly is not in session.

- Report of Decision to Call Meeting
  - a. Upon receiving certification from the Stated Clerk that the petition has met the requirements of the Book of Order and the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, the Moderator shall report to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) the decision to call the meeting.

- COGA Sets Date and Place Expense Plan
  - b. The COGA shall set the date and place of a called meeting.

  - c. The COGA shall submit to the called meeting a plan to pay for its expenses. This plan shall be considered to be part of the business of the special meeting.

- Letter of Notification
  - d. The letter of notification of the called meeting will be mailed to the commissioners no later than sixty days before the start of the meeting.
Commissions, Special Committees, and Special Administrative Review

1. Commissions and Special Committees
   a. Purpose
   b. Considerations for Creating
   c. Appointed by Moderator
   d. Length of Existence and Reports
   e. Review
   f. Representation at General Assembly and Funding
   g. Coordination
   h. Staff Services

2. Special Administrative Review of Synods
   a. Three Ways to Review
   b. Written Request for Review

1. Commissions and Special Committees
   a. Unless otherwise specified in the assembly’s action, any body or group established by the General Assembly to carry out decisions of the assembly, or instructed to report to the assembly, or make recommendations to the assembly, or both, shall be known as a commission or special committee (see Book of Order, G-9.0500). The purposes of a special committee must be ones that cannot be undertaken by the work of an existing corporation or entity under its assigned responsibilities. Due to the financial and staffing implications, before authorizing the establishment of a special committee, the assembly shall hear a report from the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, which shall have consulted with the most closely related entity and a member designated from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, as to whether the work to be assigned to the special committee could more effectively and economically be assigned to that entity.

   b. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall be notified by any assembly committee whenever there is discussion about the creation of a special committee. In discussing the possible creation of a special committee, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall hear from related corporation or entity representatives as well as representatives from the assembly committee considering the proposal. Financial implications of special committees should accompany any recommendation for action by the assembly. The written comment of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures must be incorporated as background in the report of the assembly committee containing a recommendation to create a special committee.

   c. Any commission or special committee authorized by the General Assembly, unless otherwise designated, shall be appointed by the Moderator in collaboration with the General Assembly Nominating Committee. The Moderator is also authorized to fill by appointment any vacancies that may occur in any of such commissions or committees. No minister, elder, or other person shall be appointed to serve on more than one such commission or committee except by consent of the General Assembly.

   d. Special committees shall complete their work within two years unless the General Assembly that authorized its establishment specifies a different period. Special committees shall submit a written report to the General Assembly that shall include a recommendation to extend its existence (if beyond the period authorized), or, at the conclusion of its work, a recommendation for dismissal. Special committees shall also publish interim reports, no less than annually, by electronic or print means. Such interim reports shall indicate the progress made by the special committee on its assigned tasks and offer a timeline and process for completing its work. When a special committee requests an extension of its existence, the request shall be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. After consultation with the most closely related assembly entity, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly will recommend to the assembly whether the project shall be reassigned to the entity, remain with the special committee, or be terminated. Any extension to its existence shall require a two-thirds vote of the commissioners.

Review

e. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall review the work of each special committee and include in its report to each session of the General Assembly a summary of the work being carried out by each special committee, including any recommendation to transfer the work assigned to a special committee elsewhere, or to dismiss the committee. A special committee shall not consider matters currently referred to another special committee or entity.

Representation at General Assembly and Funding

f. The expenses of one member of a special committee or commission to attend the General Assembly session to make any oral presentation of the report of the committee or commission that may be docketed, and to respond to questions concerning that report shall be paid by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission. This member shall be designated as the corresponding member. The exceptions to this rule are as follows:

   (1) At the General Assembly meeting in which the final report of the committee or commission is presented, the moderator, who shall serve as the corresponding member of the committee or commission, and one other designated member of the committee or commission shall attend to present the report and serve as resource to the committee considering the report. Unless otherwise approved in advance by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (due to special circumstances), only the expenses of these two authorized representatives shall be reimbursed by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission.

   (2) In the event of a minority report, a designated member of the committee’s or commission’s minority shall also be invited to attend. The expenses of this member shall be reimbursed by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission.

   (3) Other members of special committees or commissions, not otherwise referred to in this standing rule, shall be reimbursed for attendance at a General Assembly session only if they are individually involved in hearings or other official purposes.

Coordination

g. Any such commission or committee shall consult with and advise the General Assembly Mission Council on the progress of its work in order to assist the council in its responsibility for coordinating the work of the entities of the General Assembly and the work of presbyteries and synods.

Staff Services

h. The Stated Clerk shall provide staff services and other assistance to such commissions and committees in order to facilitate and coordinate their work. The work of commissions and special committees shall be funded through the per capita budget of the Office of the General Assembly.

2. Special Administrative Review of Synods

a. The General Assembly has authority to undertake special administrative review of synods (Book of Order, G-13.0103k). There are three ways the General Assembly could be requested to consider such review:

   (1) by an overture from a presbytery or synod (G-11.0103t(3); G-12.0102o(2); Standing Rule A.3.);
(2) by request from one of the General Assembly entities (Standing Rule A.2.); or

(3) By a commissioners’ resolution (Standing Rule A.8.). If such overture, request, or resolution is acted on favorably by the General Assembly, the General Assembly could undertake Special Administrative Review (G-9.0408–.0410) through commission or special committee as provided for in Standing Rule K.5. and G-9.0501–.0503.

Written Request for Review

b. Special administrative review of an alleged synod irregularity or delinquency may occur when a written request for such review is received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly from another synod or a presbytery within the synod of the alleged irregularity or delinquency. If the request relates to an alleged delinquency, the request can only be filed with the Stated Clerk after the failure or refusal of the synod to cure the alleged delinquency at its next meeting, having been requested to do so in writing prior to the meeting. When the request for special administrative review is received, the Stated Clerk shall convene a meeting of the Moderator of the General Assembly, the moderator of the General Assembly Mission Council, and the moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. If the request is in order and all the moderators agree that for the good of the church the special administrative review needs to be undertaken before the next meeting of the General Assembly (when the request could be considered by the whole General Assembly), the Moderator of the General Assembly shall appoint a special committee (Standing Rule K.5.) to conduct a special administrative review in accordance with G-9.0408–.0410 and report its findings and recommendations to the next General Assembly.
Amendment or Suspension of the Standing Rules

1. Recommending Amendments to the Standing Rules

2. Amending the Standing Rules

3. Suspending the Standing Rules

Recommending Amendments to the Standing Rules

1. In consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall recommend to the next session of the General Assembly any changes in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly deemed necessary. The Stated Clerk shall consult with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly before proposing to the General Assembly any amendment to the standing rules.

Amending the Standing Rules

2. The Standing Rules of the General Assembly may be amended by a majority vote of the commissioners present and voting. A motion to amend the rules is debatable.

Suspending the Standing Rules

3. A motion to suspend the standing rules is not debatable and shall require a two-thirds vote of the total enrollment of the commissioners.

REPORT OF INDEPENDENT AUDITORS

The Board of Directors
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

We have audited the accompanying consolidated statements of financial position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (the "Organization") as of December 31, 2009 and 2008 and the related consolidated statements of activities and changes in net assets and cash flows for the years then ended. These consolidated financial statements are the responsibility of the Organization’s management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these consolidated financial statements based on our audits.

We conducted our audits in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the consolidated financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the consolidated financial position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation as of December 31, 2009 and 2008 and the changes in its net assets and its cash flows for the years then ended, in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

NOTE 1 - ORGANIZATION AND NATURE OF OPERATIONS

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), ("PCUSA") is an unincorporated body of Reformed Christians, who have agreed to conduct worship and other religious activities in conformity with the then current version of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitution, which contains among other things, in its Book of Order, a Form of Government setting forth a detailed formal structure of the Church. As an ecclesiastical organization, PCUSA does not exist under any federal law. Central to the structure of PCUSA is the concept of governing bodies. At the national level, the governing body is the General Assembly. The ecclesiastical work of the PCUSA at the General Assembly level is carried out by a number of ministry units and related agencies.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation ("PCUSA, A Corporation") is a corporate entity of the General Assembly of PCUSA, and is the principal corporation of the General Assembly. All voting members of the General Assembly Council are members of the Board of Directors of PCUSA, A Corporation. PCUSA, A Corporation receives and holds title to property and income at the General Assembly level related to mission activities; generally maintains and manages all real and tangible property, including the insuring of such property; effects short-term investment of funds prior to either their disbursement or transfer to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the "Foundation") for longer-term investment; acts as the disbursing agent for all funds held for the General Assembly and for other governing bodies and entities upon their request; and provides accounting, reporting and other financial and related services as the General Assembly or General Assembly Council may direct or approve.

PCUSA, A Corporation is a tax-exempt religious corporation under Internal Revenue Code Section 501(c)(3).

NOTE 2 - BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

Basis of Presentation: The accompanying consolidated financial statements reflect the consolidated operations of PCUSA, A Corporation and its constituent corporations, which are presented on the accrual basis of accounting in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America. The constituent corporations of PCUSA, A Corporation are the following: General Assembly Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); The Historical Foundation of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, Inc; The Hubbard Press; Pedco, Inc.; The Presbyterian Historical Society, Inc.; Presbyterian Life, Inc.; Presbyterian Publishing House of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc.; The Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (formerly known as Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America) a New York corporation; Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and The Woman’s Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a New York nonprofit corporation.
NOTE 2 - BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT

In order to ensure the observance of limitations and restrictions placed on the use of available resources, PCUSA, A Corporation maintains its financial accounts in accordance with the principles and practices of fund accounting. This is the procedure by which resources for various purposes are classified for accounting purposes into funds established in accordance with their nature or purpose.

For external reporting purposes, however, PCUSA, A Corporation's financial statements have been prepared to focus on the organization as a whole and to present balances and transactions classified in accordance with the existence or absence of donor-imposed restrictions. Net assets and related activity are classified as unrestricted, temporarily restricted and permanently restricted as follows:

- Unrestricted Undesignated - net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted undesignated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon, which are available for general church purposes.

- Unrestricted Designated - net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted designated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon that have been designated for specific purposes by the General Assembly Council of the General Assembly.

- Temporarily Restricted - net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions that may or will be met either by actions of PCUSA, A Corporation or the passage of time. Temporarily restricted net assets primarily consist of contributions and related investment income.

- Permanently Restricted - net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions to be maintained permanently by PCUSA, A Corporation. Generally, the donors of these assets permit PCUSA, A Corporation to use all or part of the income earned on related investments for general or specific purposes. Permanently restricted net assets consist primarily of endowment funds and revolving loan funds.

Cash Equivalents: For purposes of reporting cash flows, PCUSA, A Corporation considers investments with an original maturity of three months or less when purchased to be cash equivalents.

Investments: Investments are recorded at fair value. Investment transactions are recorded on a trade-date basis. Realized gains and losses are recorded using the specific identification of securities sold on funds held by the Foundation and using the historical cost of securities sold on funds held by other investment managers.

The trustee believes that the carrying amount of its alternative investments is a reasonable estimate of fair value as of December 31, 2009 and 2008. Since alternative investments are not readily marketable, the estimated value is subject to uncertainty and, therefore, may differ from the value that would have been used had a ready market for the investments existed and such differences could be material.

NOTE 2 - BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT

Long-term investments held by the Foundation represent General Assembly endowment funds, which are generally not available for immediate use.

Contributions from Congregations: Contributions from congregations include amounts in-transit at year-end.

Allowance for Loan Losses: The allowance for loan losses is maintained at a level considered by management to be adequate to provide for loan losses inherent in the loan portfolio. Management determines the adequacy of the allowance based upon reviews of payment history, recent loss experience, current economic conditions, the risk characteristics of the various categories of loans and such other factors, which in management’s judgment deserve current recognition in estimating loan losses. The allowance for loan losses is increased by the provision for loan losses and reduced by net loan charge-ofs.

Annuity and Life Income Funds: PCUSA, A Corporation is an income beneficiary of trust funds held by the Foundation. In accordance with current accounting standards, PCUSA, A Corporation has recorded as an asset the net present value of the future income to be received from the funds.

Inventories: Inventories represent books, periodicals, and curriculum produced by PCUSA, A Corporation for distribution. These items are stated at average cost.

Property and Equipment: Property and equipment consists principally of the PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment, and domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land and property held for disposition.

The PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment are stated at cost, or fair value at the date of donation, if donated. The domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, racial ethnic schools, undeveloped land and other properties are recorded based on fair value at date of donation, appraisal value or replacement cost. Expenditures of greater than $5,000 which increase values or extend the useful lives of the respective assets are capitalized. Depreciation is computed using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the assets.

PCUSA, A Corporation holds title to various other foreign properties. Such properties include properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land and property held for disposition. Shared Services has administrative responsibility for property taxes, insurance, maintenance and improvements for these properties. Generally, it is PCUSA, A Corporation’s policy to exclude the cost or donated value of foreign properties from its financial records.

Deferred Revenue: PCUSA, A Corporation holds special events each year. Monies received to support future special events are recorded as deferred revenue.

NOTE 2 - BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES (Continued)

Collections: PCUSA, A Corporation’s collections consist of works of art, ecclesiastical objects and papers, historical treasures, scientific specimens and other assets. The collections, which were acquired through purchases and contributions since PCUSA, A Corporation’s inception, are not recognized as assets on the consolidated statements of financial position. Purchases of collection items are recorded as decreases in unrestricted net assets in the year in which the items are acquired, or as temporarily or permanently restricted net assets if the assets used to purchase the items are restricted by donors. Contributed collection items are not reflected on the consolidated financial statements. Proceeds from deaccessions or insurance recoveries are reflected as increases in the appropriate net asset classes.

Use of Estimates: The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements. Estimates also affect the reported amounts of revenue and expenses during the reporting period. The more significant estimates made relate to the valuation of mortgages, loans, and contributions receivable and valuation of investments. Actual results could differ from those estimates.

Income Taxes: PCUSA, A Corporation qualifies as a tax-exempt organization under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. Accordingly, no income taxes have been provided in the accompanying financial statements.

PCUSA, A Corporation adopted guidance issued by the Financial Accounting Standards ("FASB") and with respect to accounting for uncertainty in income taxes as of December 31, 2009. A tax position is recognized as a benefit only if it is "more likely than not" that the tax position would be sustained in a tax examination, with a tax examination being presumed to occur. The amount recognized is the largest amount of tax benefit that is greater than 50% likely of being realized on examination. For tax positions not meeting the "more likely than not" test, no tax benefit is recorded. The adoption of this guidance had no effect on PCUSA, A Corporation.

PCUSA, A Corporation has no material uncertain income tax positions which would result in a liability. No interest or penalties on income taxes have been recognized in its statement of activities for the years ended December 31, 2009 or 2008. Due to its tax exempt status, PCUSA, A Corporation is not subject to U.S. federal income tax or state income tax. PCUSA, A Corporation does not expect the total amount of unrecognized tax benefits to significantly change in the next 12 months.

Recently Issued Accounting Pronouncements: In June 2009, the FASB codified existing accounting standards. The FASB Accounting Standards Codification ("ASC") is the source of authoritative U.S. generally accepted accounting principles ("GAAP") recognized by the FASB and supersedes all existing non-SEC accounting and reporting standards. All ASC content carries the same level of authority and anything outside of the ASC is non-authoritative. The new ASC guidance was adopted by PCUSA, A Corporation for the year ended December 31, 2009, which changed the way accounting standards are referred to in the financial statement disclosures. Adoption of ASC will not impact PCUSA, A Corporation’s financial results or financial position.

Subsequent Events: Management has performed an analysis of the activities and transactions subsequent to December 31, 2009 to determine the need for any adjustments to and/or disclosures within the audited financial statements for the year ended December 31, 2009. Management has performed their analysis through May 11, 2010, which is the date the financial statements were available to be issued.

Reclassifications: Some items in the prior year consolidated financial statements were reclassified to conform with the current presentation.

Income received by PCUSA, A Corporation from the Foundation is net of outside investment managers, custodian and Foundation administrative fees.

NOTE 5 - FUNDS HELD IN TRUST BY OTHERS

Funds held in trust by others represent resources neither in the possession nor under the control of PCUSA, A Corporation, but held and administered by outside trustees, with PCUSA, A Corporation deriving only income from such funds. Such investments are recorded in the consolidated statement of financial position at the fair value of the principal amounts, which represents the estimated present value of the expected future cash flows, and the income, including fair value adjustments, is recorded in the consolidated statement of activities and changes in net assets.

NOTE 6 - ENDOWMENT COMPOSITION

Interpretation of Relevant Law: PCUSA, A Corporation classifies as permanently restricted net assets the original value of gifts donated to the permanent endowment, and the original value of subsequent gifts to the permanent endowment.

UPMIFA was enacted in Kentucky subsequent to year-end and is effective as of July 15, 2010. Therefore, PCUSA, A Corporation will report under UPMIFA in fiscal year 2010.

Appropriation of Endowment Assets: PCUSA, A Corporation has a spending formula agreement with the Foundation whereby PCUSA, A Corporation receives investment income from unrestricted and restricted endowments held by the Foundation on behalf of the General Assembly for mission use.

For the calendar year 2008 and 2009, the distribution of income was 5% of the average fair value based on the 20-quarter rolling average as of June 30, 2008 and 2007, respectively (an 18 month lag).

Starting with calendar year 2011, spending will be 90% of the prior year’s spending amount in dollar terms. This adjusted policy will continue until the standard spending formula (5% of the five year average asset value, calculated using an 18 month lag) results in a spending amount that is less than 5% of the current asset value, at which time the standard policy will again be used to determine the spending level. It is anticipated that payments will approximate the estimated sustainable rates of total return (income and capital appreciation) after inflation. The spending formula will be monitored to determine the effects of changing return and inflation expectations on the preservation of purchasing power and the generation of appropriate levels of spendable income.

Investment Policies: The Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation are charged with the responsibility of managing the endowment assets of the Church. The overall goal in management of these funds is to generate a long term total rate of return that provides sustainable distributions to support the mission within reasonable levels of risk.

The Trustees adhere to modern portfolio theory, which has as its basis risk reduction through diversification. Diversification is obtained through the use of multiple asset classes as well as multiple investments within these asset classes. Asset classes that may be used include (but are not limited to) domestic and international stocks and bonds, hedge funds, private equity (venture capital and corporate finance), and real property (real estate, minerals, and timber). The investment strategy is implemented through the selection of external advisors and managers with expertise and successful histories in the management of specific asset classes.

The Trustees believe their role is one of setting and reviewing policy; and retaining, monitoring, and evaluating advisors and investment managers. It is the Trustees' desire to find ways to invest these funds in accordance with the social witness principles of the PCUSA. The Trustees will review the investment policy statement at least annually.

Return and risk expectations and investment constraints are the fundamentals that underlie all portfolio decisions. The return objectives, consistent with spending policy, is to distribute a percentage (net of all fees and expenses) of the assets in each permanent fund and have the value of each fund (and the corresponding distributions) grow with inflation. The funds should be invested to maximize return within appropriate risk tolerances, with the expectation that over a long (10 or 20 year) time horizon there is a reasonable expectation that the funds will be able to achieve both distribution and inflation goals. Based on current capital market assumptions, the funds have a 1% predicted probability of declining more than 19.4% in a given year.

Funds with Deficiencies: From time to time the fair value of assets associated with individual donor restricted endowment funds may fall below the level the donor requires PCUSA, A Corporation to retain as a fund of perpetual duration.

Deficiencies of this nature that are reported in unrestricted and designated net assets were $9,146,619 as of December 31, 2008. These deficiencies resulted from unfavorable market fluctuations. There were no such deficiencies as of December 31, 2009.

The ability of each borrower congregation to pay PCUSA, A Corporation for the loan(s) made to the congregation may depend on the contributions the congregation receives from its members. Therefore, payments to PCUSA, A Corporation may depend on the continued growth in membership of the borrower congregations, and on the maintenance of adequate contributions by individual members to their congregations, as well as on prudent management by those congregations of their finances. NOTE 11 - BENEFITS DATA

As explained below, PCUSA, A Corporation offers a multi-employer defined benefit plan, a major medical plan and a retirement savings plan to eligible employees.

Substantially all employees of PCUSA, A Corporation participates in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Benefits Plan”) which is administered by the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Board of Pensions”). The Benefits Plan is a comprehensive benefits program, which provides a defined benefit pension plan, a long-term disability plan, a death benefits plan and a major medical plan. The assets of the Benefits Plan are commingled for investment purposes; however, accounting for each plan is separately maintained.

The defined benefit pension plan’s total net assets available for benefits, as reported by the Board of Pensions, were approximately $5,869,502,000 and $4,831,658,000 at December 31, 2009 and 2008, respectively. The defined benefit pension plan’s total Accumulated Plan Benefit Obligations, as reported by the Board of Pensions, were approximately $4,833,829,000 and $4,924,443,000 at December 31, 2009 and 2008, respectively. Since the Benefits Plan is a Church Plan under the Internal Revenue Code, PCUSA, A Corporation has no financial interest in the Benefits Plan assets nor does it have any liability for benefits payable, contingent or otherwise, under the Benefits Plan or its components.

PCUSA, A Corporation pays the entire cost associated with the major medical plan. Employees have the option to purchase additional coverage such as dental, long-term care, and life insurance.

In addition, PCUSA, A Corporation sponsors a retirement savings plan, which is a tax-deferred annuity plan. The employer contribution is designed to provide equalization of the impact of tax differences between clergy and lay personnel. All exempt lay employees are eligible to participate in the employer portion of the plan. PCUSA, A Corporation pays an amount based upon a calculation of tax differences. Substantially all employees may make voluntary contributions to the plan.

PCUSA, A Corporation’s expenses for the plans for the years ended December 31, 2009 and 2008 were as follows:

Credit Risk: PCUSA, A Corporation maintains cash and cash equivalents with various financial institutions. At times, such cash and cash equivalents may be in excess of the FDIC insurance level.

At December 31, 2009 and 2008, approximately 4.7% and 5.7%, respectively, of total short-term investments and long-term investments held by the Foundation were held in one common stock, The Proctor & Gamble Company.

NOTE 13 – FAIR VALUE

The following methods and assumptions were used by PCUSA, A Corporation in estimating its fair value disclosures for financial instruments:

Cash, Cash Equivalents and Short-Term Investments: The carrying amounts reported in the consolidated statements of financial position for cash and short-term instruments, included in investments and accrued income, approximate their fair value.

Mortgages, Loans and Receivables From Related Parties: Mortgages, loans and receivables from related parties that management has the intent and ability to hold for the foreseeable future or until maturity or payoff are reported at the principal balance outstanding, and an allowance for loan losses, which approximates fair value.

Fair value is defined as the price that would be received for an asset or paid to transfer a liability (an exit price) in PCUSA, A Corporation’s principal or most advantageous market for the asset or liability in an orderly transaction between market participants on the measurement date.

A fair value hierarchy requires an entity to maximize the use of observable inputs and minimize the use of unobservable inputs when measuring fair value. Three levels of inputs may be used to measure fair value:

Level 1: Quoted prices (unadjusted) for identical assets or liabilities in active markets that the entity has the ability to access as of the measurement date.

Level 2: Significant other observable inputs other than Level 1 prices such as quoted prices for similar assets or liabilities; quoted prices in markets that are not active; or other inputs that are observable or can be corroborated by observable market data.

Level 3: Significant unobservable inputs that reflect a reporting entity’s own assumptions about the assumptions that market participants would use in pricing an asset or liability.

In many cases, a valuation technique used to measure fair value includes inputs from multiple levels of the fair value hierarchy. The lowest level of significant input determines the placement of the entire fair value measurement in the hierarchy.

Other Investments: Other investments represent a pool of investments consisting of low-interest loans to community-based organizations to assist the poor and financially disenfranchised across the country and the world. The balance of these investments is reported by the Fund manager at the principal balance outstanding, which approximates fair value.

Certificates of Deposit: The fair value of certificates of deposit were recalculated by applying the interest rate to the initial investments and no discount for credit quality or liquidity were determined to be applicable.

Mutual Fund Equity and Mutual Fund Fixed Income: The equity and fixed income mutual funds invest in publicly traded securities and bonds with quoted market prices. The fair values of the equity and fixed income mutual funds are based upon the values of such funds reflecting all investments at fair value as reported by the Fund managers.

Alternative Investments: Alternative investments consist of privately issued securities and investments in real estate. For privately issued securities, the Investment Manager uses the income approach which generally consists of the net present value of estimated future cash flows, adjusted as appropriate for liquidity, credit, market and/or other risk factors to determine fair value. The Investment Manager provides the fair value of the investments in real estate which is presented net of any debt and is determined based on management’s best estimate of key assumptions, including the budgeted net operating income of the real estate investments and the capitalization rate or an appraisal obtained from a third party.

NOTE 14 - COMMITMENTS AND CONTINGENCIES

PCUSA, A Corporation holds and participates in an insurance fund (the “Fund”) that exists to provide a source of funds for that portion of certain losses not covered by commercial insurance to cover deductibles on commercial insurance and for certain classes of uninsured losses. Various General Assembly-level agencies and corporations are included in the Fund. The largest possible loss to be assumed in any one event or occurrence is $250,000, with $1,000,000 as the largest potential aggregate of all claims in a single calendar year.
NOTE 14 - COMMITMENTS AND CONTINGENCIES (Continued)

The minimum balance of the self-insurance fund shall not fall below $5,000,000 as a result of claims paid. In the event this happens, an assessment will be made to the insured entities to return the fund to the $5,000,000 minimum balance. The assessment will be based on each insured entity's 5-year loss ratio. A 1% minimum assessment will be made by the entities that have not experienced any losses in the 5-year period.

The balance of the Fund held by PCUSA, A Corporation was $4,944,106 and $4,249,019 at December 31, 2009 and 2008, respectively. The self insurance fund fell below the minimum due to a decline in market value and not as a result of claims paid.

Additionally, PCUSA, A Corporation has excess insurance coverage for certain losses covered by commercial insurance up to $25 million per occurrence on a policy that sits over the general liability and auto liability policies.

During the ordinary course of business, PCUSA, A Corporation is subject to pending and threatened legal actions. Management of PCUSA, A Corporation does not believe that any of these actions will have a material adverse effect on PCUSA, A Corporation's consolidated financial position or change in net assets.

NOTE 15 - RELATED PARTY TRANSACTIONS

The Foundation provides certain investment, custodial and deferred giving services to PCUSA, A Corporation. The Foundation recoups the cost of those services not covered from the income of its own endowment funds and the annual grant from the General Assembly by quarterly charges against the investment pools in which the funds administered by the Foundation are invested. These charges were recovered equally from the principal and income of these pools. Such costs consist of salary and benefits, 51% of the Foundation's operating expenses; outside investment services, 23% of the Foundation's operating expenses; and other operating expenses, 26% of the Foundation's operating expenses.

The income received by PCUSA, A Corporation from the Foundation is net of outside investment managers, custodial and Foundation administrative fees as described previously. PCUSA, A Corporation's investments and unrestricted and restricted endowment funds held by the Foundation on behalf of the General Assembly at December 31, 2009, totaled approximately $364 million.

The Foundation’s custodial cost recovery and investment management fees are assessed daily based on the prior day’s market value against the total fund.

There are certain church loan funds whereby the fiduciary ownership belongs to the Board of National Missions, a constituent corporation of the Foundation. Accordingly, these funds are not reflected in the consolidated financial statements but are administered by PCUSA, A Corporation. These loan funds were approximately $192 million and $175 million at December 31, 2009 and 2008, respectively.

PCUSA, A Corporation served as a receiving agent for funds designated for the Board of Pensions. PCUSA, A Corporation received $2,036,720 and $2,268,271 for the years ended December 31, 2009 and 2008, respectively, of which $729,029 and $790,396 was yet to be remitted to the Board of Pensions at December 31, 2009 and 2008, respectively.

PCUSA, A Corporation leases office space and provides administrative support to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. ("PILP") by contract. For the years ended December 31, 2009 and 2008, administrative support charged to PILP was $137,268 and $134,027 respectively. Office space charged to PILP was $49,302 and $47,830 for 2009 and 2008, respectively.

On June 29, 2000, PCUSA, A Corporation entered into an operating agreement with PILP under which PILP will provide administrative services (e.g., origination and loan servicing) for PCUSA, A Corporation’s church loan program at cost in an effort to streamline the coordination process between PCUSA, A Corporation’s church loan program and PILP’s loan program. PCUSA, A Corporation reimbursed PILP $270,271 and $257,183 for the actual costs of such services during 2009 and 2008, respectively.

PCUSA, A Corporation and PILP have issued joint loans through a participation arrangement. For the years ended December 31, 2009 and 2008, total loans outstanding were $31,256,161 and $27,473,402 respectively, under this participation arrangement.

The current commitment, effective May 1, 2009, to PILP is a five-year commitment to invest up to $5,000,000 in short and intermediate term deposit accounts. As of December 31, 2009 and 2008, investments with PILP were $8,985,286 and $8,690,082, respectively. At December 31, 2009 and 2008 fixed interest rates ranged from 1.78% to 4.070% and 2.66% to 4.26%, respectively, and the adjustable rate ranged from 1.78% to 2.08% and 2.71% to 2.96%, respectively. For the years ended December 31, 2009 and 2008, the Foundation did not invest with PILP from PCUSA, A Corporation’s unrestricted endowment funds.

PCUSA, A Corporation leases office space to Presbyterian Publishing Corporation ("PPC") under an operating lease. For the years ended December 31, 2009 and 2008, rental income was $161,597 and $156,665, respectively. Future minimum rental income under the operating lease, which expires in December 2011 with an option to renew, is $166,343 annually.

Other related expenses charged to PPC for telephone and copy services were $138,630 and $130,681 in 2009 and 2008, respectively.

PPC publishes various pamphlets, magazines, and books for PCUSA, A Corporation during the year on a project-by-project basis. Expenses related to this type of work were $138,630 in 2009 and $130,681 in 2008. PPC also pays PCUSA, A Corporation for advertising space in various church publications. Advertising expense under such arrangements was $13,873 and $18,739 in 2009 and 2008, respectively.

PCUSA, A Corporation participates in commercial insurance programs, whereby premiums are negotiated and paid by PCUSA, A Corporation. The Board of Pensions, Foundation, PILP and PPC reimburse PCUSA, A Corporation for expenses paid on their behalf. Expenses incurred for commercial insurance paid by PCUSA, A Corporation for December 31, 2009 and 2008 are as follows:

ADDENDUM: HIV/AIDS and Hepatitis B or C Co-infection

[Note: This addendum was added after the 219th General Assembly (2010) as an acknowledgement of the dangers of co-infection with Hepatitis B and C and other blood-borne diseases.]

In the United States, Hepatitis B and C viral co-infection are among the leading causes of hospital admission and death among HIV infected persons. While this report does not discuss Hepatitis B or C, and while they differ from HIV/AIDS in transmission, treatment, health impacts, and level of stigma, the danger of co-infection, particularly in the US, merits some discussion. Internationally, Hepatitis B and C are not considered diseases of poverty, nor are they predominantly diseases of poor women in developing nations, as are HIV/AIDS. (Note: Hepatitis, or disease of the liver, includes the form spread by the “A” virus that can be transmitted by contaminated water or food poisoning and is treatable by vaccine with generally full recovery, though antibodies remain in the blood providing immunity.)

Hepatitis B virus (HBV) is a blood borne viral infection transmitted primarily through high-risk sexual behavior. Hepatitis C virus (HCV) is a blood-borne viral infection transmitted primarily through injection drug use. Though it can be, it is not efficiently transmitted sexually. Thus these viruses share much of the same modes of transmission as HIV. They can also be transmitted by an infected pregnant woman during delivery to a newborn. Approximately 10 percent worldwide and 5 percent domestcically of all persons infected with HIV are co-infected with HBV/HCV. Among injection drug users specifically, coinfection with HIV and HCV is common (50 percent–90 percent). Not only are persons who are HIV infected at behaviorally increased risk of contracting HBV/HCV, the rate of progression and complications from viral hepatitis are accelerated in patients with HIV co-infection. Both HBV and HBC have acute and chronic forms though HBV less frequently progresses to chronicity. Both can progress to cirrhosis or liver cancer and are the most frequent causes of liver cancer.

Vaccination is available for both Hepatitis A virus (HAV; not associated with HIV) and B viruses. There is no vaccination for HCV. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recommends vaccination of children against HAV and HBV. To prevent HBV infection in HIV-infected persons, the CDC Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices recommends universal Hepatitis B vaccination of susceptible patients with HIV/AIDS. Treatment for either HBV or HCV is supportive, not curative. In view of the incidence of HIV—hepatitis coinfection and its personal and social consequences screening of all persons at risk of HIV should also include screening for HBV/HCV. Access to treatment for HBV/HCV as well as for HIV/AIDS needs simultaneously to be assured.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) the three most common forms of acute viral hepatitis in the United States—Hepatitis A, B, and C—have declined dramatically between 1995 and 2005, with hepatitis A and B at the lowest levels ever recorded since the government began collecting surveillance data more than forty years ago. Hepatitis B and C are diseases that can lead to liver cancer and death. The main factor behind the declines in new cases of Hepatitis A and B were the availability of vaccines and strong federally supported immunization programs. The declines in Hepatitis B were greatest among children and teens age 15 and younger, likely the result of high vaccination coverage in this age group. Declines in reported new cases of Hepatitis C were likely due to reductions in high-risk behaviors among injection drug users, as well as efforts to diagnose individuals infected with Hepatitis C and the promotion of health behaviors to reduce person-to-person transmission of the virus.

“The sharp declines in rates of Hepatitis A and B are one of the big public health success stories of the last 10 years. The drops in new cases of Hepatitis A and Hepatitis B are evidence that our prevention strategies have been successful, particularly the widespread use of vaccines for Hepatitis A and Hepatitis B. In order for these declines to continue, our prevention efforts must be sustained,” according to Dr. Kevin Fenton, director of CDC’s National Center for HIV/AIDS, Viral Hepatitis, STD and TB Prevention.

The reported cases of acute Hepatitis B also dropped to the lowest rate ever recorded in 2005 (1.8 per 100,000), a decline of 79 percent from 1990. In addition to the declines noted in children, Hepatitis B rates also declined among adults but remained highest among those 25 to 44 years of age and among people with behavioral risk factors such as high-risk sexual activity and injection drug use. Cases of Hepatitis C have also declined steadily since the late 1980s. However, this trend should be viewed with caution since surveillance for acute Hepatitis C is limited because many individuals do not immediately develop symptoms and do not know they are infected with the virus.

In 2006, CDC issued new guidelines to increase vaccination coverage among adults at risk for Hepatitis B encouraging vaccination of adults at high risk for Hepatitis B, particularly those with multiple sex partners or whose sex partners are already infected, men who have sex with men, and injection drug users. More than 4.5 million Americans are currently living with chronic Hepatitis B and Hepatitis C. Numbers of persons overseas with these diseases, singly or in combination, are based on extrapolations from areas with more adequate screening and treatment programs.
