At least half of the contemporary seminary graduates are women, and a large portion of graduates (male and female) are in their child-bearing years.8 Some of these female colleagues must negotiate lower pay to receive adequate paid maternity leave in their calls, if they can get the maternity leave. Some of our female colleagues are being told they must prove they are worth the maternity leave. Many men have no leave guaranteed at all. This is a matter of gender justice in our denomination. Because women are the ones giving birth, most studies have focused on the relationship between a mother and her child. However, increases in paid parental leave continue to be met by increases in use of that leave among all parents, allowing parents of all genders to spend more time on their child’s care, which has demonstrated health benefits for the child. Indeed, it has been shown that when fathers—or non-birthing parents—are offered comparable paid parental leave, the length of leave they take increases and their involvement in a child’s care after the leave period increases.9 It is wholly regrettable that non-birthing parents (historically, men) have been denied such crucial bonding and care time with their families for so long. The need for a just paid parental leave policy at this time is urgent as more and more pastors reach retirement age and more and more younger pastors—those in their prime parenting years—seek and negotiate calls.

Across the United States, a mere 14 percent of people have access to paid family leave.10 As stated above, this justice issue looms large for many workers, and the PC(USA) is not currently acting as a faithful leader. In working toward a solution, it is the profound hope of many young pastors that the denomination will see the opportunity to lead the world to a more faithful, loving approach to family leave.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-15

Advice on Item 06-15—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to answer Item 06-15 with its response to Item 06-14.

The recommendation for disapproval by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is not an argument against “paid family leave of at least twelve weeks,” but merely that it is not necessary to write this into the Constitution to accomplish what Item 06-14 desires, that terms of call include this provision.

Inserting this specific requirement into the Constitution reverses the direction of the current Form of Government, which illumines practices required by the Constitution but leaves to councils their specific implementation. The proposed amendments (Item 06-14 and Item 06-15) are attached to the constitutional requirement for presbyteries to establish minimum terms of call.

The specific implementation of these terms of call has been left to the presbyteries to determine. Presbyteries already have the authority to include paid family leave in their requirements for terms of call. “Councils possess whatever administrative authority is necessary to give effect to duties and powers assigned by the Constitution of the church” (F-3.0209).

The Form of Government requires each council to develop a manual of administrative operations. This manual should include personnel policies, where matters like paid time off are best defined. The Constitution envisions these policies and minimums for terms of call being developed in consultation with sessions, giving attention to any guidance offered by the synod or General Assembly (such as the call by previous General Assemblies to provide paid family leave). Through this process, presbyteries fulfill the expectation of the Constitution “concerning mission, budget, staffing and fair employment practices, and matters of equitable compensation” (G-3.0106, emphasis added).

In previous versions of the Form of Government, a form for terms of call was defined that specifically listed what was to be included. These specifics were removed when Chapter 14 of the old Form of Government was revised in the first decade of the 2000s. The current Form of Government further refined this approach. The only specific requirement about terms of call that remains in the Constitution is the mandate for participation by installed ministers in the benefits plan of the denomination.

Presbyteries have various provisions in terms of call packages beyond basic compensation, benefits, and allowances, such as sabbatical leave and paid time off for service to higher councils. Starting to list specific items in terms of call packages within the Constitution will be an invitation to begin to insert other items that are perceived to be missing from the list, but likewise not necessary to be included for them to be enacted.
The preferred way to accomplish the intent of Item 06-14 and Item 06-15 is for presbyteries, through their established procedures, to include paid family leave in the minimum terms of call that accomplish the above-highlighted constitutional goals.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 06-15

Comment on Item 06-15—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions (Board) is an agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), established by the church under a separate civil charter as the corporate body legally responsible for designing and administering the Benefits Plan and the Assistance and Education programs for the ministers and lay employees of PC(USA) churches and associated employers. The Board is required by law and its governance and plan documents to administer these programs and invest their funds for the sole and exclusive benefit of the members and their beneficiaries. The Board is exclusively managed and controlled by its board of directors who are elected by the General Assembly. The Board maintains a close cooperative relationship with the other General Assembly agencies.

The Board supports family leave and urges all employers within the PC(USA) family to adopt appropriate family leave policies as defined by the General Assembly. The General Assembly has addressed this issue in two policy statements. The 221st General Assembly (2014) encouraged presbyteries and churches to create parental level policies with the minimum of six weeks and 100 percent pay. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) acted to urge “the six agencies of the General Assembly to evaluate leaves of absence, considering at least six weeks paid leave as a minimum for new parents for the birth or adoption of, or to care for, a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance” (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 292). In response to the 2016 action, the Board of Pensions reviewed its employment policies and is in full compliance with the General Assembly resolution.

While the Board fully supports the underlying values of Items 06-13, 06-14, 06-15, and 06-17, the Board advises the disapproval of all four items, due to numerous practical and technical concerns. Two previous General Assemblies addressed recommendations on this subject and those actions should be ratified and affirmed.

Comment Specific to Item 06-13, On Instructing the Board of Pensions to Include Twelve Weeks of Parental Leave as Part of the Benefits Package

This overture recommends that the General Assembly instruct the Board of Pensions to provide twelve weeks of paid parental leave to all members of the Benefits Plan.

First, the issue of parental leave is an employer-based decision and must remain so for legal and practical reasons. The Board does not make human resource policy for the church or the church-related employers. The 221st General Assembly (2014) and 222nd General Assembly (2016) addressed the church’s human resource policy on parental and family leave and has defined a position to be urged for all bodies of the church. The Board is not the employer of any church workers other than its own staff and has no mechanism to pay employees of churches and other PC(USA) employers who enroll their ministers and lay employees in the Benefits Plan. Each congregation and other church employer is responsible for salary, wages, benefits, and leave policies.

Second, the concept of mandating benefits for all employees is in direct contradiction to the concept of a menu-based plan that allows each congregation or other employer to structure its employment policies and benefits to best fit its context. The Board is actively working to develop solutions to the affordability of medical and retirement benefits for church employers so that broader coverage will be provided to all church employees. The Board introduced benefit choice flexibility beginning in January 2017, following conversations with thousands of Presbyterians that led to a complete restructuring of the Benefits Plan.
This innovation has resulted in 19 percent growth in employees receiving benefits from the Board, the first growth in a generation. Regrettably, and notwithstanding these changes to the Benefits Plan programs, many churches and other church-related employers do not enroll their employees for benefits with the Board of Pensions, so the benefits proposed in the overture does not provide a universal solution to the paid leave concern for many church employees.

Third, earlier General Assembly actions addressed “family leave,” not simply “parental leave.” The former is significantly more expensive across an entire population as it includes care for aging parents and others and not simply birth, adoption, or long-term placement. Current General Assembly policy urges all employers to provide family leave, not merely parental leave, as the standard.

Finally, there is no source of funds within the Board to provide for the payment of this type of family leave. All Board funds have designated purposes, none of which include this use. While the Board does not believe this overture is rightly within the scope of its charge, should the Board decide to implement such a plan based on the request in this Overture, it would require charging dues annually to provide a funding source. Based on median pastors’ income of $58,000 and the median lay income of $41,000, the cost of a family leave program would exceed $10 million annually if only between 4–5 percent of employees (ministers and laity) utilized the benefit.

Comment Specific to Item 06-14, On Amending G-2.0804, “Terms of Call,” to Include Paid Family Leave

As written, this overture has no impact on the Board. No mention is made as to source of funding and the Board is not mentioned in implementation. In which case the Board defers to the General Assembly to take whatever action it deems appropriate for congregations’ terms of call for installed pastors.

If the intent of the overture (in contrast to the words) is for the Board to provide a family leave benefit, there is no source of funds held by the Board to provide for the payments this overture contemplates. All Board funds have designated purposes, none of which include this salary replacement benefit.

While the Board does not believe this overture is rightly within the scope of its charge, should the General Assembly request the Board to implement such a plan based on the request in the overture, it would need to charge annual dues to fund the benefit. Based on median pastors’ income of $58,000, the cost of such a program would exceed $5 million annually if only between 4–5 percent of ministers utilized the benefit.

Finally, the Board would like to share a practical concern. The Board has seen clearly that economics drive behavior in the congregation. The change to a menu-based plan that allows congregations to structure what is appropriate for their context has led to a substantial increase in participation in the Benefits Plan. Conversely, the number of new minister members in the plan continues to decline. While the Board supports the underlying values of the overture, employing organizations should retain the right of setting terms of call that are better suited for the needs of their situation and employees.

Comment Specific to Item 06-15, On Amending G-3.0303 to Include BOP Participation and Paid Family Leave

This overture recommends an amendment to the Book of Order to mandate minimum compensation terms for Christian educators and associate Christian educators that include participation in the Board of Pensions and paid family leave of at least twelve weeks. The Rationale only discusses the paid family leave part of the proposed amendment to the Book of Order. No mention is made as to what participation in Board of Pensions benefits programs is sought.

The Board’s response to the recommendation to mandate paid family leave of at least twelve weeks is addressed in response to Item 06-14 and the Board’s introductory comments.

While the Board does not believe a paid family leave is rightly within the scope of its charge, should the General Assembly request the Board to implement such a plan based on the request in this overture, it would need to charge annual dues to fund the benefit. Based on median pastors’ income of $58,000, the cost of such a program would exceed $5 million annually if only between 4–5 percent of ministers utilized the benefit. Adding certified Christian educators would increase that cost.

With respect to the overture’s recommendation to add “Board of Pensions participation,” the Board fully supports universal medical and retirement benefits coverage of all church workers and is actively working on developing solutions to their affordability with the hope of encouraging broader participation by the church’s employers. Employee benefits are human resource decisions to be determined by each church or other church-related employer based on the financial wherewithal of the employer and the needs of their employees.

The Board introduced benefit choice flexibility beginning in January 2017, following conversations with thousands of Presbyterians that led to a complete restructuring of the Benefits Plan. Since January 2017, the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) provides two participation options for churches: Pastor’s Participation, a bundled benefits program consisting of enrollment in the core Benefits Plan programs: the defined benefit pension, PPO medical, death, and disability plan, which is required for installed pastors and voluntary for all other ordained ministers of the Word and Sacrament, and a menu-based program of benefits selected by the employer and subsidized at levels determined by the employer, subject to certain plan minimums. The consisting of as little as elective deferrals to the 403(b)(9) Retirement Savings Plan to full benefits coverage for the defined benefits pension, PPO medical, and death and disability plan coverage equivalent to Pastor’s Participation.

The Board’s flexibility initiative has resulted in 19 percent growth in employees receiving benefits from the Board, the first growth in a generation. This experience leads the Board to conclude that the concept of mandating specific benefits packages for all employees is not realistic for church employers at this time.

If the intent of the overture is to mandate the equivalent of Pastor’s Participation benefits and dues, this must be defined as such and other questions are raised. The Board offers several additional programs for which participation is limited to ordained ministers of the Word and Sacrament. Is the intent of this overture to expand participation in those programs to Christian educators? What other components of ministers’ programs are sought? Would CREDO be included (at a cost of $5,000 per person per conference). How would median pension minimums and accruals be defined? What about educational debt relief (up to $25,000 per minister)? Would we include access to these benefits in non-parish settings with review by the presbytery? Would this proposal include qualification for Pathways to Renewal at $7,000 per person per year? Who should pay for the dues increase to subsidize this proposal because Christian educators as a group have a lower median effective salary than ministers? If the intent of the overture is to mandate that certified Christian educators have the privileges and responsibilities of ministers of Word and Sacrament, these questions inevitably shift into ecclesiastical decisions about the roles in ordered ministry.

Without defining what is meant by “Board of Pensions participation” or otherwise specifying the type of participation for Christian educators in the Benefits Plan programs, the projected cost of the overture for employers of Christian educators cannot be ascertained.

The Board supports a response to the overture that encourages all church employers to participate in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) programs and to consider offering menu-based coverage options, but allows each congregation or other employer to structure its employment policies and benefits to best fit its context.

Comment Specific to Item 06-17, On Establishing Minimum Guidelines for Paid Parental Leave for All Staff Throughout the Presbyterian Church (USA)

As noted in the Board’s other comments on the subject of parental leave, the Board defers to the 221st General Assembly (2014) and 222nd General Assembly (2016) policies, particularly the broader reference to family leave rather than parental leave. Current General Assembly policy urges all employers to provide family leave, not merely parental leave, as the standard. Family leave is significantly more expensive across an entire population as it includes care for aging parents and others and not simply birth, adoption, or long-term placement.

While the Board takes no position on this overture as it relates to the councils of the church, the Board is compelled to comment on the statements in the Rationale that the denomination should ask the Board of Pensions to establish a new benefit for parental leave. The specific comment to Item 06-013 addresses the Board’s concerns. In summary, the Board is not the employer of any church workers other than its own staff and has no mechanism to pay employees of congregations; each congregation is responsible for its own salary, wages, benefits, and leave policies. The Board estimates that fewer than 10 percent of eligible employees are members of the Benefits Plan. If a church or other church-related employer is unable to afford to provide its employees with Benefits Plan coverage under the new flexible menu-based option, it is unlikely that it would also be able to afford a family leave benefit. Thus, a mandate for Plan members would not in any way provide the universal coverage that the overture seeks.

Comment on Item 6-20, A Resolution to Require and Expand Family Leave Policies

The Board of Pensions supports family leave and urges all employers within the PC(USA) family to adopt appropriate family leave policies as defined by the General Assembly. The General Assembly has addressed this issue in two policy statements. The 221st General Assembly (2014) encouraged presbyteries and churches to create parental level policies with the minimum of six weeks and 100 percent pay. The 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Item 05-10, acted to urge “the six agencies of the General Assembly to evaluate leaves of absence, considering at least six weeks paid leave as a minimum for new parents for the birth or adoption of, or to care for, a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance” (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 292). For this 223rd General Assembly (2018), the Board of Pensions responded to Item 05-10 and reported the employment policies were reviewed, and are in full compliance with the General Assembly resolution.

[The assembly approved Item 06-16. See pp. 70, 73.]

The Presbytery of Western North Carolina overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Amend G-3.0104 by adding the following statement as the last paragraph of that section to read as follows:

“No congregation, session, presbytery, synod, or national office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), nor any individual acting on behalf of or in an official capacity for the above institutions, shall publicly endorse or oppose, or otherwise encourage or discourage others to vote for or against an individual running for public office.”

Rationale

In his letter to the church in Rome, Paul reminds believers who sometimes disagree that “... each of us will be accountable to God. Let us therefore no longer pass judgment on one another, but resolve instead never to put a stumbling block or hindrance in the way of another” (Rom. 14:12–13). Likewise, the Apostle Peter urges Christians as servants of God, to “live as free people, yet do not use your freedom as a pretext for evil” (1 Pet. 2:16). As the church seeks to learn anew how to appropriately engage with society, opportunities for growth abound as do opportunities to create more harm than good.

Since 1954, the Johnson Amendment has been a provision in the United States tax code prohibiting charitable organizations, including churches, from endorsing or opposing political candidates. This allows for charitable organizations to qualify for tax exemption and qualifies donations to these organizations as tax-exempt. In recent years, there has been discussion regarding the repeal of this amendment; those in favor of repeal claim that the amendment infringes on the first amendment rights of clergy and other leaders of religious and charitable organizations while those in favor of maintaining the statute fear that a repeal would lead to religious and charitable organizations becoming safe-havens for tax-exempt and un-reported political contributions.

While full repeal of the Johnson Amendment has not yet come to fruition, action has been taken to loosen the interpretation and implementation of the statute when churches and secular charitable organizations are found to be in violation.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has long supported the notion of the separation of church and state. We can see this throughout our Foundations of Presbyterian Polity. Section F-3.0101a and b affirms that “God alone is Lord of the conscience,” and that “We do not even wish to see any religious constitution aided by the civil power, further than may be necessary for protection and security, and at the same time, be equal and common to all others.” Section F-3.0105 states that “… we also believe that there are truths and forms with respect to which men of good characters and principles may differ. And in all these we think it the duty both of private Christians and societies to exercise mutual forbearance toward each other.” If a council or officer aligns themselves for, or against, a particular candidate, then they risk becoming a political body, rather than a theological one. In the current hyper-partisan political climate, it is paramount that the church maintain the ability to speak with authenticity and authority to all points of the political spectrum. To publicly and explicitly endorse or oppose a political candidate would compromise the ability of the church to do so. As is written in the Theological Declaration of Barmen, “We reject the false doctrine, as though the church could and would have to acknowledge as a source of its proclamation, apart from and besides this one Word of God, still other events and powers, figures and truths, as God’s revelation” (Book of Confessions, 8.12). “We reject the false doctrine, as though the church were permitted to abandon the form of its message and order to its own pleasure or to changes in prevailing ideological and political conviction,” (8.18). And finally, “We reject the false doctrine, as though the church, apart from this ministry, could and were permitted to give to itself, or to allow to be given to it, special leaders vester with ruling powers” (Ibid., 8.21). Endorsing or opposing specific political candidates puts the church in danger of becoming havens for tax-exempt and un-reported contributions.

While it is clear that the principles of this overture are present in abundance throughout the Book of Order and Book of Confessions, there is no explicit guidance offered to governing bodies or to those in leadership positions regarding endorsing or opposing candidates running for political office. This amendment to the Book of Order precludes such activity while still allowing for churches and leaders to actively engage with secular issues that touch on the life of faith, to work towards bringing God’s reign of justice and peace ever closer to reality.

Advice on Item 06-16—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 223rd General Assembly to disapprove Item 06-16.
The Presbytery of Western North Carolina summarizes the history of the “Johnson Amendment,” and anticipates change to that statute. Because the Johnson Amendment has not yet been revoked or altered, it is premature for the assembly to address anticipated statutory change. The overture would reverse long-standing foundational principles of our denomination and have long-reaching effects on the church.

Individual Discernment and Diversity of Religious Belief

Presbyterians begin with a firm and fundamental belief in the private discernment of religious belief. Section F-3.0101 sets forth and affirms the historic principle that “God alone is Lord of the conscience” and that “in all matters that respect religion” we consider the rights of private judgment … as universal and inalienable.” Holy Scriptures are the only rule of faith, and church power in matters of religious belief is limited as explained in F-3.0107. This first historic principle of church order (F-3.0101) was affirmed and explained in the policy statement, “God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience.” The principle that God alone is Lord of the conscience both reflects and underlies many other foundational and confessional statements in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“Religious bodies and people of faith hold to a wide variety of convictions, ideas, and values that make important contributions to the shape and strength of public life. That life has been shaped by individuals and groups that have sought to create new forms, sustain traditional ones, challenge existing ideologies and reform or resist unjust institutions. Participation is thus viewed by the government sometimes as a blessing and at other times as a threat” (God Alone, p. 48; see also F-1.404). Because the individual is the bearer of conscience, it does not matter whether others of the same faith make the same conscientious claim. God Alone, p. 19. “Religious tolerance and pluralism are our political and societal norm. We do not perfectly achieve that norm and intolerance has not been eliminated…” (God Alone, p. 7).

Formation of Conscience in Community

While Presbyterians emphasize individual belief, we also recognize the importance of community and our shared expression of belief. Discourse and expressions of diversity within the church are important to formation of religious conscience. As Presbyterians, we recognize that “The formation of conscience occurs in community, but its exercise is very often finally an individual matter” (God Alone, p. 19). It is a fundamental principle for our church and our country that “The individual’s right to believe cannot be divorced from the right to exercise that belief in the company and community of others. For nearly every human being, the right to practice religion only as a solitary individual is virtually no right at all” (God Alone, p. 12). “The exercise of individual and corporate conscience must be affirmed as an integral aspect of religious liberty.”

Separation of Church and State

The freedom to express religious views in public is as important as the freedom to determine religious beliefs for oneself. For Reformed Christians, “faith demands engagement in the secular order and involvement in the political realm” (God Alone, p. 48). The so-called “separation between church and state” is “particularly misleading when used to advocate the separation of religion from politics or from any other dimension of the public order. The First Amendment has never meant separation of religion from community or separation of the church from public life. On their face, the religion clauses [of the U.S. Constitution] constitute an absolute prohibition on government participation in religious life; there is no hint that that barrier was even thought to isolate religion from the life of the republic” (God Alone, pp. 47–48).

Responsibility for Involvement in Public Life

The freedom and responsibility to express religious and moral views in public is an important part of our denominational principles and history. The Gospel demands that we share our faith and that we seek to be a community of faith witnessing to God’s good news and Christ’s teachings to the world in words and deeds. According to the Reformed tradition and standards of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), “it is a limitation and denial of faith not to seek its expression in both a personal and public manner, in such ways as will not only influence, but transform the public order and involvement in the political realm” (God Alone, p. 48). This principle reflects our foundational statements (F-1.0301, F-1.0304, F-1.0404), other parts of the Book of Order (e.g., W-5.0304), and our long-standing and important history of social witness to world.

Endorsement or Opposition to Political Candidates

“For these reasons, limitations upon the freedom of religious bodies to participate in public life are illegitimate and unconstitutional. The church is bound to reject any regulation limiting church advocacy or particular legislation or endorsement of candidates, or establishing religious qualifications for office holders” (God Alone, p. 50). Over the centuries, Presbyterians have stood up and spoken out against those who would silence the church and the faithful.

Internal Revenue Code provisions that limit tax-exempt religious organization from devoting “substantial” activity to attempts to influence legislation or participate or intervene in political campaigns on behalf of any candidate for public office, as well as recent public debate, heighten concerns about religious discourse about public life. There is a difference between discussion of issues and candidates, on one hand, and intervention in campaigns on behalf of specific candidates on the other” (God Alone, p. 50).

The 200th General Assembly (1988) specifically affirmed that: “We recognize that speaking out on issues will sometimes constitute implicit support or opposition to particular candidates or parties, where policy and platform differences are clearly drawn. Since such differences are the vital core of the political process, church participation should not be curtailed on that account; but we believe that it is generally unwise and imprudent for the church explicitly to support or oppose specific candidates, except in unusual circumstances” (God Alone, p. 50).

Each council should be mindful of these foundational principles and historical practice. “It is easy to step from advocating our vision to seeking to enforce it, from protecting religious liberty to requiring ‘right’ belief and action. The church must advocate its positions on public issues, but it should not seek to exercise political authority in its own right” (God Alone, p. 50).

Endnotes
1. God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience is a policy statement of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) adopted by the 200th General Assembly (1988), and affirmed or cited by numerous subsequent General Assemblies and entities of the church. Hereafter “God Alone.”
2. Section F-1.0301 states the “Calling of the Church” is to be a community of faith, a community of hope, a community of love, and a community of witness. “The Great Ends of the Church” (F-1.0304) include “the promotion of social righteousness; and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world.” Section F-1.0404 explains the “Church seeks a new openness to God's mission in the world.”
3. See, e.g., the Theological Declaration of Barmen and the Confession of 1967, which can be found in the Book of Confessions.
4. “The church is always obliged to respect claims of conscience lest it frustrate efforts to obey the will of God. We need not agree with the specific dictates of another’s conscience to respect and support the right to exercise that conscience. Paul told Christians that they were freed from Jewish dietary laws, but if the conscience of another is offended by eating certain foods, ‘for conscience sake—I mean his conscience, not yours—do not eat it’ (1 Corinthians 10:28–29). The obligation to respect the exercise of conscience is not only a dynamic of life within the church; it is both a demand and a dilemma of the First Amendment’s protection of religious freedom” (God Alone, p. 18).

The elimination of the “Johnson Amendment” was a primary goal the “Free Speech Fairness Act” https://www.congress.gov/bill/114th-congress/house-bill/6195, which would allow endorsement or opposition to candidates of political parties, politicizing both the pulpit and church organizations as recipients of tax-deductible funds for partisan purposes.

The General Assembly spoke to the issues involved in the Tax Justice policy of 2014, reaffirming the principles behind the current 501.c.3 category, and further addressing the abuse of the 501.c.4 category of “social welfare institutions” for political purposes and personal enrichment:

Rules governing tax-exempt “social welfare organizations” (501(c)(4)s) should exclude or strictly limit the eligibility of donations for partisan political purposes, parties and candidates, and the individual and corporate donors to or through such organizations should be made public due to their influence on the political process (http://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/acswp/pdf/acswp_tax_justice_42.pdf, p. 4).

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) addressed this matter even more directly, responding to Supreme Court decisions in the Citizens United and Voting Rights Act cases, which intensified the role of money in politics:

[The Assembly:] Endorses the continuing prohibition of partisan political endorsements by religious organizations or their leadership and other measures to respect both religious liberty and the separation of church and state. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) strongly supports the freedom of religious organizations to speak on matters of policy, but personal endorsements and partisan ties may present the appearance of or opportunity for collusion, special treatment, and the violation of nonprofit tax status. https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/Election-Protection-and-Integrity-in-Campaign-Finance-2016-ACSWP.pdf, pp. 2–3)

Theological issues around this question are addressed in Item 11-16 before this assembly, Honest Patriotism. While we appreciate the overture proponents’ invocation of The Theological Declaration of Barmen, perhaps the core understanding of the need for church/state differentiation is reflected in The Confession of 1967: “... Although nations may serve God’s purposes in history, the church which identifies the sovereignty of any one nation or any one way of life with the cause of God denies the Lordship of Christ and betrays its calling” (Book of Confessions, 9.45).

On Establishing Minimum Guidelines for Paid Parental Leave for All Staff Throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including Pastors, Certified Christian Educators, and Certified Associate Christian Educators—From the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area.

The Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to:

1. Create (or amend existing) compensation guidelines for paid parental leave for all staff working under the General Assembly’s jurisdiction, where

   a. this benefit is available to all parents of a new child, regardless of how the child came to be in the family (including, but not limited to, birth, adoption, and fostering);

   b. at least twelve weeks of parental leave are fully paid;

   c. full leave is given in the case of miscarriage, still birth, or infant death; and

   d. if two parents are present, parental leave may be taken concurrently or consecutively.

2. Strongly encourage all councils of the church that they also implement similar minimum compensation guidelines for paid parental leave for all staff and personnel under their own jurisdictions.

3. Use its authority to review the acts of lower councils (G-3.0101; G-3.0108) to

   a. inquire of all synods if they themselves have adopted minimum guidelines for paid parental leave for all staff working under their jurisdictions that are “prudent and equitable, and … faithful to the mission of the whole church” (c.f., Book of Order, G-3.0108a);
b. inquire of each synod if it has similarly reviewed each presbytery’s paid parental leave policy for all personnel under its jurisdiction (e.g., all staff and installed pastors), and whether each presbytery under each synod’s jurisdiction has similarly reviewed each session’s paid parental leave policy for all personnel under its jurisdiction (e.g., all staff including Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators).

Rationale

Introduction

Our presbytery feels that establishing paid parental leave throughout our denomination, including all of the scenarios listed above, is necessary.

Too many leaders and staff in our denomination who are also trying to start families have suffered too much under inequitable practices as a result of having no standard paid parental leave. Paid parental leave is part of standard benefits packages in many professions outside the church where many members of the PC(USA) work, and as well as for pastors in some of our sibling denominations:

• United Methodist Church (UMC): Congregations are required to give eight weeks off, fully paid, and conferences (Methodist equivalent of presbyteries) pay for pulpit supply during those eight weeks. A pastor may request up to twelve to thirteen weeks off, although those additional weeks can be unpaid, also during which congregations become responsible for pulpit supply.

• Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA): While there is no denomination-wide parental leave policy, each synod (Lutheran equivalent of presbytery) adopts its own policy. Most synods suggest, but do not require, that pastors be granted six weeks off. Congregations are required to find and fund pulpit supply.

This overture began as a set of two overtures, to propose amending two sections of the Book of Order [Text to be added is shown as italics.]:

• To amend the last sentence of G-2.0804 as follows: “The call [to pastors] shall include participation in the benefits plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including both pension and medical coverage, or any successor plan approved by the General Assembly, and paid parental leave of at least 12 weeks.

• To amend G-3.0303c as follows: “establish minimum compensation standards for pastoral calls and Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators within the presbytery, to include Board of Pensions participation and paid parental leave of at least twelve weeks.”

Instead of amending the Book of Order this year, and instead of advocating for only pastors and certified educators, this overture proposes that the General Assembly establish this benefit for all personnel under its jurisdiction, strongly encourage all councils of the church to do the same, and then use each council’s authority to review the acts of a lower council to inquire whether all synods have adopted similar paid parental leave benefits for their own personnel, and whether each synod has reviewed the paid parental leave policies of all presbyteries under its jurisdiction, and whether each presbytery under each synod’s jurisdiction has reviewed the paid parental leave policies of all sessions under its jurisdiction. Our Book of Order describes administrative review as a process where higher councils may question the substance of acts of lower councils, e.g., not merely “checking a box” to see if a lower council has adopted and implemented a sexual misconduct policy (c.f., G-3.0106), but to review the substance of such policies to inquire (perhaps going so far as to ask tough, pointed questions) if the proceedings of a lower council “have been correctly recorded, have been in accordance with this Constitution, have been prudent and equitable, and have been faithful to the mission of the whole church” (G-3.0108).

However, instead of waiting for all councils of our denomination to act, and even longer for all to go through the formal administrative review process, it may be that the quickest way to establish paid parental leave for all leaders and staff in our denomination would be to ask the Board of Pensions to establish this new benefit, and charge additional dues as necessary. According to the Board of Pensions (BOP) (personal communication), an average of 254 children under age 1 (by birth or adoption) were added to the BOP benefits plan each year between 2012–2016.

In recent years, efforts to establish paid parental leave policies for church professionals and staff have been woefully inadequate throughout our denomination:

• The 221st General Assembly (2014) encouraged presbyteries and churches to create parental leave policies with the minimum of six weeks and 100 percent pay without using other forms of paid leave.¹

• The 222nd General Assembly (2016) also voted to encourage the six agencies of the General Assembly (Board of Pensions, Foundation, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., Presbyterian Mission Agency, and Presbyterian Publishing Corporation) to improve their paid parental leave policies in accordance with the advice of the 221st General Assembly (2014).2

The time to act to establish paid parental leave benefits for all staff of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is now.

Theological Basis

As a denomination, we have affirmed the importance of supporting families. However, in practice, congregations are put in the precarious position of choosing between either taking care of a new family, or taking care of the financial well-being of the congregation. With respect to pastors, for example, many churches cannot afford paid parental leave for their pastor(s) in addition to the cost of pulpit supply, yet many pastors cannot afford to be unpaid when they welcome a new member into the family. These choices are difficult ones that often lead to solutions that leave either the staff member or the congregation neglected, and lack witness to the love God, Parent of us all, has for the world. It is also vital to support staff and leaders in small, struggling, or otherwise financially insecure churches.

Without a paid parental leave policy, the PC(USA) forces parents to make a choice between proper health care for themselves and their children, and adequate income to provide for their families. Without a paid parental leave policy, we uphold false narratives that describe men as “bread-winners” and require them to leave the child-raising to their spouses. Without a paid parental leave policy, we continue to uphold antiquated and unequal traditions that not only reinforce gender stereotypes, bringing harm to families and children, but fail to account for the many different kinds of families our denomination lifts up and celebrates.

However, in our Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, we confess as a church, that the Holy Spirit:

... calls women and men to all ministries of the Church.
In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced,
and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.
In gratitude to God, empowered by the Spirit, we strive to serve Christ in our daily tasks and to live holy and joyful lives, even as we watch for God’s new heaven and new earth, praying, “Come, Lord Jesus!” (Book of Confessions, 11.4)

With a paid parental leave policy, we have the opportunity to live into this calling of courage in our ministries and in our daily lives as we grow our families and support one another in love. With a paid parental leave policy, we unmask the idolatry of unequal practices and are free to live holy and joyful lives—lives wherein all parents can bond with their children without fear of destitution, and the whole community can grow in love.

Supporting Statistics

The lack of any kind of paid parental leave creates problems for both parents because, while women are medically cleared to return to work after about at least six weeks (if birth went perfectly), the majority of daycares refuse children before six weeks of age. This puts parents in a lose-lose situation as they must risk their health, their child’s care, and their families’ overall well-being if proper leave is unavailable. Elsewhere in creation, we observe that God’s creatures naturally keep their offspring close early in life.3 This policy simply acknowledges the health and financial needs of a new or growing family.

Numerous studies have shown the benefits of paid parental leave for both parents and their children. An increase of 10 weeks paid maternal leave has been associated with a 10 percent decrease in neonatal and infant mortality rate,4 and parental leave has been shown to be a cost-effective method for improving child health more generally.5 However, the benefits to child health and the decrease in infant mortality are only seen with an increase in paid parental leave.6 Moreover, studies that have analyzed the long-term benefits of paid parental leave have found benefits to women’s mental health in older age and a decrease in high school dropout rates among their children.7

Returning to the example of pastors: At least half of the contemporary seminary graduates are women, and a large portion of graduates (male and female) are in their child-bearing years.8 Some of these female colleagues must negotiate lower pay to receive adequate paid maternity leave in their calls, if they can get the maternity leave. Some of our female colleagues are being told they must prove they are worth the maternity leave. Many men have no leave guaranteed at all. This is a matter of gender justice in our denomination. Because women are the ones giving birth, most studies have focused on the relationship between a mother and her child. However, increases in paid parental leave continue to be met by increases in use of that leave among all parents, allowing parents of all genders to spend more time on their child’s care, which has demonstrated health benefits for the child. Indeed, it has been shown that when fathers—or non-birthing parents—are offered comparable paid parental leave, the length of leave they take increases and their involvement in a child’s care after the leave period increases.\(^9\) It is wholly regrettable that non-birthing parents (historically, men) have been denied such crucial bonding and care time with their families for so long.

Across the United States, a mere 14 percent of people have access to paid family leave.\(^10\) As stated above, this justice issue looms large for many workers, and the PC(USA) is not currently acting as a faithful leader. In working toward a solution, it is the profound hope of many young church staff and leaders that the denomination will see the opportunity to lead the world to a more faithful, loving approach to family leave.

Comment on Item 06-17—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions (Board) is an agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), established by the church under a separate civil charter as the corporate body legally responsible for designing and administering the Benefits Plan and the Assistance and Education programs for the ministers and lay employees of PC(USA) churches and associated employers. The Board is required by law and its governance and plan documents to administer these programs and invest their funds for the sole and exclusive benefit of the members and their beneficiaries. The Board is exclusively managed and controlled by its board of directors who are elected by the General Assembly. The Board maintains a close cooperative relationship with the other General Assembly agencies.

The Board supports family leave and urges all employers within the PC(USA) family to adopt appropriate family leave policies as defined by the General Assembly. The General Assembly has addressed this issue in two policy statements. The 221st General Assembly (2014) encouraged presbyteries and churches to create parental level policies with the minimum of led to a substantial increase in participation in the Benefits Plan. Conversely, the number of new minister members in the plan congregation. The change to a menu-based plan that allows congregations to structure what is appropriate for their context has none of which include this salary replacement benefit.

If the intent of the overture (in contrast to the words) is for the Board to provide a family leave benefit, there is no source of funds held by the Board to provide for the payments this overture contemplates. All Board funds have designated purposes, none of which include this salary replacement benefit.

While the Board fully supports the underlying values of Items 06-13, 06-14, 06-15, and 06-17, the Board advises the disapproval of all four items, due to numerous practical and technical concerns. Two previous General Assemblies addressed recommendations on this subject and those actions should be ratified and affirmed.

Comment Specific to Item 06-13, On Instructing the Board of Pensions to Include Twelve Weeks of Parental Leave as Part of the Benefits Package

This overture recommends that the General Assembly instruct the Board of Pensions to provide twelve weeks of paid parental leave to all members of the Benefits Plan.

First, the issue of parental leave is an employer-based decision and must remain so for legal and practical reasons. The Board does not make human resource policy for the church or the church-related employers. The 221st General Assembly (2014) and 222nd General Assembly (2016) addressed the church’s human resource policy on parental and family leave and has defined a position to be urged for all bodies of the church. The Board is not the employer of any church workers other than its own staff and has no mechanism to pay employees of churches and other PC(USA) employers who enroll their ministers and lay employees in the Benefits Plan. Each congregation and other church employer is responsible for salary, wages, benefits, and leave policies.

Second, the concept of mandating benefits for all employees is in direct contradiction to the concept of a menu based plan that allows each congregation or other employer to structure its employment policies and benefits to best fit its context. The Board is actively working to develop solutions to the affordability of medical and retirement benefits for church employers so that broader coverage will be provided to all church employees. The Board introduced benefit choice flexibility beginning in January 2017, following conversations with thousands of Presbyterians that led to a complete restructuring of the Benefits Plan. This innovation has resulted in 19 percent growth in employees receiving benefits from the Board, the first growth in a generation. Regrettably, and notwithstanding these changes to the Benefits Plan programs, many churches and other church-related employers do not enroll their employees for benefits with the Board of Pensions, so the benefits proposed in the overture does not provide a universal solution to the paid leave concern for many church employees.

Third, earlier General Assembly actions addressed “family leave,” not simply “parental leave.” The former is significantly more expensive across an entire population as it includes care for aging parents and others and not simply birth, adoption, or long-term placement. Current General Assembly policy urges all employers to provide family leave, not merely parental leave, as the standard.

Finally, there is no source of funds within the Board to provide for the payment of this type of family leave. All Board funds have designated purposes, none of which include this use. While the Board does not believe this overture is rightly within the scope of its charge, should the Board decide to implement such a plan based on the request in this Overture, it would require charging dues annually to provide a funding source. Based on median pastors’ income of $58,000 and the median lay income of $41,000, the cost of a family leave program would exceed $10 million annually if only between 4–5 percent of employees (ministers and laity) utilized the benefit.

Comment Specific to Item 06-14, On Amending G-2.0804, “Terms of Call,” to Include Paid Family Leave

As written, this overture has no impact on the Board. No mention is made as to source of funding and the Board is not mentioned in implementation. In which case the Board defers to the General Assembly to take whatever action it deems appropriate for congregations’ terms of call for installed pastors.

If the intent of the overture (in contrast to the words) is for the Board to provide a family leave benefit, there is no source of funds held by the Board to provide for the payments this overture contemplates. All Board funds have designated purposes, none of which include this salary replacement benefit.

While the Board does not believe this overture is rightly within the scope of its charge, should the General Assembly request the Board to implement such a plan based on the request in the overture, it would need to charge annual dues to fund the benefit. Based on median pastors’ income of $58,000, the cost of such a program would exceed $5 million annually if only between 4–5 percent of ministers utilized the benefit.

Finally, the Board would like to share a practical concern. The Board has seen clearly that economics drive behavior in the congregation. The change to a menu-based plan that allows congregations to structure what is appropriate for their context has led to a substantial increase in participation in the Benefits Plan. Conversely, the number of new minister members in the plan... continues to decline. While the Board supports the underlying values of the overture, employing organizations should retain the right of setting terms of call that are better suited for the needs of their situation and employees.

Comment Specific to Item 06-15, On Amending G-3.0303 to Include BOP Participation and Paid Family Leave

This overture recommends an amendment to the Book of Order to mandate minimum compensation terms for Christian educators and associate Christian educators that include participation in the Board of Pensions and paid family leave of at least twelve weeks. The Rationale only discusses the paid family leave part of the proposed amendment to the Book of Order. No mention is made as to what participation in Board of Pensions benefits programs is sought.

The Board’s response to the recommendation to mandate paid family leave of at least twelve weeks is addressed in response to Item 06-14 and the Board’s introductory comments.

While the Board does not believe a paid family leave is rightly within the scope of its charge, should the General Assembly request the Board to implement such a plan based on the request in this overture, it would need to charge annual dues to fund the benefit. Based on median pastors’ income of $58,000, the cost of such a program would exceed $5 million annually if only between 4–5 percent of ministers utilized the benefit. Adding certified Christian educators would increase that cost.

With respect to the overture’s recommendation to add “Board of Pensions participation,” the Board fully supports universal medical and retirement benefits coverage of all church workers and is actively working on developing solutions to their affordability with the hope of encouraging broader participation by the church’s employers. Employee benefits are human resource decisions to be determined by each church or other church-related employer based on the financial wherewithal of the employer and the needs of their employees.

The Board introduced benefit choice flexibility beginning in January 2017, following conversations with thousands of Presbyterians that led to a complete restructuring of the Benefits Plan. Since January 2017, the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) provides two participation options for churches: Pastor’s Participation, a bundled benefits program consisting of enrollment in the core Benefits Plan programs: the defined benefit pension, PPO medical, death, and disability plan, which is required for installed pastors and voluntary for all other ordained ministers of the Word and Sacrament, and a menu-based program of benefits selected by the employer and subsidized at levels determined by the employer, subject to certain plan minimums. The menu-based participation options allow an employer to offer its non-installed ministers and lay employees a benefits program consisting of as little as elective deferrals to the 403(b)(9) Retirement Savings Plan to full benefits coverage for the defined benefits pension, PPO medical, and death and disability plan coverage equivalent to Pastor’s Participation.

The Board’s flexibility initiative has resulted in 19 percent growth in employees receiving benefits from the Board, the first growth in a generation. This experience leads the Board to conclude that the concept of mandating specific benefits packages for all employees is not realistic for church employers at this time.

If the intent of the overture is to mandate the equivalent of Pastor’s Participation benefits and dues, this must be defined as such and other questions are raised. The Board offers several additional programs for which participation is limited to ordained ministers of the Word and Sacrament. Is the intent of this overture to expand participation in those programs to Christian educators? What other components of ministers’ programs are sought? Would CREDO be included (at a cost of $5,000 per person per conference). How would median pension minimums and accruals be defined? What about educational debt relief (up to $25,000 per minister)? Would we include access to these benefits in non-parish settings with review by the presbytery? Would this proposal include qualification for Pathways to Renewal at $7,000 per person per year? Who should pay for the dues increase to subsidize this proposal because Christian educators as a group have a lower median effective salary than ministers? If the intent of the overture is to mandate that certified Christian educators have the privileges and responsibilities of ministers of Word and Sacrament, these questions inevitably shift into ecclesiastical decisions about the roles in ordered ministry.

Without defining what is meant by “Board of Pensions participation” or otherwise specifying the type of participation for Christian educators in the Benefits Plan programs, the projected cost of the overture for employers of Christian educators cannot be ascertained.

The Board supports a response to the overture that encourages all church employers to participate in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) programs and to consider offering menu-based coverage options, but allows each congregation or other employer to structure its employment policies and benefits to best fit its context.

Comment Specific to Item 06-17, On Establishing minimum Guidelines for Paid Parental Leave for All Staff Throughout the Presbyterian Church (USA)

As noted in the Board’s other comments on the subject of parental leave, the Board defers to the 221st General Assembly (2014) and 222nd General Assembly (2016) policies, particularly the broader reference to family leave rather than parental leave. Current General Assembly policy urges all employers to provide family leave, not merely parental leave, as the standard.
Family leave is significantly more expensive across an entire population as it includes care for aging parents and others and not simply birth, adoption, or long-term placement.

While the Board takes no position on this overture as it relates to the councils of the church, the Board is compelled to comment on the statements in the Rationale that the denomination should ask the Board of Pensions to establish a new benefit for parental leave. The specific comment to Item 06-013 addresses the Board’s concerns. In summary, the Board is not the employer of any church workers other than its own staff and has no mechanism to pay employees of congregations; each congregation is responsible for its own salary, wages, benefits, and leave policies. The Board estimates that fewer than 10 percent of eligible employees are members of the Benefits Plan. If a church or other church-related employer is unable to afford to provide its employees with Benefits Plan coverage under the new flexible menu-based option, it is unlikely that it would also be able to afford a family leave benefit. Thus, a mandate for Plan members would not in any way provide the universal coverage that the overture seeks.

Comment on Item 6-20, A Resolution to Require and Expand Family Leave Policies

The Board of Pensions supports family leave and urges all employers within the PC(USA) family to adopt appropriate family leave policies as defined by the General Assembly. The General Assembly has addressed this issue in two policy statements. The 221st General Assembly (2014) encouraged presbyteries and churches to create parental level policies with the minimum of six weeks and 100 percent pay. The 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Item 05-10, acted to urge “the six agencies of the General Assembly to evaluate leaves of absence, considering at least six weeks paid leave as a minimum for new parents for the birth or adoption of, or to care for, a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance” (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 292). For this 223rd General Assembly (2018), the Board of Pensions responded to Item 05-10 and reported the employment policies were reviewed, and are in full compliance with the General Assembly resolution.

Comment on Item 06-17—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) acknowledges that the procedures of employment matter. Unfortunately, in the area of parental and family leave, the denominational instruction is not as clear. The committee continues to support actions from the 221st and 222nd General Assemblies (2014) and (2016) concerning the suggested family leave policies that, due to the PC(USA) governance structure, are often left at the discretion of the governing bodies that are responsible for employment. Often governing bodies and individual congregations do not have parental/family leave policies in place and must do so if and when the case arises (putting the individual requesting the leave in a precarious position). This can result in decision-making that focuses on the financial cost of the leave rather than the care of the leader and family. A PC(USA) policy would provide the framework for individuals needing parental or family leave. Committees on representation at the presbytery and synod levels or the committees tasked with such work should serve as a resource to their governing bodies concerning employment practices.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching from across the church in accordance with F-1.0403. Its constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

A Resolution to Amend the Book of Order, D-11.0403a—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend D-11.0403a as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“After careful deliberation, the session or permanent judicial commission shall vote on each charge separately and record the vote in its minutes. In order to find the accused guilty of a charge, the session or permanent judicial commission must find that the pertinent facts within that charge have been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt occurs... when the comparison and consideration of all the evidence compels an abiding conviction by clear and convincing evidence. Clear and convincing evidence occurs when it is substantially more likely than not that the material facts to prove the charge are true.”

Rationale

The standard of proof—“beyond a reasonable doubt”—is used in secular legal proceedings as the standard of proof in criminal cases. Requiring this level of proof in a church proceeding under the Rules of Discipline, particularly in a case involving sexual abuse, creates a daunting burden for those hearing the case and minimizes the lived experiences of victims.

It is this daunting burden and its hindering effects on cases of “sexual abuse of another person” (D-10.0401c) that cause us to call for “clear and convincing evidence” as the standard of proof instead.

There have been disciplinary cases involving ministers of Word and Sacrament who were accused of “sexual abuse of another person” in which the investigating committee found the witnesses credible (believable, trustworthy) and reliable (accurate), and were persuaded there was evidence sufficient to justify filing a charge of “sexual abuse of another person.” However, because of the high burden of D-11.0403a., committees declined to file the charge because they were not convinced they could prove the charge “beyond a reasonable doubt” at trial. Investigating committees in those situations are keenly aware of the cost to the governing body, i.e., a presbytery, should the case go to trial before a permanent judicial commission. Rather than working to obtain justice, the effort stops.

The uncertainty of the outcome due to the burden of proof plus the potential expense of a trial combine as powerful factors to inhibit cases going forth. These decisions being halted has resulted in adverse consequences for the survivors of the sexual abuse and others who were affected secondarily. Another dire consequence is that an offending pastor is not held accountable, and the governing body, i.e., presbytery, does not have the benefit of a finding of truth in a judicial case proceeding.

The PC(USA) may be the only mainline Protestant denomination to have this high standard, which reflects criminal statutes in secular law. (One lawyer reflecting on this in the 1990s for the then influential Alban Institute speculated that this standard was an artifact from the days of heresy trials when a guilty verdict could result in death.) A reasonable alternative is the standard of “clear and convincing evidence.” It is higher than “preponderance of the evidence,” which is typically used in secular civil cases, and sometimes understood as 51 percent of the evidence.

The “clear and convincing” language has been used in fact-finding inquiries, including by the PC(USA) (Final Report of the Independent Abuse Review Panel: https://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/iarp/pdfs/iarp_final_report.pdf, p. 504).

This standard requires that the evidence leads to a firm belief or conviction that it is highly probable that the charge is true. Some legal commentators assign 75 percent as the certainty required for this standard of proof.

It takes a lot of courage for persons who were sexually abused to come forward to their church and expose themselves to scrutiny and possible unwanted attention by filing a formal disciplinary accusation. It takes a lot of resilience and effort to participate in the protracted and difficult proceedings under the Rules of Discipline. The process does not encourage participation that is not serious, not well-intentioned, and not supported by evidence.

One fear in adopting “clear and convincing” might be that it will open a floodgate of claims. The fear of greatly incurred financial costs might be raised to object to the standard. It is a fear without substantiation to support it. It is more reasonable to anticipate that effectively holding accountable those who commit offenses in the church, especially those who commit the offense of “sexual abuse of another person,” is a reasonable, long-term investment in prevention. Not holding offenders accountable is an expensive risk-management strategy.

Another fear could be that it would invite false allegations. Since the 1990s when “sexual abuse of another person” was added to the Rules of Discipline, there have been only isolated instances of a malicious allegation. No statistics are maintained, but anecdotally the consensus among knowledgeable church officials is that such instances are quite few and will fall apart when an investigation committee performs its assignment with diligence.

Because we are the body of Jesus Christ, we need to consider the spiritual cost of not adjudicating legitimate cases of sexual abuse that do not lend themselves to the certainty of “beyond a reasonable doubt.” Failure to hold offenders accountable has resulted in loss of members (de-evangelism) and loss of our moral integrity and trustworthiness.

One effect of the “beyond a reasonable doubt” burden is that it can drive investigating committees to enter into plea deals with defendants who are guilty, but seek a lesser degree of censure in exchange for not mounting a defense at trial. This has resulted in disappointing outcomes in which the degree of censure that did not fit the nature of the disciplinary offense. A “clear and convincing” standard would encourage pursuit of a resolution based on the evidence and censures appropriate to the guilty behaviors.
It’s time to adopt a more realistic standard of proof that more closely conforms to the experiences of people victimized in our churches and better aligns with the Rules of Discipline.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-19

Comment on Item 06-19—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

OGA advises that all items, including Item 06-19, amending the Rules of Discipline, be referred to the Rules of Discipline Task Force, which is currently revising the Rules of Discipline as a whole and will report with suggested changes to the 224th General Assembly (2020).

Item 06-20

A Resolution to Require and Expand Family Leave Policies—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

1. Commend the Presbyterian Mission Agency for their improvements and expansions of its Family Leave Policy.

2. [Strongly urge and recommend] all synods, presbyteries, and congregations to create a Family Leave Policy that each member congregation can adopt, which includes at a minimum six [eight] [twelve] weeks paid leave [and an additional [six] [four] weeks unpaid leave] during a twelve-month period for new parents for the birth or adoption of or to care for a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.

3. Direct the other five agencies of the General Assembly (Board of Pensions, Foundation, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation) to improve their Family Leave Policies by the 224th General Assembly (2020) to reflect that which is equal to or better than the current Family Leave Policy of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

“[4. To direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to forward the details of its Family Leave Policies and other pertinent information to the synods, presbyteries, and congregations in order to facilitate and expedite the creation of fair and equitable family leave policies.]”

[Financial Implications: PILP $13,100; PPC $9,000. Total—$44,200]

Rationale

Quality Family Leave policies are clearly a gender justice concern, as caretaking still falls heavily on women. This is so, and perhaps even more likely, when inadequate policies create financially insecure situations for women and their families. When employers offer robust policies, not only women, but caretakers of all genders are granted security in times of such need, and broader participation of caretakers of all genders is more likely. This creates the potential not only for a more financially just situation for women and their families, but also for greater sharing of such responsibilities across gender lines.

In 2012, ACWC received feedback from Women’s Ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency as a result of listening visits done with women in leadership in the PC(USA) around the country. The first issue listed in the report was related to Family Leave policies, and this remains a concern for women today:

There is no consistency in regards to family leave policies. Some presbyteries have them for presbytery staff but not for congregations, for instance. Women have taken calls as single women, gotten married, become pregnant, and been told they have two weeks of sick leave. Some congregations rejoice with their pastor and are incredibly supportive, providing paid leave and a willingness to accommodate flexible schedules. However, this is not simply about maternity leave. There is a need for family leave policies for all church workers, as any illness of a family member may require leave time.1

The PC(USA) as an employer from the national level down to the local congregation has the opportunity to model just employment practices through Family Leave policies that encourage balance in life between work and family and are consistent with PC(USA) theology and policies on work and workers:

The church must seek to become a model employer by providing workers with adequate compensation, meaningful opportunities for participation in decision making, leisure time in which to participate in family and community life... The foundation upon which all just employment policies are built is access to employment at a level of compensation that allows people to live in dignity and security.... All conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions, should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well- being of households and families ... 2

Beyond the church’s call to model just policies for employees, paid leave increases worker productivity, improves loyalty and morale, and may improve worker retention, which ultimately saves money through reduced turnover costs.3
While initially concerned about increased cost to the agency, the Presbyterian Mission Agency ultimately determined that being faithful to their commitments to workers and their families meant providing more than they had prior to 2018. As of January 1, 2018, the Presbyterian Mission Agency implemented the following Family Leave Policy:

Presbyterian Mission Agency Paid Family and Medical Leave Policy Expansion—Effective 1/1/2018

The expansion provides for 4 weeks of 100% paid family or medical leave before an employee must use any of their paid time off, parental or disability benefits. Employees are eligible for the 4-week 100% paid leave once they meet the eligibility requirements for FMLA:

- Must be in conjunction with an approved Family Medical Leave (personal medical, family medical or parental leave) for leaves lasting 7 days or longer.
- Employees may use one 4-week 100% pay in a 12-month rolling period.
- Cannot be used for intermittent leave.
- Must work with HR and complete appropriate forms with required medical authorizations. The 4-week paid leave will not be activated until all forms have been completed and HR has been notified.

Example:

Donna goes out on parental leave for the birth of her child. Before she goes on leave she works with HR to get all paperwork completed (Leave Request Form, FMLA paperwork with doctor’s authorization.) She is approved for 12 weeks leave. FMLA tracking and 100% pay tracking starts on her first day of leave. She is paid 100% for the first 4 weeks. She is then paid 100% by using her available sick and vacation leave of 15 days. (She is keeping 10 vacation days for use later in the year.) So, she receives the first 7 weeks at 100% pay then goes to 60% pay for the balance of her leave, 5 weeks.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency has put into practice its commitment to just employment policies, and the other national agencies of the denomination should be doing the same. The ACWC advocates for six weeks of paid and six weeks of unpaid leave, but the Presbyterian Mission Agencies’ generous vacation and sick day allowances supplement the four weeks they offer. While the General Assembly cannot force synods, presbyteries, or congregations to do the same, our Presbyterian policy and reformed theology calls for ensuring that all workers are cared for in times of sickness as well as health.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-20

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 06-20.

For several decades, including before reunion, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has called for women and men to be equal partners in the work of the church. In the United States, however, the care for dependents, including but not limited to, children, often but not exclusively falls to the oversight of women. For many who care for dependents, the cost and logistics can be prohibitive to full participation in the life of the church. Instead of being a blessing, care for children and others can be a barrier to living into their call from God to participate in the life of the church. This results in caretakers self-selecting out of leadership and assuming responsibility for the church’s mission. Requiring councils at all levels—congregational, mid councils, and national—to have a dependent care policy will be an important step towards ensuring that caretaker members, frequently women, have equal opportunity for service to the church.

The rationale for Item 06-20 provides extensive evidence of the vital role that family leave policies play in the lives of women. This issue is absolutely crucial to implementing PC(USA) commitment to just and equal treatment of women in church... and society. If all governing bodies of the PC(USA) were to create family leave policies in accord with the terms in Recommendation 2 of Item 06-10, the caretaker could better consider and fulfill service in the church.

A 1965 PCUS statement reminded the church that women should be considered eligible for all elected officer positions. The statement also requires that the election process “shall be designed to provide for women on the same basis as men.”

In a 1971 UPCUSA statement, “men and women must act as equal partners and contribute to the ministry of the Church all the talent God has given them …” and “they [women] must accept all forms of service in the Church including leadership positions” In addition, the church is called to “challenge and change anything which interferes with a person’s full development and wholeness.”

A 1972 UPCUSA statement demonstrating the church’s awareness on the limited availability of quality childcare. This care for mothers with young children was not a new concern, but in the last four or more decades, the Presbyterian church to failed to live into its own call to support parents, traditionally viewed through the lens of motherhood, as an integral part of the life of the church.

In two 1999 PC(USA) statements, the church called the ordination of women to all offices in the church is reflected in “our belief that God works through all persons in a variety of ways without regard for a hierarchy based on gender.” In a second statement that year, the PC(USA) reaffirmed need for the full participation of women in the church so that “the image of God in women be fully recognized and valued.”

The 2001 “Resolution on the Ministry of Caregiving in Relation to Older Adults” approved at the 213th General Assembly (2001) affirms the corporate responsibility to care for those in need. Out of our vision of the church as a family and a recognition of changing social structures that has resulted in the kinship connectedness being stretched thin, the church is called to support through education and support of caregivers. However, this resolution stopped short of calling for councils to develop dependent care policies so that caregivers can participate in the church beyond the role of providing care for dependents.

The 2004 statement “Transforming Families” reminds the church that their duties to all people include “to provide for them, to keep them safe, to ensure that they will not be hungry or homeless, to prepare them for life, and to encourage their participation in the mission of the Triune God. In this way, families, individuals, and the entire church learn to live lives of service and love for the whole world.” In living into this vision, sessions were to review their programs and policies to ensure that they are family-friendly. Part of making your church family-friendly is to ensure that dependent care is available for any church event where caregivers are invited to participate. In Recommendation 3.h., all councils were to find flexible solutions and paid leave for those caring for dependents within their communities. This recommendation again does not extend to providing care for council activities so that caregivers can attend and fully participate in the life of the church.

Current FMLA (Family Medical Leave Allowance) guidelines call for a minimum of 12 weeks (6 weeks paid and 6 weeks unpaid). Item 06-20 calls upon all levels of the denomination to craft Family Leave Policies to cover all those employed, not just pastors or those employed by the six agencies. By requiring all employees to be covered, it reflects the reality that not all employees would be covered by terms of call as defined by the Book of Order. This mandate would also not require presbyteries to vote on constitutional changes, which would delay implementation.

Both the Presbyteries of Boston and the Twin Cities should be commended for submitting overtures to expand parental leave to twelve paid weeks. Item 06-14 cites the Brief Statement of Faith that “calls women and men to all ministries of the church.” Unless attention is paid and strategies applied to remedy caregiver inequalities between women and men, the PC(USA) will not be a place where women and men are truly called to all ministries of the church.

ACWC, in its continuing study of and advocacy for justice in family leave policies, recommends a minimum of six weeks paid and six weeks unpaid leave, and directs five church agencies to create family leave policies that are equal to or better than the policy of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. They applaud the PMA for putting into practice just employment policies and urge the rest of the church to do the same or better. Indeed, there will be concerns about increased costs, but the PMA “ultimately determined that being faithful to their commitments to workers and their families meant providing more than they had prior to 2018.” The Board of Pensions advises disapproval of Items 06-13, 06-14, 06-15, 06-17, and 06-20, in part for “numerous practical and technical concerns.” ACSWP recognizes that these concerns often drive decision-making; however, a church is an institution unlike any other. Practical and technical concerns are meant to be overcome in the promotion of peace, love, and justice. Therefore, ACSWP advises approval of Item 06-20 for both its practical and justice-oriented improvement of family leave policies of the PC(USA).

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-20

Advice & Counsel on Item 06-20—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 06-20

Comment on Item 06-20—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions (Board) is an agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), established by the church under a separate civil charter as the corporate body legally responsible for designing and administering the Benefits Plan and the Assistance and Education programs for the ministers and lay employees of PC(USA) churches and associated employers. The Board is required by law and its governance and plan documents to administer these programs and invest their funds for the sole and exclusive benefit of the members and their beneficiaries. The Board is exclusively managed and controlled by its board of directors who are elected by the General Assembly. The Board maintains a close cooperative relationship with the other General Assembly agencies.

The Board supports family leave and urges all employers within the PC(USA) family to adopt appropriate family leave policies as defined by the General Assembly. The General Assembly has addressed this issue in two policy statements. The 221st General Assembly (2014) encouraged presbyteries and churches to create parental level policies with the minimum of six weeks and 100 percent pay. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) acted to urge “the six agencies of the General Assembly to evaluate leaves of absence, considering at least six weeks paid leave as a minimum for new parents for the birth or adoption of, or to care for, a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance” (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 292). In response to the 2016 action, the Board of Pensions reviewed its employment policies and is in full compliance with the General Assembly resolution.

While the Board fully supports the underlying values of Items 06-13, 06-14, 06-15, and 06-17, the Board advises the disapproval of all four items, due to numerous practical and technical concerns. Two previous General Assemblies addressed recommendations on this subject and those actions should be ratified and affirmed.

[The assembly approved Item 06-21. See pp. 69, 73.]

Advisory Committee on the Constitution Findings and Recommendations as to Request 18-01.

Proposed Authoritative Interpretation: G-3.0104, G-3.0201

Request 18-01 comes from the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina, which asks whether a non-PC(USA) minister can moderate a session in those cases where the presbytery has accepted these pastors who have “satisfied the requirements of preparation ... [as] established by the presbytery’s own rule” as temporary members (G-2.0506).

There is no direct statement in the Constitution that authorizes a minister who is not a member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to serve as moderator of the session, but there is an authoritative interpretation from 1992 that prohibits a non-Presbyterian minister from serving as moderator. However, G-2.0506 permits presbyteries to enroll a minister of another Christian church as a temporary member for a period of service, either in a temporary pastoral relationship or in an installed position (Formula of Agreement ministers only).

The function of the moderator of a session is more than simply to conduct the meeting according to standards of parliamentary procedure. The moderator is the presence of presbytery and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in that council. The moderator ensures that the session continues to be a council which at times acts as the whole church, as noted in F-3.0201 through F-3.0203:
● “The particular congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) wherever they are, taken collectively, constitute one church, called the church” (F-3.0201).

● “This church shall be governed by presbyters, that is, ruling elders and teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament)” (F-3.0202).

● “These presbyters shall come together in councils in regular gradation. These councils are sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly. All councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution. The councils are distinct, but have such mutual relations that the act of one of them is the act of the whole church performed by it through the appropriate council ...” (F-3.0203).

The church expects its ministers to be guided by our polity and abide by its discipline so that they are equipped to define and interpret the Constitution in any setting where decisions are made relative to the denomination. Sessions must make decisions that are constitutional. Presbyterian ministers are accountable for the advice they give. Non-Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ministers cannot be so held.

The Book of Order defines a council as consisting of “presbyters, that is, ruling elders and teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament” (F-3.0202). Thus, a basic quality of our polity is that a council consists of ruling elders and ministers of the Word and Sacrament making decisions together. The 1992 authoritative interpretation concluded that to permit ministers who are not members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to moderate sessions would jeopardize this fundamental principle of Presbyterian polity. The following situations of temporary membership in a presbytery for a period of service by ministers of other Christian churches are exceptions to this understanding.

1. Formula of Agreement Ministers: Installed Positions

The Constitution permits a presbytery to “enroll a minister of another Christian church who is serving temporarily in a validated ministry in this church, or in an installed relationship under the provisions of the Formula of Agreement (Book of Order, Appendix B; G-5.0202), when the minister has satisfied the requirements of preparation for such service established by the presbytery’s own rule” (G-2.0506). Installed ministers have answered the constitutional questions of W-4.0404 and have thus placed themselves under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), enabling them to serve as moderator.

2. Other Temporary Members: Temporary Pastoral Relationships

The presbytery may also appoint as moderator a minister of another Christian church when the following conditions have been met:

● service in a temporary pastoral relationship;

● enrollment as a temporary member of a presbytery, having affirmed the order and discipline of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in a manner satisfactory to the presbytery;

● has satisfied the requirements of preparation for such service according to the presbytery’s own rules, including its “rule for moderators when the session is without a moderator for reasons of vacancy or inconvenience” (G-3.0201). The presbytery may require training in Presbyterian polity and other areas in these rules.

This interpretation shall also apply to temporary members of presbytery serving as moderator of a congregational meeting.

Question Received

Request 18-01 from the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina asks the General Assembly to reconsider the 1992 Authoritative Interpretation, now attached to G-3.0104 and G-3.0201, that a presbytery may not appoint a minister who is not a member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to regularly moderate a session. The specific request is:

That the Presbytery petition the General Assembly to reconsider the 1992 ruling that prohibits non-PC(USA) minister from moderating sessions in those cases where the presbytery has accepted these pastors “who have satisfied the requirement of preparation ... as established by the presbytery’s own rule” as temporary members.

Findings

Pursuant to G-3.0501c and G-6.02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the question presented.
The 1992 Authoritative Interpretation is based upon the basic principle of Presbyterian polity that “this church shall be governed by presbyters, that is, ruling elders and teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament)” (F-3.0202). The 1992 Authoritative Interpretation’s advice that the moderator is the presence of the presbytery and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for the congregation(s) being served remains an important foundational principle for the orderly governance of the councils of this church, especially given that a session is not a council unto itself, but at times is taking actions as if it were the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

A minister member of presbytery (or, another presbytery; see 1987 Authoritative Interpretation of G-3.0201) installed in a pastoral relationship or appointed by the presbytery to serve as moderator has responded affirmatively to the constitutional questions for ordination and installation, including “will you be governed by our church’s polity, and ... abide by its discipline?” (W-4.0404e). They have submitted to the authority of the church and the procedures in place should something go wrong in the exercise of the responsibilities of moderator. Ministers who are not members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ordinarily have not made this commitment.

Since the 1992 Authoritative Interpretation was approved, two significant changes have taken place. In 1998, the Formula of Agreement was approved between the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Reformed Church in America, and the United Church of Christ, which includes a process for the orderly exchange of ministers. In 2010–2011, the Form of Government was revised to maximize flexibility in governance at all levels of the church.

Section G-2.0506 permits a presbytery to enroll ministers of another Christian church as temporary members for the duration of their service. The Presbytery of Coastal Carolina asks the General Assembly to reconsider the 1992 authoritative interpretation in light of the ability of a presbytery to enroll a minister of another Christian church as a member for the period of service, in order to meet its missional needs for oversight of its congregations being served by temporary pastoral relationships, including by a number of ministers of other denominations.

One group of temporary members of a presbytery are ministers who have been received under the provisions of the Process of Orderly Exchange of Ministers in the 1998 Formula of Agreement to serve in an installed relationship, having satisfied “the requirements of preparation for such service established by the presbytery’s own rule” (G-2.0506). The act of installation includes giving affirmative answers to the ordination questions of W-4.0404. This places the minister under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and makes it possible for the minister to serve as the moderator. [However, the process notes the following: “Ministers serving in an orderly exchange should be temporary under this agreement. Should an ordained minister of one church intend to serve permanently in another church then the process of the transfer of ministerial status should be followed.”]

A second group of ministers of other Christian churches who may become temporary members according to the procedures of the presbytery may be serving in a temporary pastoral relationship (G-2.0504b). Such ministers may serve as the moderator if the presbytery has satisfied itself as to the minister’s preparation for such service. The presbytery may require training and preparation in Presbyterian polity and other areas in making this determination. The minister so received shall also affirm the order and discipline of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in the context of their service in a manner satisfactory to the presbytery. Such affirmation may include responding to the constitutional questions of W-4.0404(e), (g).

Request 18-02 for Constitutional Interpretation to Resolve Tensions between F-1.0403, F-1.0404, and F-3.0202—From the Synod of the Northeast.

In response to Request 18-02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) the following:

1. That no authoritative interpretation of F-1.0403, F-1.0404, and F-3.0202 be approved.

2. That, if the assembly concurs with the intention of the request, that the assembly direct the Department of Constitutional Interpretation to develop language for constitutional amendment(s) that might accomplish the intended goal, and that the department be directed to consult with the Synod of the Northeast and to receive the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution in drafting such an amendment. Among mechanisms that might be considered are the election of persons by congregations for limited, temporary service as ruling elders; non-congregational or quasi-congregational structures and processes for the election of ruling elders by worshiping communities and for their representation in higher councils; and other means by which we might live into the ideals of F-1.0403 and F-1.0404 to perform faithfully God’s mission in Jesus Christ.
Background

The request is a response to a referral from the 222nd General Assembly (2016) on a similar request (Item 05-12) seeking to resolve a perceived tension between our constitutional commitments to unity in diversity (F-1.0403) and openness (F-1.0404) on the one hand, and our historic principle that we are governed by presbyters (F-3.0202) on the other. In its response, the assembly lauded the synod’s efforts to engage youth and members of immigrant worshiping communities and recommended that the Synod of the Northeast continue “their productive conversations regarding this issue and bring to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) a tangible recommendation.” This request provides the proposed text of an authoritative interpretation, which the synod asks the assembly to approve.

Summary of Findings

1. The polity of the church is in service to its mission.

2. The proposed authoritative interpretation is flawed because it has the effect of amending the Constitution through authoritative interpretation, and because it conflicts with F-3.0106 regarding the right to elect those who govern.

3. The tension identified between F-1.0403 - F-1.0404, and F-3.0202 is not a constitutional tension, because F-1.0403 states that the Constitution may assert limits on the application of F-1.0403.

4. Section F-3.03 requires the Constitution be interpreted so as to give full and equal force to all provisions.

5. Some remedies already exist to mitigate the missional tension between F-1.0403–F-1.0404 and G-3.0202, but the 222nd General Assembly (2016) found that other remedies are necessary to realize the ideals of our polity.

Detailed Findings

1. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution affirms the foundational value of F-1.0403 and F-1.0404 to the mission of the church, and understands the frustration when other, equally foundational principles make fulfilling all of them difficult if not impossible. The very first article of our Constitution declares, “The mission of God in Christ gives shape and substance to the life and work of the Church” (F-1.01). The Constitution provides order, guidance, and accountability for the church’s participation in God’s mission in Christ. When the order impedes the mission, it is incumbent on the church to amend its order to enable it to pursue its mission.

In doing so, it is important that the church follow its own constitutional processes so that its order and its actions correspond, and that the decisions that result reflect the whole church’s discernment of the mind and will of Christ. This is especially true when addressing foundational principles. These ideals inform the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on this item.

Pursuant to G-3.0501c and G-6.02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the proposed authoritative interpretation:

2. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the particular mechanism presented by the synod is flawed for two important reasons:

   a. It seeks to use the power of authoritative interpretation to accomplish what should be accomplished through the process of constitutional amendment. The proposed authoritative interpretation establishes a troubling precedent in the interpretation of our Constitution by creating constitutional language that limits foundational principles in particular circumstances. That is, it carves out exceptions to duly adopted provisions through authoritative interpretation rather than by amendment. This abuses the power of assemblies to interpret the Constitution and preempts the voice of the presbyteries. It does more than interpret the Constitution; it substantively changes its meaning.

   b. The proposal would create a class of persons engaged in the government of the church who were elected by sessions, not congregations, to govern. This directly violates the historic principle of election by the people (F-3.0106). All persons exercising governance in the church have either been elected or received by the body in which their membership resides.

For these two reasons, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the language of the proposed authoritative interpretation should not be advanced by the assembly as either an authoritative interpretation or a proposed amendment.

3. With respect to the supposed tension between F-1.0403–F-1.0404 and F-3.0202, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the tension identified by the synod between these provisions exists in mission rather than in law. There is not a constitutional tension here because of the important sentence at the end of F-1.0403: “No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution” (Book of Order, F-1.0403, emphasis added).
The Constitution limits participation and representation in the governance of the church in several ways. Among these are requirements of profession of faith in Jesus Christ and membership in a congregation (G-1.0301), election by a community of God’s people (F-3.0106, G-2.0102), and the willingness, upon examination by a council, to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (G-2.0104b). The limitation of government by presbyters may impede the church’s ability to fulfill F-1.0403 and F-1.0404, but that is a limitation imposed by the Constitution itself rooted in essential and historic principles of Presbyterian government.

4. The synod requests the General Assembly to resolve the apparent tension between constitutional provisions by means of approving specific language of an authoritative interpretation. The interpretation, however, directly violates the intent of F-3.03, thereby weakening and potentially invalidating other provisions of the Constitution.

Section F-3.03 establishes that the Constitution is to be read as a whole, and that if tensions and ambiguities are identified, they must be resolved in a manner that gives effect to all provisions. The language of F-3.03 was drafted from an Authoritative Interpretation established by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in 2001 in its decision in Case 213-2: Session of Londonderry v. The Presbytery of Northern New England. That case arose directly from the tension presented in this request between our commitment to inclusiveness and our standards for ordination. The decision in that case states:

> It is not unusual for a document such as our Constitution, written at different periods of time and under different circumstances, to exhibit tensions and ambiguities in its provisions. Nevertheless, it is the task of governing bodies and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions. It is not within the power of any governing body or judicial commission to declare a properly adopted provision of the Constitution to be invalid. The only appropriate avenue to change or remove a provision of the Constitution is through the process for amendment provided within the Constitution itself. (Minutes, 2001, Part I, 12.1028, emphasis added)

This authoritative interpretation, in part, was elevated to constitutional status with the adoption of the current Form of Government. Therefore, it is not permissible for any council to attempt to identify any section of the Book of Order as having a higher level of importance than other provisions. The Book of Order is to be read and interpreted in its entirety, and any perceived tensions and ambiguities must be resolved in a manner that gives effect to all provisions.

5. At the core of the proposed interpretation is a request to permit governance by persons under thirty years of age who have not been ordained as ruling elders. The provision that the church is to be governed by presbyters (ruling elders and ministers of the Word and Sacrament) is long established. Section F-3.0202 was first articulated in the Book of Order by one of our antecedent denominations in 1797. Furthermore, the requirement that commissioners be presbyters assures their consent to the ordered ministries’ constitutional questions.

The Book of Order already contains several provisions designed to mitigate the tension named by the synod. Congregations and sessions determine the persons who will serve in their ordered ministries and may nominate and elect any active member they have determined to be qualified according to the standards necessary for service. It is required under G-2.0401 that “the nomination and election of ruling elders and deacons shall express the rich diversity of the congregation’s membership and shall guarantee participation and inclusiveness (F-1.0403).” Presbyteries and synods are required to adopt plans regarding the number and allocation of commissioners that include “a method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103” (G-3.0301, G-3.0401). Councils may adjust the length of terms to make it possible for a younger member to serve.

The review of a congregation by the presbytery through consultative visits or the administrative review process can be avenues for raising concerns of representation and inclusiveness and developing strategies for addressing these concerns. Committees on representation in particular exist to keep issues of participation and inclusiveness at the forefront, including informing the work of nominating committees.

Nevertheless, it is clear that the ideals articulated in F-1.0403 and F-1.0404 have not been fully realized. Thus, the 222nd General Assembly (2016) urged all levels of councils “to actively consider ways to involve, in the whole life of the church, those previously left out from the table. This includes, but is not limited to, young adults, and those involved in new worshiping communities.” The Advisory Committee on the Constitution therefore advises that if the assembly concurs with the intent of the overture that it direct the Office of the General Assembly, Department of Constitutional Interpretation, as recommended in its advice above.

[The assembly approved Item 06-23. See pp. 70, 73.]

Request 18-03 Advisory Committee on the Constitution Findings and Recommendations as to Request 18-03.

In response to Request 18-03, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.0605:
Each session who has authority over congregational property in accordance with G-4.02, shall not be compelled to authorize the use of church property for a marriage service that the session believes is contrary to “the session’s discernment of the Holy Spirit and their understanding of the Word of God” (W-4.0605). Other councils with authority over denominational property have similar responsibility for discernment and understanding.

There is nothing in the language of W-4.0605 that makes a session wedding policy or decision about a particular marriage service contingent upon a wedding decision by a pastor. The two decisions are made separately and need not be made in any particular sequence.

Sessions may adopt, and may only adopt, wedding policies that are consistent with the Constitution. Wedding policies should be applied prayerfully with the discernment of the Holy Spirit and understanding of the Word of God.

Questions Received

Request 18-03 from the Presbytery of National Capital presents the following questions upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

1. Does the session have authority to set policy regarding weddings on church property?
2. Are there items which may not be included in such a policy?

Findings

Pursuant to G-3.0501c and G-6.02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the questions presented:

1. With respect to the first question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question presents a question for which interpretation of W-4.0605 is needed.

Historically, the session has authority to determine the use of congregational property under G-4.02. The session sets policy on worship times, educational usage, and weddings, among other things. The session has the authority to manage the property for the furtherance of its mission (G-3.0201c). This authority includes the use of the property for marriage services.

2. With respect to the second question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question presents a question for which interpretation of W-4.0605 is advisable. Any wedding policy adopted by a session must not be a violation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitution, including section F-1.0403.

Section W-4.0605 permits each session to determine the use of congregational property, and this allows a session to decide not to permit use of the property for marriage services. We recognize there is a tension between W-4.0605 and F-1.0403. Section F-1.0403 calls for unity in diversity and full participation in worship, but also recognizes there may be reasons stated in the Constitution, including those stated in W-4.0605, that may be a basis to deny participation and representation. (See Book of Confessions, Second Helvetic Confession, 5.129 and 5.241, and the Confession of 1967, 9.34.) This tension is unresolved and can only be addressed by individual councils through discernment of the Holy Spirit and the understanding of the Word of God.

Recent revisions of the Book of Order have tried to replace lists containing specific elements with broader guiding principles. To provide a list would presume it to be exhaustive.

Item 06-24

[In response to Item 06-24, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 70, 73–74.]

Alternate Resolution:

The 223rd General Assembly (2018) directs the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Amend Section D-10.0401c(1) to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“(1) any person under the age of eighteen years or anyone over the age of eighteen years without the mental capacity to consent; or”
2. Amend D-10.0401b as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“b. For instances of sexual abuse of another person, the five-year time limit shall not apply. There is also no time limit for charging that a person who knew or reasonably should have known of the reasonable risk of sexual abuse of another as defined in D-10.0401c(1) or (2) failed to take reasonable steps to minimize the risk. Both charges may be brought regardless of the date on which an offense is alleged to have occurred.”

In response to a referral from the 222nd General Assembly (2016) (Item 06-16), the Office of the General Assembly recommends one of the following:

1. That the 223rd General Assembly (2018) refer Item 06-16 to the Rules of Discipline Task Force, which was appointed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to review and revise the entire Rules of Discipline in the Book of Order.

Or

2. If the 223rd General Assembly (2018) would like to immediately address the problems raised by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution to Item 06-16 (see text of ACC Advice on Item 06-16 in the Rationale section below), the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Amend D-10.0401 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“When Sexual Abuse

“b. For instances of sexual abuse of another person, the five-year time limit shall not apply. Charges may be brought regardless of the date on which an offense is alleged to have occurred.

“Definition of Sexual Abuse

“(1) any person under the age of eighteen years or anyone over the age of eighteen years or older without the mental capacity to consent; or

“(2) any person when the conduct includes force, threat, coercion, intimidation, or misuse of ordered ministry or position.

“(3) any person who knew or reasonably should have known of the danger or risk of sexual abuse as defined in (1) or (2) above posed by perpetrators with known histories of boundary violations and failed to take reasonable steps to minimize the risk.”

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2016: Item 06-16. A Resolution to Extend Time Limits on Abuse Reporting in Instances of Gross Negligence—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns. (Minutes, 2016, Part I, pp. 49, 52, 378)

The following is the Advice from the ACC on Item 06-16:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) that Item 06-16 from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns raises issues that the assembly should consider.

The overture seeks to extend the time limitation for filing charges in cases of alleged “gross negligence enabling the sexual abuse of another person” from the default time limit of five years to “within ten years of the date the person making the accusation attains the age of eighteen, or within five years of the date the person making the accusation discovers or reasonably should have discovered that gross negligence enabled the sexual abuse to occur, whichever later occurs.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution concurs with the intent of the recommendation and finds the intent consistent with the purposes of discipline. The recommendation, however, raises the following issues:

1. The recommendation proposes introducing legal terminology into the Rules of Discipline that is not constitutionally defined. “Gross negligence” and “enabling” are defined in particular jurisdictions of secular law, but are not defined in the Constitution. As with the term “sexual abuse” in D-10.0401c, a specific definition is warranted to justify the waiver or extension of time limits for filing charges.

2. A specific definition is also necessary to help identify the scope of persons to be held responsible for “gross negligence enabling the sexual abuse of another person.”
Item 06-NB

[The assembly approved Item 06-NB as amended. See pp. 69, 74.]

That the 223rd General Assembly (2018) appoint a six-person task force to study, work, pray, and discern on the issue of paid parental and family leave “[for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) employees, including but not limited to ministers,] to implement a faithful resolution with all the challenges associated with this.

[The duties of this task force shall include but not be limited to:

1. Gathering information from multiple sources regarding implementing paid family leave.

2. Entering into discussion with the Board of Pensions and other applicable bodies to discern how to most effectively implement and finance the recommendations of the committee, those being: Provide eight weeks of paid family leave and four weeks unpaid leave for plan participants.
[3. Seek other options similar in intent should programs implementing these recommendations prove economically unfeasible for employers and participants.

[4. Exploring how to encourage employers to extend love and compassion to these employees by granting appropriate requests for family leave time.

[5. Exploring how to provide financial assistance to help local congregations pay for moderator coverage and/or pastoral care during leave period within the local usual pay rate guidelines. This task force shall prepare a report with recommendations for implementation to be submitted to the 224th General Assembly (2020).]

[6. In addition to the six task force members, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, and the Board of Pensions will advise the task force with voice, but will not have vote.]

This task force [will report to] [shall prepare a report with recommendations for implementation to be submitted to] the 224th General Assembly (2020).

Item 06-Info

A. Advisory Committee on Litigation Agency Summary

I. Narrative

Assigned Responsibilities

The Advisory Committee on Litigation is composed of six Presbyterian attorneys. Each General Assembly elects a class made up of two members to a six-year term. The General Assembly Nominating Committee nominates persons for the ACL who fit the criteria for eligibility. The Advisory Committee on Litigation was established by the 200th General Assembly (1988) to advise the Stated Clerk on matters relating to litigation.

The consultations typically take place via telephone or video conferencing after committee members have been provided copies of all pertinent pleadings, orders, and General Assembly policy information. The committee ordinarily meets face-to-face every two years. It is normally consulted whenever the Stated Clerk is asked to participate in litigation involving matters of civil and religious liberty, church and state relations, and other matters related to the mission and interests of the church.

The Advisory Committee on Litigation reviews each of the cases, amicus briefs, and General Assembly policy and constitution based on seventeen criteria and advises the Stated Clerk on the advisability of becoming an amici party in an amicus brief in the particular case.

II. Disposition of Cases Joined (2014–2016)

Petition for Certiorari to the U.S. Supreme Court

On July 21, 2014, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of denominational religious partners on behalf of petitioners’ petition for a writ of certiorari on the question of “Whether the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment requires courts resolving a property dispute within a hierarchical church to give legal effect to a preexisting trust provision in the church’s canons.” The U.S. Supreme Court declined to accept the petition for a writ of certiorari on November 3, 2014.

EEOC v. Abercrombie & Fitch

U.S. Supreme Court

On December 10, 2014, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of faith-based, religious partners on behalf of petitioner, EEOC, agreeing that religious freedom in the workplace as specifically allowed under the religious accommodation provision of Title VII is as important to most believers as freedom from restrictions on religious practice imposed by the government. The case revolved around the denial of employment to a Muslim woman because she wore a head scarf during the interview and Abercrombie and Fitch had a policy against the wearing of head gear. There was no discussion of any needed accommodation during the interview, so the Court of Appeals stated that the respondent did not have actual knowledge of a need for accommodation. On June 1, 2015, the U.S. Supreme Court found in behalf of petitioner, finding that the Title VII religious accommodation provision requires that an employer may not make an applicant’s religious practice, confirmed or otherwise, a factor in employment decisions. There is no element of knowledge required on behalf of the employer to make a claim under the Title VII religious accommodation act.

Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals

On April 6, 2015, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of denominational religious partners in State of Texas, et al v. United States of America, et. al. The amicus brief, following General Assembly social policy, called for the lifting of an injunction that put four to five million United States immigrants at risk of deportation. The injunction was on an Executive Action (referred to in the brief as Immigration Guidance) that, among other things, offered a legal reprieve to the undocumented parents of U.S. citizens and permanent residents who have lived in the country for at least five years. It also expanded the 2012 Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program that allowed immigrants under thirty years old who arrived as children to apply for a deportation deferral. Neither of these programs give undocumented persons legal status, but they do offer three years without the risk of deportation and the ability to work with authorization. Families would get to stay together and enjoy improved economic stability. On May 26, 2015, the Fifth Circuit denied the federal government’s motion for a stay of the District Court’s order of injunction. The federal government appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, which has agreed to hear the case.

On March 8, 2016, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of denominational religious partners in State of Texas, et al v. United States of America, et. al. in front of the U.S. Supreme Court. The amicus brief, following General Assembly social policy, called for the lifting of an injunction that put four to five million United States immigrants at risk of deportation. The Amici concurred with the United States that the secretary has the authority and discretion to defer removing particular undocumented persons.

On June 23, 2016, the U.S. Supreme Court affirmed the lower-court injunction blocking the deferred action for undocumented parents of U.S. citizens and permanent residents who have lived in the country for at least five years.

III. Cases Joined 2016–2018

United States District Court

Eastern District of New York

On February 16, 2017, the Reverend J. Herbert Nelson, II, Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), joined other faith leaders in signing an amicus curiae brief opposing the president’s executive order creating a travel ban. The interfaith coalition of religious congregations, associations, and organizations united “to speak with one voice against the Executive Order issued on January 27, 2017, suspending the United States Refugee Admissions Program and halting entry into the United States by citizens of seven majority-Muslim nations,” the brief states.

The amicus brief supports a case brought by Hameed Khalid Darweesh, Haider Sameer Abdulkhaleq Alshawi, and others “similarly situated” after they were detained at John F. Kennedy International Airport in New York immediately following President Donald Trump’s executive order issued to allegedly “protect the American people from terrorist attacks by foreign nationals admitted to the United States.” The executive order and subsequent detainment of refugees and others legally vetted to enter the United States prompted protests at airports and cities around the country. The class action suit brought by Darweesh and Alshawi is accompanied by other similar cases moving through the judicial system at different levels.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through its General Assembly, has passed more than twenty pieces of policy in support of refugees and refugee resettlement since 1947. Among those policies is a 2016 action to respond to the biblical directive to provide for the stranger and the sojourner by advocating for and seeking to improve matters related to U.S. government resettlement policies.

The Administration eventually settled with the plaintiffs ensuring that all travelers who were barred from the country on the basis of the ban and have not since returned to the United States are informed of their right to reapply for a visa and provided with a list of free legal services organizations that can help them do so.

U.S. Supreme Court

U.S. Supreme Court with other interfaith religious institutions and organizations in opposition to the president’s Executive Order that was intended to stop all refugees from entering the United States as well as the nationals of six predominantly Muslim countries. The amicus brief addressed two major concerns—religion discrimination and restriction on refugee admission. On the issue of religious discrimination, the brief stated that by undermining the constitutional guarantees of free exercise and non-discrimination, the Executive Order harmed not only Muslims but members of all faiths, who rely on those basic constitutional rights to freely practice their religions.

The amicus brief also addressed how the ban inexplicably burdened refugees in that:

The Order further targets refugees—the most vulnerable and oppressed populations in the world. We are in the midst of the largest refugee crisis of our time. More than 21 million refugees have fled war, persecution, terrorism, enslavement, and other horrific abuses. Amici’s faiths compel them to aid refugees in crisis. Yet the Order precludes people of all faiths from fulfilling their moral and religious obligations toward refugees in desperate need of assistance. It already has had a devastating impact on faith-based refugee-assistance programs, and it will continue to do so unless enjoined. The decisions of the courts of appeals affirming the injunctions of the travel and refugee bans should be affirmed.

The amicus brief asked that the issues in the travel ban be found unconstitutional and terminated.

On October 10, 2017, the U.S. Supreme Court vacated the lower court judgment and remanded to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit to dismiss the case as moot since the case was a challenge to a temporary executive order that expired on its own terms on September 24, 2017. The U.S. Supreme Court expressed no view on the merits of the appeal.

B. Advisory Committee on Litigation Self-Study

History

In 1987, the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) joined with the office of the Advisory Council on Church and Society to carry out a consultation on involvement in litigation in civil courts. Guidelines were prepared to assist the Stated Clerk in carrying out responsibilities in connection with possible participation in litigation in civil courts. In 1988, the Office of the General Assembly recommended that the General Assembly establish an Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL) to advise the Stated Clerk on various matters of litigation for which the clerk is responsible under Organization for Mission, IV.B.2.b. This body was anticipated to strengthen the work of the Office of the General Assembly in dealing with matters such as the filing of briefs amicus curiae (friend of the court briefs), and other, more direct forms of participation in litigation in secular civil and criminal courts.

Purpose and Form

The Advisory Committee on Litigation is made up of six elected persons who are members of a PC(USA) council and ordinarily an attorney-at-law. These six elected persons are experienced in legal fields that relate to issues that may be the subject of legal proceedings in which the church is, or may become, interested. The committee advises the Stated Clerk regarding participation in litigation related to matters of civil and religious liberty, relations between church and state, and any other matters related to the mission and interest of the church.

Occasionally an issue will arise in a presbytery or synod where it will be appropriate for that council to join, or even draft, an amicus curiae brief in support of religious liberty or a position of interest to the governing body. An amicus curiae brief is literally a “friend of the court” brief. It may raise an issue not explicitly raised by the parties, but one quite relevant to the case. Usually such briefs are filed only with leave of the court. They are almost always limited to appellate level filings.

The Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) gives the General Assembly Stated Clerk authority to join in such briefs on behalf of the General Assembly. Since 1988, the Advisory Committee on Litigation has advised the clerk on whether to join or file particular amicus curiae briefs. The General Assembly has approved seventeen criteria for use in determining whether to file a particular brief (see below).

When a case arises, the Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL) reviews all the case material, any social policy of the General Assembly, and any procedure of the PC(USA) that may pertain to the case. They then apply the criteria in deciding how to advise the State Clerk. This process can take many hours of intense evaluation and may result in a recommendation that the Stated Clerk participate in, either directly as a party or by filing an amicus brief, in the litigation. The ACL may also advise that the Stated Clerk not participate in the particular litigation for a variety of reasons.

Over the years, the General Assembly has also occasionally requested that the Advisory Committee on Litigation be a resource in the development of social witness policy when that social witness policy may have secular legal implications.

When the General Assembly Stated Clerk is invited to join or file a brief that would have regional or local implications, the Assistant Stated Clerk will normally contact the Stated Clerk of the affected mid council. She will provide, upon request, copies of legal pleadings, relevant scriptural, confessional, or General Assembly social policy statements on the substantive issue. If there is a draft amicus brief, she will normally share that as well.
A presbytery or synod may join the General Assembly Stated Clerk on briefs if that fits within the social witness of the congregations within the presbytery or synod. The appropriate signatory on such a brief is typically the stated clerk as the ecclesiastical representative of mid council. A presbytery may provide by rule for some other person (such as an executive presbyter) who bears that responsibility. It is advisable for the mid council to develop a process and identify responsible officers or employees. If legal issue arises within a presbytery or synod that would benefit by the filing of an amicus brief, the General Assembly Stated Clerk will often join the presbytery upon request.

Self-Evaluation

1. In applying the criteria for evaluation of litigation, the Advisory Committee on Litigation has a thorough definition of its work and process for completing its work. Because of the nature of litigation, this usually is applied in a short time frame for each particular case involvement. However, the evaluation process happens continually for as long as the Stated Clerk is involved in a particular litigation.

2. The Advisory Committee on Litigation regularly evaluates it advice to the Stated Clerk as it applies to evolving civil law and evolving social policy of the PC(USA). The Stated Clerk may participate in conference calls and meetings of the Advisory Committee on Litigation. The Stated Clerk additionally employs an Assistant Stated Clerk as a liaison with the Advisory Committee on Litigation.

3. Since the Advisory Committee on Litigation advises only the Stated Clerk, the committee itself does not employ a strategy for communication with the church-at-large. The Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly does have a strategy for communication of any litigation in which the Stated Clerk participates through amicus briefs or as a direct party. The OGA has created a webpage that includes copies of all briefs filed by the Stated Clerk as an amicus or a direct party. Occasionally the Office of the General Assembly provides press releases that also points out General Assembly policy that guided the decision to join as an amici in a particular legal case.

4. The Advisory Committee on Litigation utilizes technology and their professional expertise to advise the Stated Clerk on any needs they may have to fulfill their function as an advisory committee.

5. The Advisory Committee on Litigation budget includes bi-annual, face-to-face meetings at which they review current, past, and future civil legal issues of interest to the PC(USA) and their evolving civil legal precedents and church social policy, legal research fees, conference calls and video conferencing, legal resources and representation to General Assembly.

Criteria for Evaluation of an Amicus Brief in Litigation

1. Does the case raise a significant religious or ethical issue of concern for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)?

2. Has the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through the General Assembly, the Church Constitution, or accepted biblical, confessional, and theological principles, advocated or adopted a position that is relevant to the issue or issues raised in the case?

3. Can the church’s position on the issue or issues be persuasively and effectively communicated in the amicus brief?

4. Does the amicus brief enunciate statements inconsistent with policies and positions approved by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the General Assembly or inconsistent with accepted theological principles? If such an inconsistency exists, can the church’s position be expressed in such a way as to accurately reflect the church’s position without compromising that position or the integrity of the amicus brief or should a separate amicus brief be prepared?

5. Is the proposed amicus brief well-written and practically and legally well-reasoned and persuasive?

6. Has the committee and the Stated Clerk been provided with adequate time to evaluate any proposed amicus brief and the issues presented?

7. Are the issues raised in the case based on a properly developed record and have key pleadings and lower court decisions been supplied?

8. What other organizations, including other religious entities, have been requested to join as amici?

9. Who has prepared the draft amicus brief and for what purpose?

10. Are there issues in the case that will need interpretation to presbyteries and congregations? Should pastors and governing bodies be notified of the case so that they may be able to answer questions? If yes, staff are instructed to notify.

11. Are the issues raised in the case of sufficient importance to justify participation?

12. Does the proposed amicus brief really add anything to the court's consideration of the issues presented?
13. Within the judicial system, is the level appropriate for the church’s participation?

14. What positions or views will other proposed amici take with respect to the issue or issues raised?

15. Is there a legislative remedy?

16. Criteria 1–5 are guidelines and in each case the committee will exercise its best judgment, but may also consider other factors in making its decision.

17. Is there a significant or passionate constituency within the PC(USA) who might disagree with the position of the brief?

Stated Clerk’s Comments
Self-Study of the Advisory Committee on Litigation

The Advisory Committee on Litigation is important to the public witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding theological, moral, and social justice concerns through the judicial system in the United States. Such witness requires knowledge of General Assembly policy and an understanding of the implications of particular judicial actions or inaction on how they are lived out in our society. The General Assembly empowered the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to make such witness after consultation and advice from the Advisory Committee on Litigation.

The Advisory Committee on Litigation was created to provide the legal advice and expertise to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. It is composed of six Presbyterian attorneys who advise the Stated Clerk on the legal and judicial implications of potential amicus briefs that the church is invited to enter from time to time to promote religious freedom, human rights, and social justice.

As the Stated Clerk responsible for making the decisions to engage in secular judicial actions as a form of social witness, I am grateful for the wisdom, commitment, and understanding that this committee offers. The advice from the committee has greatly enhanced my understanding of the secular judicial system and has enabled the church to make an important witness in a number of areas about which the General Assembly holds significant social policy.

The General Assembly Standing Rules require that a survey be sent to the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) who are affected by the committee being reviewed. Below is my response as the only “client” of the Advisory Committee on Litigation.

V. Assessment Criteria

A. Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

1. Each committee or commission was created by the church and exists to serve and support the church’s mission in a particular area. Each committee or commission is expected to exhibit a constant faithfulness to and in fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA).

The Advisory Committee on Litigation serves to advise myself as Stated Clerk on the complicated connection between the social witness of the General Assembly and the secular judicial process. When a request is received by the Office of the General Assembly that I join an amicus brief in a secular judicial case, the Advisory Committee on Litigation reviews the request, General Assembly policies, the underlying case, whether it affects individuals or mid councils within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and then advises me.

The committee fulfills their charge and offers detailed advice to me on all of the issues presented in the particular amicus brief.

2. The basic process of the committee or commission should demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly. The committee or commission should exhibit leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources in which the committee or commission acts.

The Advisory Committee on Litigation has consistently advised me based on the criteria established by the General Assembly and appended as a part of this self-study. The members of the committee review complicated cases, briefs, and social policy often within a quick time frame and then honestly advise on the effects of any particular amicus witness.

3. The committee or commission should exhibit practical cooperation with the other agencies or committees of the church in areas of overlapping responsibility and opportunity.

The ACL received for its review several potential amicus opportunities for social witness from other agencies or committees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and meets occasionally with other General Assembly committees to discuss ongoing issues of interest to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
4. The committee or commission should provide timely responses to directives and requests from the General Assembly. The committee uses social policy passed by the General Assembly in its evaluation of potential amicus briefs in particular cases.

B. Effectiveness of Services

The services of the committee or commission are consistent with its assembly or constitutional mandate.

1. The committee or commission has a defined and consistent process for completing its work.

   The committee follows its established criteria and is available to advise the Stated Clerk either by email, conference call, or face-to-face meeting, often evaluating complicated issues. I am thankful to the members of the committee for their attention to highly complex issues often within a very short timeframe.

2. The committee or commission has a regular process of self-evaluation of its services.

   The committee files with the General Assembly a regular update of the judicial cases in which I joined as an amici party and gives an update on the secular outcome of the particular case.

3. The committee or commission employs a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large.

   The committee’s primary role is to advise the Stated Clerk only so that the committee itself does not have a major interpretive role to the church. However, the Office of the General Assembly has established a website that publishes the amicus briefs filed by the Stated Clerk.

4. The committee or commission utilizes current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission.

   The Advisory Committee on Litigation makes regular and effective use of technology in its work so that most of the work is accomplished through electronic, telephonic, and video conferencing.

5. The committee or commission has developed a vision and plans for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and context of the PC(USA).

   The committee holds a face-to-face meeting every two years in which it reviews the General Assembly social policies and current issues before the judicial system. This has led to giving priority in briefs to issues of First Amendment Establishment and Free Exercise clause interpretations, human rights, and justice for immigrants.

Organization for Mission, IV.B.1., IV.B.2.b.:

IV. General Assembly Officers and Committees and the Office of the General Assembly ...

B. Stated Clerk of the General Assembly

1. The title of the Stated Clerk is “The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and may be used by the incumbent until a successor is elected and takes office.

2. Functions of the Stated Clerk [For functions related to General Assembly meetings, see Standing Rule H.2.) ...

   b. As an officer of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall preserve and defend the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and support the decisions, actions, and programs of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall give advisory opinions concerning the meaning of the provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and shall give advisory opinions on the meaning of the actions of the General Assembly. When the Stated Clerk deems it necessary, after consulting with appropriate persons or bodies, the Stated Clerk may retain legal counsel and institute or participate in legal proceedings in civil and criminal courts. (Organization for Mission, IV.B.1.–2.)

Organization for Mission, IV.B.4.a.–f.:

4. Advisory Committee on Litigation

   a. The Advisory Committee on Litigation shall advise the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly in connection with instituting or participating in legal proceedings (see Functions of the Stated Clerk earlier in this section).

   b. The members of the committee shall ordinarily be attorneys, and the members shall be experienced in fields related to issues that may be the subject of legal proceedings in which the church is, or may become, interested. The committee shall be composed of six persons, elected by the General Assembly upon nomination by the General Assembly Nominating Committee. The advisory committee may invite other persons with special competency related to particular cases or situations to participate in the consideration of particular cases or issues. The members shall be evenly divided into three classes, shall serve six-year terms, and shall be eligible for election to one additional term. No member may serve more than two terms, full or partial. Members of this committee are exempted from the prohibition against service on more than one entity of the assembly set forth in Section IV.C.1.c. above.

c. The committee shall elect its own moderator and ordinarily shall meet at the call of the Stated Clerk. The committee may carry on its work by correspondence, telephone consultation (including conference telephone calls), or meetings.

d. The committee shall advise the Stated Clerk regarding participation in litigation related to matters of civil and religious liberty, relations between church and state, and any other matters related to the mission and interest of the church. The Advisory Committee on Litigation shall advise the Stated Clerk regarding the establishment and maintenance of a resource file of legal documents as a means of assisting the mid councils and agencies of the church in initiating or participating in litigation in the areas within the concerns of the committee.

e. The committee shall be funded through the per capita budget of the Office of the General Assembly, receive staff services as provided by the Stated Clerk, and designate a representative to the annual session of the General Assembly (see Standing Rule B.3.).

f. The committee shall report to each session of the General Assembly. (Organization for Mission, IV.C.4.a.–f.)

C. Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) Agency Summary

Assigned Responsibilities

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (“ACC”) is composed of nine voting members as established by the Book of Order, G-3.0501c and G-6.02. The nine voting members, teaching and ruling elders, are required by the current Manual of the General Assembly to be stated clerks or former stated clerks of synods or presbyteries, former members of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly, polity professors, or other qualified persons with knowledge of and experience with the Constitution and polity of the church. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly is a member ex-officio without vote.

With regard to questions requiring an interpretation of the Book of Order, the ACC’s responsibilities are set out in G-6.02 as follows:

All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order arising from councils of the church shall be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such questions of interpretation to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, except those pertaining to matters pending before a judicial commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall communicate its report and recommendations to the next session of the General Assembly, no less than sixty days prior to the General Assembly.

With regard to proposed amendments to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the ACC’s mandated responsibilities are set out in G-6.04b, as follows:

b. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such proposals to amend the Book of Order to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (G-6.02), which shall examine the proposed amendment for clarity and consistency of language and for compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). At least sixty days prior to the meeting of the General Assembly, the advisory committee shall report its findings to the General Assembly along with its recommendations, which may include an amended version of any proposed constitutional changes as well as advice to accept or decline the proposals referred to the committee. The General Assembly shall not consider any amendment until it has considered the report and any recommendations from the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

Process and Procedures, Responsibilities and Relationships

The ACC does not interpret the Constitution. The role of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, as its title suggests and as its constitutional mandate clearly establishes, is to advise the General Assembly. The ACC’s advice has no authority until and unless it is approved by the General Assembly. With respect to proposed amendments to the Constitution, the ACC focuses on clarity of proposed language and consistency of the proposed amendment with the Constitution. The ACC occasionally finds that the intent of the proposal is already inherent in other provisions of the Constitution or that it could be achieved by slight changes in language, by placing the amendment in a different section, or by different language entirely. On occasion, the ACC has suggested such changes in order to avoid inconsistencies within the Book of Order, and also to make as few changes as possible in existing paragraphs and in section numbering. At least sixty days prior to each General Assembly, the ACC is required to report its findings to the assembly. These findings may include advice for amended versions of any proposed changes as well as advice to accept or decline the proposals referred to the ACC.

With respect to requests for interpretation, as well as advice on overtures, the ACC seeks to provide advice that is based on constitutional study, not on the substance of the issues at hand. In many circumstances, the question has been answered by earlier interpretations and does not require action by the General Assembly. In these cases, the inquirer is notified of the standing interpretation. In order to make clear the questions raised, the ACC has focused the presentation of the request on the question presented, together with the ACC’s findings and advice. If the question was not clear from the request received, the ACC has sought clarification from the individual transmitting the request.
All overtures and reports containing proposed amendments and all requests for interpretation of the Book of Order by the General Assembly must be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly (Book of Order, G- 6.02, G-6.04a). This 120-day time period allows the ACC time to consider and research carefully each proposed amendment and request.

The ACC completed its work for the 223rd General Assembly (2018) during two, face-to-face meetings and one teleconference. The initial meeting and orientation to ACC work was held on October 11–13, 2017, in St. Louis, Missouri. At a five-day meeting in Louisville, Kentucky, March 16–20, 2018, the ACC prepared its responses to constitutional issues to be considered by the 223rd General Assembly (2018). The ACC finalized its advice in a teleconference meeting on April 9, 2018.

After it has received and considered the advice of the ACC, the General Assembly is free to take whatever action it discerns reflects the will of Christ on proposed amendments, requests for interpretations, and referrals.

The primary focus of the ACC is to fulfill its constitutional function to provide advice to the General Assembly concerning overtures that seek to amend the Constitution, and concerning requests for interpretation of the Constitution.

Self-Study

Every six years, the ACC (and other entities) are required by the Manual of the General Assembly to complete a self-study. The ACC was required to complete a self-study for the 223rd General Assembly (2018). It was reported to the General Assembly in a timely fashion. The ACC is grateful for the assistance of the Office of Research Services.

Consultations

The ACC was invited to consult with the Rules of Discipline Task Force, which was appointed after the 222nd General Assembly (2016). A member of the ACC has been appointed as a liaison to that task force.

Editorial Corrections

The Organization for Mission provides, at Section IV.B.2.c., that the Stated Clerk shall prepared editorial changes in the Book of Order, which should be reviewed by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, provided the changes do not alter the substance of the text approved by the presbyteries. No editorial changes have been made since the conclusion of the 222nd General Assembly (2016)

ACC Membership and OGA Staff Support

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution reluctantly received the resignation of Ruling Elder Moon Lee, Class of 2020 (Synod of the Northeast) early in 2018. Due to the timing of his resignation, no appointment was made to fill that vacancy.

On behalf of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), the Advisory Committee on the Constitution expresses its thanks and appreciation to Teaching Elders Daryl Fisher-Ogden, Daniel Saperstein, and Daniel S. Williams for their dedicated service to the church through their work on the ACC. Each has brought unique gifts to the committee process.

The ACC is grateful for the staff assistance of Ruling Elder Laurie Griffith, director for constitutional interpretation, Flor Velez-Diaz, manager of judicial process and social witness, and Diane Minter, Mid Council Ministries program assistant for administration.

Finally, the ACC is deeply grateful for the vision and witness of Stated Clerk J Herbert Nelson, II, who serves as an ex officio member of the ACC. We are grateful for the opportunity to serve with him.

D. General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission

1. Roster of Former Members (D-5.0206b)
   a. Class of 2016

   Barbara Bundick, Synod of Lincoln Trails; A Bates Butler III, Synod of the Sun; Jay Lewis, Synod of the Trinity; Jeana Lungwitz. Synod of the Sun; Patrick Notley, Synod of the Northwest.

   b. Class of 2014

   Bradley C. Copeland, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii; Meta Shoup Cramer, Synod of the Covenant; H. Clifford Looney, Synod of Alaska Northwest; Michael Lukens, Synod of Lakes and Prairies.
c. Class of 2012

Susan Cornman, Synod of Rocky Mountains; Gregory A. Goodwiller, Synod of Living Waters; Yun Jin Kim, Synod of Mid Atlantic; Tony Cook, Synod of the Pacific.

2. Final Decisions of the Permanent Judicial Commission

The Permanent Judicial Commission met in Louisville, Kentucky, on October 6–8, 2016; in San Antonio, Texas. Having received the final decisions from the commission from its clerk, the Stated Clerk now reports to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) the final decisions received in the following cases and advises the General Assembly that they will be included in the minutes:

a. Remedial Appeal 222-07

PERMANENT JUDICIAL COMMISSION
OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)

Sylvia Kuzmak Appellant,

v.

The Session of the First Presbyterian Church at Red Bank, New Jersey Appellee.

DECISION AND ORDER

Remedial Case 222-07

Arrival Statement

This remedial case comes before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on appeal filed by Sylvia Kuzmak (Appellant), from a May 19, 2015, Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast (SPJC). The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on July 15, 2015.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellant has standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellant was present and was not represented by counsel. The Committee of Counsel for Session of the First Presbyterian Church at Red Bank, New Jersey (Appellee or Session), was represented by Kimberly Tsimbinos.

History

Appellant filed a complaint with Monmouth Presbytery (Presbytery) on November 18, 2013, alleging that the Session, at its August 20, 2013, meeting and in a letter to Appellant dated August 21, 2013, “did fail to take adequate corrective action to problems identified by [Appellant] after the June 9 [2013] congregational meeting.” The officers of the Presbytery Permanent Judicial Commission (PPJC) dismissed the Complaint on March 4, 2014, finding that the PPJC did not have jurisdiction over two of the delinquencies, Appellant had standing to file the Complaint, the Complaint was timely filed only as to some of the delinquencies, and the Complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Appellant appealed this decision to the full body on March 20, 2014. After a hearing on the preliminary questions, the PPJC dismissed the Complaint on April 27, 2014, finding that the Complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

Appellant appealed the decision of the PPJC to the SPJC on June 27, 2014. The SPJC Moderator and Clerk answered all of the preliminary questions for appeal in the affirmative. After a hearing, the SPJC issued its Decision and Order on May 19, 2015, upholding the Decision of the PPJC that the Complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.
Specifications of Error

There are five (5) specifications of error raised by Appellant in the Notice of Appeal to the GAPJC dated July 11, 2015, most with sub parts. This Commission has elected to repeat below the specifications of error in substantially the same language used in the Notice of Appeal.

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation of the fourth criterion to accept a remedial case (D-6.0305), namely “the complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted.”

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 2: Injustice in the process or decision, due to the SPJC failing to give the Appellant an opportunity to know and to respond to their grounds for dismissal of the case.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 3: Hastening to a decision before evidence or testimony is fully received.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 4: Irregularity in the proceedings concerning establishing and sharing the record.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 5: Injustice in the process or decision, due to the SPJC’s misunderstanding and misrepresentation of the complaint and the record of the case.

This specification is not sustained.

Decision

This Commission determines that Appellant failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In arriving at this conclusion, this Commission must assume the truth of all facts alleged in the complaint and then determine whether those assumed facts warrant any relief. (See, McKittrick vs. The Session of West End Presbyterian Church of Albany, New York, Minutes, 2003, pp. 272-274).

As this Commission previously ruled:

Within our polity, certain responsibilities, and the power to implement those responsibilities, are assigned to councils. A council has the authority to act or not act in matters within its discretion. A delinquency may arise when a council fails to act when it is required to act under the Constitution. However, a council does not commit a delinquency when it refrains from exercising its power in discretionary matters, nor does a council commit a delinquency when it exercises its best judgment in a manner other than a member might wish. Buck vs. The Session of Morrow Presbyterian Church, 222-02.

The disciplinary process is not suitable to resolve all issues (See, D-1.0103). Important operational matters often are most efficiently managed by the process of administrative review by contacting the appropriate presbytery officials (See, G-3.0108). Appellant conceded that Appellee responded to the issues she raised, but claimed they were not cured. Appellant does not cite any constitutional articles that the responses violated. Session’s responses to Appellant’s issues were within its constitutional discretion.

Appellant has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The case is dismissed and the other specifications of error are not sustained.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast Permanent Judicial Commission is upheld and this case is dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of the Session of First Presbyterian Church at Red Bank, New Jersey, report this Decision and Order to the Session at its first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Monmouth report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.
IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

The Synod of the Covenant commissioner position was vacant for this proceeding.

DECISION ON CHALLENGE TO PRELIMINARY ORDER FOR DISMISSAL
Remedial Case 222-08

Arrival Statement

This is a remedial case of original jurisdiction filed with the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) by the Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church, New York, NY (Complainant), against the Presbyterian Foundation, the Board of National Missions, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Respondents). The matter before this Commission is a Challenge to a November 13, 2015, Preliminary Order of the Executive Committee of the GAPJC (GAPJC EC) for Dismissal of the Complaint filed by the Complainant.

The GAPJC EC issued a Preliminary Order dismissing this Complaint on the grounds that the GAPJC does not have jurisdiction to hear the Complaint, the Complainant does not have standing to file the Complaint, and the Complaint does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted. With three of the four preliminary questions found in the negative, the GAPJC EC declined to reach the issue of timeliness.

Complainant’s Notice of Challenge under D-6.0306 was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on December 10, 2015.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that Complainant’s Challenge to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal was properly and timely filed under the provisions of D-6.0306.

Appearances

Complainant was represented by John M. Griem Jr.; the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of National Missions were represented by Richard H.C. Clay; and the Presbyterian Mission Agency was represented by James A. Wilson.

History

The Jarvie Trust Agreement (Trust) was established in 1934 between The Jarvie Commonweal Fund (Jarvie Fund), a not-for-profit corporation formed to provide relief to older Protestants residing within fifty miles of New York City, and the Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (BNM). The Jarvie Commonweal Service (Jarvie Service) was an operation supported solely by the Jarvie Fund. The BNM entered into an agreement with the Presbyterian Foundation (Foundation) to provide asset management of the Jarvie Fund. In accordance with the Trust, the BNM assumed oversight of the Jarvie Commonweal Service Committee (Jarvie Committee) and the BNM retained fiduciary responsibility. In 2009, the BNM and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) entered into a letter agreement in which their respective roles were defined, including the roles for staffing and administrative services for the Jarvie Service.

In November 2013, the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), informed the BNM that it would not renew the letter agreement to provide staffing and administrative services for the Jarvie Service, as this program was no longer aligned with the mission and work of the PMA. The PMA granted the BNM additional transition time to make new arrangements for staffing.

On May 14, 2015, BNM and PMA officials met with the Jarvie Service Executive Director and Assistant Director, informing them of the transition plans to a new third-party provider for the Jarvie Service and that their employer, the PMA, would no longer provide Jarvie Service staff. In a letter dated May 27, 2015, the Jarvie Committee notified the Jarvie Service beneficiaries of the transition and that it would take place over the next month and be fully completed by July 1, 2015.

The Complaint dated September 14, 2015, alleged various irregularities on the part of the Respondents, including eliminating the Director and staff of the Jarvie Service, outsourcing the servicing of its beneficiaries, and not providing the administration of its grant-making program and other functions. Complainant particularly points to the language of paragraph 2 of the Trust as a basis for its allegations:

The Board of National Missions is, to the extent of the income of the Trust Endowment, to assume all obligations, both of money and service, under present commitments of the Jarvie Commonweal Fund to its beneficiaries and, to this end, it (the Board) is to organize a Committee to be known as the James N. Jarvie Commonweal Service, and shall charge said committee with the duty of administering the commitments above assumed and of adding thereto-and continuing as outlined-herein, in fact and in spirit, the Jarvie concept of Old-Age Relief and Service.

Complainant specifically alleges the actions of the Respondents were in violation of the Respondents’ fiduciary duties as providers to and servicers of the Trust, in that the Respondents’ actions usurped the authority granted to the full Jarvie Committee under the Trust. The Respondents disagree.

Complainant states it has standing, in part, because its congregation is located near the center of the outreach area of the Jarvie Service, and it believes parishioners of the Rutgers Church are among the past, present or future beneficiaries of the Jarvie Service, either directly or indirectly, as individual recipients of its grant-making program or as volunteers in support of the Jarvie Service, its grant recipients and the Jarvie Committee.

On November 13, 2015, the GAPJC EC issued a Preliminary Order for Dismissal of the Complaint stating the GAPJC did not have jurisdiction, the Complainant did not have standing, and the Complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Because three of the four preliminary questions were answered in the negative, the GAPJC EC did not reach the issue of timeliness.

Complainant filed a Challenge, which was received on December 10, 2015. On December 18, 2015, the GAPJC EC issued an Order accepting the Complainant’s Challenge to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal.

Decision

Trust agreements, including an alleged breach of fiduciary duty under such agreements, are typically interpreted under state law. Whether Respondents breached their fiduciary duties in this case rests on an interpretation of the Trust under New York law. Therefore, the Complaint does not state a claim upon which this Commission can grant relief. Consequently, it is unnecessary to reach the other preliminary questions (See, D-6.0306c). While a case could conceivably arise where an ecclesiastical determination of a trust provision falls within this Commission’s purview, this is not such a case.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that this case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church of New York, NY, report this Decision to the Session at the first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

The Synod of the Covenant commissioner position was vacant for this proceeding.

PERMANENT JUDICIAL COMMISSION
OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)

First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville, N.C.
The Session of First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville, by and through its active Ruling Elders (aka The Session of First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville, “D-Church,” by and through its active Ruling Elders)
Bob Briner, Brenda Bradshaw, Gilbert Broyles, Lloyd Candell, Bill Durant, William Eadie, Marjorie Heaver, Richard House, Mary Jameson, Henry Leissing, Marguerite Martin, Eloise Murray, William Nagle, Greg Pope, Dale Stephens, Marvin Thomason, all both Individually and as Ruling Elders
Appellants (Original Complainants)
v.
The Presbytery of Western North Carolina
Appellee (Original Respondent)

Arrival Statement

This is an appeal to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (the GAPJC or this Commission) from a February 15, 2016, Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic (SPJC). In that Decision, the SPJC dismissed the Appellants’ (originally the Complainants’) case for lack of standing and lack of a timely filing of the Complaint. Appellants appealed the SPJC’s dismissal of the Complaint to the GAPJC.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, Appellants have standing to file this appeal, the appeal was properly and timely filed, and the appeal states one or more grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Forrest Norman and Larry Mobley appeared on behalf of Appellants. Greg Goodwiller and Robert Forsythe appeared on behalf of Appellee.

History

In October 2012, Appellants requested that the Presbytery of Western North Carolina (the Presbytery) grant their congregation dismissal from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the Evangelical Presbyterian Church. In response, the Presbytery appointed an Administrative Commission (AC) to manage the dismissal process requested by Appellants. Pursuant to the AC’s request, on July 29, 2014, the Presbytery bestowed upon the AC additional general powers under G-3.03, and the powers of Chapter 6, “Church Property,” of the Presbyterian Church in the United States Book of Church Order, 1982–1983 because, following reunion in 1983, First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville elected to be governed by that provision under the church property exceptions of G-4.0208. On August 13, 2014, the AC, acting as the Presbytery, determined under G-4.0207 that there was a continuing congregation of First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville, thereafter recognized as the “true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” and there was also a group seeking dismissal. On August 15, 2014, the AC sent a letter to the leaders of the group requesting dismissal, as well as the ministers and clerks of session of the Presbytery, informing them of its true church declaration, among other matters. Appellants did not file a complaint within 90 days from that declaration.

Appellants sent a letter to the Presbytery on May 19, 2015, challenging the authority of the AC and alleging a delinquency in failing to grant the Appellants’ dismissal request and requesting it be cured at the Presbytery’s July 28, 2015, meeting. that meeting, the Presbytery did not take the action requested by Appellants. Appellants then filed a complaint with the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic on August 25, 2015, alleging that the Presbytery engaged in “delinquencies, irregularities and constitutional deviations” by failing to grant the dismissal they had requested in October 2012.

On December 3, 2015, the officers of the SPJC issued the Report of the SPJC Officers’ Findings regarding the Complaint, finding that, although the SPJC had jurisdiction over the Complaint and the Complaint stated a claim upon which relief could be granted, Appellants did not have standing to file the Complaint and the Complaint was not timely filed.

Appellants filed a Challenge to the Report of the SPJC Officers’ Findings with the SPJC on January 4, 2016. After a hearing on Appellants’ Challenge, the SPJC dismissed the Complaint on February 15, 2016, concluding that Appellants did not have standing to file the Complaint and that the Complaint was not timely filed.

Appellants appealed the SPJC’s dismissal of the Complaint to the GAPJC. By Preliminary Order for Hearing issued April 7, 2016, the officers of the GAPJC determined that, under the provisions of D-8.0301, this Commission has jurisdiction, the Appellants have standing to file this Appeal, the Appeal papers were properly and timely filed, and the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal set forth in D-8.0105.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in ruling that the Complaint was not timely filed.

This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC erred in ruling that the Complainants did not have standing.

Because of the above finding, this Commission does not reach the issue of standing (see Decision below).

Decision

Appellants alleged in their complaint both irregularities and delinquencies related to claims of: the Presbytery’s failure to act upon or bring to vote the dismissal request; the Presbytery’s grant of authority to the AC and subsequent grant of additional authority; the decision of the AC to identify a schism; and the AC’s declaration of one faction to be the true church. Appellants further alleged the Presbytery improperly deferred to those identified as the true church.

At its core, the issue in this case arises from the AC’s declaration of a true church. According to the Book of Order, “[i]f there is a schism within the membership of a congregation and the Presbytery is unable to effect a reconciliation or a division into separate congregations within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Presbytery shall determine if one of the factions is entitled to the property because it is identified by the Presbytery as the true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” G-4.0207. In this case, the Presbytery delegated these powers to the AC at the July 29, 2014, meeting. The AC exercised these powers and declared those members of the First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville who wish to remain with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be the true church and thus entitled to the property. This decision was communicated to the leaders of the group requesting dismissal and to all ministers and clerks of session of the Presbytery by letter dated August 15, 2014.

The Book of Order requires “a complaint of an irregularity shall be filed within ninety days after the alleged irregularity has occurred; and a complaint of a delinquency shall be filed within ninety days after failure or refusal of respondent to cure the alleged delinquency at its next meeting, provided that a written request to do so has been made prior to said meeting.” D-6.0202(a). The AC’s determination of the true church, communicated by letter dated August 15, 2014, set in motion the 90-day period. Appellants argued that the failure of the Presbytery to vote on the dismissal during the Presbytery meeting following their request to cure constituted a delinquency. Where there is no constitutional requirement to act, there can be no delinquency. (Edmunds v. Presbytery of Cape Fear, 1984, 107, 11.088). The allegations of irregularities were not timely filed because Appellants filed their complaint on August 25, 2015, well past the 90-day time period. See generally (Smith v. Presbytery of the Peaks, 2015, 222-04).

This Commission heard significant oral argument concerning standing; this decision, however, does not reach that preliminary question. This Commission is concerned about the silence of the Book of Order regarding the status of the faction that is not declared to be the true church pursuant to G-4.0207. This Commission encourages the General Assembly to provide additional guidance in addressing these issues.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic Permanent Judicial Commission is hereby affirmed and this case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the appellants be notified of this Decision and Order.
IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of Session of First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville report this Decision to the Session at the first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Western North Carolina report this Decision to the Presbytery of Western North Carolina at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Western North Carolina enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic report this Decision to the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioners Terry Epling, Paul Hooker, and Kevin Nollette were excused from this meeting. Commissioner Sarah Thornburg was recused from this appeal and did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.

Concurrence of Jean C. Kennedy, June L. Lorenzo, and Susan C. McGhee

We concur with the Decision and Order of the GAPJC, save portions of the final paragraph of the decision. While we join this Commission in not reaching the preliminary question of standing, we do not agree with the recommendation for additional guidance on the provisions of G-4.0207.

Certificate

v. (v.

Arrival Statement

This is an appeal to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (the GAPJC or this Commission) from an August 4, 2016, Decision and Order on Motion to Dismiss of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of Living Waters (SPJC). In that Decision, the SPJC granted Appellant’s (originally the Complainant’s) Motion to Dismiss. Appellant appealed the SPJC’s dismissal of the Complaint to the GAPJC.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, Appellant has standing to file this appeal, the appeal was properly and timely filed, and the appeal states one or more grounds for appeal under Book of Order D-8.0105.

Appearances

This case arises from Appellant’s allegation of errors by the SPJC in its decision to dismiss a remedial complaint against the North Alabama Presbytery (NAP) for denying Appellant’s request to be restored to his position as Executive Director of Maranatha Camp and Conference Center (Executive Director).

Appellant, Teaching Elder Patrick Laney, was called to the NAP executive staff position of Executive Director on August 1, 2014; the position did not require a teaching elder. He was received into Presbytery membership and began work on October 21, 2014. Conflict with the Maranatha Mission Team arose shortly thereafter and later between Appellant and Presbytery committees and the Executive Presbyter. These conflicts continued unabated through various attempts at reconciliation and counseling. The Presbytery Personnel Committee terminated his employment on August 3, 2015. Presbytery rescinded that action and restored him as Executive Director on August 24, 2015.

Appellant ceased working at the Maranatha Camp and Conference Center (Maranatha Camp) on December 1 and on December 6, 2015, formally requested his relationship with Presbytery and employment as Executive Director be “dissolved” subject to approval of a proposed severance package. He was placed on medical leave on December 15, 2015. The Presbytery Personnel Committee subsequently offered a severance package in return for Appellant’s resignation. He did not respond to the Committee and on December 23, 2015, his wife referred the Committee to Appellant’s legal counsel.

The Presbytery Personnel Committee terminated Appellant’s employment on January 12, 2016. Appellant filed a complaint against Presbytery that was received by the Synod on January 27, 2016, requesting a stay of enforcement of the termination, and that the Synod “provide for a true process of healing and reconciliation” between Appellant and NAP. The SPJC granted a stay on January 29, 2016, which was modified on March 30 and remained in effect until August 4, 2016.

The Presbytery, at a special meeting on April 9, 2016, voted to (i) suspend operations at the Maranatha Camp effective May 10; (ii) eliminate all staff positions at Maranatha Camp, retaining any staff necessary to wind down the Camp’s operation; and (iii) commend the Executive Presbyter for her actions regarding the Maranatha Camp and its personnel.

The Presbytery filed a motion to dismiss the complaint on May 5, 2016. Following Appellant’s attempt to amend the complaint and an additional motion to dismiss, as well as other filings, the SPJC held a hearing and granted the motion to dismiss through its Decision and Order dated August 4, 2016.

A Notice of Appeal and Request for Stay of Enforcement of the Decision of the SPJC was received by this Commission on August 17, 2016. On September 8, 2016, the GAPJC entered a stay of enforcement in accordance with Book of Order D-6.0103d(2), which restored the terms of the SPJC’s Order Denying in Part and Granting in Part a Request to Lift Stay of Enforcement. On September 23, 2016, Appellee filed a Request to Lift the Stay of Enforcement. Following a hearing on December 8, the Request was denied on December 13, 2016.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in concluding that the appellant’s remedial action should be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted pursuant to D-6.0305d of the Book of Order. This specification of error is sustained (see Decision below).

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC erred in its failure to apply the appropriate provisions of the Book of Order, in its failure to apply the correct sections of appellee’s Manual of Administrative Operations to the facts of the case, and in its failure to recognize fatal contradictions to constitutional procedure in the appellee’s Personnel Manual and the job description given to the appellant consistent with Book of Order G-3.0106 and G-3.0110, and in the process the SPJC created injustice in the process and decision and committed errors of constitutional interpretation. In light of the decision on Specification of Error No. 1, this Commission does not reach a decision regarding this specification of error (see Decision below).

Decision

The SPJC erred in granting the motion to dismiss. The SPJC made a finding in its Decision and Order on Motion to Dismiss that the Complaint, as originally filed, stated a claim upon which relief could be granted. While acknowledging that the SPJC “would move forward to a trial” if it were possible to grant relief, the SPJC addressed only two remedies and concluded that “as a result of the Presbytery’s actions on April 9, 2016, there is no longer any relief which can be granted.”

While some of Presbytery’s actions cannot be undone, the SPJC may exercise its declaratory authority to provide future guidance to Presbytery. See generally (Wilber Tom, David Hawbecker, and Thomas Conrad v. Presbytery of San Francisco, 2012, 221-03).

In rendering this decision, this Commission concludes that the Complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted and the SPJC has the authority to grant relief as appropriate. This Commission makes no determination of the merits of this case or whether Appellant will be able to prove the facts he alleges in his Complaint. See generally (Janet E. Wolfe v. Presbytery of Winnebago, 2008, 219-04).

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of Living Waters Permanent Judicial Commission is hereby reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings consistent with this Commission’s Decision.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of North Alabama report this Decision to the Presbytery of North Alabama at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of North Alabama enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Living Waters report this Decision to the Synod of Living Waters at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of Living Waters enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Robin Roberts was recused from this appeal and did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.

Appellant/Complainant,

v.

Remedial Case 223-03

Presbytery of Los Ranchos, Appellee/Respondent.

Arrival Statement

This is an appeal to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (the “GAPJC” or “the Commission”) from a June 10, 2016, Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii (the “SPJC”) granting the Presbytery of Los Ranchos’s Motion to Dismiss.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission has jurisdiction, Appellant has standing to file this Appeal, the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Jack Guiso appeared on behalf of Appellant. Michael E. Williams appeared on behalf of Appellee.
History

On July 23, 2013, the congregation of St. Paul’s Presbyterian Church in Anaheim, California (St. Paul’s), and Reverend William Halliday requested dismissal from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the Covenant Order of Evangelical Presbyterians (ECO). The Presbytery of Los Ranchos (PLR) established a Joint Discernment Team (JDT). The JDT recommendation to Presbytery included the following actions: dismissing St. Paul’s to ECO, repayment of Synod Loan of $11,500, and dismissing Reverend Halliday to ECO. These recommendations of the JDT were adopted by Presbytery at its meeting on July 31, 2014. On September 15, 2014, several members of PLR filed a remedial complaint against Presbytery to the Synod regarding the terms of dismissal for several congregations, not including St. Paul’s. (Bucklin v. Presbytery of Los Ranchos).

On November 19, 2015, Presbytery leadership brought a motion to rescind the July 31, 2014, action of Presbytery. Presbytery declared the motion “controversial,” which triggered the Presbytery’s controversial issues policy that mandated that the motion would be considered no sooner than the next stated meeting. On February 25, 2016, the Presbytery voted to rescind the July 31, 2014, action.

On March 21, 2016, Appellant filed a complaint with the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii alleging that the action to rescind was irregular and unconstitutional. On May 5, 2016, Presbytery filed a motion to dismiss the complaint in its entirety. The SPJC granted that motion on June 10, 2016. Appellant filed the Notice of Appeal with the GAPJC on August 26, 2016.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred procedurally in the following ways:

a. The SPJC manifested prejudice by not finding a disqualifying conflict of interest regarding the title to the property of a dismissed congregation held by the synod with an interest in retaining title (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 1). This specification of error is not sustained.

b. The SPJC misconstrued the definition of a quorum and included ineligible attendees (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 2). This specification of error is not sustained.

c. The SPJC misstated the action being considered/contested (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 3). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

d. The SPJC issued contradictory findings on the jurisdictional question (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 4). This specification of error is not sustained.

e. The SPJC hastened to a decision before evidence or testimony was received and disregarded Claimant’s Amended Complaint (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 9). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

f. The SPJC failed to issue timely invitation for Claimant to submit briefs in response to Motion to Dismiss (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 10). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

g. The SPJC failed to comply with requirement that trials be conducted formally with full decorum (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 11). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

h. The SPJC failed to consider and vote on each alleged irregularity (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 12). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation in the following ways:

a. The SPJC misconstrued the standard for summary dismissal and failed to base its determination solely upon the assumed truth of the facts alleged in the complaint, after a thorough examination of the record and opportunity for all parties to be heard (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 5). This specification of error is sustained (see Decision below).

b. The SPJC elicited improper testimony on consultation with St. Paul’s about dismissal (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 6). This specification of error is sustained (see Decision below).

c. The SPJC disregarded Claimant’s allegation that Presbytery was not sufficiently informed when voting on the controversial issue of dismissal and not at all regarding transfer of property title (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 7). This specification of error is not sustained.

d. The SPJC refused Claimant the opportunity to be heard via opening statement, history, and interests in St. Paul’s (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 8). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).
e. The SPJC misconstrued the purpose and effect of a Stay of Enforcement in a remedial case which is intended solely to maintain the status quo until a decision on review is reached, not to allow parties time to amend or rescind their actions (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 13). This specification of error is sustained in part and not sustained in part (see Decision below).

f. The SPJC misconstrued the preconditions for rescinding an action when something has been done as a result of that action that cannot be undone (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 14). This specification of error is not sustained.

g. The SPJC misconstrued Robert’s Rules of Order by rescinding an action that included the resignation of Reverend Halliday (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 13). This specification of error is not sustained.

h. The SPJC misconstrued the prerogative of the Presbytery of Los Ranchos unilaterally to decline further contest of Bucklin v. Los Ranchos (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 16). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

i. The SPJC misconstrued that the power to decide or rescind issues under judicial review resides with the higher council, not reserved to Presbytery (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 17). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

j. The SPJC accepted as true that an action under judicial review can be rescinded simply for convenience without applying the standard (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 18). This specification of error is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 3: The SPJC erred by not applying civil law in the following ways:

a. The SPJC accepted as true that Presbytery is not subject to civil law involving breach of contract (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 19). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

b. The SPJC accepted as true that Presbytery is not subject to civil law involving timeliness of contract rescission (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 20). This specification of error is not sustained (see Decision below).

Decision

In a case involving an appeal from a grant of a motion to dismiss, this Commission reviews the decision of the SPJC to determine if the dismissal was proper. In this case, the review led this Commission to focus on whether the complaint filed stated a claim upon which relief can be granted. In determining whether the Complaint states a claim that can be granted, the SPJC and this Commission must assume the truth of facts as alleged in the Complaint (McKittrick v. Session of West End Presbyterian Church, 2003, p. 272) and then determine whether those assumed facts warrant any relief.

Appellant alleges in Specification of Error 2e (Appellant’s Specification of Error 13) that Presbytery’s rescission of the July 31, 2014, action was irregular because Presbytery may have violated a judicial stay which had been entered in a case to which Presbytery was a party. Appellant’s arguments are focused on D-3.0102, which states “[w]hen a case, either remedial or disciplinary, has been transmitted to a permanent judicial commission, the electing council shall take no further judicial action in the case.” That provision, however, does not support Appellant’s position because Presbytery is not the electing council for the SPJC.

Notwithstanding, both parties admit that there was a stay in place, although a copy of the stay was not in the record on appeal. This case was decided on the basis of a motion to dismiss and the record does not provide information on whether evidence was presented as to the content and extent of the stay. If the stay did prohibit the actions taken by Presbytery, a claim that warranted relief may have been stated. In the proper circumstances, the SPJC could overturn the actions of Presbytery. For these reasons, Specification of Error 2e (Appellant’s Specification of Error 13) is sustained in part and not sustained in part.

Appellant further argues that the SPJC did not apply the appropriate standard of review. The decision of the SPJC after a hearing on Respondent’s motion to dismiss states: “Finding the Respondent’s arguments to be correct, the motion to dismiss is granted.” In its motion to dismiss, Respondent argued that Complainant could not meet her burden of proof by the preponderance of the evidence, citing D-7.0402a. This provision applies to the standard of review in trials where both parties have an opportunity to present evidence. As set forth above, the standard of review on a motion to dismiss requires the facts in the complaint to be taken as true precisely because they are the only facts available to the permanent judicial commission in absence of a trial or other evidentiary-type hearing. Because the SPJC was required to assume the truth of the factual allegations cited in the Complaint, the SPJC erred by failing to find that the Complaint, on its face, stated a claim that Presbytery had committed an irregularity in rescinding an action governed by a judicial stay entered in another case. The SPJC erred by relying on Appellee’s contention that Appellant could not meet her burden of proof as that is not the appropriate standard of review for a motion to dismiss.
Appellant contends that testimony was improperly considered by the SPJC regarding the veracity of facts alleged in the complaint. Again, the appropriate standard of review for a motion to dismiss is to first assume that the facts alleged are true, and then determine whether any relief can be granted. As stated by this Commission in (Hope, et al. v. Presbytery of San Francisco 2006, p. 363), “[i]n relying on matters outside the complaint, the SPJC not only violated the standard set forth in McKittrick but also improperly determined the merits of disputed factual allegations without the benefit of a trial. As this Commission reminded stated clerks and moderators of permanent judicial commissions in 1990, the Book of Order contains no constitutional provision permitting ‘summary dismissal of any case’ where there are disputed factual allegations that, if proved, would entitle the complainant to some relief. Under those circumstances, ‘a dismissal is only appropriate after thorough examination of the record and opportunity for all parties to be heard’ (Minutes, 1990, p. 139).” Appellant alleged that, during the hearing, Respondent denied a fact set forth in the Complaint. If true, this denial should have triggered the factual dispute required to defeat the motion to dismiss. That assessment is a matter for the SPJC to determine following any proceedings that occur on remand of this case to the SPJC.

The Complaint alleges that Appellant did not receive timely notice regarding the SPJC’s procedure to hear Respondent’s motion to dismiss. Fair notice is defined as “a short and plain statement of the matters at issue as identified by the commission and of the time and place for a hearing upon the matters at issue.” (Minutes 2001, 149, 16.001-012, Req. 01-1). The record shows these considerations were met by the SPJC, and no error is found regarding the opportunity to be heard on the motion to dismiss.

On appeal a permanent judicial commission may consider only those matters that were part of the trial or hearing on appeal by the lower permanent judicial commission. (Congregation for Reconciliation v. Presbytery of Miami, 2000, 580, 12.071). In this case, no transcript was included in the record regarding the hearing on Respondent’s motion to dismiss. This Commission has found that whenever a lower permanent judicial commission conducts a hearing concerning a potential final disposition that might be the subject of a further appeal, it would be wise practice for a permanent judicial commission to create such a record, even though it is not specifically required by the Constitution. (Session of Second Presbyterian Church of Tulsa v. Eastern Oklahoma Presbytery, 2006, 217-5, 377). Inasmuch as a hearing on a motion to dismiss is a hearing concerning a potential final disposition that could be the subject of appeal, the transcript of the hearing could have been beneficial to the resolution of this case on appeal. In addition, the brevity and absence of rationale in the SPJC Decision did not serve the judicial process well.

Finally, Appellant has alleged that the SPJC erred in failing to address civil law matters raised in the complaint. This Commission has ecclesiastical jurisdiction (See F-3.0108, G-3.0102) as granted in D-5.0202, which states: “[i]n the cases transmitted to it, the permanent judicial commission shall have only the powers prescribed by and conduct its proceedings according to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” This provision of the Book of Order precludes consideration of matters outside of those expressly granted to permanent judicial commissions.

Permanent judicial commissions have long-standing and broad authority to restate, group, consolidate, and summarize, but not omit, specifications of error presented in the appeal. A PJC may also consider those specifications of error set forth in briefs or at oral argument on appeal. This may be done for purposes of clarity or to eliminate redundancy. A PJC is not required, but rather encouraged, to provide rationale for each specification. (Presbytery of Greater Atlanta v. Ransom (2010, 219-02, 359, PC(USA)), Bolton v. Alamance Presbyterian Church (1995, 117, 11.053), Congregation for Reconciliation v. Presbytery of Miami (2000, 580, 12.071), and Hope, et al. v. Presbytery of San Francisco (2006, 217-1, 455)). This Commission has chosen to restate and regroup the Specifications of Error presented on appeal for the purpose of clarity. It has given an explanation for those Specifications of Error that it determines are most pertinent to this Decision, and that provide guidance to lower councils. Given that the Commission has reversed and remanded the SPJC Decision, it does not find it necessary to give rationale for its rulings regarding the remaining Specifications of Error.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii be reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings consistent with this Commission’s Decision.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii report this Decision to the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Los Ranchos report this Decision to the Presbytery of Los Ranchos at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Los Ranchos enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Commissioner Maurice Caskey was recused from this appeal and did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.
The Synod Permanent Judicial Commission created a great deal of consternation among the parties and this Commission by failing to include any substantive basis in fact or law for its decision on the Motion to Dismiss. With no guidance as to the basis for the decision, SPJC left everyone twisting in the wind. Particularly, SPJC sat in a unique position to enlighten the litigants on the issue of the Stay issued. Presumably the Stay, which SPJC itself issued, was considered, but presume is all we can do without so much as a copy of the document. GAPJC received over 1500 pages of record. It heard extensive arguments about the Stay, yet the salient document was not available. Permanent commissions are the backbone of the disciplinary system of the PC (USA). It is essential that every council in the gradual system of review conceived by the Book of Order issue ruling in such a manner as that the appellate council can ascertain the basis of the lower council’s decision. Without some findings coherently included in a decision, the reviewing council will have difficulty effectively doing its prescribed job.

Moreover, there are serious questions in the record about a potential conflict of interest on the part of the Synod. While we did not reach these issues in rendering our decision, potential conflict must be duly considered and there should never be any question that no conflict exists. The integrity of the judicial procedure for the church is at stake, and avoidance of even the appearance of any impropriety should be the standard.

E. Mid Councils’ Statements of Compliance with the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission Decisions

Section IV.B.2.d. of the Organization for Mission requires that when a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission contains an order directed to another council, the Stated Clerk report to the General Assembly a statement of the council’s compliance. Below is a report of the statements of compliance received by the Stated Clerk from the councils for cases decided by the Permanent Judicial Commission during the year 2016–2018.

1. GAPJC Remedial Appeal 222-07, Sylvia Kuzmak, Appellant v. The Session of the First Presbyterian Church at Red Bank, New Jersey

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast Permanent Judicial Commission is upheld and this case is dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of the Session of First Presbyterian Church at Red Bank, New Jersey, report this Decision and Order to the Session at its first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Monmouth report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The Synod of the Northeast meets once every two years. This decision will be reported at the 2018 stated meeting, June 1, 2018. The decision will be posted on the synod website.

The Presbytery of Monmouth reported the decision at its’ stated meeting November 18, 2016. The First Presbyterian Church of Redbank did not comply with this order.

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:
IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that this case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church of New York, NY, report this Decision to the Session at the first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church of New York, New York, did not comply with this order.

3. GAPJC Remedial Appeal 223-01, First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville, N.C., The Session of First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville, by and through its active Ruling Elders (aka The Session of First Presbyterian Church of Hendersonville, "D-Church," by and through its active Ruling Elders)

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii be reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings consistent with this Commission's Decision.
IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii report this Decision to the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Los Ranchos report this Decision to the Presbytery of Los Ranchos at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Los Ranchos enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii’s stated meeting on September 8, 2017, and at the Presbytery of Los Ranchos stated meeting on May 25, 2017.

[The assembly approved Item 07-01 with amendment. See p. 15.]

On America’s Interfaith Context and the Church’s Challenge—From the Presbytery of Carlisle.

The Presbytery of Carlisle respectfully overtures the 223rd. General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Affirm and embrace the religiously diverse nature of the United States of America and the call of the Christian faith to love all of our neighbors—including those of other faiths—as we love ourselves.

2. Condemn all religiously inspired and motivated violence, prejudice, discrimination, and hate speech, in particular, those actions based upon anti-Semitism and anti-Muslim behaviors and language.

3. Affirm our positions as stated in “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” 221st General Assembly (2014); “Toward a Christian Understanding of Christian-Muslim Relations,” 219th General Assembly (2010); “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews: A Paper Committed to the Church for Study and Reflection,” 199th General Assembly (1987); and “A Study on Islam approved by the 199th General Assembly (1987).”

4. Call upon all Presbyterians to [continue to] live repentantly by seeking reconciliation with all religious groups who have been hurt by unjust actions and words of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and with those who have hurt Presbyterians and ecumenical partners in the United States and overseas.

5. Encourage presbyteries to [create] [promote] interfait relations [committees or task forces to promote interfait relations, dialogue, and understanding] [by creating committees, task forces, or something of a similar nature].

6. Encourage congregations to engage in interfait conversations and partnerships in their communities.

7. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to encourage congregations to utilize the resources of the Office of Interfaith Relations to promote education about other religions and interfait dialogue.

Rationale

We Affirm and Embrace Our Nation’s Religious Diversity and Condemn Religiously Inspired and Motivated Violence and Hate Speech, in particular, Those Actions Based Upon Anti-Semitism and Anti-Muslim Behavior and Language

Our religious traditions and our nation’s Constitution are congruent in affirming our society’s religious diversity.

First, our nation’s Constitution and Bill of Rights were meant to establish a society that guarantees equality and religious freedom for all. As a result, our society is richly diverse in religious expression. In order to be a united nation—E Pluribus Unum (out of many, one)—“the many” are to be embraced and honored as residents of this country. Religiously inspired and motivated violent actions, prejudice, and hate speech have no place in American culture and life. Therefore, we condemn anti-Semitism and anti-Muslim behaviors and language.

In the United States, conflict and increasing rhetoric of hate and the politics of exclusion are evident throughout all levels of society. This rhetoric fuels criminal acts based on hateful bias. According to the most recent FBI statistics on acts of religious bias in the United States, in 2016 54 percent of all religiously biased hate crime is described as anti-Jewish, while the second highest is 21 percent for anti-Muslim hate crime. No other religious group exceeded 4 percent. Such behavior violates the deep core of the American spirit. It also contradicts Christ’s will for the world and the church.

We Reaffirm Our Traditional Positions

Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ taught us that we are to “love your neighbor as yourself” (Mk. 12:31). He taught this without equivocation. As Presbyterians, we embrace Christ’s teaching in its full implications of extending God’s love to people of other faith traditions. “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) long has advocated positive relationships with people of other religious traditions.” Question 52 of The Study Catechism: Full Version asks: “How should I treat non-Christians and people of other religions?” The answer to the question repudiates any spirit of bigotry, hostility, or hatred directed against people of other faiths:

As much as I can, I should meet friendship with friendship, hostility with kindness, generosity with gratitude, persecution with forbearance, truth with agreement, and error with truth. I should express my faith with humility and devotion as the occasion requires, whether silently or openly, boldly or meekly, by word or by deed. I should avoid compromising the truth on
To welcome and accept others and to denounce all forms of hatred is a historical position that we Presbyterians express with firm conviction in many of our documents and position papers. The hostility toward Jews and Muslims in our society, in particular, calls for the church to reaffirm these historical positions and to stand in solidarity with Muslims and Jews in the face of hateful words, actions, and behavior. Prescient for its time, the 199th General Assembly (1987) called “on the appropriate agencies and governing bodies of the church, and on individual Presbyterians, to identify, expose, and counteract the bigotry and prejudice manifested in the United States against Arabs, Islam, Muslim peoples, and Muslim world …”

Our church has taken this relevant word of 1987 and expanded upon it. The 219th General Assembly (2010) called upon the church “through its agencies and governing bodies, to support Presbyterians in the practice of faithful witness with Muslims, by … asking appropriate bodies of the church, and individual Presbyterians, to identify and speak out against bigotry, prejudice, discrimination, and violence against Islam and Muslim peoples of all cultures, especially in the United States.”

We have also reaffirmed our commitment to oppose anti-Semitism. A resolution, approved in 1990 by the 202nd General Assembly (1990), stated: “We condemn anti-Semitism in the strongest possible terms. While affirming our close spiritual ties with the Jews, we wish to state unequivocally that authentic Christianity can have no complicity in anti-Semitic attitudes or actions of any kind.”

This strong denunciation of anti-Semitism followed a profound document published by the 199th General Assembly (1987), A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews: A Paper Commended to the Church for Study and Reflection. In this document the church reevaluated the historic and often harsh relationship that Christianity has had with the Jewish people. It stated that the church elected in Jesus Christ “has been grafted into the people of God established by the covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.” Therefore, Christians have not replaced Jews. In addition, the document states, “We affirm that both the church and the Jewish people are elected by God for witness to the world and that the relationship of the church to contemporary Jews is based on that gracious and irrevocable election of both.” Again in the same document, the church acknowledged in repentance, the long complicity that the church has had with the “teaching of contempt” for the Jews, views which it now repudiates.

These statements of opposition to religiously motivated hate speech and actions require us, in our present context, to remember who we are as God’s people and to call upon the General Assembly to condemn all such hate speech and behavior.

We Call Upon Presbyterians to Live Repentantly and Seek Reconciliation

While we recognize the call to be prophetic, we also know that we too are held accountable for our thoughts and actions. “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) often has fostered a love for people of other religious traditions, but many times we have not. The first is cause for celebration, thanking God for the grace to be faithful. For the second, the church resolves to do better.” A prophetic people must be a repentant people. For the sake of being credible in our witness, it is important thus for us to note where we are estranged from people of other faiths and seek reconciliation where possible. The quest for social justice in our world is “one of the most compelling reasons for interreligious activity” and calls us “to explore interreligious opportunities for truth and reconciliation work, including formal acts of repentance for unjust actions of the church, past and present.”

We Form an Action Plan to Encourage Interfaith Dialogue and the Formation of Bodies and Organizations within Presbyteries and Congregations That Engage in Such Dialogue

In the present context of division in our society, we urge the General Assembly to affirm the necessity of dialogue and engagement with people of other religions. We believe that a concerted effort by Presbyterians to foster interfaith understanding can help in reminding Americans of our national identity as a religiously pluralistic and diverse nation. Dialogue leads to understanding and the discovery of our common humanity. Let us be clear, however, that dialogue in no way compromises our own faith convictions. All people, including Christians, have a worldview, a perspective; and to say, “I believe in God, the Father almighty, creator of heaven and earth [and] in Jesus Christ, God’s only Son, our Lord,” means indeed that we have a particular perspective. Good interfaith dialogue requires that partners in conversation know where they stand and how they see the world. This is where we begin conversations, not from some a priori conclusion that we are all talking about the same thing, because we do not always believe the same thing or even mean the same thing, even if we use similar words. To engage in interfaith dialogue never requires selling out, compromising, or distorting our theological position only to arrive at some imagined common ground.

At the same time, interfaith dialogue is not about polemically defeating adherents of other faiths or trying to convince them that they are wrong and we are right. Religious scholar Diana Eck says that interdependence is a fact of global life, but that the world:

... is not yet interrelated in the sense of actively and intentionally creating the international, intercultural, and interreligious relationships that will sustain a world in which we depend on one another as much as we do. We share our communities and our world with men and women who worship in various ways, who base their judgments on differing authorities, who recognize differing revelations, who speak of God in strikingly different ways or do not speak of God at all. Our task is to learn to collaborate with one another on issues that none of us can solve alone.13

If cooperation and dialogue can take place among states and economies, cannot the world’s religions do the same? We may not all agree on theology and issues, but we can agree to love one another. To love one another means to love those of other faiths too, pilgrims with us in the journey of life. We love them because God loves them and gave his Son for them. We love them regardless of their religion. We love them because “God is love” (1 Jn. 4:8), and “those who love God must love their brothers and sisters also” (1 Jn. 4:21). Theologian Keith Ward has written:

Love entails making an attempt to understand and respect, so far as possible those who differ [on matters of belief]. So Christians have a duty to encourage inter-faith conversation, and this is especially important in areas where ethnic and religious markers of identity coincide and increase the dangers of social violence.13

Understanding others is key to mitigating the volatility that religion can ignite. Appreciating another religious perspective can lead to greater understanding and cooperation in solving problems.

To accomplish this end, we ask the General Assembly to encourage presbyteries to create interfaith relations committees or task forces to promote interfaith relations, dialogue, and understanding. We ask the General Assembly to encourage congregations to engage in interfaith conversations and partnerships, and we ask the General Assembly to direct the Stated Clerk to encourage congregations to utilize the resources of the Office of Interfaith Relations to promote education about other religions and interfaith dialogue.

Conclusion

We call upon the General Assembly: (1) to affirm and embrace our nation’s religious diversity and condemn all religiously inspired and motivated violence, prejudice, discrimination, and hate speech, in particular, those actions based upon anti-Semitism and anti-Muslim behaviors and language; (2) to affirm our traditional positions on interfaith relations; (3) to call upon all Presbyterians to live repentantly by seeking reconciliation with all religious groups who have been hurt by unjust actions and words of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and (4) to form an action plan to encourage interfaith dialogue and the formation of bodies and organizations within presbyteries and congregations that engage in such dialogue.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-01

Advice & Counsel on Item 07-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 7-01 calls for greater engagement in interfaith conversations and in countering hate speech, particularly against Jews and Muslims.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval as amended below: [Text to be added is shown with an underline and with brackets.]
“4. Call upon all Presbyterians to live repentantly by seeking reconciliation with all religious groups who have been hurt by unjust actions and words of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and with those who have hurt Presbyterians and ecumenical partners, in the United States and overseas.”

Interfaith dialogue, cooperation, and shared worship to the degree possible enrich our Christian faith and help us fulfill our calling as peacemakers. Public solidarity and acts of welcome to those of other faiths are part of the social witness of the church and need not compromise the Gospel, as the rationale to this overture notes. It is particularly important that we be ready to counter hate speech and hateful acts, and this is best done on the base of existing friendly relationships. The proponents of this overture rightly underline the importance of inter-religious work in any increasingly diverse society.

In today’s United States, immigration has become an increasingly contentious concern, even with largely Christian would-be immigrants from Latin America. Efforts to “ban” Muslims from the United States, or to restrict immigration from predominantly Muslim countries, clearly damage interfaith as well as international relations. Some proportion of the U.S. population believes Christianity, or a form of Christianity, is under attack, perhaps primarily by secular forces and trends, but also in some measure by immigrants.

While interfaith conversations may sometimes seem innocuous and unthreatening, they require honesty and repentance, as well as prophetic truth-telling. The overture calls us to be repentant for hurting others with “unjust actions and words of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” which are undefined. Because of the focus on Jewish and Muslim relations, however, the clear complement to this overture would seem to be item 12-05, which deals forthrightly with what is frequently “the elephant in the room:” Israeli and Palestinian relations.

There is danger in eliding around the problems that have prevented the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) from adopting more than a study document on Jewish-Christian relations (the 1987 and a 2010 paper (not mentioned) both have study status, but have raised Christological and other “stumbling blocks” in the past). Our documents and study material on Christian-Muslim relations do not yet explore the range of issues raised in the Christian-Jewish studies, but this overture should be encouragement for that exploration, and that with Asian and other indigenous faiths as well.

The amendment proposed in Recommendation 4 is meant to reflect the mutuality needed, and to help distinguish repentance for particular or systemic biases from forms of guilt that inhibit honesty.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-01

Advice & Counsel on Item 07-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 07-01. This overture aligns with the core values of ACREC, including:

1. combating racism, prejudices, and bigotry across religious lines (in togetherness);
2. building bridges of understanding among all people of different faiths;
3. commitment to human diversity;
4. creating venues of innovation/partnerships in dealing with world & societal issues;
5. advocacy for world peace and solidarity.

ACREC suggests adding a biblical mandate to this rationale that includes Jesus’ prayer for the unity of humanity in John 17, along with Isaiah 56, calling for the gathering of all God’s people, including the “other.”

Churches to Invite to send Ecumenical Advisory Delegates to the 224th General Assembly (2020)—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations nominates the following churches to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to invite to the 224th General Assembly (2020):

International: Evangelical Church of Vietnam, Presbyterian Church of Myanmar, United Church of Christ in the Philippines, Evangelical Lutheran Church of Jordan and the Holy Land, Waldensian Church, Presbyterian Church of Mozambique (IPM), Ethiopia Evangelical Church of Mekane Yesus (EECMY), The United Church of Jamaica and Cayman Islands, United Presbyterian Church of Brazil (IPUB), Evangelical Church of the River Plate.

United States and/or Canada: African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, Community of Christ, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, Greek Orthodox Church Archdiocese of North America, United Church of Canada.

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations nominates to each General Assembly churches to be invited to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the subsequent assembly (Standing Rule B.2.g.). Ten overseas churches and five churches from within the United States are recommended. Of the overseas churches, we recommend at least one church from each area staffed by the Worldwide Ministries Division. Of the churches within the United States, we recommend at least one church from Full Communion and or Covenant Relationships, and at least one church in our conciliar relationships.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-02

Advice & Counsel on Item 07-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 07-02 with comment.

ACWC advises that this item be approved with the following comment and commitment:

The Gender and Leadership in the PC(USA) report is a project created to assess the status of women at all levels of the church. Through this study, gender biases are exposed within the PC(USA) for women as leaders in ordered ministry. One example is named here:

Eight out of ten female teaching elders in the denomination have experienced gender bias in the form of discrimination, sexual harassment, and/or prejudicial statements. Almost three out of four female teaching elders have a harder time in being accepted in leadership roles within the denomination due to their gender. Four out of ten female teaching elders feel that their gender has contributed to their being overlooked for a promotion to a higher-status position within the PC(USA). (Gender and Leadership in the PC(USA), p. 4. (https://www.presbyterianmission.org/resource/gender-leadership-pcusa/))

Many of the PC(USA)’s ecumenical partners have not expressed nor displayed their commitment to gender justice in leadership. Our ecumenical and interfaith partners should display a similar commitment to gender justice as the PC(USA), if we invite them not only as partners but as advisors in our denominational decision-making. Moving forward, we would also request that each of our ecumenical advisor partners consider all genders when considering whom will serve as their delegates, better reflecting our common commitment to gender justice and equality.

[The assembly referred Item 07-03 to the 224th General Assembly (2020). See pp. 12, 15.]

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

2. Express its gratitude to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) representatives on the dialogue: the Reverend Cynthia Campbell, Ph.D., and the Reverend David Gambrell, Ph.D., for their leadership and service on the dialogue team.

Rationale

[The assembly approved Item 07-04. See pp. 12, 15.]

_Episcopal Church and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Dialogue Report—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations._

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) receive the report of the Episcopal Presbyterian Dialogue (as shown below) and extend its gratitude to the PC(USA) members of the dialogue team.

THE EPISCOPAL PRESBYTERIAN BILATERAL DIALOGUE REPORT (2009–2018)

The Participants

We would like to note the Reverend Dennis James Hughes, Ph.D., entered into the joy of God’s kingdom on Easter morning, Sunday, April 16, 2017, at his home in Edmonds, Washington. He was 73.

Meetings

The dialogue team met on the following dates, November 2010 (Louisville), May 2011 (Washington, D.C.), December 2011 (San Diego), May 2012 (Chicago), May 2013 (Seattle), January 2014 (Chicago), November 2014 (Denver), May 2015 (phone), November 2015 (Berkeley), September 2016 (Chicago), April 2017 (Baltimore), and October 2017 (Chicago).

Issues Addressed

In our search for greater understanding of each other’s history, polity, and practice, this committee has explored many topics, including:

- Demographic similarities and dissimilarities of our denominations;
- Historical, cultural, and social factors that shape our understanding of one another, which go back as far as our shared history in Scotland;
- Our varied understandings of liturgy, its role in worship, as well as liturgical oversight;
- Understanding of the sacraments and sacramentals;
- What confirmation means in our two communions, in relation to baptism and membership;
- The nature and shared mission of the Church as incarnated in each of our churches;
- Our current ecumenical engagements, as well as finding common ground through our shared full communion agreements (i.e. Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and the Moravian Church).

In accordance with the mandate given us in the agreement adopted by the PC(USA) General Assembly in 2008 and ratified by the presbyteries in 2009 and the TEC General Convention in 2009, we focused our discussions on paragraphs 3, 4, and 7 of the agreement. This included extended conversations about:

- Threefold ordered ministry, as well as the expression of ordered ministries at the local level (congregation and diocese);
- The historic episcopate as well as the embodiment of episkopē;
The dialogue confirmed that historically, Anglicanism and Presbyterianism grew up as cousins, if not siblings, in England, Scotland, and later in Ireland and Wales, and these traditions were transplanted into the American context during the colonial period. Having had common roots in Britain, as well as in the colonies, and being generally of similar socioeconomic and educational levels, Presbyterians and Episcopalians have over the years engaged in conversations towards unity on and off since the 1890s. Many times, the breakdown in eumcenuical dialogue and potential full communion agreements had less to do with theology or ecclesiology, but more to do with cultural and socioeconomic factors.

What the committee has discovered through this ongoing dialogue is that we have a shared DNA. Like fraternal twins that were separated during the 18th century, we each developed in ways that could be divergent and kept us from being reunited or in full communion. The committee, however, views the two churches as complimentary, perhaps by divine institution. We firmly hold that neither church, in any means, is deficient. For instance, we found both churches exercise episkopé communally, collegially, and personally, yet in different, and we think, complimentary ways. In addition, the committee affirmed the fullness of the baptismal ministry in each church’s members, and that members who transfer should be welcomed as members without the need of confirmation or laying on of hands. We remain committed to overcoming the institutional division of our two churches and to find the unity required by God so we all may fully engage in the mission of God and be a living witness of the holy communion we already share in Christ.

As we reflect on our time together and what we have learned about each other, we cannot help but also address the role our co-chair, the Reverend Dr. Dennis Hughes, had in the process. He valiantly remained engaged in the dialogue until his last days. For us, his sisters and brothers on the Episcopal Presbyterian Dialogue, Dennis was an embodiment of the ecumenical movement, and passionate about Christ’s prayer that all churches be one. Dennis’ life experiences—personal, academic, and pastoral—constantly informed and enlightened our work together. His stories and words of wisdom many times brought us back to our common theology and liturgical expressions in baptism and holy communion, and what the practical implications were regarding our unified witness to our Lord. In his perspective, our two churches were already in full communion; for in Christ we are one (Ephesians 4:4–6). However, we obscure the visible reality constantly by putting other things as more important above Christ and the mission of God that we are to incarnate as Christ’s one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church. It is in Dennis’ persistence in the Gospel that continues on in, with, and through us—as he fulfilled his baptism and now is numbered among the great cloud of witnesses, encouraging both of our communions in our next steps to make God’s reality our own.

Bilateral Dialogue History

It has been more fifty years since the Reverend Eugene Carson Blake, Stated Clerk of the United Presbyterian Church in the USA, proposed in a sermon at Grace Episcopal Cathedral, San Francisco, the establishment of a dialogue between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the United Presbyterian Church in the USA, in the hope that this would result in a united church that would be “truly catholic, truly reformed, and truly evangelical.” This would later be expanded to include the United Methodist Church and, subsequently, seven other denominations, including three historically black Methodist denominations. This would give rise to the Consultation on Church Union, which would subsequently be succeeded in this vision in 2001 by Churches Uniting in Christ, with ten denominations from the Reformed, Anglican, Methodist, and Moravian traditions.

Born alike in the ferment of the Reformation Era of pre-Stuart Britain, Presbyterianism and Episcopalianism grew up as cousins, if not siblings, in England, Scotland, and later in Ireland and Wales, and the colonists brought their preferences to the New World. While the episcopal polity of the Church of England suffered there from years of neglect by the home country—never did an English bishop visit the colonies in the nearly 200 years from the Jamestown settlement until the American Revolution, nor were the colonies permitted to have a bishop of their own—the Church of England was actually established as the state church in several colonies.

While some of the newly independent Americans were Presbyterian by conviction, others, though Episcopalian by preference, came to favor Presbyterian polity as a matter of necessity. In 1782, William White of Philadelphia wrote a tract entitled, The Case of the Episcopal Churches in the United States Considered, in which he advocated a Presbyterian polity for the new denomination that would take the place of the previous state Church of England, it being unlikely in his view that the newly independent Americans would be able to procure bishops ordained in the “historic succession” from their former English mentors. Many of White’s ideas in this treatise became part of the new Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, including the representation of lay people at every level of its governance, White was subsequently elected as bishop of Pennsylvania, consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury and recognized as the first Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church at its organizing convention in 1789. The 1784 consecration of Samuel Seabury to be bishop of Connecticut by non-juring Scottish bishops had rendered moot the question of where the American church would find bishops in the “historic episcopate.” Having had common roots in Britain, as well as in the colonies, and being generally of similar socioeconomic and educational levels, Presbyterians and Episcopalians, as those formerly loyal to the Church of England were now called, have over the years enjoyed a great degree of interpersonal relationship, with varying degrees of mutual respect and understanding. Over the years there has never been a time when some in both denominations have not looked toward the establishment of greater unity between them.

The definitive statement of the basis for church union in the Episcopal Church, indeed in Anglicanism as a whole, is the so-called Chicago Quadrilateral of 1886 (better known since its adoption by the worldwide Lambeth Conference of Anglican bishops in 1888 as the Lambeth Quadrilateral. Originally an invitation by the American Episcopal Bishops to discussions of union with various other church bodies, the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. alone responded. Despite a proposal in 1946 for organic church union, there were no permanent results of these discussions and as Gibson Winter observed long before the current round of bilateral discussions, “The fact, however, that these two churches had once enjoyed a brief courtship is probably one of the main lessons for the second courtship forty years later.”[Presbyterian-Episcopal Negotiations the U.S.A (1937–1946)]. Several courtships later, the members of the Presbyterian/Episcopal Bilateral Dialogue are in agreement, as well as with the conviction that this dialogue must not fade into what Gibson called “polite exchanges of resolutions of friendship.” The potential benefits are too great, the consequences of inaction too dire; the need for wholeness and Godly vision too urgent!

Consultation on Church Union to Churches Uniting in Christ

The more recent movement of Presbyterian/Episcopal dialogue begun within the wider purview of the Consultation on Church Union’s development of the document, Churches in Covenant Communion: The Church of Christ Uniting, which ultimately produced in 1985 The COCU Consensus—In Quest of a Church Uniting, a second draft of which was approved by the COCU plenary meeting in St. Louis in 1988. This draft was ultimately deemed inadequate by both the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Episcopal Church in the USA because of disagreements over the conclusions of Section VII “MINISTRY.” This lack of resolution over its primary document foreshadowed the institutional end of COCU and its transformation in January 2001 into Churches Uniting in Christ, a new relationship between nine, member churches and one Partner in Mission and Ministry (the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America) with the Roman Catholic Church as an observer body.

With authorization from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (USA) [PC(USA)] and the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in the United States of America (TEC), both partners in CUIC, the two denominations entered once again into a formal bilateral dialogue. At their initial meeting, held concurrently with the inauguration of CUIC in January 2001, it was decided that the dialogue’s conversations would take place within the larger context of CUIC’s Ministry Task Force, which was to focus its work on revisiting the issues of Chapter VII of The COCU Consensus, eventually developing a report on Mutual Recognition and Mutual Reconciliation of Ministry (MRIRM).

The previous dialogue team met twice annually since its first meeting in January 2001. It has met in various venues of each denomination including seminaries (Fuller, Louisville) and middle judicatory offices, with diocesan bishops, General presbyters, and parochial clergy, including twice at Indian Hill Presbyterian-Episcopal Church in Cincinnati and once at St. Matthew’s Episcopal/Wilton Presbyterian Church in Wilton, Connecticut. It has met with prominent theologians (e.g. the Rev. Drs. Mudge, Small, and Wright) of each tradition, as well as in conjunction with the Ministry Task Force of CUIC (of which the Presbyterian co-convener is a member). During this time, the Episcopal co-convener served two, two-year terms as an ecumenical member of the General Assembly Council of the PC(USA) and as an ecumenical advisor to the PC(USA)’s Richmond General Assembly. A member of the Standing Commission on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations of TEC during much of his tenure as co-convener, he also has met several times with the CUIC Coordinating Council of CUIC in his capacity as a member of CUIC’s Local and Regional Task Force, and he will serve as proxy for the presiding bishop of TEC at the meeting of Heads of Communion at CUIC’s forthcoming Plenary Session I, St. Louis. The Rev. Drs. Phillip Wickeri and George Telford have served as members of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations of the PC(USA).

The dialogue had extensively examined relevant documents and deliberations from the past and present both in the United States and abroad, including the Formula of Agreement between the PC(USA) and the ELCA, UCC, and RCA denominations, the Call to Common Mission document between TEC and the ELCA, and the Mutual Recognition and Mutual Reconciliation document of CUIC. At every meeting of the dialogue, members have worshipped together using rites approved by either denomination or according to the authorized CUIC liturgy, with ordained ministers of each denomination officiating.

Among the most significant achievements of the dialogue was the co-sponsorship with CUIC of a Consultation on Episcope held in St. Louis in October 2006. Although the dialogue identified the need for such a serious theological consultation and requested the sponsorship of CUIC, the latter organization did “the heavy lifting” in terms of organizing and producing the consultation. In addition to opening and closing remarks by representatives of the Disciples of Christ and the Methodist tradition, there were five scholarly papers presented; one by an Episcopalian, two from the Reformed Tradition (PC(USA) and UCC) and one each by a member of the ELCA and the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church. These papers, together with three Bible studies by the Reverend John Ford (RC) and other related presentations have been published in Call to Unity—Resourcing the Church for Ecumenical Ministry, generously published by the Council on Christianity Unity of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ)

At its initial meeting in Memphis in January 2001, members of the dialogue present all agreed that both churches were within the “apostolic succession.” Although it might appear that it should have been “easy sledding” from there, the dialogue was still unable to agree on a basis for full mutual recognition and reconciliation of ministry. Disagreements centered on the concepts of “personal” and “corporate” episcope. Episcopalians believe that a necessary mark of the church is a continuous passage of episcope through the laying-on-of-hands by bishops in direct, individual succession from apostolic times. Presbyterians, citing a “pre-Ignatian” model, believe that episcope has been passed on corporately from apostolic times through the laying-on-of-hands within the presbyterate. Of concern to Presbyterians was the feeling that CUIC MRMRM proposal failed to recognize the significance of the presbyterate, which Episcopalians felt that they had done in the United States through the requirement of lay involvement and approval at virtually every level of ecclesiastical governance, albeit their lay people are not ordained as elders.

Mutual recognition and reconciliation seems to rest upon mutual acceptance of the concepts of “personal” and “corporate” episcope. Until this matter is mutually resolved, it will be difficult to move into full altar and pulpit fellowship, the place where mutual ministry between the denominations seems most likely to have an effect at the parish level; the basic level of ministry in both denominations. Because of that, the dialogue had met with collaborating congregations of each denomination and sought to encourage church leaders to initiate and nourish additional relationships of that type; particularly in planting new congregations. Although full mutual recognition and reconciliation of ministry still eluded them, they believed we have found a way in which to encourage preliminary altar and pulpit fellowship and, hence, to allow our congregations of both denominations to commonly pursue the mission and ministry of Christ’s One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church; a reality which we believe already exists in the Mind of God.

To that end, the Episcopal Presbyterian Dialogue requested the respective authorizing bodies the following agreement (see below) as well as reconstitute the dialogue for future deliberations. In addition, they recommended that both of our Heads of Communion commit themselves publicly to this effort and, if it seems good to them, that they arrange a public celebration of our progress and our hope for the future.

The Agreement between the Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and ratified by our presbyteries in 2009. The 76th General Convention of the Episcopal Church approved the agreement in 2009. Both churches authorized another round of dialogue to continue to address theological and missional issues.

As a result of the dialogue, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, the Reverend Gradye Parsons, and the Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, the Most Reverend Katharine Jefferts Schori, stood together at the Lord’s Table and led the congregation in receiving Holy Communion at the 221st General Assembly (2014).

APPENDIX

Agreement Between the Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

1. We acknowledge one another’s churches as churches belonging to the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church;

2. We acknowledge that in our churches the Word of God is authentically preached and the sacraments of Baptism and Eucharist are duly administered;

3. We acknowledge one another’s ordained ministries as given by God and instruments of grace, and look forward to the time when the reconciliation of our churches makes possible the full interchangeability of ministers;

4. We acknowledge that personal and collegial oversight (episcope) is embodied and exercised in our churches in a variety of forms, episcopal and non-episcopal, as a visible sign of the Church’s unity and continuity in apostolic life, mission and ministry.

5. We agree that authorized ministers of our churches may, subject to the regulations of the churches and within the limits of their competence, carry out the tasks of their own office in congregations of the other churches when requested and approved by the diocesan bishop and local presbytery;

6. We agree that The Episcopal Church will invite members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to receive Holy Communion in their churches and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will invite members of The Episcopal Church to receive Holy Communion in their churches. We encourage the members of our churches to accept this Eucharistic hospitality and thus express their unity with each other in the one Body of Christ;

7. We agree to continue to dialogue in the areas such as diaconal ministries, historic episcopate, the office of elder, etc. that would lead to full reconciliation of our ministries and interchangeability of our ministers.
8. We encourage diocesan bishops and presbyteries to provide regular occasion for planning, discussing, resourcing for missional, educational and liturgical life together. In addition, to explore possibilities for new church development and redevelopment together.

9. We agree to develop a process to support and implement the above recommendations.²

10. We affirm these proposals mark an important step in moving toward the full, visible unity of the Church. We know that beyond this commitment lies a move from the recognition to the reconciliation of churches and ministries within the wider fellowship of the universal Church.

Endnotes

1. Because we do not yet have reconciliation and full interchangeability of ordained ministries, all authorization for these special opportunities must confirm to the Book of Common Worship and the Book of Order of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the Book of Common Prayer and the Constitution and Canons of The Episcopal Church.

2. Guidelines will be developed by each of the communions.

Prospectus for the Third Round of Dialogue Between the Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

1. Direct that the bilateral dialogue be continued and meet until 2024, a year in which both the General Assembly and the General Convention will meet, and report back to those bodies at that time.

2. Direct the Office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and The Episcopal Church’s Office of Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations work with the committee in fulfilling Paragraph 9 of the Agreement by developing and publishing mission and polity guidelines and resources for joint Episcopal and Presbyterian ministries and missions, such as how dioceses and presbyteries may collaborate in creating new worshipping communities and ecumenical congregations.

3. Direct that the next round of dialogue cover the following:

- What does membership mean amid the shifting American religious context (relating to paragraph 1 and 6 of the agreement)?

- What can lead to full reconciliation of ordered ministries, including the implications to our global ecumenical relationships? This would include seeking out and consulting the wisdom of other national and international Reformed-Anglican dialogues, including recently published reports of member judicatories in our communions and standing bilateral bodies of national/international churches (e.g., the Church of Scotland and the Scottish Episcopal Church) (relating to Paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 7, and 10 of the agreement).

- [Recognizing we are in a post-Christendom world, and using] [Using] a historic and socioeconomic lens, explore and examine how our ecclesiological identities, doctrines, systems, and institutions have been used with prejudicial power to “other-ize” and exclude people from our denominations, especially in the areas of class and race. What “idols” do we have that prevents us from fully participating in God’s mission and reconcile all things, including our two denominations, to God (relating, again, to Paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 7, and 10 of the agreement)?

Rationale

We have discovered that in our conversations we have gained much from the opportunity to spend extended time in dialogue, building trust, learning from each other, and finding the ability to be bold in questioning and challenging our own and each other’s assumptions. We believe that continuing our conversation and exploration holds the promise of yielding enhanced understanding and guidance for our two denominations to explore in moving toward greater implementation and celebration of the unity God has already established in the Body of Christ, our common home.
Advice & Counsel on Item 07-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 07-05 with amendment to remove the first phrase of the last point: “Recognizing we are in a post Christendom world” and starting the paragraph the sentence with “using a historic and socioeconomic lens:

● [Recognizing we are in a post-Christendom world, and], [u][U]sing a historic and socioeconomic lens, explore and examine how our ecclesiological identities, doctrines, systems, and institutions have been used with prejudicial power to “otherize” and exclude people from our denominations, especially in the areas of class and race. What “idols” do we have that prevents us from fully participating in God’s mission and reconcile all things, including our two denominations, to God (relating, again, to Paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 7, and 10 of the agreement)?"

We approve the overture because ACREC’s commitment to church unity and ecumenical relations are an integral part of its advocacy values. We also approve it for the shared commitment to peace, justice, reconciliation, and rights for people of color from other sibling or cousin denominations, which will be affirming and empowering to all.

Our rationale for amending it is because the expression “Post Christendom world” is single-sighted, and at least partially inaccurate. While Christianity may be declining in both Europe and North America, which are considered a “Global North,” Christianity in Global South is flourishing and growing. In many countries in Africa and Asia; Christianity is living its prime time, not post time. When we say “post Christendom,” we must assume that there was a Christendom world. Did we ever have a Christendom?

Prospectus for the Ninth Round of Dialogue Between Reformed Churches in the United States and United States Conference of Bishops—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the Prospectus for the Ninth Round of Dialogue between Reformed Churches in the United States and United States Conference of Catholic Bishops and request a report to the 226th General Assembly (2024).

Prospectus for the Catholic-Reformed Dialogue

Round Nine

The Ecumenical Officers (or their designees) of the Christian Reformed Church in North America, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Reformed Church in America, the United Church of Christ, and United States Conference of Catholic Bishops met via video conference on February 5 and 9, 2018 to review the eighth round of dialogue and consider proposals for the ninth round. The following prospectus is offered to our churches for consideration and approval of a ninth round of dialogue. It is expected that each church will review and authorize through the appropriate ecclesiastical channels a ninth round of dialogue based upon this prospectus.

Reformed Churches in the United States and the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (and their predecessor bodies) have been in formal dialogue for over fifty years. The last twenty years have focused on theological convergences and divergences around Baptism, Eucharist, and Ministry. Three significant papers were produced from Rounds Seven and Eight—These Living Waters; This Bread of Life, and The One Body of Christ: Ministry in Service to the Church and the World. Round Seven also produced an Agreement of Mutual Recognition of Baptism between the USCCB and the participating Reformed Churches.

A major achievement of the most recent round of dialogue was the mutual acknowledgement of each other’s ministries and the affirmation that we “recognize in one another the work of God, the presence of Jesus Christ, the movement of the Holy Spirit, our mutual service to a broken world, and our fidelity to the gospel that we all profess” (The One Body, 70). The mutual acknowledgement of ministry presents a historically significant moment and a germane occasion to consider anew how our ministry to the church and the world is informed by our understandings of justification and justice. It presents an opportunity to build upon the immediately previous rounds of national dialogue on the sacraments and ecclesiology by considering the relationship between Baptism, Eucharist, and Ministry and our commitments to justification and justice.

Furthermore, turning our attention to the relationship between justification and justice presents an opportunity for this national dialogue to connect with the international dialogue. The Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity and the World Communion of Reformed Churches’ most recent dialogue focused on “Justification and Sacramentality: The Christian Community as an Agent for Justice” (2011-2015). In July 2017, the World Communion of Reformed Churches signed an Association with the Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification. We intend to “build upon the faithful labors of these dialogues to discern and claim the gifts and challenges of our current situation” by continuing conversation around “church unity, ministry, the sacraments, and the relation between justification and social ethics” (The One Body, 65, 67).

It is the expectation that signs of hope for visible unity might be found as we turn our focus to our mutual calling to live as a people justified by faith giving witness to God’s intention of a world marked by justice.

We envision that the proposed dialogue will begin in the fall of 2018 and conclude no later than 2023. Among the tasks that the dialogue will carry out are the following:

1. Review the Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification and the WCRC Association with JDDJ and consider the implications for our Churches within the context of the United States.
2. Building on the work accomplished in the previous rounds of our dialogues, explore how justification and justice are related to the Sacraments of Baptism and Eucharist, and to mission and ministry.
3. Examine the ways in which the discovery of new areas of convergence and our joint work in justice offer fresh possibilities for understanding unity. What are the implications for ecclesiology?

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Covenant Agreement Between the Gereja Masehi Injili di Minahasa (GMIM) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

That the 223rd General Assembly (2018) ask that the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations, in partnership with the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency, [develop] [explore the possibility of developing] a covenant relationship with GMIM. This covenant relationship will be developed in consultation with presbyteries having significant Indonesian and Minahasan-speaking members. A [final] report is to be presented to the 224th General Assembly (2020).

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Gereja Masehi Injili di Minahasa (GMIM) are denominations with common roots in the Reformed tradition and both share membership in the World Communion of Reformed Churches. GMIM is an Indonesian denomination founded by the Dutch Missionary Society in 1831. In 1934, GMIM obtained independence from the Dutch Reformed Church. In the 1960s the PC(USA) sent missionaries to Indonesia to serve the GMIM Church and established formal relationships between the two churches. In the 1970s Indonesians began immigrating to the United States in great numbers. Among these migrants were many Minahasan-speaking persons who had roots in GMIM.

Minahasan-speaking persons were welcomed into the PC(USA) congregations and presbyteries. Many found a need to worship in language and ethnic specific fellowships and congregations. This allowed them to hold onto specific Minahasan faith practices related to language, liturgy, and lifestyle. For Minahasan-speaking persons, faith and church life extends to every aspect of their life and is a central part of their communities. At times when there is not a PC(USA) congregation that is able to embrace the full cultural and linguistic faith tradition of Minahasan-speaking members, they may leave for other Indonesian churches outside the Presbyterian and Reformed traditions. In addition, when PC(USA) Minahasan-speaking fellowships and congregations are formed, it is often difficult to find Minahasan-speaking pastors to serve and care for the members.

In 2016, the GMIM General Assembly made a commitment and took formal action to nurture and care for diaspora members throughout the world. They began the process of entering into formal relationships with partner churches to share in the pastoral care of diaspora members living abroad. GMIM desires to work cooperatively with partners and not be in competition. With an understanding of mutuality in mission, GMIM desires to enter into covenant relationship with the PC(USA) and develop a process for supporting the PC(USA) in caring for Minahasan-speaking persons.

A. Items Pulled from Consent Agenda

The following items were pulled from the Consent Agenda:

B. General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations

Response: In progress. The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations has worked on developing a theological rationale for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) engagement in interfaith relationships. This rationale builds on the Interfaith Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations would like to invite further response and reflections from stakeholders within the PC(USA) as well as our ecumenical and interfaith partners before finalizing the rationale. Therefore, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations reports this as a referral in progress with the expectation that a final report will be submitted to the 224th General Assembly (2020).

C. General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations

Response: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directed GACEIR to encourage appropriate General Assembly entities to do the following: “Collaborate with councils at all levels (of the PCUSA) to work ecumenically and interreligiously in addressing such crucial issues as violent conflict between states, climate change, transnational terrorism, global economic system, global persecution of Christian minorities and LGBTQ persons, and extremist interreligious violence.”

Collaboration being central to its charge, GACEIR identified key features of effective collaboration, which build on the foundation of trusted relationships. These are an empowering vision, organizing for common purposes, frequent interpersonal communication among leaders, shared decision-making, truthful and transparent interpretation, effective use of social media, and mutual accountability in the stewardship of limited resources.

The subcommittee researched the issues within contemporary global contexts and created a document with several parts including brief working descriptions of each issue, identification of current General Assembly mission areas that relate to these issues, documentation of associated General Assembly policies, notifications of relevant Presbytery Mission Agency programs and offices currently addressing the issues, and whatever possible, references to ecumenical and interreligious partners with whom the PC(USA) is collaborating on the issues.

The GACEIR received the attached report from the Presbyterian Mission Agency about how they are working with ecumenical and interfaith partners on the above identified issues. We share it with the 223rd General Assembly (2018) for information and guidance for other councils of the PC(USA)—synods, presbyteries, sessions on ways to work with ecumenical and interfaith partners on critical global issues.

Given elements of persistent xenophobic and misogynistic mindsets within every faith group, including the PC(USA), and assuming their influence in perpetuating these global issues, GACEIR decided it is imperative, together with others throughout the PC(USA), to increase awareness of racial/cultural bias and white privilege. Committee members began self-examination by participating in an intense bias/privilege experiential training workshop.

Response: GACEIR was asked by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to encourage mid councils to enter into consultancies with neighboring ecumenical councils regarding shared administrative tasks. GACEIR worked with Presbyterian Research Office in surveying mid councils within the PC(USA) and some of their ecumenical counterparts. While this is still a project in process, the survey provided some examples that may serve as models for other mid councils to emulate.

3. 2016 Referral: Item 07-06, 15. Commit to Further Reflection on the Nuanced Definitions of “Interfaith” and “Interreligious” for the Purpose of Clarity in Communications. (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 448)

Response: The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations was asked to provide clarity about the use of the words “interfaith” and “interreligious,” and to provide direction about how the terms should be used in our work as a denomination.

Interreligious and interfaith are terms that are so close together in meaning that they are frequently used interchangeably. Interreligious refers more to the institutional aspects of religions and may include religions that do not necessarily claim faith. Interfaith points more towards the inner meaning and experience of faith and spiritual practices in different religious traditions.

While interreligious offers a broader base of relationships to include traditions that do not claim faith, our preference is to use interfaith as we engage people of faith in dialogue and relationships. We may use interreligious as we work cooperatively with organizations of different religious traditions for the common good.

B. General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations Committee Agency Summary and Narrative Report

1. Purpose

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations shall function to give a high profile to the vision of the ecumenical and interreligious involvement and work as central to the gospel and key to the life of the church; plan and coordinate, in consultation with the agencies and governing bodies of the church, the involvement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in ecumenical and interreligious relations and work; connect the ecumenical and interreligious efforts of all governing body levels of the church; provide a common point for all ecumenical and interreligious efforts connecting us with those outside our church; keep a unity of vision that includes the ecclesiastical, programmatic, ecumenical, and denominational (organizational) parts of our ministries and commitments; articulate the Reformed and Presbyterian identity in the midst of our ecumenical commitments; and promote awareness of the role of the unity of all humankind in the search for the unity of the church; and promote the unity of the church as an exhibition of the kingdom to the world.

The committee is composed of sixteen members, elected by the General Assembly, four ecumenical representatives, the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Ruling Elder Diana Wright and Teaching Elder Robert Reynolds served as chair and vice-chair respectively. Ruling Elder Jeremiah Rosario, Teaching Elder Anne Weirich, and Ecumenical Representative from the Progressive National Baptist Convention, the Reverend Randall C Bailey, served as at-large executive committee members. The Executive Committee met in August 2016 to review the recommendations from the 222nd General Assembly (2016) and to develop a workplan to recommend to the GACEIR organizing their work around three major area of work—Ecumenical and Interfaith Engagement with Councils of the PC(USA), Mid Council Ecumenical Engagement, and Interfaith Theological Rationale.

In addition to Rev. Bailey from the Progressive National Baptist Convention, Pastor Christopher Olkiewicz from the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the Reverend Paul Janssen from the Reformed Church in America, and the Reverend Hyo-Jung Kim from the United Church of Christ were ecumenical representatives on GACEIR.

a. Meeting General Description

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations met in the Fall of 2016: Spring and Fall of 2017, and January of 2018. Each meeting included theological reflections around emerging issues in ecumenical and interfaith relations. A significant portion of the meetings were dedicated to the work of the subcommittees. In addition to meeting during the face-to-face meetings, subcommittees also met electronically between meetings.

b. GACER Activities, Reports, and Actions

(1) The Fall 2016 meeting included a presentation on “Thursdays in Black: Towards World Without Rape and Violence—An Ecumenical Responsibility” by Dr. Fulata Mbano-Moyo, World Council of Churches Program Executive for Women in Church and Society. Members of the wider Louisville community (including seminarians) and staff from the Presbyterian Center were invited to this presentation. The Fall 2016 meeting also focused its attention on developing a response to the World Communion of Reformed Churches Proposal to Associate with the Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification. They received input from theologians and pastors. This response was forwarded to the WCRC as input into the global discernment process.

(2) The Spring 2017 meeting focused on “Ecumenical and Interfaith Implications of U.S. Presidential Election and Political and Cultural Landscape of the U.S.” with presentations by Professor Shannon Craig-Snell of Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary and Professor Matissa Wilbon of Bellarmine University.

(3) The Fall 2017 meeting met at Stony Point Center. One of the primary purposes of meeting at Stony Point was to engage with the Community of Living Traditions that is housed at Stony Point. There were several opportunities to engage with members of the community who represented different faith traditions. The Reverend J.C. Austin led a plenary session on Antiracism and Anti-Bias training. Yavilah McCoy (CEO of Dimensions Educational Consulting, who is also a third-generation African American Jew) and Rabia Terri Harris (from the Community of the Living Traditions, who is also an Euro-American person who converted to Islam) presented to GACEIR on the role of race in the Jewish and Muslim communities. Rabia serves as a chaplain for the Community of Living Traditions at Stony Point. Both Yavilah and Rabia represent racial minorities in Judaism and Islam and shared their experiences and commitments breaking down barriers and building wholistic communities.

(4) The January 2018 meeting focused on completing its work for this biennial term and preparing reports and work for the 223rd General Assembly (2018). A Theological Rationale for Interfaith Relationships in the PC(USA) was presented and a plan for greater consultation within the PC(USA) and with ecumenical and interfaith partners was developed. Recommendations for Mid Council Ecumenical Engagement and PC(USA) Engagement in Ecumenical and Interfaith work around particular global issues were also presented. It was noted that further work on both of these areas need to be completed before final reports are given. They also heard and considered ecumenical and interfaith implications from recent delegation visits to South Korea and Palestine/Israel. GACEIR began to consider what role it might have in geopolitical conflicts that impact our ecumenical and interfaith relationships. They heard reports on a World Communion of Reformed Churches Consultation on Strengthening Communion and Human Sexuality. They received updates on the Way Forward Commission and All Agency Review Committee’s work and ecumenical and interfaith implications. They considered ecumenical and interfaith implications in proposed changes to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board governance structure.

(5) In all meetings, GACEIR received reports from OGA and PMA staff on their ecumenical and interfaith work, reports from bilateral dialogues and relationships, and updates on ecumenical agencies. GACEIR selected persons and councils to receive the Ecumenical and Interfaith Service Recognitions. They also recommended persons to receive the Eugene Carson Blake Scholarship to study at the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey.

Christian Churches Together was created to provide an inclusive space where the major Christian traditions in our country could build bridges of understanding and engage in respectful dialogue. CCT includes the voices of traditions that historically have stayed apart from each other. From 2001 to 2016 CCT has provided unique opportunities for engagement on the topics of hunger/poverty, racism, immigration, criminal justice, and issues related to these major topics. These conversations are held in an atmosphere of respect and mutual admonition. During the last two years, the political and religious situation in our country has shifted dramatically; we have seen an increase in tensions and disagreements between Christians of progressive and conservative persuasions. Many churches who in the past were amicable to the possibility of engaging with other churches with whom they have substantial disagreement are now challenged by their constituencies.

The current divisive environment in our country forces us to consider what the right path towards promoting peace and unity is. Would engaging only those that look, think, and behave like us help us to bring about healing and unity in our nation?

A search for understanding and cooperation must be inclusive of all Christian traditions. The ministry of Christian unity must be inclusive of the experiences of all Christians; after all, it is the unity of the body of Christ that we are fostering. The values of the gospel compel us to take risks and seek that which is elusive in society. We can't afford to stay bunkered down in our safe and comfortable theological and religious constructs. Progressive, center, and conservative Christians must take risks for the sake of peace, justice, and unity.

Since its inception, CCT has emphasized the nurturing of relationships through deepening friendships and focusing on spiritual practices (prayer, liturgy, and sharing of testimonies). CCT’s dialogues have not focused strictly on historical, theological divisions.

For the last two years we focused our activities on the areas mentioned above. A key element of the ministry of CCT is the work and ministry of the executive director. His responsibilities include: organizing and providing leadership to the Annual Convocation, the CCT Latino Network, and the CCT Mission Network. The E.D. serves as an ambassador of CCT’s vision at church conferences, assemblies, synods, etc. A considerable amount of his time is spent working closely with several of our participant organizations advocating in Congress for legislation that reflect CCT common principles and values in the areas of immigration, mass incarceration, hunger/poverty and racial justice. The executive director is currently serving as one of the four senior leaders in the Circle of Protection. The Circle of Protection is a network of more than 30 communions and organizations working on Capitol Hill to promote legislation and protect programs that benefit poor and hungry people in our country. The active participation of the executive director in all of these events (more than 30 during the last two years) served to embody and articulate the values, principles, and consensus of the churches.

In 2017 we began a process of evaluating CCT’s vision and purpose. This process was in part initiated because of the lower than usual interest in the 2017 annual convocation. The steering committee decided that after ten years of existence it was necessary for CCT to take a closer look at our mission and purpose. A working group worked on this last year (2017), and the steering committee will receive their report at its spring meeting.

The main events held in 2016-18 were:

Annual Convocation - The most recent Annual Convocation was held in Anaheim, CA, on September 20-22. Approximately sixty people representing 33 of the 39 participant communions/organizations attended the convocation. The general theme was “A Conversation on Healing the Divisions in Church and Society”. The key sessions included the following topics: How to have a civil dialogue that can build up church and society, What must the U.S. Church do to be a faithful instruments of Racial Justice and reconciliation in our country?, The role of CCT in the current ecumenical landscape and, Renewing (perfecting) the narrative of CCT. At the final session, the majority of the participants expressed their strong support of the work of CCT and its contributions to the search for Christian unity. The participants committed themselves to encourage their communions to strengthen their participation and support of CCT.

Forum on The Persecuted Church – In March of 2017, CCT held a forum on the persecuted church. More than 30 church leaders attended the forum, held in Newark, NJ. The dialogue among the different traditions revealed a strong consensus on the churches' concerns for the persecuted church. A common statement (pastoral letter) was prepared and forwarded to ecumenical bodies around the world and to churches who are directly affected by persecution. This statement is available at CCT’s website.

CCT Latino Network- Fifteen senior Latino/a leaders met in Orlando, FL, in April of 2017. They spent two days considering the issue of immigration reform, sharing best practices (pastoral and advocacy), and in fellowship. At times these conversations on immigration were tense, reflecting the current socio-political situation in our country. The next CCT Latino Network gathering will be held in San Antonio, TX, on April 3-4, 2018.

CCT Mission Network- The steering committee approved the creation of a Global Mission Network. The purpose of the network is to bring together the senior staff/leadership from each of the communions for mutual learning and relationship building. The network had their first gathering on December 2017 in Grand Rapids, MI. Eight senior mission staff represented their communions. These eight leaders represented protestant and Evangelical/Pentecostal denominations. The main topic of conversation was the new reality of reverse missions. Reverse mission refers to a large number of Christians coming to the USA from countries around the world and the impact they are having in American Christianity. The participants are committed to meeting again and reaching out to their counterparts in the communions.
that were not present. They will also reach out to Orthodox communions and the USCCB; as their participation in this network, it is very important.

Immigration Reform and DACA – CCT’s staff as well as leaders from many of its communions have been actively involved in numerous actions on Capitol Hill in support of “dreamers” and immigration reform.

Relationship building with Historic Back churches and churches of the African diaspora – During the last two years CCT actively reached out to churches of the Methodist-Episcopal tradition. A closer relationship was particularly developed with leaders of the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church. The purpose of this approach to African American communions was primarily to explore the possibilities of cooperation on racial justice efforts. These efforts were not as successful as we had hoped. The leadership of the CCT communions and CCT’s executive director are committed to continuing to support the work of racial justice. CCT’s executive director recently worked in the drafting of a Unity Statement on Racism and Poverty. This ecumenical document calls on our political leaders and the churches to the direct effect racism has on poverty. At the 2017 Annual Convocation, we received our membership the organization Hope for You. This organization is the social services arm of the Redeemed Christian Church of God. The RCCG is a denomination based in Nigeria that is expanding throughout the world. They have around 700 congregations and house churches in the USA.

To carry out the work of CCT it is critical that the communions/organizations maintain their financial support. Since its inception, CCT has been able to operate with a very modest operating budget. The financial contribution expected from the communions/organizations is minimal in comparison with the commitment of the churches/organizations to similar bodies. The reality is that even when these financial contributions are minimal, some communions often fail to fulfill their pledge.

The founding leaders had high hopes that CCT would offer new opportunities for the Church in our country to grow closer together. The genius of CCT is that it offers the opportunity for all the major Christian traditions to come face to face, to listen and learn from each other; Christian Churches Together has a unique vocation. I recognize that the vision of CCT has yet to be fully realized. There are several reasons for this, and this is not the appropriate place to expand on those. Nevertheless, I must emphasize that for the CCT vision to flourish we would need a deeper commitment from the communions and their leadership. We hope that the process of evaluating our vision and purpose will reveal new ways to deepen the level of engagement, increase the participation of the communions, and renew the commitment to be in relationship across our theological, social, and political differences.

Christian Churches Together can be a powerful instrument of the Holy Spirit to heal the divisions of the Church in our country. We must choose if we want to perpetuate polarization, or if we are willing to take risks and commit to a search for Christian unity that transcends our human limitations. God is always ready to empower the Church to be a faithful witness of the transformational power of the gospel.

The steering committee of CCT and its leadership are grateful for the active and faithful support of the Presbyterian Church USA.

Report of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA

Since 1950, the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA (NCC) has served as a leading voice of witness to the living Christ. The Presbyterian Church (USA) is a founding member of the NCC. The NCC unifies a diverse covenant community of 38 member communions and over 30 million people in more than 100,000 congregations from Protestant, Anglican, Orthodox, Evangelical, historic African American and Living Peace traditions in a common commitment to advocate and represent God’s love and promise of unity in our public square. The NCC partners with secular and interfaith partners to advance a shared agenda of peace, progress, and positive change.

The National Council of Churches is a community of Christian communions which in response to the gospel revealed in the Scriptures confess Jesus Christ, the incarnate Word of God, as Savior and Lord. These communions covenant with one another to manifest ever more fully the unity of the Church. Relying upon the transforming power of the Holy Spirit, the communions come together as the Council in common mission, serving all creation to the glory of God.

Presently, Bishop W. Darin Moore of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church serves as chair of the NCC Governing Board and Dr. Jim Winkler serves as president and general secretary. The NCC owns the copyright to the Revised Standard Version (RSV) and the New Revised Standard Version (NRSV) of the Holy Bible, conducts Faith & Order work, produces the International Sunday School Lesson for Christian Teaching, carries out interreligious dialogues, holds an annual Christian Unity Gathering, maintains an Intergenerational Think Tank, is a major sponsor of Ecumenical Advocacy Days, has resurrected Friendship Press, and works for justice and peace.

In recent years, the NCC has been restored to budgetary health. Member communions have contributed above and beyond the annual Ecumenical Commitment Fund (ECF) goal for four consecutive years and financial reserves have tripled. The PC(USA) has been one of the two most generous denominational supporters of the ECF each year and the Council is deeply grateful for this faithfulness which has enabled the ecumenical movement to continue.

NRSV Update

The National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA (NCC) owns the copyright to the Revised Standard Version (RSV) and the New Revised Standard Version (NRSV) of the Holy Bible. The NRSV was completed in 1992. In November 2017, the NCC and the Society of Biblical Literature (SBL) agreed to work together to create an update of the NRSV.
SBL has developed text critical methods using new manuscripts, new text-critical resources, and new theories on manuscript primacy. SBL will use its text critical methods and SBL’s text critical editions as references in creation of the updated NRSV. The primary focus of the thirty-year review is on new text-critical and philological considerations that affect the English translation.

The current scholarly reconstructions of the biblical source texts are different from what they were when the NRSV was published. Important new tools, texts, and revised text-critical resources have been developed since 1989. And current understanding of some Hebrew, Aramaic, or Greek terms differs from the understanding that informed the NRSV. Some, but not all, of these text-critical and philological differences are significant and impact translation.

For the Hebrew Bible/Old Testament, text-critical developments in the last thirty years have been especially significant. The publication of the Judean Desert biblical texts and fragments has revealed a number of readings that differ from the medieval Hebrew traditions in the Masoretic Text, which was the basis of the NRSV.

In December 2020, SBL will deliver the proposed changes to the NCC. It is anticipated the updated NRSV will be available in 2021.

Truth and Racial Justice Task Force
Contrary to the will of God, the legacies of slavery are embedded in United States laws and practices—and in the church. Recognizing that the time is now to unmask racism and to take action for justice, the National Council of Churches Governing Board at its November 2016 meeting in Charleston, South Carolina called for a task force to address the brokenness of race.

The resulting task force, co-chaired by Mrs. Jacquelyn Dupont Walker, MSW, LCSW, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church and the Rev. Dr. John Dorhauer of the United Church of Christ, first met in winter 2017. An impassioned vision emerged to issue a clarion call to the soul of the nation to tell the truth about racism in the United States. “The time is right,” asserts the task force vision statement, “for the National Council of Churches to join other partners seeking to identify, name, and address the trauma caused by racism in the United States—especially as it impacts people of African descent.” The statement continues, “...the complicity of white church members and leadership, and the impact of that complicity on faith communities of color has not yet been fully recognized in white communities...(H)ealing cannot be achieved without a complete confession of the truth as a prelude to reparative action and restorative justice.”

To launch this call to truth-telling and justice-seeking, the NCC held a major series of events to coincide with the national April 4, 2018 commemoration of the 50th anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s assassination: an April 3, 2018 ecumenical worship service at St. Sophia Greek Orthodox Cathedral in Washington, DC; an early morning April 4 silent march from the Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial to the site of an all-day ACT to End Racism rally on the National Mall; and a Day of Advocacy on Capitol Hill on April 5.
Two member communions, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church and the United Church of Christ pledged to bring 5000 people to the rally. Key leaders of the African Methodist Episcopal, the American Baptist Churches, the Christian Methodist Episcopal, the Orthodox Church in America, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and the United Methodist Church were present.

Partner organizations included the Conference of National Black Churches, the National African American Clergy Network, Sojourners, the New Baptist Covenant, Pax Christi, the Religious Action Center for Reformed Judaism, the Mennonite Central Committee, and others.

The NCC is not alone in this endeavor. Indeed, the timing of the initiative is due in part to the challenge of the World Council of Churches at the end of their 2016 solidarity visit to the United States related to race. The global nature of the challenge is highlighted by the United Nations naming 2015-2024 The International Decade for People of African Descent and calling attention in particular to the situation of persons of African descent in the United States.

In an effort, then, to eradicate racism and to move toward healing the wounds it has caused in society and the church, the NCC seeks to engage the full agency of its members and partners as a resource for inspiring clear commitments to racial equity and justice.

In all cases, this truth telling is but a prelude to deeper commitments to begin a healing process that, through the grace of God and the everlasting hope of the Risen Christ, can lead to the original dream of this great land: that all are created equal, free to live under the watchful eye of a Creator who endowed all with an inalienable right to a full life, a complete liberty and the pursuit of happiness for each and all.

Christian Unity Gathering

Each year, the NCC holds a Christian Unity Gathering (CUG). The November 8-9, 2017 CUG was held in Silver Spring, Maryland under the theme of “Resistance, Resilience, and Persistence.” 200 people, including 21 seminarians participated in workshops on racial justice, mass incarceration, and Middle East peacemaking.

Participants spent significant time at the new National Museum of African American History and Culture prior to an awards banquet highlighted by keynote speaker Ms. Vanita Gupta, chief executive of the Leadership Conference for Civil and Human Rights. The J. Irwin Miller award for ecumenism was presented to Dr. Iva Carruthers, leader of the Samuel DeWitt Proctor Conference. Dr. Sayyid Syeed, longtime guiding light of the Islamic Society of North America was given an award for interfaith excellence. Rev. Osagyefo Sekou, Ms. Brittany Caine-Conley, and Rev. Seth Wispelwey were given awards in recognition of the courage and leadership they displayed in leading resistance to white nationalist marchers in Charlottesville, Virginia.
The next Christian Unity Gathering will take place October 15-17, 2018. More information will be available at www.nationalcouncilofchurches.us.

Faith & Order
The Convening Table on Theological Dialogue and Matters of Faith & Order has three study groups underway. The three groups—Climate and Conflict, Response to ‘Christian Witness in a Multi-Religious World’ and ‘Who Do We Say That We Are,’ and Violence in an Age of Genocide. For the past four years, Faith & Order has presented a theological workshop at the outset of Ecumenical Advocacy Days. The topic of the 2018 workshop was “A World Uprooted: Responding to Migrants, Refugees, and Displaced People” was chaired by Dr. Raj Nardella of the PC(USA).

Faith & Order has contributed significantly to the efforts of the NCC with regard to racism, particularly in terms of writing and editing a new resource and the first publication of the renewed Friendship Press, “Uniting Against Racism.”

Interreligious Relations and Collaboration
The Convening Table on Interreligious Relations and Collaboration established three sub-groups to focus on dialogue (goals, best practices, dissemination of learnings); collaboration (ongoing theological engagement, common work on resources, identification of areas of concern); and national issues (NCC policy statement on interfaith relations update, information on interfaith trends, attention to policy issues).

Dialogues:

The Jewish-Christian dialogue met on November 1, 2017 at the Religious Action Center for Reformed Judaism in Washington, DC. The topics were the 500th anniversary of the Protestant Reformation and current trends in community identification and participation in our respective religious traditions. Another session was scheduled at the time of this writing for April 30-May 1 in Providence, Rhode Island where the focus will be on separation of church and state as well as on healing our society in matters of race.

The Muslim-Christian dialogue met on October 17, 2017 at Princeton Theological Seminary. The topics were Abraham in our respective scriptures, reinvigorating the dialogue, and ongoing public witness. New subgroups were proposed to identify pertinent issues and action items, to explore the possibility of a future joint delegation to the Middle East and future modes of public witness.

The Hindu-Christian dialogue will hold its inaugural session on July 17, 2018 at the First Congregational Church of Los Angeles. An initial planning meeting was held on January 31, 2019 with a co-convening organization, the Hindu Vedanta Society (LA), as well as with our co-sponsoring organization, the Guibord Center. A possible topic will be the meaning of illumination in various traditions around the table; other possible topics will include social and religious tensions in the US and other national but related contexts.
The Buddhist-Christian dialogue will tentatively hold its inaugural session in July 2018 at the First Congregational Church of Los Angeles. Building on preparatory work done by our Christian co-convener, a conference call was held on February 15 with two Buddhist co-conveners, and two other meetings are tentatively planned. Topics are yet to be determined.

NCC Leadership Delegation to the Middle East

From September 6-16, 2017, a delegation of ten representatives of NCC member churches traveled to Lebanon, Egypt, Palestine and Israel. NCC Chair Bishop Darin Moore and President/General Secretary Jim Winkler expressed solidarity with ecumenical colleagues, witnessed for peace alongside interfaith partners, and observed current on the ground realities to better inform ongoing advocacy.

In Lebanon, the NCC met with leaders of the Middle East Council of Churches and the National Evangelical Church. In Egypt, meetings were held with leaders of the Coptic Orthodox Church, the Protestant Churches of Egypt, the Grand Mufti and other Muslim leaders and with Egyptian President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi.

In Palestine and Israel, the NCC met with Heads of the Jerusalem Churches, the Shalom Hartman Institute, Palestinian Authority officials, the Israeli Foreign Ministry, the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, senior US Consular officials, and leaders of Israeli and Palestinian NGOs.

In each of the places visited, a primary message delivered by Middle East church leaders to the churches in the US was a request for prayer and solidarity. Fear, frustration, and anxiety among Christians, whose numbers are dwindling in the region due to extremist violence, political instability, and economic hardship, permeated the discussions. They shared a common human longing to be recognized with dignity and respect.

The NCC delegation believes peace can only come from the transformative power of prayer to God. The delegation affirmed a number of convictions including a belief our faith calls us to be active in the world, remembering our Lord’s teaching, ‘Blessed are the peacemakers.’ Christians in the US must be made more aware of the dire situation of our brothers and sisters in the Middle East.

US Christians must engage in public policy advocacy that supports the well-being of our church members in the Middle East. This includes constructive remedies for the extremist violence and responses to human rights violations throughout the region. US Christians must more forcefully speak out against the oppression of the Israeli Occupation of Palestine that has weighed heavily on the churches and denied the rights and dignity of their members as wee as of their Muslim brothers and sisters.

Ecumenical Advocacy Days

The NCC is a major sponsor of Ecumenical Advocacy Days (EAD) an annual gathering in Washington, DC of hundreds of Christians from across the nation. The April 20-23, 2018 EAD theme was “A World Uprooted: Responding to Migrants, Refugees, and Displaced People.”

The 2018 keynote preacher was Rev. Dr. Elizabeth Conde-Frazier, vice president of Education and dean of Esperanza College at Eastern University in Pennsylvania. Other keynote speakers included Dr. Elizabeth Ferris, senior fellow at the Brookings Institution in Washington, DC and Rev. Julian DeShazier, senior pastor of University Church in Chicago.

International Sunday School Lessons

Through the Committee on the Uniform Series (CUS), the NCC develops an ongoing course of study and specific annual study plans that fulfill the objective of the Uniform Series (The International Sunday School Lessons for Christian Teaching). The primary product of the committee’s work is an annual Guide for Lesson Development that assists cooperating communions and writers in preparing materials for use in local churches.

The CUS is an ecumenical collaboration unlike almost any other project, serving the NCC and its 38 member communions. The work of the CUS is based on the RSV and NRSV translations of the Bible to produce instructional outlines for member communions and independent publishers. The product outcomes of the CUS guide Christian religious publishers in the development of curriculum and devotional materials for their own constituents.

For more than 140 years, the CUS has gathered to select a course of Bible lessons with an objective of ‘general study of the whole Bible....and to publish a list of such lessons’ that will guide faith formation and Christian discipleship. Today, the NCC through the CUS continues this ecumenical collaboration of providing curriculum designs for religious denominational and independent publishers.

Ultimately, the mission of the CUS is to assist and support the communication, faith formation, and character development of Christians. Development of curriculum outlines and educational designs is a major part of this ministry. The long and rich heritage of the Committee on the Uniform Series continues to inform, inspire, and guide the creation of common curricula for enduring understanding of faith and life in Jesus Christ.

Action and Advocacy on Issues of Justice and Peace

The voice, witness, and presence of the National Council of Churches and its member communions is called for on a daily basis on a host of issues both domestic and international. In particular, in recent years the NCC has been forthright in its support of an end of racism, the rights of migrants and refugees, an end to mass incarceration, programs that assist those living in poverty, peace in the Middle East, the abolition of nuclear weapons, measures to reduce gun violence, peace and reunification of the Korean Peninsula, and normalization of relations with Cuba.

This work and ministry takes place through a variety of coalitions and networks including the Ecumenical Poverty Initiative, Creation Justice Ministries, the Washington Interreligious Staff Council, the Faithful Budget Campaign, the Interfaith Criminal Justice Coalition, the Circle of Protection, and Churches for Middle East Peace.
Conclusion
The roots of the modern ecumenical movement extend into the 19th century with the formation of bible societies, the YWCA and YMCA, the World Student Christian Federation, and missionary and Sunday School initiatives. The Federal Council of Churches, the predecessor body of the National Council, was founded in 1908. The Presbyterian Church (USA) has been a stalwart supporter of the NCC since the beginning and the PC(USA) has particular importance in the Council because of its faithfulness and clarity of voice. The NCC is extremely thankful for the support and active involvement of the PC(USA) in responding to the call by Jesus Christ to visible unity for the healing of the world.
Report from the World Communion of World Churches to the 223rd General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (USA)

Introduction

“Do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your minds, so that you may discern what the will is of God, what is acceptable and good and perfect.” (Romans 12:2, NRSV).

Guided by this call of the Apostle Paul the General Council of the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC) embraced the theme “Living God, renew and transform us” urgently, prayerfully, humbly, joyfully and thoughtfully last summer in Leipzig, Germany. It was a significant, powerful and historic time for our Communion.

The inseparability of communion and justice was a guiding vision through the Council. The Declaration of Faith on Women’s Ordination moved us closer to living out our commitment to being just and inclusive. We reaffirmed the relevance of the Barmen Declaration and the Belhar and Accra confessions. Mission remains at the centre of our life as a Communion.

We emerged from the Council strengthened as a communion and reinvigorated in our ecumenical vocation and our call to transformative justice. There is no doubt that we are engaged in the struggle to bring the Reformation into the present tense. The unfinished theological agenda of the Reformation calls us to create space to hear and share the diversity of voices that make up our family.

The agenda before us is enormous and enormously challenging! We give thanks to the God of Life that we emerged not only renewed and encouraged in our vision but also gifted with extraordinary leadership, blessed with an Executive Committee that represents our diversity in age, gender, region and talent.

God has infused us with the hope necessary so that we might “be transformed by the renewing of our minds” so that God’s will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Thanks be to God.

Najla Kassab, President
Chris Ferguson, General Secretary
About the WCRC

The World Communion of Reformed Churches is comprised of 100 million Christians in Congregational, Presbyterian, Reformed, United, Uniting and Waldensian and other pre-Reformation churches. The WCRC, working with its 233 member churches, is active in supporting theology, justice, church unity and mission in 109 countries.

United in Christ and rooted in the historic Reformed traditions, the WCRC with its member churches believe that God calls Christians to be part of the transformation of the world through the love of Jesus Christ by meeting spiritual needs and fostering justice for all.

Member churches pay annual dues that support the core costs of the communion—governance, communication, travel and staff—while funds raised through partnerships and donations cover program activities.

The WCRC is active on many fronts, and the report below provides highlights of just some of its work. As will quickly be noted, much of the focus in the past two years has been in working toward, conducting and then following up on the General Council, an every-seven-year governance gathering of delegates of the WCRC’s member churches.

At the time of this writing, the WCRC was in the midst of creating a new strategic plan, which will guide its work through to the next General Council (expected in 2024). That plan was due to be discussed and decided upon at the first meeting of the recently elected Executive Committee in May.

Christian Unity: WCRC acts to overcome Reformation divisions

“Today is a historic day,” said Jerry Pillay, then president of the WCRC, at a ceremony on 5 July 2017 in Wittenberg, Germany, where Martin Luther lived and worked. “The documents we are signing today are significant and symbolic of the road we are to travel.”

Pillay was speaking as the WCRC formally associated itself with the Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification, originally signed by the Lutheran World Federation (LWF) and the Roman Catholic Church on 31 October 1999.

The LWF and the WCRC also signed a “Wittenberg Witness,” pledging to work ever more closely together “with concrete actions, convinced that God’s Word leads us to deeper communion.”
“Today we are not only signing a statement, we are building a church together,” said Najla Kassab in her sermon at the service in the Stadtkirche (City Church), where Luther preached.

The ceremony took place in the year marking the 500th anniversary of Luther’s denunciation of church corruption in his 95 Theses, an event that helped set in motion the Reformation and centuries of division between Protestants and Catholics.

“The present achievement and commitment are viewed by Catholics, Lutherans, Methodists and Reformed as part of their pursuit of the full communion and common witness to the world which is the will of Christ for all Christians,” said Jong Chun Park, World Methodist Council president.

Pope Francis, in a message read by Bishop Brian Farrell, described the ceremony as “an eloquent sign of our commitment to walking together, as brothers and sisters in Christ, on a journey from conflict to communion, from division to reconciliation.”

Gender Justice: WCRC promotes equality for women

“A Declaration of Faith on the Ordination of Women” was adopted by the General Council after important group discussions were conducted through the Council’s discernment process.

“Hard conversations are still taking place about whether women should be allowed to take leadership positions in the church or not,” said Isabel Apawo Phiri. “There are still few women who are participating in leadership roles including the ordination of women.”

Church leaders, said Phiri, needed to use their authority to speak out against any form of injustice, starting from within the church itself.

“Christians must be an example. We must know that there is a way to be different from those who are governed by envy, rivalry and personal greed,” Elsa Tamez explained in a Bible study to the Council. “Discrimination and murder of women are tantamount to self-discrimination and suicide.”

“The proposals on the ordination of women and on the creation of a gender policy and its implementation have received very strong support from the delegates,” said Lisa Vander Wal, chair of the team tasked with summarizing discernment groups’ reports.

“The adoption of this declaration shows where we want to be on gender justice,” said Dora Arce Valentin, then WCRC executive secretary for justice and partnership. “It opens a deeper discussion within our churches, and it sets a frame for discussion around the role of women in ministry.”
The approval of this declaration constitutes an additional step in the establishment of equality between women and men within the WCRC. But “gender justice is not limited to the ordination of women,” stressed Chris Ferguson. The way is open for further work on gender equality with the WCRC committing to engage in a process to accompany its member churches.

Communion: Strengthened through discernment

“Church decision-making should look like church, not politics,” said Gradye Parsons, a member of the Discernment and Rules Planning Committee for the General Council. “And the process should make community, not fracture it.”

To achieve those goals, the General Council adopted a discernment-consensus process for decision making. After receiving written and verbal input together, participants discussed proposals in small groups and sent comments to a “Drafting Team” for incorporation into a final proposal which returned to the plenary for further discussion.

“Discernment Groups include voices from around the world,” Lucy Wambui Waweru said. “And every voice is heard.”

“Discernment truly is more about listening than speaking,” said Parsons. “It is important to listen to what others are saying. It is important to listen to what God is saying. And it’s important to consider your own thoughts with regard to the issue and in light of what you have heard.”

After discussing a final proposal in plenary, delegates were asked to show their feelings by holding up either an orange or blue card.

Annedore Held Venhaus appreciated the notion of the coloured cards. “I like how the cards express a feeling,” she said. “I feel warm to this idea, I feel cool to it. I found that very interesting.”

Waweru agreed. She also appreciated that giving consensus did not mean that a delegate was 100% supportive or opposed to a proposal.

“Consensus-building does not solve every issue,” she said. “But the important thing is that we all journey in the same direction. And that we journey together.”

Leadership Development: Global Institute of Theology moulds future leaders

They came from many nations, gathering at the top of what has been called the “holy hill.” The Global Institute of Theology (GIT) began at the Theological College for Church and Diaconie in Wuppertal, Germany, before joining the General Council in Leipzig just over two weeks later.

Each GIT gathers 50 students for an intensive short-term academic programme designed to provide an opportunity to learn and do theology in an intercontextual and ecumenical way, situating the theological task in local, regional and world contexts.

The two locations were important for this GIT. “Wuppertal and Leipzig both played major roles in the history of German churches,” said Martin Engels, a former GIT student and now president of the Reformed Alliance (Germany). “The GIT connects history today and looks for new perspectives for our churches tomorrow.”

“The fact that the GIT coincides with the Council is a significant experience for these younger theologians, most of whom will serve their churches in various ministries, including ordained ministry, or be involved in the theological life of their churches when they return home,” said Aruna Gnanadason, GIT dean of students.

“Our time in Wuppertal was an absolutely amazing reality of the beauty of God’s diversity—from the thoughtful setting, to the imaginative worship experiences, courses, exposure visits, to the clear and loving model of leadership provided by our lecturers and coordinators,” said Sanya Beharry, a student from Trinidad and Tobago.

Shawn Harmon, a student in Louisville, felt that the wide-ranging issues about the idea of mission helped him comprehend the global witness of the church and the importance of partnership in mission. The nationalities, cultures and languages among participants were diverse, but one overwhelmingly clear fact was clear: “You won’t be the same theologian when you go back to your home country.”

Peace Initiatives: Working as a Communion for peace

The WCRC partners with its member churches to advocate for peace, justice and reconciliation in some of the most challenging areas of the world. This commitment to be peacemakers was strongly reaffirmed by the General Council.

Hong Jung Lee (Presbyterian Church in [South] Korea) said that the Korean peninsula’s “division is the starting point for a transformation towards reconciliation. We must keep our dream: someday, the Koreans will be reunited. One day, the children of the North and the South will grow together in a world without nuclear weapons.” The WCRC is engaged in a broad ecumenical effort to heal, reconcile and reunify Koreans through peaceful means.

The peace agreement in Colombia “is so important as it brings to an end a conflict that has drowned Colombia in a spiral of violence, poverty and death,” said Helis Barraza Diaz (Presbyterian Church of Colombia). The WCRC continues to support churches’ local development and education programmes to build peace, with an emphasis on human rights, inclusivity, sustainability and care for creation.

“We need the church to be empowered,” a Presbyterian Church of South Sudan pastor said. “Church leaders, women and youth, need to be empowered to advocate for the peace initiatives in South Sudan. The church has already started it, they have done a lot for peace, especially at the grassroots.” The WCRC is working with its members, including the PC(USA), and other partners to support this important work.

The Council, stating that “the integrity of Christian faith and praxis is at stake,” urged its members to examine their mission, education and investment relationships with Israel and Palestine. “It is time for Israelis and Palestinians to live alongside each other in peace, security and justice,” the adopted resolution stated. “Many of us have seen with our eyes and heard with our ears the painful realities of life for Palestinians.”

Communion: Supporting sisters and brothers

The WCRC both responds and proactively seeks ways in which to support its member churches in times of need. This important aspect of communion-building can be as simple as issuing a call to prayer for a specific incident, but it can also be as complex as accompanying a member church as it works to bring justice, peace and reconciliation to a war-ravaged area over many years.

The WCRC also supports member churches particularly in the Global South through its Reformed Partnership Fund, which provides small grants and other resources to churches that carry out mission-related projects important to the life of a church and its surrounding community.

The General Council called the Communion to focus on specific issues of need in the coming years, including the following:

- promote networking among regions and local churches to share best practices regarding migrants, refugees and asylum seekers.
- offer support to the victims of the on-going activities of insurgents in Nigeria, particularly as it affects women and children in internally displaced peoples’ camps, and in the rebuilding of devastated communities.
- develop right relationships with Indigenous Peoples by initiating a study towards seeking repentance of wrongdoing, an apology, and a process leading to reconciliation with Indigenous Peoples, including liturgical resources for use in churches.
- seek ways to accompany the churches in Central America in their efforts to counter violence and promote a culture of peace.
- engage with United States member churches to develop educational and liturgical resources that challenge complicity in white supremacy and foster a deepened sense that our salvation is bound up with one another.
Leadership: Officers and Executive Committee

Of the 22 members of the Executive Committee elected by the General Council, 10 are men and 12 women; 15 are ordained and 7 are lay people. Five of the members of the Executive Committee are young adults under 30 years of age, including one of the vice-presidents.

Officers

Najla Kassab, a minister in the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon, was elected WCRC president.

“With her experience and many gifts, Najla’s vision, insight, spiritual strength and grace make her the right person to lead us forward as president,” said Alison McDonald, the convener of the Nominating Committee.

The four vice-presidents are Samuel Ayete-Nyampong (Presbyterian Church of Ghana), Lisa Vander Wal (Reformed Church in America), Sylvana Maria Apituley (Protestant Church in West Indonesia) and Raissa Vieira Brasil (United Presbyterian Church of Brazil).

Johann Weusmann (Reformed Alliance (Germany)) was re-elected to a second term as general treasurer.

Executive Committee Members

Clayton Da Silva, Independent Presbyterian Church of Brazil
Diana Erdélyi, Reformed Church in Hungary
Hilary Hagar, Presbyterian Church in Canada
Hefin Jones, Union of Welsh Independants
Annabell Lalla-Ramkelawon, Presbyterian Church of Trinidad and Tobago
Hong Jung Lee, Presbyterian Church of Korea
Coutinho Maravilhaos Moma, Evangelical Congregational Church in Angola
Veronica Muchiri, Presbyterian Church of East Africa
J. Herbert Nelson, Presbyterian Church (USA)
Tibonge Ng’ambi, United Church of Zambia
Hannah North, Presbyterian Church Aotearoa New Zealand
Claudio Pasquet, Waldensian Evangelical Church
Khid-arn Prawate, Church of Christ in Thailand
Miliades Pua, Presbyterian Church of Colombia
Mary Ekinde Salle, Presbyterian Church in Cameroon
Susan Thomas, Church of South India

In addition to those elected by the General Council, each of the WCRC’s five regional councils sends a representative to the Executive Committee as a full voting member.

The World Council of Churches (WCC) was founded in 1948 in Amsterdam, where 143 churches declared “we intend to “stay together”. Today the WCC celebrates 70 years as a fellowship of 348 member churches in more than 110 countries, representing over 560 million Christians. The members include Orthodox, Protestant, Anglican, Old Catholic and United churches. The Presbyterian Church (USA), through its predecessor bodies, is a founding member of the WCC.

“The primary purpose of the fellowship of churches in the WCC is to call one another to visible unity in one faith and in one Eucharistic fellowship, expressed in worship and common life in Christ, through witness and service to the world, and to advance towards that unity in order that the world may believe” (WCC constitution, article 3).

The WCC plays a special role in the one ecumenical movement helping to convene churches, councils, communions and specialized ministries. The WCC cooperates closely with the Roman Catholic Church and maintains relations with the World Evangelical Alliance and the Pentecostal World Fellowship. It represents the fellowship of churches with many United Nations agencies as well as other international organizations.

The Assembly, which takes place every 8 years, is the highest governing body of the WCC. It elects 7 presidents to represent the fellowship and a central committee of 150 members, which meets every 2 years, to provide direction. The central committee elects a moderator, 2 vice-moderators and an executive committee of 25 people, which meets biannually to provide oversight.

Every year the WCC publishes an annual review, audited financial reports and detailed programme reports (www.oikoumene.org). What follows are highlights from the life and work of the WCC since the last General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (USA) in 2016.

Pilgrimage of justice and peace
Since the Tenth Assembly in 2013, the WCC has sought to fulfil its “primary purpose” as a pilgrimage of justice and peace – an invitation to all churches, partners and people of good will to engage their gifts in transforming action. Churches around the world have joined the journey, not as a new initiative, but as a way to continue working together for God’s justice and peace. As a strategic direction, the pilgrimage of justice and peace has a regional and thematic focus each year:

- 2016 focus on the Middle East with a thematic focus on religion and violence
- 2017 focus on Africa and with a thematic focus on peace building and reconciliation
- 2018 focus on Latin American and the Caribbean with a thematic focus on ecumenical diaconia and sustainable development

The regional and thematic foci are not short-term responses, but seek to encourage sustained reflection, cooperation, accompaniment and prayer among the fellowship of churches. The WCC also maintains focus on the following priority countries: Colombia, Democratic Republic of Congo, Nigeria, South Sudan, North and South Korea, Palestine and Israel, Iraq, Syria and Ukraine.

Week of Prayer for Christian Unity
For over 100 years churches have expressed their commitment to being one in Christ through the week of prayer for Christian unity. Each year the theme, texts, reflections and prayer are prepared by churches in a different country and shared with the world-wide church. The WCC and the Roman Catholic Church supported the churches in Latvia, Germany and the Caribbean, that prepared the following themes:

- In 2016 the churches in Latvia prepared the theme “Called to proclaim the mighty acts of the Lord” (cf. 1 Peter 2.9)
- In 2017 the churches in Germany prepared the theme “Reconciliation – the love of Christ compels us” (cf. 2 Corinthians 5.14-20)
- In 2018 the churches in the Caribbean prepared the theme “Your right hand, O Lord, glorious in power” (cf. Exodus 15.6)
Central Committee in 2016 and 2018

New member churches

The central committee meeting in Trondheim, Norway (June 2016) received 3 new member churches; the central committee meeting in Geneva (June 2018), will receive 2 more; for a total of 350 member churches:

- Church of Central Africa Presbyterian Blantyre Synod [Malawi] – received in 2016
- Council of Baptist Churches in North East India – received in 2016
- Dutch Reformed Church [South Africa] – received in 2016
- Africa Brotherhood Church [Kenya] – to be received in 2018
- Community of Baptist Churches in Central Africa [DRC] – to be received in 2018

Policy documents and directions

“The Gift of Being – Called to be the Church of All and for All” – the study document was affirmed by the central committee in 2016, building on the 2003 document “A Church of All and for All” prepared by EDAN (Ecumenical Disability Advocates Network), which argued for the full inclusion of persons with disabilities. The new document goes beyond the paradigm of inclusion to affirming God’s gift of being and calling into question distinctions of disability and impairment.

“Churches Recommit to Accelerate HIV Response” – this pastoral letter was issued by the central committee in 2016. It builds on the ecumenical response to HIV with a renewed commitment to “End AIDS by 2030”; which for the churches means accompanying people and communities living with, or vulnerable to HIV every day, every month, every year until AIDS has been overcome.

“Churches Commitment to Children” – this initiative, together with “Principles for Child-friendly Churches”, was affirmed by the central committee in 2016. It seeks to engage churches in child protection, child participation and climate justice initiatives with children. It is supported by WCC-UNICEF global partnership focussed on ending violence against children.

“Global Ecumenical Health Strategy” – the central committee meeting in June 2018 will receive a new strategy to promote health and wholeness for all by strengthening the churches as healing communities. It builds on 50 years of promoting ‘primary health care’, with reference to the churches contribution to fighting AIDS and the crucial role that churches played in Ebola outbreak, promoting safe and dignified burial practices.

“Called to Transformative Action – Ecumenical Diakonia” – the central committee meeting in June 2108 will receive a paper on diakonia that offers a common theological foundation for the ecumenical movement’s continued commitment to sustainable development. The paper, in the form of a study document, promotes reflection on the churches’ faith-based and a rights-based approach to transformation.

Next WCC Assembly

The next Assembly will take place in 2021. The central committee meeting in June 2018 will decide the assembly venue and theme; allocate member church delegates; and determine the style and ethos of the next Assembly. The churches in Germany have invited the WCC to Karlsruhe. The churches in South African have invited to the WCC to Cape Town.

World Mission Conference

The World Conference on Mission and Evangelism took place in Arusha, Tanzania in March this year under the theme “Moving in the Spirit: Called to Transforming Discipleship. The conference issued the “Arusha Call to Discipleship”, affirming that discipleship is both a gift and a calling to be active collaborators with God for the transforming of the world; and articulating 12 commitments to transformation.

Looking ahead

The WCC is a vibrant fellowship of churches committed to responding to Christ prayer that “we may all be one, so that the world may believe” (cf. John 17.21). In 2019 the pilgrimage of justice and peace will draw attention to the people and churches of Asia. It will rekindle the historic ecumenical commitment to combatting racism with a focus on racism, discrimination and xenophobia. The search for unity and the quest for justice and peace are the hallmarks that define the life and work of the WCC and our cooperation with the Presbyterian Church (USA).

On Directing the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to Divest from Fossil Fuel and Actively Invest in Securities That Focus on Renewable Energy—From the Presbytery of Hudson River.

The Presbytery of Hudson River overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to

1. Command the Board of Pensions and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation for creating fossil free options for participants, and the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee for increased engagement with companies in the fossil fuel industry—actions that embody the beginning of a faithful response to the devastating and urgent reality of climate change.

2. Recognize that by continuing to hold investments in the fossil-fuel companies that most egregiously contribute to the climate crisis, the PC(USA) is complicit in harming God’s creation and “the least of these” who are disproportionately affected by climate change.

3. Direct the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to divest from the fossil-fuel industry.

4. Direct the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to actively seek out and invest in securities of companies whose predominant focus is in renewable and/or energy efficiency.

5. Direct the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to report to the 224th General Assembly (2020) about their progress in effecting Recommendations 3. and 4.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation from the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) do the following:

1. Affirm the need of urgent and robust responses to the threat of climate change, as well as the need for Presbyterian entities and individuals to pursue a comprehensive set of faithful responses.

2. Receive the report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) on its extensive engagement of corporations as well as its implementation of the criteria included in the directive from the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

3. Affirm the Guideline Metrics (see appendix, p. 740) MRTI developed for measuring progress towards compliance with General Assembly established criteria for all corporations, especially those that produce and/or heavily consume fossil fuels.

4. Direct MRTI to pursue/continue its engagement process with deliberate haste and continue to utilize its Guideline Metrics with corporations in the 2019 and 2020 proxy seasons and report back three years of metrics to the 224th General Assembly (2020) with divestment recommendations for the companies who are not moving towards compliance with the General Assembly’s criteria established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016). Companies previously identified by MRTI for this focused engagement include, but are not limited to, Chevron, ExxonMobil, ConocoPhillips, Marathon Petroleum, Valero Energy, Phillips 66, Duke Energy, Ford, General Motors.

5. Commend all corporations who are working to address the risks of climate change by aligning and adopting policies and practices in line with Paris Accords including: reduced greenhouse gas emissions, improved energy efficiency, incorporation of renewable energy and having robust disclosure of the risks related to the 2-degree warming scenario, and how they plan to manage operations in line with low carbon demand scenarios.

6. Commend the investing agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for their work to provide options for congregations, mid councils, and individuals working for a fossil fuel-free future. Specifically, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., for its Restoring Creation Loan program; the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for its positive investments in renewables and its environmental investment option for plan members; and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation for its positive investments in renewables, and for providing, through its New Covenant Trust Company subsidiary, fossil free investment strategies for congregations, mid councils, and individuals.

7. Encourage continued respectful discussion and engagement in the church and civil society on the critical issue of climate change, and how it should be addressed, not only through the responsible use of investments, but also as individuals, churches, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) working together to reduce our carbon footprint.

Rationale

People on the front lines of climate change, particularly people of color, are disproportionately impacted by climate change. Countless individuals and organizations among “the least of these” have prophetically called upon the world to divest from fossil fuels. Earlier this year, for example, LaDonna Brave Bull Allard, one of the native water protectors at Standing Rock said, “We will be everywhere to let people know that there’s a better way to live, there’s a better way to live with the Earth, with green energy, and that it’s time for us now to start divesting from fossil fuel, because we must save the water. We must save the water.” We are thus called to take prophetic action in light of these voices and the imminent dangers on which they shed light.

The PC(USA) has debated divestment from the fossil fuel industry during the last two General Assemblies [221st General Assembly (2014) and 222nd General Assembly (2016)].

• In 2016, the Presbytery of San Francisco sent the overture “On PC(USA) Fossil Fuel Divestment” with thirty-one presbyteries concurring (Minutes, 2016, Part I, pp. 511ff, Item 09-01).

Prior to the 222nd General Assembly (2016), nine former Moderators signed a letter urging the commissioners to support the overture to divest. Their reasoning included, “because of the grave and urgent threat of climate change and the fossil fuel sector’s well-documented and unyielding refusal to change, it is no longer morally or ethically right for the PC(USA) to profit from companies that are creating ecological destruction and human suffering on such a monumental scale.”

Our denomination has already recognized the moral mandate for humanity to shift to a sustainable energy plan in a way that is both just and compassionate, not least of which includes the support of carbon neutrality in 2006. These statements have all been founded on the biblical call to love and care for creation.

We have actively worked as a denomination to reduce our use of fossil fuels and shrink our carbon footprint in our congregations and individual lives. These biblical and denominational mandates compel us to look at our collective investments.

As a denomination, we have long held that we cannot profit from the companies whose policies are harmful to any living thing. For nearly a century, the church has not invested in companies producing alcohol, tobacco, gambling, the military, or those that contribute to violations of human rights. The General Assembly thus declared in 1968, “the [Church’s] power to spend and to invest includes the power to refrain from spending or investing. The church has not only the right but the responsibility to be selective in the use of its funds.”

The General Assembly reinforced this form of stewardship in 1992, affirming that it does not and will not invest in any “sin stocks.” In addition to these broad industries, General Assemblies have also divested from the Duke Energy coal mining company because of its treatment of its workers; Chevron after it sold fuel to the South African apartheid government; Talisman Energy for building a pipeline in Sudan that threatened human rights; and Hewlett Packard, Caterpillar, and Motorola for profiting from human rights abuses in the occupied Palestinian territory.

Some of these divestment actions came after a long process of corporate engagement by the church’s Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) committee. Other divestment decisions were made outside the realm of MRTI.

Climate change represents deep harm to the whole biosphere, including especially marginalized people, so it is imperative that we would divest from the industry most responsible for that harm, as outlined in the Carbon Underground 200th list.

And already as a denomination we are taking some steps. The PC(USA) Foundation has introduced financial products that provide comparable return on investment without supporting fossil fuel companies, and the Board of Pensions has a fossil-free option for their 403-B plan. Synods, presbyteries, congregations, and individuals have moved their investments to such funds, and we commend them for doing so.

But while these actions among individuals and various Presbyterian entities are faithful responses to the growing crisis of climate change, they fall far short of the institutional actions necessary to make a significant difference. It is time for fossil-free investments to be the norm instead of the option.

Biblical Foundations for Divestment: Stewardship and Social Justice

Our faith calls us to be good stewards of the Earth and to work for the well-being of neighbors near and far. Humanity’s first God-given responsibility is to “serve and keep” the creation, acting in ways that sustain its capacity to support life (Genesis 2:15). Intertwined with this responsibility is the call of the prophets and of Jesus Christ to stand in solidarity with people who are poor and vulnerable, and ensure that all have enough to live healthy and dignified lives (Isa. 58:6–10; Mt. 25:34–36).

Today, climate change, primarily caused by burning fossil fuels, is the most serious and widespread threat to these core commitments of our faith. Vulnerable people around the world find their lives and livelihoods at risk as climate change reduces crop yields, intensifies water scarcity, threatens public health, and increases vulnerability to disasters. Here in our own state of North Carolina, in 2016 we witnessed two climate-change-related disasters: Hurricane Matthew—made stronger by a warmer ocean—devastated farms in the east, while unprecedented drought and forest fires threatened life and damaged air quality in the west. In this context, loving our neighbors compels us to limit further global warming—and therefore its humanitarian and ecological impacts—by transitioning to a renewable energy economy.

PC(USA) Social Witness Policy and the Science of Climate Change Mitigation

In 2008, the PC(USA) affirmed the goal of limiting the increase in Earth’s temperature to less than 2 degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels. This commitment reflects a scientifically-informed judgement that more warming would have consequences that violate our values of practicing responsible environmental stewardship and ensuring that the hungry are fed.

Endorsing the two-degree limit means that the church must work toward the limitations on greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions that are required to have a reasonable chance of meeting the target. To achieve this goal, scientists warn that humanity must:

• Leave at least 85 percent of known fossil fuel reserves unburned, • Begin drastically reducing GHG emissions no later than 2020, and
• Shift to a renewable energy economy, mostly by 2050, and completely phase out fossil fuels by 2100.

While the PC(USA) has affirmed lifestyle changes and public policies directed toward achieving such reductions in GHG emissions, our witness is compromised by the fact that we continue to finance fossil fuel exploitation that threatens to raise Earth’s temperature beyond the limit we have affirmed.

Part of a Comprehensive and Compassionate Response to Climate Change

Divestment from fossil fuel companies is an essential part of the comprehensive response to climate change that the church has already initiated. This action can complement efforts to reduce personal and institutional GHG emissions, and legislative advocacy aimed at regulating GHG emissions and promoting renewable energy. Studies at both the global level and for the United States show that it is possible for us to transition completely to existing wind, water, and solar energy technologies by 2050. However, fossil fuel companies have blocked such a transition through their lobbying efforts. In 2016, oil and gas companies spent nearly $120 million to lobby the U.S. Congress. Therefore, investing in fossil fuel companies undermines our own legislative advocacy efforts by financing lobbying against policies that would make renewable energy and mass transit more economical and widely available.

In contrast, fossil fuel divestment—and clean energy reinvestment—supports our vision for a world where our global climate stays within bounds that allow Creation to flourish, and workers find dignified employment in renewable energy industries. In particular, divestment from fossil fuels and reinvestment in renewable energy and energy efficiency (as required by Recommendation 4) affords our church the opportunity to support worker re-training and creation of sustainable jobs in areas where fossil fuel jobs will be lost as the world shifts to renewable energy. In the process of reinvestment, the Presbytery of Salem encourages asset managers to actively seek out opportunities to invest in companies that are willing to locate in communities facing economic transition and re-train workers for jobs in the clean energy economy of the future.

In conclusion, our church has long affirmed that “divestment of holdings in a particular firm or a class of firms is … potentially an occasion for Christian witness to God’s call for justice and the renewal of society.” In this time of climate change, divesting from fossil fuel companies is such an occasion. This action will complement our church’s commitment to lifestyle changes and legislative advocacy by building public awareness and political will to regulate GHG emissions, while supporting renewable energy and energy efficiency. This, in turn, will help our congregations, and society as a whole, to care for the Earth and love our neighbors by relying on the energy God has so abundantly provided in sun, wind, and water.

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 08-01 would have the assembly direct the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions to divest summarily of all fossil fuel company securities in the top 200, measured by size of carbon-based energy reserves, and invest more in renewable energy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 08-01 be answered by the action taken on Item 08-08.

In a more perfect world, ACSWP would advise the General Assembly to approve measures and recommendations that have the urgency reflected in Item 8-01 and the practical strategies embodied in Item 08-08. But a perfect world would not be one impered by unchecked human consumption of all kinds, including pan-destructive fossil fuels.

Item 08-01 emphasizes one dramatic strategy that would symbolize our church’s refusal to accept the energy status quo, the dependence or even addiction to fossil fuels, even as the environmental costs become more and more apparent. Clearly divestment carries a message that lifts up the issue involved and the integrity of the actor. The church would be less complicit financially; we would not profit from a large category of large companies, if the financial agencies were willing to set aside their senses of fiduciary responsibility. Those bodies have already established fossil-free investment funds, but are highly unlikely to accept being directed, even by the General Assembly, for reasons they outline in the Board of Pensions’ comment.

One of the amendments ACSWP proposes to the MRTI report is a commendation of the forty or so presbyteries that concurred in this overture. All ACSWP members see this as an act of faithfulness to our loving Creator God, and some actively supported this overture’s adoption in their own presbyteries. At the same time, as with the Advocacy Committees on Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee on Women’s Concerns, ACSWP has a member on the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, MRTI, the body designated since 1971 to work on corporate social responsibility for the church. Thus, like many Presbyterian families, our committee was divided, with some fed up with incremental strategies and others willing to support MRTI’s deliberate, no short-cuts approach.

MRTI describes that company by company approach in Item 8-08. Divestment is always a possibility, but only after other efforts at corporate engagement are tried. MRTI faithfully follows General Assembly policy and criteria for divestment of 1984, and is employing those criteria with regard to companies profiting from the occupation of Palestine. But the avoidance of “sin stocks” and several categories of military securities are precisely by category, based on the nature of their businesses. This is the model desired for fossil fuel securities.

There was, in fact, a reasonably rapid divestment of military contractor securities in 1982, when MRTI brought that recommendation as a positive response to Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling (1980). That social witness policy not only started the Peacemaking Program, it called on all bodies of the church to take action in their areas. MRTI looked at its mixed record with big military contractors and nuclear warhead makers, and at the beginning of a military build-up, and recommended its own form of “economic conversion;” getting church monies out of companies who had every financial and business reason to grow their military contracts. How effective has that military-related divestment been? ACSWP wishes it were better known now, as it was and is a good thing that the PC(USA) does not profit from nuclear warhead-making and a lot of actual war-making.

The tipping point for ACSWP’s staying with MRTI has to do with our institutional role, which is to keep a prophetic edge within the structures. While it may not look like it in this case, MRTI does push not only companies, but our investment bodies themselves—and perhaps even those presbyteries supporting Item 08-03. While Item 08-02, which also calls for fossil free divestment, does respect the role of MRTI, Item 08-01 only cites it briefly. Ultimately ACSWP values MRTI highly, even when some of our members believe MRTI’s proposed actions do not go far enough. Welcome to an open, sometimes conflicted, yet loyal and democratic Body of Christ!

Item 08-08 is a report from the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee (MRTI), responding to a directive from the 222nd General Assembly (2016), to develop a Guideline Metric for monitoring whether firms involved in extracting or consuming fossil fuel are making meaningful progress in moving toward a carbon-free future. The report recommends that MRTI continue in its dialogue with the management of energy firms, which would not be possible if Item 08-01 were approved, requiring the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions to divest from their stock.

ACSWP agrees with the proposers of both Item 08-01 and Item 08-08 that climate change is a very serious problem and that our economy needs to end fossil fuel consumption as quickly as possible. The overtures differ in their recommendations for action over the next few years.

Since it will take some time for the economies of the U.S. and the world to make the transition to a fossil free energy system, PC(USA), through MRTI and its coalition partners, can contribute to this transition with shareholder dialogue and pressure—such as proxy votes and selective divestment from firms that refuse to progress fast enough with the transition. The Guideline Metric that MRTI has developed can measure this progress and provide a framework for dialogue. Since the issuance of its report, MRTI has signed-on to the newly formed Climate Action 100+, with 256 institutional investors having $28 trillion in assets under management—one-third of the world’s invested assets. Together, these investors will be calling on the boards of companies to implement a strong governance framework for accountability, oversight and disclosure of climate change risks.

Reflecting the urgency of the issue and the grave concerns of those supporting the fossil free/divestment overture, MRTI should use these new sources of information and leverage to pressure for better corporate practices, including lobbying, and to accelerate the process of divestment from firms that will not change their ways.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-01

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) disapprove Item 08-01.

As full voting members of MRTI, ACREC disapproves of this recommendation. ACREC laments the harm caused by climate change and the disproportionately damaging effects on people of color and seeks to actively work toward a solution. However, ACREC also recognizes that no dialogue will lead to more harm and no ability to advocate for the people of color who are employed by these companies.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-01

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) disapprove Item 08-01.
ACWC understands that climate change is a crisis. The issue disproportionately impacts women, children, people of color, and the most marginalized in global society. As a full voting member of the Mission Responsibility through Investment Committee (MRTI), ACWC brings a critical, gender-justice lens to corporate engagements, committee discussions, and deliberations. ACWC has maintained a voice in this conversation through MRTI and advises disapproval of this item and requests that the committee see ACWC’s Advice and Counsel on Item 08-08, p. 53.

Comment on Item 08-01—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions (Board) is an agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), established by the church under a separate civil charter as the corporate body legally responsible for designing and administering the Benefits Plan and the Assistance and Education programs for the ministers and lay employees of PC(USA) churches and associated employers. The Board is required by law and its governance and plan documents to administer these programs and invest their funds for the sole and exclusive benefit of the members and their beneficiaries. The Board is exclusively managed and controlled by its board of directors who are elected by the General Assembly. The Board maintains a close cooperative relationship with the other General Assembly agencies.

The Board shares a deep concern for God’s world and has worked actively to support the Collaborative Agenda for Environmental Stewardship developed by all six agencies of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In 2016, the Board’s Pension Portfolio invested in a global fossil-free fund, the largest investment in such a fund ever made by a Presbyterian entity. The value of that investment as of December 31, 2017, was $116 million. In addition, the Board established a fossil-free mutual fund investment option for participants in the Board’s 403(b)(9) Retirement Savings Plan (RSP). Despite significant promotion, only 148 of the 11,957 participants in the RSP have elected the fossil-free fund option.

Although the Board supports the environmental goal of all four overtures, it nonetheless recommends disapproval of Items 08-01 and 08-02 due to structural and technical concerns addressed in the specific comments below. The Board urges the approval of Items 08-03 and 08-10, which effectively provide a comprehensive response to climate change.

Comment Specific to Item 08-01, On Directing the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to Divest from Fossil Fuel and Actively Invest in Securities That Focus on Renewable Energy

This overture seeks to bypass the work of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee of the General Assembly (MRTI) that has been highly effective in its engagement of climate change issues as directed by 222nd General Assembly (2016). MRTI’s process does not preclude divestment of bad actors, but provides a studied and deliberative process for such determinations. One of those steps is consultation with Presbyterians who might be affected by such action, a step that has not been addressed in this recommendation. By way of example, MRTI recommended divestment of certain United States companies engaged with Israeli military forces in Palestine. That recommendation was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014). MRTI is not recommending complete divestment from the entire fossil-fuel industry sector.

This overture fails to recognize the process through which individual companies are added to the church’s prohibited securities list. Each year, MRTI develops a recommended list of prohibited securities. At the Board of Pensions, this list is presented to the Investment Committee, the governance body entrusted with responsibility for the investment management of the Benefits Plan and Assistance and Education funds held by the Board. The Investment Committee determines whether to approve the list in whole or part and further can add additional securities as it determines such investment decisions are in the best interest of the members and beneficiaries of the Board’s funds. The resulting list is then distributed to all of the Board’s separate investment managers.

While the General Assembly may applaud and encourage such investments as the Pax Global Strategy fossil-free investment in the Board’s balanced investment portfolio, by law, the Investment Committee of the Board cannot be directed to make any particular investment. All investments are vetted through a rigorous diligence process and must meet the requirements of appropriate risk/return, diversification and established asset allocations required by the governance and legal requirements applicable to the Board’s funds. As a parallel, the General Assembly cannot direct individuals to make any particular investment. The Board established a fossil-free option for investment in the 403(b)(9) Retirement Savings Program (RSP). Despite significant promotion, as of December 31, 2017, only 148 of the 11,957 participants in the RSP had selected the fossil-free fund.

Finally, as written, this overture is overly broad. There is no consensus definition of “the fossil-fuel industry.” This fact highlights the need for MRTI to undertake focused and specific work around engagement and the determination of when or if divestment in a specific company is appropriate.

Comment Specific to Item 08-02, On Adding to the GA Divestment List All Companies That Meet Specific Listed Criteria

Like Item 08-01, this overture seeks to bypass the work of the MRTI, which has been highly effective in its engagement of climate change issues as directed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016). By way of example, MRTI recently led ecumenical coalitions in successfully passing shareholder resolutions with Exxon Mobil, including the need to report on the impacts of climate change to its business.
MRTI’s process does not preclude divestment of recalcitrant companies, but provides a process for such determinations. One of those steps in potential divestment is consultation with Presbyterians who might be affected by such action, a step that is not acknowledged in this recommendation. MRTI is not recommending divestment from the fossil fuel industry at this time. This overture seeks to substitute its recommendation for that of the MRTI members duly elected by the General Assembly.

Recommendation 3.a. calls out the Carbon Underground 200 list. This list is unreliable and does not meet the standards of due diligence and prudent investment required of the Board. Fossil Free Indexes LLC produces this list and provides the following warning on its website,

"THE INFORMATION, PRODUCTS AND SERVICES CONTAINED ON THIS WEB SITE MAY BE OUT OF DATE OR INCLUDE OMISSIONS, INACCURACIES OR OTHER ERRORS…. ALL INFORMATION, PRODUCTS AND SERVICES ARE PROVIDED "AS-IS" WITHOUT WARRANTY OF ANY KIND" [EMPHASIS in original].

Unlike Recommendation 3.a., Recommendations 3.b. and 3.c. each lack required specifics. Before any such discussion could occur, the advocates seeking to replace their judgment for MRTI are obligated to develop a list of companies that they believe meet the proposed criteria. Once developed, then the proper course would be to engage with MRTI to determine which of these companies are held by a PC(USA) entity and what the current state of engagement might be.

Comment Specific Item 08-03, On Engagement with the Issue of Climate Change

The Board supports the approval of Item 08-03 as it represents a comprehensive response to climate change endorsing action at the denominational, congregational, and individual level. It affirms God’s call to stewardship and advocacy. It recognizes that those most deeply affected are those often in greatest economic need. It respects the long-established and effective research, corporate engagement, and divestment consideration process of the General Assembly Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments.

Comment Specific Item 08-10, On Engaging Environmental Investments

The Board supports the approval of Item 08-10, which calls upon the PC(USA) agencies responsible for the investment of PC(USA) and Benefits Plan funds, to consider increasing investments in profitable alternative energy companies or companies that address consumer energy demands, because those requests promote advocacy while respecting the independent legal responsibilities and obligations of those agencies with respect to their investment decisions. The overture also respects the long-established and effective research, corporate engagement, and divestment consideration process of the General Assembly with the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment.

FOUNDATION COMMENT ON ITEM 08-01

Comment on Item 08-01—From the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (Foundation).

The Presbyterian Foundation agrees that climate change poses a profound threat to all of God’s creation, and that efforts to mitigate climate change are of great importance. To that end, the Foundation staff and elected leadership have worked with the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) for more than forty years to leverage our investments for corporate engagement with companies in the fuel and energy sector. In addition, the Foundation has invested at least 1 percent of its endowment holdings in renewable energy, has asked its investment managers to consider environmental factors in their selection process, and has worked with the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., to create Restoring Creation Loans that help congregations reduce energy consumption. It has also created fossil-free investment strategies through its subsidiary New Covenant Trust Company for those who desire such an approach. (Ten churches, mid councils, ministries, and individuals have taken advantage of these strategies since their inception in 2016.)

MRTI’s processes have employed active engagement with companies that have invited many of them into meaningful and ultimately fruitful conversations leading to incremental or in some cases immediate change. To this end, the Foundation joins the Board of Pensions in voicing our strong support for the MRTI process regarding this issue. MRTI’s report neither assumes nor precludes divestment, but rather outlines a process for assessing progress in corporate engagement work by which future divestment decisions could be made. It also proposes that the General Assembly not short-circuit its own process, giving MRTI time to use the time-tested, detailed procedures of corporate engagement to their full effect, and reports significant progress made through corporate engagements over the last two years. The Foundation supports MRTI’s approach.

Comment on Item 08-01—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) asked the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to pursue its focused engagement process on climate changes issues with all corporations, particularly with those in the oil, gas, and coal sectors, and report back to the 223rd General Assembly (2018). The recommendations were to include possible selective divestment if significant changes in governance, strategy, implementation, transparency and disclosure, and public policy were not instituted by the corporations during the engagements of MRTI and ecumenical partners.
The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) unanimously adopted the requested report from MRTI prior to the 223rd General Assembly (2018). The MRTI report includes the biblical, moral, and scientific imperatives for the church to work toward mitigating climate change. It also outlines how MRTI has implemented the criteria established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) and applied it to its seven-step process included in the 196th General Assembly’s (1984) “The Use of Divestment as an Ethical Strategy” policy that guides MRTI’s work.

MRTI has developed a Guideline Metrics tool to implement the criteria established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to frame MRTI’s engagements with all corporations, particularly in the oil, gas, and coal sectors. This tool has given MRTI the capability to precisely measure a company’s movement, or lack thereof, towards compliance with the General Assembly criteria as well as needed clarity to comply with “The Use of Divestment as an Ethical Strategy” policy. This will help MRTI isolate unresponsive companies who will be subject to divestment recommendations unless they make significant changes towards compliance with General Assembly criteria.

On Adding to the GA Divestment List All Companies That Meet Specific Listed Criteria—From the Presbytery of East Tennessee.

The Presbytery of East Tennessee overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Acknowledge the faithful work of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) Committee in its almost three decades of engagement with fossil fuel companies through participation in scores of unsuccessful shareholder resolutions on climate change.

2. Recognize that most fossil fuel companies have not responded to the engagement efforts of MRTI since 2014, and have not implemented the significant changes in behaviors that are necessary to address the urgent scientific demands of climate change.

3. Direct MRTI to add to the annual General Assembly Divestment List all companies that meet the following criteria below, and request the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Foundation, and all mid councils of the PC(USA), to selectively divest from each company in their portfolio:

   a. Appears on the most recent Carbon Underground 200 list.

   b. Derives more than 50 percent of its annual revenue from extraction, production, and distribution of fossil fuels.

   c. Has not reduced its combined product and production carbon footprint by 2.5 percent or more per year from 2005 levels, consistent with the U.S. COP21 Paris Agreement goal of reducing carbon emissions by 80 percent below 2005 levels by 2050.

4. Call upon the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the PC(USA) to inform the affected companies and the larger public of the passage and implementation of this resolution.

Rationale

The impacts of human-caused climate change are real, serious, urgent, and immediate. They are affecting poor and fragile populations first and worst. The PC(USA) has advocated responsible energy policy for more than three decades. Fossil fuel companies have understood their role in these impacts for four decades. Most have chosen obstruction instead of action. While they refuse to use their immense profits to become part of the solution to climate change, they remain part of the problem. While they are part of the problem, they should not be part of the PC(USA) investment portfolio.

MRTI has a long-standing policy of phased selective divestment. The major publicly traded owners of fossil fuel reserves who continue to derive the majority of their revenues from fossil fuel production, and who have not reduced their carbon footprint consistent with scientific findings and the goals of the COP21 agreement fit the seven MRTI criteria for divestment. Those companies should be added to the annual MRTI divestment list in a fashion similar to that which is already done for tobacco and military related companies. It should be noted that such divestment action is not irrevocable. Companies that choose to diversify away from fossil fuels and into alternative energy, and who reduce their carbon footprint as required by science and world governments can be removed from future divestment lists.

Humanity’s first biblical mandate was to be stewards of the handiwork of our Creator God. Let us honor that mandate with our investments as well as with our words and our actions.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-02

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) disapprove Item 08-02.

ACSWP agrees that climate change is a very serious problem, but we oppose this overture because it would not be the most effective way that we can address the problem.

The proposal would end the ability of MRTI to engage with the fossil-fuel extraction industry (which ACSWP also commends—see A&C on 08-08). As directed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), MRTI has implemented a Guideline Metric to evaluate when firms all along the chain from fossil fuel to greenhouse gas (not merely the extraction phase) are making adequate progress on fighting climate change. It now has the mechanism to recommend selective divestment in accordance with the PC(USA)’s policy on investment, which has guided such decisions since the 1980s. The Item 08-02 proposal would also take MRTI and PC(USA) out of the several investor coalitions that are having increased success in pressuring the fossil fuel companies to revise their business models in line with the Paris Accord. See Item 08-08: MRTI’s report and the ACSWP A&C on it.

Furthermore, Item 08-02 is factually incorrect in claiming that that the dialogue and coalitions have not had success. For instance, since the 222nd General Assembly (2016), the largest pro-environment coalition of investors from faith-based groups, universities, and unions has been joined in several proxy votes by very large funds like Black Rock and Vanguard.

If Exxon-Mobil or other firms do not make adequate progress, as measured with MRTI’s Guideline Metrics, then they should recommend divestment. But now, when engagement is showing results, is not the time to walk away from the table with all the firms in the industry.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) disapprove Item 08-02.

As full voting members of MRTI, ACREC disapproves this recommendation. ACREC laments the harm caused by climate change and the disproportionately damaging effects on people of color and seeks to actively work toward a solution. However, ACREC also recognizes that no dialogue will lead to more harm and no ability to advocate for the people of color who are employed by these companies.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) disapprove Item 08-02.
ACWC understands that climate change is a crisis. The issue disproportionately impacts women, children, people of color, and the most marginalized in global society. As a full voting member of the Mission Responsibility through Investment Committee (MRTI), ACWC brings a critical, gender-justice lens to corporate engagements, committee discussions, and deliberations. ACWC has maintained a voice in this conversation through MRTI and advises disapproval of this item and requests that the committee see ACWC’s Advice and Counsel on Item 08-08, p. 53.

Comment on Item 08-02—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions (Board) is an agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), established by the church under a separate civil charter as the corporate body legally responsible for designing and administering the Benefits Plan and the Assistance and Education programs for the ministers and lay employees of PC(USA) churches and associated employers. The Board is required by law and its governance and plan documents to administer these programs and invest their funds for the sole and exclusive benefit of the members and their beneficiaries. The Board is exclusively managed and controlled by its board of directors who are elected by the General Assembly. The Board maintains a close cooperative relationship with the other General Assembly agencies.

The Board shares a deep concern for God’s world and has worked actively to support the Collaborative Agenda for Environmental Stewardship developed by all six agencies of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In 2016, the Board’s Pension Portfolio invested in a global fossil-free fund, the largest investment in such a fund ever made by a Presbyterian entity. The value of that investment as of December 31, 2017, was $116 million. In addition, the Board established a fossil-free mutual fund investment option for participants in the Board’s 403(b)(9) Retirement Savings Plan (RSP). Despite significant promotion, only 148 of the 11,957 participants in the RSP have elected the fossil-free fund option.

Although the Board supports the environmental goal of all four overtures, it nonetheless recommends disapproval of Items 08-01 and 08-02 due to structural and technical concerns addressed in the specific comments below. The Board urges the approval of Items 08-03 and 08-10, which effectively provide a comprehensive response to climate change.

Comment Specific to Item 08-01, On Directing the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to Divest from Fossil Fuel and Actively Invest in Securities That Focus on Renewable Energy

This overture seeks to bypass the work of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee of the General Assembly (MRTI) that has been highly effective in its engagement of climate change issues as directed by 222nd General Assembly (2016). MRTI’s process does not preclude divestment of bad actors, but provides a studied and deliberative process for such determinations. One of those steps is consultation with Presbyterians who might be affected by such action, a step that has not been addressed in this recommendation. By way of example, MRTI recommended divestment of certain United States companies engaged with Israeli military forces in Palestine. That recommendation was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014). MRTI is not recommending complete divestment from the entire fossil-fuel industry sector.

This overture fails to recognize the process through which individual companies are added to the church’s prohibited securities list. Each year, MRTI develops a recommended list of prohibited securities. At the Board of Pensions, this list is presented to the Investment Committee, the governance body entrusted with responsibility for the investment management of the Benefits Plan and Assistance and Education funds held by the Board. The Investment Committee determines whether to approve the list in whole or part and further can add additional securities as it determines such investment decisions are in the best interest of the members and beneficiaries of the Board’s funds. The resulting list is then distributed to all of the Board’s separate investment managers.

While the General Assembly may applaud and encourage such investments as the Pax Global Strategy fossil-free investment in the Board’s balanced investment portfolio, by law, the Investment Committee of the Board cannot be directed to make any particular investment. All investments are vetted through a rigorous diligence process and must meet the requirements of appropriate risk/return, diversification and established asset allocations required by the governance and legal requirements applicable to the Board’s funds. As a parallel, the General Assembly cannot direct individuals to make any particular investment. The Board established a fossil-free option for investment in the 403(b)(9) Retirement Savings Program (RSP). Despite significant promotion, as of December 31, 2017, only 148 of the 11,957 participants in the RSP had selected the fossil-free fund.

Finally, as written, this overture is overly broad. There is no consensus definition of “the fossil-fuel industry.” This fact highlights the need for MRTI to undertake focused and specific work around engagement and the determination of when or if divestment in a specific company is appropriate.

Comment Specific to Item 08-02, On Adding to the GA Divestment List All Companies That Meet Specific Listed Criteria

Like Item 08-01, this overture seeks to bypass the work of the MRTI, which has been highly effective in its engagement of climate change issues as directed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016). By way of example, MRTI recently led ecumenical coalitions in successfully passing shareholder resolutions with Exxon Mobil, including the need to report on the impacts of climate change to its business.
MRTI’s process does not preclude divestment of recalcitrant companies, but provides a process for such determinations. One of those steps in potential divestment is consultation with Presbyterians who might be affected by such action, a step that is not acknowledged in this recommendation. MRTI is not recommending divestment from the fossil fuel industry at this time. This overture seeks to substitute its recommendation for that of the MRTI members duly elected by the General Assembly.

Recommendation 3.a. calls out the Carbon Underground 200 list. This list is unreliable and does not meet the standards of due diligence and prudent investment required of the Board. Fossil Free Indexes LLC produces this list and provides the following warning on its website,

“THE INFORMATION, PRODUCTS AND SERVICES CONTAINED ON THIS WEB SITE MAY BE OUT OF DATE OR INCLUDE OMISSIONS, INACCURACIES OR OTHER ERRORS.... ALL INFORMATION, PRODUCTS AND SERVICES ARE PROVIDED “AS-IS” WITHOUT WARRANTY OF ANY KIND” [EMPHASIS in original].

Unlike Recommendation 3.a., Recommendations 3.b. and 3.c. each lack required specifics. Before any such discussion could occur, the advocates seeking to replace their judgment for MRTI are obligated to develop a list of companies that they believe meet the proposed criteria. Once developed, then the proper course would be to engage with MRTI to determine which of these companies are held by a PC(USA) entity and what the current state of engagement might be.

The Board supports the approval of Item 08-03 as it represents a comprehensive response to climate change endorsing action at the denominational, congregational, and individual level. It affirms God’s call to stewardship and advocacy. It recognizes that those most deeply affected are those often in greatest economic need. It respects the long-established and effective research, corporate engagement, and divestment consideration process of the General Assembly Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments.

Comment Specific Item 08-10, On Engaging Environmental Investments

The Board supports the approval of Item 08-10, which calls upon the PC(USA) agencies responsible for the investment of PC(USA) and Benefits Plan funds, to consider increasing investments in profitable alternative energy companies or companies that address consumer energy demands, because those requests promote advocacy while respecting the independent legal responsibilities and obligations of those agencies with respect to their investment decisions. The overture also respects the long-established and effective research, corporate engagement, and divestment consideration process of the General Assembly with the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment.

Comment on Item 08-02—From the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (Foundation).

The Presbyterian Foundation agrees that climate change poses a profound threat to all of God’s creation, and that efforts to mitigate climate change are of great importance. To that end, the Foundation staff and elected leadership have worked with the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) for more than forty years to leverage our investments for corporate engagement with companies in the fuel and energy sector. In addition, the Foundation has invested at least 1 percent of its endowment holdings in renewable energy, has asked its investment managers to consider environmental factors in their selection process, and has worked with the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., to create Restoring Creation Loans that help congregations reduce energy consumption. It has also created fossil-free investment strategies through its subsidiary New Covenant Trust Company for those who desire such an approach. (Ten churches, mid councils, ministries, and individuals have taken advantage of these strategies since their inception in 2016.)

MRTI’s processes have employed active engagement with companies that have invited many of them into meaningful and ultimately fruitful conversations leading to incremental or in some cases immediate change. To this end, the Foundation joins the Board of Pensions in voicing our strong support for the MRTI process regarding this issue. MRTI’s report neither assumes nor precludes divestment, but rather outlines a process for assessing progress in corporate engagement work by which future divestment decisions could be made. It also proposes that the General Assembly not short-circuit its own process, giving MRTI time to use the time-tested, detailed procedures of corporate engagement to their full effect, and reports significant progress made through corporate engagements over the last two years. The Foundation supports MRTI’s approach.

Comment on Item 08-02—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) asked the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to pursue its focused engagement process on climate changes issues with all corporations, particularly with those in the oil, gas, and coal sectors, and report back to the 223rd General Assembly (2018). The recommendations were to include possible selective divestment if significant changes in governance, strategy, implementation, transparency and disclosure, and public policy were not instituted by the corporations during the engagements of MRTI and ecumenical partners.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) unanimously adopted the requested report from MRTI prior to the 223rd General Assembly (2018). The MRTI report includes the biblical, moral, and scientific imperatives for the church to work toward mitigating climate change. It also outlines how MRTI has implemented the criteria established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) and applied it to its seven-step process included in the 196th General Assembly’s (1984) “The Use of Divestment as an Ethical Strategy” policy that guides MRTI’s work.

MRTI has developed a Guideline Metrics tool to implement the criteria established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to frame MRTI’s engagements with all corporations, particularly in the oil, gas, and coal sectors. This tool has given MRTI the capability to precisely measure a company’s movement, or lack thereof, towards compliance with the General Assembly criteria as well as needed clarity to comply with “The Use of Divestment as an Ethical Strategy” policy. This will help MRTI isolate unresponsive companies who will be subject to divestment recommendations unless they make significant changes towards compliance with General Assembly criteria.

On Engagement with the Issue of Climate Change—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA) to:

1. Express its profound concern about the detrimental effects of climate change on all God’s creation, including those living in poverty, the elderly and children, and those least responsible for the emissions of greenhouse gases.

2. Proclaim that we recognize the Gospel’s call to shift to a just, compassionate, and sustainable energy plan.

3. Acknowledge that this compels us to implement strategies and actions that engage climate change and offer the realistic prospect of changing our destructive behaviors that contribute to the issue.

4. Call upon congregations and councils of the church to develop ways for those who disagree on climate change to be in dialogue with one another, seeking together to find and represent the will of Christ; affirm the need for dialogue and discernment, not only within and among our congregations, but also all parties outside our denomination, seeking faithful individual and collective responses to address climate change, trusting that we share a common belief in the need to respond.

5. Affirm that we have a duty to assure that our response to climate change does not endanger the economic progress and improvements in living conditions that have been made among all of God’s people, most notably the impoverished, but instead enables that progress to continue.

6. Affirm that is both possible and practical to effect meaningful change; urge individuals, congregations, councils of the church, and institutions (including the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Mission Agency, Office of General Assembly, camps, conference centers, colleges, and theological seminaries) to initiate, continue, and build upon steps to reduce our carbon footprint and to continue adoption of lower-carbon and zero-carbon technologies and lifestyles.

7. Commend the Committee on Mission Responsibility through Investment (“MRTI”) for its long history of corporate engagement on climate change issues.

8. Instruct MRTI to continue that engagement, applying the long-standing PC(USA) principles related to corporate engagement and consideration of divestment.

9. Acknowledge that our response must not be limited to corporate engagement, and that engagement also requires us to develop, advocate, and implement faithful responses that alter harmful individual, institutional, and corporate behaviors that contribute to climate change.

10. Affirm the steps already taken by the Presbyterian Foundation, Board of Pensions, and Presbyterian Investment and Loan Corporation, Inc. to leverage investments to help care for God’s creation and mitigate the adverse effects of climate change by urging these groups to establish and enhance programs to target climate change solutions, such as the “Restoring Creation Loan” program, which allows congregations to renovate their buildings using energy-efficient products to conserve energy, lower costs, and reduce carbon emissions.
11. Commend congregations that have committed to the “earth care pledge” and encourage all congregations to consider joining the Earthcare Congregation Network of the PC(USA).

12. Advocate for the reduction of greenhouse gases through the use of alternative, cleaner energy sources, such as [natural gas, nuclear, wind, solar, and industrial-scale power storage], even if only as a bridge to the long-term future.

13. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in collaboration with Congregational Ministries Publishing, The Thoughtful Christian, and other organizations with parallel goals, to develop a policy paper and educational materials to assist congregations and councils of the church to understand the impact of climate change and in taking individual and collective action to slow climate change, including: shareholder activism; investments in renewable energy; advocacy at local, state, federal, and international levels for policies to reduce greenhouse gas emissions (including policies to price greenhouse gas emissions); and local efforts to reduce carbon footprint, consistent with the 2006 call for denominational carbon neutrality, and the 2008 “Power to Change” recommendations.

14. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC (USA) to inform the denomination and the larger public of the passage and implementation of this overture.

[Financial Implications: Per Capita (2019) $8,100 (2020) $7,800. Total—$15,900]

Rationale

Our denomination has long recognized our obligation to be faithful stewards of God’s creation (including General Assembly actions in 1981, 1998, 1999, 2003, 2006, and 2008). We have acknowledged the realities of climate change and its effect on the “least of these,” and the need to take action by reducing energy consumption and reliance on fossil fuels. Now is the time to move from symbolism to education and behavioral changes.

We must also adopt in our individual, congregational, and denominational lives meaningful approaches that address climate change. As Christians, we have the privilege, responsibility, and obligation to speak with moral authority on issues of great importance. Climate change is such an issue.

This overture exhorts us to unite all Presbyterians to engage climate change with responsible, meaningful, and lasting actions that will make a difference in the future of God’s creation. Through the actions called for in this overture, the PC (USA) will demonstrate the depth of our theological understanding of the stewardship of God’s creation and community by promoting faithful actions that unite us in addressing the issues of climate change.

Biblical and Theological Rationale

Ecology and justice are implicit in the story of creation itself: “The Lord God took the man and put him in the Garden of Eden to till it and keep it” (Gen. 2:15). This Scripture affirms four values that characterize “a new faithfulness” reflecting God’s love for the world: sustainability, participation, sufficiency, and solidarity. These values also highlight the inherent tensions. We cannot address only the good of the creation without also considering the good of the community. We cannot address only the good of the community without considering the good of creation. Global climate change, regardless of its cause, threatens both the community and the earth over which we are stewards. Our call is to address these threats responsibly, with meaningful effect, while promoting economic justice.

A Proposed Response

From our perspective, the consistent, rational, and equitable global pricing of emissions would enlist market forces to drive changes in consumption necessary to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and also provide the economic incentive necessary to promote investment in low-carbon or zero-carbon infrastructure and technologies. Affordable energy would continue to be available to drive responsible economic development, while global emissions driven by consumption would decline. We thus address our dual responsibility to promote the well-being of the disadvantaged and the protection of the earth.

We also recognize that this pricing system must originate with the secular authorities, not PC(USA). This overture, therefore, also highlights many actions that we as individuals, congregations, and institutions can take on our own authority, and that some among us are already taking. We urge broader adoption of these actions.

Summary

We Presbyterians approach creation with the twin perspectives of responsible use and sustainable care. An ethic of stewardship therefore must consider creation both as a good in itself and as a resource for economic justice. The responsibility of holding wealth is directed toward an ethic of engagement that seeks to use wealth to transform injustice and immorality rather than shunning such engagement. Action to bring about that outcome is a faithful response to the urgent climate change issues that are before us.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-03.

We share its recognition of the importance of the problem of climate change and appreciate its recommendations for a multiprong approach to encourage the many dimensions of change that our economy and society need to undertake to address the problem.

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-03. As full voting members of MRTI, ACREC approves this recommendation. ACREC laments the harm caused by climate change and the disproportionately damaging effects on people of color and seeks to actively work toward a solution. However, ACREC also recognizes that no dialogue will lead to more harm and no ability to advocate for the people of color who are employed by these companies as is mentioned in Recommendation 5. ACREC also agrees with the educational component of this overture as consumer behavior is a significant factor of climate change.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 08-03

Comment on Item 08-03—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions (Board) is an agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), established by the church under a separate civil charter as the corporate body legally responsible for designing and administering the Benefits Plan and the Assistance and Education programs for the ministers and lay employees of PC(USA) churches and associated employers. The Board is required by law and its governance and plan documents to administer these programs and invest their funds for the sole and exclusive benefit of the members and their beneficiaries. The Board is exclusively managed and controlled by its board of directors who are elected by the General Assembly. The Board maintains a close cooperative relationship with the other General Assembly agencies.

The Board shares a deep concern for God’s world and has worked actively to support the Collaborative Agenda for Environmental Stewardship developed by all six agencies of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In 2016, the Board’s Pension Portfolio invested in a global fossil-free fund, the largest investment in such a fund ever made by a Presbyterian entity. The value of that investment as of December 31, 2017, was $116 million. Despite significant promotion, only 148 of the 11,957 participants in the RSP have elected the fossil-free fund option.

Although the Board supports the environmental goal of all four overtures, it nonetheless recommends disapproval of Items 08-01 and 08-02 due to structural and technical concerns addressed in the specific comments below. The Board urges the approval of Items 08-03 and 08-10, which effectively provide a comprehensive response to climate change.

Comment Specific to Item 08-01, On Directing the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to Divest from Fossil Fuel and Actively Invest in Securities That Focus on Renewable Energy

This overture seeks to bypass the work of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee of the General Assembly (MRTI) that has been highly effective in its engagement of climate change issues as directed by 222nd General Assembly (2016). MRTI’s process does not preclude divestment of bad actors, but provides a studied and deliberative process for such determinations. One of those steps is consultation with Presbyterians who might be affected by such action, a step that has not been addressed in this recommendation. By way of example, MRTI recommended divestment of certain United States companies engaged with Israeli military forces in Palestine. That recommendation was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014). MRTI is not recommending complete divestment from the entire fossil-fuel industry sector.

This overture fails to recognize the process through which individual companies are added to the church’s prohibited securities list. Each year, MRTI develops a recommended list of prohibited securities. At the Board of Pensions, this list is presented to the Investment Committee, the governance body entrusted with responsibility for the investment management of the Benefits Plan and Assistance and Education funds held by the Board. The Investment Committee determines whether to approve the list in whole or part and further can add additional securities as it determines such investment decisions are in the best interest of the members and beneficiaries of the Board’s funds. The resulting list is then distributed to all of the Board’s separate investment managers.

While the General Assembly may applaud and encourage such investments as the Pax Global Strategy fossil-free investment in the Board’s balanced investment portfolio, by law, the Investment Committee of the Board cannot be directed to make any particular investment. All investments are vetted through a rigorous diligence process and must meet the requirements of appropriate risk/return, diversification and established asset allocations required by the governance and legal requirements applicable to the Board’s funds. As a parallel, the General Assembly cannot direct individuals to make any particular investment. The Board established a fossil-free option for investment in the 403(b)(9) Retirement Savings Program (RSP). Despite significant promotion, as of December 31, 2017, only 148 of the 11,957 participants in the RSP had selected the fossil-free fund.

Finally, as written, this overture is overly broad. There is no consensus definition of “the fossil-fuel industry.” This fact highlights the need for MRTI to undertake focused and specific work around engagement and the determination of when or if divestment in a specific company is appropriate.

Comment Specific to Item 08-02, On Adding to the GA Divestment List All Companies That Meet Specific Listed Criteria

Like Item 08-01, this overture seeks to bypass the work of the MRTI, which has been highly effective in its engagement of climate change issues as directed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016). By way of example, MRTI recently led ecumenical coalitions in successfully passing shareholder resolutions with Exxon Mobil, including the need to report on the impacts of climate change to its business.

MRTI’s process does not preclude divestment of recalcitrant companies, but provides a process for such determinations. One of those steps in potential divestment is consultation with Presbyterians who might be affected by such action, a step that is not acknowledged in this recommendation. MRTI is not recommending divestment from the fossil fuel industry at this time. This overture seeks to substitute its recommendation for that of the MRTI members duly elected by the General Assembly.

Recommendation 3.a. calls out the Carbon Underground 200 list. This list is unreliable and does not meet the standards of due diligence and prudent investment required of the Board. Fossil Free Indexes LLC produces this list and provides the following warning on its website,

"... materials published by Fossil Free Indexes on this Web Site solely for personal, informational, and non-commercial use …, and "THE INFORMATION, PRODUCTS AND SERVICES CONTAINED ON THIS WEB SITE MAY BE OUT OF DATE OR INCLUDE OMISSIONS, INACCURACIES OR OTHER ERRORS…. Unlike Recommendation 3.a., Recommendations 3.b. and 3.c. each lack required specifics. Before any such discussion could occur, the advocates seeking to replace their judgment for MRTI are obligated to develop a list of companies that they believe meet the proposed criteria. Once developed, then the proper course would be to engage with MRTI to determine which of these companies are held by a PC(USA) entity and what the current state of engagement might be.

The Board supports the approval of Item 08-03 as it represents a comprehensive response to climate change endorsing action at the denominational, congregational, and individual level. It affirms God’s call to stewardship and advocacy. It recognizes that those most deeply affected are those often in greatest economic need. It respects the long-established and effective research, corporate engagement, and divestment consideration process of the General Assembly Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments.

Comment Specific Item 08-10, On Engaging Environmental Investments

The Board supports the approval of Item 08-10, which calls upon the PC(USA) agencies responsible for the investment of PC(USA) and Benefits Plan funds, to consider increasing investments in profitable alternative energy companies or companies that address consumer energy demands, because those requests promote advocacy while respecting the independent legal responsibilities and obligations of those agencies with respect to their investment decisions. The overture also respects the long-established and effective research, corporate engagement, and divestment consideration process of the General Assembly with the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-03

Comment on Item 08-03—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

Staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency attend the Conference of Parties (COP) on Climate Change every year to learn and advocate for climate change policies and their effect on vulnerable populations.

On Renewing Our Call to Promote Environmental Justice—From the Presbytery of Newton.

The Presbytery of Newton overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to

1. Renew our denomination’s call to promote environmental justice and oppose environmental injustice in all its forms.
2. Listen to the perspectives and voices of people most impacted by environmental injustice, including environmental racism.
3. In accordance with the Gospel, position the church’s approach to environmental problems primarily as responses to the voices most directly impacted by environmental injustice and the cry of God’s creation for environmental justice.

Rationale

Jesus stood up to read, and the scroll of the prophet Isaiah was handed to him. Unrolling it, he found the place where it is written: “The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me to bring good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim release to the captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to let the oppressed go free” (Lk, 4:16–18).

History of PC(USA) Actions

The Presbyterian church has long been a proponent of action to promote social and environmental justice. Presbyterian General Assemblies have been speaking on issues of environmental protection and justice since the late 1960s. Their witness has ranged broadly from drinking water safety and acid rain, to protecting endangered species, to cleaning up dirty power plants, to climate change and U.S. energy policy. The major policy statements on environmental issues were in 1971, 1990, and 2008, and on energy in 1981.

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) approved a policy statement on “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice.” The policy affirmed that “... restored creation is not a short-term concern to be handled in a few years, but a continuing task to which the nation and the world must give attention and commitment ...” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 647). One of the norms identified for keeping and healing God’s creation is sustainability. It is to be promoted in conjunction with sufficiency, participation by those normally excluded, connecting economic justice with environmental concerns, and solidarity so that community can be achieved by diminishing the gap between the rich and poor. “Restoring Creation” also addressed global warming.

The 207th General Assembly (1995) approved a resolution on “Hazardous Waste, Race, and the Environment” that amended the 1990 “Restoring Creation” policy, calling for advocacy on environmental justice concerns on behalf of and with the poor and people of color, and “the development of public policies that result in reducing the generation of hazardous wastes and reduction in the use of hazardous substances” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 492–93). The underlying basis for this resolution was the unfortunate fact that some individuals, groups, and communities are at special risk from environmental threats. This is especially the case for low-income persons, the working poor, people of color, and indigenous peoples whose livelihoods and health may be imperiled by resource extraction, waste disposal, and pollution in their neighborhoods and hazards in their workplace. A special culprit in causing many of these problems were and are the fossil fuel and power companies whose activities have included mountain top removal to access coal, pollution of water and earth from fracking for oil and natural gas, and releases of air and water pollution by oil refineries and chemical plants, as well as the location of toxic waste facilities.

The commissioners at the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved “The Power to Change: U.S. Policy and Global Warming” which pronounced policy recommendations on climate change with a commitment to “stand with ‘the least of these’ (Matt. 25:40) and advocate for the poor and oppressed in present and future generations who are often the victims of environmental injustice and who are least able to mitigate the impact of global warming that will fall disproportionately upon them” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 935, electronic file; see also https://www.pc-biz.org/#/search/1537).

Environmental Justice, Injustice and Racism

Environmental justice is a concept first articulated by Dr. Robert Bullard to denote the movement to resolve the problems created by the confluence of environmental destruction, racism, and poverty. The U.S. EPA defines environmental justice as:

...the fair treatment and meaningful involvement of all people regardless of race, color, national origin, or income, with respect to the development, implementation, and enforcement of environmental laws, regulations, and policies. ... It will be achieved when everyone enjoys the same degree of protection from environmental and health hazards and equal access to the decision-making process to have a healthy environment in which to live, learn, and work. (https://www.epa.gov/environmentaljustice)

Thus, environmental justice calls for (1) equal treatment with respect to exposure to environmental hazards and (2) equal opportunity to be heard with respect to environmental matters.
Subsumed in the rubric of environmental injustice is environmental racism, a term, first coined by the Reverend Benjamin Chavis in 1981, and used to describe the disproportionate burden of environmental problems that people of color experience. In his landmark national study, Toxic Waste and Race in the United States, he showed statistically that in the United States people of color are more likely to live in areas more exposed to pollutants in the air, ground, and water. Also, it has been found that environmental catastrophes, such as floods, hurricanes, and earthquakes, disproportionately impact people of color because these communities are more likely to live in substandard housing and within floodplains; and people of color generally have fewer resources to escape environmental disasters. Moreover, undocumented immigrants in the United States are less likely to seek government assistance in recovery efforts, because they fear detention and deportation.

Current Challenges

We live in a time when the environmental regulations that protect our air and water and that are designed to lessen the rate of climate change are being subjected to an all-out assault at the federal level. Although they do so imperfectly, such regulations do tend to lessen the impacts of environmentally hazardous conditions on minorities and the poor and create the opportunity for their voices to be heard.

More significantly, the impacts of environmental injustice are being magnified by and focused upon the poor and minorities by the increasingly evident impacts of global warming/climate change that have exacerbated devastating heat waves, flooding, hurricanes, and wildfires. These impacts are only expected to increase as global temperatures continue to climb.

Dr. Robert Bullard, a Distinguished Professor of Urban Planning and Environmental Policy and Administration of Justice at Texas Southern University, explains how Hurricane Harvey exposed the environmental racism embedded in Houston, Texas:

... [W]hen we look at the color of vulnerability and we look at which communities are actually at greatest risk from disasters and floods like this, historically, it’s been low-income communities and communities of color, communities that live in low-lying areas that are areas that are very prone to flooding. And it’s very difficult to get insurance, not just flood insurance, but regular insurance, because of redlining. So, what Harvey has done is to expose those inequalities that existed before the storm. (https://www.democracynow.org/2017/9/5/will_houston_s_post_harvey_recovery)

Also in 2017, similar effects have been visited upon the poor and minorities in Florida and the Virgin Islands by Hurricane Irma and by virtually everyone in Puerto Rico by Hurricane Maria.

On a larger scale, it is the impoverished and minority people from the Global South who bear the brunt of climate change. A recent report by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, for example, predicts that rising temperatures will significantly reduce the growing seasons and available arable land in Africa, South Asia, and the Middle East, thus exacerbating hunger, poverty, and competition for scarce resources. A recent study by Columbia University’s Lamont-Doherty Observatory projects that by 2080 combined heat and humidity will render much of these areas uninhabitable, an area where one half of the world’s population lives.

To make matters worse, those who bear the brunt of environmental problems often find their voices silenced by those who see the problem of environmental damage only through privileged eyes. We live in a time when money talks and the voices of those without it are not heard.

The church must combat these problems on both fronts—work to minimize environmental problems and do so by listening to the voices of those most disproportionately impacted. Unfortunately, the call for a long-term commitment to address these matters has seen the passage of decades when the world’s time to address these matters has dwindled away. The increasing intensity of the effects of climate change and highly credible predictions that these effects are accelerating tell us that the time to prevent catastrophic changes in God’s wonderful creation is rapidly passing. God’s creation is calling out to us to deal with these issues with a sense of urgency that was absent in the past. Our church and our monies need to speak out to give voice in aid of the victims of environmental injustice with a renewed strength and enthusiasm.

“Truly I tell you, whatever you did for one of the least of these brothers and sisters of mine, you did for me” (Mt. 25:40).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-04.

As full voting members of MRTI, ACREC approves this recommendation. ACREC laments the harm caused by climate change and the disproportionately damaging effects on people of color and seeks to actively work toward a solution. However, ACREC also recognizes that no dialogue will lead to more harm and no ability to advocate for the people of color who are employed by these companies as is mentioned in Recommendation 2. ACREC also agrees with the educational component of this overture as consumer behavior is a significant factor of climate change.

ACSWP endorses and agrees with the premise of this overture, namely, that climate change and release of toxic materials in the environment has a disproportionately bad effect on poor and non-white persons, in the U.S. and abroad, especially in the Global South. Item 08-04 and Item 08-05 could be combined, as they are very similar, even to the point that both start their Rationales with the same quote from the Gospel of Luke.

Item 08-04 names the evil of environmental racism and recognizes that it happens as structural racism, even when we, the perpetrators, harbor no obvious racial animosity.

A combination of the items could say that environmental justice can contribute to a solution to the problem of environmental racism.

On Responding to Environmental Racism [and to Promote Environmental Justice]—From the Presbytery of Monmouth.

The Presbytery of Monmouth overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to

1. Renew our denomination’s call to promote environmental justice and oppose environmental injustice in all its forms.

2. Take action to respond to environmental racism [and environmental injustice] in all its forms.

   a. To provide educational resources to churches and mid councils about environmental racism and injustice.

   b. To provide information and resources to enable the buildings and operations of our churches to be more environmentally sound.

3. Listen to the perspectives and voices of people most impacted by environmental racism [with awareness to cultural diversity domestically and internationally].

4. In accordance with the Gospel, position the church’s approach to environmental problems to include responses to the voices most directly impacted by environmental racism.

Rationale

“[Jesus] stood up to read, and the scroll of the prophet Isaiah was given to him. He unrolled the scroll and found the place where it was written: ‘The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me to bring good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim release to the captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to let the oppressed go free’ ” (Lk, 4:16–18).

Environmental racism is a term, first coined by the Reverend Benjamin Chavis in 1981, used to describe the disproportionate burden of environmental problems that people of color take on. People of color are more likely to live in areas more exposed to pollutants in the air, ground, and water. Environmental catastrophes, such as floods, hurricanes, and earthquakes, disproportionately impact people of color, as these communities are more likely to live in substandard housing and within floodplains. And people of color generally have fewer resources to escape environmental disasters. Moreover, undocumented migrants in the United States are less likely seek government assistance in recovery efforts, as they fear detention and deportation.1

“Environmental racism” is closely related to “environmental justice,” a concept first articulated by Dr. Robert Bullard, to connote the movement to resolve the problems created by the confluence of environmental destruction, racism, and poverty.

Bullard, a Distinguished Professor of Urban Planning and Environmental Policy and Administration of Justice at Texas Southern University, explains how Hurricane Harvey exposed and exacerbated the environmental racism embedded in Houston, Texas: “when we look at the color of vulnerability and we look at which communities are actually at greatest risk from disasters and floods like this, historically, it’s been low-income communities and communities of color, communities that live in low-lying areas that are areas that are very prone to flooding. And it’s very difficult to get insurance, not just flood insurance, but regular insurance, because of redlining. So, what Harvey has done is to expose those inequalities that existed before the storm.”2
After Harvey, Hurricanes Irma and Maria exposed environmental racism issues in Puerto Rico (PR). Immediately after the storm there were suggestions that the money spent on recovery was harming the U.S. budget, and the death count was minimized, as if Puerto Ricans dying as a result of Maria were insignificant to people dying as a result of Katrina. Five months after the storm, full power has yet to be restored to the island. The challenges in Puerto Rico are so many at this time as a result of Maria, especially in the area of public health. Puerto Ricans with chronic health conditions, using medical machinery, are dying every day due to the instability of the power grid. A report from Commit to PR, an organization of medical doctors form the U.S. helping the island, reported that 62 percent of the applications submitted to FEMA have been denied. A recent report from the Department of Health, shows that suicides in PR increased 55 percent in the last four months of 2017, when compared to same period in 2016. The EPA and local environmental agencies, have issued several warnings of the dangers in several water bodies. Raw sewage is pouring into rivers, and reservoirs. Unfortunately, many islanders living in the central part of the island are drinking water from contaminated sources.

New Jersey faces environmental racism issues with the economic engine that is the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey. We all benefit from the activity at the ports, buying the products that are shipped into this country. Yet, port-adjacent cities like Newark and Elizabeth bear the burdens of pollution, poor working conditions, and low wages resulting from the ports, but reap few of the benefits. Port pollution is an environmental and health injustice—increasing asthma, heart disease, and cancer rates in port-adjacent communities where a majority of residents are low income and of color. A majority of the goods leaving the port (85 percent) are moved on average by 14,000 diesel drayage truck trips per day along major highways and local roads within the region to nearby warehouses, assembly facilities, and retailers. Unfortunately, port trucks are some of oldest and dirtiest trucks on the road, spewing harmful diesel pollution and greenhouse gases.

At a larger scale, it is people from the Global South who bear the brunt of climate change. A recent report by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, for example, predicts that rising temperatures will significantly reduce the growing season in Africa, thus exacerbating hunger and poverty.

To make matters worse, those who bear the brunt of environmental problems often find their voices silenced by many white environmentalists and polluters alike, who see the problem of environmental damage only through privileged eyes. The church must combat these problems on both fronts—work to minimize environmental problems and do so by listening to the voices of those most disproportionately impacted.

Comment on Item 08-05—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Office of Public Witness suggests that our definition of environmental racism deal specifically with the theft of indigenous land and connect to the overture passed at the 222nd General Assembly (2016) “On Making Apology to Native Americans, Alaska Natives, and Native Hawaiians.” (Business Item 11-08, https://www.pc-biz.org/#/search/6350). Understanding racism as connected to colonization would aid the denomination as we assess the struggle for indigenous sovereignty from Standing Rock to Puerto Rico.

The Earth Is the Lord’s—Not Ours to Ruin: Priorities for a New Moral Era—From the Presbytery of Monmouth.

The Presbytery of Monmouth overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to:

1. Call upon the whole church to raise a prophetic voice regarding the urgency of healing the climate of the earth, our home and God’s gift for the future of all life, human and nonhuman.

2. Call upon the whole church to engage prayerfully with the following priorities as we seek to initiate a new moral era:

   a. Let our clergy accept the mantle of moral leadership. Now is the time for clergy to speak from their pulpits about the moral obligation of our generation to protect God’s creation. Let the world know that we who follow Jesus will not back away from God’s call to protect our common home. When the powers that be deny or obscure the truth, we followers of Jesus will proclaim the truth to protect our common home.

   b. Let all of us incarnate the changes for which we long. Now is the time for congregations and for every person of faith to set a moral example through our own words and actions. As individuals and as communities, let us commit to making decisions of integrity in our energy choices, even as we commit to hold all our religious, political, corporate, and global leaders accountable to do the same.

   c. Let us proclaim truth in the public square. We are now living in a John 18:37 moment, in which we must hold to the truth we understand from the Bible and from the sacred book of nature, recognizing that when truth is compromised, only power prevails.

   • Let our communities of faith be bold and courageous as we address one of the greatest moral challenges that the world has ever faced.

   • Let us do all we can to change America's understanding of the story that our generation is writing. Let us begin a new story—a story that is not dependent on increased greenhouse gas emissions or on wealth for the few and misery for the many.

This overture was inspired and based on the resolution, “The Earth Is the Lord’s—Not Ours to Wreck, Imperatives for a New Moral Era” passed by the United Church of Christ National Synod on July 3, 2017. Now is the time to encourage deeper ecumenical cooperation to lift up our collective moral voice.

Accepting that it is up to us, whether in the streets, at our State Houses, in the halls of power, with our phones, emails, technology, and social media by committing our time, financial resources, and prayers—let us pour ourselves out to bend the moral arc of justice, with joy in our hearts, beauty in our sights, and hope for the children.
God’s great gift of Creation—the context in which all life seeks fulfillment—is in crisis. Driven by material aspiration, humanity’s use of fossil fuels since the Industrial Revolution has broken Creation’s balance. The scale of Creation’s demise is dramatically expanding beyond our comprehension. Never has the earth and the climate changed so quickly. While the leaders of every country in the world recognize this reality, our current Administration ignores science, defunds the Environmental Protection Agency, and withdraws from the Paris Climate Accord. As people of faith, recognizing that the earth is the Lord’s, it falls upon our generation to embrace the priorities set forth in this resolution—priorities that constitute a new moral era. The current climate crisis is an opportunity for which the church was born.

The leaders of more than 190 countries have signed the Paris Climate Accord, acknowledging the critical role every country must play if the life-sustaining climate of the earth is to continue to sustain life as we have always known it. The accord brings all countries together to work on combating climate change and adapting to its effects, with a particular effort on helping the least of these, who are affected most severely. As Christians we are meant to be in relationship, and withdrawing from the Accord breaks our relationship with all countries in this effort. Our cities, states, businesses, and colleges and universities are stepping up to provide American leadership. As of October 1, 2017, 15 states, 455 cities, 1,747 businesses, and 325 institutions of higher learning belong to networks that support the Paris Accord. Additionally, 20 states, 110 cities, and 1,300+ businesses have set greenhouse gases reduction targets (https://www.americaspledgeonclimate.com/). For more than fifty years the Presbyterian church, along with religious leaders from other faiths and denominations, has issued statements on the goodness of Creation and our call to act as responsible stewards, all of which has been an insufficient witness. This historic moment provides Christian communities with a powerful opportunity to bear witness to the sacredness of God’s Creation and the urgent call to preserve it.

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) approved “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice.” It stated:

Therefore, God calls the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to • respond to the cry of creation, human and nonhuman;

• engage in the effort to make the 1990s the “turnaround decade,” not only for reasons of prudence or survival, but because the endangered planet is God's creation; and
• draw upon all the resources of biblical faith and the Reformed tradition for empowerment and guidance in this adventure.

This was the response to:

Creation cries out in this time of ecological crisis.

• Abuse of nature and injustice to people place the future in grave jeopardy.
• Population triples in this century.
• Biological systems suffer diminished capacity to renew themselves.
• Finite minerals are mined and pumped as if inexhaustible.
• Peasants are forced onto marginal lands, and soil erodes.
• The rich - poor gap grows wider.
• Wastes and poisons exceed nature's capacity to absorb them.
• Greenhouse gases pose threat of global warming.

Finally,

The 202nd General Assembly (1990)

• recognizes and accepts restoring creation as a central concern of the church, to be incorporated into its life and mission at every level;
• understands this to be a new focus for initiative in mission program and a concern with major implications for infusion into theological work, evangelism, education, justice, and peacemaking, worship and liturgy, public witness, global mission, and congregational service and action at the local community level;
• recognizes that restoring creation is not a short-term concern to be handled in a few years, but a continuing task to which the nation and the world must give attention and commitment, and which has profound implications for the life, work, and witness of Christian people and church agencies.

While the 1990s were designated the “turnaround decade,” creation continues to cry for many of the same reasons identified in 1990. It is time for the church to renew its focus on creation cares as a mission initiative that infuses all of our work, particularly our preaching of the Word, and our speaking truth to power.

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved “The Power to Change,” which urged the whole church to “become models of energy-efficient institutions and proponents of renewable energy” and to advocate “before local, state, and federal governments for public policies that encourage energy efficiency and renewable energy generation.” It is time to study the recommendations in this resolution again in light of our current environmental situation. In the accompanying letter, Gradye Parsons, Stated Clerk of the General Assembly at the time, wrote: “Can we hear the grave warnings in reports like this one from Christians who have carefully studied these matters? And then can we act as stewards of God’s earth, witnessing to Christ in the re-direction of our lives toward a more sustainable future? I pray that we can, and that our church’s good work can help in this great change.”

Scripture informs this work as well, from creation in pain, to understanding our vocation, to understanding that advocacy is a requirement:

Romans 8:19–22 (NRSV):

For the creation waits with eager longing for the revealing of the children of God; for the creation was subjected to futility, not of its own will but by the will of the one who subjected it, in hope that the creation itself will be set free from its bondage to decay and will obtain the freedom of the glory of the children of God. We know that the whole creation has been groaning in labor pains until now.

Psalm 8:3–8 (NRSV):

When I look at your heavens, the work of your fingers, the moon and the stars that you have established; what are human beings that you are mindful of them, mortals that you care for them?

Yet you have made them a little lower than God, and crowned them with glory and honor. You have given them dominion over the works of your hands; you have put all things under their feet, all sheep and oxen, and also the beasts of the field, the birds of the air, and the fish of the sea, whatever passes along the paths of the seas.

John 18:37–38 (NRSV):

Pilate asked him, “So you are a king?” Jesus answered, “You say that I am a king. For this I was born, and for this I came into the world, to testify to the truth. Everyone who belongs to the truth listens to my voice.” Pilate asked him, “What is truth?” After he had said this, he went out to the Jews again and told them, “I find no case against him.”

Precautionary Principle: Managing Technological Risks to Protect Humanity and Our Planet—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

In fulfillment of the 221st General Assembly (2014)’s assignment regarding sustainable development (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 1021ff, Item 15-02), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approve the affirmation and recommendations below.

I. Affirmation and Description of Precautionary Responsibilities
To manage the risks to health and safety from new and existing technologies, we need the Precautionary Principle or precautionary approach, based on the principles of sustainability, participation, sufficiency, and solidarity as developed in Christian environmental ethics. The precautionary approach gains urgency as accelerating climate change increases the uncertainty of weather trends affecting the entire biosphere and as major advances in genetics and artificial intelligence reopen questions of human nature and purpose.

The current concept of precautionary principle dates to a 1991 international conference of 35 scientists, lawyers, policymakers, and environmentalists from the United States, Canada, and Europe—the Wingspread Consensus:

... When an activity raises threats of harm to human health or the environment, precautionary measures should be taken even if some cause and effect relationships are not [yet] fully established scientifically.

In this context the proponent of an activity, rather than the public, should bear the burden of proof. The process of applying the Precautionary Principle must be open, informed and democratic and must include potentially affected parties. It must also involve an examination of the full range of alternatives, including no action [i.e. no commercial introduction of the new technology].

In other words, regulators should not designate a product or process as Generally Recognized as Safe (GRAS) until there is enough research to reach a scientific consensus that it is safe. Too often governments have done the reverse, allowing a product to be on the market unless and until there is scientific consensus that it is unsafe—usually after tragedies make the headlines and result in product liability lawsuits. As Christians in the Reformed tradition, we believe governments are instituted to protect the common good and that regulation is an essential protective tool.

The precautionary principle does not entail halting technological progress, but affirms the priority of the integrity of creation and the protection of the human and other lives within it. It shifts the burden of proof toward those whose actions could harm people or destabilize or irreversibly disrupt natural patterns and processes. It does not tell us when reasonable people would agree that the burden of proof has been met, although as a principle, it warns against depending upon the climate of opinion in a given society.

Precautionary approaches, sound science, and risk-benefit analysis are all related aspects of a rational approach to determining public policy on issues like toxic chemicals, nanotechnology, geo-engineering, genetically engineered crops and genetically modified organisms in food. Indeed, application of the precautionary principle should include using sound science and forms of risk-benefit analysis, insofar as appropriate data are available, as part of determining whether to restrain or prohibit a given product or activity. Reason and science can never be enemies of the God whom we worship in Spirit and in truth. Respect for the truth embodied in creation urges us to support and restore the regenerative processes of nature whenever possible, and to support the scientific vocation as it explores the infinite scope of God’s cosmic work. There are also a myriad of technological vocations to serve the common good in the application of scientific discovery.

Market forces can help motivate technological progress from which we may all benefit, but they cannot reliably determine long-term rewards and risks of potential harm, given the uneven distribution of burdens and benefits and the partial availability and uneven distribution of knowledge. In retrospect, the climate change crisis reflects the widespread failure of market systems to assess and reduce the impacts of fossil fuel use. Programs such as Superfund pay for cleaning up some of the most egregiously polluted areas, and require their own studies of how toxins interact in groundwater, earth, and atmosphere over time. Geo-engineering proposals to remediate or protect the atmosphere or oceans from overall climate change effects, through such things as increasing cloud cover or adding iron filings to ocean water, pose enormous and potentially irreversible risks of their own.

If one person or one company bears all the costs and risks, as well as the benefits, from some activity or product, then there is little case for public policy intervention. That person can evaluate and make her own decision. Problems arise when the beneficiaries do not bear the costs or risks. Economists call these effects on others or nature, “externalities,” and the market may not factor these costs and risks into the price of a given product. To protect society, government regulation or taxation is usually needed to get those benefitting from the activity to take sufficient account of the costs and risks to others. For example: with GMO (genetically modified organism) grain, the company selling it has clear financial benefits, as may the farmer growing it. If, however, the GMO pollen blows to neighboring farms and contaminates their crops, it harms the neighbors, and then some regulation is appropriate.

GMO products or those containing potentially dangerous chemicals and nano-particles, like some food, cosmetics, and household chemicals, may pose risks to consumer health and to the environment. Research has yielded partial but not complete understanding of those risks, so people and communities need to decide how to balance the known benefits against the uncertain risks. Requiring full disclosure of product contents, including whether some chemical is in nano form, empowers democratic participation in decision-making but does not fully address the problem.

Information is costly and unevenly distributed, and the maldistribution of information often correlates with the uneven distribution of benefits and risks, especially for new products. Thus, if “risk-benefit” analysis alone is used to determine the regulatory response to a new product or process, the analysis is intrinsically biased to underestimate the risks posed by the product and allow those immediately or directly benefitting to proceed with marketing the product. Further, the nature of public exposure or consumption of products and the complexity of processes of preparation or manufacture require different kinds of testing by different regulatory agencies.

Hence, implementing the precautionary principle means that the government regulator has to insist on adequate investigation (by government or private sector) and attention to the full costs and risks to society and the biosphere that the product may pose. Uncertainty about potential harm to people or the environment should not stop all progress, for that would deny too many of the benefits of new technology, but neither should that uncertainty allow possible risks and unequal benefits to be downplayed or ignored. This concept of precautionary responsibility also means that, when a decision is made to proceed, monitoring of both risks and benefits should continue in a meaningful and publicly accountable way.

Although much legal regulation in the U.S. is based on forms of the precautionary principle, in practice manufacturers seeking monetary benefit can often overwhelm and weaken the precautionary regulatory processes that might preemptively prevent harm. The history of industrial and technological development is marked by the corresponding growth of health and safety regulation. Christians have been active with U.S. civil society in raising public safety standards, notably following the Social Creed of the Churches in 1908, and as part of the environmental movement that spread across all nations experiencing pollution and other consequences of industrialization. Presbyterians have played a particularly significant role in conservation and wilderness preservation that is relevant to today’s new challenges.1

As documented in this policy statement’s survey of a wide range of studies, regulation in the U.S. has become too weak regarding threats to the environment and the glorious diversity of God’s world. Scientific research itself has been politicized and distorted by inappropriate ideological, commercial, and narrow religious interests. Precautionary concern has precedent in General Assembly environmental reports dating to 1971; such concern now merits more explicit and focused attention.

The Psalmist intuited the interconnectedness of life in relation to God: “How wonderful are Thy works!” is sung in many ways. A resolution at the 222nd General Assembly (2016) applauded Pope Francis’s encyclical, Laudate Sí, a significant and powerful appeal to be aware of the incalculable impact of the loss of biodiversity. Our concern is not only the loss of resources but the diminution of life’s meaning. “Because of us, thousands of species will no longer give glory to God by their very existence, nor convey their message to us.”2

II. Recommendations for the Protection of Human Beings and the Earth

The General Assembly policies provide recommendations for public policy, personal discipleship, and congregational and other communal action, noting that any directives are binding on agencies of the church and are advisory to its members and other church councils. Insofar as most environmental risks are borne by large numbers of people, public policy is particularly important in this area.

A. Public Policies

The following policy directions are to be advocated by the Office of Public Witness (in Washington, D.C.), the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, and other programs and agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), with support encouraged from members, congregations, councils, and ecumenical bodies:

1. Federal and state budgets should provide adequate funding for research by the Environmental Protection Agency, the Food and Drug Administration, the Department of Agriculture, the Consumer Product Safety Commission, the National Science Foundation, the Centers for Disease Control, and other regulatory and scientific monitoring bodies on the possibility of harmful effects on consumers, workers, and the environment from new technologies, such as nanoparticles, geo-engineering, toxic chemicals (in food additives and packaging, pesticides, herbicides, cleaners, etc.), and GE (genetically engineered) crops and GMOs in foods.

2. The mission of regulatory agencies should be respected by:
   a. Requiring corporations to track the effects of their products in cases where uncertain but potentially significant risks are identified.
   b. Maintaining open access to licensing and decision-making processes (consistent with patent protections) so that there is informed and democratic involvement of all potentially affected parties.
   c. Strengthening conflict of interest laws to ensure fairness in determining risks and benefits. In principle, no beneficiary should directly determine or make a decision leading to that individual, family, or commercial organization’s benefit. In practice, no recent employee or significant investor in an industry or industry trade... association should be allowed to serve on the staff or board of the regulatory agency or bodies overseeing that industry or business.3

d. Ensuring the capacity of regulatory bodies to enforce regulations, to prosecute businesses and individuals responsible for endangering or damaging public health, and to ban or suspend the sale and use of products or processes without political interference if there is significant scientific basis for questioning their safety. The cases of neotininid pesticides and endocrine-disruptor chemicals and pharmaceuticals, for example, may merit such suspension.

3. Increased legislative and regulatory attention should be given to:

a. Review the GRAS (Generally Recognized as Safe) classification of products now being manufactured and marketed in nano forms, using the latest research, including the behavior of such particles in the waste stream.

b. Develop specific oversight mechanisms to account for the unique characteristics of nano materials.

c. Require labeling of all chemicals in foods, pesticides, herbicides, cleaners, medical products, packaging, etc., including a notation if the material is in nano form—nano-titanium dioxide, nano-silver, etc.4

d. Expand research and monitoring of the effects of climate change on toxins already released into the environment, and of their interaction with newer toxic products, such as some used in hydraulic fracturing (fracking) and fire suppression.

e. Continue research on the issue of the substantial equivalence of GMO and non-GMO crops and foods.

f. Reduce the hazards from cosmetics and hair care products by passage and enforcement of the Personal Care Products Safety Act with a stronger mandate to test chemical currently in use and without preempting or preventing stronger standards by state legislation.

g. Raise the threshold of acceptable risks for products whose “benefits” to users are not substantial, as with food additives that only affect food coloring.

h. Require at least U.S. labeling standards for export products and marketing, except when other countries’ standards exceed ours.

i. Require all publicity/infomercials/investor reports concerning products to note whether reported or advertised results include all evidence gathered.

4. Revive a National Commission on Bioethics, representing a range of perspectives and disciplines, with a mandate to evaluate all human genetic technologies involving manipulation of the genome, by CRISPR and other technologies, because these raise scientific, economic, ethical, and religious concerns.

5. Support international scientific and regulatory cooperation through such means as the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which includes voluntary Paris Accords, and other global sustainability efforts (treated in prior energy and environmental policy of the church).

6. Increase civil and criminal penalties for accelerating climate change and develop laws regarding “crimes against the biosphere” or “crimes against future generations.” Require Environmental Impact Statements to take into account 100-year climate phenomena, which are becoming more frequent, and build in remediation in an explicit way.

B. Investment Responsibility

Instruct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) and the Office of Faith-Based Investing and Corporate Engagement, to do the following:

1. Determine which companies held by the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions are producing or selling GMO foods or GE seeds, toxic chemicals, or nano particles.

2. Pursue appropriate forms of corporate engagements to encourage these companies to take more fully into account the risks that these products pose to workers, consumers, and the environment, and to comply with the research, development, labeling, and marketing standards recommended above. (MRTI pursues similar goals in its dialogues with energy sector companies.)

3. Inform presbyteries and congregations about the findings of MRTI’s research and engagement, and encourage Presbyterian bodies and members, as consumers and shareholders, to advocate for responsible implementation of the precautionary principle.
Educate Presbyterians on the impact the churches have had in the growth of corporate responsibility practices, and on how our investments are instruments of mission through corporate dialogue on concerns about products made, sold, and used by the companies in which PC(USA) holds shares, wherever the location of production or sales.

4. By holding up the good performers as examples and pressing the others to improve—using shareholder resolutions and other measures (including possible divestment from unrepentant bad performers)—the church and its members use their assets and talents to make a difference.

C. Consumer Responsibility

Instruct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Hunger Program’s office for Sustainable Living and Earth Care Concerns, and urge Earth Care congregations (http://presbyearthcare.org) and others, to encourage renewable energy use and such specific lifestyle practices as:

1. Choice, when possible of organic products, given still unknown cumulative and interactive effects of chemicals in pesticides, fertilizers, and growth hormones on wildlife and humans.

2. Phase out the use of plastic bottles, packaging (including phthalates added for durability), and other plastic goods not easily recyclable, thus reducing waste and preserving petroleum resources for higher value uses.

3. Limit and reduce exposure to CRT (cathode ray tube) and other screens, as these may affect the emotions and sleep capacity of users; moderation is recommended, but social impacts are generally beyond the scope of this report.5

D. Theology and Science Scholarship

1. Commend those Presbyterians and other Christians working on the intersections of scientific exploration and understandings of the Reformed and other religious traditions.

2. Create forums in seminaries and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)-related colleges and universities to promote understanding of the nature of risks and rewards in the adoption of new technologies.6

E. Future Engagement

This report was necessarily limited in its treatment of certain emerging technologies that carry high potential environmental and public health risks, and of certain advances in robotics and artificial intelligence that have major social and other change dimensions. It was beyond our scope to address primarily biological problems, such as the spread of invasive species, or specifics of remediation, such as decontamination of radioactive groundwater. Thus, Christians and other persons of good will are encouraged to do the following:

1. Address large-scale risk factors proactively, drawing on both social and natural sciences and the humanities, and joining with advocacy groups and organizations as necessary.

2. Share their experiences in making public moral arguments with the larger church.

3. Recognize shared struggles with Native or First Peoples over specific sites or public preserves, and with others opposing the “environmental racism” that disproportionately exposes people of color (and other generally less wealthy citizens) to biohazards.

4. Join in ecumenical solidarity and witness through such partner bodies as Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Creation Justice Ministries.

Rationale

Presbyterians understand how religion, science, and technology come together and share a moral commitment and a sense of reverence for God’s presence in our world. Since the 1960’s, PC(USA) has played a strong role in ecumenical councils developing criteria for just, sustainable, and participatory decision-making by governments and corporations, particularly in the energy and environmental field. This was the background for the overture from the Presbytery of Southern New England that called on:
... the 221st General Assembly (2014) to affirm the vital importance of sustainable development through faithful stewardship of natural resources and the Precautionary Principle. Such methods of preventing irreversible ecological impacts are part of the basis for responsible, moral, and scientifically-informed human flourishing, affirming the sacred in societal and creation care, and protecting the earth for future generations. Additionally, the General Assembly direct[ed] the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to commission a study group of three to five persons to

1. review the precautionary or prevention principle in relation to emerging biotechnical developments and existing Presbyterian social witness policy on environmental ethics, and

2. prepare a study paper and resources for social media, with appropriate recommendations to the 222nd General Assembly (2016), for use by congregations throughout the denomination, enabling congregations to advocate for reform. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 1021)

This report is submitted in fulfillment of that assignment that, even while focusing on the three technologies cited (see below), was extremely broad and would ideally require on ongoing advisory committee devoted to the task. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) extended our mandate. A list of scientists, ethicists, legal scholars, and business experts consulted is in addendum B; their generosity and depth of expertise is not fully represented in this text, which has tried to make complicated material as accessible as possible.

In clearest of terms, to be part of a community is to share in its risks and rewards. The expectation is that any family or enterprise shares society’s benefits and does not bear a disproportionate burden of its risks and costs. This report is about how the agent of our community—our government—should seek to prevent undue risk from being inflicted on persons and creatures without their knowledge or consent, and to identify and limit risks of new technologies, even while allowing us to benefit from new technologies that are safe.

The social technology of democratic and accountable governance includes ways to evaluate risks for whole societies, based on ideas of the common good that originate in our faith. This study aims to help us think together about our role—as individual Presbyterians as well as our church as a part of the world church—in a time when the earth enters a more dangerous stage of climate change. The precautionary principle is no magic bullet to take account of the risk while enjoying reasonable amount of benefit from technology, but it is one approach that may help us, and one that reflects our reverence and stewardship of the blue-green planet entrusted to our care.

Definitions

The Precautionary Principle is, at its simplest, a modern restatement of the classical Hippocratic Oath, “I will keep them from harm and injustice,” which is often summarized as “First, do no harm.” The Precautionary Principle is more than a dictum for individual actions; it should also guide the behavior of institutions and nations. And, going beyond the Hippocratic Oath and its modern equivalents, it would avoid harm to the environment as well as to humans.

Although various definitions of the precautionary principle float about today in the public discourse and literature, this report sees it as the need to be extra cautious in allowing the introduction of new products and processes, and their continued sale, if their safety is not well-established by scientific research and, as far as possible, practical experience. This does not preclude the use of all technological advances, but when the possibly negative effects of a product are not well understood, then it is better to delay implementation and marketing, and to insist on ongoing tracking of uncertain risks, even after products are introduced. This is especially true when the people and other creatures at risk from negative effects are not the same as those deciding to buy and use the product.7

Theology

The glorious diversity of God’s world. The Psalmist intuited the interconnectedness of life in relation to God: “How wonderful are Thy works!” is sung in many ways. A resolution at the 222nd General Assembly (2016) applauded Pope Francis’s encyclical, Laudate Si, a significant and powerful appeal to be aware of the incalculable impact of the loss of biodiversity: it is not only the loss of resources but the diminution of life’s meaning. “Because of us, thousands of species will no longer give glory to God by their very existence, nor convey their message to us.”8 A human tendency to an ‘instrumentalist’ view of nature as purely serving our needs must give way to a theocentric view of all creation as have value and integrity before God.

Christianity has been accused of being the root cause of the earth’s ecological crisis. Lynn White famously declared, in 1967, that the fault lay in “an implicit faith in perpetual progress … indefensible apart from Judeo-Christian teleology”—our sense of God’s guiding human history in ways “that made it possible to exploit nature in a mood of indifference to the feelings of natural objects.”9 For White, as we look at humanity’s negative impact on our environment, “Christianity bears a huge burden of guilt.”10 It is true that some Christians have made indefensible use of Genesis 1:28 (RSV): “… fill the earth and subdue it; and have dominion over … every living thing that moves upon the earth.” James Watt, U.S. Secretary of the Interior under Ronald Reagan, wrote that he viewed the earth as “merely a temporary way station on the road to eternal life. ... The earth was put here by the Lord for His people to subdue and to use for profitable purposes on their way to the hereafter.”11 From such attitudes have arisen sins of colonialism and exploitation—of countries, resources, and human beings. Sin leads people to ignore the impacts of our behavior (and corresponding risks) on other people and on nature.
Yet, Christianity offers many resources for a much more ecologically positive theology. We know, for instance, that while we should seek for the common good of all humanity, we should also be respectful of all God’s creation, for God declared it good (Gen 1). We remember that, “The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps 24:1). The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 1990 approved the report “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice,” which remains a foundational policy for the denomination’s work in environmental ministry. The underlying theological principles were further developed in the report “The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming” approved in 2008.

The eco-justice norms developed there may be summarized as follows:

- SUSTAINABILITY: “God’s call to earth-keeping.” “Sustainability is the capacity of the natural order and the socioeconomic order to thrive together.”
- PARTICIPATION: “Because the Creator’s intention is that nature’s gifts of sustenance be available to all members of the human family, all have a right and a responsibility to participate.”
- SUFFICIENCY: “A reasonably secure and fulfilling life for all.”
- SOLIDARITY: “Fundamental interdependence and unity with the Creator’s creatures,” human and non-human.

We see here a valuing of the biosphere for its own sake—God’s call to earth-keeping—but balanced by an acknowledgement that Christ “came that they [humans] may have life, and have it abundantly” (Jn. 10:10). A foundation of our Christian faith is that God created all that is, and the “The Earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and all those who live in it” (Ps. 24:1). We may conclude, as did the PC(USA) in 1996, that “no part of creation—whether other humans, other species, even the elements of soil and water is our property to use as we wish. They are to be treated with the values and ground rules of God, the ultimate owner. These values and ground rules are rooted in the fact that … God is love.”

In short, we are stewards of creation. The doctrine of stewardship is central to our Reformed tradition. While we often understand stewardship as a matter of dollars and cents, the doctrine is broader than that. It is an affirmation that creation belongs to God and that humankind is both gifted with and commanded to the responsibility of caring for and nurturing creation. In his Commentary on Genesis, John Calvin wrote:

> The custody of the garden was given in charge to Adam, to show that we possess the things which God has committed to our hands, on the condition that, being content with a frugal and moderate use of them, we should take care of what shall remain. Let [the one who possesses a field so partake of its yearly fruits [so as to] not suffer the ground to be injured by negligence; but [rather] endeavor to hand it down to posterity as [it was received], or even better cultivated. Let [the possessor] so feed on its fruits [as to] neither dissipate it by luxury, nor permit it to be marred or ruined by neglect … Let everyone regard [themselves] as the steward of God in all things which each one possesses.

Modern science has made us more aware than Calvin was of how much we are not just stewards, but integral parts, of nature. We now live in an “Anthropocene” era, where our species dominates nature to the point of resetting, or de-setting, the climate. Nevertheless, the key message remains. As faithful stewards, we must be mindful of how we use our gifts, integrating our technological skill with our imperative for earth care. As steward members of a single “earth community,” we share one future.

Seeking a balance between the well-being of humanity and the rest of nature is not easy, given just how much of the biosphere we have taken over for human use. A much-shared proverb tells us that “We do not inherit the Earth from our Ancestors, we borrow it from our Children.” We need to remember that we borrow it—or indeed take it—from the rest of the biosphere, as well.

Each of us, whether Christian or not, has a responsibility for the common good of humanity and of all God’s creation, and there are many ways in which we can live out that responsibility. But individual responsibility is not enough. One significant corruption of sin is that it causes our care and attention to curve inwardly on the self, a phenomenon that St. Augustine called incurvatus in se. When this happens, even if we imagine that we are acting responsibly, we lose sight of the others whom our actions impact. When it comes to the risks and harms associated with new chemicals and industrial processes, it is not enough to counsel people to act with precaution. The powerful chronically, almost inevitably, ignore the weak and poor. This is why we have delegated to each of our governments the task of keeping its citizens safe and helping them to live together in community. We have, then, the responsibility to ensure that our governments are carrying out this duty with justice for all humanity and for all creation.

In Reformed theology, the second use of the law is to restrain evil. According to Calvin, this purpose is “by means of its fearful denunciations and the consequent dread of punishment, to curb those who, unless forced, have no regard for rectitude and justice.” One of the ways in which government carries out its duty to protect is through law and regulation. The Precautionary Principle can help guide our governments in carrying out that duty.

Precautionary Principle and/or Risk-Benefit Analysis
The precautionary principle is a way of thinking about risks and, especially, what to do about them. We know we should be cautious. But how cautious?

Risk-benefit analysis, done properly, can provide useful input to our thinking. Obviously for a product to be approved for sale by the government as well as the producer, the benefits should exceed the risks. The hard part, however, is that the full risks are typically less well known than the benefits, and they potentially occur to a wider range of people (not just the producer and customer) and over a longer time horizon, perhaps beyond the useful life of the product.

Therefore, we cannot leave the decisions about product safety completely up to risk-benefit analysis done by the producers. A company develops a new product to meet certain purposes—offering specific and relatively well-known benefits to consumers—and they do market research to figure how much profit they will make from selling the product. So, the benefits are relatively well known to the producer, and the promise of profits brings funding to publicize those benefits.

Without regulatory requirements, however, a company developing a new product would tend to give inadequate attention to estimating the risk of potential harm to consumers, workers, and especially third parties. Compared to the company and its marketers, these folks do not know in advance what is coming, are much more dispersed, and usually lack the expertise and funding to find out about the possible risks to them, especially if these would take years to emerge.

Economists since at least Adam Smith have recognized this problem—negative externalities—and have seen in these cases the need for government regulation or offsetting taxes.

For some potential costs, regulators could estimate the monetary value—potential property damage, health care bills, workdays lost, etc. In the absence of regulations, the producing company would tend to underinvest in finding out about and monetizing such risks. Also, they have a conflict of interest with regard to discovering and publicizing those risks.

A bigger issue concerns the non-monetary risks. These include, but are not limited to, potential damage to the ecosystem, possible mortality and morbidity that the medical system could not remedy, damage to the health of future generations, and possible disruption to the way of life for farms and businesses adjacent to companies using the technologies in question. Even if the monetized value of these costs is not zero, the benefits of a product, if great enough, can justify its usage, with proper restrictions and disclosure of those risks. Some social costs could be justified if the new technology would certainly increase the availability of nutritious food and decrease its financial cost, especially for low-income families. Market math cannot resolve these issues. They require political decisions informed by moral guidance, to which the church should contribute.

Except when there are environmental and other third-party concerns, consumers can decide for themselves If they are given accurate information. Although some products have clearance as Generally Recognized as Safe (GRAS), we are still finding new information, and people can decide for themselves how much precaution to take with their own health. But they need to know what they are dealing with. People are paying increased attention to the food labels that current regulations require.223rd General Assembly (2018)

Disclosure of harmful potential does not automatically doom a product commercially, as we see from medication ads that [as required] go on at great length to disclose the potential harmful side effects for consumers to balance against the advertised and intended benefits.

Those most vulnerable to the downside risks are typically those least able to acquire information about the risks, least able economically to accommodate the risks, and least able politically to fight for protection or ex-post compensation. Jesus and the prophets tell us to care for these most vulnerable (Matthew 25 and elsewhere), so as Christians we must give their concerns particular attention in considering the precautionary principle.

Example Applications: Introduction

Each topic has its own particular issues, so rather than setting out general rules with many exceptions, we look at three areas of technology to illustrate how we can usefully apply the precautionary principle: toxic chemicals in food and commercial products, GE crops and GMO in food, and nano particles.

An area we do not consider is medicines, but the precautionary principle, perhaps by other names, has long been a central feature in FDA regulation of pharmaceutical products. Although the primary risk is to individual taking the medicine, burdens from bad choices lead also to socially costly long-term effects (e.g. thalidomide babies, defective silicone implants, opioid addiction).

Of course, the precautionary principle could also apply to climate change, but ACSWP and the church have already studied this (for instance, The Power to Change, 2008) and we continue advocating for appropriate reforms through MRTI and other avenues. The precautionary principle was applied to this issue a generation ago. Today, however, the scientific consensus has progressed beyond the precautionary phase, to where we should apply the common-sense principle—we are in a hole with the excess production of greenhouse gases and we need to stop digging. The questions now are what to do? And how fast? Burning less hydrocarbon to heat our buildings, generate electricity, and power transportation are obvious parts of the solution. The precautionary principle is relevant to evaluating some of the radical proposals for technological fixes, like spreading iron filings in major parts of the ocean to encourage algae growth, putting giant sunshades in earth orbit, or creating more cloud cover. Each of these poses substantial risks to life on earth, but this report cannot give geoengineering adequate treatment.

GRAS, FDA, and the Dangers of Limited Regulation

In these discussions, the expression “generally recognized as safe”—GRAS—plays a key role. When manufacturers are allowed officially or in practice to say whether their product is GRAS, without requiring explicit action by a regulatory agency, it creates an obvious bias to allow products that are not acceptably safe. Even when government regulators decide what is GRAS, whether they do it right depends on whether the producers and marketers have excessive influence in the decision, whether the agency has adequate funding to conduct research and assess risks, and whether the discussions are sufficiently open to allow public debate.21

The FDA’s implementing regulations in 1996 for the Food Additives Amendment say: “General recognition of safety based upon scientific procedures shall require the same quantity and quality of scientific evidence as is required to obtain approval of a food additive regulation for the ingredient. General recognition of safety through scientific procedures shall ordinarily be based upon published studies which may be corroborated by unpublished studies and other data and information.”22

In the last half century, many concerns have risen about food additives that might cause cancer or adverse reproductive effects, and thus such additives face a higher bar for approval.22

The primary distinction between the requirements necessary for GRAS status and those necessary for food additive status is the element of “common scientific knowledge” that must characterize conclusions about GRAS status.23 The manufacturer must be prepared to “show that there is a consensus of expert opinion regarding the safety of the use of the substance.”24 Although unanimity is not required, “the existence of a severe conflict among experts regarding the safety of the use of a substance precludes a finding of general recognition.”25 A 1997 proposed clarification to the GRAS regulations, which remains the most current statement of agency policy, observed that “[t]he usual mechanism to establish that scientific information is generally available is to show that the information is published in a peer-reviewed scientific journal.”26 The agency proposed new regulations defining GRAS in 1997, but then failed to finalize the regulations until it was sued by the Center for Food Safety in 2014 and finally agreed to settle the lawsuit by issuing the regulations in 2016.27

Ultimately, the agency left it up to the manufacturer to determine whether an added substance is GRAS or a “food additive” that must be approved. The manufacturer does not even need to tell the agency that it has added a substance to food and has concluded that it is GRAS.28 If the manufacturer declines to consult with FDA and if the agency finds out about the modification, the agency may exercise its powers to seize foods containing the additive as adulterated.29 Although FDA takes the position that a manufacturer claiming GRAS status for a substance has the burden of proving that it meets the GRAS criteria in an enforcement action,30 the agency as a practical matter has the burden of demonstrating to a court in an enforcement action that the substance is not GRAS.31

Independent watchdogs have criticized the GRAS system for being rife with industry conflicts of interest because the vast majority of GRAS determinations are made by either the manufacturers themselves or their hired consultants. Moreover, the current system that allows secret GRAS determinations makes it nearly impossible for FDA or manufacturers to assess the cumulative effect of all similar chemicals on consumers—as the law requires. It is unclear whether FDA will consider new kinds of GMO foods as GRAS, like they have done in the past. Moreover, a draft guidance by FDA, issued for comment in 2017, raised the question of whether new kinds of genetic engineering never used before, especially those used in genetically engineered animals, could be considered GRAS.32 In short, the GRAS system often does not protect the consumer from potential harm and does not even make public the information she would need to protect herself.

Toxic Chemicals

Many chemicals with positive uses in the household, agriculture, and industry have toxic effects when people and the environment are exposed to them. Some exposure is “accidental,” as with waste spills or pesticides and herbicides migrating to neighboring farms, although it is often no accident when the routine and allowable procedures fail to prevent serious problems.33 Other exposure is deliberate, as when chemicals are added to foods, packaging, or clothes to make them keep longer, retard flames, look better, or be cheaper to produce.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulates chemicals in food, cosmetics, and pharmaceutical products. Any substance that is reasonably expected to become a component of food is a food additive that is subject to premarket approval by FDA, unless the substance is generally recognized as safe (GRAS) among experts qualified by scientific training and experience to evaluate its safety under the conditions of its intended use, or meets one of the other exclusions from the food additive definition in section 201(s) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FFDCA).34

The Food Additives Amendment of 1958 is the foundation for the U.S. food additive regulatory program, which oversees most substances added to food. Federal agencies made approximately 40 percent of the 6,000 safety decisions allowing about two-thirds of the substances currently used in food. Manufacturers and a trade association made the remaining decisions without...
FDA review by concluding that the substances were generally recognized as safe (GRAS). Robust premarket safety decisions are critical since FDA has limited resources to monitor potentially significant scientific developments and changing uses of a substance after it enters commerce, and FDA only has access to published data or data submitted to it. Since the late 1990s, FDA no longer promulgates rules for its decisions for food contact and GRAS substances. Rather it reviews manufacturers’ safety decisions and posts the results of the review on the agency’s website. This shift appears to have encouraged manufacturers to submit their decisions to FDA for review but has limited the public opportunity to provide input.35

In summary, for food additives the regulatory policy does not follow the precautionary principle in that there is considerable uncertainty about the safety of what chemicals are allowed. (A subsequent section discusses the issue of the nano versions of chemicals.) Strong requirements for detailed labeling of contents, however, do allow consumers to inform themselves and choose their degree of precaution. With food there is relatively little risk of injury to third parties. Manufacturers’ concerns about lawsuits and scandals also motivate them to be precautionary.

In theory the FDA can regulate chemicals in cosmetics36, but it only steps in if it has “reliable information” suggesting that a cosmetic creates a problem. That has usually meant that nothing is done before a public outcry, and beauty enhancement products today still contain lead, mercury, formaldehyde, and lesser-known “chemicals of concern.” Years can pass while the FDA investigates and deliberates. In practice, the safety of cosmetics and personal care products is left in the hands of the companies that make them. The law requires no specific tests before a company brings a new product with a new chemical composition to market, and it does not require companies to release whatever safety data they may collect.37

A bipartisan bill in the U.S. Senate, the Personal Care Products Safety Act, would require, among other things, that cosmetics makers pay annual fees to help finance new safety studies and enforcement. It would also give the FDA the authority to pull products off the shelves immediately when customers have reported bad reactions, without waiting for a review, which often takes many years. While this bill would take some steps in the right direction, it may reduce the chance for more proactive measures. It would require FDA to test each year for only five chemicals, while over a thousand chemicals are in production and need testing. It would prevent states from passing more restrictive standards, which California now has. Any endorsement of the bill should come with caveats recommending measures to strengthen it.

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is charged with regulating most non-food, non-pharmaceutical toxic substances. The old Toxic Substances Control Act, passed in 1976, allowed thousands of untested chemicals to remain in non-food consumer goods without evidence of safety. The law was so weak that it kept the EPA from banning even asbestos, a known carcinogen, and other known hazardous materials. The law also forced the EPA to navigate a costly, cumbersome process if it wanted safety tests of a potentially dangerous chemical. In June 2016, Congress passed the Frank R. Lautenberg Chemical Safety for the 21st Century Act, which updated the 1976 Toxic Substances Control Act.

The new law, which received bipartisan support in both the U.S. House of Representatives and the Senate, includes many needed improvements, even if not all of those desired by critics of the old law:

• For the first time, requiring EPA to evaluate the safety of existing chemicals in commerce, starting with those most likely to cause risks. By November 2017 EPA had completed 1,148 new chemical reviews under the new law.

• Requiring EPA to evaluate new and existing chemicals against a new risk-based safety standard that includes explicit considerations for vulnerable populations.

• Empowering EPA to require the development of chemical information necessary to support these evaluations.

• Establishing clear and enforceable deadlines that ensure both timely review of prioritized chemicals and timely action on identified risks.

• Increasing the public transparency of chemical information by limiting unwarranted claims of confidentiality and allowing for the appropriate sharing of confidential information with states and health and environmental professionals.

• Providing a source of funding for EPA to carry out these significant new responsibilities.

We cannot yet judge the effectiveness of the new law, which will depend critically on how the EPA and other agencies implement the law. Many of its implementing regulations came into effect only in 2017. Many, if not most, EPA employees share a strong commitment to protecting the environment and human health. On the other hand, the current head of EPA and some senior officials there have in the past strongly opposed environmental and product regulation.38 To help get the intended benefits of the law, the PC(USA) should use its influence in Washington and elsewhere to encourage the full implementation of the law, along with adequate funding and recognition of scientific evidence.

While this report does not focus on climate change, as noted above, scientific research is revealing an increasing number of ways in which climate change increases the stress that toxic chemicals put on species and ecosystems, such as pollinators (bees, bats, butterflies, etc.) and the flowering plants they pollinate. The scientific consensus on the primary cause of the greater morbidity of honeybees and the collapse of many hives is a pesticide family called neonicotinoids, some of which are now
Genetically Engineered (GE) Crops and GMOs in Food

Genetically engineered (GE) crops have rapidly become dominant in U.S. agriculture. The Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) reports that in 2017, 92 percent of all corn planted in the U.S. was genetically engineered (GE), up from 25 percent in 2000. The equivalent figures for soybean were 94 percent (up from 54 percent), and for cotton 96 percent (up from 61 percent). The benefits promised from adoption of GE crops include increased yields and reduced need for chemicals, as well as increased tolerance of drought or torrential-rain conditions, which may become more prevalent due to climate change.

On the other hand, the use of GE crops in the food chain (both directly for human foodstuffs and for animal feed) has caused concerns about possible negative dietary and environmental effects, as well as deleterious effects on the livelihoods and health of farmers and farm workers in both the U.S. and other countries (especially developing countries) to which U.S. GE crops are exported. Before we consider how the Precautionary Principle (PP) might usefully be applied, we should consider the technologies involved, the expected benefits and risks, and the current U.S. regulatory environment.

Although we do not analyze the issue here, we note that genetically engineered and modified animal species also present risks, perhaps even greater than GMO crops, and call for application of the precautionary principle. These aspects of what is sometimes called “industrial agriculture” have been addressed by prior assemblies.

Definitions. We use the term GMO (genetically modified organism) to refer to foodstuffs containing GE crops or animals. The USDA defines a genetically modified organism (GMO) as “an organism produced through genetic modification,” a definition that could cover all biotechnology, including traditional breeding techniques. Commonly and officially in some countries, however, GMO refers to GE organisms (plants, animals, microbes …) that have had genes “modified by introducing, eliminating, or rearranging specific genes using the methods of modern molecular biology, particularly those techniques referred to as recombinant DNA techniques.”

Traditional breeding techniques involved selecting seeds from plants with desired traits. Traits are expressions of genes. So, this artificial selection did, in fact, end up selecting genes, but it selected both those associated with desired traits, and those “along for the ride.” We might be shocked by some of the methods used in the 20th century—with exposure to X-rays or toxic chemicals—to encourage a range of gene-mutations from which to select. Given this background, many crop scientists question why genetic engineering should cause any more concern. The key difference, however, is that conventional breeding works with genes available within living specimens of the plant species being manipulated. Genetic engineering can, and often does, introduce genes from radically different species, using bacteria and viruses to introduce them into the target. The most common goals have been to make plants tolerant of herbicides or resistant to insects or other plant pests, and also to increase yield, either directly or as a side-benefit of such resistance. With herbicides—Round-Up is the most popular—farmers who do not buy the expensive patented seeds (and the herbicide) then face a double penalty of lost market share and potential crop damage if their neighbor does use Round-Up.

Even as regulation and public opinion struggle to deal appropriately with the current technology of genetic engineering, the technology itself is developing rapidly, with the advent of CRISPR—Clustered Regularly Interspaced Short Palindromic Repeats. CRISPR directly edits the DNA of the target organism, and generally does not introduce DNA from another organism. Practitioners have great optimism over the potential benefits of CRISPR-edited crops. Several CRISPR gene-edited crops are expected to enter the market over the next few years. The new species created by CRISPR pose some of the same risks as conventional GMOs, but so far have gotten even less regulatory scrutiny.

To evaluate the potential benefits and risks of GE-crops, we can use the PC(USA)’s eco-justice norms of Sustainability, Participation, Sufficiency, and Solidarity, listed above. GE crops are clearly intended to contribute to both sufficiency (via crop yields) and sustainability (via reduction in chemicals). Both goals are vital in our age of rapidly growing population and environmental degradation. Do GE crops yield the promised benefits, and do so safely?

The most immediate concern for many consumers is whether GMO foods cause allergies, as in the 1996 introduction of a brazil-nut gene into soy beans, whose market introduction was canceled when there were allergic reactions. The existence of dietary impacts other than allergies is less substantiated and remains controversial.

This paper does not resolve that issue, but notes that such concerns reinforce requirements, deriving from the precautionary principle, for appropriate product labeling to enable consumers to be informed, and for ongoing monitoring of the dietary effects of GMO foods.
The next question, then, is whether GE crops have yielded the promised improvement in crop yields and reduction in chemical use. Once again, the findings are contested. A 2014 PLOS One review of published studies concluded that “GM technology adoption has reduced chemical pesticide use by 37%, increased crop yields by 22%, and increased farmer profits by 68%.”45 By contrast, a 2017 study by The New York Times used United Nations data to compare crop yields—food per acre—and pesticide use in the U.S. and Canada versus Western Europe, which “largely rejected genetic modification at the same time the United States and Canada were embracing it.” According to this study, yield trends have either been parallel or in Europe’s favor. Meanwhile, herbicide use in the U.S. has increased by 21 percent over the last two decades, while by contrast it has fallen 36 percent in France.46 This result suggests that other approaches than GE can yield an equivalent benefit.

In developing countries, we also need to look more for alternatives to GMOs, even though their gains in crop yields and profits are higher in than in developed countries. When the Gates Foundation recently announced a major initiative to develop technologies to help farmers in Africa and Asia adapt to environment change, Divine Ntiokam, founder of the Cameroon-based Climate Smart Agriculture Youth Network, responded that “Many young people (in Africa) say they can't do farming because they don't have access to funding [to buy even basic seeds and complementary inputs] … If all these donors can actually go straight to the smallholder farmers, it’s going to be much more impactful.”57 We are reminded of the Precautionary Principle’s injunction to examine “the full range of alternatives.” While the need for more food for more people might call for a combination of approaches—perhaps including GE crops—we need to resist the temptation to jump to the newest (and often for corporations more profitable) technological fixes, without adequate consideration of more traditional, less costly and less risky options.

What about broader environmental impacts of GE crops? One widely discussed concern is that of horizontal gene transfer (HGT)—that genes introduced into GE crops might spread into neighboring crops (adversely affecting, for instance, organic farmers) and into wild plants (perhaps introducing insecticide resistance there). This, too, is a very controversial area. Some claim that GE-induced HGT will be lower than natural background levels of HGT,48 a point that ignores the concern that the potential impact of even rare HGT from GE plants may be greater than that from natural HGT. Others note examples such as the rapid contamination of supposedly non-GMO papaya after ringspot-resistant GE papaya was introduced in Hawaii in 1998.49 Again, the Precautionary Principle would suggest the need for more caution, more testing, and more ongoing tracking.

Another environmental question is the impact of GE crops on biodiversity. One argument is that GE crops, by increasing crop yields, will reduce the amount of land needed for agriculture and thus protect undisturbed lands for “in situ” biodiversity.50 Clearly, for that to be true, the yield-benefits of GE would have to be significant, the evidence for which is not clear, as noted above. Further, biodiversity is not just about saving wildland from agriculture. It is also about saving today’s wide variety of crop germelines, adapted to their local environments by years of breeding by local farmers.51 This genetic-heritage is being damaged by the increasing use of monocropping of GE variants, and yet is vital to future adaptation to environmental change.52

Such a concern reminds us that when new technology is introduced, the precautionary approach should be applied to not just the technology itself, but also to the economic and political environment in which it operates.53 This can and should extend to not just the impacts in the U.S., but also to, in particular, the developing world, as U.S. GE crops are either provided as food aid, or sold within the terms of Free Trade Agreements, which may adversely affect both local diets54 and the use (and even survival) of local seed. The 2006 PC(USA) report, Just Globalization, noted that “subsidies for domestic agriculture … make similar products from abroad noncompetitive” and that both subsidies and developed-country technologies [which would now include GE crops] create “risks as these countries lose their ability to be self-sufficient in … feeding their own citizens.”55 The 1996 PC(USA) report, Hope for a Global Future, concludes that “Trade rules that enable affluent nations to profit at the expense of poor nations or that do not contribute substantially to the reduction of poverty in all nations cannot be accepted ethically.”56

How well does U.S. regulation apply the Precautionary Principle to the concerns outlined above? According to the USDA, “The Federal government has a coordinated, risk-based system to ensure that new biotechnology products are safe for the environment and human and animal health” based on the 1986, Coordinated Framework for Regulation of Biotechnology. “The Coordinated Framework is based upon existing laws designed to protect public health and the environment. The U.S. government has written new regulations, policies, and guidance to apply these laws to biotechnology-derived products.”57

On the other hand, some see U.S. regulation of GE crop and GMO foods as fragmentary, inadequate, and struggling to keep up with technological change. The USDA is still citing a 1986 framework in the face of rapidly evolving technology, although there were small updates in 1992.58 Further updates, requested by the White House in 201559, are not yet approved, much less implemented. A proposal in early 2017 was considered by some to be “underwhelming”.60

When GE crops first emerged, the government’s Office of Science and Technology Policy decided to fit such products into existing law, allocating regulatory responsibility to Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), and the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). The EPA has authority to regulate GE organisms that produce pesticides or toxic chemicals under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA). The USDA has powers relating to plant health and has used these powers to regulate GE crops developed using agrobacteria that introduce “foreign” DNA. The FDA has responsibility to keep food safe; companies may submit their products to a voluntary safety review. State laws play little role in regulating GMOs, but some municipal governments have banned GMO crops.61
The gaps in this approach—trying to use old regulations to address novel issues—are well illustrated by the 2016 development of a white mushroom, gene-edited to prevent browning, that completely “escaped” regulatory review, because the recently developed CRISPR-cas9 technique was used, which directly edited the mushroom DNA rather than introducing any “foreign” DNA. All CRISPR-edited crops similarly escape regulation now. Concerns with the adequacy of GMO regulation were evident, however, long before CRISPR complicated the picture.

One key issue was the use of the concept of “substantial equivalence.” In using regulations designed to follow health, safety, and environmental legislation covering conventional products, the assumption is that the focus should be on the nature of the products produced, and not on the process that produced them. The Office of Science and Technology Policy’s 1992 Statement of Scope adopted a risk-based approach under which agencies were supposed to exercise regulatory authority only when the “risk posed by the introduction [was] unreasonable”—the opposite of the precautionary principle—and regulatory oversight was supposed to focus on the characteristics and risks of the biotechnology product—not the process by which it was created.

The government’s approach followed the principle of “substantial equivalence” to long-established existing foods. The application of this idea to GM foods was developed by a Working Group established by the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), which recommended that only when there was no basis whatsoever for comparison with natural foods should the GM food be evaluated on the basis of “its own composition and properties.” The OECD working group applied “substantial equivalence” only to food safety, but it has since been applied also to environmental impacts of GE crops. There are no standardized tests to establish substantial equivalence, and critics regard substantial equivalence as a method of encouraging GM foods, while providing an excuse for regulatory agencies to avoid their responsibility to protect the public health and safety. Thus, current U.S. regulation of GE crops and of GM foods in general are not based on the Precautionary Principle, but by contrast on a rather loose assessment of risk. Furthermore, lack of adequate funding often hinders the research and enforcement needed to implement the laws and regulations.

These weaknesses in the regulatory environment show the need for fuller application of the Precautionary Principle. In line with our ecojustice norms of Sustainability, Participation, Sufficiency, and Solidarity, we believe that GE crops can be beneficial as long as they serve to:

- “Produce abundant, safe, and nutritious food.
- “Reduce harmful environmental inputs.
- “Provide healthful conditions for farm workers.
- “Protect the genetic make-up of native species.
- “Enhance crop genetic diversity.
- “Foster soil fertility.
- “Improve the lives of the poor and malnourished.
- “Maintain the economic viability of farmers and rural communities.”

In line with the Wingspread definition, the Precautionary Principle and the PC(USA)’s ethical norm of participation, regulators’ decision-making should include consultation of all those affected by GMO technology. Everyone must have access to adequate information. As the 2002 PC(USA) report We Are What We Eat noted in its brief consideration of GMOs, “people of faith are called to be informed about the issues through reliable sources of information, to raise questions, and to make responsible choices. Be cautious about media hype or fear campaigns. Rather, choose credible sources of information.” As Christians, we need to be well informed, to help all those affected be similarly informed, and to use this information in advocacy to ensure appropriate regulation of GE crops and GMO foods.

NanoTechnology—Nonbiological Application

Nano particles are a special type of chemical whose potential toxicity and beneficial uses, as well as risks, differ substantially from those of the non-nano forms of the same chemical. A material with familiar properties in solid form acts surprisingly differently when in the form of nano dust, with particle diameters of under 100 nanometers (billionths of a meter). Generally, the nano forms are more reactive because of the much higher ratio of surface area to volume and mass. Nano particles oxidize and make other chemical bonds much more quickly, even to the extent sometimes of becoming like an explosive. Nano particles also often absorb or reflect light very differently from the conventional particles of the same material.

[Due to the limitations on this study, we do not consider nano-biological products or entities like oil-eating bacteria that may, in fact, be genetically engineered. There are also ultras-mall machines that may called nanobots but that may be larger than nano implies, similarly beyond our scope.]
Nano silver has potent antibacterial properties, making it useful in medical applications, but it could possibly penetrate through skin and other membranes, enter the blood stream, and collect in various organs, where the long-term effects are not fully understood. Bandages for victims of burns and for postsurgical sites often contain nano silver now, which substantially reduces the likelihood of infections. Even though the long-term risks are not fully known, the short-term positive effects seem clear enough to justify continued use of nano silver in bandages.

Titanium dioxide is in many white consumer products, including sunscreen, toothpaste, powdered sugar, and various sweets—reflecting sunlight and making whites appear brighter. In some products, at least, some of the molecules are at nano scale, but this information is not usually included in the labels. Although titanium dioxide is not very reactive chemically, even at nano scale, and there has been no clear evidence of harm in the long-term, some consumer-safety advocates have campaigned against it. In response, Dunkin’ Donuts stopped including it in powdered sugar on their donuts in 2015. In terms of the precautionary principle, the non-substantive benefits of whiter looking sweets and toothpaste (in contrast to the benefit of infection-free wounds) would not justify the allowance for nano titanium dioxide in food, toothpaste, etc., especially without nano-specific labeling to inform consumers and let them decide.

Many industrial manufacturing uses of nano-particles involve fusing them back together, as in printed electronic circuits and ultra-thin films on glass or plastic, which then have unique and useful properties. Firms need to take adequate precautions for worker safety, but consumers and other third parties are not at risk, since the material in the final product is no longer in nano form.

A new frontier in nano engineering involves manipulating and aggregating nano particles into tiny structures. Regulatory agencies—it is not clear which ones—need to keep an eye on this technology as it develops and to do independent research on the risks that some nano structures could pose to human health and the environment.

Although EPA and FDA have started investigating the potential risks posed by nanoparticles, neither engineered nanoparticles nor the products and materials that contain them are subject to any special regulation regarding production, handling or labeling. EPA’s “A to Z Index of Environmental Topics” does not have a line for nano particles or nano technologies. A part of FDA, the Center for Drug Evaluation and Research (CDER) has been doing research on the properties of nano materials as they are used in drug products, but it has not yet developed a regulatory framework to assess their safety and efficacy.

Given the potential for long delays in the evidence of harmful negative effects surfacing, for instance as nanoparticles of one sort or another accumulate in the liver or other organs, the precautionary principle would guide us in uncertain cases to restrain rather than allow the sale and use of nano materials in foods and skin products while researchers collect further evidence. This precautionary attitude is especially important where the reputed benefit of the products is only to enhance appearance, not to improve health or nutrition.

New Technologies to Watch

Some new technologies have not presented specific dangers and have no regulatory framework or agency. Yet some experts see potentials for grave danger. Two examples are artificial intelligence and human enhancement—possibly leading to the synthetic development of a species of post Homo sapiens.

Artificial Intelligence

Artificial intelligence (AI) is here already, but in benign forms so far—doing things that humans already do, but doing them faster, cheaper, and perhaps more carefully and thoroughly. Headline events are IBM computers beating humans at chess and Go, an even more complex game. Here, although the computers learn in ways and use strategies that even the best players find mystifying, the rules of the game are set by humans, and a board confines the scope and risks—gains or losses. AI there endangers only the egos of the grand masters.

AI is also getting real-world application in tasks such as reading the results of MRIs and other scans. Here the speed and thoroughness of AI pays off in finding tumors or other abnormalities that the human radiologist might miss. Then the human can look again at the spot found by AI and say, “ah, yes, we’re glad to find that.” Search engines and computerized personal assistant applications use algorithms that appear to learn based on pattern recognition and prediction.

Dangers may arise, however, when the AI would find something too complex for the human to understand and then, more quickly than a human could double check, would take real world action. Financial markets are an immanent example. AI models so far have not consistently outperformed the market, as far as reported, but firms are working on it. Once one or more firms has an AI model that they believe is a winner, it is hard to see how regulations could prevent its use, not only for making forecasts but also for directing trading in real time.

If one or two firms with small market-share portfolios did this, it would probably not cause a problem. Success would expand their market shares, however, and one can envision a time when a few firms wielding AI trading strategies dominated whole markets—stock, bonds, or derivatives. Then the interaction of competing AI strategies could drive wild gyrations in the... markets. Regulation would have difficulty preventing this, since many firms already use computer automated trading to execute non-AI trading strategies. Perhaps the best remedy would be one proposed to discourage ultra-high frequency trading—a very low percentage tax on each trade (known as the Tobin tax), which would be too small to discourage buying or selling on the basis of fundamental values.

One military application is also often mentioned, that of programming autonomous (not simply remotely piloted) drones to fire on targets identified by their software. This might further integrate contemporary warfare into the world of videogames.

Human Enhancement

Another area of concern is human enhancement, meaning “any attempt to temporarily or permanently overcome the current limitations of the human body through natural or artificial means … whether or not the alteration results in characteristics and capacities that lie beyond the existing human range.”71 Therapeutic enhancements—such as contact lenses, hearing aids, insulin for diabetics, or an artificial hip or prosthetic limb—are widely accepted, but the borderline between therapeutic and “beyond normal” uses is unclear. Human growth hormone, for instance, can be used to treat a child’s pituitary disorder, or can be used to help a perfectly normal child grow taller than they would otherwise have done. Are both uses ethical? New technologies are making ethical decisions harder. “Existing human enhancement technologies include reproductive technology, embryo selection by pre-implantation, genetic diagnosis, physically enhancing drugs, cognitive enhancers, and plastic surgery. Emerging technologies include human genetic engineering [now including CRISPR’s carefully-directed editing] and neural implants, as well as speculative technologies such as mind Uploading.”72 Here we could face a dangerous extension of AI, if people link their brains up to programs whose machinations neither they nor anyone else fully understands. Interactions among a societal subset of AI-driven humanoids—competing or coordinating together—could create serious problems for all people.

New technologies might soon cross over into transhumanism, the idea of humans engineering a posthuman/superhuman future. Even without going this far, human enhancement clearly raises questions of economic justice (who will be able to afford enhancements?), of technological risk (do we really understand the long-term effects of enhancements? Steroids on steroids?), and of just what it means to be made “in the image of God.” While we may celebrate enhancements that improve human thriving, we need to apply the precautionary principle to their application when it endangers the meaning or even the survival of our species.73 Sociologists, AI scientists, and ethicists (Christians and others) need to think together about how to address these challenges.

Conclusions

God has charged us to take care of each other and of all creation. Through geological forces and evolution, God created our world and we should not casually put it at risk in order to meet some corporation’s quarterly earnings target or to do the bidding of a political donor. The precautionary principle should guide our nation’s regulatory decisions.

Although laws may set out with the precautionary principle, in practice the manufacturers seeking monetary benefit have often been able to overwhelm and weaken the precautionary regulatory processes that might preemptively prevent harm. Most exceptions to this pattern have been when introduction of a product causes demonstrable harm, often only brought to public attention with lawsuits. Manufacturers and government regulators should regularly update—tightening or relaxing—product safety ratings and restrictions as more research and experience become available. To enable democratic participation by all those affected, manufacturers and regulators need to make publicly available (and in readily accessible and readable form) information about the risks as well as benefits of any product or process.

Beyond strengthening public health and environmental protections, the precautionary principle is intended to deal with unintended consequences. Although our focus has been on improvements to the U.S. regulatory framework, by using the four major ethical categories developed within the ecumenical movement, the principles of sustainability, participation, sufficiency, and solidarity, we acknowledge the broad ways that technological developments—say, the “digital divide”—affect cultures, and how technologies can be used for social control rather than liberation. Democratic participation is conditioned by cultural capacity, and the most advanced corporations leave much conventional oversight and regulation (and taxation) by conflicted political processes far behind. This is to leave open, then, the question of how much transformation our own and other developed societies will need to undergo if we are to avert truly unmeasurable risks of climate changes interacting with dysfunctional or inadequate governments in the years immediately ahead.

Annex A: Historical Origins of the Precautionary Principle and Its Application in the United States and Europe

Many commentators argue that the precautionary principle originally emerged from Germany in the mid-1970s. A few argue that its development started at the 1972 Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment. In any case, the first international treaty using the term precautionary principle came about after international conferences discussing the protection of the North Sea. At those meetings, Germany championed the concept. Initially, the parties did not even use the term “precaution,” but agreed that action should be taken to prevent “damage to the environment can be irreversible or remediable only at considerable expense and over long periods and that, therefore, coastal states and the EEC must not wait for proof of harmful effects before taking action.” Finally, in November 1987, at the second conference where the London Declaration was adopted, a “precautionary approach” was adopted (Ministerial Declaration for the Second International Conference on the Protection of the North Sea, Nov. 25, 1987).
The Precautionary Principle, although not always called exactly by that name, is now integrated into many international conventions74 and U.S. and European domestic laws and is embedded in many U.S. occupational safety and environmental laws. It is well described in the Wingspread Consensus Statement on the Precautionary Principle25:

When an activity raises threats of harm to human health or the environment, precautionary measures should be taken even if some cause and effect relationships are not fully established scientifically.

In this context the proponent of an activity, rather than the public, should bear the burden of proof.

The process of applying the Precautionary Principle must be open, informed and democratic and must include potentially affected parties. It must also involve an examination of the full range of alternatives, including no action. (http://sehn.org/wingspread-conference-on-the-precautionary-principle/).

United States

In the United States, the principle, though not always using the term “precautionary principle” began to be stated in strong terms in worker health and safety law, then in environmental law, and finally rather weakly in food safety law. In fact, interpretations of what constitutes sufficient scientific evidence and how precautionary agencies should be are given their strongest expression in occupational health and safety law, The Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, in particular, the General Duty Clause of the law stipulates that the employer must maintain a place of employment free from recognized hazards that are causing or likely to cause death or serious physical harm.26

The Clean Air Act of 1970 and its subsequent amendments require the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to adopt measures to control air pollutants when the pollutants “may reasonably be anticipated to endanger public health or welfare”77 (USC §7521(a)(1)). Absolute proof of endangerment is not required, but a reasonable belief may require action. The act moreover requires the EPA to set air quality standards to protect the most vulnerable populations, with “an adequate margin of safety.”78 (USC §7409(b)(1)).

In 2007, in Massachusetts v. EPA,79 the U.S. Supreme Court underscored that the EPA cannot arbitrarily decide not to take precautionary action, in this case on whether or not to regulate carbon dioxide as an air pollutant that causes global warming. The Court wrote:

Under the Act’s clear terms, EPA can avoid promulgating regulations only if it determines that greenhouse gases do not contribute to climate change or if it provides some reasonable explanation as to why it cannot or will not exercise its discretion to determine whether they do. It has refused to do so, offering instead a laundry list of reasons not to regulate, including the existence of voluntary Executive Branch programs providing a response to global warming and impairment of the President’s ability to negotiate with developing nations to reduce emissions. These policy judgments have nothing to do with whether greenhouse gas emissions contribute to climate change and do not amount to a reasoned justification for declining to form a scientific judgment. Nor can EPA avoid its statutory obligation by noting the uncertainty surrounding various features of climate change and concluding that it would therefore be better not to regulate at this time. (https://www.cnet.com/news/supreme-court-rules-epa-can-regulate-greenhouse-gases/).

In short, the Court ruled that the precautionary approach of the Clean Air Act requires the EPA to take action even if the politics of the time argues against such precautionary action. It is worth noting that this Court was rather conservative, and one might have expected that it would not have endorsed such a precautionary approach after three decades of antiregulatory rhetoric and practice in U.S. politics.

Nonetheless, in U.S. policymaking, cost-benefit analysis of regulations has often trumped the precautionary language in the laws of the U.S. An expansive definition of cost-benefit analysis has been forced on the agencies by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) in both Republican and Democratic administrations. The OMB is supposed to review, not stop, regulations using cost-benefit analysis, but has often held up environmental and health regulations for years, well beyond the 120-day limit the OMB regulations stipulate. Even relatively minor regulations, such as the June 2011 proposal by the EPA to regulate nano pesticides languish and are effectively killed.81

Even major rules have languished in the White House offices of the OMB. Cass Sunstein, the first Obama Administration appointee to head the OMB, is one of the most vociferous critics of the Precautionary Principle and an ardent champion of cost-benefit analysis as the primary tool for assessing and making regulatory decisions. Only after he left the OMB, was the silica dust rule to protect workers from a potent carcinogen finally released after twelve years.

Europe

In Europe, the Precautionary Principle found its way into both law and practice between 1980 and the present. The 1992 treaty80 that created the European Union (EU) made the Precautionary Principle the bedrock of EU environmental policy:

Community policy on the environment shall aim at a high level of protection taking into account the diversity of situations in the various regions of the Community. It shall be based on the precautionary principle and on the principles that preventive action should be taken, that environmental damage should as a priority be rectified at source and that the polluter should pay. Environmental protection requirements must be integrated into the definition and implementation of other Community policies. (Article 130R[2])

Article 130R(3) calls for agencies to use “available scientific and technical data” and to assess “the potential benefits and costs of action or lack of action.”

The European Commission (EC) formed a Commission on the Precautionary Principle, which declared that it would be the policy of the European Union to use the Precautionary Principle “where preliminary objective scientific evaluation indicates that there are reasonable grounds for concern that the potentially dangerous effects on the environment, human, animal, or plant health may be inconsistent with the high level of protection chosen for the community”81

The resulting policies have created what some characterize as a “guilty until proven innocent” approach to approving new products.

The Precautionary Principle has been invoked by EU nations as part of the reason for opposing the importation of US beef raised using hormones prohibited in Europe and for the slow, careful adoption of genetically modified (GM) crops in Europe.82
Europe’s chemical safety law, REACH, was designed to incorporate the Precautionary Principle and has been staunchly criticized by some U.S. chemical industries and their supporters in the U.S. Congress. Nonetheless, it is unclear how actively the agency implementing the law is promoting the search of alternative chemicals that should be a part of the precautionary process.83, 84

Europe’s agricultural rules, relating to pesticides, food additives, hormones in beef, genetically modified food and antimicrobials, incorporate the Precautionary Principle and thus are criticized by US politicians as “non-tariff” barriers to free trade. Former Senator Max Baucus from Montana, while on a trip to Europe to promote a US–EU free trade agreement wrote in the Financial Times that he would work at “ensuring that regulatory process are streamlined and based on sound science … eliminating unfair barriers that keep our agricultural products out of the European market without any scientific justification—for example, blocking genetically engineered crops and beef and pork containing feed additives that have been deemed to be safe [in the United States]”85 Calls for “sound science” are often code for antiregulatory arguments, and often the same politicians arguing for “sound science” have cut the science budgets of agencies like the EPA when they have attempted to research alternatives to chemicals or other technologies currently being used in industry or agriculture.

This account of the precautionary principle’s formal uses does not include a survey of its adoption and application within the Christian churches, although such a survey is available from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. A brief policy summary of prior Presbyterian uses of the concept is found in Annex C. The United Methodist Church and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America86 use the precautionary principle in their social teaching and policy work. More broadly, the World Council of Churches in the 1970s developed an ethical framework for debating the safety and sustainability of nuclear power (as well as the impacts of nuclear weapons), other energy technologies, and human genetic experimentation. Its ethical criteria were used and elaborated internationally though national councils of churches, assisting many developing nations in their dealings with developed nations, transnational institutions, and corporations.

We conclude with a brief quotation from the ecumenical report, Human Values and Advancing Technology:

Using science (by research) and technology (by application) we have solved many problems through concentrating effort on clearly defined sequences of tasks. Yet … a too narrow concentration of attention has frequently contributed to our failure to anticipate unintended consequences. Because these consequences are now arising on so large a scale, ways must be found to cope with major deficiencies in our policy-making process. …

Increased carbon dioxide appears to trigger a chain of events: warming of world climates, increased melting of polar ice caps, rising sea levels, and the consequent flooding of the world’s major seaports and fertile coastal plains. Scientists have estimated that the point of no return may be reached by the end of the century. … Public and private agencies must proceed immediately to develop and evaluate alternatives so that ultimate decisions can be made wisely and in time.”87

That precautionary and prescient statement from Cameron P. Hall, a Presbyterian minister then working for the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., was written in 1967.

Annex B

This report was developed by a task group of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy that included Dr. Steven Webb, an economist and primary final writer, Dr. Linda Eastwood, a physicist and theologian, and Dr. Christian Iosso, an ethicist and staff to the committee. The Reverend Ray Roberts, PhD, hosted two meetings of a reference group at the Westfield (N.J.) Presbyterian Church. The task group was enabled to focus on the regulatory nexus by Thomas McGarity, Esq., Professor of Law at the University of Texas and past director of the Center for Progressive Regulation, who met with the reference group at its second meeting. Dr. Jaydee Hanson, a consultant from the Center for Food Safety, provided research on ecumenical background and practical advocacy concerns. Dr. Roger Willer, an ethicist with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and Dr. Donna Riley, Professor of Engineering Ethics Education at Purdue University, gave valuable comment.

The reference group that gathered in Westfield included Dr. Douglas Miller, a biochemist and pharmacologist with extensive corporate research and development experience; Dr. Eric Schaff, Esq., Northern N.J. Regional Director of the Environmental Protection Agency; Dr. William Menke, Professor of Earth and Environmental Sciences at Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory and The Earth Institute at Columbia University; Dr. Peter Sackman; Martha Smith, formerly of the Yale University Groundwater Project; the Reverend Dr. Susan DeGeorge, Esq., stated clerk of the Presbytery of Hudson River and Adjunct Professor of Law at Pace University; and Dr. Fred Hitzhusen, professor, Agricultural, Environmental, and Development Economics at The Ohio State University, joined the group by phone.

Annex C

The Precautionary Approach in Presbyterian Church Social Witness Policy

In 1971, versions of the precautionary principle marked a brief but strong resolution, “Christian Responsibility for Environmental Renewal,” prompted above all by pollution, technology, and consumption out of control. Values affirmed included: “rights of life over property rights, taming of technology in order to enhance quality of life, restraint in consumption, equitable distribution of resources, and modes of corporate decision accountable to the public and to existing communities.”

In this light, “the key to responsible stewardship of the environment is anticipation of potential hazards before they become critical.” More specifically, the General Assembly: “Urges the President and Congress to ensure more rigorous monitoring of environmental conditions and their social costs, adequate funding of research to develop benign products and production systems, phase out of wasteful or toxic technologies, testing of potentially dangerous substances or implements before their introduction into commercial use, and authority to ban those which are not “eco-safe.”

Additionally, church judicatories, agencies, and “community ecology centers” were to seek: “habits of economic development that shift the burden of proof of ecological safety to the proponents of any potentially hazardous or threatening enterprises.”

The 1981 Presbyterian Church energy policy, The Power to Speak Truth to Power, established an ethical framework for assessing major energy options and made a number of recommendations to church and society. One of these contains a version of the precautionary approach:
I. F. “The enforcement of rigorous environmental and human safeguards in the production and use of all forms of energy, with the burden of proof resting with claims that energy sufficiency is threatened, and that safety and environmental provisions are adequate.”

The 1989 theological study, Keeping and Healing the Creation, contained a discussion of sustainability that “reverses the burden of proof for technology, industry, and agriculture. … For decades we have been pressing hard against ecological limits … in instance after instance we have gone too far; now it is time to exercise restraint [that we] not disrupt natural balances or jeopardize the future.” Planning the transition to renewable resources should “take advantage of market mechanisms to encourage efficiency … but do not expect markets to anticipate the future … adequately, for their time frame is too short …” (p. 64).

The 1990 major environmental policy statement, Restoring the Creation for Ecology and Justice, built on the 1989 study, which is essentially its theological base. The proactive side of “healing” is emphasized, while pioneering thinking of the 1980 PCUS study, “The Energy Question: An Exploration of Meaning and Values,” is also recalled, lifting up the intrinsic value of “a great cosmic community, of which God and nature are also a part.”

In 1996, the assembly approved an even further reaching policy statement, Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development, which became the basis for much Hunger Program and World Mission strategy for funding and international partnership. This statement emphasized a holistic approach to interdependence of economic, social, political, and spiritual factors for ecologically sustainable trade and globalization. It included recommendations for “full-cost pricing” and “polluter pays” principles to be incorporated in economic policy, along with increases in international regulation consistent with human rights and better governance and incentives for appropriate technologies. Relevant to the precautionary principle, which is usually included within sustainability, it extended that concern to “right to know” and transparency laws that strengthen citizen participation, women’s empowerment, and democratic accountability (pp. 103–5). The report overall had a sensitivity to process and structures of governance that built on religious, cultural, and educational values (including traditional wisdom) as well as international law and scientific values. Thus, it extends the precautionary principle to implementation as well as goals of minimizing risks and irreversible disruption.

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-07. As some of the most likely to be harmed by a lack of regulations are women and people of color, ACREC approves this overture.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation from the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) do the following:

1. Affirm the need of urgent and robust responses to the threat of climate change, as well as the need for Presbyterian entities and individuals to pursue a comprehensive set of faithful responses.
2. Receive the report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) on its extensive engagement of corporations as well as its implementation of the criteria included in the directive from the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

3. Affirm the Guideline Metrics (see appendix) MRTI developed for measuring progress towards compliance with General Assembly established criteria for all corporations, especially those that produce and/or heavily consume fossil fuels.

4. Direct MRTI to pursue its engagement process with deliberate haste and utilize its Guideline Metrics with corporations in the 2019 and 2020 proxy seasons and report back to the 224th General Assembly (2020) with divestment recommendations for the companies who are not moving towards compliance with the General Assembly’s criteria established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

5. Commend all corporations who are working to address the risks of climate change by aligning and adopting policies and practices in line with Paris Accords including: reduced greenhouse gas emissions, improved energy efficiency, incorporation of renewable energy and having robust disclosure of the risks related to the 2-degree warming scenario, and how they plan to manage operations in line with low carbon demand scenarios.

6. Commend the investing agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for their work to provide options for congregations, mid councils, and individuals working for a fossil fuel-free future. Specifically, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., for its Restoring Creation Loan program; the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for its positive investments in renewables and its environmental investment option for plan members; and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation for its positive investments in renewables, and for providing, through its New Covenant Trust Company subsidiary, fossil free investment strategies for congregations, mid councils, and individuals.

7. Encourage continued respectful discussion and engagement in the church and civil society on the critical issue of climate change, and how it should be addressed, not only through the responsible use of investments, but also as individuals, churches, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) working together to reduce our carbon footprint.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral:

Background:

The 222nd General Assembly (2016)

... 2. Directs MRTI to pursue its focused engagement process on climate change issues with all corporations, particularly with those in the oil, gas, and coal sectors, and report back to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) with recommendations, including possible selective divestment if significant changes in governance, strategy, implementation, transparency and disclosure, and public policy are not instituted by the corporations during the engagements of MRTI and ecumenical partners. (Minutes, 2016, Part I, pp. 511–12)

In response to the referral from the last General Assembly, MRTI engaged in dialogues with fifty-nine companies; filed or co-filed shareholder resolutions with eighteen companies; established Guideline Metrics to measure progress with companies; and increased the allocation of committee and staff time to addressing environmental and climate change with corporations. In addition, the committee held seven meetings with various interest groups within the denomination to seek input and report progress. MRTI also hosted panel discussions at the NEXT Gathering and the Big Tent event with representatives from Fossil Free PCUSA and Faithful Action. MRTI is committed to continue this focus through the 224th General Assembly (2020) and beyond.

Biblical, Theological, Ethical, and Policy Background

MRTI understands that its role as a committee is to be guided by the Holy Spirit, which calls us into being and sustains us in relationship with one another. As Presbyterians, we understand that we operate within an ecclesial structure that seeks mutual responsibility and accountability. That understanding has distinctive theological and polity features that are simultaneously rewarding and frustrating. Theologically, we emphasize the power of communal discernment; the Holy Spirit is present in collective discussion, debate, and even conflict. Fundamentally, we acknowledge the asymmetry between humans and God, and therefore we believe that broad representation and diversity is pertinent to discerning God’s will for the church.
But, as we have rooted and ordered ourselves in process, the slow nature of committee and denominational discernment is likewise exasperating. It is in the communal process that we most deliberately engage in listening attentively to the Holy Spirit, where different thoughts and opinions are offered equitable voice, and assembled believers prayerfully seek to determine appropriate action for a particular moment and place.

Further, we are mindful of Item 11-03, passed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), which directs the church to: “Recommit ourselves at the congregational level, the mid council level, and the national levels of our church to locate ourselves with the poor, to advocate with all of our voice for the poor, and to seek opportunities to take risks for and with the poor (in the soup kitchens and catholic worker houses, among the immigrants, with those working to end mass incarceration, and with those who seek to protect all of us, especially the poorest of the poor around the world, from the vagaries of climate change)” (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 700). We are committed to honoring both the spirit and the letter of this directive, and to assure that we are hearing and centering our response around the voices of those most impacted by the crisis of climate change as we move forward.

We sought to be guided in our work by biblical and Reformed theological principals. As such, we understand the following:

Faithful concern for the environment is rooted in the Word of God, spoken into creation. Reformed Christians have always affirmed the sovereignty of God as the creator and sustainer of all life, over the whole of creation. Even before creating humans, God created the earth and the universe of which it is a part, and called it “very good” (Gen.1:31). Like other living creatures, humans are formed of the earth and intimately intertwined with all of God’s creation (Gen. 2:7, 9, 19). Creation is God’s handiwork, the earth and all that is in it, belongs to God (Ps. 24:1 and Ps. 104). Creation is also a gift, to which we respond with gratitude and faithful stewardship. As Christians who have covenanted in relationship with God, we are called by God to care and maintain the fragile order with which God has entrusted us (Gen. 2:15).

Creation cries out in this time of ecological crisis (Rom. 8:18–22). The sustainability of creation, human life, and well-being depend upon “the flourishing of other life and the integrity of the life-supporting processes that God has ordained” (Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice, 1990, p. 2). When creation is violated, so too are human communities, particularly the most vulnerable in our midst. Jesus said, “Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me” (Mt. 25:40). Jesus exhorts us, as members of the human family, to show great care in the way that we treat the least, the lost, and the lonely of our world. As the church, we are called to respond to Jesus prodding through prophetic witness and action.

From the earliest days of the Reformed Tradition, we have understood ourselves to be political. As God is active in all spheres of life, so are we called to be engaged in society’s institutions. This is one of the most challenging aspects of being Presbyterian. It means taking seriously the call to live out our public theology faithfully within the boundaries of democratic church polity. As Presbyterians, we are expected to enter into complicated conversations and sometimes into making difficult decisions. For the last four years, for the members of MRTI, the issue at hand has been the relationships between Christians and the fossil fuel industry. A portion of PC(USA)-related assets is invested in the stocks and bonds of traditional, fossil fuel-based energy companies, making us partly responsible for their enormous footprint on earth, sky, and sea. MRTI firmly believes in the urgency of addressing climate change and the involvement of the PC(USA) and people of faith in reducing the carbon footprint of humanity, and in moving toward utilizing alternative forms of energy.

While the Reformed tradition insists on the Church being political, it also reminds us that as part of the body of Christ, we have diverse ministries, relationships, and commitments that lead us to embody politics in differing, though ultimately, complimentary ways. The unity of this body is not uniformity in either perspective or approach. Rather the unity of the body is in its purpose, to equip God’s people for works of service until we reach unity and maturity (Eph. 4:11–13). In pursuit of our calling, we recognize that members and communities within the PC(USA) have a common purpose in serving the cause of a just and sustainable Creation that reflects God’s promises of flourishing. And yet we will pursue that aim in different ways and at different levels on climate change and a host of other issues of social concern. There are, for example, supply side approaches that seek to reform or critique the practices of fossil fuel producers and there are demand side approaches that seek to encourage adoption of renewable energy and reordering of investment priorities among individuals, congregations, and other church-related bodies.

These diverse approaches are interdependent and faithful responses even as they appear at times to be tension. Each of them is required for the health of the body’s comprehensive witness on this consequential issue. Thus, we call for a posture of mutual forbearance reflective of 1 Corinthians 12:21, where we are reminded that the parts of the body are called to stay in relationships rather than in antagonism. For “the eye cannot say to the hand, ‘I have no need you!’, nor again the head to the feet, ‘I have no need of you!’”

In our diverse and faithful responses, we are being called, as one of our confessions reminds us, to use our abilities, possessions, and the fruits of technology as gifts entrusted to us by God for “the advancement of the common welfare.” That means that the church cannot evade “responsibility in economic affairs” (Book of Confessions, the Confession of 1967, 9:46). Using our own positionality and resources in a faithful way requires a critical balance. On the one hand, we reject the idolatry of unjust systems by unmasking the ways they hold human societies captive. And on the other, we must as stewards of Creation, be creative participants in the shaping of just systems of human and Creational flourishing. So, we are called neither to embrace human systems uncritically, nor to abandon them lightly. Rather, we are called to engage them critically, and we believe this is what MRTI has faithfully done and will continue to deepen our commitment to doing.

Recent Developments

The mandate from the 222nd General Assembly (2016) builds on the recommendation from the 218th General Assembly (2008) for “the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to expand efforts to engage businesses on energy efficiency and conservation in manufacturing, transport, and product design; to work with companies on appropriate technology applications, including co-generation, wind, solar, biomass, geothermal, and low-head hydroelectric; to support solutions to the problem of nuclear waste; and to advocate that utilities establish incentives to reduce electricity, oil, and gas usage while also eliminating barriers for small power producers to interconnect with the power grid” (The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming, p. 2; see also Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 935). To follow such an economy-wide strategy of engagement, MRTI has stayed engaged with corporations that produce and consume energy and make equipment for others to do so.

The threat of climate change is real and urgent and we are running out of time to address it. The “2017 Global Carbon Budget” estimated we have thirty-two years to solve climate change. Scientists estimate that by 2050 we must keep global temperatures from rising 2 degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels. The Fourth National Climate Change Assessment, from the U.S. government in 2017 is less explicitly prescriptive but its detailed diagnosis points even more strongly to the need for collective action throughout the economy.

Meanwhile, several recent news accounts detail how people are already dying for reasons directly related to climate. The summer of 2017 saw new temperature records across the western United States. Arizona saw temperatures so high airplanes could not fly. India and Pakistan recorded temperatures as high as 129.2 degrees Fahrenheit. One of the most rapidly warming cities in the United States happens to be Louisville, Kentucky, where the PC(USA) is headquartered.

Addressing the Issue

The most efficient way to discourage the burning of fossil fuels is to aggressively engage and challenge producers and consumers to reduce their carbon footprint. Applying pressure at only one point along this chain of fossil fuel production and consumption—say through divestment from fossil fuel-extracting companies—would be less efficient and ultimately slower. Just as defoliating acres of coca and poppies has not solved America’s drug problem, divesting from firms that extract fossil fuel is not likely to bring about the necessary reduction in our economy’s production of greenhouse gases. The root of the problem is on the demand side.

Investor advocacy by groups like MRTI, in coordination with others, can encourage efficient reduction of carbon burning. This strategy involves dialogue with companies all along the chain—extracting fossil fuels (coal, oil, gas), consuming fossil fuels (airlines, bus and trucking companies, electric utilities, etc.), and producing equipment that burns fossil fuels (manufacturers of automobiles, busses, trucks, heating and cooling equipment, airplanes, etc.)—to get them to move to more energy-efficient and non-fossil fuel technologies. Per the criteria established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), firms that refuse to respond to the dialogue could face selective divestment. The transition to a carbon-neutral economy must involve most of these firms, along with new entrants, changing their product lines and production processes. Getting firms to recognize this and take corresponding actions is the goal of MRTI’s corporate engagement on climate and environment issues.

The investor advocacy of PC(USA) and others in the faith community will not suffice on its own to achieve change on such a scale. Mobilizing support from all classes of investors, who mostly focus on returns, will require informing them better about how the companies’ profitability depends on the response to climate change.

MRTI therefore presses firms to report annually on their view of and response to climate-change risks and opportunities, including the comprehensive outlook on energy reflected in the companies’ strategies. MRTI asks how a company’s strategy can remain resilient amidst significant changes (up or down) in demand for oil, gas, and coal, taking into account the carbon intensity of their reserves, and their location (ultra-deep waters, oil sands, etc.). MRTI asks firms to report the value of their assets with acknowledgement that should the economy of the U.S. and the world reduce fuel consumption to meet the 2-degree C limit on warming, they could not then extract all of their reserves. MRTI joins a wide range of investors with assets under management totaling $20 trillion, asking firms to report on carbon pricing scenarios and risk assessment of long-term projects and products, and on their goals for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and increasing use of renewable energy sources. As more information is made available to the public, management on its own often sees the need for reforms, and investors gain the leverage to demand further improvements.

A holistic economic response to climate change also involves government regulation, which many companies spend lavishly to lobby against. Too often still, a company may say that it wants to reduce its carbon footprint while at the same time spending resources directly or via third parties to prevent regulations that would ensure carbon footprint reduction. MRTI advocates for oversight and transparency about companies’ lobbying activity and political spending, including by trade associations to which the companies belong.

Positive investments also help the move to carbon neutrality. The Presbyterian Foundation has allocated at least 1 percent of the Presbyterian Endowment Fund for investments that target climate change solutions: clean energy equities funds or indexes, green bonds and real estate investments, renewable energy funds, clean tech venture capital, and sustainable forestry and agriculture.

Climate change must be addressed worldwide by policymakers, consumers, faith communities, and corporations. Since 2016, PCUSA has engaged more than thirty companies and filed thirteen shareholder resolutions on climate change issues. Companies have included large fossil fuel companies, like Exxon Mobil and Chevron, as well as companies representing the demand of fossil fuels, including Ford and GM auto companies; and some companies in the financial and insurance sectors, such as Bank of New York Mellon and AIG. Of the twenty-three U.S.-based companies on the Carbon Underground 200 list and owned by the Board of Pensions or Foundation, MRTI has engaged twelve since 2016. MRTI’s dialogue with energy companies in which we have investments also includes other important social witness issues, such as the diversity of board membership, indigenous rights, and human rights in Israel/ Palestine.

To operationalize the directive from the 222nd General Assembly (2016), MRTI developed and, since June 2017, has been using the Guideline Metrics, an instrument to help the committee and staff gauge whether a company has made “significant changes in governance, strategy, implementation, transparency and disclosure, and public policy.” Data are collected from company filings, annual reports, news articles, direct dialogue, and corporate disclosures through the Carbon Disclosure Project. The tool includes a rating system for companies. When the relevant information is collected, MRTI staff members assign one of the following ratings (based on the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility’s Hierarchy of Impact): Red—company has had a poor record of shareholder engagement, may not acknowledge importance of ESG issues; Orange—company acknowledges importance of ESG issues, may not adopt policies to address issues; Yellow—company shows some progress on shareholder engagement, begins to implement policy with programs/plans, goals and targets, develops metrics, and discloses information; Blue—company has a good track record of shareholder engagement, company benchmarks its progress against others in industry/sector; or Green—Company shows great efforts on shareholder engagement and actively addresses ESG issues with few concerns. This evaluation could lead to a recommendation for divestment if companies score low enough and indicate no willingness to change.

MRTI uses the Guideline Metrics to prepare for and measure the effectiveness of engagements with all companies, not only those extracting fossil fuel. The companies with whom to engage are chosen according to the policy priorities of MRTI and ecumenical partners, such as the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility (ICCR) and CERES, to which more than 60 faith-based groups belong. Our colleagues there have appreciated this pioneering effort, and many plan to use a similar model to guide their own corporate engagement.

The instrument follows criteria laid out in the 1984 General Assembly Divestment Strategy: Principles and Criteria [196th General Assembly (1984)], particularly criterion three:

The analysis supporting the proposed action:

a. should be clearly grounded in the church’s confession and unambiguously present in the social policy of the General Assembly;

b. should clearly define the behavior and stance of the corporate entities whose policies or practices are at issue; and

c. should state the ends sought through divestment. (The Divestment Strategy: Principles and Criteria, p. 194)

Faith-based and socially responsible organizations engaging with corporations have contributed to the following outcomes with several target companies: (1) ExxonMobil sent a letter to the Trump administration encouraging staying in the Paris climate agreement, a remarkable departure from their previous stance; (2) the 2017 shareholder resolution calling on Exxon Mobil to complete reporting on climate change impacts received a majority vote, PC(USA) was a co-filer on this resolution and will follow up with the company; (3) PC(USA) engaged Phillips 66 on water issues and human rights, and the company subsequently published its first human rights policy in fall 2017; (4) PC(USA) filed a shareholder resolution with Noble Energy on climate change-related issues and also continues to engage the company on human rights concerns in Israel-Palestine related to its drilling for gas in the Eastern Mediterranean; (5) Marathon Petroleum released a sustainability report this year after MRTI co-filed a resolution in 2017, and Valero agreed to do the same.

In an effort to target as many companies as possible on climate change, MRTI also has engaged financial managers, like Bank of New York Mellon and JP Morgan Chase, to discuss how they review and vote for shareholder proposals on climate change. The financial management companies, Black Rock and Vanguard, were key contributors to the majority vote for the shareholder proposal at Exxon Mobil. These large players in the asset markets share our view that climate risk means financial risk. We expect them to be influential allies as we move forward.

There has also been significant development addressing climate change within the denomination itself, with new opportunities to engage Presbyterians across the country. The Board of Pensions made the Pax Global Environmental Markets Fund available to investors in the Retirement Savings Plan of the PC(USA) in January 2017. The Board of Pensions also committed $100 million to a fossil-free portfolio that invests worldwide in resource efficiency and environmental markets in 2017.

The Presbyterian Foundation Board of Trustees committed that at least 1 percent of the Foundation’s permanent endowment fund holdings will be invested in companies working on climate change solutions. In partnership with the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., the Foundation has also made loans available for congregations to implement renewable energy or carbon reduction solutions. The Foundation’s subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, is providing fossil-free management strategies to congregations and other clients that desire a customized approach.

In addition, the Office of Faith-Based Investing and Corporate Engagement has received several dozen requests from congregations seeking assistance developing socially responsible investment policies. MRTI recognizes that it is not alone within PC(USA) in working on the climate change issue and that its engagement with firms where we have investments is only one part of the necessary effort.

Review of General Assembly Criteria for Use of Divestment as an Ethical Strategy

The 196th General Assembly (1984) adopted the policy, “The Use of Divestment as an Ethical Strategy” (Minutes, UPCUSA, Part I, pp. 193–207). It included seven criteria suggested as a guide for making divestment recommendations, and to help guide trustees of related institutions and organizations throughout the church. This policy has guided MRTI’s work on the referral. A review of the criteria is included below:

1. The issue on which divestment is proposed should be one reflecting central aspects of the faith.

MRTI believes faithful caring for God’s creation is an essential element of our Christian vocation, and the current and future threat of climate change to God’s creation is well-established.

2. The issue on which divestment is proposed should be one that the church has addressed by a variety of educational and action efforts, such as: correspondence with companies, discussion with company managers and directors, statements, questions, and shareholder resolutions at stockholder meetings, and legal action against companies.

As summarized in the report, MRTI and its ecumenical partners for decades have engaged many corporations regarding environmental responsibility, particularly in climate change. This engagement has produced positive changes in corporate policies and practices and more engagement remains to be done.

3. The analysis supporting the proposed action: (a) should be clearly grounded in the church’s confession and unambiguously present in the social policy of the General Assembly; (b) should clearly define the behavior and stance of the corporate entities whose policies or practices are at issue; and (c) should state the ends sought through divestment.

MRTI’s work since the 222nd General Assembly (2016) has focused on key components of a robust response to climate change: governance, strategy, implementation, transparency and disclosure, and public policy. MRTI approved an instrument based on these components that helps measure progress with companies in June 2017. These Guideline Metrics, based on the criteria established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), clearly outline issues facing MRTI and the companies, and include an evaluation component that could lead to divestment if companies score low enough and indicate no willingness to change.

4. The decision should be taken after consultation with the ecumenical community, whenever possible. The implementation of a divestment action should ordinarily be in solidarity with other Christian bodies.

MRTI works with many partners both within and outside of the faith community. Engagements are frequently carried out in partnership. Some partners have adopted positions on divestment of fossil fuel companies. Other partners have not. All are committed to addressing the real and urgent crisis of climate change.

5. Efforts should be made to examine the probable effects and consequences of the action with affected communities, particularly Presbyterians.

Since 2016, MRTI has met with and discussed climate change issues and strategy for corporate engagement several times with Presbyterians from both Fossil Free PCUSA and Faithful Actions. Representatives from both groups attended MRTI meetings in February, June, and October 2017. These meetings and conversations have highlighted the importance of taking a multifaceted approach to climate change and corporate engagement.

6. The proposed action should be sufficiently precise that the effect of its application can be evaluated.

As outlined above, the committee formally approved the Guideline Metrics in 2017. This document, when completed for a specific company, provides a clear way to evaluate that company and its progress on environmental, social, and governance issues. The tool includes research and data from the company, analysis from dialogues, as well as external sources and media reports to help paint a complete picture of companies across all sectors.

7. Any proposed divestment action should include provision for: (a) informing appropriate church constituencies; (b) giving appropriate public visibility to the action; (c) engaging other governing bodies and members in advocacy for the ends that prompt the divestment; and (d) giving pastoral care to those directly affected.

Since there is no divestment recommendation being brought to this General Assembly, no such provision has been made.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-08

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 08-08 is the report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), which mainly focuses on the process they have begun of applying criteria for greener and renewable energy to companies represented in the securities portfolios of the General Assembly’s investing agencies.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that this item be approved as amended: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“2. Commend all Presbyterians, including those involved in the Fossil Free movement and those concurring presbyteries, who are seeking to reduce the church’s energy footprint and make it less dependent on conventional, largely carbon-based energy sources and profits from them, and more invested in renewable energy, which is increasingly profitable and linked to technological innovation.]

“[2.] [3.] Receive the report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) on its extensive engagement of corporations as well as its implementation of the criteria included in the directive from the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

“[3.] [4.] Affirm the Guideline Metrics (see appendix) MRTI developed for measuring progress towards compliance with General Assembly established criteria for all corporations, especially those that produce and/or heavily consume fossil fuels.

“[5. Affirm a general guideline that Presbyterian investors and investment agencies not invest in short- or long-term bonds of companies or projects involved in fossil fuel extraction, production, and marketing as these are effectively loans that carry little influence with management or stockholders and yet benefit from processes causing climate change.]”

“[5.] [7.] Commend all corporations who are working to address the risks of climate change by aligning and adopting policies and practices in line with Paris Accords including: reduced greenhouse gas emissions, improved energy efficiency, incorporation of renewable energy and having robust disclosure of the risks related to the 2-degree warming scenario, and how they plan to manage operations in line with low carbon demand scenarios.
ACREC advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-08. ACREC concurs with this report and recommendation. ACREC contributes to this transition with shareholders dialogue and pressure—such as proxy votes and selective divestment from firms that refuse to progress fast enough with the transition. The Guideline Metric that MRTI has developed can measure this progress and provide a framework for dialogue. Since the issuance of its report, MRTI has signed-on to the newly formed Climate Action 100+, with 256 institutional investors around the world, having $28 trillion in assets under management—one-third of the world's invested assets. Together, these investors will be calling on the boards of companies to implement a strong governance framework for accountability, oversight, and disclosure of climate change risks, and to take actions to protect our climate and reduce greenhouse gas emissions across their production chain.

Reflecting the urgency of the issue and the grave concerns of those supporting the fossil free/divestment overture, MRTI should use these new sources of information and leverage to pressure for better corporate practices, including not lobbying against climate regulations, and to accelerate the process of divestment from firms that will not change their ways.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-02.

ACWC understands that climate change is a crisis. The issue disproportionately impacts women, children, people of color, and the most marginalized in global society. As a full voting member of the Mission Responsibility through Investment Committee (MRTI), ACWC brings a critical, gender-justice lens to corporate engagements, committee discussions, and deliberations. ACWC has maintained a voice in this conversation through MRTI and advises approval of MRTI’s recommendations.

Advocacy for Climate Change Action and a Thriving Lower-Carbon Economy—From the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area.

The Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area respectfully overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to:

1. Invite all our congregations to advocate for creation care by encouraging members and friends to regularly engage in respectful conversations with their federal elected officials to advocate for climate action. Congregations’ acts of engagement can include:
   a. approaching all conversations with the intent to build bridges of trust and respect;
   b. organizing ongoing calling, writing, and requesting visits with their elected officials, requesting climate action now;
   c. encouraging and supporting youth to independently engage with their representatives;
   d. educating their members and surrounding communities about climate impacts and solutions.

2. Encourage congregations to learn about and consider including in their conversations the concepts of “Carbon Fee and Dividend,” a just and effective approach to carbon pricing:
   a. An annually rising fee per ton of CO₂ is collected at the wellhead, mine, and border—the fee drives businesses to avoid cost, selecting and innovating for lower-carbon energy, products, and food.
   b. A monthly dividend paid to all families comes from returning all of the fee, strengthening families and keeping three-fifths of the country even or a little ahead. The buying power of the fee leads to more local, mainstreet jobs.
   c. Border tariffs protect our industry and compel other countries to follow our lead.

3. Invite congregations, presbyteries, synods, affinity groups, and the General Assembly to share their climate advocacy resources, successes, and encouragement.

4. Ask the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to inform the denomination and the larger public of this resolution.

Rationale

Prayer

This is a prayer inviting all of us to be the collective hands, feet, voice, and ears of Jesus. By listening for common values and building bridges of trust, appreciation, and optimism, we, one conversation at a time, open hearts to the blessing of all of us choosing to care for all of us—all Creation.

It is a prayer for grace—God’s love in motion, through our 9,451 congregations growing the community of voices supporting leadership by Congress. It is a prayer for a more just and healthy climate, economy, and families—and better relationships with our neighbors.

Recommendation 1.a. PC(USA) Joined Faith Community Call for Leadership and Building Bridges

On January 11, 2017, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), via its Office of Public Witness, joined other faith communities, including the Young Evangelicals for Climate Action, in a “Religious Community Letter to Trump Transition Team.” The letter calls for leadership:
... The United States can and must play a leadership role in addressing these environmental challenges which threaten our planet, our security, the health of our families, and the fate of communities throughout the world.

And the letter calls us:

As people of faith, we are uniquely able to serve as bridge-builders by finding common ground and reaching across political divides. ... We are rooted in the practice of emphasizing our common values in order to advance cooperation and overcome partisanship at both the national and international levels.

Better Angels\(^2\) is an organization that has shown success in facilitating and teaching others how to facilitate respectful “Red-Blue” conversations. Begun in 2016, it is a citizen’s movement to unify our divided nation.

Recommendation 1.b. Congregations’ Organizing Ongoing Outreach to Their Federal Elected Representatives

Showing our elected officials the political will for climate action requires relationship building, persistence, and their hearing from enough of their constituents that climate is important. Example activities include:

- Organizing members to each make one respectful phone call every month, with choices of an appreciation and a request for climate action. One call per month by many members can lead to multiple calls each and every day—those “rain drops” add up and make a difference, showing support for climate action.
- Writing to elected officials at the local office or email to the D.C. office (note D.C. letter processing delays).
- Letters to the editor of your local paper (read by thousands or 100s of thousands) builds support.
- Asking for visits with an elected official or staff. When planning a visit, invite those that will share a faith, civic, business, or military perspective, a climate impact, or a connection with your elected official.

Recommendation 1.c. Youth

Our youth have a powerful voice, are willing to be both respectful and direct, have the most at stake, and they have successfully swayed the hearts of representatives.\(^3\) Consider supporting independent youth advocacy through church, school or other organizations such as iMatter or 4H. iMatter\(^4\) helps youth prepare a climate report card and engage with city councils.

Recommendation 1.d. Educating Members and Surrounding Communities on Climate Impacts and Solutions

There are many reputable sources on climate, including the PC(USA)’s own work (see Section 3 below). Two additional perspectives of the current and growing harm from climate across the whole country are provided, and in Drawdown, a breadth of encouraging solutions.

The NOAA billions report\(^5\) shows accelerating climate impacts on everyone. From 1980, the data, maps, and time series show a steady increase of 10s to 100s of billions of dollars of extreme weather costs across the USA.

Our Children’s Trust lawsuit\(^6\) by 21 Youth v the U.S. Government includes a thirty-two-page declaration by Dr. James Hansen in 2015\(^7\) describing accelerating climate change and the need for urgent action.

Drawdown\(^8\) provides rigorous validation of effectiveness and financial viability of climate solutions. The top 100 range from energy, farming, and transportation, to educating and enhancing the rights of women and girls.

Recommendation 2. Carbon Fee and Dividend: Just and Effective Carbon Pricing

What policy will be just and effective? Regulations could mandate change. However, they are difficult to apply to every business in a whole economy, lack support, and provide no relief for families. How do we quickly transition all developed and developing countries to a just and thriving lower-carbon economy?

Because business causes about 90 percent of the U.S. carbon footprint,\(^9\) we need all businesses to have a compelling reason to avoid carbon in their buying, to improve their efficiency, and to offer lower-carbon energy and products.

Carbon pollution’s impact on society is an externalized, or “not paid” cost of all the businesses that produce or consume carbon, leading to emissions. Businesses, through their “carbon” supply chains (from fossil fuel to energy or products), externalize the carbon cost and capture or internalize the profits.

Since it’s the core behavior of business to avoid higher costs, economists recommend using price to internalize the cost of carbon and correct a “failure in the marketplace.” The CEO of the French Public Service Pension, Philippe Desfossés, says via World Bank: “I support putting a price on carbon because it fixes a market failure.”\(^10\)

However, some carbon pricing systems, such as Cap & Trade\(^11\) or Carbon Taxes with offsets\(^12\), may have prices that are too low, have regulatory gaps, cause harm to communities, have limited coverage, or enable polluters to buy their reductions rather than change.
Just and Effective Principles

A just and effective economy-wide carbon pricing system needs to satisfy at least the following principles:

• Effective Price: A price that continuously drives changes in business behavior across the entire economy.
• No Gaps: An inescapable approach impacting every business and consumer dependent on fossil fuels.
• Just: Keeping families and communities safe from the harmful impacts of increased cost.
• Global: Compelling change to the world economy without a treaty, and compliant with World Trade Organization (WTO) rules.

These principles are met by the combination of the carbon fee, dividend, and border rules.

Recommendation 2.a. the Carbon Fee

A carbon fee\textsuperscript{13} is a small and annually rising cost per ton of CO\textsubscript{2} added to the price of fossil fuels at the mine, well head, or border.

The fee is collected as a federal “excise tax,” but paid out each month as a dividend (below). The fee internalizes the societal cost of carbon for every business across the whole economy. The carbon fee is:

• Effectively priced: Predictable fee increases each year without limit.
• Fairly applied across all fossil fuels, based on the CO\textsubscript{2} content, at the source and border.
• Driving business to continuously invest to avoid the constantly rising costs of their fossil fuel based supply chain, innovating in energy, transportation, manufacturing, agriculture, and so on.
• No Gaps: fee is applied to all fossil fuel carbon at the source: well head, mine, and border.
• Simple, transparent, unavoidable. No regulatory tradings or cap systems subject to special interests.

The carbon fee leads to:

• Fifty percent less CO/year after twenty years, based on projections by REMI, the Regional Economic Modeling Inc’s studies, based on their tax policy work since 1985.\textsuperscript{14}
• Also based on REMI’s study, 230,000 fewer premature deaths over twenty years due to the reduction in fossil fuel use, reducing harm to those communities downstream, often low-income and people of color.\textsuperscript{15}

Recommendation 2.b. Monthly Dividend: Strengthening Families and Communities

A monthly dividend\textsuperscript{16} is paid to all families by dividing the fee evenly and returning all of the fee’s revenue each month. The dividend:

• is just; carbon dividend is perhaps the only climate policy that immediately and directly contributes to the strength of families and communities;
• can be spent for basic needs or, for example, to help further reduce a family’s carbon use and cost, such as investing in more efficient light bulbs, home insulation, or transportation;
• can be a source of funds pooled by a community choosing to self fund and locally control community justice projects, avoiding the risks to projects from changing federal, state, and grant agency priorities.

The carbon dividend leads to:

• keeping more than three-fifths of U.S. families even or a little ahead of added costs;\textsuperscript{17}
• increased spending power, leading to 2.8 million more local main-street jobs over the twenty-year period.\textsuperscript{18}

Impact example: slow and steady—and you get a dividend. From 2009–2011, gasoline increased approximately a dollar/gallon.\textsuperscript{19} A fee of 10$/ton of CO\textsubscript{2} adds about nine cents to a gallon of gas each year, taking more than ten years to do the same and increasing the dividend.\textsuperscript{20}
Recommendation 2.c. Border Tariff: Effectively Leading a Worldwide Lower-Carbon Economy

Global: With border rules, the Carbon Fee & Dividend compels global carbon pricing.

Where a country is not pricing carbon, the border adjustment would add the fee to energy imports and tariff imported products. We would also compensate our exporters to countries that do not price carbon to maintain parity. Countries will find the desire to avoid our import tariff a compelling reason to also price carbon.21

WTO supports environmental trade policy that treats trading partners the same as our own country.22

Carbon Fee and Dividend Compared to Cap and Trade—Support from Dr. James Hansen

An excellent explanation offered by James Hansen23 where Cap and Trade is compared to Fee and Dividend is available as excerpts from his book, Storms of My Grandchildren, as provided by Clive Ellsworth.24

Based on Citizen’s Climate Lobby’s comparison: Cap and Trade25 requires two complex regulatory systems to work and not be unintentionally “leaky,” have unintended bias, and not be “gamed.” The fees must be high enough and the cap low enough, and cover enough of the economy to have an impact.

Carbon Fee Proved by British Columbia since 2007.

Revenue neutral carbon pricing effectiveness is proved: Canadian province British Columbia implemented carbon pricing in 2007. Their carbon pricing policy’s experience shows the policy reducing emissions and improving their economy.26

Conservative Statesmen and Economists Support Carbon Dividends

The Conservative Case for Carbon Dividends27 also calling for returning all revenue from a carbon fee to citizens, is from former Secretaries of State & Treasury, James Baker and George Shultz, many presidential economic advisers, and others.

Build on Growing Political Will in Congress

U.S. House Representatives Carlos Curbello (R) and Ted Duetch (D) are both from districts in south Florida where high King Tides bring sunny day ocean water flooding to the local streets.28 In 2016 they worked together and founded the House Climate Solutions Caucus.29 Members wishing to join do what they did: find a partner across the aisle and join together. The caucus continues to grow and has positively impacted key votes.30

Citizen’s Climate Lobby hosts a June lobby day when about a thousand volunteers meet with more than 500 representatives, senators, or staff. Meetings are ranked as productive, uninterested, or in between. It is the experience of Citizens’ Climate Lobby that generally Democratic offices are in favor of climate action and, over the last few years, conversations with Republican offices have shown increased engagement.

• In 2014, Republican office meetings were 3 to 1 to the good—three times more productive versus uninterested.

• Improving each year, in 2017, those meetings were 20 to 1 to the good—twenty times more productive meetings versus uninterested.31

Recommendation 3. PC(USA) Foundation and an Invitation to Share Resources

Congregations, presbyteries, synods, affinity groups, and the General Assembly are invited to share their climate advocacy resources, successes, and encouragement.

Appreciation is also given for our ongoing creation care work, including the work represented by:

• The Power to Speak Truth to Power (1981).32

• Hope for a Global Future (1996).33

• Declaration for us to become Carbon Neutral (2006).34

• Presbyterians for Earth Care (formerly PRC) is a nationwide network that cares for God’s Creation.36, 37

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-09

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-09.

With recognition that CO₂ emissions are a major contributor to harmful climate changes, these two overtures (Item 08-09 and Item 08-11) both advocate for carbon taxes, in different forms, to discourage the emissions of CO₂. Even though passing such a law has little chance in the current political environment, ACSWP supports this kind of policy as an ideal toward which our country should work as a part of our nation’s response to the environmental crisis. Both overtures show recognition that the problem with carbon is mainly on the demand side, which the rise in the after-tax price of carbon fuels would discourage.

Item 08-09 is the simpler and thus better carbon-tax proposal, because it taxes the carbon when it first enters the economy from out of the mine, the well, or the ship (imports). Compared to proposals that would tax the carbon at a point closer to consumption (like at the gasoline pump), would discourage CO₂ production upstream, as at the refining and transport phases. Commissioners may want to take other items from 08-12, but this A&C focuses on the main matter they share.

If this proposal came to the point of serious legislative discussion, it should be broadened in two ways. First, it should recognize that the carbon tax, while addressing efficiently the problem of global-average increased CO₂, the problem of environmental justice requires additional remedies to protect the places where poor and non-white persons live. A per capita distribution of the dividend would not adequately address this.

Second, it should include a tax on the carbon footprint of imported goods. Otherwise, US firms making carbon intensive products, say tires, would be at a competitive disadvantage vis a vis foreign firms making those products, and their production and the accompanying emission of CO₂ would simply move to foreign countries, with no net benefit to the global environment.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-09

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

ACREC laments the harm caused by climate change and the disproportionately damaging effects on people of color and seeks to actively work toward a solution. ACREC agrees with the educational component of this overture as consumer behavior is a significant factor of climate change.

On Seeking Middle Ground on Fossil Fuels—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Request the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Foundation, and Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., to consider an increasingly more diversified energy sector in their overall investment portfolios, which would increase exposure to potentially profitable alternative energy companies and/or companies with an active interest in changing the consumer market’s energy demand (e.g. automobile companies producing alternatively powered vehicles).

2. Direct Mission Responsibility Through Investments (MRTI) to pursue its focused engagement process on climate change issues with all corporations, particularly with those in the oil, gas, and coal sectors, and report back to the 224th General Assembly (2020) with recommendations, including possible selective divestment if significant changes in governance, strategy, implementation, transparency and disclosure, and public policy are not instituted by the corporations during the engagements of MRTI and ecumenical partners.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to inform the denomination and the larger public of the passage and implementation of this overture.

Rationale

Presbyterians are naturally inclined to seek middle ground and to be moderate and fair-minded in our actions. This overture is an attempt to seek that middle ground.

The action proposed in this overture is an attempt to honor our preference for finding shared values, and to press forward with the well-reasoned decisions of previous assemblies. For example, actions taken by the 223rd General Assembly (2016) endorse MRTI’s proven track record of engagement and, when appropriate, focused divestment from specific companies that fail to uphold the shared values of members of our PC(USA) congregations. MRTI should continue to call upon all corporations to increase their efforts to address climate change through vigorous action in line with well-defined expectations.
This overture is submitted in the hope that it encourages the assembly to avoid actions that may be perceived by many parishioners and others as being extreme and inflexible, vilifying faithful people who have worked hard in energy, industrial, chemical, and production industries. We believe that the most effective response is to speak with a prophetic voice calling for responsible care of God’s creation; and, at the same time, to uphold our pastoral responsibilities to care for and to love all of God’s children.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-10

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-10.

It is similar to Item 08-03, from the same presbytery. Item 08-10 focuses more on investment in alternative technologies, but the two could be combined as endorsement of an array of measures to address the causes of climate change.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-10

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-10.

ACREC laments the disproportionate harm climate change has caused to people of color and seeks to advocate for all people of color—both landowners and those who work in the industry. Therefore, in concert with the rational of the overture we reiterate: “In the hope that this overture encourages the assembly to avoid actions that may be perceived by many parishioners and others as being extreme and inflexible, vilifying faithful people who have worked hard in energy, industrial, chemical, and production industries.”

Comment on Item 08-10—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions (Board) is an agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), established by the church under a separate civil charter as the corporate body legally responsible for designing and administering the Benefits Plan and the Assistance and Education programs for the ministers and lay employees of PC(USA) churches and associated employers. The Board is required by law and its governance and plan documents to administer these programs and invest their funds for the sole and exclusive benefit of the members and their beneficiaries. The Board is exclusively managed and controlled by its board of directors who are elected by the General Assembly. The Board maintains a close cooperative relationship with the other General Assembly agencies.

The Board shares a deep concern for God’s world and has worked actively to support the Collaborative Agenda for Environmental Stewardship developed by all six agencies of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In 2016, the Board’s Pension Portfolio invested in a global fossil-free fund, the largest investment in such a fund ever made by a Presbyterian entity. The value of that investment as of December 31, 2017, was $116 million. In addition, the Board established a fossil-free mutual fund investment option for participants in the Board’s 403(b)(9) Retirement Savings Plan (RSP). Despite significant promotion, only 148 of the 11,957 participants in the RSP have elected the fossil-free fund option.

Although the Board supports the environmental goal of all four overtures, it nonetheless recommends disapproval of Items 08-01 and 08-02 due to structural and technical concerns addressed in the specific comments below. The Board urges the approval of Items 08-03 and 08-10, which effectively provide a comprehensive response to climate change.

Comment Specific to Item 08-01, On Directing the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to Divest from Fossil Fuel and Actively Invest in Securities That Focus on Renewable Energy

This overture seeks to bypass the work of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee of the General Assembly (MRTI) that has been highly effective in its engagement of climate change issues as directed by 222nd General Assembly (2016). MRTI’s process does not preclude divestment of bad actors, but provides a studied and deliberative process for such determinations. One of those steps is consultation with Presbyterians who might be affected by such action, a step that has not been addressed in this recommendation. By way of example, MRTI recommended divestment of certain United States companies engaged with Israeli military forces in Palestine. That recommendation was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014). MRTI is not recommending complete divestment from the entire fossil-fuel industry sector.

This overture fails to recognize the process through which individual companies are added to the church’s prohibited securities list. Each year, MRTI develops a recommended list of prohibited securities. At the Board of Pensions, this list is presented to the Investment Committee, the governance body entrusted with responsibility for the investment management of the Benefits Plan and Assistance and Education funds held by the Board. The Investment Committee determines whether to approve the list in whole or part and further can add additional securities as it determines such investment decisions are in the best interest of the members and beneficiaries of the Board’s funds. The resulting list is then distributed to all of the Board’s separate investment managers.

While the General Assembly may applaud and encourage such investments as the Pax Global Strategy fossil-free investment in the Board’s balanced investment portfolio, by law, the Investment Committee of the Board cannot be directed to make any particular investment. All investments are vetted through a rigorous diligence process and must meet the requirements of appropriate risk/return, diversification and established asset allocations required by the governance and legal requirements applicable to the Board’s funds. As a parallel, the General Assembly cannot direct individuals to make any particular investment. All investments are vetted through a rigorous diligence process and must meet the requirements of appropriate risk/return, diversification and asset allocations required by the governance and legal requirements applicable to the Board’s funds. As a parallel, the General Assembly cannot direct individuals to make any particular investment.

Finally, as written, this overture is overly broad. There is no consensus definition of “the fossil-fuel industry.” This fact highlights the need for MRTI to undertake focused and specific work around engagement and the determination of when or if divestment in a specific company is appropriate.

Comment Specific to Item 08-02, On Adding to the GA Divestment List All Companies That Meet Specific Listed Criteria

Like Item 08-01, this overture seeks to bypass the work of the MRTI, which has been highly effective in its engagement of climate change issues as directed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016). By way of example, MRTI recently led ecumenical coalitions in successfully passing shareholder resolutions with Exxon Mobil, including the need to report on the impacts of climate change to its business.

MRTI’s process does not preclude divestment of recalcitrant companies, but provides a process for such determinations. One of those steps in potential divestment is consultation with Presbyterians who might be affected by such action, a step that is not acknowledged in this recommendation. MRTI is not recommending divestment of the fossil fuel industry at this time. This overture seeks to substitute its recommendation for that of the MRTI members duly elected by the General Assembly.

Recommendation 3.a. calls out the Carbon Underground 200 list. This list is unreliable and does not meet the standards of due diligence and prudent investment required of the Board. Fossil Free Indexes LLC produces this list and provides the following warning on its website,

…the materials published by Fossil Free Indexes on this Web Site solely for personal, informational, and non-commercial use …, and

“THE INFORMATION, PRODUCTS AND SERVICES CONTAINED ON THIS WEB SITE MAY BE OUT OF DATE OR INCLUDE OMISSIONS, INACCURACIES OR OTHER ERRORS…. ALL INFORMATION, PRODUCTS AND SERVICES ARE PROVIDED “AS-IS” WITHOUT WARRANTY OF ANY KIND” [EMPHASIS in original].

Unlike Recommendation 3.a., Recommendations 3.b. and 3.c. each lack required specifics. Before any such discussion could occur, the advocates seeking to replace their judgment for MRTI are obligated to develop a list of companies that they believe meet the proposed criteria. Once developed, then the proper course would be to engage with MRTI to determine which of these companies are held by a PC(USA) entity and what the current state of engagement might be.

Comment Specific Item 08-03, On Engagement with the Issue of Climate Change

The Board supports the approval of Item 08-03 as it represents a comprehensive response to climate change endorsing action at the denominational, congregational, and individual level. It affirms God’s call to stewardship and advocacy. It recognizes that those most deeply affected are those often in greatest economic need. It respects the long-established and effective research, corporate engagement, and divestment consideration process of the General Assembly Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments.

Comment Specific Item 08-10, On Engaging Environmental Investments

The Board supports the approval of Item 08-10, which calls upon the PC(USA) agencies responsible for the investment of PC(USA) and Benefits Plan funds, to consider increasing investments in profitable alternative energy companies or companies that address consumer energy demands, because those requests promote advocacy while respecting the independent legal responsibilities and obligations of those agencies with respect to their investment decisions. The overture also respects the long-established and effective research, corporate engagement, and divestment consideration process of the General Assembly with the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment.

On Regarding Use of Products Made of Polystyrene [Foam]—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA) to do the following:

1. Direct the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Foundation, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, and other related agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to reduce, to the maximum extent feasible, use of products made of polystyrene[foam].

2. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Office of Environmental Ministries, to communicate with the more than 9,000 congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urging them to reduce to the maximum extent feasible use of products made of polystyrene [foam].

Rationale

The production, use, and disposal of polystyrene (a substance more commonly known by the brand-name “Styrofoam”) is linked to adverse environmental and health effects.1, 2 According to the Environmental Production Agency, polystyrene is the fifth largest source of hazardous waste in the United States. Polystyrene is composed of Benzene and Styrene, both of which are known human carcinogens. Ninety thousand workers are estimated to be exposed to Styrene every year. This exposure can cause a variety of mutations to the central and peripheral nervous systems. Benzene and Styrene have been linked to incidences of both Parkinson’s disease and leukemia. Hydrofluorocarbons (HFCs), which are used in the production of polystyrene, cause damage to the ozone layer, and are now known to be three-to-five times more dangerous than originally believed. Thus, the California Integrated Waste Management Board ranks the environmental production costs of polystyrene as second worst in the United States. In addition, when polystyrene is used in a microwave oven, toxic chemicals are released, posing a potential threat to human health.

Products made of polystyrene are lightweight, and it is not economically viable in most communities to recycle these products. It is especially difficult to recycle polystyrene plates and cups used for food service due to the costs of grease removal and transportation. Used items therefore end up in landfills or as litter. Approximately 25–30 percent of landfill volume is dedicated to plastics, including polystyrene, which requires at least five hundred years to decompose. Polystyrene is a primary source of urban litter, and is a main pollutant of oceans, bays, and other United States water sources. Polystyrene products cause choking and starvation in wildlife.

Our denomination affirms concern with caring for God’s creation. It is appropriate to take personal and institutional responsibility by ending our use of polystyrene and polystyrene products.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-11

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-11.

With recognition that CO2 emissions are a major contributor to harmful climate changes, these two overtures (Item 08-09 and Item 08-11) both advocate for carbon taxes, in different forms, to discourage the emissions of CO2. Even though passing such a law has little chance in the current political environment, ACSWP supports this kind of policy as an ideal toward which our country should work as a part of our nation’s response to the environmental crisis. ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-11

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-11. ACREC agrees that consumer behavior is a significant factor of climate change, which disproportionately affects people of color. As our prophetic witness we need to adjust our own consumer practices.

On Supporting Carbon Pricing—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant respectfully overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to do the following:

1. Express its profound concern about the destructive effects of climate change on all God’s creation, including a disproportionate impact on those living in poverty and in the least developed countries, the elderly and children, and those least responsible for the emissions of greenhouse gases.

2. Recognize the Gospel’s call and the moral mandate for humanity to shift to a sustainable energy regime in ways that are both just and compassionate. This mandate compels us to action as a denomination to implement strategies and actions that directly engage climate change and that offer a realistic prospect of changing the behaviors that are at the root of the issue.

3. Work with citizens/voters, legislators, other decision-makers, and other organizations that have parallel goals to bring into effect national and international policies that create a consistent, rational, and escalating price for emissions of CO₂ and other greenhouse gases, which will reduce consumption and support investment in sustainable alternative energy sources.

4. Protect the poor by advocating policies that implement emissions pricing and offset the regressive nature of the pricing mechanism, such as per capita rebates of all taxes or fees collected through the pricing mechanism.

5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Office of Public Witness, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in collaboration with the Presbyterian Mission Agency programs (such as Presbyterian Environmental Ministries and its Earth Care Congregations) to advocate at local, state, and federal levels for policies to rationally price the production of carbon and, therefore, reduce greenhouse gas emissions. This advocacy would include the following:

   • Work with other faith-based organizations (such as Interfaith Power and Light, Creation Justice Ministries, GreenFaith) to maximize our effectiveness in taking individual and collective action to slow climate change.

   • Develop educational materials to assist congregations and councils of the church in understanding the impact of climate change and how to take action to slow climate change.

6. Commend the Office of Faith-Based Investing and Corporate Engagement (and the multi-agency board Mission Responsibility through Investment (MRTI)) for its long history of engagement with companies on issues related to climate change, and instruct MRTI to continue that engagement, especially in support of carbon pricing.

7. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to inform the denomination and the larger public of the passage and implementation of this overture.

[8. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to support congregations’ advocacy with elected officials on climate action including just carbon pricing such as carbon fee and dividend.]

In 2006, the General Assembly passed a resolution calling all Presbyterians to go carbon neutral as our Christian witness to combat the effects of climate change (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 895ff, Commissioners’ Resolution. On Calling All Presbyterians to Take Positive and Immediate Steps to Live Carbon Neutral Lives.).

In 2008, our church made clear through the document, “The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming,” that the catastrophic effects of climate change make the transition to renewable and away from dependence on fossil fuels essential to the preservation of human life and God’s good creation (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 934ff).

We, as Christians, have the privilege, responsibility, and obligation to speak with moral authority on issues of great importance. This is such an issue.

It is not enough simply to speak truth to power. We must enact in our individual, congregational, and denominational lives meaningful approaches that directly address concerns about climate change and that may require sacrifice. This overture seeks to unite all Presbyterians in directly engaging climate change with responsible, meaningful, and lasting actions that will make a difference in the future of God’s creation. We recognize that emission of greenhouse gases leading to climate change encompasses every sector of our modern economy, at home and around the globe. The following lists major areas that are linked in complex ways: (1) Transportation—American dependence on the gasoline-powered private automobile rather than support of mass transportation and alternative automobile fuels; (2) Agricultural production, particularly the industrial-scale production of meat, but also heavy dependence on fossil fuel based fertilizers and pesticides; (3) Energy consumption for heating and cooling of virtually all human-inhabited structures; (4) Communications and information technology that uses vast amounts of energy and precious metals; (5) Health care goods and services and medical advances that rely on plastics (hydrocarbon-based products). We cannot extricate ourselves from these systems without withdrawing from modern life. Every member of the PC(USA) uses fossil fuels daily in hundreds of applications that significantly improve quality of life, and yet we also succumb to mindless consumption of products that damage the earth and our fellow human beings. Acknowledging our complicity in damage to the earth, we resolve to move forward together toward a post-fossil fuel economy.

Some Positive Steps

In the ten years since “The Power to Change,” progress has been made on many fronts to advance renewable energy sources and technologies, and there have been setbacks as well, most recently the declaration by the Trump administration to withdraw from the 2015 Paris Climate Accord. We begin with some good news: The United States has been gradually reducing its greenhouse gas emissions in recent years. Between 2004 and 2013, emissions in total declined nearly 9 percent, while per capita emissions are down more than 15 percent. China has made significant investments in green energy. It plans to increase its solar-energy capacity this year alone by 18 gigawatts—as much solar-energy capacity as exists in the U.S. right now. Its wind-energy production has increased tenfold in half-a-dozen years, and the country is in the midst of what one analyst called "the largest build-out of hydroelectricity the world has ever seen." The cost of solar power is rapidly declining. In the sunniest locations in the world, building a new solar-power plant now costs less than coal or natural gas, even without subsidies, and within six years, this will be true of places with average sunlight, too. Coal (the dirtiest of fossil fuels) production has declined in favor of natural gas and is unlikely to resume its former prominence.

Biblical and Theological Rationale

Ecology and justice are implicit in the story of creation itself: “The Lord God took the man and put him in the garden of Eden to till it and keep it” (Gen. 2:15, emphasis added). As the 1990 study, Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice, (“RCEJ”) observes, “tilling” requires a community effort that establishes an economy; “keeping” is an act of environmental stewardship that regards the creation as a gift to be cared for. RCEJ identifies four norms that characterize “a new faithfulness” reflecting God’s love for the world: sustainability, participation, sufficiency, and solidarity. These highlight the inherent tensions. We cannot address only the good of the creation without also considering the good of the community. We cannot address only the good of the community without considering the good of creation. Global climate change, regardless of its cause, threatens both the community and the earth over which we are stewards. Our call is to address these threats responsibly, with meaningful effect, while promoting economic justice.

Denominational and Faith-Based Rationale
Our denomination has long recognized a moral obligation to be faithful stewards of God’s creation. We have acknowledged the realities of climate change and its effect on the “least of these,” and the need to take action. Previous General Assemblies (1981, 1998, 1999, 2003, 2006, and 2008) have passed overtures, resolutions, and reports warning us of the dangers of climate change and calling on us to reduce our energy consumption and transition away from fossil fuels. Now is the time to move beyond pronouncements and symbolic actions into education and behavioral changes.

People of every faith tradition are recommitting to the theological call to stewardship in increasing numbers. GreenFaith: Interfaith Partners for the Environment includes Jewish, Muslim, Buddhist, and Christian traditions. Our traditional partners from the mainline Protestant tradition are joined by Roman Catholics energized by Pope Francis’ highly regarded encyclical Laudato Si as well as Young Evangelicals for Climate Action and the Evangelical Environmental Network. It is particularly encouraging that young members are deeply committed to creation care.4

An Effective Approach

The actions proposed in this overture include advocacy to bring into effect consistent, rational pricing of CO₂ and other greenhouse gas emissions, together with mechanisms to protect the poor by addressing the inherently regressive nature of any such system.

From our perspective, the root cause of the climate change issue is behaviors—both consumption and investment. We all engage in destructive behaviors. We do this in part because we do not bear the full social costs of our behaviors, a problem that economists label “negative externalities.” Consistent rational pricing of emissions will enlist market forces to drive those changes in individual and institutional consumption necessary to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and will provide the economic incentive necessary to promote investment to develop and implement low-carbon or zero-carbon infrastructure and technologies. Affordable energy would continue to be available to drive responsible economic development, while emissions driven by our consumption would decline. We thus address our dual responsibility to promote the well-being of the disadvantaged and to protect the earth.

The actions proposed in this overture will address the problem, they will have a practical effect, we are prepared to be subject to the proposed system ourselves, and—assuming the regressive effects are properly dealt with—the proposed actions will advance economic justice.

Even if the more disastrous scenarios of climate change do not materialize, pricing carbon (reducing our consumption and investing more in renewable energy sources) has little downside. Pricing carbon can therefore be seen as insurance against the more dire consequences of climate change. It will also conserve our hydrocarbon resources for that many more generations.

We recognize that the consistent pricing of greenhouse gas emissions will affect the business prospects of the fossil fuel industry and industries that rely on fossil fuels, and we are not insensitive to the challenge this may create for those employed in or dependent upon those industries. We note that it is the intent of our proposal that greenhouse gas emissions be priced so as to reflect the full social and environmental cost of their production. We note also that it is the responsibility of every industry to adapt to changes in prices in the markets in which it operates. As the global economy adapts to rational pricing of emissions, we expect our investment managers to adjust our portfolios. We expect investments to be shifted away from firms and industries that adapt poorly to the new alternative energy economy and toward firms and industries that should benefit.

An effective method of pricing is a Carbon Fee and Dividend as developed and advocated by Citizens’ Climate Lobby.

Citizens’ Climate Lobby’s Carbon Fee and Dividend Proposal

The Citizens Climate Lobby (CCL) has developed and is advocating for a comprehensive approach to implement such a plan. Full details may be found at the CCL website https://citizensclimatelobby.org/. The fee is collected on the major greenhouse gases (which include CO₂ and methane) when they are produced (at the well or mine) or imported, and the amount is based on the amount of CO₂-equivalent produced when burned or emitted. The dividend is the return of 100 percent of the fees to the public on a per capita basis. The carbon fee and dividend should be implemented as soon as practical at a moderate level of $15/MT to $40/MT. (The current official CCL proposal starts at $15/MT, while others advocate starting somewhat higher.) That level is increased every year (at a rate of $10 per MT per year) to provide clear price signals to consumers and industry.

The CCL plan phases in the emissions price over time, rather than jumping from the current explicit price of zero to the full social cost all in one step, and then raises the fee annually to continually increase the incentive to shift to cleaner energy sources.

This predictable increase will allow industry to make the large investments necessary to expand alternative energy sources and become more efficient while providing the energy we and the world need. The fee assures that market prices favor lower carbon energy sources, while the dividend redresses the inherently regressive nature of the fee. For example, electricity produced by natural gas generates about 50 percent of the CO₂ produced by generating from coal. A $15/MT carbon fee will add about 1.6¢/kwhr to the price of electricity from coal, but only 0.6¢/kwhr for electricity from natural gas-based electricity (assuming a U.S. average price of 10¢/kwhr). After a decade the fee will have increased to $115/MT, adding 12.1¢/kwhr for coal but only 5.0¢/kwhr for natural gas. Looking at the example of gasoline, a $15/MT fee will add about 15¢/gallon at the pump, increasing to $1.15/gallon over a decade.

In the CCL plan, the dividend would be allocated based on “shares,” with one share per person up to 4 shares per family and a half share for children under 18. At the current levels of consumption and energy mix, the dividend would start at several hundred dollars per year (distributed monthly) and would rise to more than a thousand dollars in a decade. A carbon fee and dividend transfers money from capital intensive to more labor-intensive segments of the economy, and is projected to provide an economic stimulus.

A third implementation detail that a carbon fee and dividend must address is a system of border adjustments to assure that production of energy-intensive products is not forced off shore. These import fees on products imported from countries without a carbon price (along with rebates for exports to countries without a price of carbon) will create a fair competitive environment for exporters. A carbon fee and dividend is the most transparent, predictable, and transportable method of pricing greenhouse gases around the world. When the United States enacts such a proposal, our huge economy will be a powerful driver for the countries without a price on carbon to adopt similar carbon pricing policies.

There is tremendous energy inequality around the world. The developed nations (which have contributed the most to the carbon emissions that are driving climate change) need to lead the development of low-carbon and no-carbon alternatives. A carbon fee and dividend will drive the growth of alternative energy sources and efficiency improvements that will benefit developing countries, allowing them to have greater access to lower-carbon energy sources and thus partially leap frog the “carbon stage.” A key requirement of any energy and climate action is that it must support developing countries to provide greater access to energy and allow all people to reach their full potential.

Summary

We Presbyterians approach creation with the twin perspectives of responsible use (“tilling”) and sustainable care (“keeping”). An ethic of stewardship, therefore, considers God’s creation as a good in itself beyond utilitarian value, though creation is God’s way of providing resources for human growth and community. The responsibility of holding wealth is directed toward an ethic of engagement that seeks to use the wealth to transform injustice and immorality. The necessary changes in consumption and investment behavior would be greatly accelerated and facilitated by consistent, rational pricing of CO₂ and other greenhouse gas emissions. Action to bring about that outcome would be consistent with long-standing denominational policy statements and would be a faithful response to the urgent climate change issues that are before us.

Endnotes

1. Citizens’ Climate Lobby is one such organization and their proposed Carbon Fee and Dividend is one effective method of Carbon Pricing.
3. Sustainability means “the ongoing capacity of natural and social systems to thrive together—which requires human beings to practice wise, humble, responsible stewardship, after the model of servanthood that we have in Jesus. Participation refers to the inclusion of all members of the human family in obtaining and enjoying the Creator’s gifts for sustenance. Sufficiency provides for all to have enough through equitable sharing and organized efforts to achieve that end. Solidarity means “steadfastness in standing with companions, victims, and allies … to the realization of the church’s potential as a community of support for adventurous faithfulness.”

Advice & Counsel on Item 08-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 08-12. ACREC laments the harm caused by climate change and the disproportionately damaging effects on people of color and seeks to actively work toward a solution. ACREC agrees with the educational component of this overture as consumer behavior is a significant factor of climate change.

On Support and Prayer for the Church and People of South Sudan—From the Presbytery of Shenango.

The Presbytery of Shenango overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take the following actions:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to:

   a. Issue a formal statement condemning the actions of those who initiated and perpetuate the conflict in South Sudan and of support and prayer for the church and people of South Sudan, and communicate this statement to the government of South Sudan and international bodies through appropriate diplomatic channels.

   b. Call upon the president of the United States, the U.S. State Department, and appropriate congressional leaders to promote a just and lasting peace in South Sudan by:

      (1) Putting pressure on all sides, including the current government in Juba under President Salva Kiir, the militia groups supported by former Vice-President Riek Machar, and all other armed groups, to adhere to a ceasefire;

      (2) Freezing the financial assets of the leaders of all armed groups who fail to agree to and implement a ceasefire, including the president and current and former first vice president;

      (3) Introducing new and effective measures to put pressure on the government of South Sudan to end the war and to address public corruption and misappropriation of state assets;

      (4) Promoting an inclusive peace process that provides all political parties and armed actors a place at the table and gives representatives of women, youth, faith communities, the Diaspora, and other civil society organizations an equal voice with the political and armed groups in all negotiations dealing with future governance;

      (5) Intensifying U.S. efforts to secure peace in South Sudan through such measures as the appointment of a special envoy;

      (6) Ensuring safe, unhindered passage for humanitarian aid into camps for Internally Displaced People (IDP) and protection for displaced peoples in those camps, especially women and children who have been disproportionately affected by the violence. Call for urgent implementation of United Nations Security Council Resolution no. 2304/2016;

      (7) Working for an end to sexual violence, and looting of properties and killing of the innocent inhabitants, which is being used by all sides as an instrument of war, and for justice for survivors of sexual violence and punishment of the perpetrators;

      (8) Supporting free and fair elections;

      (9) After a warning, withholding military assistance to nations that continue to provide weapons to the government of South Sudan;

      (10) Declaring the current Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan (ARCSS) a failure, recognizing the need for its revitalization and calling for the establishment of an interim government consistent with a revitalized ARCSS prior to elections.

   c. Urge the president of the United States, the U.S. State Department, and appropriate congressional leaders to enhance regional and global security by promoting stable and effective governance and strong and responsive democratic institutions in Sub-Saharan Africa.

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the Office of Public Witness and the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, to advocate for public policy that:
a. Protects the human rights of the people of South Sudan;
b. Promotes transparent, accountable, and effective democracy in South Sudan;
c. Advances the objectives delineated in Recommendation 1.

3. Encourage presbyteries, congregations, and individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:
   a. Continue to pray with the churches and people of South Sudan for an end to conflict, safe and effective delivery of humanitarian aid, a government led by servant leaders, forgiveness, reconciliation, accountability, and justice, leading to true peace and fullness of life for God’s people.
   b. Support the ministry and witness of our partners in the South Sudan Evangelical Presbyterian Church and the Presbyterian Church of South Sudan and the ecumenical bodies in which they participate.
   c. Learn about the mission work of the PC(USA) in South Sudan and continue to support PC(USA) mission co-workers [and encourage donations to PDA’s South Sudan Direct Account].

Rationale

Presbyterians have been working in what is now South Sudan for more than 100 years. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Trinity Presbytery, the Presbytery of Shenango, and the Presbytery of Redstone have long-standing partnerships with the Presbyterian Church of South Sudan and the South Sudan Presbyterian Evangelical Church. The Presbytery of Pittsburgh and others have more recently established similar relationships. Over the years we have developed strong bonds of communion in worship, work, and prayer with our South Sudanese brothers and sisters in Christ.

In December 2013, South Sudan, the youngest country in the world, became fractured from political differences; it has since been suffering from horrible, internal warfare. Government troops and opposing armed groups have killed tens of thousands and sent four million men, women, and children fleeing to Internal Displacement Camps and Refugee Camps in Ethiopia, Congo, Uganda, Sudan, and Kenya. The result of the continuing conflict is almost unspeakably horrible humanitarian abuse, manmade famine, and continuing crises. Church leaders and members, along with their neighbors, are struggling to survive amidst the devastation around them. They live in a war zone of endless conflict and heartbreak. Still, the grievous conflict involving armed groups, who are slaughtering men, women, and children indiscriminately, continues to block efforts for peace and humanitarian relief. Obviously, the sharing and spread of the gospel of Jesus Christ has been severely impacted.

The initial international efforts to end the conflict focused on the need for an African solution to an African problem. Out of that encouragement, in 2015 an agreement was reached between the government of South Sudan and the primary opposition group, the Sudan Peoples’ Liberation Movement—In Opposition (SPLM-I/O). This Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan (ARCSS) was never supported by all the signatories and has been declared a failure by designated monitoring bodies, yet the government of South Sudan is planning elections in 2018 based on the ARCSS document requirements. Such elections cannot be fair or inclusive under the current circumstances. Thus the U.S. government clearly must add to those voices that have declared ARCSS a failure and require a renegotiation of the peace agreement. Otherwise ongoing peace efforts will almost certainly fail.

This conflict has been imposed on the people by the leaders. Peace will be impossible for South Sudan and conflict is likely to spread to the region unless the leaders’ hearts are changed or there is adequate external influence. We, our partners in Christ, and all the people of South Sudan long for a time when “justice will roll down like waters and righteousness like an everflowing stream” (Amos 5:24) so that accountability and ministries of forgiveness, trauma healing, and reconciliation lead to a just and lasting future peace.

The breadth and depth of manmade suffering, destruction, and death cannot be ignored by the men, women, and children of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This demands a formal statement of condemnation of those who caused and continue the conflict and of support and prayer for the church and people of South Sudan.

While the current conflict and humanitarian disaster demands our urgent action, we also must be alert to the potential for broader destabilization and conflict in Sub-Saharan Africa. With ISIS having failed in Syria and Iraq, many analysts expect those forces to try to reestablish themselves in Africa. South Sudan, because of its current instability, is highly vulnerable and a likely target of ISIS. A strong U.S. policy for Sub-Saharan Africa must be developed, clearly articulated, broadly disseminated, and enforced to prevent the spread of terrorism and the potential future slaughter of Christians and moderate Muslims as has been witnessed in Syria and Iraq.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-02.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns highlights the importance of the role of women in peacemaking efforts. The ACWC would encourage future peacemaking reports and resolutions to include an affirmation of the essential role that women play in peacemaking, in much the same way that the UN Security Council Resolution 1325 cites the importance of “Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, and stressing the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution.” [United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 (2000).]

News source News Deeply reported in August 2017 that, while “The United Nations peacekeeping mission in South Sudan has few women in its ranks, they, nonetheless, play an important role in gathering information from the population and helping the local police investigate sexual and gender-based violence. Further, women bring a different perspective to peacekeeping operations.” [News Deeply: “Women of Peace;” https://www.newsdeeply.com/peacebuilding/articles/2017/08/31/south-sudans-women-peacekeepers-tackle-the-problems-that-men-cant]

The ACWC lifts this up for the consideration of those writing future resolutions. By including women, a new perspective is gained as the concerns for women may be vastly different than those of concern to men.

Therefore, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-02.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-02

Comment on Item 09-02—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

In 2011, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) joined with our partners in South Sudan, including the Presbyterian Church of South Sudan (PCOSS), the South Sudan Presbyterian Evangelical Church (SSPEC), and the South Sudan Council of Churches in welcoming the establishment of the new nation of South Sudan. The current conflict, which broke out in December 2013, has betrayed efforts to bring peace, justice, and security to the region, killing more than 50,000 people and displacing 3.5 million more.

Our partners in South Sudan have worked diligently for an end to the conflict, even as they minister faithfully to those affected by it. They have asked repeatedly for prayers and advocacy to urge the belligerents to negotiate a just peace. Item 09-02 was drafted by the Sudan/South Sudan Mission Network. Their work was informed by insights gleaned from Presbyterian Mission Agency consultations, through World Mission, with South Sudanese partners.

The overture in Recommendation 6, urges support of safe and free passage of humanitarian aid into camps, but misses an important opportunity to urge Presbyterians to participate in providing aid through donations to Presbyterian Disaster Assistance’s South Sudan Direct Response account. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance has been partnering with the Presbyterian Church of South Sudan and the South Sudan Council of Churches since 2011 to provide humanitarian relief to citizens, refugees, and internally displaced persons, and support the peacebuilding and development objectives of the Presbyterian Church of South Sudan.

On Support of Peace Churches in the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of San Jose.

The Presbytery of San Jose overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Celebrate with gratitude the completion of the “Peace Discernment” effort of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to “seek clarity as to God’s call to the church to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to the challenges of violence, terror, and war” and to “identify, explore, and nurture new approaches to active peacemaking and nonviolence” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 68, 967).

2. Acknowledge the wonderful materials and curriculum that the Peace Discernment Steering Team made available to the churches for their discernment work and the inspiration it gave to many.
3. Acknowledge that the Five Affirmations were one of the fruits of this church-wide discernment and commend them to all church sessions for reading and study: https://www.presbyterianmission.org/resource/five-peacemaking-affirmations/. [Each of the five affirmations is supported in the full report: https://www.pc-biz.org/#/search/3000047. This is also presented in the short study book from Westminster/JohnKnoxPress, Five Risks Presbyterians Must Take for Peace: https://www.wjkbooks.com/Content/Site117/FilesSamples/307161FiveRisks_0000026401.pdf.]

4. Acknowledge that many churches have continued their own process of discernment and some have declared themselves “Peace Churches,” while others continue to study, pray, reflect, and explore this subject in their own church community.

5. Recognize and commend those churches who have declared themselves “Peace Churches” and encourage all churches interested in peace to continue their own discernment and further encourage the Peacemaking Program to maintain a list of churches who declare themselves “Peace Churches” on the Peacemaking Program website when they are notified by said churches.

6. Encourage the Peacemaking Program to republish the discernment materials developed in the “Peace Discernment” process for use by churches and others who wish to continue their own educational and discernment process.

7. Encourage the Peacemaking Program to identify or develop curriculum [that explores the full spectrum of biblical and Reformed theological thinking concerning war] to help young adults discern their position on war and violence before registering with the Selective Service System for possible military conscription as required by federal law.

8. [Reaffirm] [Affirm] the PC(USA) policy on conscientious objection, including our long support for selective conscientious objection, and encourage those who are conscientious objectors to register their decision with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly as established by previous General Assemblies and described in “Presbyterians and Military Service,” http://oga.pcusa.org/section/stated-clerk/stated-clerk/conscientious-objection/.

Rationale

During the Peace Discernment process from 2010 to 2016, the church committed many resources and many talented people contributed their expertise to create a significant body of biblical, theological, and historical information. The quality of these contributions is exceptional and because of these materials, many churches have declared or are in the process exploring whether to declare themselves “Peace Churches.” A few examples include First Presbyterian Church of Palo Alto (Presbytery of San Jose), the Church of Reconciliation in Chapel Hill, N.C. (Presbytery of New Hope) and Montclair Presbyterian Church in Oakland, Calif. (Presbytery of San Francisco).

The ongoing violence (of which the Las Vegas massacre is only the latest event) that has become a daily occurrence within our communities, our country, and the world demands that we continue to understand how to engage as peacemakers with the growing violence and terror. As Rabbi Abraham Heschel said, “we are not all guilty, but we are all responsible.” The completion of the “Peace Discernment” process should not be the end but should be the beginning of an ongoing pursuit of justice and peace for all God’s people.

For those churches who are continuing this difficult work by declaring themselves a “Peace Church,” the PC(USA) should be able to acknowledge their commitment as consistent with the spirit of the “Peace Discernment” process.

During the “Peace Discernment” process, there was a wonderful curriculum that was created to help congregations engage in conversation as well as share a spectrum of experiences and opinions in the spirit of inquiry. This curriculum should not be lost but should be republished for the benefit of the entire church.

Our congregational baptismal vows commit us to the ongoing guidance and nurture of all the young people in our churches by word and deed with love and prayer, encouraging them to know and follow Christ. Therefore, we should be assisting our young people to complete an “inventory of conscience” to help them to discern their beliefs about war and violence. The materials from the “Peace Discernment” process should be part of such a curriculum. Other helpful resources are available from the Center on Conscience & War and the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship.

Recognizing the importance of registering conscientious objectors with the Office of the Stated Clerk as prescribed in OGA document, http://oga.pcusa.org/media/uploads/oga/pdf/conscientiousobj.pdf, let us reaffirm this policy and confirm that the processes for registering conscientious objectors are straightforward and manageable for all concerned.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-03

Advice & Counsel on Item 09-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-03 overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to support congregations that identify as “peace churches,” as one of several ways to build on the Peace Discernment process of 2010–2016.
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 09-08 be approved as amended in Recommendations 3, 7, and 8 below: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through and with brackets; text to be added or inserted is shown with an underline and with brackets.]

“3. Acknowledge that the Five Affirmations were one of the fruits of this church-wide discernment and commend them to all church sessions for reading and study: https://www.presbyterianmission.org/resource/five-peacemaking-affirmations/

[Each of the five affirmations is supported in the full report: https://www.pc-biz.org/#/search/3000047. Which is also presented in the short study book from Westminster/JohnKnox Press, Five Risks Presbyterians Must Take for Peace: https://www.wikibooks.com/Content/Site117/FilesSamples/307161FiveRisks_00000026401.pdf]

“8. [Reaffirm] [Affirm] the PC(USA) policy on conscientious objection[, including our long support for selective conscientious objection,] and encourage those who are conscientious objectors to register their decision with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly as established by previous General Assemblies and described in “Presbyterians and Military Service,” https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/conscientiousobj1.pdf.”

The proponents of this overture lift up the Peace Discernment process initiated at the 219th General Assembly (2010) to look at:

- the effects of what was then nine years of war in Afghanistan and seven years in Iraq,
- the role of nonviolent resistance in the opening of Eastern Europe, the generally peaceful changes in South Africa, Northern Ireland, the Philippines, and elsewhere, and the partial success (then) of the “Arab Spring.”

The recommended additions to Recommendation 3. provide the full report of the 22nd General Assembly (2016) and the curriculum already published to interpret it. The full report looks at the current grinding tragedies of war and terrorism in light of our Reformed tradition and Presbyterian witness in the United States. It provides a definition and analysis of “peace churches” (as well as of the Just War tradition and Just Peacemaking) that are missing from the overture.

The proponent presbyteries lift up three congregations that have taken steps to identify themselves as “peace churches,” which is the historic designation for pacifist churches such as the Mennonites, Church of the Brethren, and the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers). They suggest using the following study materials from the Peace Discernment process: https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/3-peace-discernment-interim-report-2012.pdf and https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/1-ga_221_item_11-11_risking_peacemaking_in_a_violent_world-2014.pdf.

In addition to the responses to those materials received from congregations and presbyteries, the peace discernment process included a survey by Research Services that indicated fewer than 1 percent of Presbyterians would term themselves pacifist. At the same time, by approving the basic Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling (1980) and a congregational Commitment to Peacemaking, or by affirming the “Just Peacemaking” principles designed to prevent war (approved by the General Assembly in 1998), many Presbyterian congregations could be called, “Just Peace” churches.

The proponents are to be commended for urging study and action on these vital matters, and for suggesting that particular congregations as well as individuals consider going beyond the general consensus that the use of force by the military (or in policing) be the absolute last resort. God alone is Lord of the conscience and may well lead congregations to add their own affirmations or “risks” to those approved by the General Assembly. But we do recommend that the full picture be understood.

Thus, the addition to Recommendation 7. is to clarify the need for a curriculum that is rooted in the whole counsel of the Bible’s witness and our theological tradition.

The addition to Recommendation 8. is to remind us that the PC(USA) supports selective conscientious objection that allows persons of conscience to object to particular wars and commands on the battlefield. Like the peace churches, the PC(USA) also supports the conscientious decision to practice thorough-going nonviolence or pacifism.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-03

Advice & Counsel on Item 09-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-03.

The commitment to peace is one of the most urgently needed priorities of the global church, the community, and the world. It is an integral part of our biblical mandate and reformed theology. We live in an age of violence, war, and extremism. Churches committed to being witnesses of peace in such time should be encouraged and supported. Their models of faithful witness to peace and reconciliation will bring glory to God and a fulfillment of Christ’s commandment to be peacemakers and healers in a deeply hurt, divided culture.

On Endorsing Affirmations Regarding the Welfare of Our Neighbors in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador—from the Presbytery of the Pacific.

The Presbytery of the Pacific overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to endorse the following affirmations and actions regarding the welfare of our neighbors in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador (the Northern Triangle of Central America) and the welfare of [all] migrants and refugees in the United States.

The 223rd General Assembly (2018) directs the Stated Clerk and other representatives of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the PC(USA) Washington Office, the Office of Immigration, Presbyterian World Mission, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program to advocate for region-wide and country-specific changes in policy, as requested by the Reformed Calvinist Church of El Salvador (IRCES), including the following:

1. Develop a United Witness in the Americas: Act in greater solidarity, advocacy, partnership, and hospitality with the church in the Northern Triangle of Central America

   a. Create the position of a mission co-worker position to facilitate a Meso-American faith-rooted advocacy witness in Central America, in partnership with the Reformed Calvinist Church in El Salvador and other church partners in the Northern Triangle of Central America and Mexico. A strong focus of this position would be to develop a Meso-American refugee and immigration advocacy network and coordinate Presbyterian World Mission partnerships in the region with the advocacy and policy work of the Office of Public Witness, the Office of Immigration, the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, the Peacemaking Program, and the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations.

   b. Direct the Office of Public Witness, the Office of Immigration, the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, the Peacemaking Program, and the Presbyterian Office at the United Nations to incorporate the voices of Meso-American leaders in PC(USA)’s immigration and refugee advocacy efforts; create mechanisms for the U.S. government to hear the voices of church leaders from Meso-America when policy decisions are made that affect their context.

2. Train local leaders in El Salvador. Invest in peacemaking in the Northern Triangle to reduce migration and reintegrate people who are returned to El Salvador from the United States.

   Direct Presbyterian World Mission to expand funding for regional leadership training in nonviolence in the Northern Triangle of Central America, in partnership with AIPRAL (Asociación de Iglesias Presbiterianas y Reformadas de América Latina—Association of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches of Latin America), CEDEPCA (Centro Evangélico de Estudios Pastorales en Centroamérica—The Protestant Center for Pastoral Studies in Central America) and other partners.

3. Train leaders in the United States. Organize a strategic and coordinated faith-rooted advocacy movement for comprehensive immigration reform in the United States.

   Direct the Office of Public Witness and the Office of Immigration Issues to hire and share a national grassroots network organizer in the United States. This position will train and organize congregations and governing bodies. Networks of Presbyterians will receive training from this organizer in advocacy, community organizing, solidarity and accompaniment, and establish rapid response networks to support faith-rooted, migrant-led organizing.

Rationale

The PC(USA) is 1 of 233 member churches of the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC) that meets once every seven years. At its 26th General Council meeting held in Leipzig, Germany, June 29–July 7, 2017, the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC) ratified Action 61 from the Reformed Calvinist Church of El Salvador (IRCES). This resolution awakens and challenges Reformed churches around the world to the crisis and suffering of migrants, victims of human trafficking, and particularly of youth in the Northern Triangle of Central America, and encourages closer cooperation and a common response from churches in all parts of the world.
We confess that the immigration policies of our country, the United States of America, have had a major impact on this crisis and the suffering identified by our brothers and sisters of the Reformed Calvinist Church of El Salvador (IRCES). Therefore, we acknowledge that we carry a greater burden of responsibility to hear the urgent appeal of our brothers and sisters in the Northern Triangle and to respond with concrete actions of solidarity, love, and justice in the name of Jesus. The recommendations in this overture come directly from the Reformed Calvinist Church of El Salvador (IRCES), and are specifically addressed to the PC(USA). We are moved by their call to us.

We affirm our denomination’s historic witness in the United States for just immigration laws, mindful of their impact on other countries. While respectful of the law and the powers of government to enact laws, we have considered it our moral duty to express our convictions to government to change laws when they were contrary to our values. We affirm the policy statements and resolutions of past General Assemblies supporting comprehensive immigration reform, condemnation of human trafficking, reforms of drug war policies, and trade and aid policies that provide sustainable, peaceful development in Central America. However, we acknowledge that, despite our resolutions and policy statements, our country is moving further away from implementing these just and humane policies.

At the 222nd General Assembly (2016), our denomination chose to become a church committed to the Gospel of Matthew 25, to recommit ourselves at the congregational level, the mid council level, and the national levels of our church to locate ourselves with the poor, to advocate for the poor, and to seek opportunities to take risks for and with the poor. We are in a critical moment in history to take the next step as a denomination to organize a collective, faith-rooted voice for change on behalf of those who suffer. Therefore, we urge the PC(USA) to organize nationally and internationally, in partnership with the Reformed Calvinist Church of El Salvador and churches throughout the Northern Triangle of Central America (Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador), and with immigrant communities and churches in the United States, for just and humane policies in the United States and in Central America.

The Presbytery of the Pacific has been involved in nonpartisan, faith-rooted immigration advocacy and sanctuary in the city of Los Angeles, in partnership with immigrant evangelical churches and leaders in the Matthew 25/Mateo 25 Southern California movement. Together we advocate for vulnerable immigrant communities and have saved people from detention and deportation. Through prayer, education, relationship, and joy, Matthew 25/Mateo 25 Movement of Southern California has catalyzed churches in our region to take action on immigration as a biblical imperative, a fundamental Christian issue, and an evangelical witness to the Gospel and the love of Christ. It is this kind of faith-rooted, migrant-led movement that we believe has the power to change the heart of our nation on immigration.

In 2014, in the face of the humanitarian crisis of unaccompanied minor children fleeing violence in the Northern Triangle of Central America and arriving in Los Angeles, the Presbytery of the Pacific worked in partnership with Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and interfaith justice coalition CLUE (Clergy and Laity United for Economic Justice) called UCARE (Unaccompanied Minors and Refugee Empowerment), to build a city-wide support network for unaccompanied minor/refugee youth. We have witnessed firsthand the trauma caused to these refugee youth by the violence they have experienced in their home countries, the perilous journey they take to our borders, and the treatment they receive when they come to the U.S.

It is essential that we are connected to the stories and lives of those who suffer. Here are the words from the original proposal from the Reformed Calvinist Church of El Salvador (IRCES) to the World Council of Reformed Churches (WCRC), where they describe their context and a call to action:

Violence in the Northern Triangle:

The three countries of Guatemala, El Salvador and Honduras (the Northern Triangle of Central America) have experienced 15 years of violence generated from gang conflict, organized crime, and narco-trafficking. Peace accords did not address the different problems of these countries. The endemic gang culture, coupled with the socio-economic realities of poverty, unemployment, low wages, domestic violence and the resultant dysfunction and psychological problems, produce enormous problems for families, society and the churches. The populations of Guatemala, El Salvador and Honduras are young, with around 50% of the people under 24 years. Youth are most affected by crime and violence; many young people are dying, and the region is being robbed of its future.

Churches are carrying out their work under very difficult conditions. In El Salvador, the churches have been supporting different efforts to dialogue with youth gangs, but have had no support from the government, which is now calling gangs, and those who seek to dialogue, terrorists. The churches seek support to promote a culture of peace and prevent violence. They have requested funding to support non-violent leadership training.

Migration, Human Trafficking, and Refugees:

Human trafficking has been identified as a form of modern day slavery. Human traffickers take advantage of people in vulnerable situations, including many thousands of children every year. It is an injustice that affects millions of people every year on every continent and at all socio-economic levels. It also has a direct effect on the physical, mental and spiritual well-being of the victims. During the initial trafficking, victims are often forced and deceived. People may be trafficked for labor and sexual exploitation, within an individual country or across international borders. Their movement is often restricted; their personal documentation withheld, and they may experience significant physical, emotional, sexual, and psychological abuse, including being killed for organs. Victims are often held in situations of indentured slavery.

The movement of hundreds of thousands of refugees has highlighted a situation that confronts the Churches. Women, men, young and old are fleeing war, poverty and persecution. Every day, people put their lives at risk as they seek life, peace and justice. As Reformed Churches proclaiming the Gospel of Jesus Christ and a vision of life in fullness for all (John 10:10), we cannot and will not accept this as inevitable. The people seeking refuge are not merely an ethical or political challenge confronting the Church, they challenge our Churches in their innermost theological identity and mission. In faithful accordance with the biblical witness, its calling and mission, the Reformed Church has a long-standing tradition of being committed to the life, dignity and wellbeing of the refugee and migrant.

As people of faith, we are called to “love the sojourner” (Deuteronomy 10:19) and to treat “the foreigner residing among you…as your native born” (Leviticus 19:34). Issues of human migration do not exist in a vacuum, and they can only be fully comprehended when we understand how they connect to the other issues of justice around the world that are of critical importance to WCRC’s member churches. These stories and motifs have had profound effects on the history of the church, especially the Reformed tradition as many early reformers were themselves refugees. Reformed communities around the world were created not only by missionaries, but by migrants as well.18

May we heed the call of our brothers and sisters in Christ.

After a few months of coordinating volunteers to observe in our courts, rocket docket disappeared.

Advice & Counsel on Item 09-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-04 addresses the violence and displacement in the Northern three countries of Central America, envisioning a mission co-worker to help develop a Meso-American refugee and immigration advocacy network in the region, along with peacemaking, accompaniment, and nonviolence training, and a grassroots organizer in the United States, to help advocate for policy change.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-04.

The crisis in the Northern Triangle of Central America is very serious, with waves of children and broken families struggling to migrate across Mexico to join relatives in the United States, driven by the violence of drug wars and corruption, facing traffickers on one side and strict border enforcement on the other. Children of those seeking asylum are sometimes separated from their parents through intentional administrative cruelty. Not since the Sanctuary Movement of the mid 1980s has there been a similarly bleak human rights situation for Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador. The General Assembly directed considerable attention to the region through studies by the Advisory Council on Church & Society (ACSWP’s predecessor) and advocacy efforts to counter military support for death squads and the Contra War in nearby Nicaragua.

This overture proposes a mission co-worker in the region and an organizer/trainer in the United States. The work of the mission co-worker is targeted at parts of the Central America population missed by those who lump all together. Having such a person trained in peacemaking and able to do intercultural work would (it seems to us) be very helpful in the Salvadoran situation, where some of the violence has its origins in gangs transplanted from Southern California. The Presbyterian of the Pacific shows its deep concern for these people in their rationale statement. They also cite the report of our partner, the Reformed Calvinist Church of El Salvador, to the World Communion of Reformed Churches, showing a level of international awareness of the crisis. With regard to Honduras, the General Assembly spoke to the deterioration in rule of law that followed the 2010 coup in that country: https://www.pc-biz.org/#/search/3605.

The latter position may connect with current staff capacities in the Immigration Office of the Office of the General Assembly. Given the scale of the immigration crisis, ACSWP is sympathetic to the intensified responsibilities carried by that office—which is the result of a recommendation in an ACSWP report to the 216th General Assembly (2004) (https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/1-immigration-resolution-2004.pdf). We recognize that funding for these positions would come from different sources. In their comment, Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency also note the wide-ranging work of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance in the area. Our concern, as a body constituted to address challenges to the Christian conscience and ways we respond through corporate social mission, is that our economic and drug policies are part of what is driving desperation South of our border, which in turn feeds a militarization and punishment of asylum seekers and refugees on the U.S. side. This overture offers an overall strategy for our church to respond to this terrible cycle.

Commissioners may want to consider this item in relation to Item 09-10, which calls for a study by ACSWP of “socioeconomic and political realities in Central America.” Such a short-term study would necessarily involve mission co-workers deployed in the region—all six countries—and both World Mission and a small team of ACSWP members and staff, chosen for their expertise. Such a study would itself dovetail into the response outlined in this overture, and would prepare updated resources for the advocacy envisioned.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-04.

ACREC feels that the collaboration outlined in this overture across PC(USA) program areas and ecumenical partners is unique and timely given the current situation in some of the countries in Central America. The effectiveness and success of this initiative would have a positive impact both in the region and in the U.S. by addressing pressing issues affecting both migrants from Central America in the U.S. and curtailing violence and injustice in the area.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-04

Comment on Item 09-04—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency—through Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, part of its Compassion Peace and Justice Ministry—works with congregations and mid councils in the U.S. to support their ministries with Central American refugees and asylum seekers. We would be happy to work with other PC(USA) offices to identify new ways that we might work in greater solidarity, advocacy, partnership, and hospitality with the church in the Northern Triangle of Central America. We believe that developments in the region offer a unique opportunity to partner with our brothers and sisters in El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras.

Item 09-05

A Resolution to Advocate for the Human Rights of All Citizens of Yemen—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

1. Affirm the support of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights as expressed by the 210th General Assembly (1998).

2. Acknowledge the U.S. role in the war in Yemen, and by extension, our own complicity through our taxes that fund the U.S. military’s role in the conflict.

3. Acknowledge the devastating effects of the war in Yemen such as:
   a. Death of innocent civilians, including children, due to direct effects of bombing, disease, and famine;
   b. The destruction of infrastructure, including sanitation facilities, which has lead to an unprecedented cholera epidemic killing many including children; and
   c. Famine directly due to the Saudi blockade.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk to write to the United States President, Secretary of State, and Secretary of Defense, urging them to actively participate in seeking a political settlement to the war and to suspend United States government military support to Saudi Arabia in its bombing and blockading of Yemen. United States military support to Saudi Arabia includes:
   a. The sale of weapons;
   b. Logistic support including intelligence for selecting targets;
   c. Air-to-air refueling of Saudi jets; and
   d. Multiple ground operations and more than 120 strikes in 2017.

5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the Office of Public Witness and the Presbyterian Ministry at the UN, to advocate for:
   a. An immediate end to hostilities;
   b. Cessation of United States military and financial support of Saudi Arabia’s Yemeni war; and
   c. A just political, not military solution.

6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to a. Study and then to inform all Presbyterians (through digital study materials) regarding the war in Yemen, and of the United States’ participation in that war and what our involvement entails, and to advocate for an immediate cessation of military support to Saudi Arabia; and
   b. Advocate for an immediate cessation of hostilities and work for a just political settlement of the war.

[Encourage churches to support relief efforts in Yemen through PDA.]

Financial Implications: Per Capita (2019) $2,000. Total—$2,000]
Rationale

What We Must Do

To remain silent is to be complicit. We as Presbyterians must speak out. “Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me” (Mt. 25:40).

The War and Its Origins

The origins of the war in Yemen date back as far the 1960s. Two valuable and credible articles about the origins of the war and the atmosphere in Yemen today can be found in Professor Sheila Carapico’s article which appeared in The Nation magazine, and Kathy Kelly’s article that appeared on the web page of Voices for Creative Nonviolence. Kathy Kelly is the coordinator for Voices for Creative Nonviolence.

Sheila Carapico, a professor of political science and international studies at the University of Richmond in Virginia, describes the war in Yemen as “an invasion that pits billionaire royal elites of the Gulf—and their U.S. and Arab League supporters—against the downtrodden people of Yemen.” In Yemen, “a Saudi-led coalition backed by the United States is at war with an indigenous tribal group, the Houthis.”

According to Kathy Kelly, people living now in Yemen’s third largest city, Ta’iz, have endured unimaginable circumstances for the past three years. Civilians fear to go outside lest they be shot by a sniper or step on a land mine. Both sides of a worsening civil war use Howitzers, Kaytushas, mortars and other missiles to shell the city. Residents say no neighborhood is safer than another, and human rights groups report appalling violations, including torture of captives. Two days ago, a Saudi-led coalition bomber killed 54 people in a crowded market place. Before the civil war developed, the city was regarded as the official cultural capital of Yemen, a place where authors and academics, artists and poets chose to live. Ta’iz was home to a vibrant, creative youth movement.

This resolution is not intended to discuss the merits or demerits of either side of the war in Yemen, rather this resolution is intended to advocate for the innocent civilians caught in the middle of this war. The impact on children is particularly troubling and heartbreaking.

United States Participation in the War

The U.S. support for Saudi Arabia includes arms sales, refueling of aircraft, and supplying intelligence, and has long been controversial. Human Rights groups have repeatedly accused the kingdom of targeting civilians, notably through airstrikes on schools and hospitals. “U.S. forces have conducted multiple ground operations and more than 120 strikes in 2017,” U.S. Central Command, Centcom, in Tampa, Florida, said in a statement.

An editorial in the Los Angeles Times has this to say:

Since March 2015, when the Saudi coalition began bombing Houthi rebels in support of the internationally recognized Yemeni government, the U.S. Air Force has assisted—enabled—Riyadh and its allies in the air campaign. … Air Force intelligence identifies Houthi targets to hit. … At the U.N., in the Security Council and the Human Rights Council, Washington has protected Riyadh from censure, watering down resolutions and preventing war crimes inquiries. Most important, throughout the war, Saudi and Emirati jets have used U.S. midair refueling capabilities to keep up the pace of operations without having to return to a base. According to Pentagon statistics, the Air Force has refueled Saudi aircraft more than 9,000 times.

Through its support of the war in Yemen, the United States is culpable in the horrific effects the war has had on Yemen’s civilians and has a responsibility to stop its involvement and to speak out against this war.

Civilian Casualties

Between March 2015, when the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) began reporting on civilian casualties, and 30 August, at least 5,144 civilians have been documented as killed and more than 8,749 injured.

Children accounted for 1,184 of those who were killed and 1,592 of those injured. Coalition airstrikes continued to be the leading cause of child casualties as well as overall civilian casualties. Some 3,233 of the civilians killed were reportedly killed by Coalition forces.

The report states that the past year witnessed airstrikes against funeral gatherings and small civilian boats, in addition to markets, hospitals, schools, residential areas, and other public and private infrastructure.

On November 9, 2017, the United Nations News Center released the following news announcement:

Yemen will be gripped by famine—one the likes of which the world has not seen in years—if the blockade on basic supplies into the country imposed by the Saudi Arabia-led coalition is not lifted immediately, the top United Nations humanitarian official has warned.

“It will be the largest famine the world has seen for many decades,” Mark Lowcock, the UN Emergency Relief Coordinator, told the media late Wednesday, after briefing the Security Council.
Three years into a brutal conflict, Yemen depends on imports—amounting to up to 90 per cent of its daily needs—and millions in the country are being kept alive by humanitarian aid.

The fighting has also all but collapsed the country’s health, and water and sanitation systems. Combined with the lack of food, millions of lives—including those of children—will be lost as their bodies will simply not have the strength to fight off disease.

“What kills people in famine is infections […] because their bodies have consumed themselves, reducing totally the ability to fight off things which a healthy person can,” added Mr. Lowcock.12

According to the World Food Programme,13 20.7 million (76 percent of population) are in need of humanitarian assistance; 17 million are food insecure, including 6.8 million severely food insecure; 2.2 million are acutely malnourished children; 1.1 million are acutely malnourished pregnant and lactating women; and 2 million are internally displaced; and 1 million are returnees.14

Cholera Outbreak

Bombing of civilian centers in Yemen has been central to the destruction of sanitary infrastructure, thus leading to the spread of disease—notable cholera. According to the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (UN OCHA):

Yemen is facing one of the world’s largest humanitarian crisis, including the fastest growing cholera epidemic ever recorded. As of 1 November [2017], there were some 895,000 suspected cholera cases with nearly 2,200 associated deaths since 27 April. More than half of the suspected cases are children. The outbreak is affecting over 90 per cent of districts across 21 of the 22 governorates.15

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-05.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given by the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and further lifts up specific concerns for women and girls, as well as the importance of the role of women in peacemaking efforts.

Regarding specific concerns for women and girls in the midst of the crisis in Yemen: The United National Women Watch through The United Nations Population Fund cited in March 2017 that

At the two-year mark of Yemen’s conflict, it has become one of the worst humanitarian crisis in the world, [and] the toll is heaviest on women and girls. The country is on the brink of famine, with food insecurity affecting 60% of the population. Women go to sleep thinking about they can feed their children. Yemen already had one of the highest maternal death rates in the Arab region, but food scarcity is putting the lives of 352,000 pregnant women at risk, and it could harm the health of 2.2 million women of childbearing age who are in urgent need of assistance and protection, according to UNFPA calculations from January 2017. [Furthermore], women and girls in Yemen have long endured low status and high rates of abuse, but displacement and the breakdown of protection mechanisms have increased their vulnerability. [As of March 2017], an estimated 2.6 million women and girls were at risk of gender-based violence. Violence against women and girls has reportedly increased by over 63% since the conflict escalated, with over 10,000 cases reported in 2016 alone. The crisis has also left many women and girls to care for their families alone. The UNFPA is working to meet the urgent reproductive health and protection needs of women and girls in Yemen, by providing sexual and reproductive health care and services and preventing gender-based violence. [https://womenwatch.unwomen.org/country/yemen; https://www.unfpa.org/news/two-year-mark-yemens-conflict-takes-heavy-toll-women-and-girls]

With regard to including women in the role of peacemaking efforts, the ACWC encourages all future peacemaking reports and resolutions to include an affirmation of the essential role that women play in peacemaking, in much the same way that the UN Security Council Resolution 1325 cites the importance of “Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, and stressing the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution” [United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 (2000), http://www.un.org/events/res_1325e.pdf]. By including women, a new perspective is gained as the concerns for women and girls may be vastly different than the concerns of men.

Additionally, the ACWC lifts up the portion of the PC(USA)’s “Social Creed for the 21st Century” (approved at the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the PC[USA] and the National Council of Churches of Christ USA at the 2007 General Assembly), which references peacemaking: “In hope, sustained by the Holy Spirit, we pledge to be peacemakers in the world and stewards of God’s good creation, by working for ... peacemaking through multilateral diplomacy rather than unilateral force, the abolition of torture, and a strengthening of the United Nations and the rule of international law” [https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/socialcreedposter.pdf].

Therefore, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-05.

Item 09-06

[The assembly referred Item 09-06 to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy with comment. See pp. 36, 37–38.]

Comment: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline; actions taken in plenary are shaded in gray.]

The Assembly Committee on Peacemaking, Immigration, and International Issues [09] thanks the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy for their affirmations and recommendations related to global order and our nation’s purpose. We commend their creative and comprehensive exploration of global themes in an effort to reinvigorate the collective conscience of Presbyterians and other ecumenical partners to speak ethically and morally to a changing and challenged world.

We recognize the need to speak with a measured urgency to the many existential threats facing our nation and the world, and we appreciate the vision for ecumenical partnerships in addressing them. We offer the following suggestions to clarify and focus your recommendation to the General Assembly. [We encourage ACSWP to collaborate and/or partner with a variety of other funding sources in order to move this study forward and better reflect and incorporate the voices of diverse persons and marginalized communities.]
Recommendations:

1. Clearly name the audience for the study, as well as the final objectives of the study.

2. Focus and limit the affirmations thematically. Furthermore, decide on a scope for the project that honors the complexity of the issues we face while systematically addressing individual issues.

3. The formation of the steering committee should include the participation and comments from diverse persons and those from marginalized communities (e.g. ethnicity, gender, orientation, cultural origin, age, economic status, ability, education level, geographical region).

4. State how you will invite diverse persons including those from marginalized communities, beyond theological differences, into the public forums.

5. Create a curriculum from the findings of the study that would be teachable, useable, and approachable to the whole church.

6. Integrate the sacred texts of traditions that represent the voices of the participants in the study. Bring them to the forefront of the conversation/study.

A Resolution on Global Order and National Purpose—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the following affirmations and actions on global order and our nation’s purpose, through which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

Affirmations

1. Affirms a Reformed commitment to a just and durable peace based in a vision of a community of nations, cooperating for mutual benefit and to reduce risks for all.

   The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recommits itself to work with other Christian churches for a lasting peace among nations and peoples based on the vision of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the highest principles of international law. This Christian vision applies to the national purposes of our country, which has sought to temper its power with high ideals, to provide “liberty and justice for all.” Aware of the effects of climate change, the danger of nuclear catastrophe, the pull of nativism and tribalism, and the costly habits of militarism, the church nevertheless believes it is both realistic and necessary to work for a just, durable peace. Prior generations have shared this understanding of the claims of Jesus Christ for this world—and all the nations—that God continues to love.

   Where our 20th century forbears experienced two great conflicts and worked to establish international standards and institutions to prevent a third world war, the struggles before current and future generations are different. New forms of colonization, inequality, and power rivalry test global institutions as populations continue to grow and climate change accelerates. The rise of sea levels and climate refugee numbers may lead to grim competition and abandonment of vulnerable areas, beyond any technological or biological “fixes.” In this context, our faith anchors us in hope, despite reasons for despair.

   Our faith also impels us to join with ecumenical partners and the world church in combatting the true enemies of human flourishing, which are not “flesh and blood.” This is a time to put God first, above every nation, and to be willing to re-conceive the vastly unequal structure of nations for the sake of biological survival and Christian faithfulness. Indeed, this will be a significant challenge for American Christians currently living in a time of rising nationalism and putting “America first.”

2. Affirms an ecumenical commitment to dignity, human rights, and well-being for all peoples.

   Though the number of desperately impoverished remains daunting, Christian prophets and church bodies have envisioned and acted for just, participatory, and sustainable global arrangements that have provided greater sufficiency for larger numbers of people. Churches have joined in nonviolent social changes in Eastern Europe, the Philippines, Northern Ireland, and South Africa, and have sought to support peaceful revolutions elsewhere, with deep admiration for those organizers, labor leaders, journalists, students and others—of all faith backgrounds and none—who have stood up to power and sometimes been crushed.

   Along with other religious traditions and bodies, our church bears a responsibility to understand interreligious dynamics and to restrain ethnic and religious bigotry. These can feed the mixture of fundamentalism and rage that engenders terrorism at home and abroad. The politics of resentment anywhere raises spiritual and moral questions that cannot simply be left to politicians and economists. The church affirms that truth and reconciliation, apology and forgiveness, humility and avoiding idolatry: all have application in public as well as private life, for communities as well as individuals.

3. Reexamines our national purpose and global institutions strategically and theologically, in the light of increased risks of nuclear war, growing tensions with allies as well as enemies, and a budget focused on $900 billion a year for military-related spending (including nuclear weapons readiness, spy agencies, “homeland” security, veterans costs, and ongoing wars).

Unilateral military action on a global scale is neither sustainable nor just. The United States’ history of taking unilateral action has already led to significant miscalculation and distancing from our historic allies. The standing of the U.S. in the world, the positive balance built up over years of generally dependable and truthful action, has declined and cannot be restored through power alone. It must be restored through genuine efforts to work multilaterally and develop mutual trust. In Paul’s language in 2 Corinthians 8:21, “for we intend to do what is right not only in the Lord’s sight but also in the sight of others.” To that end, structures of statecraft, dedicated diplomats, strategic and generous foreign assistance, and truthful witnesses are needed for a national security that is also collective security and basic human security, anchored in a decent quality of life for all.

4. Invites Christian ecumenical partners to join our congregations and councils in addressing the following crises as they affect the international order:

a. A Crisis of National Purpose in the United States of America, which has been in a fear-driven state of war since 9/11/01, with a form of shared moral injury for the needless suffering of millions overseas and thousands at home. These open and covert military actions continue without any gain in democratic practice or growth in effective human freedom, given increased inequality and continued poverty at home as well as abroad. This lack of positive national purpose contributes to the spiritual rootlessness, vocational insecurity, and isolation of individuals and the decline of communities, institutions, and marriage and childrearing rates, as the weakening of the common good and erosion of personal character reinforce each other.

b. Climate change and the need for binding, science-based national targets, shared technologies and resources, and public health-related cooperation to reduce and reverse extreme weather, crop devastation, mass extinction of species, and increased human conflict over resources.

c. Ethnic and racial nationalism that values human beings on the arbitrary bases of skin color and background rather than the “image of God,” weakens commitments to human rights, equal voting rights, and humanitarian treatment of refugees and asylum-seekers, and increases hostility among peoples and nations.

d. Downgrading international and regional institutions and agreements that assist human development, health, and common security, leads to increased tax competition, avoidance, and evasion by powerful corporations and individuals; undercutting and underfunding of United Nations programs and international legal standards; and systematic distortions in access to education and free exchange of information.

5. In addition, there are specific concerns:

a. reversal of progress toward nuclear disarmament;

b. massive arms sales regardless of democracy, human rights, or even ongoing hostilities;

c. religious discrimination and persecution;

d. weakening of international peacemaking or policing forces;

e. continued disadvantaging of women, girls, and sexual minorities;

f. forced labor and human trafficking, and transnational efforts to weaken labor rights and organizations.

6. Reclaims specific resources of the U.S. ecumenical tradition, in partnership with other communions that recognize problems beyond any individual church to address, resources that include:

a. The principles developed in the American church study conferences, that helped build Christian and broad public support for the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the United Nations;

b. The theological resources for addressing international conflict and crisis, particularly the resources of Christian Realism and Liberation Theologies, and ethics of repentance, truth-telling, and reconciliation;

c. Confessions of faith used in some families of churches and traditions to help interpret scripture and address contemporary challenges to Christian practice;

d. International relationships with broad confessional families that remind us that no church is only a national entity or creature of a state;
e. The Six Pillars of Peace, both the originals of 1940 and the updated Seven of 1998 (with the inclusion of ecological action);

f. Policies of the Federal and National Councils of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., such as the non-doctrinal Social Creeds of 1908 and 2008, that have given our Christian public witness shared themes and goals;

g. Policies of the World Council of Churches that help us hear the voices of other Christians and see ourselves as others see us.

7. Seeks answers to such questions as these currently asked of the United States and its Christian community:

a. Are any of the crises outlined above reversible?

b. Do enough people in the millennial generation and younger care what Christians and churches think—especially if the churches appear to be profoundly divided?

c. How quickly does a nation like ours, a one-time “indispensable” power, lose respect and the “soft power” of ideals and integrity? Is there a moral vacuum more dangerous than a “power vacuum”?

d. Can a self-weakened super-power learn to play a more cooperative role in the world? Faced with failed or reckless states such as Syria or North Korea, is a more coordinated and deliberative approach needed?

e. Can we listen to voices unheard and suppressed, both at home and abroad? Especially in a polarized media time, is everything for sale?

f. Is political reform in the U.S. possible, given politicized Supreme Court decisions allowing unlimited money in campaigns and only slightly limited gerrymandering?

g. Above all, can climate change be slowed before world disorder simply overwhelms transnational institutions and cooperation?

Actions

In light of the need to re-envision the place of the United States within the world and the nature of our nation’s leadership, and to lift up the shared witness by the communions for a more just global order, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) directs the Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy to do the following:

1. Engage in a series of public forums with our ecumenical partners on the key matters of international priorities, relations to international institutions, the relations of trade, aid, development, and taxation, the balance of statecraft and military power, the role of religion and morality in foreign policy, the relation of U.S. government policies to Christian and other religious minorities, and other matters noted above.

2. Select, in consultation with the Stated Clerk and Moderator or Co-Moderators, six persons, including four Presbyterians and two ecumenical leaders, to serve on a study committee of twelve volunteers with appropriate diplomatic, military, academic, and theological-ethical experience and/or expertise.

3. Invite, in consultation with the President and General Secretary of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., and with representatives of our Full Communion Christian denominational partners, other denominations and communions to designate and support the participation of similarly equipped volunteers on the study committee, in light of how such participation could contribute to their social mission, ethical reflection, and public statements. (Such consultation is necessary to ensure diversity within even a small body.)

4. Work with existing Presbyterian and ecumenical staff in Washington, D.C., and at the United Nations, to draw upon their expertise and engagement with current concerns and their relationships with many interfaith and nongovernmental organization (NGO) partners in the development of the public forums in Action 1 above.

5. Direct this study committee to prepare an initial study guide or interim report for the 224th General Assembly (2020) and for other church assemblies in a manner that is as ecumenically useful as possible in its print, podcast, and video presentation of theological, ethical, political, and historical elements.

6. Request the Office of Mission Engagement and Support of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and similar bodies in the other participating denominations, in consultation with their heads of communion, to explore appropriate external funding sources such as foundations and international organizations sharing goals and principles with our churches.
7. Request responses to the interim report or study guide by appropriate bodies within the participating communions and at forums linked to meetings of ecumenical bodies, such as the Christian Unity Gathering of the National Council of Churches of Christ, and to meetings of member communions.

8. Direct the study committee to produce its final report in a marketable or commercial book form, for submission to the 224th General Assembly (2022) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and such other bodies as wish to consider it.

Rationale

Crises That Call for Christian Response; Theological and Ethical Resources for That Response; More Questions; and an Appendix for Historical Perspective

This proposal calls for an ecumenical and interdisciplinary study into fundamental questions concerning the global order and the role of the United States in the world. In seeking to partner with the ecumenical churches, we do not intend to ignore or diminish our connections with people of other faiths and none. Rather, we seek to renew the broad, public witness of long-time Christian partners who have considerable theological and ethical traditions and extended histories of public engagement. We believe this critical voice has lately been weakened in public conversation and that recovering this voice will supply wisdom for seeking justice and equitable order in a changing world.

This rationale outlines major questions to be addressed in this study. It also surveys the ecumenical church’s long history of serious reflection on human nature, political power, and international relations. This history and tradition is reviewed in the Appendix and provides additional reason for this study, reminding us of religion’s capacity to notice and name important realities and to inspire people to work for the reconciliation of the world.

In this connection, we hope that this project encourages those in positions of responsibility in the state, military, and policy think tanks not to reduce all religion to deified and competitive tribalism, but to appreciate the positive contributions that particular faiths and religions may play. We do not call for academic study for its own sake, but envision forums, dialogues and video-clips to cast a public vision of life together on this planet and to strengthen the good work the churches are already doing in Washington, D.C., and at the United Nations.

The study would build on the work of the Federal Council of Churches’ Commission (begun in 1930) that conducted a study of “The Bases for a Just and Durable Peace.” This study helped create the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This framework supersedes and is broader than the influential church witnesses against the Vietnam War and other military interventions, the challenge to nuclear weapons (as in the “freeze” movement), the support for human rights struggles (as in the antiapartheid and sanctuary movements), and continuing concerns for upholding religious freedom. In 1991–92, a church project responded to the “new world order” proposed by the first President Bush and a larger study, led by ecumenical church staff related to the United Nations and international relations scholars, updated the Six Pillars of Peace in the late 1990s. There are lessons to be applied from these efforts and others cited in the Appendix. It is our hope that the prophetic voice of our ecumenical partners today will join us in helping shape a vision for the changing role of the United States in service of a stable, just and peaceful international order.1

The invitation to address global order and national purpose responds to three related crises: a crisis in international order, a crisis in national purpose, and a crisis in the religious life of the nation.

A Crisis of Evolving Global Order

The first crisis is global. According to many experts, the post-World War II order has reached an inflection point. Technology has created a politically, economically, and ecologically interdependent world that holds possibilities for global community and creaturely flourishing. Yet today many powerful nations are withdrawing support from the law-based institutions that shepherded the global order through the cold war. Regional hegemons are challenging the sovereignty of their neighbors as well as the post-World War II order’s emphasis on human rights. First world nationalists have joined voices from the Two-Thirds world in challenging trade agreements and the justice of an unregulated or neo-liberal market system. Militant fundamentalisms challenge the values of the global cosmopolitan culture, while traditional alliances block the development of participatory government, leaving authoritarian governments in place. The global civilization is not on a track that is ecologically sustainable.

A Crisis of National Purpose

The second crisis has to do with national purpose. What should America’s role in the world be? Americans of both political parties wonder whether the U.S. should continue to serve as a “global policeman.”2 They question the expense of America’s defense budget and the wisdom of its military adventures.3 They are uncertain where a stable international order ranks among other pressing national priorities, and what approaches (other than military interventions) are most effective for achieving it. If upholding the global order is in the U.S. interest, can it be divorced from democratic values, diplomacy, and ecologically sustainable economic development? Faith in democratic institutions has plummeted among young adults in America and in other Western democracies.4 The election of an avowed “America First” nationalist who scorns traditional democratic values like a free press and independent judiciary, and who rejected a bipartisan internationalism in favor of an America-First foreign policy, has made these questions more pressing.

Because the United States wields inordinate economic, political, and military power, the crisis in global order dovetails with the crisis in national purpose. The national confusion comes at a time when the world economy has become more integrated than at any previous point in history, and when climate change, nuclear proliferation, disease, and terrorism require a more effective response from all nations. Our national confusion has not gone unnoticed by our allies or our rivals.

A Crisis of Domestic Religious Nationalism

A third crisis involves the dominant faith traditions of the United States. Religious nationalism has come to exert tremendous power over the public imagination. Religious nationalism is a syncretistic religion that promotes uncritical, even tribal support, for nationalistic foreign policies. It pretends to offer a hardnosed, practical realism. Because it has lost touch with the larger Christian tradition’s expansive loyalties and wisdom (while employing central faith symbols in combination with national symbols), it has contributed to morally outrageous and strategically disastrous misadventures.

Self-defined progressive religious groups have responded to ascendant religious nationalism, to the dominance of American economic and military might, and to our foreign policy calamities, with mixtures of Christian idealism and broad denunciation. Though this study proposal also challenges the seventeen-year overemphasis on “the war on terror,” there are genuine security threats and credible arguments for state and international agencies capable of repelling them. This study can provide a theologically grounded alternative to fearful and even defeatist religious nationalism by lifting up moral initiatives that call on Lincoln’s “better angels” of our nature and nation. The study process will succeed if it helps reframe the U.S. debate over the uses of power without proposing overly idealized or even utopian counsel that does not connect with historical realities. Imaginative and courageous does not mean naïve. With this study, then, we would seek to combine Christian ideals of peace and justice with practical wisdom for the United States government and major nongovernmental organizations (NGO’s).

Theological Resources

There is no one doctrinal touchstone in the ecumenical communions, at least in the Protestant houses. This study process envisions input from persons of all the traditions in the NCCC and good cooperation with our Roman Catholic friends. In listening to other voices from outside the U.S., we will certainly be hearing liberation theologies of many kinds, and not neglecting the liberation theologies of North America as well. Women’s theological treatments of the uses of power, militarism, moral injury, classic, and other virtues, such as empathy, need to be part of the church’s analysis. Cross-cultural perspectives and expertise in world religions will be needed. Persons with experience in disaster relief and peacemaking efforts will provide vantage points “from below” and ways of hearing the vulnerable. Theologians and ethicists with theocentric orientations may expand our perspective to include ecological threats, countering tendencies to focus too narrowly on risks to the human.

In practical terms, we also hope to stimulate conversations with those in political science and the military, who interpret the world through vocabularies of power, incentives, forced choices, and security threats. While the church, as an ambassador of God’s reign, must embody a “contrast model” to state and international structures, it also recognizes that God works through broken political institutions with tragic histories to promote the common good and restrain evil. In light of this, the church needs to offer practical counsel to those who serve these institutions, particularly to believers whose vocations place them in positions of responsibility.

Thus, this proposal summons mainline Protestant churches, and the larger faith community, to reclaim a version of Christian Realism that can help analyze national interests with an eye to power as well as morality. A well-considered, public Christian witness is desperately needed precisely because political leaders and citizens must make moral decisions within practically relevant choices. Churches should offer both prophetic judgment and constructive counsel. Christian Realism reflects some of the tested wisdom the churches have to contribute to our national and global debates and to the public ethos. We are not calling for a simple reassertion of Christian Realism. Many ethicists, including Gary Dorrien, the current holder of the Reinhold Niebuhr chair at Union Seminary, have criticized the Christian Realist tradition for being androcentric, privileged, and complicit in the exercise of American empire. Christian Realism, therefore, must be reconceived in “prophetic” ways, along with the more recent theological resources we have named. Yet, both its realism about human sin and evil and its pragmatic appreciation of the limitations of history continue to recommend it.

Expanding the Questions Regarding the Global Order and America’s Purpose

Behind the questions listed in the resolution for focus of the study, the study originators have listened to many experts who believe the international community has reached a crossroads and that the next decade will decisively shape the global order for an indefinite future.

Their questions concerning the global order are legion: How ought the international order be structured? What principles should guide it? Who can legitimately act on behalf of the international community to enforce human rights, trade agreements, and national security norms? Who should police the global commons, protect the high seas from piracy, and maintain freedom of navigation? How can we better handle common concerns that transcend national boundaries (climate change, disease, fisheries, tax havens, terrorism)? How do we ensure that the rights and needs of the global poor are addressed? How will disputes between nations be resolved? Given heightened nationalism, how much can we expect from the United Nations or any other international bodies? How will humanity and the rest of God’s creatures survive the epoch we call the “anthropocene”?

These questions are intertwined with questions concerning the role of the United States in the international order. Can the United States afford to spend so much on its military? Can the United States’ vaunted democracy be trusted with so much power? How do we balance self-interest and our higher democratic and human values? How shall we exercise soft power and maintain moral legitimacy so that other nations do not view our disproportionate hard power as a threat? How will people in the United States adapt to relative economic decline (compared with a rising global economy)? While the ecumenical churches have been right to challenge U.S. impulses toward “empire,” now is the time when we also need to step up to offer constructive words about the positive roles the U.S. must play in the international community.

As Christians struggle with these questions, we may sense tension between our loyalty to God and the current vision of “patriotism.” This may be precisely what we need to articulate, as disciples of the One who transcends all nations and tribes.

APPENDIX

Ecumenical Thinking About Global Order:
Some History, a Map of Current Conflicts, and Ecumenical Resources

The United States has not always tried to be a global leader. Through most of the 19th century the U.S. did not project power outside of the Americas, though it frequently acted imperially within the Americas. It had a relatively small standing army and deployed a tiny Navy oriented to coastal defense. When Westward expansion concluded in the 19th century, the McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft Administrations directed America’s expansionist impulse to other parts of the world. Economic interests and a vigorous sense of divine national purpose stimulated this internationalist move, setting the stage for President Wilson’s venture into Europe and his failed attempt to have America play a greater international role through the League of Nations. The isolationist turn that followed in the 1930s was soon reversed by the attack on Pearl Harbor.

To avoid repeating the disaster of WWI, even as the tragedy of WWII loomed, theologians from diverse Protestant communions broke with the pacifistic and isolationist tendencies advanced in The Christian Century to found a competing magazine, Christianity and Crisis. Seeking to realize their ideals, they convinced the Federal Council of Churches to establish the Commission to Study the Bases for a Just and Durable Peace in 1940. In the first phase, the commission articulated Six Pillars of Peace, principles they thought should guide an approach to international relations. During the second phase, the commission proposed that the United States embrace these principles; commit itself to “a future of organized international collaboration”; and, in concert with other nations, establish international institutions capable of maintaining a liberal, rule-based global order. Their work informed the Dumbarton Oaks and Bretton Woods Agreements that gave us the United Nations and international financial institutions. They were even invited to critique early draft agreements. The group worked on multiple levels during this time to shape church and public opinion and pressure lawmakers to accept the United States’ international responsibility. The commission’s work was marked by its concern for human rights, which shaped and supported the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Meanwhile, a series of church study conferences was held through the 1950s that advocated a law-based international order and the necessity of American engagement.

The new international institutions were soon tested by and, in some ways, overtaken by the Cold War, which pitted the Soviet Union and global communism against “the Free World” led by the United States of America. In this connection, we note that the term “Free World” was appropriate mainly for the North Atlantic nations. At the start of the Cold War, the major countries included in the moniker “Free World” were actually ruling large colonial empires in Africa, and South and East Asia, where people were hardly free. As these colonies gained nominal independence in the late 50s to mid-70s, they sought economic and military aid that often made them clients of either the Soviet Bloc or the NATO bloc. Sometimes this led to territorial splits and open military conflict, as in China, Korea, Vietnam, and Pakistan. At other times, notably in Africa and the Middle East, the Soviets and NATO powers restrained conflict between their client states. Particularly in these places, and Latin America, the Cold War mentality led the U.S. government to support undemocratic and often brutal governments, as long as they opposed communism, voted with us at the UN, and in some cases let us have military bases.

In the later1980s and early 1990s, after the collapse of USSR, some countries in Latin America, Africa, and especially the former Soviet Union adopted more democratic electoral systems. But the Cold War pattern of the NATO and the USSR competing for and sometimes restraining clients also withered. Without that framework, more open military conflicts arose, and are still ongoing. There are many complex stories in these countries of the greater Middle East and Central Asia in particular, often with important effects on the internal politics and society in the major powers. Part of the challenge of supporting a more just world order is determining how much regional collective security agreements can or should be modeled on NATO, and how much leadership can be expected of other blocs (such as an EU without Britain) in a world increasingly affected by China. China’s perceived pragmatism in expanding its relationships poses clear questions about human rights.

The Cold War concluded with an astonishing display of peacemaking among former rivals, as the West forged a partnership with Russia to reduce nuclear stockpiles and prevent nuclear proliferation. The West even sent advisors to help revitalize the tattered Soviet economy, an effort that was perhaps bound to fail, even if a more constructive transformation of state enterprises and fairer distribution of state assets had been envisioned. Much of the hope that characterized the immediate post-Cold War era has dissipated.

When the bipolar, Cold War world collapsed, a unipolar world remained, leaving America and her allies militarily, economically, and culturally preeminent. There was no Peace of Westphalia, Congress of Vienna, or Dumbarton Oaks to establish the contours of the post-war peace as there had been following other conflicts. Instead, there was continuity, sometimes described as “status quo plus.”
President George H. W. Bush asserted that the “New World Order” presented an opportunity to build an international community of nations based on “the rule of law, not the law of the jungle.” In saying this, he hoped the institutions founded after World War II would finally be able to live out their promise. The National Council of Churches responded quickly to that sense of possibility with a one-year project supporting a human rights and development-oriented foreign policy. The first Iraq war tempered the Bush Administration’s ambitions. During the relatively peaceful Clinton years, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright envisioned a constructive U.S. dominance when she called America the “indispensable nation.” She urged America to work in concert with allies to provide leadership and military backbone for a relatively just, peaceful, and law-based international order still structured by the post WWII institutions. Again, with a hope of encouraging a genuine re-direction of U.S. hegemony, the National Council of Churches in 1998 updated the six pillars of peace, adding a seventh concerning ecology.

Neoconservatives in the George W. Bush administration challenged aspects of this consensus prioritizing peace over intervention. Like the liberal internationalists of the first Bush and the Clinton administrations, they believed in encouraging the spread of a democratic capitalism as a way to advance freedom, human rights, and national security, even if it was through forcible regime change. However, they diverged from the Clinton’s caution by articulating a preemptive strategy to counter perceived threats and rivals. They also tended to view international institutions and law as constraining the national interest of the United States, rather than facilitating them.

The invasion of Iraq reflected both inclinations. Saddam Hussein was alleged to be flagrantly violating international law while U.N. sanctions and the International Atomic Energy Commission were failing to halt his programs to develop weapons of mass destruction. Although most allies urged a more restrained approach, the second Bush administration (along with Great Britain, some smaller nations, and with logistical support from allies who publicly opposed to the war) invaded to halt the alleged programs. Even before the exaggerations and lies justifying the Iraq invasion were fully understood, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and others opposed the war as “unwise, illegal, and immoral.” Many, including United Nations Secretary General Kofi Annan, questioned the invasion’s legality.

Most now view the war in Iraq as a strategic blunder. Some blame its failure on the administration’s inability to quickly win the peace. Others claim that Bush waged the wrong sort of war; namely, an old-style war against a nation state, when the enemy was a decentralized, non-state actor. Still others claimed that invading Iraq to create a democracy was always quixotic. Regardless, the war in Iraq had far-reaching consequences. It awakened long simmering rivalries between Sunnis and Shiites, empowering the later. It strengthened the regional position of Iran, destabilizing the Middle East; pinned U.S. forces, distracting us from the occupation of Afghanistan; and made the United States unpopular in much of the world, even among the citizenry of our strongest Iraqi War allies. One could argue that it also demoralized peace movements in the U.S. and around the world that had been unable to stop the war.

The Obama administration sought to return the nation to a more modest version of liberal internationalism that the first Bush and Clinton administrations had articulated. It had mixed success. Despite opposition from our closest regional allies, Israel and Saudi Arabia, it led a broad coalition of nations that compelled Iran to relinquish its nuclear ambitions for a decade. The administration also attempted a foreign policy pivot to Asia, in order to counter expansionist moves by China and restore a regional balance of power. Yet it failed to extract the United States from Iraq or Afghanistan. More than any previous administration, it engaged in small-foot-print warfare through drones and special ops strikes, extending a state of seemingly permanent war. It encouraged rebellion in Libya and Syria without committing to support the subsequent revolution and was slow to respond to the rise of ISIL in Iraq.

It is difficult to determine what foreign policy direction President Trump will ultimately take. The President’s reversals and conflicting statements, the vagueness of Secretary of State Tillerson’s vision, and Trump’s contradictions with his Secretary of State make discerning a coherent policy difficult. During the campaign and in an aggressive speech to the United Nations he articulated an “America-First” posture that takes a transactional approach in pursuit of America’s interests (as he understands them) even at the expense of allies and international institutions. Since the election he has seemed to pursue this policy, pulling out of the Trans-Pacific Trade Partnership, continuing to criticize multilateral treaties, and signaling impatience with the United Nations. In December of 2017, despite contacts earlier in the year with Palestinian representatives, the President unilaterally recognized Jerusalem as the capital only of Israel, a position repudiated by most nations in a United Nations General Assembly vote soon after. That action, probably marking the end of any U.S. claim of helping broker a “two-state” solution, appeared to cater directly to Christian as well as Jewish Zionist constituencies without much consideration of larger consequences.

If advisors from the populist wing of the administration influence him, President Trump may thus approach the world in terms of “a clash of civilizations.” Or it may be that more traditional internationalists in the administration, such as Mattis and McMaster, will moderate this inclination. The inertia of a diminished State Department, international events, and global opinion may frustrate attempts at a course change. While it is unclear what values or strategy will drive Trump’s foreign policy, many around the world have voiced concerns and uncertainty about America’s global leadership. Some nations and non-state actors see this as an opportunity to be exploited.

The Emerging Global Order

As much as the United States and her allies were perceived to be “preeminent” after the collapse of the USSR, today we see growing instability as regional actors and long-term trends challenge the post-Cold War global order.

The proxy wars in Syria, Yemen, and Iraq reflect the age-old struggle between Shiite and Sunni, as well as the present-day ambitions of Saudi Arabia, Iran, and Turkey. Although tensions between Shiite and Sunni had been a part of the Middle East for centuries, the current conflict was set in motion when the U.S. invaded Iraq and destabilized several inherently volatile states. Their instability stemmed from the colonial powers’ disregard for ethnic and religious identities when they drew the national boundaries and left members of religious minorities in charge. Some suggest that the existing colonial powers did this intentionally so that the empowered minorities would remain dependent clients of their former rulers. The bloodiness of these wars and the specter of terrorism inspired by fundamentalist Islam tempt many to exaggerate threats from the Middle East, when greater challenges to the international order emanate from elsewhere.
Russia prefers a “polycentric world” (a world divided among regional powers) to the current U.S.-led international system, which they deem as reflecting and serving America’s interests. Russia’s view of the world is shaped by its precarious geographical position, with few naturally defensive borders and a history of multiple invasions (Genghis Khan, Napoleon, Hitler). Because of this, NATO’s expansion into former Soviet republics was bound to leave Russia fearful of encroachment and aggrieved at having lost regional hegemony. Putin has sought to restore a sense of Russian greatness by recovering regional dominance, invading Georgia, and annexing Crimea. He has also sown seeds of disunity and confusion among the NATO democracies and challenged American interests in Syria. Some worry that at an opportune moment, Russia will test the West’s commitment to newly formed NATO alliances with their former Eastern European client states.

China has stated the foreign policy goal of dominance over the “near seas,” particularly the South China Sea. The Obama administration’s “pivot to Asia” was designed to counter this goal by balancing power in the region, ensuring freedom of navigation, and protecting the territorial integrity and sovereignty of China’s neighbors. The bipartisan rejection of the Transpacific Trade Partnership in our recent election has provided an opening for China to secure economic alliances that may strengthen its regional ascendency.

China and India are rising economic powers, even as Europe and Japan grow older and decline. The World Bank has forecast that in ten years China’s GDP (aggregate, not per capita) will surpass the U.S. Other experts predict that by 2050 India’s economy will also surpass U.S. GDP. Some foresee a time when the dollar will lose the global dominance it has enjoyed since 1944 and will be joined by the euro and renminbi in a multicurrency monetary system. Recently, “China’s development banks have pumped billions of dollars into Africa, central Asia, and Latin America, displacing the World and the Asian Development Banks. In contrast to its Bretton Woods competitors, China’s lenders offer loans without attaching pro-democracy strings.”

Others doubt that the dollar can be displaced soon as a reserve currency, citing the structural weakness of the European Union revealed in the recent recession and the fact that the value of the renminbi cannot be trusted given that China is a closed society.

The capacity to project military power rests on economic power. This fact portends a shift in global military might. History teaches that these sorts of shifts in power can be extremely dangerous and difficult to peacefully negotiate. Today China is happy for the U.S. to patrol the global commons and spend its blood and treasure to stabilize, say, Afghanistan, allowing China to extract minerals without bearing the cost for maintaining order. China’s continuing development of cheap anti-ship missiles will complicate the ability of the U.S. fleet to project power inside the first island chain of the South China Sea. This may compromise freedom of navigation in the South China Sea and encourage China to continue encroaching on the sovereignty of nations like Vietnam and the Philippines. The U.S. response to this Chinese assertion of regional hegemony must be carefully managed.

Complicating this is the fact that the United States wants China’s help in containing a paranoid and dangerous North Korea. While China is alarmed by North Korea’s bellicose rhetoric and growing nuclear and missile capabilities, the prospect of a destabilized North Korea and tens of thousands of North Korean refugees streaming across the China border is their bigger nightmare. Beyond misunderstanding China’s interests, there are many ways the situation in North Korea could go terribly wrong. Unlike the balance of power that existed during the Cold War, when the possibility of mutual assured destruction restrained actors, dynamics in this simmering conflict could provoke a preemptive strike and then retaliation. The difficulties North Korea presents to the global order reinforces the importance of global cooperation to restrain nuclear proliferation.

Other Transnational Trends

Non-state actors, such as terrorist networks and transnational corporations, complicate traditional Westphalian conceptions of political order based on the sovereignty of the nation state. Terrorist networks undercut the legitimacy of governments that cannot protect civilians against attack and provoke strong nations to regularly violate national sovereignty of weaker nations to defend themselves. Transnational corporations whose balance sheets dwarf the GDP of poorer nations often seek economic advantage by weakening some governments and propping up others. Climate change and other environmental concerns transcend national boundaries and create refugees. Innovations in communications, finance, and travel have made the world smaller.

The world’s shrinking size invites powerful, distant nations to involve themselves in what, in an earlier age, would have been local disturbances or civil wars. It also makes migration easier. Advances in robotics have made manufacturing much less dependent on human labor. As trade expands and capital, talent and manufacturing move freely around the world, the globe has become, in Thomas Friedman’s terms, “flat.” Weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons, render state borders permeable.

Philip Bobbitt claims that these transnational trends are bringing the global order to a momentous inflection point. He predicts that they will challenge the nature of the state and the social contract that gives it legitimacy. A sign of the churning caused by these questions is the significant global retreat of liberal democracy, which began under the Obama administration. Sometimes the retreat is to an “illiberal democracy” as in Poland and the Philippines; other times it is a near-complete overthrow of democratic institutions as in Hungary and Turkey. The global expansion of democracy that happened following the end of the Cold War is over and the previously widespread conviction that capitalism necessarily fosters a democratic mindset increasingly looks quaint.

Furthermore, globalization has provoked a backlash among the economically developed countries of the world, particularly among their rural and working-class populations. People worry whether their governments can protect them from terrorist attack or absorb the vast numbers of refugees. The erosion of the economic position of the working and middle classes in the U.S. and Europe has intensified since the “Atlantic” recession of 2008. Today, in the United States and in Europe, we see the rise of populisms and nationalisms that reject globalization and question core democratic and capitalist values.

Ideally, international tensions would be adjudicated in the U.N. and in other international institutions that the U.S. and its allies fashioned after WWII. While these organizations have endured, few would say that the U.N. has lived into the dream of being a “Parliament of Man” [sic]. It never had the military teeth outlined in its charter, for the obvious reason that no nation wanted the relinquish sovereignty. The U.N. Security Council’s anachronistic membership no longer reflects economic and military realities. It is rarely able to act decisively or enforce norms. The one-nation veto spreads perverse incentives throughout the U.N.’s humanitarian and diplomatic work. As with the Responsibility to Protect doctrine, the moral reach of the United Nations often exceeds its grasp. At best it projects soft power (or legitimating authority) and helps coordinate action against terrorism and other common threats. While the U.N. is not all one might hope, it is not “nothing” either.

Historical, Theological and Ecumenical Resources

The diverse traditions of Christian faith have resources of history, theology, and global relationships that give us wisdom to address questions concerning global order and America’s role in the world. In this section we examine strands of U.S. Protestant political ethics before turning to their theological underpinnings.

The Christians who migrated to North America brought diverse traditions with them. Some looked primarily to the early Church for inspiration (the peace churches). Others drew inspiration from the natural law thinkers of the 11th Century (Roman Catholics). Still others interpreted the world through theological lenses ground during the Reformation (Lutherans, Reformed, and Episcopal Communions). On the American continent, Black Christians read the biblical story and developed theological insight in light of their experience of slavery and oppression. Other movements attempted to transcend European sectarianism and attain a purer biblical pattern of life (Disciples of Christ, some neo-Pentecostal movements). The Orthodox churches, most recent in terms of immigration, appeal to the longest traditions of negotiating with empires and representing peoples. This rich, diverse history gives the modern, ecumenical church multiple lenses through which to read scripture and interpret God’s world.

The Federal Council of Church’s Commission to Study the Bases for a Just and Durable Peace represented the theological and institutional strength of mid-20th century Protestantism. Rooted largely in Christian realism, the theologians who participated in its numerous studies and conferences outlined an ethic that supported principles that would establish a lawful international order. They encouraged the United States to accept moral responsibility in the international realm, while eschewing nationalistic notions of special providence. Their work, as previously noted, supported the Dumbarton Oaks and Bretton Woods agreements that helped structure the global order these past seventy years.

One of them, Reinhold Niebuhr, went on to address threats posed by the Cold War. He urged a policy of containment in response to “messianic communism,” which he predicted would eventually collapse from its internal contradictions. He also warned that the struggle posed a menace for a soul of a nation that was inclined to excessive confidence in its innocence and goodness. George Kennan, among other public officials, credits Niebuhr for inspiring his political philosophy. The threat of nuclear annihilation motivated mainline Protestants to articulate policies of just peacemaking to diminish the possibility of nuclear war.

During the early post-cold war years, some Christian theologians articulated theologies of “globalization.” They insisted that globalization was more than simply a political, technological, or economic phenomenon, contending that it included religious and moral dimensions. Max Stackhouse encouraged spreading the secularized Christian values outlined in the U.N.’s Universal Declaration of Human Rights, democracy, and a type of covenantal capitalism, as well as the metaphysical-moral vision that undergirds them. William Schweiker characterizes globalization as “a time of many worlds” threatened by “over-humanization” that threatens the integrity of life. Believing that the modern banishment of religious sources from moral thinking has resulted in a profound symbolic and conceptual poverty in current thought, he maintains that theological humanism can overcome this threat as well as the threats of anti-humanism and religious fanaticism. Walter Eucken and other Ordoliberals at the University of Freiburg developed the concept of Ordnungspolitik as an intellectual guidepost for Germany’s post-war reconstruction.

It is notable that theologians who participated in the Just and Durable Peace conversations called for an end to colonialism. Following World War II, former colonies demanded freedom and equal inclusion in the community of nations. Concurrent with this, Christians in many parts of the world and in the West articulated theologies of liberation that reflected their experience and protested the first world’s exploitation of the third world, pointed to the contradictions in Western Civilization, and proclaimed the biblical God’s concern for the oppressed. Third world Christians have sometimes characterized globalization as re-colonization and condemned patterns of “empire” that favor the wealthiest countries. At the same time, we may note that globalization has had a more complex impact on poorer countries than can be captured in simple evaluations of “good” or “bad.” This history gives the church an example of engagement and suggests theological resources that can guide a faithful response to transformations in the global order.

Theological Themes

The ecumenical church shares theological themes that transcend our doctrinal differences, even though we may emphasize some doctrines more than others and express the same doctrines in distinctive denominational dialects. The hymn “In Christ There Is No East or West” summarizes the cosmopolitan spirit of Christian faith. We view (or should view) the world in relationship with God who is both Creator and Redeemer. A loyalty to God’s reign and the prohibition of idolatry curbs nationalistic impulses, while an ethic of universal love alerts Christian ethics to the false charms of tribalism and fosters inclusivity.

A theological view of human nature has inspired and shaped the contributions that Christians have made to international relations. A Christian anthropology begins with the conviction that everyone is created in God’s image. This belief supports the dignity of every person, undercuts aristocratic and elitist ideologies, and underwrites a special concern for the poor, weak, and vulnerable.

A Christian anthropology holds the conviction that God has endowed every human being with a moral sense. This belief is rooted in the Apostle Paul’s declaration that Gentiles, who lack the Hebraic law, nevertheless possess the capacity for ethical reasoning because God has written the law on their hearts and given them a conscience (Rom. 2:14–15). Every human is able to determine right and wrong. It follows from this that morality cannot be limited to religious texts, the interpreters of these texts, or the communities formed around these texts.

In the 11th century, the belief that all people are capable of discerning right and wrong became the foundation on which natural law thinking developed and European law was reconstructed. It informed Martin Luther’s observation that “people are better ruled by a smart Turk than a stupid Christian.” Since Hugo Grotius in the 17th century, natural law and the (often Protestant) elevation of the individual conscience provided a basis for interreligious dialogue and the foundation for international law in a world of diverse cultures and religions. A Christian anthropology suggests that peoples of differing faiths and interests can reason together.

A Christian view of human nature is indelibly shaped by the claim that “all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God” (Rom. 3.23). The conviction that human sin curves individual and national interests in on themselves fosters realism about the limits of humans and their institutions. It compels us to recognize the countless ways that human law and moral reasoning can be corrupted. A belief in sin’s inevitable corruption amplifies sensitivity to corporate and structural evil and makes us worry about concentrations of power. It tempers utopian dreams, grounding a pragmatic view of what can be accomplished in history. It restrains the crusading spirit with the recognition that our best plans can have unintended consequences that may go tragically wrong. It makes the church doubt that moral appeals, by themselves, are able to correct injustice. Instead, guided by a sober realism, the church tends to pursue justice by placing limits, checks, and balances on power. In this connection the cross of Christ arouses suspicion of unchecked political and religious power, even as a belief in Christ’s resurrection gives grounds for hope in the face of evil and inspires resistance and reform.

Though they hold different theories as to how it works, Christians believe God’s grace is the remedy for sin. The “covenant of grace,” that runs through both “testaments” encourages a generous posture towards all people, Christian and otherwise, as having a worthy place before God. God’s covenant with Adam and Eve (who represent all humanity), with Noah (who again represents all humanity and all creatures), with Abram and Sari (with its aim to bless the families of the earth), and with the other covenants, express a single intention that is clarified and fulfilled in the new covenant in Jesus Christ. God has bound God’s self to all peoples and nations; indeed: God loves the cosmos. God’s universal covenant binds us together with other companions or partners. These ties give rise to moral obligations. The covenant of grace calls attention to the social dimension of human nature and the requirements for human flourishing. It also provides a positive basis for respectful, constructive engagement with people of different cultures and religions, as well as a model for federated international political structures.

Proclamation of the gospel of grace cannot be separated from an announcement that God’s reign overthrows systems of oppression. The gospel of Jesus Christ is the gospel of the one who proclaimed, “The kingdom of God has come near, repent, and believe in the good news” (Mk. 1:15). The dominion that Jesus announces involves influence and allegiance (hence the call to “repent”). God governs the world through secondary causes, including institutions of political power, which are instituted to promote creation’s flourishing and restrain evil. Sin corrupts these powers so that they are in rebellion. Jesus’ proclamation included a confrontation with sinful systems and structures that diminished people’s lives. Paul says God was in Christ reconciling the world (cosmos) to God’s self (2 Cor. 5:19), which is a way of saying that God’s commonwealth is not tribal, but includes all people and creatures. Indeed, it embraces the whole society of being, or, as Jonathan Edwards might put it, is benevolent to “being in general.” Jesus not only taught, but modeled this inclusion in his ministry, crossing boundaries of clean/unclean, righteous/sinner, Jew/Samaritan, male/female, and finally overcoming all sinful “walls that divide” the human family.

A more complete rehearsal of Christian social impacts throughout the 20th century would look at the high points of the Civil Rights movement and its aspiration—as in Martin Luther King Jr.’s famous Riverside Church sermon—to ending militarism and materialism as well as racism. The ecumenical churches have had influence in other areas; the human rights emphasis, opposition to capital punishment, the sanctuary movement and Central America solidarity work in the 1980s, influence on conservation and environmentalism, the nuclear freeze movement noted earlier in this text, opposition to the Vietnam war and other U.S. military interventions. Earlier support for improving labor conditions and organizing broadened in some ways to the corporate responsibility movement and consumer boycotts, often targeted on behalf of exploited workers. The purpose of mentioning these various campaigns is to indicate the scope and tenacity of the ecumenical churches, and to situate the international peace witness of this study effort in that history.

Even now, for people around the world living without hope, who have despaired that evil earthly powers control their destiny, the announcement of God’s rule is always good news. Rebellious earthly powers responded to the challenge of God’s in-breaking rule by crucifying Jesus. When God raised Jesus from the dead, God confirmed his teaching and example and defeated these rebellious powers, named as sin, evil and death. God’s redemptive and reconciling work is of course not done; it calls us to think and act creatively in each period and to call upon the power of the Holy Spirit who makes all things new.

Finally, U.S. churches have ties and communication with partner organizations and congregations around the world. Although we have focused on the responsibility of U.S. churches, a more just world order needs the support of all persons of good will. For that specific voice of the church that this proposal is to strengthen, we will want to deepen our transnational relationships, as stated in the initial recommendations, and we name them again. The mainline denominations are connected to confessional groupings of Reformed, Lutheran, Anglican, Methodist and other. The Peace Churches maintain international networks. The historic African American churches have forged relationships with African churches, new and old. The Orthodox churches retain the strongest links to their countries of origin. Members of the National Council of Churches of Christ and other ecumenical groups share some common ecumenical social teaching, as well as engage with ongoing conversations and debate. These relationships enrich our understanding and are vital to the ecumenical church as it strives to offer a prophetic word and a timely witness.

1. In invoking the Federal Council of Churches’ Commission in the 1930s to Study the Bases for a Just and Durable Peace, this proposal underlines the role of theologians and seminarians played in the creation of the U.N. and other international organization. One can also not invoke the creation of United Nations without recognizing its need for updating to better serve the values of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other subsequent advances in international law. One can read this proposal as a return to questions that study chair, Henry Van Dusen thought had not been fully answered in the “Just and Durable Peace” conferences. “Who is to be responsible for the determination and maintenance of the peace? What principles should be intrinsic to the peace we seek? … How can they be translated from the realm of ideals into the decisions of statesmen (sic) and the politics of nations?” See Heather A. Warren, Theologians of a New World Order: Reinhold Niebuhr and the Christian Realists, 1920–1948 (New York: Oxford University Press, 1997).

4. 5. John Ikenberry hints at the stakes of our current political moment, Compared with past orders—imperial and anarchic systems of various sorts, from the Greek and Chinese worlds of the classical era to the nineteenth-century European imperial system—the liberal order stands alone. Choose your metric. But in terms of wealth creation, the provision of physical security and economic stability, and the promotion of human rights and political protections, no other international order in history comes close. The liberal order may have its shortcomings—costly and ill-advised wars have been fought in its name, and vast economic and social injustices remain—but it has empowered people across the world who seek a better life within a relatively open and rules-based global system. 9. Robert Gilpin claims the most stable political orders are hegemonic, such as the current unipolar, American-led global order. He observes that while hegemonic powers benefit from the orders they uphold, free riders, which don’t have to shoulder the costs, often benefit more. Throughout history there usually comes a point when the cost of upholding the order exceeds the benefit extracted by the hegemon. Sometimes they continue playing this role to maintain the prestige. It gives one food for thought considering how military expenditures may be related to the U.S. to neglect of infrastructure and other public goods. John Foster Dulles, Six Pillars of Peace: Cement Unity Now with Organized World Collaboration. ” Dulles described the six pillars of peace this way, 1st—There must be organized political collaboration, in the first instance as between the United Nations, with others to be subsequently included… 2nd—Wherever, in the economic and financial field, interdependence is such that the acts of one nation may have acute international consequences, then—we say—such acts must be brought within the scope of international agreement and not left to purely unilateral decision… 3rd—There must be a standing international body to study the need for change… 4th—There should be some form of international organization to promote the ultimate autonomy of subject peoples… 5th—We propose international control of armament… 6th—…..we assert that the right of spiritual and intellectual liberty must be both recognized and made a matter of international concern. … http://www.ibiblio.org/pha/policy/1943/1943-03-18a.html.

15. Chris Miller argues that glasnost (openness) undermined perestroika (economic reform), making it impossible for Gorbachev to outmaneuver the interest groups who found perestroika threatening. Miller doubts Gorbachev could have taken the authoritarian path China took in ending Mao’s socialism. See, Chris Miller, The Struggle to Save the Soviet Economy, Mikhail Gorbachev and the Collapse of the USSR (Chapel Hill, N.C.: The University of North Carolina Press, 2016).

16. Daniel Philpot argues that glasnost and perestroika represented an ideological collapse that preceded the political falling away of former Soviet Satellites. See, The Shield of Achilles.
17. Some may ask whether the Charter of Paris for a New Europe (November 1990) is comparable with previous peace treaties. Though the agreement followed perestroika, which both undermined the ideological basis for Soviet participation in the Cold War and outlined democratic principles and human rights, it quickly passed into obscurity in the confusion that followed the collapse of a signatory, the Soviet Union. Much discussion of this period in history and what has followed is written from Charles A. Kupchan, No One's World: The West, the Rising Rest, and the Coming Global Turn, (New York: Oxford University Press, 2012).

21. The NCC advocated these six pillars:
   1) International political framework (provided by the United Nations); 2) International economic accountability; 3) International legal framework; 4) Protection for the most vulnerable; 5) Resolution and transformation of conflict; 6) Honoring human rights.

   They also suggested a seventh pillar, “concerned with ecology and the environment,” http://www.nccusa.org/news/news58.html. The NCCC international relations team that reopened this approach to world order was supported in part by the Stanley Foundation.

He claims that globalism, relativism, pluralism, secularism, and political correctness have dispirited and subverted the West’s previously humane, biblical capitalism that distributed wealth to a broad middle class. (Bannon’s sanitized history conveniently ignores the 19th century robber barons and the brutality that accompanied early industrialization, which provoked some workers to turn to communism.) In its place we have the crony capitalism and the vicious, Ayn Randian capitalism of Wall Street. Bannon also claims that Lilliputian globalists have tied down Europe and America, sapping our cultural strength and incapacitating us in the long war with Islamism, http://the-american-catholic.com/2016/11/18/remarks-of-stephen-bannon-at-a-conference-at-the-vatican/. 45. Philip Bobbit predicts that this transformation will be as disruptive and, likely, as violent as that which transformed the feudal order into the nation states. One may ask whether the current discontent in the West is a rejection of Bobbitt’s emerging “Market State,” which he claimed would own the future. See The Shield of Achilles: War, Peace, and the Course of History, (New York: Anchor Books, 2003).

46. Andrew Sullivan summarizes the nationalist backlash against globalization this way, Donald Trump is now president of the United States, having won on a campaign that trashed liberal democracy itself, and is now presiding over an administration staffed, in part, with adherents of a political philosophy largely alien to mainstream American politics. In Russia, Vladimir Putin has driven his country from post-communist capitalism to a new and popular czarism, empowered by nationalism and blessed by a resurgent Orthodox Church. Britain, where the idea of free trade was born, is withdrawing from the largest free market on the planet because of fears that national identity and sovereignty are under threat. In France, a reconstructed neo-fascist, Marine Le Pen, has just won a place in the final round of the presidential election. In the Netherlands, the anti-immigrant right became the second-most-popular vote-getter — a new high-water mark for illiberalism in that once famously liberal country. Austria narrowly avoided installing a neo-reactive president in last year’s two elections. Japan is led by a government attempting to rehabilitate its imperial, nationalist past. Poland is now run by an illiberal Catholic government that is dismembering key liberal institutions. Turkey has morphed from a relatively secular state to one run by an Islamic strongman, whose powers were just ominously increased by a referendum. Israel has shifted from secular socialism to a raw ethno-nationalism,” http://nymag.com/daily/intelligencer/2017/04/andrew-sullivan-why-the-reactionary-right-must-be-taken-seriously.html.

52. Donald Meyer notes the influence of theological realism. He suggests that in the minds of many, theological realism blurred into pragmatic realism. When Vietnam tarnished the reputation of the pragmatic realism, theological realism was also damaged, despite Reinhold Niebuhr’s sharp criticism of the misadventure from the beginning. This led some revisionist critics to dismiss Niebuhr as a pre-Vietnam Cold Warrior. See Meyer, The Protestant Search for Political Realism, 1919–1941 (Middletown, Conn.: Wesleyan University Press, 1988), p. xxiv.

Edward Luce believes it is more complex, noting that “Since 1970, Asia’s per-capita incomes have increased five-fold. Even in Africa, the world’s worst-performing continent, incomes have almost doubled. The West’s median income, meanwhile has barely shifted in the last half-century” The Retreat of Western Liberalism, p. 21.

Jean Porter distinguishes natural law viewed as the “created order of things” from natural law viewed as a “universal capacity of moral discernment.” She claims the later was the foundation for the development of the natural law tradition. See Jean Porter, Natural and Divine Law: Reclaiming the Tradition for Christian Ethics (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans Press, 1999). See also, Jean Porter, Nature as Reason: A Thomistic Theory of the Natural Law, Grand Rapids: Eerdmans Press, 2005).

Speaking as a member of a denomination that emphasizes the doctrine of election, I recognize that doctrines of election have sometimes fostered an arrogance about the believer’s place in God’s economy that is at odds with Christ’s kenosis and undercuts Jesus’ call to servanthood. This presents a sharp contrast with an emphasis on the covenant of grace.

Advice & Counsel on Item 09-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-06. This is an ambitious proposal to examine global order and the role of the United States and the church within that order. Issues of climate change and its effect on the movement of peoples, nuclear catastrophes, militarism, colonization, power rivalry, degradation of the environment, extinction of species, and migration are just some of the topics for study and examination proposed by this overture. These are valid and valuable goals, however the timeline suggested for the completion of a final report by 2022 is not realistic. This overture would benefit from a focus on a fewer set of topics.

On Promoting Democracy, Good Governance, Human Rights, and Sustainable Development in Madagascar—From the Presbytery of New York City.

The Presbytery of New York City respectfully overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk, the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Moderator(s) of the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to call upon the President of the United States and relevant Executive and Congressional leaders to promote democracy, good governance, human rights, and sustainable development in Madagascar by

   a. providing technical and financial support to public agencies and civil society organizations, including faith-based organizations; working in an impartial manner to promote voter education; inclusive and participatory democracy; free, fair, transparent, and credible elections; and strong and responsive public institutions;

   b. promoting consistent respect for fundamental civil and political rights, including the rights of free expression and free association;

   c. encouraging state and civil society actors in Madagascar working to deal with corrupt practices so that the Malagasy people are not robbed of the benefits of natural resource development and foreign assistance;

   d. offering increased financial and technical support to international agencies that are working to halt illegal trafficking of natural resources, animals, and animal products;

   e. reviewing and strengthening U.S. laws and international covenants designed to promote transparency in extractive industries and to prevent the payment of bribes or other corrupt transfers to political and business officials;

223rd General Assembly (2018)  785
f. urging the Malagasy government to take prompt and effective steps to prevent human trafficking and to prohibit the recruitment of personnel for labor contracts likely to expose workers to coercion or other violations of their human rights;

g. expanding U.S. federal development assistance programs designed to increase the capacity of the Malagasy government and other providers to deliver quality fundamental services including health, education, and impartial justice and security for all Madagascar’s people;

h. financing research and analysis aimed at deepening understanding of the root causes of climate change and assisting governments to minimize the impact of climate change on their citizens and the environment;

i. supporting consistent application of international law and fulfilling U.S. financial commitments to the peacemaking and sustainable development efforts of the United Nations; and

j. encouraging the Malagasy government and people to avert cyclical political crises and uphold the dignity of all of Madagascar’s people by implementing national reconciliation processes consistent with the principles of repentance (fibehahana), confession (fiaiken-keloka), justice (fahamarinana), and forgiveness/reconciliation/harmony (fihavanana) articulated by the Malagasy Christian Council of Churches (FFKM).

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Office of Public Witness and Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, to

a. monitor social and political developments in Madagascar and assist the Stated Clerk and other denominational leaders to identify opportune moments at which to express effectively the concerns of the General Assembly set out in Recommendation 1.;

b. advise Presbyterians on ways to advocate on behalf of democracy and on behalf of our sisters and brothers in Madagascar.

3. Urge PC(USA) congregations and individual Presbyterians to

a. pray for and with the people of Madagascar;

b. learn about the history of Madagascar and the FJKM, the current realities faced by the people of Madagascar, and the mission work of the PC(USA) in Madagascar;

c. support the ministry and witness of the FJKM and of PC(USA) mission co-workers in Madagascar; and

d. engage in advocacy with their respective legislators to support democracy, protection of human rights, adherence to the rule of law, good governance, ethical business practices, and good stewardship of natural resources.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk to

a. share this action with our partners in the Church of Jesus Christ in Madagascar (FJKM);

b. express our thanks to God for the FJKM’s holistic ministry and prophetic witness and for the opportunity to walk beside them as partners, and

c. inform them of our unceasing prayers for them and for their country.

Rationale

In March 2009, a military coup d’etat deposed Madagascar’s democratically elected president, Marc Ravalomanana, and installed a self-styled, “high authority of transition” (HAT), headed by Andry Rajoelina, the former mayor of the capital city, Antananarivo. The coup government shuttered the parliament, “packed” the High Constitutional Court, and stifled free expression, closing a number of radio stations, including Radio Fahazavana, operated by the PC(USA)’s partner, the five-million-member Church of Jesus Christ in Madagascar (FJKM). The HAT presided over rapid social and economic decline, exacerbated by the withdrawal of foreign assistance by many nations. In a country where more than 90 percent of the population was already subsisting on less than $2 per day, many households struggled to make ends meet.

African organizations, such as the African Union (AU) and the Southern African Development Community (SADC), quickly condemned the coup and called on Madagascar’s political leaders to restore democracy. The SADC brokered multilateral talks involving supporters of Rajoelina and Ravalomanana, as well as two previous presidents, Didier Ratsiraka and Albert Zafy. After two initial accords collapsed almost as soon as they were signed, nearly all of the parties signed a “Roadmap for Ending the Crisis in Madagascar” in September 2011. The roadmap identified a series of steps to be taken in preparation for new national elections and the restoration of democracy.
Meanwhile, the Malagasy Christian Council of Churches (FFKM)—composed of the FJKM, the Roman Catholic Church, the Lutheran Church, and the Anglican Church—initiated its own national reconciliation process. The process was based on “the four Fs,” four Malagasy words beginning with the letter “F,” that summed up essential stages of genuine and durable reconciliation: fibebahana (repentance), fiaiken-keloka (confession), fahamarinana (justice), and fihavanana (forgiveness/reconciliation/harmony). The FFKM held that all of these elements were necessary to begin to repair Madagascar’s social fabric at a grassroots level and reduce the risk of future outbreaks of the cyclical political conflict that has prompted several political crises since the island regained independence from France in 1960. In particular, our partners in the FJKM stress that strengthening fihavanana, which might also be translated as “kinship,” is vital to achieving reconciliation and building a shared future.

Although the roadmap was never fully implemented, the FFKM reconciliation process was ultimately overtaken by the pressure to hold presidential and parliamentary elections, which eventually occurred in late 2013. International observers accepted the outcome of the elections, despite numerous flaws, and Hery Rajaonarimampianina became Madagascar’s new president in January 2014.

However, while the new government enjoys more legitimacy than the HAT government did, it is unfortunately beset by many of the same problems. In particular, corruption is rife and public officials have made little progress in curtailing illegal trade in Madagascar’s unique precious woods, gemstones, and exotic animals. There are frequent reports of summary executions and other violations of human rights by state security forces, particularly in the south of the country where they often occur in the context of ostensible efforts to curb cattle rustling by bandits known as “dahalo.” In fact, insecurity and corruption are often closely linked as insecurity creates opportunities for corruption and corrupt officials have little interest in promoting social stability and security. Additionally, labor trafficking remains a persistent problem as people—especially women—desperate for income to support their families are recruited for domestic work in the Middle East and other places that turns out to be little more than slavery.

Madagascar is due to hold fresh national elections before the end of 2018. The elections will be critical to the future and well-being of the country’s 24 million people. Elections that are seen to be free, fair, transparent, and credible can help to entrench and consolidate democratic institutions and build public confidence in and ownership of democratic government. Conversely, a process that is muddied by the exclusion of certain candidates, an electoral commission perceived to be partial, widespread corruption and vote-buying, or other irregularities during the campaigning or polling will undermine the legitimacy of the outcome and invite poor governance.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved a commissioners’ resolution calling for the restoration of democracy in Madagascar and Honduras, both of which had experienced unconstitutional changes of regime in the previous months. The rationale for that resolution included the following passage, which is equally relevant to this overture:

In 2008, the General Assembly approved a resolution focused on the U.S. political process, “Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 977ff). Among the biblical, theological, and ethical foundations affirmed are the convictions that “power is held in trust for the common good” (Ibid, p. 984) and that power can also magnify sin. Hence, “we affirm that fundamental basis for checks and balances of power, and the awareness of our ultimate accountability to God and not to other human beings and groups (Peter: ‘we must obey God rather than men’). Alongside the awareness of human fallibility is the strength that God gives us: “God alone is lord of the conscience and has set it free from the doctrines or rules of men (human doctrines or rules), or anything contrary to scripture” (Ibid). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 978–79)

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) supports the need for the PC(USA) to speak out about the suffering of the people of Madagascar due to the lack of a democratic government. ACREC believes it is important that the language focus on a theological basis for intervention versus a democratic system of government.

Comment on Item 09-07—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

The Church of Jesus Christ in Madagascar (FJKM), our global partner in Madagascar, has actively encouraged the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to engage in advocacy with U.S. officials to support credible elections, the strengthening of democratic institutions, consistent recognition of human rights, and the promotion of reconciliation in a nation that has endured a series of political crises, including a military coup d’etat in March 2009. The actions of previous General Assemblies provide a compelling policy basis for advocacy in all of these areas.

Item 09-07 was drafted by the Advocacy Committee of the Madagascar Mission Network in consultation with the leadership of the FJKM.

On Seeking God’s Peace Through Nuclear Disarmament in the 21st Century—From the Presbytery of New Hope.

The Presbytery of New Hope overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Call upon all members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—in faithfulness to the God of justice, mercy, and compassion—to take actions in defense of God’s creation and our own security, which is inextricably bound to the security of the rest of the world, to take all actions such as might be effective in requiring full U.S. compliance with the obligation to achieve nuclear disarmament under the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons.

2. Renounce the false god of nuclear security with its promise of catastrophic consequences.

3. Renounce any policy that threatens the death of millions of God’s children in any land with a single command and a single warhead.

4. Join in ecumenical discussion at the highest level to develop a collaborative strategy with Christian and other faith communities to effect the total elimination of nuclear weapons from the earth.

5. Make use of resources within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to educate members about the existential threat of nuclear weapons and effective actions that can be taken to address and eliminate that threat.

6. Call upon Presbyterians to take the five risks Presbyterians must take for peace: Commit to the Gospel of Peace, confess our complicity in not being peacemakers, reclaim Christ the peacemaker, find new peace strategies, and convert the empire and work for peace [Five Risks Presbyterians Must Take for Peace: Renewing the Commitment to Peacemaking in the PC(USA), Christian Iosso, 2017].

7. Call upon the government of the United States of America to a. immediately begin the process of complete, irreversible, and verifiable nuclear disarmament in compliance with our obligations under the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty (1969), the findings of International Court of Justice (July 1996), and the requirements of the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (2017);

   b. recognize that any use of nuclear weapons is a de facto declaration of war, a power reserved by the Constitution to Congress alone, constrain the power of any president to initiate a nuclear “first strike” by adopting “No First Use” legislation;

   c. eliminate funding for programs designed to prolong the nuclear danger, including the Life Extension Program for existing nuclear weapons and the construction of nuclear weapon production facilities in Oak Ridge, Tennessee; Los Alamos, New Mexico; and any other locations that may be proposed;

   d. direct the U.S. Department of Energy to redirect resources to cleaning up nuclear and other contamination that has accumulated over decades and threatens human health and the environment at multiple nuclear weapons installations, former and present, and at waste sites used to dispose of nuclear waste;
e. provide sufficient resources for the protection of human health and the environment and the remediation of former nuclear weapons facilities;

f. provide support, where possible, to nongovernmental groups and organizations working for the abolition of nuclear weapons;

g. join in the international efforts to achieve nuclear disarmament, collaborating with the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons (ICAN) to seek full implementation of the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, beginning with a campaign to compel the United States to demonstrate global leadership to sign and ratify the treaty.

[Financial Implications: Per Capita: $2,500/year. Total—$5,000]

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) lives as a servant of the living God, and acts to transform the world. We are guided in our efforts, however imperfect, by the teachings and example of our Lord Jesus Christ, who in Matthew 26:52 commanded Peter to put away his sword and eschewed violence. The vision of the Kingdom of God captured in the book of Isaiah is of a world where swords were beaten into plowshares, spears into pruninghooks, and God’s children were instructed to “study war no more” (Isa. 2:4).

Since the dawn of the nuclear age, the existential threat posed by nuclear weapons has compelled the church to recognize that these weapons are distinctive among all weapons, having the power to render life on the planet unsustainable. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has engaged the question of nuclear weapons on numerous occasions, saying in Peacemaking: the Believer’s Calling (1980): “At this critical moment in history, peacemaking is the central activity of all believers individually and corporately,” and, in Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age (1988): “Since the policy of nuclear deterrence is in danger of becoming an end in itself, we must exercise our individual and corporate influence to effect a change in national policy as rapidly as possible.”

While many in the church and in the world believed the nuclear threat abated with the dissolution of the Soviet Union, the crumbling of the Berlin Wall, and the thawing of the Cold War, the reality of the threat has never lessened. The United States alone has more than 1,500 thermonuclear warheads deployed on hair-trigger alert around the globe. Our would-be adversaries have as many or more. Cumulatively, these weapons represent an existential threat to humanity.

Since the 1980s, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has remained largely silent on the issue of nuclear weapons and has never in its history taken an unequivocal position rejecting the idolatry of nuclear weapons and demanding that the United States take clear and irreversible steps toward nuclear disarmament.

And yet we know we serve the living Christ who by his example and through his teachings requires compassion of us that extends beyond our loved ones and even unto those who are considered our enemies: “‘You have heard that it was said, “You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.” But I say to you, Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you.’” (Mt. 5:43–44). This radical reversal of the usual dynamic of human relationships is at the very heart of the gospel; its claim on us is inescapable; its imperative applies directly to nuclear weapons.

Since 2014, international efforts to address the nuclear threat from a humanitarian perspective have led to a reemergence of the issue of nuclear weapons on the world stage. After issuing a strong statement condemning nuclear weapons in 2016, Pope Francis, leader of the Roman Catholic Church across the globe, renounced that church’s long-standing provisional acceptance of nuclear deterrence and categorically condemned, on November 10, 2017, not only the threat of use of nuclear weapons, but also “their very possession.” Nuclear weapons, Francis said, “cannot constitute the basis for peaceful coexistence between members of the human family, which must rather be inspired by an ethics of solidarity.”

It is in this context that the persistent exchange of messages and provocative military displays by the United States and North Korea has escalated the danger of a nuclear exchange to an alarming degree.

We would be clear, however, that our responsibility to call for and work for and achieve nuclear disarmament is not simply a response to fears arising from the current political situation, but rather a positive obligation of followers of Christ.

God’s Creation, Humankind, Other Creatures, and the Earth

The existence and threatened use of nuclear weapons presents an existential threat to humankind. It has been said that nuclear weapons represent humankind’s challenge to God, worded quite clearly: “We have the power to destroy everything you have created” (Arundhati Roy, The End of Imagination, 1998).

In the past twenty-five years, accidents, miscommunications, human error and computer glitches have, on numerous occasions, activated U.S. and Russian nuclear launch protocols, bringing the world to the brink of nuclear annihilation because of a mistake. Should a nuclear exchange take place, the use of nuclear weapons would constitute a catastrophe for the environment that is “not an abstraction, but represents the living space, the quality of life and the very health of human beings, including generations unborn” (International Court of Justice Opinion, July 8, 1996).

In 2018, nuclear weapons, now possessed by at least nine states, are the embodiment of a humanitarian catastrophe on an unimaginable scale. If used, they would release not only immense quantities of heat and energy, but also powerful and prolonged radiation causing damage vastly more powerful than the damage caused by other weapons. The destructive power of nuclear weapons cannot be contained in either space or time. They have the potential to destroy all civilization and the entire ecosystem of the planet (International Court of Justice Opinion, July 8, 1996).

It is this characteristic of nuclear weapons—that their effect cannot be contained in time or space, cannot distinguish between combatants and noncombatants, cannot be confined to the field of battle, cannot be constrained to the time of declared hostilities—that places them outside any reading of the Just War theory.

Additionally, the radiation released by even a small series of nuclear explosions would affect health, agriculture, natural resources, and demography over a very wide area in a phenomenon known as nuclear winter. The International Court of Justice, in its 1996 opinion, noted that the use of nuclear weapons would be a serious danger to future generations. Ionizing radiation will inevitably damage the future environment, food and marine ecosystems, and cause genetic defects and illness in future generations.

Thus, we see that nuclear weapons pose a threat not only to human life, but to all life on the planet, and even to the natural processes that make life possible—the health of soil and water that, if contaminated by long-lasting radionuclides, will be unavailable to sustain life for millennia.

The fact that the catastrophic consequences of nuclear weapons is so great that it is almost impossible to contemplate (the radiological half-life of highly enriched uranium, a central component in all of today’s thermonuclear weapons, is 710 million years.) does not relieve us of our obligation to face the reality of what human beings have done in inventing, manufacturing, testing, using, and deploying for use, thousands upon thousands of these weapons.

Statistics

Today, the United States of America has more than 4,500 thermonuclear warheads in its active nuclear stockpile. More than 1,500 thermonuclear warheads are deployed on “hair-trigger” alert on 700 delivery vehicles positioned around the globe—in underground silos, on airbases, and submerged in a fleet of nuclear armed submarines.

The United States Congress has expressed its intention to commit the United States to an ambitious plan to modernize its entire nuclear weapons enterprise at a cost of $1.2 trillion over the next thirty years. When costs of environmental cleanup are included, the number rises to $1.7 trillion.

These numbers represent not only a commitment to an enduring reliance on nuclear weapons as the foundation of our military posture around the world, they also represent, as President Dwight D. Eisenhower said, “the theft of a slice of bread from a child who is not fed, those who are cold and are not clothed. This world in arms is not spending money alone. It is spending the sweat of its laborers, the genius of its scientists, the hopes of its children.”

The U.S. plan to modernize its nuclear weapons enterprise is not a projection into the future. The United States plans in 2018 to begin construction of a new manufacturing facility—the Uranium Processing Facility—to produce new thermonuclear cores to extend the lifetime of current nuclear warheads and to permit the design and production of new nuclear warheads at the Y-12 National Security Complex in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, at a cost of more than $6 billion.

At the same time, abandoned facilities from nuclear weapons production activities in past years deteriorate at sites around the country. Some of these “excess” facilities pose, in the words of the Department of Energy’s Inspector General, “an ever-increasing risk to workers and the public.” The key reason for the failure to remediate these facilities and eliminate risks is fiscal—money is being spent to build bombs and contamination is left behind in soil and water to threaten generations to come.

Causes and Calls to Peace

The use or threat of use of nuclear weapons is in violation of common humanitarian law. This finding, by the International Court of Justice in 1996, was followed by the court’s unanimous finding that nuclear weapons states have an obligation to achieve complete disarmament. The U.S. and many of these states assumed this obligation voluntarily in 1969 under the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, and promised to disarm “at an early date.”

In July 2017, 122 nations approved a Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons at the United Nations. In September, when the Treaty opened for signature, more than fifty nations signed it (the minimum number for the Treaty to enter into effect). At some point in 2018, it is expected that fifty nations will also complete their internal processes of ratifying the treaty at which point it will enter into effect. The United States, along with its NATO allies and other nuclear weapons states, refused to participate in the negotiation of this treaty and has refused to sign it.

In the years since the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) said, in 1988, “Since the policy of nuclear deterrence is in danger of becoming an end in itself, we must exercise our individual and corporate influence to effect a change in national policy as rapidly as possible.” The policy of nuclear deterrence has assumed the power of a sacred text in national policy discussions. But in the last decade, prominent voices in the United States, including Henry Kissinger, George Shultz, Sam Nunn, and William Perry, joined by high-ranking military, diplomatic, and political leaders from around the globe have declared “We are at a tipping point,” (Yale Divinity School Journal, Reflections, 2009) and have called on the United States to take concrete steps toward nuclear disarmament.

It is widely recognized that in the current geopolitical climate, injudicious statements by some nuclear armed leaders have had the effect of exacerbating the risk of a nuclear exchange. On January 26, 2017, the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists set the hands on the Doomsday Clock, a universally recognized gauge of the world’s vulnerability to nuclear attack, at 2½ minutes to midnight, the closest it has ever been set since the clock was established.

In an effort to underscore this moment of peril and hope, the Nobel committee awarded the 2017 Nobel Peace Prize to the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons (ICAN). In December 2017, ICAN’s Beatrice Fihn said, in accepting the prize: “There are only two endings to the story of nuclear weapons. Either we end nuclear weapons, or they will end us.”

The last great national movement to address the threat of nuclear weapons took place in the United States in the 1980s. Faith communities led that movement. It is time for people of faith to step forward once again to provide leadership in the new global movement to achieve nuclear disarmament. The leadership of Pope Francis should inspire all people of faith to insist that governments pursue policies that provide universal security, guaranteed by relationships of mutuality and brother/sisterhood, rather than the threat of annihilation by nuclear arms.

Conclusion

The promise of the kingdom of God fulfills our hope beyond the secular expectations of history. God redeems history; we do not. We must act as consistently with that redemption as our light and our power permit (Peacemaking: The Believer’s Calling, 1980).

History, by the grace of God, has drawn us to this moment, when the threat of nuclear annihilation is once again in the forefront of the public imagination and is brought before the church. Nations of the world, compelled by their understanding of the humanitarian cost of nuclear weapons—not only their use, but the threat of their use—have risen to adopt a Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons. The effectiveness of that treaty depends in large measure upon us—if we permit our government to ignore the treaty, it will.

In addition, we understand now in ways that were not understood in 1980, the environmental, health, and financial costs that nuclear weapons extract even from those they purport to protect. And we understand that the policy of “deterrence” is actually a suicide pact that might be invoked not only by intentional acts of leaders, but by accidents of miscommunication, computer error, or terrorism.

This is a moment in history when the church must speak with its clearest prophetic voice. Our message is the message of the Old Testament prophets: “Neither shall we study war . . .”, leavened by the gospel of Jesus Christ: unbridled and unlimited compassion for all people, including and especially our enemies.

The mechanisms and instruments required to achieve universal, verifiable nuclear disarmament exist. What is lacking is the political will and the moral leadership. The church can contribute to the former and provide the latter.

It is imperative that we side with the angels and insist, as Jesus did to Peter, that governments around the world put away the sword.

Advice & Counsel on Item 09-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-08 with the proposed amendment in Recommendation 7.g. to read:

“g. join in the international efforts to achieve nuclear disarmament [in all countries whether considered to be United States allies or not], collaborating with the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons (ICAN) to seek full implementation of the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, beginning with a campaign to compel the United States to demonstrate global leadership to sign and ratify the treaty.”

All too often, the tendency for United States policy regarding disarmament is to focus on a few countries that it does not view as its allies, while ignoring other countries that have a belligerent record towards their neighboring countries and have nuclear weapons at their disposal. For any disarmament plan to be universally accepted, it should be universally applied.

In summary, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns supports this overture, but cautions against a tendency to only hold accountable for disarmament those countries we do not perceive as allies.

On Concerning Prayer and Preparation for Peace on the Korean Peninsula—From the Presbytery of the Cascades.

The Presbytery of the Cascades overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA) to:

1. Encourage every congregation in the PC(USA) to pray at least one week each year for North Korean victims of human rights.

2. Prepare for possible unification by reviewing the list of all properties owned by the predecessor denominations of the PC(USA) in North Korea before the Korean War.

3. Encourage PC(USA) presbyteries that are interested in this issue to work together with the National Caucus of Korean Presbyterian Churches.

Rationale

It is time that the whole church should pray together for defectors and others victimized by North Korea’s violations of human rights. At the same time, we should remain hopeful that peace and reunification will come to the Korean peninsula. It is time to review the list of all properties owned by predecessor denominations of the PC(USA) so that centers for caring and faith will be available for Christians in what is now North Korea.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-09

Advice & Counsel on Item 09-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-09 calls for preparing for peace between North and South Korea by praying for “victims of human rights” in the North and taking inventory of properties lost at the time of the Korean War.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the assembly approve an alternate resolution for both Items 9-09 and 9-11). This alternate resolution was developed by our primary Presbyterian and ecumenical Christian partners in South Korea, with Recommendation 3. added to respond to a possible breakthrough in relations with North Korea.

“On behalf of our church partners and in consultation with World Mission, ACSWP respectfully requests the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA) to do the following:

1. Designate September 2018 as a Korean mission month:
   a. to pray for peace in the Korean peninsula and for victims of division and conflict on both sides of the Korean peninsula, and
   b. to reflect on the past 130 years of Presbyterian mission to Korea including both the positive legacies and also the ways in which mission workers might have contributed to the Korean conflict.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk and the Office of Public Witness to communicate with domestic and international governments and agencies to encourage peaceful resolution of the divisions on the Korean peninsula, which will foster an environment where no party to the historic conflict feels the need to sacrifice civil liberties in the name of security and where refugees and asylum-seekers are treated humanely.

3. Authorize World Mission Ministries and other appropriate PC(USA) bodies and staff to support and monitor progress toward reconciliation and de-nuclearization in consultation with Korean and other Asian partners, such as the National Caucus of Korean Presbyterian Churches, including the following actions:
“a. Explore, in conjunction with current refugee ministries, caring and support ministries for those displaced from both South and North Korea;

“b. Share more broadly within the PC(USA) an understanding of current relationships with the Korean Christian Federation (KCF) of the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK);

“c. Deepen the participation of the PC(USA) in the Ecumenical Forum for Peace, Reconciliation, and Development Cooperation in order to prepare U.S. Christians for reconciliation in Korea by expanding people-to-people exchanges and other forms of trust building;

“d. Assist the Presbyterian Mission Agency in planning events and programs for the Korean mission month and providing informational resources to local councils and congregations;

“e. Encourage the U.S. and other governments to lift sanctions on North Korea as appropriate to genuine steps toward peace and justice and in respectful consultation with regional allies; and

“f. Expand ministries of healing and reconciliation, building on the example of the PC(USA) peace delegation visit to No Gun Ri in 2017, and including as feasible additional areas in Korea significant to the history of the conflict.”

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and doubtless many Presbyterians have followed the current U.S. administration’s opening to North Korea with a mixture of doubt and hope; doubt, because prior efforts at peacemaking have failed, and hope, because South Korean leaders, in particular, have taken brave initiatives to expand significant conversations with the North. The dangers of nuclear war cannot be overstated, dangers for which Hiroshima and Nagasaki stand as continuing reminders, and dangers against which U.S. and international sanctions have been imposed on the North. Despite a mixture of sanctions and isolation, the government of North Korea has managed to develop a nuclear weapons capacity and delivery systems for the bombs they have tested. Thus, as we write in late April 2018, with tacit and apprehensive support from Japanese allies and Chinese neighbors, the government of the United States is currently considering direct talks with the leadership of North Korea.

This substitute motion reflects consultation with partners, but is not their statement. It builds upon Stated Clerk J. Herbert Nelson II’s trip to South Korean in 2017, which was dedicated to making formal apology for war crimes in a particular location and building up relations with the South Korean churches, as directed by 2016 General Assembly action. As we pray for peace across borders and across generations, the key to past and current PC(USA) approaches is recognizing that Korean Christians have been engaged in the work of reconciliation and should take the lead whenever possible. They are quite familiar with the situations in both North and South Korea and in neighboring countries where Koreans have sought refuge. At the same time, the nuclear dimension to Korean relations makes this a matter of worldwide relevance.

Further, the U.S. withdrawal from the Iran nuclear agreement makes the potential for any progress with North Korea worthy of exploration, while cautioning us against putting too much hope in any single meeting or tentative agreement. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in fact, would take the assembly’s action here into consideration in the study of moral purpose in international affairs proposed in Item 9-06.

This substitute affirms the concerns of the overtures but honors our ecumenical relations with full church partners and councils, which must come before caucuses and coalitions in any country or region. Neither overture acknowledges the action of the 2016 General Assembly on Peace, Justice, and Reunification in the Korean Peninsula. Our partners are already developing plans and programs for healing the grievous divisions, political, economic, and cultural, across the two Koreas, without presuming a collapse of either the North Korean government or its economy. We would encourage commissioners to hear from Korean church representatives and PC(USA) mission personnel on whether additional measures are necessary.

Overall, as long as there are deep patterns of mutual suspicion and equally deep desires for independence from outside powers in both Koreas, careful and steady actions seem wise. With respect to the ownership of church properties, for example, we understand that these matters are already subject to several theologically-grounded agreements. As U.S. Presbyterians, we take pride in the contributions we made to some of those buildings and institutions, but our larger joy is in the continuing faith and presence of the Holy Spirit in the Korean Christians on both sides of the border.

On a Study of the Current Socioeconomic and Political Realities in Central America—From the Presbytery of New York City.

The Presbytery of New York City overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to develop a comprehensive study of the current socioeconomic and political realities in Central America and report its findings and recommendations to the 224th General Assembly (2020). [The study would be done in consultation with the Latin America Office of World Mission] and a team of five persons working with the mission personnel in the region, and included the theological and ethical reflection required.]

[Financial Implications: Per Capita (2019) $12,000 (2020) $18,500 (Total—$30,500]

Rationale

The PC(USA) has had mission and partnership relationships in Central America since 1882.

The PC(USA) engaged in study and action regarding Central America during the crisis years of the 1980s but has not updated its policies since 1988.

The 1987 Esquipulas Peace accords brought an end to the regional civil wars and initiated a turn towards democracy. However,

1. corruption remains widespread throughout the region;
2. poverty remains a major reality;
3. organized crime and gangs have created a deadly reality throughout Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras;
4. resulting waves of migrants have impacted both the U.S. and other Central American countries;
5. the government of Nicaragua has become increasingly authoritarian and the United Nations Refugee Agency (UNHCR) reports a steady “democratic deterioration”; concerns have been expressed over a potentially devastating interoceanic canal and treatment of indigenous people; and
6. the United States House has before it a Nicaraguan Investment Conditionality Act that would “oppose loans at international financial institutions for the Government of Nicaragua unless the Government of Nicaragua is taking effective steps to hold free, fair, and transparent elections.”

There are numerous ongoing church mission projects in Nicaragua. The Presbyterian Hunger program, for example, has hosted annual mission trips focused on building “Just Relationships.”

There is need for theological reflection on the contemporary reality in Central America as well as recommendations for the church, the U.S. government, and the international community regarding the impact of U.S. social and economic policy on the region and specific recommendations for each country.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-10

Advice & Counsel on Item 09-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-10 calls for our church’s 1988 policy on Central America to be updated based on a study of the socioeconomic and political changes.

“The Presbytery of New York City overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to develop a comprehensive study of the current socioeconomic and political realities in Central America and report its findings and recommendations to the 224th General Assembly (2020). [This study would be done in consultation with the Latin America Office of World Mission and a team of five persons working with mission personnel in the region, include the theological and ethical reflection required, and be coordinated with the ecumenical study of Global Order and National Purpose, Item 09-06].”
The proponents of this overture do not waste words, but we urge commissioners to read this overture in light of Item 09-04, which focuses on the three Northern countries of Central America. This study would involve all six Spanish-speaking countries, wisely so in terms of the turmoil in Nicaragua at this time. (Belize, just South of Mexico and English-speaking, is normally not counted due to its small population, but is a seventh country). The crisis in Venezuela and transitions in Colombia and Cuba (subject of a recent General Assembly study), also would support doing the study and including Presbyterian mission links to the neighboring countries. (More than 1 million Venezuelans have migrated to Colombia, and thousands more continue to leave for countries all over Latin America, adding to social tensions and refugee numbers).

The temptation of U.S. citizens is to see much of Latin America in terms of immigration, and often simply as an extension of Mexico. The peoples are lumped together as “Hispanic” or “Latino/a/x,” and then evaluated in terms of our alleged fears or economic needs, such as harvesting crops. Most Presbyterians, to judge from our policies over the years, are not afraid of Latin Americans and are motivated by fairness. Yet to make our case we need updated facts and understanding. Studies, such as the one recommended here, include solidarity visits to our mission personnel and ecumenical partners, as well as to public officials, academics, and business people who hold a wide range of views, including some opposed to Christian faith and values. Social witness in those cases most clearly includes evangelism, as we make known our motivation for study.

In the recent case of Cuba, ACSWP devised a study with the Cuba Partners Network that involved meetings with officials in the State Department and National Security Council as well direct exposure to Cuba, leading to a report that differs with current administration policy: https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/New-Hopes-and-Realities-in-Cuban-American-Relations-2016-ACSWP.pdf.

In assessing both Items 09-04 and 09-10, and the larger ecumenical project of Item 09-06, commissioners are being asked to consider our understanding of mission in the region, as well as our own financial and other capacities. We no longer seek to convert Roman Catholics, for example, and we seek to embody a Reformed Protestantism that is not thinly disguised Americanism. In fact, our partnerships and shared communion with Reformed Christians in Central America may help us keep our faith clearer about the Christ who meets us across all human borders.

[The assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 36, 39–40.]

Alternative Resolution:

1. Designate September 2018 as a Korean mission month
   a. to pray for peace in the Korean peninsula and for victims of division and conflict on both sides of the Korean peninsula, and
   b. to reflect on the past 130 years of Presbyterian mission to Korea including both the positive legacies and also the ways in which mission workers might have contributed to the Korean conflict.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk and the Office of Public Witness to communicate with domestic and international governments and agencies to encourage peaceful resolution of the divisions on the Korean peninsula, which will foster an environment where no party to the historic conflict feels the need to sacrifice civil liberties in the name of security and where refugees and asylum-seekers are treated humanely.

3. Authorize the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through World Mission Ministries and other appropriate Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) bodies and staff, to support and monitor progress toward reconciliation and denuclearization in consultation with Korean and other Asian partners, including the following actions:
   a. Explore, in conjunction with current refugee ministries, caring and support ministries for those displaced from both South and North Korea;
   b. Share more broadly within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) an understanding of current relationships with the Korean Christian Federation (KCF) of the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK);
c. Deepen the participation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in the Ecumenical Forum for Peace, Reconciliation, and Development Cooperation in order to prepare U.S. Christians for reconciliation in Korea by expanding people-to-people exchanges and other forms of trust building.

d. Plan events and programs for the Korean mission month and providing informational resources to local councils and congregations.

e. Encourage the United States and other governments to lift sanctions on North Korea, as appropriate, to begin genuine steps toward peace and justice and in respectful consultation with regional allies.

f. Expand ministries of healing and reconciliation, building on the example of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) peace delegation visit to No Gun Ri in 2017, and including as feasible additional areas in Korea significant to the history of the conflict.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On North Korean Refugees

That the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Designate June 2019 as the Korean mission month, pray for peace in Korea and for safekeeping of North Korean refugees, and reflect on the past 130 years of Presbyterian mission to Korea.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate with domestic and international governments and agencies to encourage peaceful resolution of the tensions on the Korean peninsula and bring an end to the mistreatment and the exploitation of North Korean refugees.

3. Create a task force consisting of no less than seven members (two designated by the National Caucus of Korean Presbyterian Churches, one designated by the Coordinating Committee for Korean American Presbyteries, two members of racial ethnic origin other than Korean designated by the newly elected General Assembly Moderator(s), one from the PMA’s Office of Korean Intercultural Congregational Support, and one from the OGA’s Office of Manager for Korean-Speaking Councils Support) with the responsibilities to

   a. make recommendations to the 224th General Assembly (2020) to suggest positive improvements to the sensitive issues embedded in the Korean peace process and to create a sustainable strategy for the church to respond to the North Korean refugee crisis in consultation with Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s ecumenical partners in Korea;

   b. collaborate with other refugee ministries to formulate plans to rescue and bring relief to the North Korean refugees who are displaced in neighboring communities;

   c. assist the Presbyterian Mission Agency in planning events and programs for the Korean mission month and inform local congregations and councils of them.

Rationale

The South Korean government reports that it annually admits 1,500 refugees or defectors from North Korea. There are approximately 30,000 to 50,000 refugees currently hiding in China and more in neighboring countries. These refugees are subjected to physical and mental abuse, sexual exploitation and threats of repatriation. Once arrested and forcefully repatriated to North Korea, they are incarcerated and often sentenced to death. Currently, our church does not have any policies nor programs for this situation.

There are dozens of congregations already involved in nondenominational efforts to help the North Korean refugee crisis, but they are unorganized and lack direction.

The Korean peninsula has been under the threat of war for the past sixty years. With presidential meetings for peace in progress, it is high time for our church to be an advocate for these peaceful resolutions.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) has always supported Christianity in Korea. From the very beginning we have sent missionaries such as Horace Allen (1884), Horace Underwood, Samuel Moffett, and many others to Korea. Our efforts have brought great progress for South Korea, but the blood of the martyrs was the seed for the church. The situation today calls for further efforts to sustain the gospel of peace and reconciliation for this country.
The spiritual affluence in Korea is a great resource for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to draw from in this most important movement towards world peace.

We live in rapidly changing times. Conflicts and tensions have grown resulting in war and the escalating refugee crisis. In times such as these, we must join hands in prayer. Let us ask God to use our efforts for peace as a lightning rod for the rest of the world. God bless.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-12

Advice and Council on Item 09-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of an alternate resolution for Item 09-12.

Item 09-09 calls for preparing for peace between North and South Korea by praying for “victims of human rights” in the North and taking inventory of properties lost at the time of the Korean War, and Item 09-12 also overemphasizes one aspect of the needed balance in ecumenical and international relations on the peninsula.

On behalf of our church partners and in consultation with World Mission, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) respectfully requests the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the following alternate resolution:

“In response to Item 09-12, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approves the following:

1. Designate September 2018 as a Korean mission month
   a. to pray for peace in the Korean peninsula and for victims of division and conflict on both sides of the Korean peninsula,
   b. and to reflect on the past 130 years of Presbyterian mission to Korea including both the positive legacies and also the ways in which mission workers might have contributed to the Korean conflict.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk and the Office of Public Witness to communicate with domestic and international governments and agencies to encourage peaceful resolution of the divisions on the Korean peninsula, which will foster an environment where no party to the historic conflict feels the need to sacrifice civil liberties in the name of security and where refugees and asylum-seekers are treated humanely.

3. Authorize the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through World Mission Ministries and other appropriate Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) bodies and staff, to support and monitor progress toward reconciliation and de-nuclearization in consultation with Korean and other Asian partners, such as the National Caucus of Korean Presbyterian Churches, including the following actions:
   a. Explore, in conjunction with current refugee ministries, caring and support ministries for those displaced from both South and North Korea;
   b. Share more broadly within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) an understanding of current relationships with the Korean Christian Federation (KCF) of the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK);
   c. Deepen the participation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in the Ecumenical Forum for Peace, Reconciliation, and Development Cooperation in order to prepare U.S. Christians for reconciliation in Korea by expanding people-to-people exchanges and other forms of trust building.
   d. Assist the Presbyterian Mission Agency in planning events and programs for the Korean mission month and providing informational resources to local councils and congregations.
   e. Encourage the United States and other governments to lift sanctions on North Korea, as appropriate, to begin genuine steps toward peace and justice and in respectful consultation with regional allies.
   f. Expand ministries of healing and reconciliation, building on the example of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) peace delegation visit to No Gun Ri in 2017, and including as feasible additional areas in Korea significant to the history of the conflict.”

with the North. The dangers of nuclear war cannot be overstated, dangers for which Hiroshima and Nagasaki stand as continuing reminders, and dangers against which U.S. and international sanctions have been imposed on the North. Despite a mixture of sanctions and isolation, the government of North Korea has managed to develop a nuclear weapons capacity and delivery systems for the bombs they have tested. Thus, as we write initially in late April 2018, with tacit and apprehensive support from Japanese allies and Chinese neighbors, the government of the United States is currently considering direct talks with the leadership of North Korea.

This substitute motion reflects consultation with partners but is not their statement. It builds upon Stated Clerk J. Herbert Nelson, II’s, trip to South Korea in 2017, which was dedicated to making formal apology for war crimes in a particular location and building up relations with the South Korean churches, as directed by 222nd General Assembly (2016) action. As we pray for peace across borders and across generations, the key to past and current PC(USA) approaches is recognizing that Korean Christians have been engaged in the work of reconciliation and should take the lead whenever possible. They are quite familiar with the situations in both North and South and in neighboring countries where Koreans have sought refuge. At the same time, the nuclear dimension to Korean relations makes this a matter of worldwide relevance.

Further, the U.S. withdrawal from the Iran nuclear agreement makes the potential for any progress with North Korea worthy of exploration, while cautioning us against putting too much hope in any single meeting or tentative agreement. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in fact, would take the assembly’s action here into consideration in the study of moral purpose in international affairs proposed in Item 09-06.

This substitute affirms the concerns of the overtures but honors our ecumenical relations with full church partners and councils, which must come before caucuses and coalitions in any country or region. Neither overture acknowledges the action of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) on Peace, Justice, and Reunification in the Korean Peninsula. Our partners are already developing plans and programs for healing the grievous divisions, political, economic, and cultural, across the two Koreas, without presuming a collapse of either the North Korean government or its economy. We would encourage commissioners to hear from Korean church representatives and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission personnel on whether additional measures are necessary.

Overall, as long as there are deep patterns of mutual suspicion and equally deep desires for independence from outside powers in both Koreas, careful and steady actions seem called for. With respect to the ownership of church properties, for example, we understand that these matters are already subject to several theologically grounded agreements. As U.S. Presbyterians, we take pride in the contributions we made to some of those buildings and institutions, but our larger joy is in the continuing faith and presence of the Holy Spirit in the Korean Christians on both sides of the border.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-12.

ACREC/REAC laments the inhumane treatment of the people of North Korea and calls the church to act. We affirm the need to support our sisters and brothers on the Korean peninsula who seek to provide much needed care.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-12

Advice and Council on Item 09-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-12.

Recommendation 2. “encourages peaceful resolution of the tensions on the Korean peninsula and fosters an end to the utterly oppressive treatment of North Korean refugees.” The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns highlights the importance of the role of women in peacemaking efforts. The ACWC would encourage future peacemaking reports and resolutions to include an affirmation of the essential role that women play in peacemaking, in much the same way that the UN Security Council Resolution 1325 cites the importance of “Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, and stressing the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution.”

Recommendation 1. “prays for peace in the Korean peninsula and for North Korean refugees displaced from their homeland,” and Recommendation 3. “seeks relief and rescue plans for the North Korean refugees … who are under constant threat of abuse, persecution, and forceful repatriation. This commissioners’ resolution does not specifically identify the vast numbers of women who are among these refugees, but as many news organizations have reported, not only are the percentages of women refugees high, these same women have either been, or are in threat of being, trafficked as sex slaves. For example, NBC reported in February 2018 the following:
In 1998, at the height of a famine that ravaged North Korea, just 12 percent of the nearly 950 North Korean defectors were women, according to the South Korean government's Ministry of Unification. In 2017, an estimated 83 percent of the more than 1,120 North Koreans who defected were female. That switch has taken place over the past several years, observers say, as women generally have an easier time going unnoticed when they cross into China. In addition, North Korean women are wanted as sex slaves or to be married off in China, which has 30 million more men than women, government data shows.ii

The ACWC lifts up the inclusion of women in all peacemaking endeavors around the world for obvious reasons of gender equity, but also for the oft unseen need for the voice of women who are the most affected and vulnerable by displacement from their homelands. Furthermore, the inclusion of women offers a perspective that is gained as the concerns for women may be vastly different than those of concern to men.

Therefore, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-12.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Prayer for the People of Nicaragua.

The 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Invites its congregations to pray for the peace of Nicaragua. Pray for an end to the violence, and that our loving and merciful God guide and enlighten Nicaraguans in the construction of the path of peace, nonviolence, justice, and hope.

2. Asks congregations and presbyteries to inform themselves about the tragic situation in Nicaragua through reports from international organizations such as the Organization of American States and Inter-American Commission on Human Rights.

3. Instructs the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Washington Office, to oppose any proposed intervention of the United States—whether military, economic, or diplomatic—into the current affairs of the country of Nicaragua. This includes:
   a. strongly opposing the passage of the Nicaragua Investment Conditionality Act (NICA Act), already passed by the House and soon to be considered in the Senate;
   b. opposing any further funding of Nicaraguan organizations by the National Endowment for Democracy and/or the National Democracy Institute until the current crisis is resolved.

4. Instructs the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate this action to congressional representatives.

Rationale

Since mid-April of this year, the peaceful country of Nicaragua has been torn apart by civil unrest, disturbances, and violence. As of this writing, more than 150 people have been killed in this wave of violence and the toll is getting higher every night. The majority of the dead are students who are standing up for a new vision of Nicaragua that seeks greater justice and democratization. Transportation has been disrupted, making it difficult for farmers to bring their products into the cities, and the scarcity of food has impacted prices, increasing the food insecurity of this already poor country. Extreme levels of uncertainty and insecurity are overwhelming all of Nicaraguan society. Our PC(USA) Mission Partners in Nicaragua are asking for our prayerful and informed support as they continue to witness to God’s love in these tense and difficult days.

The complex issues at play in Nicaragua defy simplistic analyses. Some may view the situation primarily as an oppressive government reacting with repressive violence to peaceful protests. Others, in light of prior financial support from the United States government to some opposition groups, focus on antigovernment groups who have attacked and burned stations and government buildings. There is some truth in both of these positions, and nothing justifies the horrors that the people of Nicaragua are living today. But these are issues that the Nicaraguan people should be allowed to solve for themselves without interference from the United States. The NICA Act legislation could be especially damaging because it seeks to stop international loans that will be needed to rebuild the country after the destruction caused by the current unrest.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-13.

We grieve the violence and deaths currently taking place in Nicaragua. We note the division of opinion among Nicaraguans, in their current desperate situation, over whether United States economic intervention would be helpful.

However, we agree with the resolution in opposing the Nicaragua Investment Conditionality Act (NICA) and other named United States interventions. We note that the Nicaragua Investment Conditionality Act (NICA) is designed to remain in force only until the Government of Nicaragua takes steps to address concerns, such as promoting human rights and free press, holding fair elections, and combating corruption. And we note that the language of the Nicaragua Investment Conditionality Act (NICA), instructing “the United States Executive Director at each international financial institution to use the voice and vote of the United States to oppose any loan for budget support for the Government of Nicaragua” does add “other than to address basic human needs or to promote democracy.” However, the United States Government has an unfortunate track record of interventions in Central America, including in the guise of “promotion of democracy.” Thus, we also note that United States intervention has the potential to escalate, not diffuse, the current violence. And we note the potential for the Nicaragua Investment Conditionality Act (NICA) to enable a U.S.-led embargo unless and until Nicaragua elects a government specifically favored by the United States.

Commissioners may wish to consider adding a recommendation that the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through Compassion, Peace, and Justice, explore appropriate disaster and development support for our Nicaraguan partners in the aftermath of the current emergency.

Advice and Council on Item 09-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The United States has a dubious history of intervention in the internal affairs of Nicaragua that eventually have led to the current situation of governmental and social instability.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Stopping the Separation of Immigrant Families at the Border and Upholding the Integrity of the U.S. Asylum System.

That the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA):

1. Call upon the [Department of Justice (DOJ)] [federal government] to immediately end the newly implemented zero-tolerance policy that is tearing apart families.

2. Call upon the [DOJ] [federal government] to reunite parents and children that have been separated as soon as possible, under the care of the community, not in family detention [ensuring access of attorneys to those in detention].

3. Call upon the [DOJ] [federal government] to make certain that every parent in custody knows the location of their children and facilitate regular communication between parents and their children until they are reunited.

4. Call upon the [DOJ] [federal government] to not use possible reunification with children to force immigrant parents into a concession to plead guilty to a crime in exchange for reuniting with their children.

5. Call upon churches and individuals to advocate for the passage of the Keep Families Together Act in Congress, which would take away the power of the DOJ to continue separating families. [Condemns the President’s June 20th
6. Call upon synods, presbyteries, and individual churches to understand, condemn, and work against the ideology of white supremacy undergirding these racist immigration policies.

7. Remind our denomination of the Gospel call to work for just and humane policies for all immigrant communities, grounded in the principles of family unity, human dignity, and rights.

8. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate the contents of this overture to the President of the United States, our representatives in Congress, as well as to Jeff Sessions, U.S. Attorney General, and Kirstjen Nielson, U.S. Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

[9. Direct the PMA, through the Office of Public Witness, to advocate for a policy that ensures family unity and safety for those in the asylum process.]

[9.] [10.] Strongly encourage congregations to learn about the impact of these immigration policies on the lives of church members as well as members of our local communities, making use of resources listed below:

- The Genesis of Exodus film and Story Map resources: www.genesisofexodusfilm.com;
- Family Detention: www.pcusa.org/familydetention;
- Resources on Refugees and Asylees http://oga.pcusa.org/section/mid-council-ministries/immigration/refugees/.

[11. Urge churches and congregations to connect with, accompany, support, and advocate alongside immigrant-focused organizations that can lead us to be part of the voices working for change and transformation of unjust immigration laws and policies.]

Rationale

The 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) condemns the Department of Justice’s inhumane and cruel “zero-tolerance” policy that seeks to prosecute all immigrants crossing the U.S.-México border, regardless of any individual’s claim to asylum. In April of 2018, news spread across the country that Customs and Border Protection (a branch of the Department of Homeland Security) was separating migrant families at the border due to the increase in prosecutions of parents of these children. The DOJ, led by Attorney General Jeff Sessions, admitted that these policies would result in the further separation of families, considering this a deterrent to what they consider unlawful entry of migrants. Due to these policies, children as young as twelve months are being torn from their parents and detained even hundreds of miles away from their parents. This includes families who have arrived through an official port of entry and those apprehended outside of one.

From October 2017 to April 2018, approximately 1,358 families have been torn apart at the border, resulting in trauma to parents and children. Reported in the New York Times, a Honduran father, Marco Muñoz, committed suicide in jail, after being torn away from his son a day earlier. Another report surfaced that a child was torn away from her mother during breastfeeding. When the mother resisted, she was handcuffed. An employee inside one of the Arizona facilities detaining the separated children reported that officials had told children that their parents were “lost,” which the children interpreted to mean dead.

Dr. Collen Kraft, president of the American Academy of Pediatrics, warned that “fear and stress, particularly prolonged exposure to serious stress without the buffering protection afforded by stable, responsive relationships—known as toxic stress—can harm the developing brain and harm short- and long-term health.” She went on to say that she is dismayed by the “sweeping cruelty” of these policies. Indeed, it would appear that child abuse has become an official policy of the United States.

The United Nations human rights office, too, has condemned this practice of family separation, saying it “violates the rights of the child and international law.” The United States is the only country that has not ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which stipulates that “a child who is considered a refugee … shall receive appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance.”

Our Scriptures are very clear about our call to welcome the stranger among us: “When an alien resides with you in your land, you shall not oppress the alien. The alien who resides with you shall be to you as the citizen among you; you shall love the alien as yourself, for you were aliens in the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God” (Lev 19:33–34). In Matthew, Jesus tells a parable to his followers emphasizing specific classes of people we should serve as if serving Christ himself. Immigrants are one of those groups. “I was a stranger and you welcomed me” (Mt 25:35c). In fact, the call to care for immigrants is reiterated thirty-seven times throughout the Bible.

The United States has a history of separating brown and black children from their parents. During the era of slavery, enslaved families were frequently torn apart, bought and sold by different slave owners. Most of these families were never able to reunite. In the late 19th century, the U.S. government began to tear native children from their families to forcibly assimilate them into white American culture in Indian Boarding Schools. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) issued a call for the denomination to apologize to the descendants of native people who were taken to these boarding schools. The 221st General Assembly (2014) directed agencies of the PC(USA) to bolster the church’s commitment to anti-racism training and “an understanding of systemic racism, including white privilege, power, and prejudice in relation to race.” In recent history, millions of immigrant families have been torn apart through deportation of a family member or members. The 220th General Assembly (2012) called the church to prioritize family unity as part of its advocacy around immigration reform. So, now, the practice of separating families is only the latest in a pattern of treating brown and black people as inferior and unworthy of human dignity, a pattern the church must condemn.

The Trump Administration claims to have no choice but to separate children from their “criminal” parents, even though there is nothing in the criminal code that requires either incarceration for a misdemeanor offense or separation of children and their parents. This cruel policy is being implemented even against immigrants who present themselves at official border crossings and legally request asylum. The government has made it clear that it seeks to collectively punish children and parents in order to deter them from seeking asylum and refuge in the U.S. This must not be allowed to stand without a full-throated protest from every corner of the church.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-14

Advice and Council on Item 09-14—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to approve Item 09-14 with the following amendments:

“[9. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Office of Public Witness, to advocate for a policy that ensures family unity and safety for those in the asylum process.]

As the resolution points out, Jesus called the children to him. Within the Presbyterian tradition, we have continued the call to bring all of God’s children to the church. The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved the statement “Transforming Families,” which points out that family loyalty reflects the covenant that God establishes with God’s people. This covenant is reflected in the vows parents make at baptism, as well as the recognition of the church community that they are called to support both the parents as they raise the child and to support the child as they grow and mature. “We envision a church and society that welcomes and nurtures all persons, regardless of their family circumstances” (Transforming Families, p.11). The United States government’s decision to rip children from their parents at the U.S./Mexico border is a direct violation of our call to welcome all persons into our country and our communities.

Further, “We envision a society in which the well-being of every child is nurtured and supported” (Transforming Families, p. 11). As the resolution points out, the American Pediatric Association has stated the harm to both child and parent, both immediately and continuing throughout their precious lives. Ripping children from their parents is not supporting and nurturing these children, it is the opposite of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s vision for all children.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a policy on comprehensive immigration reform. The theological grounding reminds us in both the Old and New Testaments that God calls us to welcome the stranger (see Lev. 19:33–34; Deut. 10:18–19; Mt. 25:44–45; and Heb. 13:2). As people present themselves to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) at the U.S./Mexico border, our faith tradition calls on us to create communities of welcome; not to rip their children from them and then lose track of these children in the system.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-14

Advice and Council on Item 09-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-14.

This resolution is aligned with the core values of our Christian beliefs and faith in the health and unity of the family in general, and ministry of compassion and hospitality in specific and aligned with ACREC values including

1. advocating for of the most vulnerable among us, the children,
2. condemning and seriously addressing any mistreatment of children.

The question for ACREC is not whether a state has the right to protect its border or not, but the question for us is, biblically speaking, “how we treat the alien and the stranger in our midst.”

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-14

Advice and Council on Item 09-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 09-14.

This commissioners’ resolution clearly articulates the need for the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to act in this moment of crisis occurring daily at our southern border, and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns affirms the resolution and advises for its approval. The ACWC believes to not do so would, in essence, be turning our backs on the most vulnerable among us—the women and children being torn asunder as we watch in silence. Let this not be us, we pray.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-14

Comment on Item 09-14—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) is actively engaging with social movements led by undocumented leaders and affected people to win just immigration policy. The OPW is able to provide training and equipping for mobilization and accompaniment, including resources for direct action.

Part of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance’s (PDA) mandate is to provide relief to refugees and asylum seekers. Over the past week, PDA has begun working with mid councils along the U.S. southern border to financially support organizations providing legal aid and helping parents find their children who have been separated by the Department of Homeland Security. PDA is also working with the Office of Immigration Issues, other denominations and ecumenical partners, and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to create a more coordinated advocacy and humanitarian response.
In addition to the resources already mentioned, to understand more about the reality of immigration detention for these separated parents, we refer the committee members to the PDA produced short documentary film Locked in a Box: Immigration Detention, http://pda.pcusa.org/pda/resource/video-immigration-detention/.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Denouncing Violence and Injustice in Nicaragua.

That the 223rd General Assembly (2018) direct the Stated Clerk and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (through its Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, Presbyterian Office of Public Witness, and Presbyterian World Mission) to speak out on behalf of the people of Nicaragua in response to violent repression taking place at the hands of their own government [, and other violent actors]. The assembly directs these entities to work together to:

1. Develop a moral, theological, and prophetic framework in consultation with our mission partners in Nicaragua, in response to escalating violence and the growing outcry for international support, thus adding our faith-rooted witness to the growing chorus of voices denouncing the actions of the Nicaraguan government [, and other violent actors]. The assembly asks that such a condemnation would take the form of a written statement and press release. Such a statement should make reference, but not be limited to, the following points:
   a. Rejection of the use of firearms and other weapons used on civilians resulting in loss of life and injury.
   b. Affirmation of the preciousness of each and every life bearing the image of God our creator.
   c. Rejection of arbitrary arrest and imprisonment, and torture and humiliation in detention.
   d. Rejection of any form of repression to the people’s right to assembly and expression.
   e. Affirmation of God’s intention for humanity’s freedom to flourish and to live in peace with one another.
   f. Rejection of attempts to suppress journalists, media coverage, and freedom of the press.

2. Develop an interagency and interfaith coalition to prioritize these issues, to continue to monitor the situation, and to respond appropriately to further developments.

3. Address the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the U.S. Department of State to pressure the Nicaraguan government to cease the killing of protesters and political dissidents, demand “the release of students arrested ... respecting their physical integrity” (Centro Intereclesial de Estudios Teologicos y Sociales [CIEETS]), “restoration of security and the free movement of citizens and the nonmilitarization of civil institutions” (CIEETS), and immediately “allow an international, independent, and transparent investigation in order to prosecute those responsible for the repression” (Resolution of European Parliament).

[5. Encourage the National Dialogue and the mechanisms that they agree upon, which to date include invitation of the OAS’ Inter-American Commission on Human Rights back to Nicaragua; to accelerate the formation of an international and independent expert Truth Commission; to invite the United Nations High Commissioner on Human Rights to Nicaragua; to invite the Secretary General of the OAS to Nicaragua; and to call for an end to all forms of violence from all sides.]

Rationale

On April 16th, 2018, student-led demonstrations began in Managua in response to a failure of the Nicaraguan government to protect the Indo Maiz Biological Reserve from a devastating 56-acre fire. Two days later, President Daniel Ortega announced a policy to reduce social security benefits to elderly individuals by 5 percent, at which time protests escalated. The government then launched a violent counteroffensive leaving several dead including students and journalists.

Protests and executions of innocents have continued throughout the months of April and May and into June. Within the first five days of protests alone, the Nicaraguan Red Cross reported treating more than 400 persons for injuries related to the attacks (Amnesty). Thus far, more than 200 have been killed more than 1,000 have been injured, more than 450 arrested, and more than 100 have gone missing (last updated Saturday, June 16th).
“One of the first attacks of this type reported took place on 18 April 2018, around the Central American University (Universidad Centroamericana, UCA), where a crowd had gathered to protest. Amnesty International has photographs and a copy of the security camera footage from the entrance to the university. The images confirm that from the start of the protests pro-government armed groups were used by the police to attack dozens of demonstrators gathered there” (Amnesty).

Major escalations have occurred only within the last three weeks. “On May 26, the local headquarters of the Frente Sandinista (Sandinista Front) in the town of Altarracia, on Ometepe island, were burned by unidentified third parties. In the early hours of May 27, masked attackers allegedly shot mortars at two guards who were watching the gate at the Central American University” (Organization of American States [OAS]).

On May 28, “students were reported to have occupied the Simón Bolivar Campus at the National University of Engineering (UNI, by its Spanish acronym). According to the information received by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, parapolice groups and riot squads attacked the students at the site using bullets, tear gas, and mortars. Also on May 28, the IACHR received reports of clashes between demonstrators and the National Police at the Metrocentro traffic circle, which allegedly left twenty people injured and led to several arrests. ... There was also a fire at the Public Prosecutor’s Office in Masaya, whose cause needs to be investigated” (OAS).

Attacks on journalists and media outlets were also reported on May 28. “The EFE news agency complained that its team had been assaulted by National Police officers near the UNI, as it covered police repression against students who were occupying the higher education center” (OAS). Since then, “media outlets covering the protests were arbitrarily shut down by the government and journalists who expressed any form of opposition were intimidated and detained … and the journalist Angel Gahona was shot dead while presenting a live broadcast” (Resolution of European Parliament).

On May 30th, protesters gathered for a Mother’s Day demonstration in which an estimated 600,000 people marched to support the mothers of those who had been killed in previous demonstrations. Sources report that “several so-called parapolice ‘shock forces’ and armed third [pro-government] parties repressed the march and shot demonstrators” (OAS) resulting in 15 deaths and 199 injured in Managua, Esteli, and Masaya. Possible use of snipers has also been reported (Amnesty).

As a result of these attacks, chaos has ensued in many cities and towns. Reports have surfaced via Twitter (@SOSNicaragua) that state-run hospitals are refusing to treat individuals injured in the attacks. Sources report possible use of crop-dusters to spray crowds with poison. Local, primarily agricultural communities, have built makeshift roadblock barricades to protect civilians, many of which have been attacked. A local news outlet reported on a young girl who was released from prison due to pressure from local Catholic Bishops who could not walk because she had been gang-raped by guards. These are only a tiny fraction of the atrocities that are occurring.

All the while, the Ortega-Murillo regime maintains a propaganda campaign to smear protesters themselves as the source of any unrest, looting, vandalism, fires, and violence.

On April 27th, the UN High Commissioner on Human Rights called for “independent and transparent investigations without delay and to prosecution of those responsible for the deaths of these individuals.” Amnesty International has issued reports saying, “the alarming number of deaths and people injured indicates that the government used disproportionate, excessive, and sometimes unnecessary force in responding to the protests, allowing demonstrators to be deliberately attacked.

On May 28th, the European Parliament passed a resolution saying, the “high number of casualties demonstrates the brutal repression used by the state authorities, violating the principles of necessity and proportionality as required under international law and standards setting out limitations to the use of force.” Most recently, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights made a statement on June 1st urging the Nicaraguan Government to dismantle pro-government militias and restore the people’s right to peaceful protest.

Daniel Ortega, Nicaragua’s president, and his wife and Vice President Rosario Murillo were elected to their positions on a platform of a hybrid of socialism and Christianity and have faced pressure from religious entities such as the Nicaraguan Episcopal Conference of Bishops who met with the regime on June 7th to present a document expressing the lament of the Nicaraguan people and calls for peace. The Society of Jesus (Jesuits) in Nicaragua also released a statement on June 9th urging leaders to cease the bloodshed.

We affirm the Presbyterian Church’s previous policies with regard to Nicaragua (1990).

We affirm the witness of our partners in Nicaragua, the CEPAD (Council of Protestant Churches of Nicaragua) and CI-EETS (Interchurch Center for Social and Theological Studies) who have issued statements and asked for solidarity and prayer.

We affirm the words of our PC(USA) Director of Latin America and the Caribbean, the Reverend Valdir França, to “stand with the people in their pain and sadness as we watch what is still a developing situation that has broken into disorder and chaos ...” and to “pray for the families of the most affected … continu[ing] to hear the perspective of our partners and count on their guidance on how to support and respond to this crisis.”
This escalating deadly clash demands a strong, prophetic condemnation from people of all faiths. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must use its voice and influence to further denounce these atrocities, in a way that does not compromise the safety of our mission partners in Nicaragua. The obligation rests with the Nicaraguan State “to dismantle the repressive structures that are operating in the country” (OAS) and the state must be pressured by the international community to comply. The tactics of the Ortega-Murillo Regime are intentionally meant to instill fear in the people to keep them in their place. As Christ exemplified in his life and ministry, we must stand on the side of the persecuted and join them in their cry for justice.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-15—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to approve Item 09-15 with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“That the 223rd General Assembly (2018) direct the Stated Clerk and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (through its Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, Presbyterian Office of Public Witness, and Presbyterian World Mission) to speak out on behalf of the people of Nicaragua in response to violent repression taking place at the hands of their own government [and other violent actors]. The assembly directs these entities to work together to:

“1. Develop a moral, theological, and prophetic framework in consultation with our mission partners in Nicaragua, in response to escalating violence and the growing outcry for international support, thus adding our faith-rooted witness to the growing chorus of voices denouncing the actions of the Nicaraguan government [and other violent actors]. The assembly asks that such a condemnation would take the form of a written statement and press release. Such a statement should make reference, but not be limited to, the following points:

“a. Rejection of the use of firearms and other weapons used on civilians resulting in loss of life and injury.

“b. Affirmation of the preciousness of each and every life bearing the image of God our creator.

“c. Rejection of arbitrary arrest and imprisonment, and torture and humiliation in detention.

“e. Affirmation of God’s intention for humanity’s freedom to flourish and to live in peace with one another.

“f. Rejection of attempts to suppress journalists, media coverage, and freedom of the press.

“2. Develop an interagency and interfaith coalition to prioritize these issues, to continue to monitor the situation, and to respond appropriately to further developments.

“[3. Address the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the U.S. Department of State to pressure the Nicaraguan government to cease the killing of protesters and political dissidents; demand “the release of students arrested . . . respecting their physical integrity” (Centro Interreligioso de Estudios Teologicos y Sociales [CIEETS]); “restoration of security and the free movement of citizens and the nonmilitarization of civil institutions” (CIEETS), and immediately “allow an international, independent, and transparent investigation in order to prosecute those responsible for the repression” (Resolution of European Parliament).]

“[3. Continue to consult with and listen to the perspective of our partners in Nicaragua and count on their guidance on how to support and respond to this crisis.

“[4. Encourage the National Dialogue and the mechanisms that they agree upon, which to date include invitation of the OAS’ Inter-American Commission on Human Rights back to Nicaragua; to accelerate the formation of an international and independent expert Truth Commission; to invite the United Nations High Commissioner on Human Rights to Nicaragua; to invite the Secretary General of the OAS to Nicaragua; and to call for an end to all forms of violence from all sides.]”

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) supports much of the intent of this resolution, but advises some substantial changes in the language. These changes are advised in the interests of ensuring (as the original commissioners’ resolution rationale comments) that we do “not compromise the safety of our mission partners in Nicaragua.”

Further, we wish to emphasize even more strongly that we should be guided by our local partners in Nicaragua in this rapidly changing situation. We also recognize and support the work of the “Diálogo Nacional”—the national dialogue between civic groups and the government, as mediated by the Roman Catholic Church. The self-determination of the Nicaraguan people in this crisis is of utmost importance, and this national dialogue is the most important mechanism for a peaceful resolution at this time. They are inviting outside help from particular international institutions in the area of human rights and investigation into the violence that has taken place since April 18th. However, it is important to steer away from any U.S. State Department-led forms of intervention, given our unfortunate track record in the region.

The changes to the resolution also recognize (as does the resolution’s rationale) that there is, increasingly, more than one perpetrator of violence.
Item 10-01

[The assembly approved Item 10-01 as amended and with comment. See pp. 28, 29.]

Comment: While the overture contains significant funds for assessing all Native American churches, if a church community or mid council feels they can accurately assess and tabulate the cost through volunteers in the community in an effort to be good stewards of our denomination and diminish costs, this action could be permitted

On an Initiative to Repair Critical Infrastructure Needs of the Churches and Properties in the Historic Native American and Alaskan Native Mission Field of the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

The Presbytery of Grand Canyon overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA) to direct the [General Assembly] [Presbyterian] Mission Agency to [provide] [work with mid councils to facilitate] an assembly-wide inventory documenting the physical needs of Native American churches and chapels and creating an ongoing fund for urgent and immediate repairs and improvements. The property assessments shall be done during that time between the meetings of the 223rd General Assembly (2018) and the 224th General Assembly (2020). The comprehensive report shall be comprised from the on-site inventories and shall indicate what repairs need to be completed for congregation use.

The PC(USA) has identified ninety-eight Native American churches in the denomination. Inventorying the ninety-eight campuses is manageable over the two-year assessment period. A formal assessment of churches/chapels in the Synod of the Southwest was launched in 2016. An assessment of ten churches and chapels in Presbytery of Grand Canyon’s northern bounds was completed in nine months. The assessment process, as completed and critiqued, provides a guide for future and expanded inventories in PC(USA) with the following components:

1. Inventory—Intentionally working together, evaluation teams would use survey forms that allow for both check-offs and narratives of the situation of each church. Teams [should] [shall be led by individuals with the appropriate professional certification, licensures, or degrees appropriate to the work and may also] include synod and presbytery staffs, Native American ministries committees, [Native American Consulting Committee,] Native American congregations, and special task forces. Focus would be on immediate safety and health repairs needed to stop leaking roofs, build-up of mold, buckling walls, collapsing retaining walls, dangerous furnaces, stoves, refrigerators, air conditioners, deteriorating fences, parking lot potholes, graffiti, and abandoned buildings.

2. Report—Findings of the inventories will be reported to all responsible parties during the two years between meetings of General Assembly and a report would be made to the 224th General Assembly (2020) in Baltimore, Maryland. To be of value, this report must contain estimates of the identified repairs and improvements. Of equal value is the necessity to provide a mechanism to prioritize the repairs and improvements and the associated estimated costs.

3. Research—Results of the surveys will be used for further research and given to the Presbyterian Foundation to designate and earmark funds for the Historic Native American and Alaskan Native Mission Field. The creation of such funds must be used to educate members across the PC(USA) in quest of generous gifts and support. Research should make note of any funds given for Native American and Alaskan Native missions that may have been redirected by the judicatories of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Foundation, synods, and presbyteries to mission works in other fields. That would reaffirm the integrity of our church and our gift-giving.

4. Repair—A means must be established to match identified projects with teams of volunteers capable of making the repairs, including Presbyterian and non-Presbyterian groups looking for such mission work. This is an invitation to the PC(USA) itself to marshal its churches and volunteers to furnish their labor, materials, and funds for mission work projects, especially to start with the most pressing and immediate needs.

5. Establish and Fund—This overture calls for using current, previous, and future funds to further the ministry of Jesus Christ to Native American and Alaskan Native peoples in the U.S., including Alaska and Hawaii, to establish an ongoing fund to meet the needs for urgent and immediate repairs. Health and safety repairs/improvements are in desperate need to enable continued use of the facilities by congregations and public who visit the churches. It calls for planning long-term physical maintenance of the historic Native American mission fields, as well as qualified staff needs.

Rationale

This is a call for preparation of a comprehensive, on-site inventory by all responsible parties, agencies, groups, and persons working with Native American churches to document the facilities and the conditions of those facilities on our Native American church and chapel properties, and in the process clearly identify what is required and mandatory by current codes and regulations to bring the properties up to those current codes and health and safety standards for their continued use. Because these conditions have largely been ignored, conditions of facilities are deteriorating rapidly.

This is a call to remember the Comprehensive Strategy for Ministries with Native Americans with recommendations coming from the 212th General Assembly (2000) (Minutes, 2000, Part I, pp. 206ff). The assembly referred the following recommendation to the “General Assembly Council, Special Task Force on Native American Ministries, for further discussion and the development of specific, measurable recommendations to the 214th General Assembly (2002)”:

Instruct the General Assembly to make available adequate funding for implementation of the “Comprehensive Strategy for Ministry with Native Americans,” including but not limited to the following: (a) extend support for developing congregations beyond the traditional model of five years; (b) develop and produce a recommended outline and overview for commissioned lay pastor training, to be used in preparation for ministry with Native American communities, and commend these materials to presbyteries; (c) increase recruitment of and maintain adequate funding for Native American Scholarship Aid for seminary students; (d) assist in the development of opportunities for volunteer service in Native American communities; (e) conduct an inventory of Native American church properties; (f) provide funding to implement the strategies recommended for youth and young adult ministries. (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 206)

This is a call to support efforts identified as critical to the Native American churches in a Native American Ministry Supplemental Report authored by the Office of Native American Support, in consultation with the Native American Consulting Committee (NACC), and received by the 219th General Assembly (2010) (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 135ff). The following is the conditions defined for property in 2009 and little has happened to correct the situation:

i. Property Concerns

Many of the reservation churches were built during the time of Euro-American westward expansion, well over 100 years ago, and in many cases the last major maintenance on the buildings was done under the Board of National Missions (pre-1973). Reservation churches have few financial resources, and the cost of repairs can be prohibitive. While not the case in all situations, most Native American churches are built on tribal land, and if the congregation ceases to exist, the building, by law, reverts to the tribe. Some tribes have been responsive to the needs of reservation congregations, and some congregations have been able to do fundraising, both locally and through “children” of the congregation now living in urban areas. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 141)

Presbyteries, too, have a significant role regarding the properties of Native American churches. They often hold the insurance on the properties, an invaluable service. They can also be a means to generate mission connections that can help provide assistance and/or direct contributions of labor and materials, whether to help with ongoing maintenance or to respond to a crisis situation when a building becomes unusable as a result of age or severe damage through flooding or a fire. An ongoing need of NACC is to complete an inventory of Native American church properties and the issues they present.

This is a call to remember the requests made at the 212th and 219th General Assemblies (2000) and (2010) that have gone largely unanswered and unfunded. The conditions of the Native Americans, both spiritual and physical, continue to deteriorate and the denominational calls for action have fallen on deaf ears. It is time to act!

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), most notably during the 19th and early 20th centuries in its predecessor denominational form through the Board of National Missions, was a model at dispatching missionaries and leaders to remote areas to share the story of Jesus Christ. The missionaries established many mission churches in the Southwest, with one-third of those located on Native American reservations with these churches still in existence today.

Collapsing structures, leaking roofs, unstable walls, deteriorating plumbing and electrical, dangerous furnaces, stoves, and refrigerators, potholed parking lots, and graffiti-covered walls are some of what our Native American sisters and brothers confront on their churches campuses today. Air-conditioning systems are problematic, fences around property are falling down, and outbuildings are too decrepit to use. Church members’ safety and health are jeopardized by continued use of crumbling structures. Often needed major repairs cannot be made—and are not made—because the congregations lack the resources. For example, there are no funds for new roofs or furnaces. Such repairs would serve to revitalize and sustain the Native American churches, which often are remote locations, lacking trained clergy, and under-attended by tribal members. It is a fundamental responsibility to maintain what we built if we plan to go forward and continue to advance the work and message of Jesus Christ.

Native American churches are not alone in occupying facilities sorely in need of repairs, upgrades, and even total replacement. A look across the landscape of Presbyterian facilities would uncover some woeful examples of immediate structural and maintenance needs. For thirty-three years (1879 to 1912), there were twenty-four Presbyterian churches started. Some of these Presbyterian church structures are still in use today and are in need of repairs and improvements. Of these twenty-four churches, eight are Native American Presbyterian churches with structural ages ranging between 105 and 128 years. This overture recognizes that reality.

The gifts and heritage of Native American churches have been celebrated in ceremonies in recent years. The PC(USA) has determined there are ninety-eight Native American congregations and chapels, most on reservations. The largest number of churches and chapels, twenty-six, are in the Synod of the Southwest. A total of twenty-one presbyteries and seven synods boast Native American constituents.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-01

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-01.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) supports the need for the PC(USA) to invest in the infrastructure of the churches and properties in the historic Native American and Alaskan Native Mission field. See the Doctrine of Discovery report and its recommendations, Item 10-12.

ACREC points out that often needed major repairs cannot be made—and are not made—because the congregations lack the resources. For example, there are no funds for new roofs or furnaces. Such repairs would serve to revitalize and sustain the Native American churches, which often are in remote locations, lacking trained clergy, and under-attended by tribal members. It is a fundamental responsibility to maintain what we built if we plan to go forward and continue to advance the work and message of Jesus Christ.

ACREC acknowledges that this item brings to light the need to address the need for adequate financial resources to address the racial financial equity among people of color members of the PC(USA).

FOUNDATION COMMENT ON ITEM 10-01

Comment on Item 10-01—From the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (Foundation).

The Presbyterian Foundation welcomes the opportunity to be part of the funding discussion for this worthy initiative and offers its tools and services to those who will lead the effort, should the assembly choose to approve this overture. Gifts to the Foundation may be designated by the donors for specific purposes. The Foundation will gladly conduct research regarding funds given for the purpose of Native American and Alaskan Native missions.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-01

Comment on Item 10-01—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) supports this initiative. The GACOR works to ensure that “the church gives full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and shall provide for full participation” (G-3.0103).

Native Americans and Alaskan Native Americans have suffered from the ongoing effects of colonization, both within and outside of the larger church. Research and study of infrastructure and physical structure will help local members to assess what they need while lifting up the support needed from the denomination. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) encourages member to help member; this initiative will uncover the necessary financial support for communities by encouraging congregation to congregation and member to member assistance so that all persons thrive in their local setting. The GACOR suggests that educational materials be prepared locally with denominational support, providing incoming volunteers with The Doctrine of Discovery Document and the local history of the worshipping congregation. Education will help persons be equipped to partner and illuminate the inequities experienced by Native Americans and Alaskan Native persons in our denomination.

Helpful resources can be found here: https://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/racial-ethnic-and-womens-ministries/gender-and-racial-justice-ministries/doctrine-of-discovery/.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching from across the church in accordance with F-1.0403. Its constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

On a Collaborative Study of the Place and Purpose of the Humanities in the Teachings of PC(USA) Liberal Arts Colleges and Universities—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta respectfully overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:
1. Approve a collaborative study of the place and purpose of the humanities—including religion and ethics—in the teachings of Presbyterian Church U.S.A.-affiliated liberal arts colleges and universities.

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to appoint a cross-disciplinary team drawn from (1) existing staff within the Theology, Formation, and Evangelism unit and (2) the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to consult with the Moderators of the 222nd and 223rd General Assemblies (2016) and (2018) on the appointment of a seven-to-ten-person task force to be drawn from faculty, administrators, and chaplains at related Presbyterian-affiliated colleges and universities.

3. Direct said task force to work with the cross-disciplinary team on the design and execution of a study in conjunction with
   a. the Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities (APCU), b. the Social Ethics Network of Presbyterian ethics and religion professors,
   c. specialized scholars and scholarly organizations dealing with undergraduate education in the humanities, religion, and ethics, and
   d. ecumenical, public/research university, and foundation partners as appropriate.

4. Encourage all Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affiliated colleges and universities to sponsor and/or commission consideration of their distinct teaching missions in the fields of humanities—including religion and ethics—and liberal arts more broadly, and to share their thinking with the study task force.

5. Direct the study task force to make an interim report to the 224th General Assembly (2020) and a final report to the 225th General Assembly (2022), with recommendations to the church as well as academic institutions.

[Financial Implications: Per Capita Annual—$23,240. Total—$46,480]

Rationale

Church-related liberal arts colleges in America represent a living endorsement and modification of classical humanistic approaches to higher education. Confident that God the Creator and Redeemer is the source of all good and truth, they seek to join faith and reason. Convinced that the calling or vocation of human beings is to love God and neighbor, they also seek to educate the whole person (mind, spirit, and body) for responsible living in the expansive context of God’s world.

Indeed, in a Reformed perspective, true wisdom consists of knowledge of God, the world, and ourselves, and the arts and sciences are gifts to be cultivated and appreciated. The sciences help to put us in touch with the excellence of God’s good creation, even as they promise to advance human flourishing. The humanities study human self-understandings as they come to expression in cultural artifacts and practices, e.g., literature, drama, philosophy, religion, politics, art, and various social structures. These studies contribute to diverse professional pursuits, but have worth primarily because they get at the richness and depth of human life in the world, and so enhance the sensibilities of those who participate in them.

Today, this sort of education faces serious challenges. There are efforts from both the religious right and the secular left to dissociate faith and reason. Pictures of the good life as almost entirely a matter of commercial success and the accumulation of wealth undermine non-pre-professional liberal arts education, especially in the humanities. There are also important challenges of diversity. How can this comparatively costly style of education be made more widely available to diverse and underserved persons and groups? There is also the issue of “canon and curriculum.” How can we reflect in depth on the many cultural particularities, without limiting inappropriately the particularities we engage?

Mark well what is at stake: a particular strand of faithful intellectual and moral formation that tries to educate persons in humane sensibilities and to discipline responsible living by the pursuit of truth. The perennial relevance of this style of education is one reason it has endured. It nevertheless appears to have special relevance in a time of “alternative facts,” fake news, and resurgent nationalisms—an age in which we wonder how cultural particularities fit into a wider world of interdependent interrelations.

For these reasons, the time is right for a study of Presbyterian church-related liberal arts colleges and the distinctive sorts of education they offer, as well as how their vibrant enterprise may be celebrated and understood both today and in the future.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-02

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-02 requests the Moderator(s) to appoint a team to study the teaching of the humanities, including religion and ethics, in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)-related colleges and universities, and the relation of this teaching to the vitality of Christian faith on those campuses.
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises support for this study.

This overture makes a strong case for teaching humanities from a Christian faith perspective, and clearly relates that teaching to the vitality of faith on college and university campuses. Commissioners may grant a relationship between such teaching and faith formation but still wonder if it is worth asking General Assembly funding for even part of the study outlined. Is this reaction itself a reflection of what Bradley J. Longfield calls, the identity crisis of Presbyterian colleges? (See Presbyterian and American Culture (Louisville, Ky.: Westminster/John Knox Press, 2013, pp. 186-89). Is there, or should there be, any particular link between Presbyterian identity and the standards and goals of scholarship at the set of schools historically associated with our church?

Not since the 1995 report, On Being Faithful: The Continuing Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Higher Education, has the General Assembly given sustained attention to the PC(USA)'s relation to colleges and universities. That report included the role of chaplaincies and campus ministries, and led to some further dialogue on the place of specifically Christian teaching and scholarship in the sixty-six or so PC(USA)-related institutions. A set of papers from a conference at Centre College in 2000, edited by Duncan S. Ferguson and William J. Weston, was entitled, Called to Teach: The Vocation of the Presbyterian Educator (Louisville, Ky.: Westminster/John Knox, 2003). It recognized the historic role of teachers and professors in the church’s reputation for valuing education and an educated ministry. The major study of the 1980s on the Presbyterian Presence, six books edited by Milton Coalter, John Mulder, and Louis Weeks, saw a decline in the appeal of church colleges and universities and wondered if that decline could be reversed.

The starting point of the study proposed here would be different and may suggest ways to bridge between the interests and values of the church and the academy. Today’s trends are not good for either religion or the humanities, but there may be an advantage to be claimed for PC(USA) institutions that have linked the two in their past educational goals. The offices of the Presbyterian Mission Agency named in the overture, the Office of Theology and Worship and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, both work with groups of faculty members who draw meaning from the church connection. Some put particular weight on the rooting of ethics in religious inspiration rather than philosophical speculation, though the preservation of truth and social righteousness clearly go together in our tradition.

Peter Steinfels, in his book on the Roman Catholic Church, A People Adrift, looks at the once-powerful social mission of Catholic colleges and universities and wonders if “hiring to a specific mission” can help improve both Christian scholarship and teaching, even if the professors are not Roman Catholic. This study, necessarily open to current challenges, may be a small way of helping our church and its one-time colleges and universities not simply drift further apart.

A Resolution on Determining the Need for an [LGBTQ+] [LGBTQIA+] Advocacy Committee in the PC(USA)—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

1. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to create a five-member task force (with a commitment to gender, gender-identity, sexual orientation, and race inclusiveness and balance) to investigate the need for creating an Advocacy Committee for [LGBTQ+] [LGBTQIA+] Concerns. The task force will report back with recommendations to the 224th General Assembly (2020) after:

   a. Meeting with the boards of the following organizations or representatives of these organizations (either face-to-face or via video conference): More Light Presbyterians; That All May Freely Serve; Covenant Network; PARITY;

   b. Meeting with a diverse (age, gender, race, etc.) collection of Presbyterian individuals (either face-to-face or via video conference) from various segments of the country who identify as [LGBTQ+] [LGBTQIA+];

   c. Reviewing the history of PC(USA) policies and actions impacting [LGBTQ+] [LGBTQIA+] people directly, and ultimately the entire denomination; and

   d. Reviewing the scope of the history of ACWC’s advocacy work on behalf of [LGBTQ+] [LGBTQIA+] people.

2. Direct the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) to ensure that diversity of sexual identity and gender identity are considered in the General Assembly nominating process for all committees and task forces.

[Financial Implications: Per Capita Annual $11,060. Total—$22,120]
Rationale

Rooted in the rich, Reformed theology of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the General Assembly has seen fit to provide within the structure of the denomination advocacy committees to provide accountability and prophetic witness on behalf of groups historically marginalized and silenced via oppressive power structures perpetuated by human sinfulness. The General Assembly has seen the need for those who have been silenced by the power structure to be given direct access to decision-making tables to amplify those voices that have so often been silenced.

Since its formation in 1993, the ACWC has served as one of those prophetic voices, speaking not only for women, but others whose voices have been silenced. The ACWC has embraced gender justice concerns of those who identify as female, working to be intersectional in its approach to justice, including advocating on behalf of members of the LGBTQ+ community. The ACWC has done this without hesitation as it sees that all persons are created in the image of God.

With the approval of what became known as “10-A” at the 219th General Assembly (2010) and subsequently by the presbyteries, with the movement of the Holy Spirit, the PC(USA) clearly said all who are called to the ministry either as minister of Word & Sacrament, ruling elder, or deacon, should be ordained.¹ Next, at the 221st General Assembly (2014), the authoritative interpretation was approved allowing ministers to perform same-sex marriages in states where it was already legal,² and ultimately the passing of Item 10-02, which became “Amendment 14-F” adopted by the presbyteries,³ no longer excluded same-gender couples. The PC(USA) firmly and positively embraced the LGBTQ+ community.

The ACWC has been a partner to the LGBTQ+ community, yet the injustices most directly affecting the LGBTQ+ community, while intersecting those of gender justice, are not identical to those directly affecting women within the PC(USA) and the nation. Over the years, ACWC has found itself spending large amounts of time and energy on LGBTQ+ advocacy efforts.

The PC(USA) has been and continues to be served well by organizations such as More Light Presbyterians, Covenant Network, All May Freely Serve, and PARITY, yet these organizations have had to work hard via grassroots campaigns to help bring about the changes within the PC(USA). These organizations continue to work for the good of the community, but there are those within the community who are not connected to these bodies. Further, these organizations work from an external position without the direct access to the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency granted the advocacy committees.

Even with the official denominational acceptance of LGBTQ+ persons into the ministries of the PC(USA), members still face discrimination, be it obvious or covert, in a similar manner to the experiences women and people of color in the denomination, for whom the church has seen fit to provide structural accountability and prophetic witness. With the current wave of backwards change in government policies towards not only LGBTQ+ persons, but women, people of color, and immigrants, the LGBTQ+ community again faces many unique struggles. Because of lack of government policy, an entire generation of gay men died from the results of HIV. Healthcare continues to be an issue not only in the continued battle against HIV, but for the transgender person seeking care for the transition process. Legal discrimination continues in the workplace, and it unfortunately remains a factor in the call process within the PC(USA). As LGBTQ+ couples marry and make plans to start families, they face issues that many can’t even begin to understand, including those related to housing, legal adoption and guardianship, and general safety.

The task force proposed will study whether the formation of an advocacy committee devoted solely to these and related issues could better address the injustices affecting the LGBTQ+ community. An advocacy committee would serve as an internal accountability partner with access to decision-making tables as well as a prophetic witness to and for the denomination on LGBTQ+ justice issues. The task force will need to have conversations with not only the organizations named and their leadership, past and present, but also with those in the community who are not connected with any of the organizations. It will be the responsibility of the task force to address the future funding of such a committee.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-03

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-03.
Item 10-03 is a request from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns that the assembly approve its undertaking of whether a new advocacy committee on gender and identity matters should be created.

The struggle for full inclusion of LGBTQ+ people in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been long and hard. Since 1974 when David Sindt held up a sign on the floor of the General Assembly that asked, “Is anybody else out there gay?,” the PC(USA) has studied and debated the humanity and worthiness of people who identify as lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, questioning, and other markers of identity. Gratefully, God’s Spirit has moved in deliberations over the last five decades so that both ordination and marriage are now open to people of all sexual and gender identities.

However, LGBTQ+ persons still face exclusion and discrimination within the PC(USA) and the broader society. Just as the church has become more attentive to issues of gender and racial justice because of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, so ACSWP concurs with ACWC that it is timely to assess the need for an advocacy committee that would give voice to LGBTQ+ issues.

National and global cultural identities are changing. Millennials and subsequent generations are likely to reflect increasingly diverse ways in which humans are seen as gendered and sexual. The PC(USA) needs to consider how to welcome this diversity into its life as the body of Christ. Studying the need for an LGBTQ+ advocacy committee now may give the church new eyes for recognizing current injustices and strategizing ways to embody full inclusion. Conducting this study will also give LGBTQ+ persons an opportunity to speak to their hopes and dreams for realizing equal status and dignity in church and society.

ACSWP agrees with ACWC that the study task force will need to have conversations not only with the external organizations named but also with those in the community who are not connected with any of the organizations. We suggest that the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) as well as others in the PC(USA) be included in this study’s consultations. Engaging in this study will give the PC(USA) an opportunity to reform its theological witness in light of the recent inclusion of LGBTQ+ persons. Since there continues to be a backlash to LGBTQ+ gains in church and society, we concur with ACWC that this study will be a timely means of identifying advocacy strategies that are needed to fully welcome LGBTQ+ persons into the life of the PC(USA).

Recommendation 2. calls for the General Assembly Nominating Committee to ensure diversity of sexual and gender identities among those nominated to serve on General Assembly committees and boards. In principle ACSWP supports this proposal to enhance the deliberation of these bodies. Insofar as there are a wide range of self-designations possible, ACSWP is hesitant to ask for additional categories of nominee to be developed, beyond the space on nomination forms for additional comment under gender that already exists. This approach would trust the judgment of the GANC that the diversity of sexual and gender identities can be considered based on nominees’ self-designation.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-03

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-03.

ACREC concurs with the overture as LGBTQ+ people of color have unique cultural challenges in addition to the oppressive power structures of the dominate culture. We would urge that the unique intersectional issues related to race and gender identity/sexual orientation be taken into account in this work.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-03

Comment on Item 10-03—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) supports a process through which the denomination can seek ways to represent the denomination’s full diversity within its decision-making bodies and processes. A task force “to investigate the need for creating an Advocacy Committee for LGBTQ+ Concerns” will allow for the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns to spearhead a period of discernment as the PC(USA) seeks to ensure LGBTQ+ representation and equity within the larger church.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching from across the church in accordance with F-1.0403. Its constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).
Item 10-04

[The assembly approved Item 10-04 with comment. See pp. 28, 30.]

Comment: [This comment addresses the Justice and Reconciliation portion of the Mission Work Plan.] While the item overtly names white supremacy and racist systemic structures, it does not name violence against women in a time when the United States of America society is grappling with the violence perpetrated against women. If not now, when? When violence intersects with poverty and racism, women have experienced hurt and harm. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) supports the need for the PC(USA) to put into practice the PC(USA)’s confession and beliefs (from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns comment).

[The Mission Work Plan, written in the form of worship, allows for repentance (confession) and a way forward. The focus on an intentional mission plan with specific areas of intention (Evangelism & Discipleship, Leader Formation, and Justice and Reconciliation) allows for a radical turn in the mission of the denomination. Addressing structured racism and white supremacy is emphasized, and yet the lens of gender justice is omitted.

[Although male and female members are equally likely to be asked to serve in a leadership role, the nature of that role varies by gender. Men are more likely to hold an official leadership role, in which they have an official title and/or receive a paycheck, and women are more likely to be heavily involved in a voluntary capacity. Women still comprise only about 38% of all active PC(USA) teaching elders, and only 29% of teaching elders overall. These percentages are slowly increasing. If the rate remains the same, we won’t achieve gender parity among active teaching elders until 2027. [Gender and Leadership in the PC(USA), https://www.presbyterianmission.org/resource/gender-leadership-pcusa/4]

[With this present reality as evidenced in the above-mentioned report, the delayed justice for women must be included in the overall fiber and ethos of the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. To fail to intentionally include addressing known gender injustices in our denomination does a grave disservice to the recent findings included in the research of 2016.

[For these reasons, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) would like to see an emphasis on support/leadership efforts (including mentoring) for women leaders in ordered ministries, as well as an overall acknowledgement of the need to address gender injustices via the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns comments).]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the following 2019–2020 Mission Work Plan for the Presbyterian Mission Agency:

Presbyterian Mission Agency
2019–20 Mission Work Plan

Call

Sing to God a new song; Sing to God, all the earth.
Sing and give praise to God’s name;
Tell the glad news of salvation from day to day. (Psalm 96:1–2)

Bound together by the Grace of God, the Love of Christ, and the movement of the Holy Spirit, the Presbyterian Mission Agency is called to “sing to God a new song,” a song that bears witness to God’s abiding love made manifest in the life of Jesus Christ and gathers us together for the Holy Spirit’s equipping. Let us worship the Triune God in our daily lives through the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Hymn of Praise

All that we have, all that we are, comes from you, dear God, our Creator. We thank you for your steadfast love.
All that we are called to be, comes from you, Jesus, our brother and our guide, an abiding presence in our lives.
All that summons and sanctifies us, comes from you, Holy Spirit, our comforter and cleanser.
We praise you O God, Holy One, Holy Three.

Confession

Gracious and merciful God, we come before you to confess the ways that we have not been faithful to you or to one another.
In humility and with a contrite spirit, we admit that:

- We ignore your call to us to be stewards of your creation and all that is in it. We are guided by scarcity, forgetting or refusing to see the many precious gifts you set before us each and every day.

- We put our own self-interest ahead of the needs of your church and work to advance our own agendas rather than seeking to work in partnership with colleagues in ministry across the church.

- We ignore the systemic brokenness of the world and the church, poverty, white supremacy, and structural racism; systems that oppress and destroy members of our human family, created in your image.

- We allow fear to overcome us and we are unable to follow Christ, who said, “Fear not, for I am with you always.”

Compassionate and loving God, in Jesus Christ you make all things new. Forgive us. Transform our weak spirits and fearful hearts. Give us ears to hear and hearts to listen to the new songs that are welling up within and beyond the church. Give us courage to follow you so that we may become witnesses to your saving love and your call to do justice, love kindness, and walk humbly with you.

Assurance of Pardon

The God who challenges us is also the God who encourages us.
The God who confronts us is also the God who accepts us.
We can be assured that God is with us even now, accepting, guiding, and forgiving.
Thanks be to God!

The Word

Matthew 25:31–46

At the appointed time the Promised One will come in glory, escorted by all the angels of heaven, and will sit upon the royal throne with all the nations assembled below. Then the Promised One will separate them from one another, as a shepherd divides the sheep from the goats. The sheep will be placed on the right hand, the goats on the left, “The ruler will say to those on the right, ‘Come, you blessed of my Abba God! Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the creation of the world! for I was hungry and you fed me; I was thirsty and you gave me drink. I was a stranger and you welcomed me; naked and you clothed me. I was ill and you comforted me; in prison and you came to visit me.’ Then these just will ask, ‘When did we see you hungry and feed you, or see you thirsty and give you drink? When did we see you as a stranger and invite you in, or clothe you in your nakedness? When did we see you ill or in prison and come to visit you?’ The ruler will answer them, ‘The truth is, every time you did this for the least of my sisters or brothers, you did it for me. Then the ruler will say to those on the left, ‘Out of my sight you accursed ones! Into that everlasting fire prepared for the devil and the fallen angels! I was hungry and you gave me no food; I was thirsty and you gave me nothing to drink. I was a stranger and you gave me no welcome; naked and you gave me no clothing. I was ill and in prison and you did not come to visit me.’ Then they in turn will ask, ‘When did we see you hungry or thirsty, or homeless or naked, or ill or in prison, and not take care of you? The answer will come, ‘The truth is, as often as you neglected to do this to one of the least of these, you neglected to do it to me. They will go off to eternal punishment, and the just will go off to eternal life.’” (The Inclusive Bible: First Egalitarian Version. The Priests for Equality, Sheed and Ward, 2007.)

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) called us to a... moment of great opportunity for our church. Momentum is building within our denomination and throughout our society to courageously confront the challenges of our time. A new civil rights movement, a new peace movement, a new economic justice movement is on the rise and we are in a position to stand in solidarity with the poor in a uniquely powerful way. It is a time for us to define who we will be for decades to come. May we choose to be a church committed to the gospel of Matthew 25.

... We see the Spirit blowing through our society, bringing to fruition seeds of peace and justice long dormant. The harvest will be plentiful. Let us heed the call to service, and recommit ourselves to the proclamation of the gospel of Jesus Christ in deeds as well as in words. (Minutes, 2016, Part I, pp. 700–701)

Invitation to Discipleship

I appeal to you, therefore, members of one family in Christ, and by the mercies of God,
to present your bodies as a living sacrifice,
holy and acceptable to God,
which is your spiritual worship.
Do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your minds, so that you may discern what is the will of God, what is good and acceptable and perfect. (Rom. 12:1–2)
Affirmation of Faith

Discerning the signs of the times and responding to the action of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) as it approved the Confession of Belhar, we boldly proclaim that:

We believe in the triune God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, who gathers, protects and cares for the church through Word and Spirit. This God has done since the beginning of the world and will do to the end.

We believe in one holy, universal Christian church, the communion of saints called from the entire human family.

We believe that Christ’s work of reconciliation is made manifest in the church as the community of believers who have been reconciled with God and with one another.

We believe that unity is, therefore, both a gift and an obligation for the church of Jesus Christ.

We believe that through the working of God’s Spirit it is a binding force, yet simultaneously a reality which must be earnestly pursued and sought.

We believe that this unity must become visible so that the world may believe that separation, enmity, and hatred between people and groups is sin.

We believe that anything which threatens this unity may have no place in the church and must be resisted.

We believe that true faith in Jesus Christ is the only condition for membership of this church.

Therefore, we reject any doctrine that absolutizes natural diversity in such a way that this hinders or breaks the visible and active unity of the church.

We reject any doctrine that professes that this spiritual unity is truly being maintained in the bond of peace while believers are alienated from one another and in despair of reconciliation.

We reject any doctrine that denies that a refusal earnestly to pursue this visible unity as a priceless gift is sin.

We reject any doctrine that maintains that descent or any other human or social factor should be a consideration in determining membership of the church.

We believe that, in obedience to Jesus Christ, its only head, the church is called to confess and to do all these things, even though the authorities and human laws might forbid them and punishment and suffering be the consequence.

We believe that Jesus is Lord. To the one and only God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit be the honor and the glory for ever and ever. (© 2006 Reformed Church Press. The Offering

All that we are and all that we have comes from God. God calls us to be stewards of the gifts entrusted to us to work in partnership with our colleagues from other agencies, mid councils, and congregations to become a “Matthew 25 Church,” committing ourselves to ongoing directional goals with specific emphases for 2019–2020:

• Evangelism & Discipleship

Grow, proclaim, and live out our faith in Jesus Christ by working with our partners, here and around the world, to build communities that witness to the gospel of Christ’s love for the rich diversity reflected in all humankind.

2019–2020 Emphases:

• Congregational Vitality, where churches prioritize faithfulness over self-sufficiency.

• Poverty, where the denomination fights unjust economic systems perpetuating destitution and need.

• Leader Formation

Seek, develop, and energize diverse leaders who are answering God’s call to equip the church to be a welcoming place of worship, mission, and spiritual nurture for all of God’s children, especially those who have been marginalized.

2019–2020 Emphasis:

Structural Racism/White Supremacy, where Presbyterians dismantle structures and ideologies oppressing people of color.

• Justice & Reconciliation

Galvanize the church to act on issues of racism, violence, and poverty as a prophetic witness to Christ’s transforming justice by speaking and living out God’s truth and compassion as we call ourselves and the world to account for injustice and oppression.

2019–2020 Emphasis:

• Poverty, where the denomination fights unjust economic systems perpetuating destitution and need.
The Benediction

Now to the One who by the power at work within us is able to accomplish abundantly far more than all we can ask or imagine, to this One be glory in the church and in Christ Jesus to all generations, forever and ever. Amen. (Eph. 3:20–21)

Rationale

The General Assembly has directed the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the Organization for Mission, to “develop and propose, for General Assembly approval, the mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency; doing so by taking into account the mission work being done by sessions, presbyteries, and synods, and to propose for General Assembly approval an accompanying budget that will implement the mission work plan of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.”

The Presbyterian Mission Agency fulfills this directive through presentation of the accompanying Mission Work Plan and a budget for approval. In recent years, the Mission Work Plan covered a four-year period, while budgets were recommended to the General Assembly biennially. In 2016, acknowledging transitions in leadership for the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the beginning of national discussions regarding denominational focus and possible agency reorganization, the General Assembly approved a two-year “interim” Mission Work Plan for 2017–2018.

Through interim leadership in the Office of the Executive Director and initiatives undertaken by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, the last two years have provided renewed focus under three directional goals: Evangelism and Discipleship; Servant Leader Formation; and Justice & Reconciliation. The mission work plan for 2017–2018 introduced a theological framework centered around the great ends of the church, and invited all of those engaging the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to joyfully center the work of God in Jesus Christ as our shared calling. The accompanying budget addressed ongoing revenue trends and proposed expenditures under these shared criteria.

In the spring of 2017, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board established a Mission Work Plan Advisory Task Force of elected board members to work alongside agency staff in developing the next Mission Work Plan. Work initially included an evaluation of the existing 2017–2018 mission work plan, a survey of board members, and conversation with senior staff and leadership cabinet members during the Board Executive Committee Retreat. The survey revealed substantial support for the theological frame for the Mission Work Plan as well as the formulation of the directional goals, with some suggestions for improvement.

The resignation of the Interim Executive Director in the fall of 2017 temporarily interrupted progress toward revising the mission work plan, which was then resumed by the Acting Executive Director several weeks later.

The announcement that the search for an installed Executive Director would be temporarily suspended led to our decision to propose another two-year “interim” mission work plan for 2019–2020. We believe that installed leadership should be allowed to oversee the establishment of a four-year work plan, ideally during a time of renewed denominational vitality and stability following the work of the General Assembly through the reports of the Way Forward Commission and 2020 Vision Committee.

Staff proposed a more expansive theological vision for the mission work plan, placing the directional goals as an offering to the church within the context of a reformed worship service. It is believed that this format can find multiple practical uses, promoting mission alignment within worship and devotional experiences inside the agency. This is meant to be a Mission Work Plan that will be used extensively. Call and Confection, Word and Affirmation provide familiar rhythms for experiencing the presence of God within our common mission, an expression of contrition for shortcomings, and the assurance that God’s presence moves within and throughout even so. Interpreting Matthew 25 through the newly adopted Confession of Belhar provides depth and texture to the directional goals, highlighting particular emphases that these goals suggest for this time in the life of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. As with the previous Mission Work Plan, for 2019–2020 program areas will be asked to be guided by all three directional goals. The directional goals themselves remain substantially the same under this version of the Mission Work Plan, but this new framework is intended to provide a richer understanding of those goals and a reaffirmation of the centrality of God’s mission in our work together.

This Mission Work Plan remains more limited in scope and will serve as an interim work plan over the next two- to three-year period, in light of transitions in leadership for the Presbyterian Mission Agency and conversations regarding agency consolidation. It is flexible enough to enable staff to respond nimbly to General Assembly directives but specific enough to help give intention and focus to mission decisions.

The worship frame for this Mission Work Plan required the removal of overt Vision, Mission, and Core Value statements. It is not the intention of either staff or the Mission Work Plan Advisory Task Force that these be abandoned, but they are not seen as essential for the purpose of this document. If it is the will of the board or the General Assembly, these may be reaffirmed through appending them or adopting them in another place.
Conclusion

The General Assembly will consider several action items that will have impact on the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. It is impossible to know in advance where these proposals, and the assembly’s discernment, will lead. Whatever the outcome, the Presbyterian Mission Agency will need strategic direction and a budget for the next two-year period. The 2019–2020 Mission Work Plan is intended to provide direction for that interim period, ensuring continuity with what has gone before, while being open to the movement of God’s Spirit in the years ahead.

Addressing structured racism and white supremacy is emphasized, and yet the lens of gender justice is omitted.

The Gender and Leadership in the PC(USA) Report, written by Research Services of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, states:

Although male and female members are equally likely to be asked to serve in a leadership role, the nature of that role varies by gender. Men are more likely to hold an official leadership role, in which they have an official title and/or receive a paycheck, and women are more likely to be heavily involved in a voluntary capacity. Women still comprise only about 38% of all active PC(USA) teaching elders, and only 29% of teaching elders overall. These percentages are slowly increasing. If the rate remains the same, we won’t achieve gender parity among active teaching elders until 2027. [Gender and Leadership in the PC(USA), https://www.presbyterianmission.org/resource/gender-leadership-pcusa/]

With this present reality as evidenced in the above-mentioned report, the delayed justice for women must be included in the overall fiber and ethos of the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. To fail to intentionally include addressing known gender injustices in our denomination does a grave disservice to the recent findings included in the research of 2016.

For these reasons, would like to see an emphasis on support/leadership efforts (including mentoring) for women leaders in ordered ministries, as well as an overall acknowledgement of the need to address gender injustices via the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

WFC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-04

Comment on Item 10-04—From the Way Forward Commission (WFC) with the Concurrence of the All-Agency Review Committee.

The Way Forward Commission (“WFC”), with the concurrence of the All Agency Review Committee (“AARC”), advises the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to review with care Item 10-04, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Work Plan for 2019–20. This item of business contains three important “emphases” for 2019–20:

- Congregational Vitality, where churches prioritize faithfulness over self-sufficiency.
- Poverty, where the denomination fights unjust economic systems perpetuating destitution and need.
- Structural Racism/White Supremacy, where Presbyterians dismantle structures and ideologies oppressing people of color.

We concur that these emphases are important and appropriate. However, the document contains no plan for addressing these issues. Without specifics, it is unclear how the PMAB will develop a detailed budget to address these issues in a manner...
accountable to the General Assembly or how future General Assemblies will have useful measures for determining whether the PMAB has accomplished this plan. The WFC, with the concurrence of the AARC, advises that the General Assembly (a) direct the PMAB to develop a detailed work plan within ninety days of the close of the General Assembly; (b) confirm that its budget contains all expenditures expected to be made by the PMA for that work plan and the operations of the PMA; and (c) report these items for review and approval to the Moving Forward Implementation Commission (see Item 04-02, Recommendation 5). In addition, the WFC, with the concurrence of the AARC, advises that the General Assembly direct the PMAB to report a detailed work plan to the 224th General Assembly (2020), containing not just mission emphases, but specific and measurable steps as part of an action plan to be taken to accomplish those emphases (and again confirming that the proposed PMA budget contains all expenditures expected by be made by the PMA for that work plan and the operations of the PMA).

Item 10-05

[The assembly approved Item 10-05. See pp. 13, 30.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the attached Institutional Relationship Agreement between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions.

Institutional Relationship Agreement between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Historically Racial Ethnic Institutions

Prologue

The strong investment of the Presbyterian church in education reflects John Calvin’s conviction that education should be an integral part of the church’s mission. Since colonial times the American Presbyterian church, reflecting Calvin’s conviction, has sought: (1) to develop an educated clergy and provide educational service to the community of faith, and (2) to educate for responsible citizenship and to serve the public good through education. Many schools, colleges, and universities in the United States owe their beginnings to this heritage and were founded for these two purposes.

Westward expansion, the American Civil War, and Reconstruction gave rise to new obligations and opportunities. The church expanded its mission by providing access to education for those persons previously excluded. The establishment of African American, Native American, and Hispanic/Latino-a educational institutions became a central mission thrust of the Presbyterian church.

Through the schools and colleges it established, the Presbyterian church provided educational opportunities that racial ethnic people had been denied. The institutions developed racial ethnic leaders who served society at large, the church, as well as their own racial ethnic constituency. These leaders espoused the Christian faith and the Presbyterian tradition. This mission has become a sacred trust for the church and an investment in young adults who are challenged to serve the church, the community, and society as a whole.

The Presbyterian church’s commitment to this historic mission produced more than 150 educational institutions, of which three racial ethnic educational institutions continue to relate directly to the General Assembly through an institutional relationship agreement. These Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions are as follows:

A. Purpose

The parties of this institutional relationship agreement are the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREIs). The HPREIs educate and equip women and men for lives of committed leadership within society and the church. The HPREIs seek to guide and challenge individuals and to affirm them in their quest for values, knowledge, and truth. And, they endeavor to provide students with the knowledge and understanding to make ethical decisions and to be responsible to family, community, church, and nation. Each HPREI integrates faith and learning in a Christian environment, and each is committed to meeting special needs in order to develop the unique potential of its students.

The purpose of this institutional relationship agreement is to define, strengthen, and inform the missional relationship between the General Assembly (GA), through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs. This institutional relationship agreement expresses the partnership in mission between the GA and the HPREIs, a long-standing partnership based upon common history, shared beliefs, complementary visions, and a relationship of mutual respect and collaboration.

The GA and the HPREIs uphold education as a continuing priority of the church. The GA names the Presbyterian Mission Agency as its representative for program administration and ongoing relations, and recognizes the Presidents Roundtable as the association through which the relationship of the HPREIs is affected.

The parties to this institutional relationship agreement therefore mutually affirm that:

- Our involvement in education is rooted in the Bible and the Reformed tradition and grows out of our commitment to Jesus Christ as Lord.
- Our common mission is guided by the Constitution of the PC(USA), “The Great Ends of the Church,” and by this institutional relationship agreement.
- Our continuing commitment is to be involved together in service to God and society through education.
- Our continuing partnership in mission is declared in this institutional relationship agreement, setting the framework for the relationship between the GA, through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs through their association, the Presidents Roundtable.

B. Principles of the Institutional Relationship

The HPREIs seek to maintain a warm and active relationship with the church and its mid councils. Legally, the HPREIs are independent and autonomous institutions. This institutional relationship agreement describes a missional partnership, not a contract. It is based on relationships and trust with specific responsibilities for the GA, through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs, through the Presidents Roundtable. It is agreed that each entity assumes sole responsibility for its own actions and this document does not hold either party legally liable for the actions of the other.

An important purpose of the HPREIs are to provide educational experiences for people of color within institutions that are open to all. The HPREIs also nurture the relationships between Presbyterian churches and students, faculty, alumni/ae, and board members, sharing the educational mission of the institutions and providing mission interpretation of educational ministry in the church.

The missional relationship of the GA and the HPREIs is expressed in several documents of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Specifically, Article 8.4 of the Articles of Agreement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the document that guided the church in the Reunion of the two streams in 1983, reads:

8.4 Racial ethnic educational institutions have been the primary source from which racial ethnic church leadership has developed. Consistent with the dire need for racial ethnic church leadership, the General Assembly Council [now known as PMA] shall propose to the General Assembly ways whereby the General Assembly shall be able to fulfill its responsibility for education through colleges and secondary schools and for meeting the operational and developmental needs of those Presbyterian schools that historically have served Black Americans and those serving other racial ethnic groups. (Book of Order, p. A-8)

The HPREIs align with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.’s mission of developing and energizing diverse leaders, especially those who have been marginalized. Annually, the HPREIs report to the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The HPREIs reports include activities supporting the leader formation and justice and reconciliation directional goals of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

In order for the HPREIs to use the PC(USA) name, seal, or symbol, a written license must be secured from the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. This institutional relationship agreement does not confer the use of these.

C. Core Functions and Mutual Responsibilities

The GA, through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs agree to relate in the following manner.

The HPREIs will:

- Continue the church’s commitment to education and maintain the heritage of the racial ethnic mission of each school by emphasizing quality educational experiences for people of color within institutions that are open to all. We will continue the commitment through programs that teach and model Christian values, that adhere to standards of academic freedom, that maintain high standards of education, and that emphasize individual and corporate service to humankind.
- Interpret our collective and individual missions on behalf of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Throughout the church, we will lift up this institutional relationship agreement in publications and other communications of each HPREI and will collaborate with efforts that provide interpretation of and advocacy for the HPREIs within the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

- Provide opportunities for the guidance and interpretation of the mission and program of each HPREI by having members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on each school’s board of trustees as appropriate to each HPREI.

- Demonstrate commitment to the HPREIs mission and to the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Mission Work Plan 2017–2018, especially the leader formation and justice and reconciliation directional goals to inspire, equip, and connect the church to seek, develop, and energize diverse leaders and to act on issues of racism, violence, and poverty as a prophetic witness to Christ’s transforming justice.

- Share the accomplishments and concerns of each HPREI in fulfillment of its mission and this agreement through an annual report to the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

- Develop relationships with other entities within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for mutual support and affirmation. These relationships include, but are not limited to, the synods and presbyteries within which the HPREIs are located, the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, and the Board of Pensions, as well as Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We will encourage them to explore avenues of mutual partnership.

Exercise responsible stewardship of the resources provided through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), via the Christmas Joy Offering and other designated funds, and continue the pursuit of financial strength for ongoing fiscal operations. We will document our efforts through annual independent audits and annual program reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

- Encourage use of the facilities, faculty, and staff of each HPREI by various entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The GA, through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, will:

- Report biennially to the GA and other appropriate bodies on the mission of the HPREIs and the progress made toward fulfilling its responsibility for education through the racial ethnic schools and colleges.

- Support and advocate the mission of the HPREIs within the national church. The Presbyterian Mission Agency will also encourage mid councils to establish and maintain supportive relationships with the HPREIs for continued mutual support.

- Provide information regarding opportunities for mission engagement and funds development and opportunities to engage in the emerging priorities of the church.

- Support and articulate the unique challenges and blessings of educating racial ethnic and economically poor people and be a partner in enhancing the success of the Christmas Joy Offering.

- Provide transparent stewardship of funds intended for this mission and audit-based reports of the Christmas Joy Offering to the Presidents Roundtable on an annual basis.

- Provide avenues of interpretation of the mission of the HPREIs, both as a group and as individual institutions, throughout the church. The Presbyterian Mission Agency will also seek to utilize the expertise and facilities of the HPREIs to resource the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

D. Implementation, Consultation, and Reporting

This institutional relationship agreement will be implemented by the HPREIs through the Presidents Roundtable and by biennial reports to the GA. The HPREIs shall also report annually to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Reports shall include activities, programs, mission interpretation efforts, and financial reports of these HPREIs. The agreement will be implemented by the GA through the Presbyterian Mission Agency and, in particular, the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area. It is the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges that has the primary responsibility for day-to-day activity in reference to this agreement. These responsibilities include the administration and disbursement of Christmas Joy Offering and endowments for the HPREIs, administrative support to the Presidents Roundtable, and periodic visits to the HPREIs. The associate for Mission Program Grants/Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges also serves as an ex-officio member of the Board of Trustees of the HPREIs.

E. Approval, Review, and Evaluation

This agreement shall be effective when it is approved by the Presidents Roundtable, the boards of trustees of the HPREIs and the GA. The agreement shall be formally reviewed by the Presidents Roundtable and Presbyterian Mission Agency staff and elected representatives at least every four years to coincide with biennial general assemblies and with the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s mission planning cycle. The GA, through the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs, through the President’s Roundtable, shall review and, when necessary, suggest revisions of this agreement. A written agreement shall ensue with copies to the GA through the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the boards of trustees of the HPREIs through the Presidents Roundtable. The next renewal is expected in 2022. Either missional partner may request a review at any time.

A part of the review and renewal process shall include the reaffirmation and celebration of the benefits of this missional relationship along with the reiteration of mutual support.

Written notice of a request to alter or dissolve the agreement shall be submitted to each missional partner, providing a three month period for both partners to discuss the request. Following that period, a formal meeting of representatives of the missional partners will create a proposal to be submitted to each partner for action.

Rationale

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, has institutional relationship agreements with institutions that have shared common purpose and sought strength in partnership with the national church offices. An institutional relationship agreement is one between the General Assembly and other institutions. In this case, the Presbyterian Mission Agency is responsible for cultivating the relationship and requesting General Assembly approval; however, the relationship is not limited in scope to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The Institutional Relationship Agreement between the General Assembly of the PC(USA) and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions places the relationship in the context of the church’s missional directives and describes expectations and responsibilities as part of the relationship. Institutional relationship agreements are approved by the General Assembly, upon recommendation by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, for a four-year term.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-05

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-05.

As the church of Jesus Christ, we are called to promote justice and advocate for the marginalized. The support and advocating for the mission of HPREIs easily falls within the parameters.

Item 10-06

[The assembly approved Item 10-06. See pp. 13, 30.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the revised Institutional Relationship Agreement between Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc., and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Institutional Relationship Agreement between Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. and the Presbyterian Mission Agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
I. Preface

This agreement expresses the partnership in mission among Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. (PW) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA). PW and PMA have had a longstanding partnership based upon shared beliefs and complementary visions and commitments, common history and a relationship of mutual respect and cooperation. While this covenant is specifically for the relationship between PW and PMA, it is commended as a model for Presbyterian Women in relation to other corresponding governing bodies and councils.

II. The Covenant-Based Relationship

A. Background

PW is a tax-exempt national women’s organization related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), hereinafter PC(USA). Its members are, first and foremost, members of the PC(USA).

Presbyterian Women came into being in 1988, five years after the reunion of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. PW incorporated in 2009 as a mission entity related to the PC(USA) as an integrated auxiliary. PW’s bylaws link PW closely to the Constitution of the PC(USA). PW’s members participate in leadership coordinating teams at all governing body levels from the congregation to the General Assembly.

From reunion in 1983 until the organizing Business Meeting of Presbyterian Women in 1988, a working team of Women of the Church (WOC) and United Presbyterian Women (UPW) proposed designs to their constituencies that culminated in the approval of the present structure. The 198th General Assembly (1986) received the Presbyterian Women Purpose and Principles of Organization as information only, pending approval by the uniting constituencies. The General Assembly action affirmed the independence and responsibility of Presbyterian Women to make its own decisions concerning leadership, program and budget. Membership in Presbyterian Women is open to all women who choose to participate in or be supportive of the PW organization in any way. The PW Purpose states: “Forgiven and freed by God in Jesus Christ and empowered by the Holy Spirit, we commit ourselves to nurture our faith through prayer and Bible study, to support the mission of the church worldwide, to work for justice and peace, and to build an inclusive, caring community of women that strengthens the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and witnesses to the promise of God’s kingdom” (Purpose of Presbyterian Women). In 1986, UPW and WOC, as they looked ahead to becoming Presbyterian Women (PW), willingly became a part of the Women’s Ministry Unit where they were in partnership with Justice for Women, Women Employed by the Church, and the Committee of Women of Color. In 1993, the Women’s Ministry Unit was reorganized into the Women’s Ministries program area of the National Ministries Division.

In 2007, the Women’s Ministries program area was reorganized into Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries (RE&WM). PW continues to be in programmatic partnership with RE&WM. PW supports the PC(USA) ministries that advance the role of women in the church and society. With each restructure or reorganization of the denominational staff, the PW organization has made the decision to be lodged with women’s constituency groups and emphases. The employees moved from Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, to PW on August 1, 2014. PW continues to be in partnership with the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area.

B. The Covenant Responsibilities of Presbyterian Women

Presbyterian Women will

1. conduct all mission and ministry according to the PW Purpose:
   a. nurture [their] faith through prayer and Bible study,
   b. support the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [which includes the Presbyterian Mission Agency],
   c. work for justice and peace,
   d. build an inclusive, caring community of women that strengthens the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);

2. work cooperatively with Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries as a whole and with other offices and areas within the PMA and other related entities;
3. be an active presence on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board through the PW Moderator’s membership, voice and vote;

4. be faithful stewards of the money given by Presbyterian women from throughout the church, whether that money is given for the general mission of the church, for ongoing work of PW, or for projects of Creative Ministries offerings;

5. ensure editorial autonomy for Horizons magazine, the annual Bible study, and all other publications of PW;

6. be guided by the general policies of the PMA (for example: contract procedures, minority vendor policies, and travel and meeting policies).

C. Covenant Responsibilities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency

The PMA will

1. Support the Purpose of Presbyterian Women.

2. Recognize and respect PW’s autonomy and status as a separate corporation, self-determining in its leadership, budget, and program.

3. Provide support to PW:
   a. Honor the relationships as stated in the PMA Manual of Operations, recognizing the full membership, with voice and vote, on the PMAB, of the moderator of PW Churchwide.
   b. Appoint a member of the PMAB to serve with full voice and vote on the Corporate Board (CCT) of PW.
   c. Recognize the role of PW as a corporation related to the General Assembly, as stated in the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and as a corresponding member to the General Assembly, as stated in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly as amended by the 222nd General Assembly (2016).
   d. Acknowledge and ensure editorial autonomy for all PW publications, including Horizons magazine and the annual Bible study.

4. Seek ways to build tangible partnerships and share resources with PW for joint programming with various mission areas of the PMA in which the mission priorities of the church are served.

5. Through the RE&WM ministry area director, maintain close connections with PW and the PW staff and be responsive to changes, new developments, and program options.

6. Ensure that collaborative women’s ministries work remains a focus of PMA and ongoing work is supported.

III. Accountability

In the following ways, PW and PMA will stay in communication, as each party attempts to be faithful to the covenant promise:

1. PW will provide a report to the PMAB through RE & WM of its programs, services, and policies, and PW’s mission giving will appear in the General Mission Budget.

2. A member of the PMAB will sit with full voice and vote on the CCT of PW and report on the policies and activities of PMA at the triennial Churchwide Gathering Business Meeting of PW.

3. The term of this agreement will be four years, commencing June 30, 2018, and expiring July 5, 2022.

4. Any party may propose changes in the Institutional Relationship at any time upon prior written notice to the other party.

Rationale

Over the years it became apparent that a clear understanding about the relationship between Presbyterian Women and the national church structure needed to be articulated. The Churchwide Coordinating Team of Presbyterian Women (CCT) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly Council, now known as the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, approved the original covenant in August 2001.
Advice & Counsel on Item 10-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-06.

- Presbyterian Women (PW) is the oldest and largest mission partner of the PC(USA).
- PW is on the leading edge of justice and peace work for women and children, and often leads the PC(USA) into advocacy efforts and programs.
- PW provides women’s leadership throughout the PC(USA).
- PW has provided more than $60 million dollars in grants for PC(USA) partners since 1988, and works integrally with ministry areas and ecumenical partners on relationship building and programs. For instance, PW creates the largest circulating Bible study curriculum in the PC(USA).

Item 10-08

Item 10-09

[In response to Item 10-09, the assembly approved alternate resolution with comment. See pp. 28, 30–31.]

Alternate Resolution:

Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to report to the 224th General Assembly (2020) on its efforts to strengthen the mission and ministry of small congregations, including the progress of implementing the Vital Congregations and Christian Formation initiatives.

The Presbytery Mission Agency (PMA) currently supports the ministries and missions of small churches through a wide range of ministries that have been designed to partner with small congregations as they live into the challenges and opportunities of the present moment.

The Theology, Formation, and Evangelism (TFE) ministry area of the PMA is a strong advocate for small churches and their ministry.

- The Vital Congregations initiative is a ministry designed to help all our churches become more vital, including small congregations. This initiative brings church leaders together in prayer, Bible study, and discernment. It provides them with tools and support for the work of revitalization. Because presbyteries are essential partners in ministry with congregations, TFE staff members have begun a two-year pilot project in five presbyteries to obtain some experience with this initiative. The pilot project includes small congregations. The current plan is to launch this initiative at the 224th General Assembly (2020).

- 1001 New Worshiping Communities is deeply engaged in ministry with new small congregations and has seen 445 new worshiping communities take shape in a variety of contexts and with a diverse group of people. Many of these new worshiping communities continue to be small churches even as they reach new people and experience vitality and vibrancy. TFE staff are beginning to work with existing churches so that they can learn from the new worshiping communities and the new worshiping communities can learn from them.

- The Christian Formation and Theology and Worship ministries of TFE continue to work with all our churches, including our small congregations, on the practices of our faith that lead to evangelism and sharing our hope with the world.

The Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministry (RE&WM) area of the PMA is also a strong advocate for small churches and their ministry.

- Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Intercultural Ministries offers support for African, African American, Asian, Hispanic/Latino-a, Korean, Middle Eastern, and Native American small and large congregations. The small congregations are racial ethnic and new immigrant worshiping communities that regularly gather together, constructing a racial ethnic identity that stems from a common history, heritage, and language. The support includes working closely with racial ethnic and new immigrant worshiping communities through mid councils, caucus groups, and networks, engaging in the mission to grow, transform, empower, lead, and develop communities.

- Women’s Leadership Development and Justice Ministries provide opportunities and training for women leaders to serve in small congregations. The office annually gathers Presbyterian racial ethnic and new immigrant seminarians from different theological institutions across the United States for the Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Seminarians conferences and helps prepare them for ministry.

Comment: We recognize the need for assistance for small churches to support their vitality. We ask that the Presbyterian Mission Agency and corresponding committees and agencies not only work to grow new churches but to also support small churches struggling with vitality using innovative resources to support their missions. We also recognize membership numbers alone do not indicate the health of a church but a more comprehensive approach should be taken when determining vitality and the need of assistance. We have reservations regarding creating a new director position for small churches but ask the Presbyterian Mission Agency to work with existing programs specifically targeting outreach to smaller churches.

Overture Concerning Small Churches—From the Presbytery of Grace.

The Presbytery of Grace overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) to develop a department of the Presbyterian Mission Agency dedicated solely to the ministry and mission of the small congregation (defined as having less than fifty adults in attendance at weekly worship); and

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to provide adequate and sufficient funding to achieve the following:
   a. A full-time director with salary and benefits consistent with the directors of other PMA/OGA departments;
   b. A second full-time staff person who has done exemplary ministry in a small congregation, whose job description will be to coordinate with the director to produce research and programs designed to increase the ministry and mission of small congregations;
   c. Support staff; and
   d. Funding for conferences, workshops, and materials needed to fulfill the goal of strengthening the mission and ministry of small congregations.

3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop goals and objectives necessary to measure the effectiveness of the new department of small church ministry.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to report to the 225th General Assembly (2022) on the progress of developing this new department; and to provide for a comprehensive review of this department to report to the 228th General Assembly (2028).

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has undergone a significant shift in demographics over the past five years. Denominational reports on Comparative Summaries show a steady loss of membership since 2005 resulting in a loss of nearly 831,000 (35 percent) members; nearly 367,000 (44 percent) are accounted for since 2012.

The demographic change is primarily due to the movement of very large-, large-, and mid-size congregations from the PC(USA) to other Reformed bodies. Since 2012, statistics report a loss of 811 congregations; 562 (69 percent) of those congregations were dismissed to other denominations. During the same time, the PC(USA) did not receive any congregations from other denominations.

Thirty-five percent of PC(USA) congregations have fifty or fewer members with an average of nineteen in worship; and 59 percent of PC(USA) congregations have 100 or fewer members. Regardless of membership size, 37 percent of congregations report an average attendance for weekly worship of two to fifty persons.

A large and growing number of congregations in the PC(USA) can no longer afford full-time pastoral leadership.

The pastoral role in congregations is increasingly filled by part-time ordained clergy, commissioned pastors, and non-Presbyterian clergy.
Programs, mission, and ministry opportunities produced by the General Assembly agencies are oriented to mid-size and larger congregations.

Concurrence to Item 10-09 from the Presbytery of de Cristo and Palo Duro.

Concurrence to Item 10-09 from the Presbytery of West Virginia (with Additional Rationale)

At its February meeting, after lively discussion, the Presbytery of West Virginia overwhelmingly affirmed our concurrence to Item 10-09 from the Presbytery of Grace. The current circumstances of small churches and the foreseeable growth in the number of small congregations throughout the denomination calls us to a discussion of these matters at the national level.

The median membership of the congregations within the Presbytery of West Virginia is twenty-nine. Should the decline in membership continue, the challenges confronting this presbytery will grow, as more and more congregations are unable to afford full-time, pastoral leaders. The presbytery of West Virginia is also experiencing difficulties recruiting and retaining leaders for the committees that serve our members. This serves to further aggravate the situation: we are finding it more and more difficult to meet the needs of the smaller churches within our boundaries.

Item 10-09 confirms that the Presbytery of West Virginia is not alone in this struggle. Statistics and trends across the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) also indicate the growing need to address the struggles of shrinking congregations—struggles that begin, perhaps, with finding pastoral leadership, but also include maintaining Spirit-filled ministry, Spirit-discerned mission, and Spirit-affirmed identity, recognizing their continued value and role in the work and life of the kingdom of God.

As Presbytery of West Virginia considered this concurrence, there was debate concerning the need for a new department in the Presbyterian Mission Agency and staff positions, but there was general agreement that the time is ripe for the General Assembly to more intentionally and purposefully consider the ways the denomination can support and provide resources that recognize the unique calling of small membership congregations.

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-09. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns fully supports this overture. The majority of women clergy serve small congregations and lack the necessary support for shaping congregational mission and ministry. The Small Church Residency Program that allowed small congregations to receive resources and pastors to receive calls ended in December 2017. Many of the small congregations were not able to sustain the pastoral salary, yet vital work was done. The Presbyterian Mission Agency dedicating an office solely to the ministry and mission of the small congregation (defined as having less than fifty adults in attendance at weekly worship) speaks to the Work Plan of the PMA Board in Evangelism and includes an often forgotten population of women clergy who serve these congregations.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 10-09

Comment on Item 10-09—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

This overture calls for denomination-level support for the life and health of small churches. It seeks to accomplish that end by asking for specific staffing changes at the denominational level, to establish staffing whose ministry will be aimed at and determined by congregational size.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency affirms the importance of small congregations in the life of the denomination, and is grateful to the Presbyteries of Grace (which made the overture) and de Cristo (which has concurred) for lifting up the importance of effectively supporting small congregations across this denomination.

Because of the importance of this work, the Presbyterian Mission Agency is currently staffed for and engaged in a wide range of ministries designed to partner with small congregations as they live amidst the challenges and opportunities of the present moment.
The Theology, Formation, and Evangelism (TFE) ministry area of the PMA is a strong advocate for small churches and their ministry. TFE staff have initiated the Vital Congregations initiative, a ministry designed to help all our churches become more vital, including congregations with smaller membership. This initiative brings church leaders together in prayer, Bible study, and discernment. It provides them with tools and support for the work of revitalization. Tools for the discernment portion of the initiative are being developed now. One of the tools is an assessment of a congregation’s life and ministry through the grid of seven key marks of congregational vitality. The marks include the following: lifelong discipleship formation, intentional authentic evangelism, outward incarnational focus, empowered servant leadership, spirit-inspired worship, caring relationships, and ecclesial health. Because presbyteries are essential partners in ministry with congregations, TFE staff members have started a two-year pilot project in five presbyteries to experience and learn about what will work in this initiative and what does not work. Small churches are included in these pilot groups. The plan is that work with the pilot presbyteries and congregations will result in a full launch of this initiative at the 224th General Assembly (2020).

1001 New Worshipping Communities is deeply engaged in ministry with new small churches and has experienced 435 new worshipping communities take shape in a variety of contexts and drawing a diverse group of people. These new worshipping communities begin, and many continue to be small churches. Many of them are reaching new people and experiencing vibrancy. Staff working with the 1001 New Worshipping Communities (NWC) movement are beginning to work on partnering with existing churches so that existing churches can learn from the NWCs and NWCs can learn from the existing churches.

The Christian Formation and Theology and Worship ministries of TFE continue to work with all our churches, including our smaller membership churches, on the necessity of foundational grounding in the practices of our faith that lead to sharing the hope we have and evangelism.

If approved by the General Assembly, this overture would require the elimination of multiple programs within the PMA mission budget. The staffing it calls for creating would be organized on the basis of the size of congregations and would be at odds with present staffing structures that seek to bring needed support and expertise to a variety of sizes of congregation as they face similar challenges and opportunities both internally and in the wider society in which we all follow Jesus Christ. For example, the Vital Churches initiative works with congregations who share in seeking revitalization, tailoring the initiative’s work to differing sizes of congregations as needed.

We encourage Presbyterians with a passion for small church ministry to form ministry networks for collaboration and coordination. The PC(USA) web site provides tools for these networks to form and for synergies to emerge. Ministry networks are vital for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the PMA will continue to seek ways to foster connections and collaboration to join in expanding partnership in God’s mission and to grow Christ’s church.

Item 10-10

[The assembly approved Item 10-10 as amended and with comment. See pp. 13, 31.]

[Comment: The Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination recommends the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board clarify the criteria for being included on this list and confirm through positive affirmation from the school to be included on the list. We believe the schools’ lack of response should not indicate a positive response to remain on the list of schools related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the following list of colleges, universities, and secondary schools as those related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

Agnes Scott College, Decatur, Ga.; Alma College, Alma, Mich.; Arcadia University, Glenside, Pa.; Austin College, Sherman, Tex.; Belhaven University, Jackson, Miss.; Blackburn College, Carlinville, Ill.; Bloomfield College, Bloomfield, N.J.; Buena Vista University, Storm Lake, Iowa; Carroll University, Waukesha, Wis.; Centre College, Danville, Ky.; Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; The College of Idaho, Caldwell, Idaho; College of the Ozarks, Point Lookout, Mo.; The College of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio; Davidson College, Davidson, N.C.; Davis and Elkins College, Elkins, W.V.; Eckerd College, St. Petersburg, Fla.; Hampden-Sydney College, Hampden-Sydney, Va.; Hanover College, Hanover, Ind.; Hastings College, Hastings, Nebr.; Illinois College, Jacksonville, Ill.; Johnson C. Smith University, Charlotte, N.C.; King University, Bristol, Tenn.; Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.; Lake Forest College, Lake Forest College, Ill.; Lees-McRae College, Banner Elk, N.C.; Lindenwood University, St. Charles, Mo.; Lyon College, Batesville, Ark.; Macalester College, St. Paul, Minn.; Mary Baldwin College, Staunton, Va.; Maryville College, Maryville, Tenn.; Millikin University, Decatur, Ill.; Missouri Valley College, Marshall, Mo.; Monmouth College, Monmouth, Ill.; Montreat College, Montreat, N.C.; Muskingum University, New Concord, Ohio; Presbyterian College, Clinton, S.C.; Queens University of Charlotte, Charlotte, N.C.; Rhodes College, Memphis, Tenn.; Rocky Mountain College, Billings, Mont.; St. Andrews University, Laurinburg, N.C.; Schreiner University, Kerrville, Tex.; Sterling College, Sterling, Kans.; Stillman College, Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Trinity University, San Antonio, Tex.; Tusculum College, Greeneville, Tenn.; Universidad InterAmericana de Puerto Rico, San Juan, P.R.; University of Dubuque, Dubuque, Iowa; University of Jamestown, Jamestown, N.Dak.; University of the Ozarks, Clarksville, Ark.; University of Pikeville, Pikeville, Ky.; University of
The Presbyterian Mission Agency will use the existing criteria and develop additional criteria as needed for placing and removing colleges, universities, and secondary schools on this list.

Rationale

The criteria for being included on this list is that the institutions can identify a historic connection to the PC(USA) and demonstrate a commitment to Reformed values through the education they provide. Among these values are a commitment to faith, truth, learning, service, community, character, and the dignity and worth of each person.

Item 10-11

On Establishing a Grant to Develop Resources to Educate Entities Regarding Serious Mental Illness Issues—From the Presbytery of Mission.

The Presbytery of Mission overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to:

1. Recognize the 10th anniversary of the ‘Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness’ approved at the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and to acknowledge the relevancy it still holds for our church and society in 2018. [Commend the initial work of the Presbyterian Serious Mental Illness Network (PSMIN) of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) in distributing Comfort My People.]

2. Establish a $250,000 grant to be used to implement the provisions of this overture. The funds will be used to develop plans of action and resources that will be used by presbyteries, congregations, and seminaries of the PC(USA) to further educate these entities within PC(USA) regarding serious mental illness issues with the intent to provide a foundation for action within the denomination, and that the materials developed include help for congregations interfacing with mental illness found in the homeless population surrounding the church.

[Direct Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to launch a churchwide network following Recommendation 10 in the Comfort My People policy (p. 10).]

[Consult with Presbyterian seminary professors of pastoral psychology, counseling, and psychiatry on models, incentives, existing resources, and counseling centers that provide holistic mental health ministries.]

[Draw upon those academic and practical experts, Presbyterian Research Services, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in the survey design, analysis, and preparation of recommendations for action and policy update outlined in Recommendations 4 and 5.]

3. While it is acknowledged that all of the recommendations within the “Comfort My People” statement are worthy of implementation, this overture focuses on those action items that are foundational to any development of long-term policies and plans for action within the PC(USA). Grants to be awarded will therefore focus on the following recommendations:

   a. Presbyteries: Recommendations 6.a.–d., g. 10. (pp. 8, 10).

   b. Congregations: Recommendations 9.a., d.–k., o., q., t. (pp. 9, 10).

   c. Seminaries: Recommendations 14.a.–e. (p. 11).

4. Conduct a review and evaluation of the actions that have been taken since the policy statement was approved, with a report to be presented at the 224th General Assembly (2020).

   a. Survey of presbyteries, congregations, and seminaries to evaluate how these organizations have responded to the policy statement’s recommendations.

   b. Based on survey results, recommend specific activities designed to focus and implement measures to enhance mental health initiatives in presbyteries, congregations, and seminaries.
5. Review, update, and present a second edition of “Comfort My People” for approval at the 224th General Assembly (2020). This review and update would examine terminology, facts, findings, hyperlinks, and add any additional resources (i.e. websites, books, movies) published since 2008 that would add value to the statement.

Rationale

The “Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness,” approved at the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), was a profound statement of faith for persons, families, and communities living with mental illness. This statement has aided in the message of hope through educating Christians and reducing the stigma associated with mental illness.

In recognition of its tenth anniversary, it is our desire to see this statement reimagined and instituted as a priority within our denomination and put into practice in our presbyteries, congregations, and seminaries. Our hope is to see this document serve as an instrument for God’s love in the lives of those who still feel as if they are living in the “The Land of Exile” within their own communities.

Accepting that our denomination has allocated limited resources to ensure these recommendations are effectively implemented, we believe that by allocating funds that will be available to these entities as grants, there would be a grassroots effort that would ensure “God’s Call to Comfort” is honored.

Finally, we strongly believe God is still calling the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) to be a prophetic voice within our contexts to comfort God’s people. This overture will demonstrate our denomination’s commitment to serve those who live with mental illness and their families/communities in the process of healing and wholeness.

Endnotes

Concurrence to Item 10-11 from the Presbytery of Newton (with Additional Rationale):

Recommendation to the committee addressing this overture—To create a plan to assist congregations in ministering and providing pastoral care to those battling and facing mental health issues and those providing for their care and to increase the grant to respond to mental health issues through congregations and communities to $1,000,000.

Regularly, congregations and pastors are witnessing the struggles of persons in communities of faith who are personally living with or caring for someone battling mental illness. The PC(USA) is called to be in creative ministry, reaching people and touching their lives with a message of hope.

The PC(USA) must respond to the youth who proclaims: “I am unhappy with life” and is considering suicide. The church must pastor the person who feels that they are unnoticed in life and not appreciated. We are called to bring hope to the older gentleman who has lost his dear wife to death and when she is gone with tears in his eyes says: “Life seems to just pass me by now. I’m just lonely now.”

Life can lay all sorts of burdens upon a person, physical or psychological weights that can bend one over. We must respond to the weight of distress upon a parent with a special needs child. We must provide healing to someone in an oppressive marriage. What happens to a person’s self-respect when a job fails to compensate him or her adequately? What is the psychological damage to people suffering discrimination? Think how tired, worn, and weighted down our presidents begin to look after about two years in office. Teachers and school administrators, and nurses and public-sector figures sometimes break from the strain of public demands. Look at the day laborers when they return after heavy labor. View the migrant farmer after picking in the fields for twelve hours. See the face of the mother and father who lost a child due to just their wandering in the wrong direction. Witness the veteran who is haunted by the atrocities of war, friends injured and killed, and the barrage of violence.

The church is called to assist people in dealing with and facing the struggles and pressure of everyday life that wrecks havoc on the physical, emotional, and spiritual well-being of people of faith.
Simply rewriting and circulating the Finding Comfort curriculum, that few have read or may read, is not an adequate response to the mental health crisis facing worshiping communities and people of faith. The church of Jesus Christ must develop hands-on resources to prepare and assist pastors and church leaders in ministering to persons combating mental health issues and must set aside funds to assist congregations in the development of their own ministries and programs in their local communities.

The National Alliance on Mental Health reports:

Prevalence of Mental Illness

- Approximately 1 in 5 adults in the U.S.—43.8 million, or 18.5 percent—experiences mental illness in a given year.\(^1\)
- Approximately 1 in 25 adults in the U.S.—9.8 million, or 4.0 percent—experiences a serious mental illness in a given year that substantially interferes with or limits one or more major life activities.\(^2\)
- Approximately 1 in 5 youth aged 13–18 (21.4 percent) experiences a severe mental disorder at some point during their life. For children aged 8–15, the estimate is 13 percent.\(^3\)
  - 1.1 percent of adults in the U.S. live with schizophrenia.\(^4\)
  - 2.6 percent of adults in the U.S. live with bipolar disorder.\(^5\)
  - 6.9 percent of adults in the U.S.—16 million—had at least one major depressive episode in the past year.\(^6\)
  - 18.1 percent of adults in the U.S. experienced an anxiety disorder such as posttraumatic stress disorder, obsessive-compulsive disorder, and specific phobias.\(^7\)
  - Among the 20.2 million adults in the U.S. who experienced a substance use disorder, 50.5 percent—10.2 million adults—had a co-occurring mental illness.\(^8\)

Social Stats

- An estimated 26 percent of homeless adults staying in shelters live with serious mental illness and an estimated 46 percent live with severe mental illness and/or substance use disorders.\(^9\)
- Approximately 20 percent of state prisoners and 21 percent of local jail prisoners have “a recent history” of a mental health condition.\(^10\)
- 70 percent of youth in juvenile justice systems have at least one mental health condition and at least 20 percent live with a serious mental illness.\(^11\)
- Only 41 percent of adults in the U.S. with a mental health condition received mental health services in the past year. Among adults with a serious mental illness, 62.9 percent received mental health services in the past year.\(^12\)
- Just over half (50.6 percent) of children aged 8–15 received mental health services in the previous year.\(^13\)
- African Americans and Hispanic Americans each use mental health services at about one-half the rate of Caucasian Americans and Asian Americans at about one-third the rate.\(^14\)
- Half of all chronic mental illness begins by age 14; three-quarters by age 24. Despite effective treatment, there are long delays—sometimes decades—between the first appearance of symptoms and when people get help.\(^15\)

Consequences of Lack of Treatment

- Serious mental illness costs America $193.2 billion in lost earnings per year.\(^16\)
- Mood disorders, including major depression, dysthymic disorder, and bipolar disorder, are the third most common cause of hospitalization in the U.S. for both youth and adults aged 18–44.\(^17\)
- Individuals living with serious mental illness face an increased risk of having chronic medical conditions. Adults in the U.S. living with serious mental illness die on average twenty-five years earlier than others, largely due to treatable medical conditions.\(^18\)
- More than one-third (37 percent) of students with a mental health condition, age 14–21 and older who are served by special education, drop out—the highest dropout rate of any disability group.\(^20\)
Suicide is the tenth leading cause of death in the U.S.,\(^1\) the third leading cause of death for people aged 10–14,\(^2\) and the second leading cause of death for people aged 15–24.\(^3\)

More than 90 percent of children who die by suicide have a mental health condition.\(^4\)

Each day an estimated 18–22 veterans die by suicide.\(^5\)

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-11

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the General Assembly approve Item 10-11 with amendments.

Item 10-11 would establish a fund to provide grants to congregations and mid councils to provide education concerning severe mental illness, so that affected persons may be more fully included within the life of our church. It calls for surveys of congregations and mid councils to assess the distribution and implementation of “Comfort My People” (2018) (https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/3-serious-mental-illness-2008.pdf) and for a review and update of the report itself.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises approval with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

1. Recognize the 10th anniversary of the “Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness” approved at the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and to acknowledge the relevancy it still holds for our church and society in 2018.

2. [Establish a $250,000 grant to be used to implement the provisions of this overture. The funds will be used to:] [Direct Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to engage suitable staff on a one-year basis to:

a. review with the Presbyterian Foundation any endowments or investments that might be drawn upon to implement the provisions of this resolution, and otherwise explore ways (including foundation grants) by which a mental and spiritual health fund of up to $1,000,000 might be established with minimum impact on other current mission expenditures;]

b. develop plans [of action] [for awarding grants] and resources [that will be used by] [for] presbyteries, congregations, and seminaries of the PC(USA) to further [educate those entities within PC(USA)] [education and engagement as noted in Recommendation 3 below] regarding [chronic and/or] serious mental illness issues with the intent to provide [a foundation] [an ongoing impetus] for action within the denomination;

c. consult with Presbyterian seminary professors of pastoral psychology, counseling, and psychiatry on models, incentives, existing resources, and counseling centers that provide the kind of holistic mental and spiritual health ministries proposed in the concurrence from the Presbytery of Newton.

d. draw upon those academic and practical experts (see Recommendation 2.c. above), Presbyterian Research Services, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in the survey design, analysis, and preparation of recommendations for action and policy update outlined in Recommendations 4 and 5 below.]

3. While it is acknowledged that all of the recommendations within the “Comfort My People” statement are worthy of implementation, this overture focuses on those action items that are foundational to any development of long-term policies and plans for action within the PC(USA). Grants to be awarded will therefore focus on the following recommendations:
“a. Presbyteries: Recommendations 6.a.–d., g. (pp. 8, [9] [10]).
“b. Congregations: Recommendations 9.a., d.–k., o., q., t. (pp. 9, 10).
“c. Seminaries: Recommendations 14.a.–e. (p. 11).
"[d. Churchwide web-based network: Recommendation 10 (p. 10) See new Recommendation 4.c. below]

4. Conduct a review and evaluation of the actions that have been taken since the policy statement was approved, with a report to be presented at the 224th General Assembly (2020).
   “a. Survey [of] presbyteries, congregations, and seminaries to evaluate how these organizations have responded to the policy statement’s recommendations.
   “b. Based on survey results, recommend specific activities designed to focus and implement measures to enhance mental health initiatives in presbyteries, congregations, and seminaries.
   “[c. Commend the initial work of the Presbyterian Serious Mental Illness Network (PSMIN) of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) in distributing Comfort My People, and include a recommendation on if or how any network(s) of concerned congregations, individuals, and social service providers may be feasibly maintained in the long term.]

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the broader church remain indebted to the volunteers and consultants who developed Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness with Study Guide, with per capita funds designated by the 216th General Assembly (2004). The document is both justice-oriented in its data and recommendations, and pastoral in the use of personal narratives within the text, a dimension that has been valued by many readers. Some of those narratives were from study task force members. The title and biblical framework came most from a wise pastor who chaired ACSWP and served on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, as well as on that study task force. Overall, most Presbyterians recognize God’s Spirit at work in mental healthcare and seek to relate that healing to the prayer and worship life of our congregations.

The actions requested in this overture have to do with mission engagement, and hence would draw upon mission funds, either from undesignated giving (praise God for those generous givers!) or from endowment income (from previous generous givers). Sometimes as times change, past investment designations can be adapted to meet new mission needs. The amendments proposed seek to fulfill the intent of the overture in a cost-effective way. They propose drawing upon the wealth of knowledge held by healing professionals in our church and upon the knowledge of wealth held by foundations dedicated to public health, for which creative partnership with one or more churches or faith communities would offer new opportunities for impact.

The nineteen presbyteries and synods concurring with the Presbytery of Mission provide clear evidence of the need for additional welcome and support of those suffering from chronic and severe mental illness. The holistic vision and careful documentation of the range of mental health issues by the Presbytery of Newton concurrence have been integrated into the amendments proposed.

Since the 2008 report was published, we have seen significant advances in the public perception of mental health. However, even though mental health now has parity with physical health in healthcare legislation, there remains a stigma that often keeps people from full participation in the life of the church. Rates and kinds of drug use have expanded, alongside addictions of all kinds, not all related to drugs, alcohol, or tobacco. Veterans bring home trauma and moral injury, and frequent mass shootings add personal tragedy, rage, and social tension. Health insurance quality and availability are being scaled back and further efforts to cutback government spending may target Medicare, Medicaid, and Social Security, adding to mental healthcare needs. Thus, in this new context ten to twelve years later, an update of the 2008 study seems merited.

It is also appropriate to review the church’s effectiveness in both national and local contexts, as denominational programs ideally complement and help inspire congregational action, often by lifting up particular local initiatives. Denominational and ecumenical programs can also carry visions and energy for change, even in the complex and politicized areas of preventive healthcare, for which the capacity of public institutions (like the National Institutes of Health and Centers for Disease Control) to research and publish freely is essential. New models for diagnosis and treatment are clearly needed in the society as well as church, as the overture wisely recognizes.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-11

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

Citing directly from Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness, a policy statement approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), ACREC notes the clear racial justice implications involved in addressing mental health:

Concerted and continued efforts to promote greater access and culturally responsive mental health services are critical for racial and ethnic groups. Race and ethnicity in addition to other cultural diversity considerations like language, gender, geographic location, and physical ability affect mental health and care. Addressing mental health challenges is influenced by how individuals from various groups understand and make sense of their social world. In addition, individuals classified in the lowest socioeconomic income level, education, and occupation categories are about two to three times more likely than those in the highest stratum to have a mental disorder. Many of these individuals identify as racial and ethnic people. Culturally proficient delivery of mental health services takes into account social risk and cultural factors, incorporating these considerations in assessment, diagnosis, and analyses of the mental health of racial and ethnic group members. More research is necessary in order to clarify the role that social and cultural factors have had and continue to have in the mental health of racial and ethnic populations in the United States (Comfort My People, 40).

Endnotes

97. These racial and ethnic group are listed by these titles in order to be consistent with the titles used by the congregational enhancement offices of the General Assembly Council (GAC) in describing the populations they minister with and to. A separate subcategory on Middle Eastern Americans was not included in this report because data on this ethnic group was not included in the U.S. Census Bureau statistics.

The experience of underfunding continues to negatively impact people of color over time. It is time for intervention in an effort to comfort my people.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-11

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-11.

The ACWC supports the recognition of the tenth anniversary of the PC(USA) policy statement, “Comfort My People,” as well as advocates for it being reimagined and instituted as a priority within the PC(USA), and as such, put into practice in presbyteries, congregations, and seminaries.

For the ACWC, mental illness is a gender justice issue that must be recognized, highlighted, and addressed within the PC(USA). Regarding the intersection of mental illness and gender justice, Psychology Today reports that

One in three Americans struggle with a mental illness, but the rate is much higher in women. Research suggests that women are about 40% more likely than men to develop depression, twice as likely to develop PTSD, and about 10% of women develop the condition after a traumatic event, as compared to only 4% of men. Psychiatrists point to a number of factors that contribute to these statistics: trauma—about 50% of women experience some form of trauma during their lives. One in four women has faced an attempted or completed sexual assault, and one in three report being abused by a domestic partner. Trauma is a risk factor for a host of mental illnesses, most notably post-traumatic stress disorder. Thus, the challenges of gender discrimination, gendered violence, and mistreatment of women directly work to undermine women’s health. Discrimination can increase women’s exposure to stress, and stress is a significant predictor of mental illness. The common challenges of women are highly stressful and can conspire to tear down their coping skills and self-esteem. Postpartum depression is another significant contributor to women suffering from mental illness. There are a number of factors that interact in complex ways to make women more vulnerable to mental illness. [Joel Young, M.D., Psychology Today: https://www.psychologytoday.com/us/blog/when-your-adult-child-breaks-your-heart/201504/women-and-mental-illness]

In a Nutshell: Women’s Mental Health: The Facts:

- Depressive disorders account for close to 41.9 percent of the disability from neuropsychiatric disorders among women compared to 29.3 percent among men.
- Leading mental health problems of the older adults are depression, organic brain syndromes, and dementias. A majority are women.
- An estimated 80 percent of 50 million people affected by violent conflicts, civil wars, disasters, and displacement are women and children.
- Lifetime prevalence rate of violence against women ranges from 16 percent to 50 percent.
- At least one in five women suffer rape or attempted rape in their lifetime. [World Health Organization: http://www.who.int/mental_health/prevention/genderwomen/en/]

Item 10-12

[The assembly approved Item 10-12 as amended. See pp. 28, 32–33.]

Overture on Expanded Response to the Doctrine of Discovery—From the Presbytery of Yukon.

The Presbytery of Yukon overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take action aimed at expanding the response of the PC(USA) in its renunciation of the Doctrine of Discovery to include not only responses by congregations, but also responses that lie in the province of mid councils and the national church. Specifically, the Presbytery of Yukon asks the General Assembly to take the following actions:

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to develop resources that aid members, congregations, mid councils, and the national church on the following areas of theological understanding:
   a. Describe the Christian ethic presented by Scripture and the PC(USA) confessions for properly respecting people and communities from different cultures and worldviews,
   b. Present framework for understanding how the PC(USA) strayed from those understandings such that it became complicit in a prevailing worldview of oppression and collusion through policies based on the Doctrine of Discovery, and
   c. Describe the potential challenges and promises this theological exploration presents as we consider a multicultural church in a multicultural world that includes indigenous peoples.

2. Invite the PMA to continue working in partnership with other denominations and organizations allied in the cause of redressing the wrongs caused by the Doctrine of Discovery, both
   a. by learning from the efforts of others, and cooperating in efforts that respect Native American peoples and their sovereignty, and
   b. by heeding the United Nations Permanent Forum’s call for “a clear shift of paradigm … from colonial doctrines to a principled human rights framework,” by requiring PC(USA) policies and practices to become consistent with the United Nations’ Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

3. Direct the PMA to undertake a study on relationships within our own denominations, such as the following:

   Description of acts of repentance, reconciliation, and justice needed to improve relationships between the PC(USA) councils above the congregation level and the Native American congregations and tribal nations within the PC(USA), including at least the following:

   a. An investigation of the allocations and distributions of funds for supporting Native American ministry at the national level since the merger that founded the PC(USA) in 1983, with the following goals:
      (1) An assessment of the practice and effectiveness of funding in recent decades, and
      (2) A Determination of whether funds were misdirected and, if so, what acts of restoration are needed.
b. An investigation of the recent history of the national church with its Native American congregations and ministries to explore if there are any immediate actions that should be taken as a part of reconciliation.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate with congregations and mid councils, encouraging them to explore the following:

[a. The local history of how the land was acquired from the indigenous residents,

[b. The local history of how the community and the church formed, and how that community or church pursued relationships with the indigenous people of the region.

5. Make recommendations for how mid councils, as well as the national council and ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), can support Native Americans in their ongoing efforts for sovereignty and fundamental human rights.]

4. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to issue a call for the engagement of mid councils and their congregational members to start a flow of ideas and information back and forth between mid councils and congregational members, directed at understanding how the Doctrine of Discovery has been present in our history and our theological positions, and continues to be present today.

We recommend a two-step process: confession, repentance. These are concepts that have always been central to Presbyterian theology. These interactions should include:

[a. Confession:

(1) An exploration of the local history of how the land was acquired from indigenous residents, and

(2) The local history of how the community and the church formed, and how that community or church pursued relationships with the indigenous people of the region.

[b. Repentance:

(1) Development and implementation of a beginning strategy for entering into dialogue and action with relevant local communities, and

5. Direct the PMA to form a coordinating council for the purpose of encouraging, monitoring, and sharing the ongoing responses by the national church, mid councils, and congregations to the call to action issued by the Stated Clerk, as listed in Recommendation 4, above. The council will also have the purpose of making recommendations to the 224th General Assembly (2020) on how the national church, mid councils, and congregations can support Native Americans in their ongoing efforts for sovereignty and fundamental human rights.

[a. The coordinating council should be comprised of at least two members from the Native American Consulting Committee, plus at least two members from national church, two from mid councils, and at least two members from congregations.

[b. The General Assembly should commit funds to enable this group to meet quarterly throughout the next two years. This means a total of seven or eight meetings. These meetings can be virtual if the group desires this, however, it is important that the group meet together at least twice: at the start and toward the end.

[c. The coordinating group must be organized and have its first meeting within three months of the passage of this overture.

[d. The coordinating group will be responsible for generating a report back to the next General Assembly, in 2020, and for making recommendations for actions that the next General Assembly may consider.]

6. Direct the PMA to develop resources for congregations and members in the following areas of practical understanding and response to the needs beyond the doors of the church:

a. Resources for raising awareness on how both church and society in the United States benefited and grew at the expense of Native American peoples due to the Doctrine of Discovery, including insight into how that privilege continues to this day.

b. Resources on curriculum lessons, study guides, and audio video resources for congregations, mid councils, and the national church on the following topics:

(1) Unmasking the idolatries and violence that emerged from colonial conquest in western culture as it was shaped by the Doctrine of Discovery, and

(2) Reforming the structures that grew out of that worldview.
c. Resources for informing members and congregations on the current research on

(1) Intergenerational Trauma and Toxic Stress, and the Adverse Childhood Experiences Study (ACEs), as they apply to American Indian and Alaska Native peoples, and

(2) Examples of strategies for pastoral ministry and social advocacy aimed at increasing resilience, bringing healing, and changing systems that prolong oppression.

Rationale

The committee tasked to author the report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA) was limited in the recommendations it was authorized to produce. The committee was limited primarily by the wording of its mandate, but also to a significant degree by the fact that the import and depth of this study only emerged slowly as the committee pursued its work. Some of the depth of the work needed is only now becoming clear. A brief description of reasons for continued effort at defining this work include the following:

1. The Need for Recommendations to More Than Just Congregations

   The committee was tasked by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to make most of its meaningful recommendations to congregations. That committee’s mandate was to consider work that congregations can do to “support Native Americans in their ongoing efforts for sovereignty and fundamental human rights,” (Minutes, 2016, Part I, pp. 58, 791) and “[suggest] specific ways in which congregations may recognize, support, and cooperate with Native American individuals, tribes, and nations who reside within their communities” (Ibid.). As essential as those recommendations are, some areas of response belong more properly to the province of the mid councils and the national church.

   The thinking that formed the institutional structures and the policies of the church were designed by councils largely from the Western cultural perspective. That thinking, and those structures, often failed Native Americans and ministries with Native Americans. To a significant degree that failure was because Western culture has been so saturated by a worldview that formed, and was formed by, the Doctrine of Discovery. Efforts are needed to address those issues in order that those mistakes will not be repeated. This requires more effort at defining recommendations for the mid council and the national levels, and not just at the congregational level.

2. There Is a Need for Acts of Justice That Only Come Through a Journey of Repentance

   Repentance is the proper response to recognizing that one has sinned against another. Since the New Testament Greek word for repentance is metanoia, and metanoia is defined as “turning around and walking in a new direction,” repentance must be understood as a journey. The renunciation of any wrong act is a very good first step of repentance, but cannot be considered adequate by itself. The national and mid councils levels of the PC(USA) need to explore what next steps might be taken in the provinces of their work as a part of the repentance of the whole church. This will require recognizing some injustices within the church that need to be rectified, such as exploring how to restore the opportunities lost when some funding was misdirected.

   However, repentance also calls on hearing how these issues have been addressed at international levels, such as the United Nations. Indigenous people across the world have been instrumental in wrestling with these same questions and crafting thoughtful responses. With this in mind, consideration is needed regarding whether the recommendations coming from the international indigenous community need to become policy of the PC(USA). For instance, we need to consider whether guidance for PC(USA) policy should come from statements like the following:

   For both Indigenous peoples and States, there are compelling reasons to go beyond repudiation. It is essential to replace the colonial Doctrine of Discovery with contemporary international human rights standards and engage in just and collaborative processes of redress.

3. Acts of Justice and Wholeness Are Needed within the PC(USA) and in the Wider Community

   It’s time to recognize that our baptismal vows call us to move beyond studying oppression, to taking action to dismantle oppression (see Mt. 25:37–40 and Jas. 2:14–18). Indeed, since the PC(USA) has admitted its complicity with the larger Western society in perpetrating the Doctrine of Discovery, it should be clear to us that acts of justice and wholeness are needed both within the church, and across the wider society. This will include joining with indigenous peoples in their movements for justice, as describe in Recommendation 2., above, as well as clarifying our role as allies in this ongoing work.

   However, it is also clear that the collision of western culture with indigenous cultures has led to grievous intergenerational trauma. Since Jesus made clear that healing is always integral to God’s salvation, and since healing ministries have been such an important part of the ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), it is time to explore new approaches for healing ministry as a part of redressing the wrongs of the past.
The PMA should explore opportunities and approaches for these new ministries and report back to the 224th General Assembly (2020). There is a great deal of literature available on Intergenerational Trauma and Toxic Stress, and on Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACES) as they relate to Native American populations. This sociological awareness could help inspire new ministries of healing, in obedience to the biblical mandate to spread the gospel in deed, as well as in word.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-12

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-12.

ACREC believes acts of justice that provide for wholeness are needed within the PC(USA) and in the wider community. ACREC core values to combat racism and its commitment to inclusion and peace among God’s creation is paramount to realizing the eschatological vision of the beloved community. The Doctrine of Discovery recognizes the humanness of indigenous peoples as they continue to be oppressed and marginalized.

It’s time to recognize that our baptismal vows call us to move beyond studying oppression, to taking action to dismantle oppression (see Mt. 25:37–40 and Jas. 2:14–18). Indeed, since the PC(USA) has admitted its complicity with the larger Western society in perpetrating the Doctrine of Discovery, it should be clear to us that acts of justice and wholeness are needed both within the church, and across the wider society.

ACREC supports this overture as it demonstrates faith in action recognizing that the PC(USA), a predominately white Christian denomination, acknowledges its complicity and need to now work to realize an inclusive community.

ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES COMMENT ON ITEM 10-12

Comment on Item 10-12—From the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

In accordance to Standing Rule K.1.b. in the Manual of the General Assembly 2018 and due to the financial implications involved, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures has consulted with staff from the Presbyterian Mission Agency and finds that the work assigned to this coordinating council could not be done within the existing structures.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-12

Comment on Item 10-12—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The Presbytery of Yukon overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take action aimed at expanding the response of the PC(USA) in its renunciation of the Doctrine of Discovery to include not only responses by congregations, but also responses from mid councils and the national church.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) seeks to help the church understand the inequitable impact of its actions on marginalized communities and its responsibilities for repair. Maturity in community is coming to a clear-eyed understanding of the good, bad, and ugly of life together.

GACOR regularly is asked to provide assistance in the forming of inclusive groups drawing from the fullness of the church. See the Book of Order, G-3.0103.

When inequities are faced, the church is freed to unmask idolatries and listen to voices long silenced. The impact of the ongoing sin of operating in the doctrine of discovery is present among us still. Committees on representation (and/or their functions) are present in all councils above session. Including these conscientizing bodies in mid council efforts to address these long-ignored harms and peoples would be helpful.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching from across the church in accordance with F-1.0403. Its constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

The Doctrine of Discovery: A Review of Its Origins and Implications for Congregations in the PC(USA) and Support for Native American Sovereignty—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, on behalf of the Doctrine of Discovery team, recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the Doctrine of Discovery report and recommendations as follows:

1. Urge the session of each congregation, as well as each mid council, [seminary] [COTE-member seminaries], Presbyterian Women’s groups, and other organizations to confess their complicity and repudiate the Doctrine of Discovery.

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to create resources for education on racism that address the themes in this report involving Native American Presbyterians and congregations.

3. Encourage [PC(USA) schools and seminaries] [COTE-member seminaries] to prepare students to articulate Native American theologies to give voice to these theologies and disrupt historic oppression and racism in Native American communities.

4. Encourage the commissioners of the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to review the 212th General Assembly (2000) report, “Comprehensive Strategy for Ministries with Native Americans” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, pp. 206ff), including its supplemental recommendations regarding all aspects of Native American ministry, and to lift up Native American ministries in the PC(USA).

5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to create a speaker’s bureau on Indigenous issues and publicize the list to the church.

6. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to amend the Standing Rules of the General Assembly so that each meeting of the assembly begins with an acknowledgement of whose land the assembly is meeting on and that greetings to the assembly include a welcome from those Indigenous peoples currently living on the land.

7. Direct the agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to begin each meeting with an acknowledgement of whose land they are meeting on and that greetings to the assembly include a welcome from those Indigenous peoples currently living on the land.

8. Encourage mid councils to begin their meetings with an acknowledgment of whose land they are meeting on and that greetings to the assembly include a welcome from those Indigenous peoples currently living on the land.

9. Encourage the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation to create resources that address the realities faced by Indigenous peoples in the United States and worldwide.

10. Encourage the Presbyterian Mission Agency to provide education on the human rights of Indigenous peoples as part of preparation for all mission co-workers.

11. Direct the Presbyterian Historical Society to identify and highlight resources related to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its relationships with Indigenous peoples.

12. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to initiate a survey in order to create a listing of courses taught in [Presbyterian-related seminaries and schools] [COTE-member seminaries] that focus on the histories of Indigenous peoples and current issues facing Indigenous peoples, identifying specific instructors, courses, texts, and syllabi when possible.

13. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to identify in the Book of Confessions how our confessions may support the Doctrine of Discovery, how our confessions may challenge the Doctrine of Discovery, how our confessions provide evidence for ways the church can change, and to report its findings to the 224th General Assembly (2020).

14. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to include the Doctrine of Discovery and the histories of Indigenous peoples and current issues facing Indigenous peoples in its antiracism and training efforts.

15. Encourage mid councils to request that when they contract outside antiracism trainers that the trainers address Indigenous issues and include Indigenous trainers, adjusting the content to be appropriate to the context in which the training takes place.
16. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, in consultation with the Native American Consulting Committee (NACC), to devote an issue of Unbound to the Doctrine of Discovery, including histories of Indigenous peoples and issues facing Indigenous peoples.

17. Urge the session of each congregation—as well as each mid council, [seminary] [COTE-member seminaries], Presbyterian Women’s groups, and national church agency—to review the existing study resources on the Doctrine of Discovery (posted on the Facing Racism website: https://facing-racism.pcusa.org/item/41901/), and to lift up histories of Indigenous peoples and current issues facing Indigenous peoples.

Rationale

The Doctrine of Discovery: A Review of Its Origins and Implications for Congregations in the PC(USA) and Support for Native American Sovereignty

At the 222nd General Assembly (2016), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved recommendations for action on the Doctrine of Discovery. Recommendation 7 of Item 11-24 called upon the PC(USA) “to confess its complicity and repudiate the Doctrine of Discovery, and direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly, in consultation with ACREC [Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns], to ... initiate a process of review of the Doctrine of Discovery. ...”1 This process includes the preparation of a report that: (1) describes the Doctrine of Discovery and explains its history; (2) makes recommendations of how congregations in the PC(USA) can support Native Americans in their ongoing efforts for sovereignty and fundamental human rights; (3) describes how relationships with specific Native American individuals and tribes can be developed; and (4) suggests specific ways in which congregations may recognize, support, and cooperate with Native American individuals, tribes, and nations who reside within their communities. With this action the PC(USA) joins other denominations who have taken actions to repudiate the doctrine of discovery.2

This report was prepared in consultation with a committee of PC(USA) staff and Native American consultants who represented or had served on the following PC(USA) bodies: ACREC, Native American Consulting Committee; Synod of Lakes and Prairies, Synod of the Southwest, Synod of the Northwest, Dakota Presbytery, Yukon Presbytery, Office of Racial and Intercultural Justice, Presbyterian Mission Agency; Assistant Stated Clerk, and manager for equity and representation, PC(USA).

The Presbyterian church, in all its various formations in the United States, has been in relationship with Native American peoples for more than 300 years. In 2000, the General Assembly Task Force on Native American Ministries presented an historical report to the 212th General Assembly (2000) entitled “Mission and Ministry with Native American Peoples: A Historical Survey of the Last Three Centuries.” This longer report was summarized in the “Comprehensive Strategy for Ministries with Native Americans” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 206, paragraphs 22.229–230) as historical background for the task force recommendations for Native American ministries in the PC(USA).3 Major themes emerged in the preparation of the 2000 historical report, one of which has specific relevance for this report:

First, at least 200 years of the Presbyterian relationship with Native American peoples have been years in which the Presbyterian church was active in the formation and implementation of government policies affecting Native American peoples. Because major Indian policy in the United States has focused on the land rights of native peoples in these 200 years, Presbyterian work among Native Americans is largely linked to Native American land (p. 1).

A conversation on the Doctrine of Discovery will always entail a discussion of Native American or Indigenous lands. Moreover, because the doctrine has been a central part of U.S. law regarding tribal lands, the Presbyterian church has played a major role historically in the implementation of the doctrine. As the overture from the Presbytery of National Capital stated, “[d]uring all … periods of American history, Christian churches … have accepted and supported the various forms of the Doctrine of Discovery, … We have participated both actively and passively throughout our history in discriminatory behavior directed against Native Americans. We have stood by while Native Americans were killed and their lands taken, while the story of their participation in the history of our country was distorted and suppressed.”4

Additionally, through its mission work outside of the United States, the Presbyterian church has had relationships with Indigenous peoples on all continents of the world. Thus, an understanding of the origins and modern-day manifestations of the Doctrine of Discovery, including its impacts on Indigenous peoples in the United States and around the globe, is essential to meaningful “recommendations of how congregations in the PC(USA) can support Native Americans in their ongoing efforts for sovereignty and fundamental human rights.”

After a discussion of the doctrine as currently understood, and its origins, this report will identify contemporary manifestations of the Doctrine of Discovery among native peoples and set forth recommendations called for in Recommendation 7. of Item 11-24 (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 791).

Doctrine of Discovery in the United States

In its current United States domestic iteration, the doctrine is a principal of law by which “fee title to the lands occupied by Indians when the colonists arrived became vested in the sovereign--first the discovering European nation and later the original States and the United States.” This principle as U.S. law was first articulated in Johnson v. McIntosh, 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 543 (1823). The U.S. Supreme Court interpreted “discovery” to mean that when European, Christian nations “discovered” lands unknown to Europeans, they automatically gained sovereign and property rights in the lands. This was so, even though Indigenous people had occupied and used the lands for millennia. This real-property right was subject only to the continuing use and occupancy rights of the Indigenous peoples.

Johnson v. McIntosh involved the attempted purchase of land in Indiana and Illinois from Piankashaw and Illinois Indians by private land speculators in Philadelphia and Baltimore. After nearly fifty years of attempts to have the titles acquired by these purchases legislatively recognized, the companies sought judicial recognition in the federal district court for the District of Illinois. They received an adverse decision and appealed. The U.S. Supreme Court decided against the land speculators. Writing for the Court, Justice Marshall concluded that the companies had no recognizable title because (1) the Illinois and Piankashaws had no fee title to convey; upon discovery, fee title passed to the discovering European sovereign, Britain, and (2) the tribes only possessed an occupancy right that they could sell only to the same sovereign or its successor in interest (the U.S.). Justice Marshall set forth what has been quoted as the Doctrine of Discovery in U.S. law:

> They were admitted to be the rightful occupants of the soil, with a legal as well as just claim to retain possession of it, and to use it according to their own discretion; but their rights to complete sovereignty, as independent nations, were necessarily diminished, and their power to dispose of the soil at their own will, to whomsoever they pleased, was denied by the original fundamental principle, that discovery gave exclusive title to those who made it.

The principles established in Johnson have remained “cornerstones of the concept of original Indian title.”

The same passage provides that the discoverer gained sovereign governmental powers over the native peoples and their governments, which restricted tribes’ international political, commercial, and diplomatic powers. This transfer of rights was accomplished without the knowledge or consent of native peoples. Johnson has been cited and relied on by Australian, New Zealand, and Canadian courts, and thus had a major impact on all Indigenous peoples who have experienced the colonial impacts of the British crown.

From Christian Roots of Doctrine to Secularization

Although commonly referenced as a secular legal doctrine in the United States, the Doctrine of Discovery has roots in European medieval Christianity. This section provides a summary of the Christian roots of the doctrine, its secularization, and eventual journey from Europe to the United States, leading to its American articulation in Johnson v. McIntosh.

- Medieval Crusades and Christian Warfare

Scholars have traced the development of the doctrine to the Crusades to the Holy lands in 1026–1271. In justifying the Crusades, the Church established the idea of a worldwide papal jurisdiction that “vested a legal responsibility in the pope to realize the vision of the universal Christian commonwealth.” This papal responsibility and power led to the idea of justified holy wars by Christians against Infidels.

In 1245, the canon lawyer Pope Innocent IV wrote a legal commentary on the rights of non-Christians that proved very influential in the development of the Discovery Doctrine. He focused on the central legal problem raised by the medieval crusades and Christian warfare against non-Christian societies: “Under what circumstances might Christians legitimately dispossess pagan peoples of their dominium—that is, their lordship and property?” He first interpreted Christ’s instructions to Peter to “feed my sheep” to be a justification for the papal jurisdiction over both Christians and infidels: “Both infidels and the faithful belong to Christ’s flock by virtue of their creation, although the infidels do not belong to the sheepfold of the Church, and so it seems from the aforementioned that the pope has jurisdiction over all men and power over them in law but not in fact.” Then through a series of theological and legal arguments, Innocent IV concluded that it was legal for Christians to occupy territory invaded “because in such cases the legal title reverted to the Church and to the pope who represented all men.” Thus, the Crusades were “just wars” fought for the “defense of Christianity” and to reconquer lands that had once belonged to Christians. With this commentary, Innocent IV provided a broad legitimizing mandate for wars of conquest and colonization in the lands of other peoples for medieval Europe.
In the early 1400s, Innocent IV’s commentary on the rights and status of infidels was revived in the context of a dispute between Poland and the Teutonic Knights. The Council of Constance heard the arguments and issued its decision in 1417: The Church and Christian princes had to respect the natural law rights of pagans to property and self-government, but not if they strayed too far from European normative views. This gave Spain and Portugal great license as they formulated their “colonizing discourse” for Africa and the New World and the legality of seizing the lands and rights of non-Christians.18

- Issuance of Papal Bulls

  Competition between Portugal and Spain to control the Canary Islands beginning in the 1300s led to a ban of both nations from the islands in 1434 by Pope Eugenius IV. Portugal appealed to the Pope, arguing that Portugal’s discovery and conquest was motivated by its guardianship duty to the infidels. This led to a new doctrine based on Portugal’s rights of discovery and conquest that stemmed from the alleged need to protect Indigenous peoples from the oppression of others and the need to convert them. Eugenius IV consulted canon lawyers, who opined that “[a]lthough possessing dominium, if infidels demonstrated an incapacity to comport their conduct according to natural law, the pope could interfere with their rights under his indirect Petrine guardianship responsibility to shepherd and care for all the sheep of God’s flock.”19 He issued the papal bull Romanus Pontifex in 1436 and authorized Portugal to convert the Canary Islanders and to control the islands on behalf of the papacy. In 1455, Pope Nicholas V additionally granted Portugal title to the lands of Indigenous peoples in Africa that Portugal had “acquired and that shall hereafter come to be acquired,”20 and authorized Portugal “to invade, search out, capture, vanquish, and subdue all Saracens and pagans” and place them into perpetual slavery and to seize all their property.

  Spain thus had to look elsewhere for lands to exploit. This laid the groundwork for King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella to sponsor Christopher Columbus’s westward passage to the Indies. After Columbus “claimed” the lands that he encountered in the New World, Isabella and Ferdinand sought papal ratification of their ownership of these lands. In May 1493, Pope Alexander VI obliged the Spanish Crown’s request by issuing the bull Inter caetera divinai in May 1493, ordering that the lands, which “hitherto had not been discovered by others,” and were now found by Columbus, belonged to Ferdinand and Isabella, along with “free power, authority, and jurisdiction of every kind.”21 The Pope also granted Spain any lands it might discover in the future, provided they were not “in the temporal possession of any Christian owner.”

  Portugal protested the geographical reach of Inter caetera I, after which Spain requested another bull. Pope Alexander obliged and issued Inter caetera II, drawing a line of demarcation 100 leagues west of the Azores. Spain was to have title to all territory west of this line, securing nearly all of North and South America. This line was later adjusted by the 1494 Treaty of Tordesillas between Spain and Portugal to a point 370 leagues west of the Cape Verde Islands. With this bull, Spain was given “the wherewithal by which [Spain] may be able to pursue [its] holy and laudable work [conversion], pleasant to immortal God … and the expansion of the Christian Rule.”22

  Miller observed that, by 1494, the Doctrine of Discovery stood for four points, as defined by the Church, Portugal, and Spain: (1) the Church possessed the authority to grant Christian kings title and sovereignty over Indigenous peoples and their lands; (2) European exploration, conquest, and colonization was designed to assist the papacy in exercising its guardianship over the entire earthly flock; (3) Portugal and Spain held exclusive rights over other European countries to colonize the world; and (4) the mere discovery of lands by Portugal or Spain in their respective spheres of influence, and engagement in symbolic acts of possession on these lands, was sufficient to establish their ownership rights.23

- Secularization of the Doctrine

  Clearly the Doctrine of Discovery had Christian roots, leading some to label it the “Christian doctrine of discovery.” However, such a focus may discount the manner in which sixteenth century legal discourse merged theology and law. In Renaissance Spain, canon lawyers and theologians spent considerable time addressing the justice of Spanish rule in the Americas, focusing on related themes of papal claims to universal secular jurisdiction and the application of natural law principles to all human relationships, especially between nations. In 1532, Franciscus de Victoria (1480–1546), a Dominican scholar, delivered a three-part lecture entitled “On the Indians Lately Discovered,”24 in which he provided a secular rationalization for discovery and conquest. He believed that the Indians possessed certain autonomous powers and entitlements to land, which Europeans were to respect. However, he methodically set forth rationale by which European Christian nations could “validly” acquire Indian lands or assert authority over them.25 With Victoria systematically “desacralizing” the discourse on discovery, it became ripe for Protestant England after the English Reformation of Henry VIII to employ the doctrine for Britain’s purposes.

- The Doctrine as Applied by the Protestant British Empire

  In the 1823 Johnson v. McIntosh case discussed earlier, Justice Marshall referenced a 1497 patent issued by King Henry VII to John Cabot to illustrate the origin of the “principle” of “discovery.”26 Although the first discovery voyage did not take place until sixty-five years later, under the reign of his granddaughter, Queen Elizabeth I, this patent demonstrated English interest in America as a possible colonial empire. Henry VII’s charter of conquest notably limited Cabot’s patent to avoid lands that had been granted to Portugal by the pope; he was to sail only to lands “unknown to all Christians” in the north, south, west, and east—avoiding Africa to the south.27 Henry VII issued other patents that also prohibited colonizing lands recognized to be under the papally granted sovereignty of the Portuguese Crown.
Britain, with the Reformation of Henry VIII and consequent shifts in the Empire’s international and colonial priorities with changes in the Crown, took a more circuitous route to join Spain, Portugal, and others in colonization of the New World. However, after practicing Spanish-influenced colonizing techniques in Ireland, Britain would easily transplant its Protestant crusade to the New World. In the words of legal scholar Williams, “[t]he genealogy of the legal discourse of the Protestant crusade against the infidels of America traces a process by which the mediaeval discourses of the Catholic church were domesticated and combined with other discursive practices appropriated from a variety of English and non-English sources.” Thus, for Indigenous Peoples worldwide, the impacts of discovery have been equally destructive whether they are based on Christian—be they Catholic or Protestant—or secular discourses of conquest.

In 1883, the Board of Foreign Missions described its work among the Native peoples as they transferred their work to Home Mission, in language reminiscent of 16th century colonial rationalizations for conquest.

The [missions] were established in view of the spiritual state of the Indians. Their condition as lost sinners and their need of Christ as their savior, led our churches to seek their salvation. It was soon perceived that as a heathen people, and as speaking languages of their own, the same kind of missionary efforts were required for them as for the people of Africa and China. These efforts took the form of preaching, teaching in schools, training native missionary laborers, translating portions of the scriptures, etc., very much as if they lived in Syria or Persia. Many hundreds of the Indians were brought to their Savior by his grace, lived exemplary Christian lives and triumphed at death in the hope of the Gospel.

The United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues has recognized that “[i]n all its manifestations, ‘discovery’ has been used as a framework for justification to dehumanize, exploit, enslave and subjugate Indigenous peoples and dispossess them of their most basic rights, laws, spirituality, worldviews and governance and their lands and resources.” While the doctrine has been rejected by some international and domestic bodies, it continues to have life. As the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues has stated, its ‘resilience remains because it is embedded in colonizing cultures and maintained in State laws, policies, negotiations and litigation positions.’

Contemporary Manifestations of the Doctrine

In 2005, the U.S. Supreme Court demonstrated the resilience of the doctrine, in City of Sherrill v. Oneida Nation of N.Y. In this chapter of the Oneida Nation’s ongoing efforts to regain its aboriginal lands, the Oneida Nation challenged taxes owed on parcels of land that were within their aboriginal lands. They argued that when they purchased land parcels and gained fee title, these parcels were “unified” in title with other lands recognized as their ancient reservation land by the Supreme Court, so that the Oneida nation could assert sovereignty over these parcels and not be subject to state taxation. The Supreme Court, in rejecting their claim, made explicit reference to the Doctrine of Discovery as part of federal Indian law: “It very early became accepted doctrine in this Court that although fee title to the lands occupied by Indians when the colonists arrived became vested in the sovereign—first the discovering European nation and later the original States and the United States—a right of occupancy in the Indian tribes was nevertheless recognized.” City of Sherrill presented a stark reminder to Native Nations, Native scholars, and activists that the doctrine is alive and well in U.S. law, and that Indigenous peoples in this country and elsewhere will continue to suffer the impacts of this racist and discriminatory doctrine.

- Impacts of the Doctrine of Discovery on Native American Congregations in the PC(USA)

As discussed earlier, Protestant denominations have played a large role in the materialization of the doctrine in the United States, beginning with the purported “discovery” by the English Crown. Legal and historical scholars agree that the expansion of the United States from its first European settlements was largely based on the doctrine. Miller, for example, traces the metamorphosis from the Doctrine of Discovery into Manifest Destiny, as the elements of discovery were readily adopted into Manifest destiny. President Jefferson, for example “utilized Discovery in the Louisiana and Oregon Territories when he launched the Lewis and Clark expedition; when he made the Louisiana Purchase, even though he thought his actions were unconstitutional; and when he took steps to acquire the Pacific Northwest for the United States.”

As the 212th General Assembly (2000) task force report documents, the Presbyterian church joined other religious denominations in assisting the U.S. government with its mandate of manifest destiny. Through the nineteenth century, “the geographic expansion of the Presbyterian mission work among Native Americans often foreshadowed the movement of Euro-Americans to Native American lands,” whether by presence as U.S. government agents to supervise the newly created Indian reservations as part of Grant’s “peace policy,” or as missionaries. Presbyterians joined other denominations in supporting the 1887 Dawes Act, under which the largest loss of Indian land occurred. In 1884–1847, Christian denominations who gathered yearly at Lake Mohonk Conference grounds in New York gave their strong support for the Dawes Act “solution,” by which each Indian was to be given an allotment of land, thereby undermining the concept of communally held tribal land. The Dawes Act opened the way for the federal government to declare all unallotted land as surplus and open for sale. Lands were allotted from 1887 to 1934. By the time the policy ended in 1934, with the passage of the Indian Reorganization Act, American Indians had lost 90 million acres of land.

Taking this theme into the 20th century, historian Fixico provided case studies to illustrate “Indian-white competition for natural resources in Indian Country,” arguing that American capitalism, deriving from a tradition of Eurocentrism, continued through the 20th century to exploit tribal nations for their natural resources. Case studies include the allotment of Muskogee Creek lands, the Osage murders and oil, Pueblo water rights in the Southwest, termination of the Klamath and timberslands in the Pacific Northwest, Chippewa fishing and hunting rights in the Great Lakes, and the quest for gold in the Dakota Black Hills. In almost all the case histories documented by Fixico, Presbyterian Native Americans were impacted.

- Regional Stories of Presbyterian Support of Native Americans

As the committee assigned to write this report deliberated, stories of Presbyterian presence to support Native American efforts to regain lands and maintain sovereignty emerged. While the Presbyterian church may have been complicit in the Assimilationist policies and Manifest destiny in the United States, some stories of resistance serve as valuable precedents and models for support of Native Americans in their ongoing efforts for sovereignty, to regain aboriginal lands, and for fundamental human rights. Often the support grew out of understanding of Native peoples based on shared experiences and the ability to set aside a Eurocentric world view in order to appreciate the perspectives of Native peoples. Here then are some of those stories.

Worcester, Advocate for Cherokee Nation

Samuel Austin Worcester (1778–1859), a Presbyterian minister who lived among the Cherokee people, played a crucial role in one of the most important cases regarding tribal jurisdiction in the United States, Worcester v. Georgia, decided in 1832. Worcester moved to Cherokee Territory in 1828, where he worked to translate the Bible into Cherokee, using Sequoyah’s alphabet, and assisted Elias Boudinot in publishing the Cherokee Phoenix, the first Indian newspaper in North America. He opposed removal of Cherokees west of the Mississippi River, as Georgia took Cherokee lands and dismantled Cherokee government in the face of inaction by the federal government. Worcester was arrested for disobeying Georgia’s law restricting white missionaries from living in Cherokee territory without a state license. He and eleven other ministers published a resolution in protest of the Georgia law. Worcester knew that obeying the law would be tantamount to surrendering the sovereignty of the Cherokee Nation. Worcester was arrested on July 7, 1831, and quickly brought to trial and convicted. He stuck to his beliefs and was sentenced to prison on September 16, 1832.

On appeal of his conviction, the U.S. Supreme Court held that Georgia’s law was unconstitutional. Chief Justice John Marshall wrote in his opinion that the federal government had an exclusive relationship with the Indian nations and recognized their sovereignty, above state laws. However, both President Andrew Jackson and Governor George Gilmer ignored the ruling, and Worcester served two years of hard labor in prison. Under a subsequent governor, he was pardoned and thereafter moved to Indian Territory, where he continued his work of preaching, translating, and publishing.

Dirk Lay, Advocate for Pima People

The Reverend Dirk Lay (1886–1944), a Presbyterian missionary who served the Pima people in Arizona, was largely responsible for legislation for the Coolidge Dam, which restored some of the water to the Pima or Akimel O’odham, “River People,” that had been taken by white settlers. He moved to Sacaton in 1910 to serve for a year, to support the mission work of Charles Cook, and ended up staying for twenty-four years. “At once I saw the terrible need of the Indians because of lack of water for the fields,” he said. “This was in a region where, in 1696, when Kino came from Mexico to this country, there was a surprising irrigation system built by the Indians, of miles of ditches, with all necessary laterals. But when I went there I found that the white people had gone to lands to the east, and had tapped the supplies of water. They took all; none was left for the Indians, who were barely existing.” He became a fierce advocate for Pima water rights.

He and his wife Elizabeth visited Congressmen and Senators in Washington as well as churches in the East, and urged their members to write and wire their senators and representatives in Congress. Testifying before a House subcommittee in 1923, Lay said: “The first Arizonan killed in action in France in the World War was a full-blood Pima Indian, a volunteer. When the telegram came on the reservation that he had been killed, six acres of wheat, the only means of support of his widowed mother, were drying up because this Government had permitted others of our race to take her water.” In 1924, the Pima Indians did not have status as U.S. citizens and so could not use the courts to assert their water rights. Construction of the Coolidge Dam started in 1924. It was finished in 1928 and dedicated in 1930.

Unfortunately, the water lasted only five years. Speculators had bought up desert land under the dam and sold it with water rights. Irrigation water decreased; in response, farmers began to drill so many wells and run so many hundreds of pumps day and night that the water table sank almost out of reach. The Gila River people would not have a dependable supply of water until after the Central Arizona Project canal was built and Congress passed the Arizona Water Settlements Act in 2004. Rev. Lay did not live to see this happen. He is remembered fondly by the O’odham people to this day.

Self-Development of People and North Slope Borough

In 1972, the Arctic Slope Native Association was awarded funding by Presbyterian Self-Development of People (SDOP) to support a land rights and governance project. The North Slope of Alaska, which lies between the Brooks Range and the Arctic Ocean, covers an area of 228,800 square kilometers, 15 percent of the land area of the state. About 70 percent of these people are Inupiat Eskimos. In 1990, Barrow, the largest village, had 3,400 residents, about 40 percent of whom were non-Inupiat. A Presbyterian church was established in Barrow in 1890. In 1972, after oil was discovered in Prudhoe Bay on the North Slope, the people of the eight North Slope villages voted to establish a borough, a form of regional government, in order to tax the oil companies and build government infrastructure. Oil companies threatened any business who would help in this effort, and a political and legal battle ensued. The Native Association approached the Presbyterian SDOP for assistance with their legal challenges and were awarded $85,000. They eventually won, established the North Slope Borough, and began collecting property taxes from oil field developments. Within a few years, the North Slope Borough became one of the richest local and regional governments in the United States as measured by taxable wealth and tax revenues per capita.50 After the Native Association won their case, they returned the funds to SDOP with interest.51 North Slope Borough government has provided the Alaska arctic Inupiat with means to greater political self-sufficiency.

Santa Fe Presbytery and Mount Taylor

In 2014, the Presbytery of Santa Fe sold a church camp property on Mt. Taylor to the Pueblo of Laguna. The Laguna United Presbyterian Church, established in the 1870s, is the only Native American congregation in the Presbytery of Santa Fe. This sale represented an important return to the Pueblo of its aboriginal lands. The creation of national forests and national parks around the country involved the taking of Indigenous lands, including those of Pueblo peoples in New Mexico.52 Through the Forest Reserve Act of 1891, the President of the United States set aside forest reserves from the land in the “public domain” without recognition of Indigenous ties to the land. In 1905, management of approximately 21 million acres of public lands in New Mexico and Arizona, almost one-eighth of the surface area of these states, was transferred from the Interior Department to the Bureau of Forestry. This included thousands of acres of aboriginal lands of peoples, including the Pueblo of Laguna. Later the establishment of Cibola National Forest, which included Mt. Taylor (“Tsibiina” to Laguna people) included aboriginal lands of Laguna Pueblo and other tribes. Efforts to regain these lands in the courts had failed.

In 2009, the Pueblo, along with four other tribes (Pueblo of Acoma, Zuni Tribe, Hopi Tribe, and Navajo Nation), sought the support of the PC(USA) as they sought to protect the sacred mountain landscape from harmful development and advocated for designation of Mt. Taylor as a Traditional Cultural Property under New Mexico law, after it was listed as eligible for the National Register of Historic Places. Citing a denominational social witness policy to support Indigenous peoples and land-based theologies, Stated Clerk Clifton Kirkpatrick submitted a letter of support for the designation. Although the 2009 designation was challenged in court, the tribes eventually prevailed in the New Mexico Supreme Court in 2014.53

PC(USA) and Standing Rock

Perhaps the most well-known instance of an Indigenous effort to claim aboriginal lands in contemporary times is that of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe. From 2016 to 2017, the fight to resist placement of an oil pipeline under the Missouri River, a major source of water for Standing Rock, drew international attention for its human rights implications. The PC(USA) offered support to the “water protectors” in numerous ways, in person, and through financial and in-person support.54 In November 2016, representatives from the PC(USA) joined a 500-person-strong gathering of interfaith clergy and lay leaders at the Oceti Sakowin prayer camp.

All these stories demonstrate the wealth of possibilities for supporting Indigenous peoples in their ongoing efforts for sovereignty and all the rights attached to it. They also demonstrate the power of one person’s willingness to set aside Eurocentric paradigms and live out the Gospel of Jesus Christ in new ways. Native peoples continue to live land-based theologies that center the lands they call home and seek out healthy lives despite being inheritors of generations of oppression. The UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues has recognized that the impacts of the Doctrine of Discovery continue to be devastating, far-reaching, and intergenerational.55 Indigenous Peoples also experience ongoing adverse effects relating to “health; psychological and social well-being; denial of rights and titles to land, resources, and medicines; conceptual and behavioral forms of violence against Indigenous women; youth suicide; and the hopelessness that many Indigenous peoples experience, in particular Indigenous youth.”56

Implications for Future Engagement with Native Peoples

Many have observed that an enduring aspect of the Standing Rock resistance was the opportunity it afforded for education on international human rights of Indigenous Peoples. In numerous instances during media coverage, the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples was cited, with particular focus on the rights to self-determination (Article 3), to lands (Articles 25–28), and the right to free prior and informed consent (Article 19). Indigenous peoples will no doubt continue to fight for their lands, water, and self-determination in numerous ways. The UN Declaration, and more recently the American Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, have added frameworks for action aiming at the full protection and implementation of the rights of Indigenous peoples. The UN Permanent Forum in its 2014 “Study on the impacts of the Doctrine of Discovery on Indigenous peoples, including mechanisms, processes and instruments of redress,” emphasized that “[f]or both Indigenous peoples and States, there are compelling reasons to go beyond repudiation. It is essential to replace the colonial Doctrine of Discovery with contemporary international human rights standards and engage in just and collaborative processes of redress.”57 Importantly, the Permanent Forum calls for a “clear shift of paradigm … from colonial doctrines to a principled human rights framework, consistent with the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.” This should be the foundation for future PC(USA) engagement with Indigenous peoples in the U.S. and elsewhere. Repudiating the doctrine of discovery may, so far, be merely a recognition of bad things that happened in the past, while remaining blind to current thought-and-actions, and their consequences.
Currently, 90.93 percent of the PC(USA) membership is Caucasian and still (mostly unconsciously) guided by the same trajectory of thought that is reflected in the Doctrine of Discovery. Guidance into a new way of thinking must come from sources outside the dominant culture. Today there are ninety-five Native American congregations in the PC(USA), a decrease of fifteen since the General Assembly task force report was delivered in 2000. The task force anticipated that the number of Native congregations would decrease if systemic issues were not faithfully addressed by the denomination. Organizational patterns and methods reflect the cultural thinking behind them. We know that the current PC(USA) system does not serve Native American constituencies well and continues to reflect some of the same blind spots that are endemic to the doctrine of discovery. On the one hand, our official PC(USA) policy is for self-determination to guide Native American ministry. In reality, leadership systems still are not effective in providing for the self-determination of Native American ministries, especially in times when funding shortfalls force unhelpful decisions from the top—unhelpful for staffing for Native American Ministry, for the development and nurture of upcoming Native American leaders, for Native American discipleship programs, or for Native American control over funding.

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-13.

Item 10-13 fulfills the 222nd General Assembly (2016)’s request for a study of one of the legal building blocks of Native American dispossession, and includes recommendations for the study’s use.

The ACSWP advises approval, with notes for its posting and publication.

This is a very good study, summarizing a large amount of historical and legal material. It makes clear that the “Doctrine” was at its earliest stages the product of a time when church and state were not separate. It outlines the process of “secularization,” and indicates several other legal developments leading to the direct U.S. Federal jurisdiction over Native American tribes, considered as dependent or limited sovereignties.

In its references to PC(USA) actions in aid of Native American empowerment, the account of the assistance given to the North Slope Borough in Barrow, Alaska, prior to taxing authority, leaves out the role of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) in arranging for Presbyterian funds to be loaned to the borough and the Inuit Circumpolar Conference.

The recommendations are wise to note the 2000 Report of the Task Force on Native American Ministry. This was accompanied by the publication of an issue of Church & Society magazine, “Native American Ministry: Voices of a New Dawn,” March/April 2000 issue (90:4).

The legal mechanisms of dispossession had led to three Law and Theology Seminars organized by the Native American Counseling Committee, the Advisory Council on Church & Society, and other bodies of the church. Two of these seminars led to issues of Church & Society containing papers presented:

Law and Native American Religions with National Indian Youth Council, Santa Fe, June 1984 (few papers).

A fourth issue of Church & Society, “The Voyage After Columbus,” Jan/Feb 1992, addressed the 500th anniversary of Columbus’ “discovery,” but (among good articles) said little about the Doctrine of Discovery.

Referred to in Recommendation 16, the online journal, Unbound, at www.justiceUnbound.org, is the successor to Church & Society magazine, and is published by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-13

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

ACREC is grateful for the excellent and important work of the Doctrine of Discovery Team and stands in full solidarity with the recommendations made by this report. We are encouraged to see that the recommendations involve all levels of church structure and presence in relations with Native People.

As those called to live our faith, holding one another accountable to the highest standards of justice and equity, we know that repudiation of the Doctrine of Discovery is not merely about our polity, but requires an ongoing recognition of error and mutual establishment of corrective actions with those who have been harmed or oppressed. The recommendations named here take this reality into account as well as acknowledge the cause of the loss of geographic homelands, language, culture, and children of historical indigenous people in order that settler communities and churches might gain.

The hope of ACREC is that these recommendations will not merely be endorsed and approved by this General Assembly, but that this would be a call to the church to repent, to turn, to take action in a new direction together with our Native American siblings. ACREC has noted that over the years that the Native American Consulting Committee has a clearly decreasing level of authority, particularly after reunion, which shifted its purpose from consulting to caucusing. ACREC encourages the bolstering of Native ministries and relationships within PC(USA) church structures, including broadening and strengthening ecclesial partnerships in order to repair damage done over centuries of influence by the Doctrine of Discovery.
It is far too late that we’re arriving at this report, but we remain grateful and hopeful that this document will serve as a catalyst for a true culture shift within our denomination. May it be so.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-13

Advice & Counsel on Item 10-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 10-13. ACWC agrees that there is a need for the Presbyterian Church (1) to confess its complicity in sins—both active and passive—against our Native American brothers and sisters and (2) to repudiate the Doctrine of Discovery, central to U.S. law regarding tribal lands, which has led to the oppression of Native Americans and the denial of their fundamental civil rights.

Historically, the U.S. Supreme Court has interpreted “discovery” to mean that when European Christian native nations “discovered” lands not previously known to Europeans, they automatically assumed sovereignty and property rights over those lands even though the areas had been occupied and used by Indigenous people for millennia. According to the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, “in all its manifestations Discovery has been used as a framework for justification to dehumanize, exploit, enslave and subjugate indigenous peoples and dispossess them of their most basic rights, laws, spirituality, worldviews and governance and their lands and resources.”

When Columbus’ encountered, what to him were new worlds, he brought a culturally-embedded Doctrine of Discovery with him to the shores of the Americas and a belief in the superiority of Western ways. Europeans of his time saw civilizations as placed along a continuum. At the lower end of the continuum stood those forms of civilization considered primitive. The continuum stretched forward until the apex of civilization was reached in Western society. Thus, the Indigenous people of the New World were not considered human beings, but more infantile lifeforms viewed as having no principles, values, or traditions worthy of respect. They were deemed to need being cared for—or, more accurately, taken over—by morally-superior Western nations.

Columbus could not imagine that another culture might have different ways of organizing society and of valuing life. That those ways might not be necessarily better or worse, but simply different, was beyond his comprehension. Those first Europeans explorers chose to see the faults in indigenous cultures rather than acknowledge the possibility of their own European cultural limitations. Failing to understand that communication occurs in a cultural context, for instance, Columbus was unaware that while dancing was a sign of peace for Spaniards, it was a declaration of war for Trinidadians. [See Jeanne Choy Tate, Something Greater: Culture, Family, and Community as Living Story, WipfandStock, 2013.]

With Westward Expansion, the Doctrine of Discovery would take on additional form in the Doctrine of Manifest Destiny. In the name of converting “heathens” to Christianity and protecting Indigenous people from oppression by others, the Presbyterian church in its many forms, along with other religious denominations, joined with the U.S. government in spreading this doctrine from coast-to-coast along with its concomitant rape of lands and murder of Native Americans.

Stunning in its arrogance, this Eurocentric way of confronting differences would influence all subsequent forms of encounter between Europeans and other cultures for centuries on into modern times. The claims made by the Doctrine of Discovery and Manifest Destiny continue to undergird white supremacy and patriarchy today and Western culture still assumes itself to be the defining culture. Even concept of “inclusivity” reinforces privilege when applied universally with the intention of including everyone in the dominant (European American/White) worldview. Unlike Columbus, it is possible to choose another path, replace the colonial doctrine of Discovery with contemporary international standards of human rights and engage in a dialogue with difference rather than its subjugation.

The current PC(USA) system does not serve its diminishing numbers of Native American constituencies well. Indeed, it continues to reflect the same dangerous points of ignorance endemic to the Doctrine of Discovery and Manifest Destiny. Within the PC(USA), these implicit assumptions impact denominational attitudes toward congregations of color and immigrant fellowships as well.

The PC(USA) has much to learn from our Native American brothers and sisters. When lifted up, Native American land-based and other theologies are able to disrupt the historic oppression grounded in Eurocentric mindsets. This overture represents one small step towards reforming our tradition and living out the Gospel of Jesus Christ in new ways.

COTE COMMENT ON ITEM 10-13

Comment on Item 10-13—From the Committee on Theological Education (COTE).

The Committee on Theological Education notes that seminaries are mentioned in Recommendations 1, 3, 12, and 17. The Committee on Theological Education offers the following comment.
First, COTE notes that in these recommendations the seminaries are described in different ways: “PC(USA) schools and seminaries” in Recommendation 3, “Presbyterian-related seminaries” in Recommendation 12, simply “seminary” in Recommendations 1 and 17. Presumably the intention in each case is to refer to the seminaries that relate to the General Assembly through their membership in the Committee on Theological Education. COTE advises that the language of the report’s recommendations be revised to reflect this fact. Commissioners could do so by the phrase “COTE-member seminaries.”

Second, the Committee on Theological Education further notes that although it is the established body through which the denomination and the member seminaries communicate with one another, it is not mentioned in the recommendations in their present form. The Committee on Theological Education urges that all communication with the COTE member seminaries called for by these and any other recommendations made by this report be coordinated with and occur through the Committee on Theological Education.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-13

Comment on Item 10-13—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR)

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) understands God as deeply interested in the concerns of humanity and the relations among peoples and power, especially upon the least and lost. Our theology speaks to the issues of representation, equity, and diversity revealed in this history of repression of Native American peoples in the United States, in the name of faith and fervor by our denomination specifically and the Christian church at large.

The Doctrine of Discovery used as a theological rationale, argued into legal documents and mortared into precedents, provide basis to remove the original inhabitants from their lands and violate their human rights, life, liberties, and deprive them of full participation. Legally it continues to be used to legitimize these actions. The church has also used this ideology to justify its injurious practices of cultural imperialism and assimilation.

The Brief Statement of Faith (11.4) teaches us that by trusting in God the Holy Spirit, he “gives us the courage to ... hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.” The Confession of Belhar (10.8) also invites us to denounce and resist this ideology as an injustice that is contrary to the Gospel, “that the credibility … is seriously affected and its beneficial work obstructed when it is proclaimed in a land which professes to be Christian, but in which the enforced separation of people on a racial basis promotes and perpetuates alienation, hatred and enmity” (10.5, Belhar referencing James 2:8–9).

As the report itself enumerates, The United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues,

- recognizes that “[i]n all its manifestations, ‘discovery’ has been used as a framework for justification to dehumanize, exploit, enslave and subjugate Indigenous peoples and dispossess them of their most basic rights, laws, spirituality, worldviews and governance and their lands and resources” [UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, “Study on the impacts of the Doctrine of Discovery on Indigenous peoples, including mechanisms, processes and instruments of redress,” February 20, 2014 (E/C.19/2014/3). Cited on page 6 of the report].

- states, its “resilience remains because it is embedded in colonizing cultures and maintained in State laws, policies, negotiations and litigation positions” [Ibid, paragraph 2, cited in report.]

If the church is to ever achieve unity and diversity completely, we must first recognize and repent of the harm that we have done towards many of the original peoples and cultures, repairing where we can to be fully the church worthy of Christ. True unity within the church can only rest upon a full acknowledgement and education of the historic oppression and continuing racism in which the church willingly participates.

GACOR supports efforts to educate and provide reparation to the damage caused by past activities and laws affecting Native Americans and other marginalized persons. As all councils above session are required by G-3.0103 to attend to inclusiveness and interrupt excluding practices, GACOR lifts up the constitutional support for this work in all councils of the church. We are committed to being a faithful partner in creating organizational and systematic transformations that give underserved communities full voice, participation and equity within the PC(USA).

Recommendations 5–7 are particularly easy and bring the realities of the erasure of native peoples’ home to wherever the church gathers. Other denominations have implemented these practices and found in them a new awareness of voices long silenced and unmasking idolatries in their common practices.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching from across the church in accordance with F-1.0403. Its constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).
Item 10-14

[The assembly approved Item 10-14. See pp. 28, 33.]

Confirming the Election of the Reverend Dr. Diane Givens Moffett as President/Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency—from the Presbytery Mission Agency Board (PMAB).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) confirm the election of the Reverend Dr. Diane Givens Moffett to a four-year term as President/Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Search Committee has concluded a wide-ranging national search for a President/Executive Director. The search committee was chaired by Nancy Ramsay and included Bong Bringas, Sinthia Hernandez-Diaz, Chip Low, Alice Ridgill, Patsy R. Smith, Wendy Tajima, and ex-officio members Ken Godshall, Joe Morrow, and Ruth Gardner. The committee worked with BoardWalk Consulting, a national nonprofit search firm based in Atlanta.

The following provides the search committee’s recommended candidate to the Board of Directors, with a request for ratification of this choice.

About the Search

The PMA Search Committee resumed the search on March 15, after finalizing a revised Leadership Profile. BoardWalk reached out to some 200 individuals in advance of a Benchmark Meeting on April 5, and the search committee discussed the backgrounds of sixteen individuals. After narrowing the list to five candidates, the committee held candidate interviews on April 14, and the search committee selected finalists for interviewing on April 27 and 28 in Cincinnati based on criteria in the Leadership Profile. The candidates interviewed represented a broad range of diversity. The semifinalist candidate pool included three women and two people of color. Among the finalist candidate pool were two women and two people of color.

As described in the Leadership Profile, the goal of the search was to recruit a President/Executive Director with the following assets:

- Inspiring leader of transformation and mission
- Manager of change
- Able to build cohesive, mission-focused culture
- Relationships across the Church
- Able to lead PMA to a vibrant future

Personal characteristics include: credibility; organizational and change management experience; cultural fluency; awareness of the changing Church; confidence and humility; ability to thrive with ambiguity and change; courage and innovation; and passion for the Church and mission.

A Unanimous Recommendation: The Reverend Dr. Diane Givens Moffett

The committee voted unanimously to recommend hiring the Reverend Dr. Diane Givens Moffett. Diane is a multidimensional leader and author whose decades of transformational leadership have been honed within various arenas of complexity. She has served as a congregational pastor, executive of an urban outreach ministry, and community leader in Oakland, Calif., East Orange, N.J., and Greensboro, N.C. In 2017, Diane ran in a competitive race for mayor of Greensboro.

Diane is currently the senior pastor of Saint James Presbyterian Church in Greensboro, North Carolina, where she has served since 2005. She is the current moderator of the Executive Council of the Presbytery of Salem and was previously moderator of the Presbytery of Salem. Other PC(USA) leadership roles have included chair of the 218th General Assembly (2016)’s Climate for Change-Cultural Proficiency Task Force, a group charged with assessing the six agencies of the General Assembly’s progress in cultural proficiency and presenting recommendations for improvement in this area. Diane also served as an advisory member on the African American Advisory Committee for the PC(USA) and as vice president of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus.

An active community leader, Diane currently serves on the boards of Presbyterian Homes, The Cone Health Network, and the Cone Foundation, where she sits on the executive committee. Diane helped to establish and serves as the co-moderator of the Greensboro Interfaith Clergy Council and as vice president of the Pulpit Forum, both faith-based advocacy organizations.
The search committee was especially drawn to Diane’s passion for mission. In each of her leadership roles, and even as a seminarian, Diane has led adaptively in promoting transformative change through significant congregational involvement with surrounding communities.

Diane’s commitment to connecting congregations with their communities has developed into an effective, engaged practice of ministry that speaks to the needs of the 21st century church.

As senior pastor of Saint James Presbyterian in Greensboro, North Carolina—a historically black congregation formed by formerly enslaved Africans who had worshipped at First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro—Diane helped develop a partnership between both congregations, and through a yearlong process of listening and learning, a joint service of reconciliation was held that had ramifications across the city and the denomination.

Previous calls include pastor of Elmwood Presbyterian in East Orange, New Jersey (1995–2005), where she successfully secured funding for the launch of a second worshipping site. While still a seminarian, Diane served as student pastor for Elmhurst Presbyterian in Oakland, California (1987–1992). When she arrived, Elmhurst was a congregation in decline. She successfully integrated the church into the life of the community, developed relationships with other faith-based and community leaders, expanded and nurtured new ecclesiastical leadership, and raised resources that led to the call of an associate pastor. That church is still ongoing.

From 1993–95, Diane served as executive director of Harbor House Ministries in Oakland, a complex outreach ministry within one of the most diverse communities in America. Harbor House supports children, youth, and families with education, before- and after-school care, food, clothing, workforce training and other needs. While at Harbor House, she expanded the budget and donor base of the ministry. She also helped residents establish two businesses to employ people in the community.

Diane displays a warmth for mission conveyed with enthusiasm. She is a sought-after preacher whose sermons are frequently included in collections. Her book Beyond Greens and Cornbread: Reflections of African American Christian Identity received excellent reviews from various publications.

Diane is a bridge-builder, culture-transformer, and effective listener able to “garner community consensus, all while remaining faith-based.”

Diane’s unique gifts of interpersonal leadership, intercultural community engagement, developing faithful leaders, church planting and cross-cultural competency elevated her candidacy among other potential PMA leaders and commends her to lead PMA at its current stage.

The following are quotes from some of her peers, representing all levels of PC(USA) leadership:

“Diane has the respect of people within different levels of the church as well as in the pews.”—PMAB member

“Diane is a good listener. I can’t emphasize enough from my experience serving on the PMAB and hearing from different constituencies how critical this skill will be. She will inherit a gifted staff of directors at the PMA as well as deployed staff in the field. Knowing her, she will value the gifts they bring based on their experience of leadership and passion. She will be good at assessing what is going well. She will assess areas that need to be put on hiatus or re-envisioned as well as create space for the movement of the spirit in new ways. Her thoughtful approach will serve her well in assessing, casting a vision and charting a course for PMA.”—PMAB member

“We have had challenges developing leadership in African-American congregations. Those congregations remain at 4 percent of our total membership; meanwhile our country’s population is changing. PC(USA) has to identify, recruit and support young adults who can go into leadership within these congregations. Diane has experience leading that and will bring this issue to the national level. Diane will keep that in front of everyone in a positive way.”—Transitional General Presbyter

“I cannot think of a better person to lead PMA than Diane. Quite extraordinary leadership.”—Transitional General Presbyter

“Diane has an ability to get people to sign up, to join in and help. She is able to garner community consensus, all while remaining faith-based. She is grounded in the Word.”—Elder and Organizing Member of Elmwood Presbyterian West

“I am Methodist and was a pastor for 20 years before coming to nonprofit leadership. Her work with First Presbyterian inspired my church to do the same thing with a black church across town. We have been encouraged to read books that might be hard to read and have conversations that are difficult to have. It has been quite powerful.”—Peer reference from the CEO of Habitat for Humanity of Greater Greensboro

A. Relating to Budgets for Presbyterian Mission Agency

   The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) incorporate into the Minutes the report of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Receipts and Expenditures Actual Compared to Budget for 2016 and 2017.

   [The display that is found in pma-budget-charts-A1.pdf is the report of actual revenue and expenditures for the years 2016 and 2017. See pp. 945–46.]

   Rationale

   The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted policy governing mission budgets at the General Assembly level. That policy provides that:

   B. The General Assembly Council shall:
      1. Report to each General Assembly:
         a. Actual total financial resources used to support the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the expenditures during the most recently completed year. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 375)

   The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) receive the revised report of the 2018 Presbyterian Mission Agency Budget in the total amount of $68,255,478.

   [The display that is found in pma-budget-charts-A2.pdf is the report of the Revised 2016 Presbyterian Mission Agency Budget. See p. 947.]

   Rationale

   The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted policy governing mission budgets at the General Assembly level. That policy provides that:

   B. The General Assembly Council shall:
      1. Report to each General Assembly: ...
         b. Adjustments, if any approved by the General Assembly Council for the current budget year.

[The display that is found in pma-budget-charts-A3.pdf is the report of the 2017 Presbyterian Mission Agency Budget and Program and the 2018 Presbyterian Mission Agency Budget. See pp. 948–50.]

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted Policy Governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly Level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall: ...

3. Recommend to the General Assembly the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program for the next succeeding budget cycle. Displayed in the recommendation shall be:

   a. All projected financial sources; and

The Presbyterian Mission Agency is required by the Constitution to prepare and submit a comprehensive budget to the General Assembly (G-3.0113).

B. Relating to Net Assets and Reserve Funds

Unrestricted and Restricted Net Assets and Reserve Funds

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) receive the report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation regarding unrestricted and restricted net assets and reserve funds as of December 31, 2017.

[The display that is found in pma-budget-charts-B1.pdf is the report of the 2018 Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation Unrestricted and Restricted Net Assets. See pp. 951–54.]

Rationale

The report of the unrestricted and restricted net assets is divided between unrestricted and restricted funds. The following display indicates those funds as well as the activity of those funds and the status of the total reserves as of closing December 31, 2017. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) rescinded the 1990 General Assembly Mission Program Budget Policy and Procedures and replaced it with the “Presbyterian Mission Agency Reserve Policy” below:

A. Presbyterian Mission Program Fund

   Definition: The funds composed of current or prior year unrestricted gifts, legacies, and bequests that equal or exceed $500,000 (five hundred thousand), and will be expended over several operating periods or years. The use of these funds will be determined as part of the normal operating budget preparation cycle and processes.

B. Unrestricted Reserve Fund

   Definition: The funds composed of all unrestricted receipts and prior year net assets intended for the support of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

1. Sources to maintain this fund shall include all unrestricted revenue available for the Presbyterian Mission Agency, including but not limited to:

   a. income including receipts from congregations, presbyteries, or individuals;

   b. unrestricted gifts, legacies, bequests;

   c. unrestricted investment income;

   d. gift annuity excess reserves;

   e. such nonrecurring income as the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall direct by general or specific policy statement; and

   f. under expenditure portion of the Presbyterian Mission Agency annual operating budget.

2. The Unrestricted Reserve Funds

   a. The unrestricted reserve fund will not be used to manage projected operating budget shortfalls;
b. The Presbyterian Mission Agency shall maintain an unrestricted reserve fund that may be accessed with the approval of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board;

c. Use of the unrestricted reserve fund shall be limited to revenue shortfalls and expense overruns in the current budget cycle, emergency purposes, and new mission opportunities;

d. The unrestricted reserve fund shall be held in a separate unrestricted net asset account;

e. Reserves will be increased by allocating unrestricted gifts and budget accumulations;

f. Mission areas that rely on unrestricted reserve funds will rely on an agency-wide emergency fund; and

g. The unrestricted fund reserve balance will be approved by the Chief Financial Officer with concurrence of the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

3. Any use of the unrestricted reserve fund for the purposes outlined in the above section must be based on a plan that takes into account income estimates and provisions for all the anticipated changes in the fund. Such plans will be approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Finance Committee and further approved annually by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

4. Ordinarily, the unrestricted reserve fund will not be used for capital expenditures, except in the event of an emergency and the capital replacement funds are fully expended or allocated for use within a three (3) year period. The Chief Financial Officer will report this emergency expenditure to the Finance Committee, and seek timely approval from the Executive Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or its Chair.

5. Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation of its Finance Committee, shall authorize all appropriations, expenditures, or transfers from these fund balances through established policies.

6. Use of Restricted Funds: Availability of restricted funds shall be considered in conjunction with budgeting of unrestricted funds with restricted funds being depleted first. Information concerning restricted funds use and balances shall be provided by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),
A Corporation on a regular basis.

C. Restricted Reserves Funds

Definition: The reserve funds are composed of restricted receipts with limited use and are subject to donor restrictions.

1. Sources to maintain this fund shall include all restricted revenue available for the Presbyterian Mission Agency, including but not limited to:

a. income including receipts from the Special Offerings;

b. restricted gifts, legacies, bequests;

c. restricted investment income; and

d. such nonrecurring restricted income as the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall direct by general or specific policy statement.

2. The Restricted Reserve Fund

a. The restricted reserve fund will not be used to manage projected operating budget shortfalls;

b. The Presbyterian Mission Agency shall maintain the restricted reserve fund that may be accessed with the approval of the Presbyterian
Mission Agency Board;

c. Use of the restricted reserve fund shall be limited to revenue shortfalls and expense overruns in the current budget cycle, emergency purposes, and new mission opportunities within the donor restrictions;

d. The restricted reserve funds shall be held in a separate restricted net asset account;

2. The Restricted Reserve Fund

a. The restricted reserve fund will not be used to manage projected operating budget shortfalls;

b. The Presbyterian Mission Agency shall maintain the restricted reserve fund that may be accessed with the approval of the Presbyterian
Mission Agency Board;

c. Use of the restricted reserve fund shall be limited to revenue shortfalls and expense overruns in the current budget cycle, emergency purposes, and new mission opportunities within the donor restrictions;

d. The restricted reserve funds shall be held in a separate restricted net asset account;

2. The Restricted Reserve Fund

a. The restricted reserve fund will not be used to manage projected operating budget shortfalls;

b. The Presbyterian Mission Agency shall maintain the restricted reserve fund that may be accessed with the approval of the Presbyterian
Mission Agency Board;

c. Use of the restricted reserve fund shall be limited to revenue shortfalls and expense overruns in the current budget cycle, emergency purposes, and new mission opportunities within the donor restrictions;

d. The restricted reserve funds shall be held in a separate restricted net asset account;

2. The Restricted Reserve Fund

a. The restricted reserve fund will not be used to manage projected operating budget shortfalls;

b. The Presbyterian Mission Agency shall maintain the restricted reserve fund that may be accessed with the approval of the Presbyterian
Mission Agency Board;

c. Use of the restricted reserve fund shall be limited to revenue shortfalls and expense overruns in the current budget cycle, emergency purposes, and new mission opportunities within the donor restrictions;

d. The restricted reserve funds shall be held in a separate restricted net asset account;

2. The Restricted Reserve Fund

a. The restricted reserve fund will not be used to manage projected operating budget shortfalls;

b. The Presbyterian Mission Agency shall maintain the restricted reserve fund that may be accessed with the approval of the Presbyterian
Mission Agency Board;

c. Use of the restricted reserve fund shall be limited to revenue shortfalls and expense overruns in the current budget cycle, emergency purposes, and new mission opportunities within the donor restrictions;

d. The restricted reserve funds shall be held in a separate restricted net asset account;

e. Reserves will be increased through the allocation of restricted gifts and budget accumulations;

f. Mission areas that rely on restricted funds will rely on the restricted reserve fund for emergencies; and

g. The restricted fund reserve balance will be approved by the Chief Financial Officer with concurrence of the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

3. Any use of the restricted reserve fund for the purposes outlined in the above section are based on a plan that takes into account income and expenditure estimates and provisions for all the anticipated changes in the fund. Such provisions will be approved by the Finance Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and further approved annually by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

4. Ordinarily, the restricted reserve fund will not be used for capital expenditures.

5. The Presbyterian Mission Agency, upon recommendation of its Finance Committee, shall authorize all appropriations, expenditures, or transfers from these fund balances through established policies.

D. Use of Excess Income over Actual Expenditure

1. Any excess unrestricted income over actual unrestricted expenditures realized at the end of a budget year shall be retained in the Unrestricted Reserve Fund.

2. Budgeted amounts unexpended at the end of a budget process may be encumbered by those participating in the Presbyterian Mission Agency budget process in order to complete projects, upon approval of the Chief Financial Officer and provided as an information item to the Finance Committee.

a. Unexpended project funds at the end of the budget year may be encumbered only when completion of a project (or the completion of an essential part of a project)

1) is authorized as a part of a total approved program; and

2) is not otherwise provided for in the succeeding year’s budget.

b. Unexpended project funds at year-end may not be encumbered when
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

1) it serves to expand a general or ongoing budget, or part of a budget; and

2) it serves to exempt the specific budget and program item from the usual review and the particular priority choices involved in building the succeeding year’s budget. (Minutes, 2016, Part I, pp. 579–84)

C. Relating to Support for Presbyterian Mission Agency Mission

1. John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) allocate the annual income realized in 2017 and projected for 2018 from the John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds in support of the budget for the general mission work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Rationale

Current practice is to recommend to each General Assembly the allocation of annual income from these two funds in light of wording in the donors’ wills that requires this annual process.

Portion of the will of Edmund P. Dwight (May 23, 1903):

I will and bequeath to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America, to be used for the establishment of the Christian Religion, that the light of the gospel may be made to join more perfectly...

Portion of the will of John C. Lord (January 2, 1873):

...to the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., for religious and charitable uses, to be called the John C. Lord Fund, the annual interest of which is to be disposed of and distributed by the said General Assembly at each annual meeting for the furtherance of the Gospel of our Blessed Saviour, at home or abroad, as the Assembly may deem best. ...

The applicable provisions of the two wills facilitate the annual income realized from these funds to be used in the Presbyterian Mission Agency General Mission Budget.

Income from these funds in 2017 were $13,437.26 and it is projected that the income from these funds in 2018 will be approximately $13,309.51.

2. Special Offerings 2017

[The assembly approved Item 10-15, Recommendation C.2. See pp. 80–81.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) incorporate into its Minutes the following summary of receipts from Special Offerings for the years 2016 and 2017.

[The charts that are found in pma-budget-charts-C2.pdf show the summary of receipts for Special Offerings for the years 2016 and 2017. See p. 955.]

Rationale

Special Offerings enable an important part of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. In 2016, income from these offerings totaled approximately 16 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 31 percent of the mission gifts from congregations. In 2017 income from these offerings totaled approximately 13 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 21 percent of the mission gifts from congregations.

Item 10-16

[The assembly approved Item 10-16. See pp. 13, 34.]

In fulfillment of Recommendations 2.a.(3) of Item 12-07 of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), and in affirmation of the strong and long relationship between Cuban and United States Presbyterians, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its World Mission ministries, requests that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Approve the new Mutual Mission agreement between the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba (IPRC) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), printed below.

2. Express the appreciation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for the approval given to this agreement by the XI Synod of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church at its February 2018, meeting.
3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its World Mission ministries and Latin America regional office, to publicize and oversee implementation of the following Mutual Mission Agreement throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

MUTUAL MISSION AGREEMENT

The Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada en Cuba and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), reaffirm the Mutual Mission Agreement between our two denominations made in 1986. As sister churches within the body of Christ, we celebrate more than a century of work together in proclamation, mission, evangelism, and reconciliation.

We thank God for:

- our unity in Jesus Christ and our common Reformed tradition;
- the bridges of reconciliation and dialogue that we have maintained through the years when our countries had no official ties; and
- the contributions given by each denomination in the joint work of proclamation, mission and our common life despite language, cultural, social, economic and political differences.

We recognize, however, that the dramatic and ongoing change in national contexts, as well as change within our churches, leads us to the urgent need for a new agreement between us.

We declare that:

- we share together in “one Lord, one faith, and one baptism”;
- we share the mission of the Triune God (the Missio Dei) in Cuba, the U.S.A., and the world;
- mission is always life-affirming, is based in transformative spirituality and is rooted in justice and love.

In the spirit of transformation, we affirm that we are called by the Spirit to be peacemakers; together we discern issues of inequity and power that foster hostility and division, and seek to create paths of reconciliation, friendship and understanding between peoples.

In the spirit of community, we affirm that:

- We are called to deepen the bonds of unity, faith, and common witness between our two churches. We are committed to continuing prayer for each other; to be open in offering hospitality for each other and humble in accepting it; through our partner congregations to the sharing of liturgies, sermons, and community services; and to accompany and work pastorally with migrants, immigrants, and their families in both the U.S.A. and in Cuba.
- Our relationship lives within the context of commitment and mutual cooperation within the ecumenical bodies to which we both belong; that we will relate to one another in a spirit of humility and mutuality seeking to share each other’s perspectives through study and dialogue.
- We will relate middle governing bodies, congregations, institutions, and agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and of the Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada on mutually agreed-upon guidelines.
- To the end of strengthening Christ’s Church, we are committed to sharing our gifts and spiritual, human, and material resources. We will work to achieve economic sustainability of the structures and institutions of our respective churches.

In the spirit of liberation, we pledge to advocate for more just governmental and social policies in both our countries; in the U.S.A., more especially on U.S. policies that negatively impact the lives of Cubans as well as the relationship between our countries.

We are committed to work in common challenges and new opportunities for mission engagement and advocacy such as:

- the environment, including issues of eco-justice and climate change;
- racial concerns;
- aging populations;
- gender diversity and discrimination;
the status of women in church and society;
poverty and food security;
• economic self-sustainability;
• emigration, immigration, internal migration, and social dislocation.

In the spirit of Pentecost, we pledge to increase the capacity of our churches to spread the Good News through:

• focusing on the centrality of Christ;
• shared studies and devotional materials;
• intercultural, intercontextual, and interfaith dialogue;
• increased opportunities for exchange of seminary professors and students between the Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada en Cuba and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and churches in other countries;
• continued sharing in the rebuilding and restoration of church buildings and the Conference Center of National Activities of the Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada en Cuba;
• shared resources and persons to participate in mission in a third country, and/or the organizations and ecumenical organizations to which we belong.

We express joy in our unity as brothers and sisters in Christ and express through this new agreement our determination to continue to strengthen our common participation in the one mission of the Triune God, the Missio Dei, throughout the world. Acknowledging the need for review in a mutually agreed upon cycle, both delegations unanimously adopt this mutual mission agreement and recommend it to our churches for approval.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral:

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) approved the report, New Hopes and Realities in Cuban-American Relations: A “Nuevo Momento,” which contains a policy section with an affirmation and recommendations, and a supporting study. The report was authorized by a referral by the 221st General Assembly (2014), which called for a response to a relative opening in relations between Cuba and the United States. That study was developed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), working with World Mission personnel, volunteer members, and support from the Cuba Partners Network, and leaders of the Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada. Forums were held in Havana, Matanzas, and Washington, D.C., involving pastors, scholars, and representatives of independent organizations and government agencies, including the Cuban Department of Religious Affairs, the U.S. Department of State, and the National Security Council. The report is available in downloadable booklet form in English and Spanish at: https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/New-Hopes-and-Realities-in-Cuban-American-Relations-2016-ACSWP.pdf and https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/ga-2016-cuba-in-spanish.pdf. These booklets contain texts of the 1986 prior agreement and a 2000 theological exploration of partnership.

Claiming the work of the Holy Spirit in the steadfastness and solidarity of the Cuban Church and its U.S. partners, and in the anticipation of greater changes for Cuba in the broader context of the Americas, the report directed that World Mission:

(3) Update our partnership agreement between the PC(U.S.A.) and IPRC in light of new hopes and realities as we assess together new opportunities for mutual mission. ... (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 907)

The updating work began at a small conference in Matanzas, Cuba, in October of 2016. Small groups from each denomination began putting together hopes, desires, and items of importance, but the task of creating a document was overwhelming for the initial gathering. Subsequently, each denomination sent a team of six or eight people to Cardenas in May of 2017. That meeting distinguished the elements of policy and direction that would be needed in the Mutual Mission Agreement from lessons and learnings from the eighty or so current Cuban-U.S. church partnerships that could go into a “Best Practices” handbook.

The “Handbook” would be a living document that could and should be changed regularly as either Cuban or North American sides saw the need, but the Mutual Mission Agreement would represent a covenant between the two churches agreed to at their highest level, the General Assembly. The Cuban Partners Network has worked with the World Mission and IPCRC members and staff on versions of the Handbook for both churches, and also contributed to the thinking in the Mutual Mission Agreement.
(This summary indebted to the Cuba Partners Newsletter, https://mailchi.mp/df87e03534fa/cuba-partners-network-newsletter-winter-2017-1130225?e=c87af82641).

The Reverend Ary Fernandez Alban, Moderator, and the Reverend Edelberto Valdes Fleites, Secretary General, of the Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada en Cuba, confirmed their church’s approval of the Mutual Mission Agreement at their February 2018 Synod meeting. In the words of their transmittal letter:

“This agreement gives continuity to the excellent relations between our Churches and paves the way for new moments of collaboration in the life and mission of both at a time when dialogue, cooperation and mutual understanding are needed. We thank God for the times we have lived and we put ourselves in His hands so that the future is also a time where we can bear witness of unity and commitment.” (Communication with the Reverend Jose Luis Casals, Director, World Mission, PC(USA),

Item 10-A

[The assembly approved Item 10-A. See p. 34.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board reports the recipients of the Sam and Helen R. Walton Awards for 2017 and 2018 and recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) recognize the recipients as outstanding new church developments:

1. The Bridge Presbyterian Church, Leland, North Carolina, Presbytery of Coastal Carolina, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic.

2. Durham Presbyterian Church, Durham, North Carolina, Presbytery of New Hope, Synod of the Mid Atlantic.

4. Tidelands Church, Stanwood, Washington, Presbytery of the Northwest Coast, Synod of Alaska Northwest.

2018

1. Faith Presbyterian of the North Georgia Mountains, Cherokee Presbytery, Synod of South Atlantic

2. Serious Ju Ju Skate Works Ministry, Glacier Presbytery, Synod of Rocky Mountains

Rationale

In late December 1991, Sam and Helen Walton made a generous gift through the Presbyterian Foundation of $6 million that included $3 million to be used for new church developments that have placed an emphasis on site acquisitions. All nominees must meet the qualifications as set forth in the application. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, acting on behalf of the General Assembly between meetings, approved the above recipients.

Item 10-B

[The assembly approved Item 10-B. See p. 34.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) recognize the following Women of Faith award recipients at the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

The Reverend Amantha Barbee,

The Reverend Karen Hernandez-Granzen,

The Reverend Liz Theoharis.

Rationale

The Women of Faith Awards were established in 1986 to honor women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) whose lives exemplify their Christian commitment through witness, service, and leadership.
Each year a theme is chosen. Nominations are received from throughout the church and honorees are selected by a committee of representatives from various groups.

Awards are presented at the Women of Faith Breakfast during the General Assembly. This breakfast is a biennial celebration of God’s activity in the lives of women and their response to God’s presence.

The theme for this year’s awards is “Clergywomen Who Challenge Racism and Injustice” and it recognize clergywomen who are “woke” and who challenge systemic racism and oppression.

The 2018 selection committee included Mary Jorgenson, moderator; Marcella “Marci” Glass, Presbyterian Mission Agency Board; Kate Duffert, Presbyterian College Women & Young Women’s Ministries; Khayla Johnson, Racial Ethnic Young Women Ministries; Catherine Warren, Presbyterian Women Churchwide Coordinating Team; and Joyce Karumangkay, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The selection committee members were instructed to consider the following criteria in reviewing nomination forms and in making their selection of the four women who receive this award:

• Selection of the Women of Faith awardees are based on the theme.
• How is she engaged in ministries of reconciliation?
• How has she demonstrated in her church or community her gifts of reconciliation?
• Three nominees will be selected.
• Strive for racial ethnic diversity.
• Strive for geographic diversity.
• Awardees will be women.
• Awardees will be Presbyterian.
• Current staff serving the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are ineligible for nomination.
• Previous award recipients are ineligible to be nominated again for the Women of Faith Award (one-time recipients; no duplications).

The election of the three honorees was approved by the Leadership Committee and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

Biographical sketches of these three women are as follows:

Amantha Barbee, Charlotte, North Carolina, Charlotte Presbytery, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic. Barbee is the pastor of Statesville Avenue Presbyterian Church. She stood between protestors and policemen, with several other ecumenical colleagues all wearing clergy collars, the night Keith Scott was killed in Charlotte. Barbee received the 2017 Charlotte City Center Partners Special Achievement Award for the work of that night. She became the chairperson of the Charlotte Clergy Coalition for Justice shortly after the city erupted in the wake of the shooting. Barbee serves on the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (GACEIR). She also served as moderator for Mission, Justice and Outreach and on the Racism Task Force of the Presbytery of Charlotte.

Karen Hernandez-Granzen, Trenton, New Jersey, New Brunswick Presbytery, Synod of the Northeast. Hernandez-Granzen was awarded the Master of Divinity degree from McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago in 1994, and she has served as the pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church since 1995. Westminster is an urban, intercultural, multiracial, and More Light congregation. Hernandez-Granzen has served as a supervisor of field education students from Princeton Theological Seminary, intentionally reaching out to white seminarians to provide multiracial and intercultural field education placements at Westminster. She is a member of the Trenton Latino Advisory Council, the Princeton Civil Rights Commission, and she served on the board of the Presbyterian Intercultural Network (PIN).

Liz Theoharis, New York, New York City Presbytery, Synod of the Northeast. Theoharis is the co-director of the Kairos Center and co-chair of the Poor Peoples Campaign: A National Call for Moral Revival. She spent the last two decades with grassroots, community-led, anti-poverty organizations working to build the movement to end poverty. In her book, Always with Us?: What Jesus Really Said about the Poor (Eerdmans, 2017), she argues that being poor is not inevitable and that a theology that suggests otherwise has stifled the growth of a transformative movement to end poverty. Her book was recommended to the church this past summer by the Co-Moderators of the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

A. Affirmative Action and Equal Employment Opportunity Report of Progress

2017 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis

Overview

By action of the 197th General Assembly (1985), the Presbyterian Mission Agency is required to report annually the equal opportunity information of all PC(USA) agencies, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods.

At the request of the Office of Human Resources, Research Services handled the collection of data for the Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis for 2017. Based on the success of web-based data collection for previous years, we followed similar procedures for 2017.

The web-based data collection instrument was developed, tested, and deployed by Research Services. A point of contact in each organization or entity was invited by email to provide data for the organization. (The original invitation is included here as Attachment A.) An initial email invitation was sent January 3, 2018. A reminder email was sent to all non-responding organizations on January 17, 2018. Responses were accepted until January 18, 2018.

Invited Organizations

The following agencies and organizations were requested to provide their workforce analysis data: Board of Pensions; Presbyterian Mission Agency; Hubbard Press; Jarvie Commonweal Service; Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation; Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, Inc.; Presbyterian Publishing Corporation; Office of the General Assembly; and all conference centers, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods associated with the PC(USA).

Response Rate

Of 225 invited organizations, data were received from 99 organizations, for a response rate of 44 percent. Attachment B shows organizations that provided their data. Of responding organizations, all (100 percent) used the web form.

Results

Attachment C shows the results for responding organizations and presents the percentages of employees by gender and racial-ethnic category.

Recommendations for the Future

Research Services recommends that the racial ethnic categories be updated to correspond to PC(USA)’s commitment to inclusivity, and by extension the commitment of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to diversity and racial justice.

Definitions for Use in Completing the Form

Racial Ethnic Categories: These are current categories defined by the federal government for EEO AA reporting. Note that each employee can be counted in only one category.

- American Indian and/or Alaska Native (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of North and South America (including Central America), and who maintain tribal affiliation or community attachment.

- Asian (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of the Far East, Southeast Asia, or the Indian subcontinent, including, for example, Cambodia, China, India, Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippine Islands, Thailand, and Vietnam.

- Black and/or African American (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the black racial groups of Africa.

- Hispanic and/or Latino: All persons of Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Central or South American, or other Spanish culture or origin, regardless of race.

- Native Hawaiian or Other Pacific Islander (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the peoples of Hawaii, Guam, Samoa, or other Pacific Islands.

- Two or More Races (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons who identify with more than one of the other racial categories.

- White (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of Europe, the Middle East, or North Africa.

Other Definitions:

- Exempt: Employees who are not entitled to overtime pay (i.e., professional staff including clergy).

- Non-exempt: Employees who are entitled to overtime pay (e.g., secretarial, clerical, and custodial staff).

- Full-time: Employees who work at least 30 hours weekly.

- Part-time: Employees who work fewer than 30 hours weekly.

BYLAWS of the
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.), A CORPORATION

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (“Corporation”), is the principal Corporation of and established by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the “General Assembly”) to facilitate the management of its corporate affairs, as provided in the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [and was]. The Corporation traces its origins to an entity named the “Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America,” originally formed on March 28, 1799 by Act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

ARTICLE I
Office and Fiscal Year

Section 1.01. Offices. The Corporation may have offices at such places within or without the United States of America as the Board of Directors may from time to time appoint or the business of the Corporation requires.

Section 1.02. Fiscal Year. The fiscal year of the Corporation shall begin on the first day of January in each year.

ARTICLE II
Board of Directors

Section 2.01. Selection of Directors. The members of the Board of Directors of the Corporation shall be selected [and may be removed] as follows:

The voting members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall, by virtue of their offices, be Directors of the Corporation. As set forth in the Articles of Incorporation of the Corporation, the number of such Directors may be increased or decreased at any time by the General Assembly or by any officer or agency thereof thereunto duly authorized, and successor or additional Directors shall be selected in the manner determined by the General Assembly.

Section 2.02. Directors of the Corporation’s Constituent Corporations. The persons from time to time serving as Directors of the Corporation shall, by virtue of their offices, constitute the [directors]Directors or [trustees]Trustees of each corporation listed in Annex A hereto (which corporations so listed are referred to collectively in these bylaws as [“]“Constituent Corporations[”]).

Section 2.03. Resignations Other Vacancies.

(a) Resignation. Any Director may resign at any time by giving written notice of such resignation to the Secretary of the Corporation, to be effective upon receipt or at a later time stated thereon.

(b) Disability. If a Director is unable to perform substantially all of his or her duties and responsibilities by reason of illness, injury or incapacity for a period exceeding six months, such Director shall tender, or shall be deemed to have tendered, his or her resignation to the Secretary of the Corporation. As soon as practicable thereafter (but in any event not later than at its next regularly scheduled meeting), the Board of Directors shall determine whether to accept such resignation.
(c) Vacancies. In case of a vacancy on the Board of Directors by death, disability or resignation, a successor to fill the unexpired term shall be nominated by the entity who nominated the former Director in the same manner as provided in Section 2.01 of these Bylaws for the selection of Directors.

Section 2.04. Meetings of Directors. Every meeting of the Board of Directors of the Corporation may be, without further notice or action, a meeting of the Board of Directors or Trustees of each of the Constituent Corporations, as to matters concerning such Constituent Corporation.

Section 2.04-2.05. Powers; Liability.

(a) The Board of Directors shall have full power to conduct, manage, and direct the business and affairs of the Corporation; and all powers of the Corporation are hereby granted to and vested in the Board of Directors.

(b) A Director of the Corporation shall not be personally liable for monetary damages as such for any action taken, or any failure to take any action, unless the Director has breached or failed to perform the duties of his or her office as may be defined under applicable law and the breach or failure to perform constitutes self-dealing, willful misconduct or recklessness. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to the responsibility or liability of a Director pursuant to any criminal statute or the liability of a Director for the payment of taxes pursuant to local, state or Federal law.

Section 2.05-2.06. Organization. The Board of Directors shall elect from among the members of the Board a Chair of the Board and a Chair-elect (who shall serve as the Vice Chair), who may each serve one two-year, non-renewable term, and a vice chair of the Board, also for one two-year, non-renewable term. The Chair-elect shall become Chair at the end of the two-year term, and a new Chair-elect shall be elected from among the eligible members of the Board. Eligibility requirements are set forth in the Manual of Operations of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. At every meeting of the Board of Directors, the Chair, or, in the absence of the Chair, the Vice Chair or a Chair chosen by a majority of the Directors present, shall preside, and the Secretary, or in the absence of the Secretary, an assistant secretary, or any person designated by majority vote of the Board or appointed by the Chair as Secretary Pro Tem or Secretary of the Board, shall act as Secretary of the meeting and shall record the minutes of the meeting.

Section 2.06-2.07. Place of Meeting. Meetings of the Board of Directors may be held at such place within or without the United States of America as the Board of Directors may from time to time appoint, or as may be designated in the notice of the meeting.

Section 2.07-2.08. Regular Meetings. Regular meetings of the Board of Directors shall be held at such time and place as shall be designated from time to time by resolution of the Board of Directors, and one such meeting each year shall be designated as a meeting for organization and the election of members of the Executive Committee. Members of the Executive Committee and officers may also be elected at any other meeting of the Directors. At every regular meeting, the Directors shall transact such business as may properly be brought before the meeting. Notice of regular meetings need not be given unless otherwise required by law or these bylaws.

Section 2.08-2.09. Special Meetings. Special meetings of the Board of Directors shall be held whenever called by the Chair of the Board of Directors or by three or more of the Directors. Notice of each such meeting shall be given to each Director by telephone or in writing at least twenty-four hours (in the case of notice in person or by telephone, facsimile transmission, email or other electronic communication) or forty-eight hours (in the case of notice by mail) to any corporation or in the case of notice by telephone of a meeting of trustees of an Ohio corporation, telegram, courier service or express delivery service) or five days (in the case of notice by mail), or (b) the minimum notice required by applicable law for any Constituent Corporation when the action to be taken by the Board of Directors is solely for the Constituent Corporation, before the time at which the meeting is to be held. Every such notice shall state the time and place of the meeting.

Section 2.09-2.10. Quorum, Manner of Acting, and Adjournment. Fifty-one percent (51%) of the Directors in office shall be present at each meeting in order to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Every Director shall be entitled to one vote; Directors may not vote by proxy. Except as otherwise specified in the articles or these bylaws or provided by statute, the acts of a majority of the Directors present at a meeting at which a quorum is present shall be the acts of the Board of Directors. In the absence of a quorum, a majority of the Directors present and voting may adjourn the meeting from time to time until a quorum is present. The Directors shall act only as a Board and the individual Directors shall have no power as such, except that any action which may be taken at a meeting of the Directors may be taken without a meeting by unanimous written consent, if a consent or consents in writing setting forth the action so taken shall be signed by all of the Directors in office and shall be filed with the Secretary of the Corporation. Unanimous written consent may be executed through e-mail by the Directors returning the written consent together with their written signature on or before the announced deadline for returning the consent.
Section [2.10. Executive and Other] 2.11. Committees of the Board.

(a) The Committees of the Board [of Directors shall, by resolution adopted by a majority of the Directors in Office, establish an Executive Committee of not less than five members, one of whom shall be the chair.]

(b) [The Executive] No Committee of this Corporation shall have and exercise all of the powers and authority of the Board of Directors in the management of the business affairs of the Corporation, except that the Executive Committee and shall not have any power or authority as to the following:

1. The adoption, amendment or repeal of these bylaws, or the adoption of any amendment of articles or plan of merger, division or consolidation or the approving of the sale, lease or exchange of all or substantially all of the assets of the Corporation or of the dissolution of the Corporation.

2. The amendment or repeal of any resolutions of the Board.

3. The filling of vacancies in the Board of Directors thereof.

4. (c) No committee of the Board of Directors [other than the Executive Committee,] shall, pursuant to resolution of the Board of Directors or otherwise, exercise any of the powers or authority vested by these bylaws[.] or other applicable law in the Board of Directors as such, but any other committee of the Board of Directors may make recommendations to the Board or Executive Committee concerning the exercise of such powers and authority.

5. A majority of the Directors in office designated to a committee, or Directors designated to replace them as provided in this section, shall be present at each meeting to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business and the acts of a majority of the Directors in office designated to a committee or their replacements shall be the acts of the committee.

6. Each committee shall keep regular minutes of its proceedings and report such proceedings periodically to the Board of Directors. Sections [2.07, 2.08, 2.09 and 2.10] shall be applicable to committees of the Board of Directors.

Section [2.11. ] 2.12. Compensation and Expenses. Except as permitted by Section [4.13] 4.15 of these bylaws, no compensation of any kind shall be paid directly or indirectly by the Corporation to, and no loan or other extension of credit shall be made for the benefit of, any Director, as such, or as an officer or employee of the Corporation. Directors may be reimbursed for expenses in a manner consistent with any applicable policies adopted by the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

ARTICLE III
Notice - Waivers - Meetings

Section 3.01. Notice. What Constitutes. Notice of regular meetings need not be given unless otherwise required by law or these bylaws. Whenever written notice is required to be given to any person under the provisions of the articles, these bylaws, or applicable law, it may be given to such person, either personally or by sending a copy thereof by first class mail, postage prepaid, or by email, to his or her address appearing on the books of the Corporation, or in the case of Directors, supplied by the Director to the Corporation for the purpose of notice. If the notice is sent by mail or by email, it shall be deemed to have been given to the person entitled thereto when deposited in the United States mail or upon transmission to such person. A notice of meeting shall specify the place, day and hour of the meeting and any other information required by law or these bylaws. When a meeting is adjourned pursuant to Section 2.09 of these bylaws for lack of a quorum, it shall not be necessary to give any notice of the adjourned meeting or of the business to be transacted at an adjourned meeting, other than by announcement at the meeting at which such adjournment is taken.

Section 3.02. Waivers of Notice. Whenever any written notice is required to be given under the provisions of the articles, these bylaws, or applicable law, a waiver thereof in writing, signed by the person or persons entitled to such notice, whether before or after the time stated therein, shall be deemed equivalent to the giving of such notice. Except as otherwise required by this section and by Section 6.06 of these bylaws, neither the business to be transacted at nor the purpose of a meeting need be specified in the waiver of notice of such meeting. Attendance of a person at any meeting shall constitute a waiver of notice of such meeting, except where a person attends a meeting for the express purpose of objecting, at the beginning of the meeting, to the transaction of any business because the meeting was not lawfully called or convened.

Section 3.03. Modification of Proposal Contained in Notice. Whenever the language of a proposed resolution is included in a written notice of a meeting, the meeting considering the resolution may without further notice adopt it with such clarifying or other amendments as do not enlarge its original purpose.

Section 3.04. Conference Telephone Meetings and Meetings by other electronic means. One or more persons may participate in a meeting of the Board or of a committee of the Board by means of conference telephone or similar communications equipment, including but not limited to electronic meetings providing video conferencing utilizing telephone or other audio methods, by means of which all persons participating in the meeting can hear each other. Participation in the meeting pursuant to this section shall constitute presence in person at such meeting. Conference and electronic meetings will follow procedures approved by Board from time to time.

ARTICLE IV Officers

Section 4.01. Number, Qualifications and Designation. The officers of the Corporation shall be [a president, an executive vice president/chief financial officer, a President, a Chief Financial Officer, one or more vice presidents, Vice Presidents, (including but not limited to executive vice presidents and senior vice presidents), a secretary, a treasurer, Vice Presidents and Senior Vice Presidents, a Secretary, a Treasurer, a controller, Controller, and such other officers as may be elected in accordance with the provisions of Section 4.02 of this Article. The President and Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency shall be the President of the Corporation. Any number of the offices may be held by the same person. Officers may, but need not be Directors or members of the Corporation, and shall be natural persons of full age. The [chair] Chair of the Board of Directors elected under Section [2.05] 2.06 shall also be an officer of the Corporation.

Section 4.02. Selection and Term of Office. The officers of the Corporation shall be selected and their terms of office shall be determined as follows:

(a) The [president] President shall be elected by the Board of Directors for a term of four years subject to confirmation by the General Assembly and shall be eligible for relection. [Other] Annually other officers of the Corporation shall be [elected annually] nominated by the Personnel/Nominating Committee upon the recommendation of the President and elected by the Board of Directors.

(b) The Board of Directors may from time to time elect such other officers as the business of the Corporation may require, including a [secretary] Secretary and one or more assistant secretaries, each of whom has such authority, and perform such duties as are provided in these bylaws, or as the Board of Directors may from time to time determine. The Board of Directors may delegate to any officer or committee of the Corporation the power to elect subordinate or other officers and to retain or appoint employees or other agents, or committees thereof, and to prescribe the authority and duties of such subordinate or other officers, committees, employees or other agents.

Section 4.03. Resignations. Any officer [or agent] may resign at any time by giving written notice to the Board of Directors, or to the [president] President or the [secretary] Secretary of the Corporation. Any such resignation shall take effect at the date of the receipt of such notice or at any later time specified therein and, unless otherwise specified therein, the acceptance of such resignation shall not be necessary to make it effective.

Section 4.04. Removal. Any elected or appointed officer, may be removed, either for or without cause, by the Board of Directors or other authority which elected or appointed such officer. The term of any offices held by an employee ends the earlier of the employee’s last day of employment or last day in the office.

Section 4.05. Vacancies. A vacancy in any elective office because of death, resignation, removal, disqualification, or any other cause, shall be filled by the Board of Directors[4] (where appropriate, [subject to confirmation by the General Assembly) or by the authority to which the power to fill such office has been delegated, pursuant to Section 4.02 of this Article, as the case may be, and if the office is one for which a term is prescribed by or pursuant to these bylaws, shall be filled for the unexpired portion of the term. The refusal of the General Assembly to confirm an election, where such confirmation is required by these bylaws, shall result in the creation of a vacancy in the office affected.

Section 4.06. General Powers. All officers of the Corporation, as between themselves and the Corporation, shall respectively have such authority and perform such duties in the management of the property and affairs of the Corporation as may be determined by resolutions or orders of the Board of Directors, or, in the absence of controlling provisions in resolutions or orders of the Board of Directors, as may be provided in these bylaws.

Section 4.07. The Chair of the Board. Generally, the Chair of the Board shall preside at all meetings of the members of the Board of Directors, and shall perform such other duties as may from time to time be requested by the Board of Directors [or the Executive Committee].

Section 4.08. The President. The President shall be the chief executive officer of the Corporation and shall have general supervision over the activities and operations of the Corporation, subject, however, to the control of the Board of Directors. The President and Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, by virtue of office, shall be the President of the Corporation. The President shall be accountable to the Board of Directors. In the event of an extended absence of the President, the President shall assign one of the officers of the Corporation to fulfill the duties of the office during the absence of the President.

Section 4.09. Chief Financial Officer. The Chief Financial Officer of the Corporation shall be responsible for corporate, financial, and accounting functions. The Chief Financial Officer shall perform the duties of the president in the absence of the President or as otherwise assigned by the Board of Directors or the president. The Chief Financial Officer shall be accountable to the Board of Directors, or by these bylaws. The Chief Financial Officer shall be accountable to the [executive vice president/chief financial officer] President.

Section 4.10. The Vice Presidents. The vice presidents shall perform the duties of the executive vice president/chief financial officer in the absence of the executive vice president/chief financial officer as assigned and such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to them or authorized by the Board of Directors[or the president,] or the [executive vice president/chief financial officer]. President. The Board of Directors of the Corporation shall cause the [vice presidents] Vice Presidents to be accountable to the [executive vice president/chief financial officer] President or to such other person as may succeed the functions of that position.

Section 4.11. The Secretary. The Secretary or an assistant secretary shall attend all meetings of the Board of Directors and shall cause to be recorded personally or by an assistant secretary Assistant Secretary or by the person designated by the Board of Directors the minutes of the meetings of the Board of Directors and of committees of the Board in a book or books to be kept for that purpose[s]. The Secretary shall ensure that notices are given and records and reports properly kept and filed by the Corporation as required by law[or assistant Secretaries] shall be the custodian of the seal of the Corporation and see that it is affixed to all documents to be executed on behalf of the Corporation under its seal. In general, the Secretary or assistant Secretary shall perform all duties incident to the office of Secretary or assistant Secretary, and such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to the Secretary or assistant Secretary or the president, or the executive vice president/chief financial officer. President. The Board of Directors of the Corporation shall cause the Secretary to be accountable to the [executive vice president/chief financial officer] President or to such other person as may succeed the functions of that position.

Section 4.12. The Treasurer. The Treasurer or an assistant treasurer shall have or provide for the custody of the funds or other property of the Corporation and shall keep a separate account of the same [as Treasurer; shall collect and receive or provide for the collection and receipt of moneys earned by or in any manner due to or received by the Corporation; shall deposit all funds in [his or her credit as treasurer] in such banks or other places of deposit (including the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation hereinafter “Fiduciary Corporation”) as the Board of Directors may from time to time designate; shall, whenever so required by the Board of Directors, render an account showing his or her transactions as treasurer, and accounting of the Corporation’s funds, and in general shall discharge such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to the Treasurer by the Board of Directors, the [president, or executive vice president/chief financial officer] President, or Chief Financial Officer. The Board of Directors of the Corporation shall cause the Treasurer to be accountable to the [executive vice president/chief financial officer] Chief Financial Officer or to such other person as may succeed to the functions of that position. The CFO may be elected Treasurer.
Section 4.13. The Controller. The Controller shall be responsible for maintaining the chart of accounts, accounting records, and accounting procedures of the Corporation; shall, whenever so required by the Board of Directors, render an accounting of the results of operations and financial condition of the Corporation (at least annually) and, in general shall discharge such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to the Controller by the Board of Directors, the President, or the Chief Financial Officer. The Board of Directors of the Corporation shall cause the Controller to be accountable to the President, or the Chief Financial Officer or to such other person as may succeed to the functions of that position.

Section 4.14. Officers' Bonds. Any officer shall give a bond for the faithful discharge of the duties of the office held by such officer in such sum, if any, and with such surety or sureties as the Board of Directors shall require, and the cost thereof to be paid by the Corporation.

Section 4.15. Compensation. The compensation of the officers, employees and other agents shall be determined from time to time by the authority to which the power to elect such officers or to retain or appoint such employees or other agents has been delegated pursuant to Section 4.02 of this Article. All compensation shall be consistent with any general compensation structure established by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. No full-time officer shall be prevented from receiving such compensation by reason of the fact that he or she is also a Director of the Corporation. The Chair of the Board of Directors as an officer shall receive no salary or other compensation. (See also Section 2.12 of these bylaws.)

Section 4.16. Personnel Policies. All employees, including officer employees, are covered by the personnel policies, as adopted by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and set forth in the Employee Handbook.

ARTICLE V
Indemnification of Directors, Officers, etc.

Section 5.01. Scope of Indemnification (a) The Corporation shall indemnify an indemnified representative against any liability incurred in connection with any proceeding in which the indemnified representative may be involved as a party or otherwise, by reason of the fact that such person is or was serving in an indemnified capacity, including without limitation any liability resulting from any actual or alleged breach or neglect of duty, error, misstatement or misleading statement, negligence, gross negligence or act giving rise to strict or products liability, except:

1. where such indemnification is expressly prohibited by applicable law;

2. where the conduct of the indemnified representative has been finally determined pursuant to Section 5.06(d) or otherwise to constitute willful misconduct or recklessness as may be defined by applicable law or any other conduct sufficient in the circumstances to bar indemnification against liabilities arising from the conduct;

3. to the extent the liability is finally determined pursuant to Section 5.06(d) or otherwise to be based upon or attributable to the indemnified representative gaining any personal pecuniary profit to which such indemnified representative was not legally entitled; or

4. to the extent such indemnification has been finally determined in a final adjudication pursuant to Section 5.06(d) to be otherwise unlawful.

(b) If an indemnified representative is entitled to indemnification in respect of a portion, but not all, of any liabilities to which such person may be subject, the Corporation shall indemnify such indemnified representative to the maximum extent for such portion of the liabilities.

(c) The termination of a proceeding by judgment, order, settlement, conviction or upon a plea of nolo contendere or its equivalent shall not, of itself, create a presumption that the indemnified representative is not entitled to indemnification.

(d) For purposes of this Article:

1. “indemnified capacity” means any and all past, present and future service by an indemnified representative in one or more capacities as a Director, officer, employee or agent of the Corporation or a Constituent Corporation, or, at the request of the Corporation, as a Director, officer, employee, agent, fiduciary or trustee of another corporation, partnership, joint venture, trust, employee benefit plan or other entity or enterprise;

2. “[ ] ‘indemnified representative’ means any and all Directors and officers of the Corporation, including any and all officers elected or committee members, employees or other agents appointed under Section 4.02(2) of these bylaws; [ ] ‘indemnified representative’ also means any and all officers, committee members, employees and other agents elected or appointed under the power delegated to the General Assembly, or to any General Assembly agency under Section 4.02(2) of these bylaws; ["""]""""indemnified representative[""] shall include any other person so designated by the Board of Directors.

(3) ["""]""""liability[""] shall mean any damage, judgment, amount paid in settlement, in settlement (provided, in the case of settlements, that the Corporation shall have given its consent to such settlement in advance of the payment thereof) fine, penalty, punitive damages, excise tax assessed with respect to an employee benefit plan, or cost or expense of any nature (including, without limitation, attorneys' fees and disbursements); and

(4) ["""]""""proceeding[""] shall mean any threatened, pending or completed action, suit, appeal or other proceeding of any nature, whether civil, criminal, administrative or investigative, whether formal or informal, and whether brought by or in the right of the Corporation, a class of its security holders, if any, or otherwise.

Section 5.02. Proceedings Initiated by Indemnified Representatives. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Article, the Corporation shall not indemnify under this Article an indemnified representative for any liability incurred in a proceeding initiated (which shall not be deemed to include counter-claims or affirmative defenses) or participated in as an intervene or amicus curiae by the person seeking indemnification unless such initiation of or participation in the proceeding is authorized, either before or after its commencement, by the affirmative vote of a majority of a quorum of the Directors of the Corporation. This section does not apply to reimbursement of expenses incurred in successfully prosecuting or defending an arbitration under Section 5.06(d) or otherwise successfully prosecuting or defending the rights of an indemnified representative granted by or pursuant to this Article.

Section 5.03. Advancing Expenses. The Corporation shall pay the expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) incurred in good faith by a Director or officer and may, by act of the Board of Directors (including the votes or consents of interested Directors), pay the expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) incurred in good faith by any other indemnified representative in advance of the final disposition of a proceeding, described in Section 5.01 upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of the indemnified representative to repay such amount if it shall ultimately be determined pursuant to Section 5.06(d) or otherwise that such person is not entitled to be indemnified by the Corporation pursuant to this Article. The financial ability of an indemnified representative to repay an advance shall not be a prerequisite to the making of such advance.

Section 5.04. Securing of Indemnification Obligations. To further effect, satisfy or secure the indemnification obligations provided herein or otherwise, the Corporation may maintain insurance, obtain a letter of credit, act as self-insurer, create a reserve, trust, escrow, cash collateral or other fund or account, enter into indemnification agreements, pledge or grant a security interest in any assets or properties of the Corporation, or use any other mechanism or arrangement whatsoever in such amounts, at such costs, and upon such other terms and conditions as the Board of Directors shall deem appropriate. Absent fraud, the determination of the Board of Directors with respect to such amounts, costs, terms and conditions shall be conclusive against all security holders, if any, officers and Directors and shall not be subject to voidability.

Section 5.05. Payment of Indemnification. An indemnified representative who is entitled to indemnification shall be entitled thereto within 30 days after a written request for such indemnification has been delivered to the [secretary].

Section 5.06. Indemnification Procedure.

(a) An indemnified representative shall use such indemnified representative's best efforts to notify promptly the [secretary].

(b) The Corporation shall be entitled, upon notice to any such indemnified representative, to assume the defense of any proceeding with counsel reasonably satisfactory to the indemnified representative, or a majority of the indemnified representatives involved in such proceeding if there be more than one. If the Corporation notifies the indemnified representative of its election to defend the proceeding, the Corporation shall have no liability for the expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) of the indemnified representative incurred in connection with the defense of such proceeding subsequent to such notice, unless (i) such expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) have been authorized by the Corporation, (ii) the Corporation shall not in fact have employed counsel reasonably satisfactory to such indemnified representative or indemnified representatives to assume the defense of such proceeding, or (iii) it shall have been determined pursuant to Section 5.06(d) that the indemnified representative was entitled to indemnification for such expenses under this Article or otherwise. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the indemnified representative may elect to retain counsel at the indemnified representative's own cost and expense to participate in the defense of such proceeding.
(c) The Corporation shall not be required to obtain the consent of the indemnified representative to the settlement of any proceeding which the Corporation has undertaken to defend if the Corporation assumes full and sole responsibility for such settlement and the settlement grants the indemnified representative an unqualified release in respect of all liabilities at issue in the proceeding. Whether or not the Corporation has elected to assume the defense of any proceeding, no indemnified representative shall have any right to enter into any full or partial settlement of the proceeding without the prior written consent of the Corporation (which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld), nor shall the Corporation be liable for any amount paid by an indemnified representative pursuant to any settlement to which the Corporation has not so consented.

(d) Any dispute related to the right to indemnification as provided under this Article shall be decided only by arbitration in the metropolitan area in which the principal executive offices of the Corporation are located at the time, in accordance with the commercial arbitration rules then in effect of the American Arbitration Association, before a panel of three arbitrators, one of whom shall be selected by the Corporation, the second of whom shall be selected by the indemnified representative and the third of whom shall be selected by the other two arbitrators. In the absence of the American Arbitration Association, or if for any reason arbitration under the arbitration rules of the American Arbitration Association cannot be initiated, and if one of the parties fails or refuses to select an arbitrator, or the arbitrators selected by the Corporation and the indemnified representative cannot agree on the selection of the third arbitrator within 30 days after such time as the corporation and the indemnified representative have each been notified of the selection of the other's arbitrator, the necessary arbitrator or arbitrators shall be selected by the presiding judge of the court of general jurisdiction in such metropolitan area. The party or parties challenging the right of an indemnified representative to the benefits of this Article shall have the burden of proof. The Corporation shall reimburse an indemnified representative for the expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) incurred in successfully prosecuting or defending such arbitration. Any award entered by the arbitrators shall be final, binding and nonappealable and judgment may be entered thereon by any party in accordance with applicable law in any court of competent jurisdiction, except that the corporation shall be entitled to interpose as a defense in any such judicial enforcement proceeding any prior final judicial determination adverse to the indemnified representative under Section 5.01(2) or(3) in a proceeding not directly involving indemnification under this Article. This arbitration provision shall be specifically enforceable.

(e) Upon a payment to any indemnified representative under this Article, the Corporation shall be subrogated to the extent of such payment to all of the rights of the indemnified representative to recover against any person for such liability, and the indemnified representative shall execute all documents and instruments required and shall take such other action as may be necessary to secure such rights, including the execution of such documents as may be necessary for the Corporation to bring suit to enforce such rights.

Section 5.07. Discharge of Duty. An indemnified representative shall be deemed to have discharged such person's duty to the Corporation if he or she has relied in good faith on information, advice or an opinion, report or statement prepared by:

(a) one or more officers or employees of the Corporation whom such indemnified representative reasonably believes to be reliable and competent with respect to the matter presented;

(b) legal counsel, public accountants or other persons as to matters that the indemnified representative reasonably believes are within the person's professional or expert competence; or

(c) a committee of the Board of Directors on which he or she does not serve as to matters within its area of designated authority, which committee he or she reasonably believes to merit confidence.

Section 5.08. Contract Rights: Amendment or Repeal. All rights to indemnification under this Article shall be deemed a contract between the Corporation and the indemnified representatives pursuant to which the Corporation and each indemnified representative intend to be legally bound. Any repeal, amendment or modification hereof shall be prospective only and shall not affect any rights or obligations then existing.

Section 5.09. Scope of Article. The indemnification of indemnified representatives, as authorized by this Article, shall not be deemed exclusive of any other rights to which those seeking indemnification or advancement of expenses may be entitled under any statute, agreement, vote of the General Assembly or disinterested Directors or otherwise, both as to action in an official capacity and as to action in any other capacity. The indemnification provided by or granted pursuant to this Article shall continue as to a person who has ceased to be an indemnified representative in respect of matters arising prior to such time, and shall inure to the benefit of the heirs, executors, administrators and personal representatives of such a person.

Section 5.10. Reliance on Provisions. Each person who shall act as an indemnified representative of the Corporation shall be deemed to be doing so in reliance upon the rights of indemnification provided by this Article.
ARTICLE VI
Miscellaneous

Section 6.01. Corporate Seal. The Corporation shall have a corporate seal in the form of a design adopted by the 197th General Assembly (1985) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), together with the words: "PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.), A CORPORATION--FOUNDED 1799 PENNSYLVANIA."

Section 6.02. Checks. All checks, notes, bills of exchange or other orders in writing shall be signed by such person or persons as the Board of Directors may from time to time designate.

Section 6.03. Contracts. Except as otherwise provided in these bylaws, the Board of Directors may authorize any officer or officers, agent or agents, to enter into any contract or to execute or deliver any instrument on behalf of the Corporation, and such authority may be general or confined to specific instances.

Section 6.04. Deposits. All funds of the Corporation shall be deposited from time to time to the credit of the Corporation in such banks, trust companies, or other depositories as the Board of Directors may approve or designate, and all such funds shall be withdrawn only upon the order of, or checks signed by, or bearing the authorized facsimile signature of such one or more officers, employees or agents as the Board of Directors shall from time to time determine. The name or accounts to which such deposits are made, and the name of the Corporation on checks drawn against such accounts may be "Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),", and may include such other words including the name of the Corporation and an appropriate designation to identify by purpose or otherwise. Funds of the Corporation may also be deposited with the Fiduciary Corporation.

Section 6.05. Annual Report of Directors: Accounting System.

(a) The Board of Directors shall direct the President and Chief Financial Officer to present at a regular meeting of the Board in every year a report, verified by such officer, showing in appropriate detail the following:

1. The assets, liabilities and fund balances, including the trust funds, of the Corporation as of the end of the fiscal year immediately preceding the date of the report.

2. The principal changes in assets, liabilities and fund balances, including trust funds, during the year immediately preceding the date of the report.

3. The revenue and receipts of the Corporation, both unrestricted and restricted to particular purposes, for the year immediately preceding the date of the report, including separate data with respect to each trust fund held by or for the Corporation.

4. The expenses or disbursements of the Corporation, for both general and restricted purposes, during the year immediately preceding the date of the report, including separate data with respect to each trust fund held by or for the Corporation.

(b) The annual report shall be filed with the minutes of the meeting of the Board and shall be transmitted to the General Assembly through the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

(c) Financial statements reported on by independent certified public accountants may be statements which have been combined with those of the Fiduciary Corporation.

Section 6.06. Amendment of Bylaws. These bylaws may be amended or repealed, or new bylaws may be adopted either (1) by the action of a majority of Directors present and voting at any regular or special meeting of the Board of Directors at which a quorum is present, if ten days' written notice of such proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws is given to each Director, or (2) by the action at any regular meeting of the Board of Directors of a majority of all of the Directors in office, where no notice of such proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws has been given. Any such amendment, repeal or new bylaws shall be consistent with the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and with the directions from time to time of the General Assembly. The substance of any proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws shall first be approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

Section 6.07. Constituent Corporations. A list of Constituent Corporations is attached hereto as Appendix A. The bylaws of the Constituent Corporations shall conform to the laws of the state in which the Constituent Corporation is chartered and shall be, in so far as legally possible consistent with these bylaws.

9. COMMISSION ON ECUMENICAL MISSION AND RELATIONS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) (Incorporated in New York)

10. THE WOMAN'S BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) (Incorporated in New York)

As instructed by the 204th General Assembly (1992), the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board presents to the General Assembly, the work of all task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies established by the Presbyterian Mission Agency, its divisions, or other assembly entities (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 144, 147, 277–78).

All ministries and the Executive Director’s Office were requested to disclose information on how many task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies were currently at work in their area. Sixty-seven such groups are currently operating. Fifty-three of the groups were reported as having ongoing responsibilities. The other fourteen groups have set completion dates with a written report expected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board or the General Assembly. Whenever it is possible, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board assigns tasks to an existing part of its structure. All persons serving on a board, committee, task force, or work group with an expected life of more than two years are selected through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process.

1. Compassion, Peace & Justice

Ongoing responsibilities: Mission Responsibility Through Investment, Presbyterian Hunger Program Advisory Committee, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee, Presbyterian Committee on the Self Development of People.

Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy—In most cases, a liaison member of ACSWP serving on the team will continue to track the posting, publishing, and other implementation of reports after the General Assembly, but the teams themselves will be dismissed with thanks for their volunteer service.

a. Advisors for Unbound: An interactive journal of Christian Social Justice, both from the church more broadly and from staff in the building. Face-to-face meetings of outside church advisors only at General Assembly and Big Tent, with staff advisors meeting periodically in Presbyterian Center.

c. Sustainable Development and Precautionary Principle: This six-person team will request an extension of their time to report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

d. Two ad hoc groups of four persons working on Global Order and Honest Patriotism.

2. Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women

Presbyterian Intercultural Network Resolution Team [Ends with the 223rd General Assembly (2018); Churchwide Conference on Race, Ethnicity, Racism, and Ethnocentricity Doctrine of Discovery Team [ends with the 223rd General Assembly (2018)].

3. Theology, Formation, and Evangelism

4. World Mission

Ongoing responsibility: Human Trafficking Roundtable—This group does not exist solely within World Mission. Rather, it is comprised of individuals from offices throughout the PMA as well as the OGA. U.S. Advisory Committee/Jinishian Memorial Program.

5. Executive Director’s Office

Ongoing responsibility: The Mid Council Advisory Board is a representative group of mid council leaders who meet with Presbyterian Mission Agency staff leaders to discuss ways that the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the mid councils can work together in partnership; Presbyterian Mission Agency and Presbyterian Foundation Working Group was formed to strengthen the working relationship between the two agencies.

Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)

6. Funds Development Ministry

None

7. Shared Services

None

D. Report to the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination from the Presbyteries of Baltimore, Charlotte, Western Reserve, New York City, and Pittsburgh in Response to Item 10-03, 222nd General Assembly (2016).

History

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) requested the following specific actions be taken (Item 10-03):

a. Request synods, presbyteries, and congregations to advocate for policies at the local and state levels that will change the structures that contribute to the demise of the black male;

b. Encourage the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), mid councils, and congregations to develop programs that address recidivism;

c. Encourage the PMA, mid councils, and congregations to develop programs that address and engage local congregational and community members that speak the language of and to African American males aged 6–25 years;
d. Encourage the PMA, mid councils, and congregations to develop programs that empower African American males to develop hirable skills so that all of the beloved community benefits;

e. Encourage the PMA, mid councils, and congregations to collaborate with established agencies/groups such as National Black Presbyterian Caucus, My Brother’s Keeper, 100 Black Men of America, Amachi, Big Brothers and Big Sisters, the Boy Scouts of America: Scoutreach (an urban emphasis program), and the Open Table;

f. Request synods, presbyteries, and congregations to provide resources for the establishment and support of programs that provide for prevention and rehabilitation in the areas of substance abuse and job placement and security;

g. Request synods, presbyteries, and congregations to celebrate particular black males who are role models and members of extended families for the contributions to the whole society. (Minutes, 2016, Part I, p. 570)

Five pilot cities were selected by the assembly for pioneering this work:

Baltimore, Maryland [site of the 224th General Assembly (2020)]
Charlotte, North Carolina
Cleveland, Ohio
New York, New York
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania (Ibid)

Update

For the past two years, each of the five presbyteries in which these cities are located (Baltimore, Charlotte, Western Reserve, New York City, and Pittsburgh) have undertaken regular conference calls to speak about initiatives each mid council has chosen to pursue within and beyond their bounds, including a national launch in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, opening donor accounts with the Presbyterian Foundation, and promotion through the Peacemaking and Global Witness Offering. We named this initiative “Freedom Rising,” in memory of the Reverend Eugene “Freedom” Blackwell of the Presbytery of Pittsburgh, who advocated for this overture at the 222nd General Assembly (2016), just weeks before dying from cancer. Other presbyteries have adopted similar initiatives on their own. Fundraising for these projects is ongoing in each of the presbyteries.

In light of other overtures from the 222nd General Assembly (2016) and those before the 223rd General Assembly (2018) that address systemic racism, we encourage the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to continue and expand its support of Freedom Rising. We urge that similar efforts be launched by other presbyteries, and that churchwide financial support continue to be channeled to the national Freedom Rising account.

“So let us not become weary in doing what is right, for we will reap at harvest time, if we do not give up” (Gal. 6:9).

In accordance with the above, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board reports the following changes to the appendices of the Manual of Operations, as approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board between the 222nd General Assembly (2016) and the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

I. Board Operations

A. Board Purpose

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is called to:

- discern where God is leading,
- oversee the development of plans to pursue that calling,
- attend to the long-term sustainability of the PC(USA)’s work,
- react to changing priorities within the context of organizational mission,
- create strategies and policies to fulfill General Assembly directives for mission
- inspire, equip and connect the broader PC(USA) for mission engagement,
- ensure that gift restrictions are honored, and
- manage assets toward mission fulfillment.

Fulfilling this purpose requires:

- Listening to diverse constituencies in the church, while not losing sight of the direction of the General Assembly.
- Commitment to the Presbyterian connectional system—where no one has sole authority, and everything is worked out through prayerful dialogue, patient discernment and submission to the will of the General Assembly;
- Relationships with members, mid councils, staff and the best thinkers in various fields;
- Awareness of the political and legal contexts affecting mission—in order to minimize short-sighted mistakes;

B. Core Values

The Board has identified the following core values as essential for faithful mission:

- Mindfulness of Justice and Peace: Holistic mission pursues justice and peace in our society, in all of its forms, for the fulfillment of human life and redemption of Creation.

- Diversity and Inclusion: Faithful and fruitful discernment and decision making necessitates broad inclusiveness of the diverse cultural and theological perspectives within the denomination. The mission with which we have been entrusted must be particularly attentive to underrepresented and minoritized populations as it seeks to “hear the voices of peoples long silenced” within the denomination. (Brief Statement, 70)

- Creativity: The willingness to move in new directions, if the Spirit so leads, brings excitement, and requires boldness to leave behind what impedes faithfulness. Creativity cultivates what enables mission to grow.

- Collaboration: Mission involves a diversity of contexts and depth of challenge that cannot be adequately addressed by one body alone. Therefore, a collaborative spirit between denominational entities and mid councils must embody ministry.

- Transparency: The fruit of transparency is integrity, which in turn yields greater trust in the Board and Agency’s efforts and allows us to better incorporate the critical wisdom of others.

- Impact: Fruitfulness in ministry and mission requires that intentions are matched by quality of impact. A word of “Yes” to God’s mission must be matched by requisite deeds.
Faithful Stewardship: Being good stewards of financial, time, and human resources requires a commitment to pursuing the least wasteful and most sustainable use of resources. This ensures that a maximum amount of finite resources is spent on furthering mission.

C. Board Meetings

1. Stated/Regular Meetings

   a. The Board will meet quarterly, including an annual mid-year orientation/planning meeting. Some meetings may be held by electronic means.

   b. Recommendations regarding the scheduling of meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be prepared by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee and brought to the Board for approval.

   c. Transition: in light of the gradual transition to a smaller Board size and budgetary limitations, the full implementation of a quarterly meeting cycle may not be realized until after the 224th General Assembly (2020). (This paragraph will automatically be deleted when the Board moves to quarterly meetings or at the conclusion of the 225th General Assembly (2022), whichever comes first.)

2. Special/Called Meetings

   A Special Meeting of the Board can be called by the Chair, Coordinating Committee, or by a written request to the Chair from at least three voting members of the Board.

   Written notice of the meeting shall be provided, specifying the subject matter to be considered, to all members of the Board at least forty-eight hours in advance of the meeting date.

   All members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be notified of the resulting decisions as soon as possible after the meeting.

3. Quorum—The quorum for all Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Meetings and its committees shall be 51% of voting members.

4. Development of the Agendas

   a. Board Meetings

      The Board Chair, in conjunction with the Executive Director, and the Coordinating Committee, shall develop the agenda for meetings of the Board. Groups who wish to be placed on the agenda may communicate their requests to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Chair (or designee). Any member of the Board may propose an item for consideration.

      Each agenda shall include opportunity for prayer and/or worship.

   b. Community Conversations

      At each Board meeting, time will be set aside for community conversations, outside of a parliamentary framework, for theological reflection, discernment, and mutual sharing regarding the current context for the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Discussions will not ordinarily be led by the Board Chair.

   c. Committee Meetings

      The Committee Chair, in conjunction with the lead resource staff shall develop the agenda for meetings of Board committees. Groups who wish to be placed on the agenda may communicate their requests to the Board Committee Chair (or designee). Any member of the Committee may propose an item for consideration prior to Committee action to adopt the agenda. Each agenda shall begin and end with prayer.

5. Closed Meetings and Privileged Communications

   a. Closed Meetings

      Closed Board or Committee meetings shall be held in accordance with the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy

      1) During a meeting, any Board member may request a closed Board session, and any Committee member may request a closed Committee session.
2) The Board or Committee will determine, by majority vote, if its members wish to deliberate in a closed meeting.

3) Ordinarily, when the use of a closed meeting can be anticipated, the Chair will provide advance notice to the Board or Committee that a closed meeting is recommended and the reason for closing.

4) In closed Board meetings, only voting members, at-large members of the Committees, and other persons explicitly invited are to be present.

5) In closed Committee meetings, invited persons shall include any voting Board member who wishes to attend, unless individual Board members are the topic of conversation.

6) Minutes of a closed session will only include actions taken, in keeping with the Open Meeting Policy. Actions will be made public as soon as possible.

7) All present in a closed meeting are bound to limit discussion of the item to others who were in the closed meeting.

8) Any information given in a closed session is available to any other voting Board member in a closed session, unless the topic of conversation is individual Board members or prospective employees.

9) Recognizing the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy allows closed sessions to consider property negotiations, personnel, and litigation, the Boards recognize that information given to committees in closed sessions that is not privileged, shall be available to all voting Board members, and shall be reported to the Boards (or a majority of a quorum of either Board) in closed session unless it involves the Board members or their actions.

10) All closed committee meetings shall be open to all voting Board members whether they serve on the committee or not, unless the topic is

   a) discussions about nominations of Board members;

   b) discussions involving the application of the Ethics Policy to a Board member; and

   c) discussions about employment candidacies for individuals who are selected to positions by the Board.

11) If the meeting is closed and privileged, only voting board members and invited legal counsel may remain, all others are to be excused from the closed/privileged session.

b. Privileged Communications

Recognizing that privileged communications is a legal principle that allows the exchange of confidential information and counsel between attorneys and their clients and that the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Board of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) A Corporation (“the Boards”) must utilize this tool to effectively manage the mission and ministries of the Agency:

1) The “client” in such relationships is defined as the Boards acting by and through voting Board members as a whole or a majority of a quorum of either Board.

2) Consequently, “client” cannot be defined as an individual member, officer, committee, subgroup of the Boards, or staff; provided, however, that authorized representatives of the Boards (such as the Coordinating Committee or Board Chair) may act as and on behalf of the Boards when permitted by other governing documents.

3) In no event, however, shall any such members, officers, committees, subgroups of the Boards, or staff, be considered a separate “client” of any attorney or independent of the attorney-client relationship between any such attorney and the Boards.

4) All privileged conversations and communications in committees shall be reported to the Boards in privileged closed sessions with the attorney present. The only exceptions shall be

   a) discussions about nominations of Board members;

   b) discussions involving the application of the Ethics Policy to a Board member; and

   c) discussions about employment candidates for individuals who are selected to positions by the Boards.
6. Recording Secretary

Ordinarily, the Executive Director will designate a Recording Secretary for Board meetings.

7. Elected Member Job Expectations and Requirements

Committing to the Board covenant, board members are expected to be faithful and accountable in the following ways:

a. Requirements:

1) Fulfill the Board Member’s duties of loyalty and care; provide fiduciary, generative and strategic leadership necessary for guiding and directing the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

2) Every elected Presbyterian Mission Agency Board member, except the Board Chair and Chair-elect, will serve on one program and one administrative committees.

3) Additionally, Board members may be called upon to serve the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the church in a variety of ways, whether it be through internal committees, ministerial teams and task forces, national committees and task forces, or appointed liaison relationships.

4) Board members give high priority to attendance, active participation and prayerful discernment at regular meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board whether held in person or remotely.

   a) One absence from a regular meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or its related committees, without prior notification to the Office of the Executive Director shall be a basis for a review of the member’s standing with the Board.

   b) Upon two consecutive absences, or three absences in a three-year period, for any reason, the Board chair may recommend to the Stated Clerk that the position be declared vacant.

b. Expectations:

1) Actively participate in a Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) worshiping community, committing to spiritual disciplines and a pattern of discipleship that will inform their deliberation and discernment as board members.

2) Develop their knowledge of and demonstrate their commitment to the mission, goals, and policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Presbyterian Mission Agency and its Board.

3) Openness to new vision and direction emerging within the life of the church.

4) Informed and honest participation, including appropriate inquiry, in all meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and its related committees.

5) Faithful discipleship regarding stewardship, confidentiality, and leadership roles, acting in the best interests of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

6) Positive and active interpretation of the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to and with external audiences (congregations, individuals, Presbyteries, Synods); this can be done in a variety of ways building on the gifts and talents of each Board member.

7) Financial support for the Presbyterian Mission Agency – all gifts, large or small help ensure that the work of the Agency can continue and links the Board member to that work.

8) Provide constructive feedback in response to surveys and evaluations relating to the Board meetings and activities.

c. Resignation:

A member of a General Assembly entity who finds it necessary to resign shall send his or her resignation to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, who shall notify the entity and the nominating committee or other body that originated the person’s nomination or election. When any member of an entity of the General Assembly shall resign or become unable to serve because of chronic or permanent physical or mental illness or disability, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall declare the position vacant. (Organization for Mission, IV. B.2.o.) Additionally, any Board member resigning shall send a copy of the resignation to the Office of the Executive Director.
D. Officers of the Board

The Board will be led by a Chair and a Chair-elect (who serves as Vice-Chair). The Chair and Chair-elect serve a two-year term, then the Chair-elect becomes Chair and a new Chair-elect is selected. Members shall have served at least eighteen months on the Board prior to being nominated as Chair-elect. (This means that individuals selected as Chair-elect will be recommended to the GA Nominating Committee for election to a second four-year term.)

1. Chair
   a. Duties
      1) Presides at meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.
      2) Is a member of, and chairs, the Coordinating Committee.
      3) Guides the Board in fulfilling its responsibilities identified in the Organization for Mission.
      4) Appoints one Board member to serve with the Chair on the Presbyterian Mission Agency/Foundation Work Group.
      5) Requests and appoints a parliamentarian to advise the Chair, and upon request of the Chair speak to the body, during Board meetings.
      6) Provides guidance and support to the Executive Director, with the assistance of the Chair-elect, on behalf of the Coordinating Committee. The Executive Director is supervised by and reports to the Coordinating Committee and the Board itself.
      7) Represents the Board (but not the Agency) to General Assembly agencies, committees, task forces, and the public.
      8) Participates in annual meeting of the General Assembly agency leaders.
      9) The Board Chair serves as an ex-officio member of all Board Committees with voice and no vote (with the exception of the Coordinating Committee where the Chair does have a vote.).
     10) Reviews and approves, in agreement with the Chair-elect, requests to celebrate Holy Communion between regular meetings of the Coordinating Committee (as directed by the General Assembly) and report any approvals at the next meeting of the Coordinating Committee.
     11) Appoints committees of counsel for Permanent Judicial Commission cases as described in Book of Order D-6.0302. These committees shall have a maximum of three (3) members, but may have fewer as determined by the Board Chair. The Legal Office shall serve as the primary staff support to Board committees of counsel
   b. Term
      1) The Board Chair term shall be for two years without renewal.
      2) The Chair will serve in ex-officio positions as mandated by the Manual of Operations but may not be elected to an additional office by the Board during the term of office.
   3) Vacancy
      a) First year vacancy—If the position of Chair becomes vacant during the first year of the Chair’s term (or if the rising Chair is unable to take office at the conclusion of a General Assembly), then the Chair-elect becomes Chair and serves the full term of the original Chair and is ineligible for re-election. A special election for a new Chair-elect will be held at the next possible regular meeting, allowing adequate time for the nomination process.
      b) Second year vacancy—If the position of Chair becomes vacant during the second year of the Chair’s term, then the Chair-elect becomes chair and serves the remainder of the original Chair’s term as well as their own two-year term as chair. A new chair-elect is elected at the regular schedule (the first meeting of a General Assembly year) and begins service immediately upon election.

2. Chair-elect
   a. Duties
      1) Serves as Vice-Chair,
2) Assumes the responsibilities of the Chair when requested by the chair or when the Chair becomes vacant (but in no event, shall a chair serve more than three years. See Chapter 2, D1b3 above).

3) Becomes the next Chair, at the end of the current Chair’s term.

4) Shall rotate among all committees, rather than being assigned to a particular committee.

5) Serves as a member of the Coordinating Committee. Upon election as Chair-elect and prior to assuming office, serves as a corresponding member (voice but no vote) of the Coordinating Committee.

6) Serves as a corresponding member of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

7) Assists the Chair in providing supervision and support to the Executive Director, on behalf of the Coordinating Committee. The Executive Director reports to the Coordinating Committee and the Board itself.

8) Obtain some form of parliamentary training, such as is offered at the Moderators’ Conference, during their two years as Chair-elect.

9) Leads the Executive Director performance review process (described below).

10) Reviews and approves, in agreement with the Chair, requests to celebrate Holy Communion between regular meetings of the Coordinating Committee, as directed by General Assembly, and reports any approvals at the next meeting of the Coordinating Committee.

b. Term Error! Bookmark not defined.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall elect its Chair-elect from among its voting members at the first Board meeting of the calendar year in which there is a General Assembly. The Chair-elect will serve two years as Vice-Chair, and then become Chair at the conclusion of the following General Assembly.

E. Election Procedures

1. Chair-elect

a. Only Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members who have served at least eighteen months on the Board before taking office are eligible for election as Chair-elect.

b. Nominating Process: At the start of each nominating process, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Personnel and Nominating Committee will:

1) At the start
   a) compile a list of gifts, abilities, and skills that they believe will be needed by the Board leadership during the ensuing biennial period
   b) draft two or three questions to be answered by potential candidates for Board leadership. The questions will address the anticipated key challenges facing the Board during the ensuing biennial period.

2) Staff to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Personnel and Nominating Committee will identify all Board members eligible for election as Chair-elect. The list of gifts, abilities, and skills, as well as the questions (referenced above in C1b1), will be sent to eligible members with a letter that:
   a) Informs the Board member of his or her eligibility for election as Chair-elect.
   b) Asks the member to consider whether God might be calling them to serve as Chair-elect.
   c) If the response is affirmative, request that he or she answer the leadership questions, and return them to Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Personnel and Nominating Committee staff.

3) Staff will then send the following materials to the Personnel and Nominating Committee:
   a) Affirmative responses from members considering a call, with their answers to the questions
   b) The Board’s listing of member skills, gifts and abilities
c) A record of the Board service for each member to be considered, including attendance at called meetings.

d) The members’ full biographical form.

4) The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Personnel and Nominating will review all the submitted forms and will also go through a discernment process as to whether or not eligible Board members who have not submitted forms have leadership gifts that justify an invitation to consider a call to candidacy for Chair-elect. If so, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Personnel and Nominating Committee will extend a specific invitation to submit answers to the leadership questions.

5) The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Personnel and Nominating Committee will evaluate the final list of Chair-elect candidates who have submitted responses to identify a candidate whom it wishes to nominate. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Personnel and Nominating Chair will notify all interested candidates of the Committee’s nominee.

6) The names of the nominee, along with her or his biographical form and their responses to the questions, will be communicated to all Board members a minimum of three weeks prior to the first meeting of the calendar year.

7) Ordinarily, the election will be conducted during the first meeting of the calendar year in which there is a General Assembly. Nominations from the floor will be accepted. The election will be by written ballot.

8) The two-year term of office will begin with the close of the upcoming General Assembly meeting and end with the close of the next General Assembly meeting.

9) In the event of vacancy during the term of the Chair, the Chair-elect assumes the Chair (but in no event shall the chair serve more than three years).

2. Committee Chairs

   a. Committee Chairs shall be elected for two-year terms, and they are not eligible for re-election.

   b. The Chairs shall begin their service at the end of the General Assembly.

   c. Board voting members completing at least eighteen consecutive months on a committee are eligible for election as committee Chair.

   d. The Personnel and Nominating Committee shall nominate committee Chairs, with a view toward diversity on the PMAB Coordinating Committee. These nominees shall be presented in committees at the first Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting in the calendar year. Nominees may also come from the floor.

   e. Ordinarily, committee Chairs shall make appointments and assignments of committee members to subcommittees or committee task forces, as necessary, giving consideration to experience, interest, and representation.

   f. Committees chairs are responsible for ensuring that the plenary session has a closed session to discuss any matters discussed in closed sessions of the committee.

F. Board Committees, Task Forces and Teams

   1. Authority

      The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may create any committees, task forces, and teams as may be necessary to carry out its work. Committees, Task Forces and Teams, as well as their Chairs, derive their authority from, and are accountable to, the full Board. Consequently, no committee, task force or team can keep information confidential from the full Board.

   2. Collaboration

      The committees, task forces and teams of the board are expected to collaborate with other committees, task forces and teams on matters of common concern.

   3. Special/Called Meetings

      A Special Meeting of a Committee, Task Force or Team may be called by its Chair, or by written request to the Chair from at least three voting members of the Committee, Task Force or Team. Notice must be given at least forty-eight hours in advance for any called meeting.
4. Ministerial Teams and Task Forces
   a. Ministerial Teams
      1) Ministerial Teams are short-term, specifically-focused work groups. They address immediate matters of consequence to the organization and have limited duration. The source of the topics they address may come from community conversations, Board members, staff or the ongoing work of the agency. A limited number of Ministerial Teams shall be commissioned upon recommendation of Coordinating Committee and approved by the Board.
      2) These teams are commissioned for a limited duration with regular required updates to the Board. A decision would then be made to discontinue or extend their work. They may be comprised of voting members, at-large members, non-voting members and staff. All members (regardless of Board status) have voice and vote in the team. Process and procedures for operation are more flexible (i.e., not necessarily parliamentary procedure). Decisions and/or recommendations must come to a plenary session of voting Board members for approval and authorization.
   b. Task Forces
      1) If need is determined for a temporary special committee, task force or work group that will involve Presbyterian Mission Agency Board membership and/or non-Presbyterian Mission Agency Board membership, a proposal shall be submitted to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, through the Coordinating Committee, for approval. All proposals for temporary special committees, task forces and work groups shall include the following information:
      2) Temporary special committee, task force or work group name.
      3) Statement of purpose and tasks to be accomplished.
      4) Explanation as to why these tasks cannot be accomplished by the current Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Committees.
      5) Expertise, skills and experience needed by the members.
      6) Duration of the committee, task force or work group shall not exceed two years.
      7) Size of the committee, task force or team. Ordinarily not to exceed seven members.
      8) Annual budget with the source of funding.
      9) Proposed names of the committee, task force or work force members with sensitivity to diversity.

5. Program Committees
   Program Committees are standing committees that address the programmatic and fiduciary responsibilities of the Board. They focus on the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to inspire, equip and connect. Committee assignments in the lists below are not meant to limit access to other committees as determined to be appropriate. Committees operate in accordance with parliamentary procedures. Membership is composed of Voting Members only. (From 2018 until 2022, at-large members of Finance will continue to serve on Committee for Resource Allocation and Stewardship.)
   a. Committee to Nurture the Body
      The Committee to Nurture the Body will focus on the impact and strategic alignment of the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency that inspires, equips and connects congregations and other worshiping communities as centers of discipleship. This work includes:
      • developing leaders to and from those communities,
      • aiding mid-councils and congregations in their mission and ministry, and
      • researching issues, providing input to staff, and developing well-considered and related proposals for Board action from the work of the agency and related entities.
      1) Oversight
         The Committee is responsible for the Board’s oversight in these areas including:
a) Working with the Executive Director and staff to develop theological expressions for the work of the agency which can be communicated to the broader church.

6. Administrative Committees

Administrative Committees are standing committees that address the fiduciary and corporate responsibilities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation. They are responsible for the stewardship of tangible assets including financial, personnel, legal, property. Administrative Committees operate in accordance with parliamentary procedures. Membership is composed of Voting Members only. (From 2018 until 2022, at-large members will continue to serve on the Audit Committee.)

Specific committee responsibilities

a. Personnel and Nominating Committee

The Personnel and Nominating Committee reviews, provides advice and recommends for action to the Board on employment-related policies, procedures and initiatives that affect the staff, and is responsible for the nominations of Board members.

1) It is responsible for the Board’s oversight in these areas including:
a) Presbyterian Mission Agency personnel policies and procedures
b) Compensation guidelines within which salaries are administered.
c) Equal employment and affirmative action guidelines.
d) Working with the General Assembly Nominating Committee to recruit new Board members.
e) Securing nominations to those committees and Agencies that require Presbyterian Mission Agency participation and/or approval.
f) Send “Guidelines for Liaisons to Other Entities” to all individuals nominated to serve on other entities.
g) Recommend the assignment of new members to Program and Administrative Committees for Board approval, ensuring diverse representation on each committee.
h) Nominating Chairs for the Program and Administrative Committees for election by the committees, ensuring that the nominations as a whole reflect a diverse slate, since these individuals will comprise the Coordinating Committee.
i) Nominating Chair-elect of the Board.
j) Any other responsibilities assigned under the Employee Handbook, and any other employment-related assignment from the Coordinating Committee or the Board.

2) Functions within the Agency reporting through this committee include:
a) Human Resources
b) Nominations
c) Mission Personnel

3) Its broader relationships will include
a) General Assembly Nominating Committee
b) General Assembly Committee on Representation

b. Audit Committee

The Audit Committee is responsible for insuring the financial and ethical integrity of the Presbyterian Church (USA) A Corporation. The Audit Committee is responsible for pre-approving all auditing services and is directly responsible for the appointment, compensation, retention, dismissal and oversight of the work of any external auditing firm engaged. The Committee will resolve any disagreements between management and the auditor regarding financial reporting. The Audit Committee has the authority to conduct any investigation appropriate to fulfilling its responsibilities, and in this regard, it has direct access to the external auditors as well as anyone in the organization.

1) Oversight

It is responsible for the Board’s oversight in these areas including:

a) Monitor the integrity of the financial reporting process and system of internal control regarding finance, accounting, legal compliance and ethics.
b) Monitor the independence and performance of the Corporation’s external auditors.
c) Provide an avenue of communication among the external auditor, internal auditing unit, management and the Board.

2) Functions

Functions within the Agency reporting through this committee include:

a) Audit
b) Internal audit
c) Legal compliance

d) Risk management/Insurance

3) Broader Relationships

Its broader relationship will include:

a) Independent audit firm

b) Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA)

c. Property/Legal Committee

The Property/Legal Committee focuses on the proper management of the legal and property matters of the agency and ensures appropriate consideration on matters of risk by the agency and its employees, including:

- Assertion of attorney-client privilege, work-product privilege, self-critical analysis privilege, ecclesiastical privileges, and any other applicable privileges;
- Management, control, and decision-making with respect to pending or threatened litigation or other legal claims or proceedings;
- Management, control, and direction of former, current, or future outside counsel;

1) Oversight

It is responsible for the Board’s oversight in these areas including:

a) Review and make recommendations to the Board for changes to the Charter and By-Laws of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation.

b) Review and make recommendations for corporate matters including officers, housing allowances, etc.

c) Review with legal staff and the Executive Director all legal and property matters to ensure their proper management, and work to educate the Board on these matters.

d) Review with staff the appropriate enterprise risk management policies and concerns necessary for ensuring that the ministry and the mission of the agency are performed without undue hindrance or delay.

e) Hiring outside legal counsel, when required by the board

2) Functions

Functions within the Agency reporting through this committee include:

a) Legal

b) Enterprise risk management

c) Property

3) Broader Relationships

Its broader relationships will include:

a) Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA)

4) Designations

a) The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Property/Legal Committee expressly elect to be governed exclusively by the law of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and expressly reject to be governed by the law of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with respect to the matters addressed in this Manual.

b) If for any reason, it is determined by any court of competent jurisdiction that Legal/Property Committee, or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is unable to assert any privilege, Stoll Keenon Ogden PLLC (“SKO”) is authorized and directed to do so under Kentucky Rule of Evidence 503 and Federal Rules of Evidence 501, 502.
7. Coordinating Committee

The Coordinating Committee is composed of the Board Chair, Chair-elect, and the chairs of each of the program and administrative committees. It is responsible for coordinating the work of the Board, ensuring the effectiveness of the committees and teams, and supervising the Executive Director or an interim when needed. As it works, it will seek creative new ways to approach the Board’s tasks. Its areas of responsibility include:

a. Member Engagement
   1) Ensuring timely communications with the Board.
   2) Ensuring Board members are engaged and meeting expectations.

b. Meeting Planning
   1) Recommending schedule of Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings for Board approval
   2) Conducting the annual mid-year orientation/planning meeting that will include:
      a) Training on Roberts’ Rules of Order
      b) Chair orientation
      c) New member orientation
      d) Preparation for the biennial budget process, with select mid council representatives
      e) Calendar for the upcoming year
   3) Ensuring regular cultural humility (power and privilege) training for board members.
   4) Approving topics for Community Conversations.
   5) Recommending meeting agendas for Board approval
   6) Providing an opportunity, annually, for reports from Liaisons to other committees and agencies as provided in II.I, Guidelines for Liaisons to Other Entities.

c. Board Governance
   1) Evaluating the effectiveness of the Board, based on annual criteria approved in advance by the Board upon recommendation by the Coordinating Committee.
   2) Monitoring performance of both Program and Administrative Committees.
   3) Bringing to the Board recommendations for Board realignment and/or changes based on results, including a biennial review of the Board’s governing documents:
      a) Bylaws
      b) Organization for Mission
      c) Manual of Operations
         i  Reviewing, in even-numbered years, the assignment of agency functions to board committees.
         ii Reviewing, in odd-numbered years, the assignment of broader relationships to board committees.
   4) Ensuring integration and collaboration among Committees (Program and Administrative) on matters of common concern.
   5) Proposing topics and members to Ministerial Teams and Task Forces, ensuring diverse representation on each team or task force.

d. Supervision of Executive Director
   1) Supervises and evaluates the Executive Director of the Agency including the development of recommendations to the Board regarding re-election, corrective discipline and termination.
2) Oversees the employment of any interim Executive Director, including the responsibility for hiring, supervision, evaluation and termination.

e. General Assembly Responsibilities

1) Planning strategies and initiatives for Board engagement at the General Assembly, in partnership with the Executive Director.

2) Attending General Assembly to represent the Presbyterian Mission Agency with key constituencies, to monitor Assembly actions, and to relay General Assembly concerns to the Board.

3) Interfacing, with the help of the Personnel and Nominating Committee, with the GA Nominating Committee in the recruitment of Board members.

G. Budget Development

1. Mission Budget Cycle

The Mission Budget will be developed in budget cycles. Each budget cycle will consist of two consecutive calendar years, where the first year is the year following the General Assembly meeting and the second year is the year of the next General Assembly. A separate working budget will be developed for each year within the cycle.

2. Basic Budget Design

The basic working budget is designed through a dual track process.

a. Identification of priorities

1) After the General Assembly, staff will prepare an analysis and list of the top ten priorities from previous General Assemblies.

2) The list of priorities will be presented to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board at its midyear retreat for their consideration and refinement. During this refinement process, the Board will consult with synod executives (where no synod executive exists, the stated clerk of the synod) and the presbytery leader from the two largest and two smallest presbyteries (with no more than one representative per synod).

3) The consultation and refinement process will result in a list of no more than five priorities.

b. Identification of funding streams

1) After the General Assembly, staff will prepare an analysis of the funding streams available to advance General Assembly mission.

2) The analysis will include all available restricted and unrestricted revenue sources.

   a) First, restricted funds are applied to the appropriate budget items.

   b) Then, unrestricted funds are applied toward fulfilment of all budget items.

   c) This use of unrestricted funds provides for equalization within the budget. This process supports orderly planning and budgeting decisions while honoring appropriate restrictions and designations.

3) At the September meeting, the Board will review the funding analysis against the five priorities and direct staff to prepare a revised working budget and staffing rationale reflecting the identified priorities, including any necessary funds development efforts.

c. Mission Work Plan

1) The five identified priorities, the revised working budget and staffing rationale and the funds development plan, with a theological framework, collectively constitute the Mission Work Plan.

2) The Mission Work Plan prepared by staff will be submitted to a task force of the Board for review to ensure alignment with the identified priorities.

3) At the February stated meeting, the Board will consider the Mission Work Plan for adoption.
4) Between February and April of a General Assembly year, this Mission Work Plan serves as the foundation for the development of the working budget proposed for General Assembly approval, subject to changes in anticipated revenue streams and emerging needs.

3. The General Assembly
   a. At the General Assembly, the appropriate assembly committee will receive the Mission Work Plan for approval and recommendation to the full assembly.
   b. The appropriate assembly committee of the General Assembly will recommend a balanced working budget for each year in the budget cycle, incorporating work from the proposed working budget and overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, and other actions of the General Assembly, for approval as the outline of work for the budget cycle. The General Assembly shall approve the working budgets and may add or subtract elements to them. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board will then make appropriate adjustments.

4. Budget Monitoring
   a. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board will monitor the accomplishment of the Mission Work Plan and the appropriate expenditure of funds throughout the budget cycle.
   b. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board will report to each biennial General Assembly on the results of the work undertaken during the previous two budget years including full disclosure of the financial results of each year and other information related to the financial condition of the church. These two budget years will not be within the same budget cycle.

5. Roles and Responsibilities in Developing Budgets
   a. The General Assembly does the following:
      1) Determines churchwide mission priorities upon which a working budget development will be based.
      2) Has the authority to institute and terminate programmatic emphases and activity.
      3) Approves both the Mission Work Plan and the working Per Capita Budget.
   b. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board does the following:
      1) Implements General Assembly decisions regarding
         a) Mission Work Plan goals and objectives and
         b) Programmatic activity.
      2) Recommends a Mission Work Plan for each budget year to the General Assembly, after appropriate consultation.
      3) Presents the proposed working budget to the General Assembly.
      4) Approves detailed working budgets based upon General Assembly action and subsequent changes in funding throughout the budget cycles.
      5) Oversees programmatic activity funded through the General Assembly Mission working Budget and Program and Presbyterian Mission Agency Board related work from the proposed Per Capita Budget.
   c. The Chief Financial Officer is responsible for the following:
      1) Manages the process for budget development.
      2) Prepares budget presentations for both the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the General Assembly.
   d. The President/Executive Director is responsible for the following:
      1) Prepare descriptions of programmatic activities in appropriate form for budget consideration, reflecting the adopted Mission Work Plan goals.
      2) Develop detailed budgets based on budget allocations made by the General Assembly and as instructed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.
6. Per Capita Budget

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) jointly have responsibility for developing a per capita budget and apportionment for recommendation to the General Assembly. The per capita budget will be finalized for recommendation to the General Assembly at least 120 days prior to General Assembly.

H. Ethics Policy for Board Members

Ethics Policy

_for Elected\(^1\) and Appointed Members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)_

1. Introduction

This Ethics Policy for Elected and Appointed Members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (“PMA BOARD”) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (“COGA”) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“Ethics Policy”) addresses business ethics and does not include the other ethical values and policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“PCUSA”). The Ethics Policy applies to all elected and appointed members of the PMA BOARD and COGA and members of their committees, task forces and workgroups in matters relating to the performance of their duties and responsibilities for the PMA BOARD/COGA. Hereinafter the term “elected member” will be used to collectively refer to those individuals listed in Footnote 6 below. The term “PMA BOARD/COGA” collectively refers to those two ecclesial bodies, their elected members, their respective staff members, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, and all subparts thereof.

All funds and property received and administered by the PMA BOARD/COGA are entrusted to the organization by God through the faithful financial support of PCUSA members and friends. The highest degree of stewardship and fiduciary responsibility is expected of all elected members, including the receiving, reporting, and use of funds, property, and time. Elected members are responsible for complying with laws, regulations\(^3\), and PMA BOARD/COGA and PCUSA policies and procedures.

As an elected member, what does this Ethics Policy require of me?

The required standards of this Ethics Policy are set out in 1-6 immediately below. The forms and processes are set out in the five attachments.

2. Standards of Ethical Conduct

a. Duty of Loyalty and Care. The duty of loyalty and care as well as the obligation of good stewardship requires all elected members to act first in the best interests of the PMA BOARD/COGA rather than in the elected member’s own interests or the interests of another entity or person. All elected members shall exercise reasonable efforts to inform themselves of the mission and ministry of the PMA BOARD/COGA. All elected members shall act as a reasonable elected member would act under the same or similar circumstances. These responsibilities are set forth below.

b. Conflicts of Interest. All elected members shall avoid conflicts of interest, potential conflicts of interest, and situations that give even the appearance of a conflict of interest.\(^4\)

   1) Definition. “Conflict of interest” means any situation in which the elected member may be influenced or appear to be influenced in decision-making or business dealings by any motive or desire for personal advantage other than the success and well-being of the PMA BOARD/COGA. Personal advantage means a

\(^1\) The term “elected members” collectively means elected and appointed members and members of their committees, task forces and workgroups.

\(^2\) For other policies, see the Standards of Ethical Conduct approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

\(^3\) Federal and state constitutional religious free exercise provisions, as well as laws and ordinances, exempt religious organizations from some laws. An elected member should consult with the General Counsel if such questions arise.

\(^4\) Personal investments with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., or employee benefits provided by the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are not considered a conflict of interest.
financial interest or some other personal interest, whether present or potential, whether direct or indirect. This standard applies to both actual and contemplated transactions. When in doubt, the elected member is to assume there might be a conflict and should raise the question pursuant to this Ethics Policy.

2) Employment Ineligibility. No PMA BOARD elected member shall be eligible to become an employee of PMA or otherwise render compensable services to the PMA for the duration of their term. For purposes of this paragraph, resignation does not result in the premature end of term. For example, an elected person who resigns with one year left in his/her term continues to be prohibited from becoming an employee until the expiration of that remaining year. No COGA elected member shall be eligible to become an employee of OGA or otherwise render compensable services to OGA for the duration of their term. This prohibition does not apply to a member serving as an ex officio member of the PMA BOARD or COGA. For purposes of this paragraph, resignation does not result in the premature end of term. Exceptions, however, may be made under the following two circumstances if the PMA BOARD Executive Committee or COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) votes by 2/3 to allow the exception:

a) To facilitate development of specified projects through limited contracts of less than 18 months in duration. The elected member may be compensated under the contract.

b) To fill an officer or employee position on an interim or acting basis for two years or less. The elected member may be compensated for such service. The elected member must resign his/her elected position.

3) Disclosure Deadlines. All present and potential conflicts of interest issues must be disclosed in writing annually (See Attachment 1) and thereafter as they arise. If the conflict is known in advance of any meeting, business transaction, contract, or other activity at which issues may be discussed or on which the issues may have a bearing on the elected member’s approach, whether directly or indirectly, it shall be disclosed ahead of time and the elected member shall abstain from any participation in the discussion or decision. If the conflict is not known in advance, it shall be disclosed when the actual or potential conflict becomes apparent. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the chair/moderator of the body and to the General Counsel. (See Attachment 2). See Attachment 5 for procedures to follow at meetings of the elected body or its committees, task forces and workgroups to document disclosure and action by disinterested members.

4) Potential Conflicts of Interest. All elected members are likewise to disclose promptly, in writing, matters and relationships that have the potential for giving rise to the appearance of a conflict in business dealings with the PMA/OGA. Examples include, but are not limited to, financial interests, leadership roles, or board membership with vendors and other organizations doing business with the PMA/OGA. PMA/OGA business dealings with an elected member’s friends and family are particularly sensitive and are to be disclosed and carefully evaluated because of the potential for inferences of tangible or intangible personal advantage and the appearance of impropriety. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the chair/moderator of the body and to the General Counsel. (See Attachment 2).

5) Gifts and Relationship Building To avoid appearances of impropriety, any gifts, gratuities, special favors, and hospitality to an elected member shall not be accepted by any elected member from any person or organization that sells, delivers, or receives any goods, materials, or services to or from the PMA/OGA. This prohibition includes those persons or organizations that desire to enter into such relationships with PMA/OGA. There are four exceptions to this rule:

a) Gifts, meals, outings, and relationship-building activities provided by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches, middle governing bodies, partner churches or related organizations in connection with PMA/OGA business. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

b) Gifts that primarily benefit the PMA/OGA and not an individual elected member, such as gifts of complimentary rooms given to the PMA/OGA by hotels, conventions, and conferences in relation to official PMA/OGA business. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

c) Occasional small gifts (less than $50.00 in value, such as flowers or foodstuffs) to an individual elected member. Where gifts are shared with other elected members or PMA/OGA staff (e.g., foodstuffs set out for all to partake), then the gift is not deemed to be to an individual elected member. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

d) Luncheons, dinners, outings, and relationship-building activities in connection with PMA/OGA business may be received. If an activity permitted under this section #4 results in a value of over $100

5 “Family” includes the elected member’s spouse, parents, siblings, spouses of siblings, children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, the spouses of children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, any other blood relative, and individuals who live in the elected member’s home.
6) Process and Resolution. All conflict of interest disclosures, reports, or questions are to be made promptly and in writing to the chair of the body and to the General Counsel. The General Counsel will consult with the chair of the body and the PMA Executive Director or the Stated Clerk, as appropriate. After consultation, the General Counsel will make a recommendation to the PMA BOARD Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee, as appropriate. Those bodies provide the final decision on any elected member conflict of interest matters.

c. Confidentiality of PMA BOARD/COGA Information. Elected members shall not disclose information about the PMA BOARD/COGA that is not known outside of the PMA BOARD/COGA or is not known by public means. Of course, it is expected that elected members will share certain PMA BOARD/COGA information with other parts of the PCUSA, related entities and the public when asked to do so by the PMA BOARD/COGA. If questions arise, the elected member should inquire of the chair of the body. If the chair/moderator of the body needs assistance, the General Counsel should be consulted by the chair/moderator.

d. Transactions, Reporting, and Document Retention. Each elected member has a duty to prepare, process, maintain, and report complete, accurate, and timely records pertaining to their role, including, but not limited to, expense reports. This also includes safeguarding all physical, financial, informational, and other PMA/PMA BOARD/COGA assets and records. Elected members shall comply with the Records Retention Schedule of the Office of the General Assembly’s Department of History and related schedules as part of the normal course of business and use the schedules in a consistent and accountable manner for both records retention and destruction purposes.

See http://www.history.pcusa.org/records/national/retention_schedules.cfm. See also the Electronic Records Policy for PMA and OGA (anticipated release in 2008). Any document relevant to actual or anticipated internal investigations, legal proceedings or governmental investigations (civil or criminal) must not be destroyed and must be preserved in a manner that would ease accessibility and retrievability of the document. In addition, elected members shall not direct or participate in establishment or maintenance of undisclosed or unrecorded funds or assets, nor shall the elected member direct the making of any artificial or false entries in the financial or other records of the PMA/COGA.

e. Duty to Disclose/Whistleblower Policy. Elected members have a duty to report violations of this Ethics Policy, whether the violation is by themselves or by another. This includes, but is not limited to, financial, accounting, or auditing irregularities. See Attachment 2 for Self-reports. See Attachment 3 for Whistleblower Reports concerning others. See Attachment 4 for Procedures for processing a Whistleblower Report. Likewise, concerns about the appearance or the possibility of violations should be reported. Care must always be taken to be factual and objective. Violations shall be reported promptly in writing to the General Counsel, and may be reported anonymously. Anonymous whistleblower reports can also be made by calling the hotline at (888) 236-6877 or submitting a report at www.ethicspoint.com. An anonymous whistleblower report must include sufficient corroborating evidence to justify initiating an investigation. (If the alleged violation involves the General Counsel or one of her staff members, it should be reported to the Internal Auditor.)

1) No Retaliation. There shall be no retaliation within PMA/PMA BOARD/COGA for good faith complaints, reports, participation in an investigation or for providing truthful information relating to an alleged violation of this Ethics Policy. In addition, there will be no retaliation where an elected member makes a good faith report of the commission or possible commission of any criminal offense to a law enforcement officer. Elected members are protected even if the allegations are mistaken or unsubstantiated, as long as the elected member reasonably believes the reported conduct constitutes a violation of the Ethics Policy. One who makes a claim or report under this Whistleblower Policy in bad faith, or knows, or has reason to know that such claim or report is false or materially inaccurate may be subject to disciplinary sanctions by the governing body with jurisdiction over the elected member.

2) Confidentiality of Investigation. Reports under this Whistleblower Policy will be treated confidentially with disclosures made on a need-to-know basis only to those directly involved in the investigation of the reported concern. To the extent possible within limitations of the law, policy and the need to conduct a competent investigation, confidentiality will be maintained.
f. Violations. Violation or noncompliance with this policy may result in discipline by the governing body with jurisdiction over the elected member.

g. Amendments. The Ethics Policy may be amended from time to time. In consultation with the General Counsel, the PMA Executive Director and the Stated Clerk (as appropriate) are authorized to make reasonable and necessary changes to this Ethics Policy. Substantive changes must be reported back to the elected body approving this Ethics Policy. Editorial changes need not be reported back.

h. Designees. Where this Ethics Policy assigns a duty to a particular officer or staff position, that officer or staff position may use a designee to complete the duties.

i. No Waiver by PMA BOARD/COGA. Nothing in this Ethics Policy shall be construed to waive any claim, assertion or defense of the PMA BOARD/COGA to exemption or exclusion from applicability of a statute and/or regulation or lack of jurisdiction of a civil court or governmental agency.

j. Trainings. Trainings to familiarize the elected members with this Ethics Policy and its related forms and procedures will be conducted for PMA BOARD/COGA elected members by the Legal Services Office as frequently as deemed necessary by the PMA BOARD Chair and COGA Moderator, as appropriate.

3. ATTACHMENT 1—Annual Ethics Policy Representation by Elected and Appointed Members (Annual Report)

This form is to be completed annually and signed by all “elected members” of the PMA BOARD/COGA as defined in the Ethics Policy. Upon completion, send it to the General Counsel.

I acknowledge I have received a copy of the Ethics Policy for Elected and Appointed Members of the PMA BOARD and COGA (Ethics Policy).

I understand it is my responsibility to read and comply with the Ethics Policy and any revisions made to it.

I understand:

- I am subject to the Ethics Policy and am required to comply with it.
- I am responsible for reporting immediately in writing any possible violation of the Ethics Policy that involves me, is reported to me, or that I observe.
- I am responsible for reporting immediately in writing any whistleblower reports I receive under the Ethics Policy, as well as any other violations of the Ethics Policy I observe.

Initial all of the following statements that apply:

- I am not aware of any violations of the Ethics Policy that involve me or that I have observed in regards to others.
- No employee or elected member has submitted a whistleblower report or a self-report to me that I have not reported already to the General Counsel.
- I am aware of a possible violation of the Ethics Policy that involves me or that I have observed in regards to others. By submitting the information immediately below, I am reporting the alleged violation.

6. Attachment 4 -- Procedures for processing a Whistleblower Report of possible Ethics Policy violation in regards to another elected member, an employee, or an organization

a. All reports under the Whistleblower Policy (See the Ethics Policy) shall be submitted in writing promptly to the General Counsel. Anonymous whistleblower reports may be made by calling the hotline at (888) 236-6877 or submitting a report at www.ethicspoint.com. An anonymous whistleblower report must include sufficient corroborating evidence to justify initiating an investigation. If the alleged violation involves the General Counsel or one of her staff members, it should be reported to the Internal Auditor. The General Counsel will decide if the reported activity, if confirmed, would be an Ethics Policy violation, a possible violation of a policy or procedure not covered by this Ethics Policy, or a matter to be processed through another avenue, typically supervisor review with a report to the General Counsel. If the General Counsel decides the report will not be processed under this Ethics Policy, the General Counsel will respond to the accuser unless the report was filed anonymously. The General Counsel shall keep a log of all reports received under the Whistleblower Policy. Whether or not an investigation was done, the log will include the resolution of all reports. The log will be available at all times to the Chair of PMA BOARD, the Moderator of COGA, and the Chair of the Audit Committee. If the person reporting is simply confused about an issue and how it applies, then the General Counsel will ensure clarification is provided by the chair of the body or the General Counsel. If the chair of the body provides a written response to the elected member, a copy of the response will be provided to the General Counsel.

b. All other reports shall be initially reviewed by a three-person committee (Investigative Committee) comprised of the General Counsel, the Internal Auditor and a third person appointed by the PMA BOARD Chair or COGA Moderator (as appropriate). The Investigative Committee will first determine whether or not an investigation is warranted. If it is not, the Investigative Committee shall so report. If an investigation is warranted, the Investigative Committee shall proceed as set forth below.

c. The following processes shall apply to an investigation conducted by the Investigative Committee:
1) If the report alleges a violation by a PMA BOARD elected member, then the PMA BOARD Chair and the PMA Executive Director shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by a COGA elected member, then the COGA Moderator and the Stated Clerk shall be notified an investigation has commenced.

2) If the report alleges a violation by the PMA BOARD Chair, then the vice-chair and the PMA Executive Director shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by the COGA Moderator, then the vice-chair and the Stated Clerk shall be notified an investigation has commenced.

3) The Investigative Committee shall be allowed to retain the services of experts it may need to conduct a reasonably thorough investigation.

4) The Investigative Committee may recommend administrative leave for any involved employees while the investigation is in process.

5) The Investigative Committee will promptly conduct its work. The typical investigation will include the following steps:

   a) Interview all parties involved with relevant knowledge, including but not limited to the accuser and the accused (if possible). Secure and review any relevant documents or other communications (if available and appropriate).

   b) Determine if there is a potential for risk to persons or property. If there is a potential risk, take reasonable measures as appropriate to protect those persons and property.

   c) Complete a written report of the findings and recommendations, (including discipline of the elected member). The Investigative Committee will provide a copy of its report (including all relevant documents) to the Audit Committee. At the same time the report is submitted to the Audit Committee, copies will be provided to the accused and the accuser. The chair/moderator of the body and the PMA Executive Director or Stated Clerk (as appropriate) will also receive a copy. Generally, the accused and the accuser will have seven business days to submit written comments to the Audit Committee in response to the Investigative Committee’s written report. The Chair of the Audit Committee may extend this period if such an extension is reasonably necessary.

6) All elected members and employees are required to fully cooperate with these investigations, and shall not be retaliated against by supervisors or anyone for cooperating and participating in the investigation.

7) The Audit Committee shall consider all the submissions promptly and reach a conclusion. While the Audit Committee does not have the authority to discipline elected members of PMA BOARD/COGA, its decision shall include any recommendations in that regard. PMA BOARD or COGA, as appropriate, shall give great weight to the decision of the Audit Committee. The Audit Committee shall make a full report of the matter to the PMA BOARD Executive Committee and the Executive Director or the COGA Coordinating Committee and the Stated Clerk (as appropriate). Thereafter, the PMA BOARD Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) will affirm, modify, or reverse the decision of the Audit Committee. In reaching its decision, the PMA BOARD Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) may also hear from any of the following as it deems fit: the accused, the accuser, the Investigative Committee, and others it deems relevant.

8) PMA BOARD/COGA will ensure that whistleblower reports submitted under this Ethics Policy are dealt with impartially and confidentially. To that end, information will only be shared on a need-to-know basis so as to fulfill the process. Any elected member who violates the confidentiality of this process shall be subject to disciplinary action by the body with jurisdiction over the elected member.

9) PMA BOARD/COGA prohibit retaliation, including but not limited to making any threatening communication by verbal, written, or electronic means, against anyone who reports in good faith or provides any information concerning violations of the Ethics Policy or applicable state or federal laws or who provides truthful information relating to the commission or possible commission of any criminal offense to a law enforcement officer. PMA BOARD/COGA will not discipline any elected member where the elected member in good faith (or any person acting pursuant to the request of the elected member) reports, discloses, testifies, or otherwise informs PMA BOARD/COGA, pursuant to this Ethics Policy, of a violation by an elected member, employee, or organization.

10) Any elected member found engaging in retaliation will be subject to discipline by the body with jurisdiction over the elected member.
7. Attachment 5 -- Meeting Procedure

Actions taken by the PMA BOARD and COGA are recorded in minutes. For purposes of this document, “minutes” includes administrative notes. If an employee, officer or elected member has a conflict of interest with regard to a proposed transaction under consideration at the meeting, that person shall leave the meeting and henceforth refrain from discussing or voting on the matter. The person with the conflict of interest may, however, respond to questions posed by an elected member. The minutes must reflect:

a. the date of the meeting;

b. the names of employees, officers and/or elected members with conflicts of interest regarding the proposed transaction;

c. the names of those who left the meeting;

d. the names of those members who voted on the matter;

e. description of data obtained and relied upon by the PMA BOARD or COGA and how the data was obtained;

f. if the transaction is approved between PMA BOARD/COGA and the person with a conflict of interest, the basis for the approval (include any difference in comparability data and value of transaction to PMA BOARD/COGA and how that affected the approval); and

g. terms of the transaction as approved.

I. Guidelines for Liaisons to Other Entities

The General Assembly elects individuals to serve as members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. As part of their call to service on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, some members or former members will be invited to represent the board on other entities (committees or boards). These additional assignments are secondary to the purpose for which the General Assembly has called members into service on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. In each of these roles, members are to represent the concerns and established interests of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

The following guidelines are designed to help members cultivate the connection between their work on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and their service on other boards and committees. In this document, “liaison” refers to anyone who serves on another committee by virtue of first having been elected to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Liaisons may be voting members or corresponding members, depending upon the particular assignment.

1. Prior to committee meetings:

Liaisons will review the agenda for the upcoming committee meetings, and seek input from the designated staff liaison regarding:

• Background materials that may be helpful for the committee discussion

• Presbyterian Mission Agency Board interests that might relate to the discussion.

2. At the committee meetings:

Liaisons will participate and engage as a full member of the committee (whether voting or corresponding) with particular attention on those issues that relate to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. On any issue where the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board has taken a position, the liaison will voice and support that position in discussions and votes. On issues that relate to the Presbyterian Mission Agency where no official position has been taken by the Agency, the liaison will prioritize the concerns and interests of the Agency in discussions and votes.

3. After committee meetings:

Liaisons will keep the Presbyterian Mission Agency apprised of the work of the other committees they serve. Following each committee meeting, liaisons will send a brief note to the Board chairperson and the designated staff liaison, outlining significant items from the meeting, which will be passed on to the appropriate committee of the Board. PMA Board committee chairs may, at their discretion, highlight an information item for further discussion in committee at any Board meeting. If this is anticipated, the board committee chair will notify the liaison in advance that her or his presence may be needed during the committee session.

4. Prior to a designated Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting:
Annually (prior to a Board meeting designated by the Board chairperson), liaisons will prepare a written report for distribution to board members as means of keeping the board informed about the committee’s work. The report will be posted online to be received by the Board. (these items of business are due in the Executive Director’s office four weeks prior to a board meeting.)

J. Relationship with Staff

1. The President/Executive Director

a. Responsibilities

The responsibilities of the President/Executive Director include:

1) Enabling the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to fulfill its responsibility to the General Assembly;
2) Nurturing relationships between the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the other General Assembly agencies, mid councils and racial ethnic caucuses (see Covenant of Understanding);
3) Directing the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency;
4) Providing leadership to, and administrative oversight of, the staff;
5) Leading the personnel decision-making processes of the Presbyterian Mission Agency;
6) Coordinating, with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, the budget planning process of the Presbyterian Mission Agency;
7) Serving a major role in all Presbyterian Mission Agency efforts, including funds development.
8) Leading the Presbyterian Mission Agency in implementing policies and procedures, not limited to those related to inclusiveness, affirmative action, and equal employment opportunity;
9) Serving as president of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation; and
10) Serving as primary spokesperson for Presbyterian Mission Agency program and policies.

b. Election and Review

The President/Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, who shall be a Presbyterian, is elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. The President/Executive Director is accountable to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Upon election, the President/Executive Director serves with the full authority of the office until confirmed by the next General Assembly following election. Should the General Assembly refuse to confirm any President/Executive Director, the position becomes vacant immediately. Periodic in-depth reviews of the President/Executive Director are the responsibility of the Coordinating Committee. The President/Executive Director is elected for a term of four years and may be reelected for additional terms. Initial four-year terms start on the date of election. The President/Executive Director may be dismissed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in conformity with current personnel policies and procedures.

c. Unexpected Vacancy

The Chair of the Board contacts the Coordinating Committee and together they will take all steps deemed necessary to secure temporary leadership of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. These actions shall be binding until ratified at the next stated meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

d. End-of-Service/Resignation Procedures

1) If the Executive Director intends to resign or not stand for re-election, a letter should be sent to the Chair of the Board.
2) Upon receipt of the letter, the Chair of the Board confers with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee regarding next steps.
3) The decision is announced on a schedule agreed to by the Executive Director and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee.
4) The Coordinating Committee, and other such persons as may be deemed necessary, shall conduct an exit interview with the Executive Director.

5) The Coordinating Committee will take all steps deemed necessary to provide temporary leadership of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. These actions shall be binding until ratified at the next stated meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

e. Search Procedures

1) When the Chair is notified that the Executive Director position will be permanently vacant, a search committee composed of seven members of the Board shall be elected by the Board. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Nominations and Personnel Committee shall nominate the membership of the committee, including a Chair, representative of the diversity of the Board.

2) In order for the General Assembly Committee on Representation to carry out its assigned functions, G-3.0103, a representative of the committee may participate in meetings of special committees elected by the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to select nominees for Executive Director during discussions of the position description, advertising, and interview procedures. Discussions of the qualifications of individual candidates and interviews of candidates shall be closed to members of the Committee on Representation unless invited as provided in section 3.(a & c) of the Open Meeting Policy.

3) When a final candidate is selected, that person shall be provided an opportunity to meet privately (electronically if needed) with the interim/acting Executive Director.

4) The chair and chair-elect will meet (electronically if needed) with the final candidate to draft goals for the coming year.

5) The final candidate shall meet (electronically if needed) with the Coordinating Committee for the purpose of finalizing goals for the coming year.

6) The final candidate shall meet with the Board in closed session, (electronically if needed) prior to release of the candidate’s nomination and consideration for election, with the following information being provided to the Board in anticipation of that meeting:
   a) a brief biographical sketch;
   b) a personal statement of faith;
   c) reason(s) candidate is deemed to be suitable for the position;
   d) the candidate’s goals, as approved by the Coordinating Committee, for the first year of office.

7) The public presentation of the final candidate and his/her election shall take place at a subsequent open meeting of the Board.

2. General Counsel and Chief Financial Officer.

a. The General Counsel and Chief Financial Officer are selected and hired by the Executive Director, using a search committee that includes elected members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and subject to a confirmation vote by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. These positions do not have a term.

   1) In the case of the Chief Financial Officer search, the committee shall include the chairs of the Audit and the Resource Allocation & Stewardship Committees

   2) In the case of the General Counsel search, the committee shall include the chair of the Legal & Property Committee

b. The General Counsel and Chief Financial Officer are directly responsible to the Board to provide complete and accurate information.

c. When one of these positions is being submitted to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for confirmation, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be provided with the following:

   1) a brief biographical sketch;

   2) reason(s) the individual is deemed to be suitable for the position;
d. The chairs of the Audit and the Resource Allocation & Stewardship committees will participate in the annual review of the Chief Financial Officer.

e. The chair of the Legal/Property Committee will participate in the annual review of the General Counsel.

f. The Executive Director has authority to terminate the General Counsel and Chief Financial Officer, or any persons serving in those roles, after consultation with the Chairs of the Audit and Resource Allocation & Stewardship Committees, in the case of the Chief Financial Officer position or the chair of the Legal/Property Committee in the case of the General Counsel position AND with prior notice to the Board.

g. In the event of a vacancy in either one or both of these positions, the search process shall be initiated as quickly as possible, which may include the search for an acting/interim position.

3. Other Staff

a. All staff are staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and are accountable to the Executive Director. Staff are not members of any Board committees or task forces, but may be asked to serve on a Board ministerial team.

b. Board members requiring assistance from staff shall work through the Executive Director to be assigned a resource person.

c. Staff who resource Board members, committees or task forces shall keep the Executive Director informed.

d. Staff will notify the Executive Director of any conflict of instructions from board members or between board members and staff supervisors, so that resolution may be found.

K. Comprehensive Performance Review Process for the President/Executive Director

1. Introduction

a. The purpose of all performance reviews described in these processes is to discuss, share, and assess goals, performance, successes, and challenges related to the work of the President/Executive Director.

b. The performance review cycle has four annual review conversations, plus a comprehensive review (with 360-degree input) in the third year.

2. Annual Review

a. Purpose

The purpose of the annual review conversation is:

1) to report on the accomplishment of goals

2) to provide feedback to the President/Executive Director regarding performance

3) to establish goals for the coming year

b. Timelines:

1) At the end of the calendar year, the President/Executive Director will complete a self-evaluation.

2) The review is conducted during the first quarter of the new year.

3) The Coordinating Committee reports a summary of the review at the Board’s Spring meeting.

3. Comprehensive Review with 360-degree input

a. Purpose

The purpose of this review conversation is:

1) to evaluate the leadership of the President/Executive Director over a period of three years

2) to receive feedback from selected individuals from the Mission Agency staff, other agency leaders and some mid council leaders who are familiar with the work of the President/Executive Director

3) to evaluate the Executive Director’s eligibility and willingness to serve for an additional four-year term
b. Timelines:

1) 3 months prior to the midyear Board retreat in the third year of an Executive Director’s term, Human Resources will provide review instruments to the Executive Director and Coordinating Committee for consideration. Following approval, the review instruments (typically survey forms) will be sent to selected individuals for feedback on the leadership of the Executive Director.

2) The Executive Director prepares a self-evaluation 45 days prior to the midyear Board retreat.

3) The review is conducted as part of the Coordinating Committee meeting during the Board’s midyear retreat.

4) The Coordinating Committee will report a summary of its review to the Board at its Fall meeting. If it is clear that the Executive Director will not be continuing for another term, transition planning will begin as defined in the Manual of Operations.

5) If there is eligibility and willingness for another term, then the Coordinating Committee will ordinarily recommend this action to the Board at its Spring meeting in year four.

4. Process

The Coordinating Committee may conduct these performance reviews or may appoint a subcommittee of its members. In either instance, the review shall be led in that process by the Chair-elect of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

At the beginning of each performance year, the Coordinating Committee in coordination with the Executive Director, will establish goals and objectives by which the Executive Director will be evaluated. Measurable goals and objectives for each area of ministry shall be clearly identified and, for the sake of vertical integration, will impact the performance plans of all senior staff as well. These ministry goals and objectives should be derived from surveys, discussions with mid-councils and congregations, input from staff, and input from PMA Board members.

A confidential written summary of the review with goals and objectives shall be prepared by the Chair-elect of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Both the Chair-elect and the Executive Director will sign the summary and it will be placed in the Executive Director’s personnel file.

When an Executive Director leaves the position, the Coordinating Committee will conduct an exit interview.

L. Public Statements by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

1. Statements on Public Issues by Entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
It is understood that duly constituted entities, boards, and councils may address statements or resolutions to the church or public officials, based on specified General Assembly actions, concerning matters clearly related to their assigned responsibilities. Such statements or resolutions may also be released to church and public news media. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board has been assigned a particular responsibility by the General Assembly to act on behalf of the General Assembly according to previously enacted General Assembly policies [between meetings of the General Assembly], reporting fully to each subsequent General Assembly its actions. Since the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall, in effect, be acting on behalf of the General Assembly, clear procedure defining the occasions and process for preparing and approving interim statements addressed to the church or the public order on issues and events in the society are essential. While the procedure outlined below focuses on such interim statements, the interim actions of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall, of course, encompass a wider scope.

Procedures Governing Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Interim Statements on Public Issues:

a. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board policy on interim statements governs those occasions when the Board speaks to members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to public officials, or to other audiences on behalf of the General Assembly. When the intent is to facilitate the church’s understanding of a General Assembly policy or to encourage general support of that policy, an interim statement shall be prepared.

b. An interim statement is a formal statement of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board issued between meetings of the General Assembly on an event or issue in the public order that merits immediate response by the church. An interim statement should not be confused with statements issued by the Stated Clerk in fulfillment of the responsibility to interpret and communicate General Assembly actions, nor with personal statements that may from time to time be made by church officials.

c. Interim statements should be reserved for significant occasions rather than viewed as a routine responsibility. The following questions shall be used to evaluate the need for such statements:

1) Is this event or issue of sufficient gravity or moment to merit an interim statement by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board?

2) Is such a statement by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board deemed appropriate, timely, and helpful?

3) Are sufficient time and expertise available to prepare a credible and responsible interim statement on the matter?

d. Proposals for interim statements may be initiated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board itself or by any General Assembly entity, synod, or presbytery. Any proposals arising between meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be communicated to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director.

e. When the proposal is for an interim statement at a forthcoming regular meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, the following procedures shall apply:

1) The Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director shall refer the proposal to the appropriate person(s), depending on the subject, who shall prepare a recommendation concerning the need for an interim statement. If further action is appropriate, those persons in consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Chair, the Executive Director, and the Stated Clerk shall prepare a draft.

2) The draft of any proposed interim statement shall be circulated to members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in advance if possible; otherwise, at the beginning of the meetings.

3) The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee shall review the proposed interim statement and recommend a method for considering it in the meeting.

4) Ordinarily, no final vote on an interim statement shall be taken until at least twenty-four hours following the circulation of a draft.

f. When the proposal for an interim statement arises during a meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, the following procedures shall apply:

1) The matter shall be referred immediately to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee which, in consultation with the persons named above in item “5.(a)” in attendance, shall report its recommendation to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board as to whether an interim statement is merited. The recommendation shall be based on consideration of the questions in section “3.” above.

2) If the proposal to issue an interim statement is approved, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Chair shall immediately appoint a small task group to prepare a draft, drawing upon particular competencies among the members and expertise of those present. They shall work in consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Chair, the Executive Director, and the Stated Clerk.

3) Consideration shall proceed as in items “5.c” and “5.d” above.

g. When the proposal is for an interim statement between meetings because of urgent need, the following procedures shall apply:

1) The Chair and Vice Chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Moderator of the General Assembly, in consultation with the appropriate persons depending on the subject, the Executive Director and the Stated Clerk may jointly agree that an interim statement is merited and authorize the preparation of a draft.

2) On completion of a draft, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Chair shall call a meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee, by telephone conference if necessary, to consider the proposed statement.

3) When the matter is of sufficient urgency in the judgment of those named in “[5].a” above, notification and the circulation of a draft here described can be compressed into one. In such case, the proposed statement shall be carefully read at the beginning of the special/called meeting, an explanation of the background circumstances shall be made, and the statement shall be read again before it is placed for debate.

4) All members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall ordinarily be notified of the proposed interim statement, and every attempt shall be made to circulate the draft in advance.

h. In all instances, a majority of those voting, provided a quorum is present, shall be sufficient to approve an interim statement.

2. Other Statements by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

On other occasions, when the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is invited to endorse the statement of another recognized Presbyterian group or ecumenical partner, or when the Board identifies an occasion when it wishes to speak on its own behalf, it may do so upon recommendation of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee. In no case shall such a statement be made in contradiction of General Assembly action.

III. Staff Operations

A. Overview

I. The Executive Director reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee and the Board itself.

II. The Executive Director provides direction, leadership, coordination, review and evaluation for the staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

III. The Executive Director carries out these responsibilities with staff in the following ministries:

A. Communications
B. Compassion, Peace and Justice
C. Mission Engagement and Support
D. Office of the Executive Director
E. Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries
F. Shared Services
G. Theology, Formation and Evangelism
H. World Mission

IV. Structural changes

A. Changes to the structure described above in III A 3 must be approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation by the Coordinating Committee and the Executive Director.
B. Structural changes within the areas described above in III A. 3 must be reported to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and Coordinating Committee.

B. Organizational Charts
C. Impact Study Process

The Presbyterian Mission Agency has been mandated by its Board to have a systematic process of program evaluation. The process is intended to focus on the impact of programs.

The process has both a staff and elected member component.

1. Staff

The Mission Impact Team plays an important role of outside input and accountability for programs in the impact study process.\(^6\) \(^6\) The Impact Study process is based on the Kellogg Logic Model developed by the Kellogg Foundation. Their key realization is programs should be evaluated primarily on the basis of impact. Program evaluation often can get side-tracked.

Within the Presbyterian Mission Agency, staff leadership determines the appropriate ‘altitude’ for impact assessment. The Mission Agency has decided to gauge impact at the level of collective groupings. Collective groupings, with some exceptions, are typically smaller than a ministry area but larger than an office. There are about 25 collective groupings within the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Each collective grouping has a “point person.”

Each collective grouping sets goals for its work, with a plan of work and impact milestones, using this template:

When the time comes for a grouping’s impact study, Research Services will meet with the point person for the grouping to develop a research instrument designed to measure impact in the light of the collective goals that have been established. Once responses have been received, Research Services will prepare a report for the point person.

Using the Research Services report, the point person will develop a report reviewing quantitative data (from the research or from measurable elements in the previously established goals) as well as qualitative data (strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats) regarding the impact of the collective grouping.

Human Resources and Finance will prepare brief reports of the resources (or Inputs) available to the grouping.

When the three major documents (Research Services report, Point Person report, Resources report) are available, Research Services will also produce an executive summary of the material.

The Mission Impact Team meets twice a year to review the reports prepared by the point persons, and to make suggestions regarding the work. Suggestions are tracked and presented to the point person for consideration in conversation with the area director.

Four to Six weeks later, the area director presents the collective grouping’s response to the suggestions at a Leadership Cabinet meeting.

2. Elected members

Twice a year, at Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings, the impact studies will be shared at program committee meetings, based on the most closely-related committee for each of the collective groupings. The point person will make a brief presentation and then engage members of the committee in direct feedback regarding the work of the program. Suggestions will be tracked for follow-up by staff at the next meeting of the committee.

Board committees will use impact studies to inform the evaluation of PMA effectiveness in fulfilling the Mission Work Plan and General Assembly directives.

D. Ethics Policy for Staff

Ethics Policy for Employees of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

I. Introduction

This Ethics Policy for Employees of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (“PMA”) and the Office of the General Assembly (“OGA”) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“Ethics Policy”) addresses business ethics and does not include the other ethical values and policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“PCUSA”)7. The Ethics Policy applies to all employees of the PMA and the OGA in matters relating to the performance of their duties and responsibilities for the PMA/OGA. These employees have Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation as their legal employer. The term “PMA/OGA” collectively refers to those two ecclesial bodies, their elected members, their respective staff members, the corporation, and all subparts thereof.

All funds and property received and administered by the PMA/OGA are entrusted to the organization by God through the faithful financial support of PCUSA members and friends. The highest degree of stewardship and fiduciary responsibility is expected of all employees, including the receiving, reporting, and use of funds, property, and time. Employees are responsible for complying with laws, regulations8, and PMA/OGA and PCUSA policies and procedures.

7 For other policies, see the employee handbooks of the PMA and OGA and the Standards of Ethical Conduct approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as it applies to employees.
8 Federal and state constitutional religious free exercise provisions, as well as laws and ordinances, exempt religious organizations from some laws. An employee should consult with the General Counsel if such questions arise.
As a PMA/OGA employee, what does this Ethics Policy require of me?

The required standards of this Ethics Policy are set out in 1-6 immediately below. The forms and processes are set out in the four attachments.

II. Standards of Ethical Conduct

A. Duty of Loyalty and Care. The duty of loyalty and care as well as the obligation of good stewardship requires all employees to act first in the best interests of the PMA/OGA rather than in the employee’s own interests or the interests of another entity or person. These responsibilities are set forth below.

B. Conflicts of Interest. All employees shall avoid conflicts of interest, potential conflicts of interest, and situations that give even the appearance of a conflict of interest.

1) Definition. Conflict of interest means any situation in which the employee may be influenced or appear to be influenced in decision-making or business dealings by any motive or desire for personal advantage other than the success and well-being of the PMA/OGA. Personal advantage means a financial interest or some other personal interest, whether present or potential, whether direct or indirect. This standard applies to both actual and contemplated transactions. When in doubt, the employee is to assume there might be a conflict and should raise the question pursuant to this Ethics Policy.

2) Disclosure Deadlines. All present and potential conflicts of interest issues must be disclosed in writing annually (See Attachment 1) and thereafter as they arise. If the conflict is known in advance of any meeting, business transaction, contract, or other activity at which issues may be discussed or on which the issues may have a bearing on the employee’s approach, whether directly or indirectly, it shall be disclosed ahead of time and the employee shall abstain from any participation in the discussion or decision. If the conflict is not known in advance, it shall be disclosed when the actual or potential conflict becomes apparent. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the employee’s supervisor and to the General Counsel. (See Attachment 2)

3) Potential Conflicts of Interest. All employees are likewise to disclose promptly, in writing, matters and relationships that have the potential for giving rise to the appearance of a conflict in business dealings with the PMA/OGA. Examples include, but are not limited to, financial interests, leadership roles, or board membership with vendors and other organizations doing business with the PMA/OGA. PMA/OGA business dealings with an employee’s friends and family are particularly sensitive and are to be disclosed and carefully evaluated because of the potential for inferences of tangible or intangible personal advantage and the appearance of impropriety. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the employee’s supervisor and to the General Counsel. (See Attachment 2).

4) Gifts and Relationship Building. To avoid appearances of impropriety, any gifts, gratuities, special favors, and hospitality to an employee shall not be accepted by any employee from any person or organization that sells, delivers, or receives any goods, materials, or services to or from the PMA/OGA. This prohibition includes those persons or organizations that desire to enter into such relationships with PMA/OGA. In regards to employees being offered honoraria or being paid in a temporary pastoral relationship with a particular church, see Section 105 of the Employee Handbooks of the PMA and the OGA. There are four exceptions to this rule:

a) Gifts, meals, outings, and relationship-building activities provided by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches, middle governing bodies, partner churches or related organizations in connection with PMA/OGA business. Employees shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

b) Gifts that primarily benefit the PMA/OGA and not an individual employee, such as giftsof complimentary rooms given to the PMA/OGA by hotels, conventions, and conferences in relation to official PMA/OGA business. Employees shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

9 Outside employment, including but not limited to serving in a paid, temporary pastoral relationship with a particular church, is permitted as long as it does not interfere with the performance of work duties for the PMA/OGA or result in a conflict of interest as that term is defined in this Ethics Policy.

10 Personal investments with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., or employee benefits provided by the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are not considered a conflict of interest.

11 “Family” includes the employee’s spouse, parents, siblings, spouses of siblings, children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, the spouses of children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, any other blood relative, and individuals who live in the employee’s home.
c) Occasional small gifts (less than $50.00 in value), such as flowers or foodstuffs, to an individual employee. Where gifts are shared with the work area (e.g., foodstuffs set out for all to partake), then the gift is not deemed to be to an individual employee. Employees shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

d) Meals, outings, and relationship-building activities in connection with PMA/OGA business may be received. If an activity permitted under this section 4 results in a value of over $100 to the employee and/or the employee’s family member, the employee shall promptly report this in writing to the employee’s supervisor and the General Counsel. Employees shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount. The written report will include a description of the activity, the dollar value, the name of the person/organization providing it, and the business that person/organization does with PMA/OGA. The General Counsel shall maintain a log that includes all of the written reports submitted under this section 4. This log will be available at all times to the PMA Board Chair, the PMA Executive Director, the COGA Moderator, the Stated Clerk and the Chair of the Audit Committee.

5) Process and Resolution. All conflict of interest disclosures, reports, and questions are to be made promptly and in writing to the employee’s supervisor and the General Counsel. The General Counsel will consult with the supervisor and make a recommendation to the PMA Executive Director or the Stated Clerk, as appropriate. Those officers provide the final decision on any employee conflict of interest matters. Conflict of interest disclosures, reports, or questions related to activities of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and/or the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency are submitted in writing to the General Counsel who will submit for decision to their respective elected bodies (COGA Coordinating Committee or the PMA Board Executive Committee).

C. Confidentiality of PMA/OGA Information. Employees shall not disclose information about the PMA/OGA that is not known outside of the PMA/OGA or is not known by public means. Of course, it is within the duties of some employees to share PMA/OGA information with other parts of the PCUSA, related entities, and the public. Employee questions should be posed to the supervisor. If the supervisor needs assistance, the General Counsel should be consulted by the supervisor.

D. Transactions, Reporting, and Document Retention. Each employee has a duty to prepare, process, maintain, and report complete, accurate, and timely records pertaining to their role, including, but not limited to, journal entries, expense reports, disbursement requests, time reports, and payroll transactions. This also includes safeguarding all physical, financial, informational, and other PMA/OGA assets and records. Employees shall comply with the Records Retention Schedule of the Office of the General Assembly’s Department of History and related schedules as part of the normal course of business and use the schedules in a consistent and accountable manner for both records retention and destruction purposes. See www.history.pcusa.org/national/schedules.html. Also see the Electronic Records Policy for PMA and OGA (anticipated release in 2007). Any document relevant to actual or anticipated internal investigations, legal proceedings or governmental investigations (civil or criminal) must not be destroyed and must be preserved in a manner that would ease accessibility and retrievability. In addition, no undisclosed or unrecorded fund or asset will be established, and no artificial or false entries will be made in the financial or other records of the PMA/OGA.

E. Duty to Disclose/Whistleblower Policy. Employees have a duty to report violations of this Ethics Policy, whether the violation is by themselves or by another. This includes, but is not limited to, financial, accounting, or auditing irregularities. See Attachment 2 for Self-reports. See Attachment 3 for Whistleblower Reports concerning others. See Attachment 4 for Procedures for processing a whistleblower report. Likewise, concerns about the appearance or the possibility of violations should be reported. Care must always be taken to be factual and objective. Violations shall be reported promptly in writing to the General Counsel, and may be reported anonymously. Anonymous whistleblower reports can also be made by calling the hotline at (888) 236-6877 or by submitting a report at www.ethicspoint.com. An anonymous whistleblower report must include sufficient corroborating evidence to justify initiating an investigation. (If the alleged violation involves the General Counsel or one of her staff members, it should be reported to the Internal Auditor.)

1) No Retaliation. There shall be no retaliation for good faith complaints, reports, for participation in an investigation or for providing truthful information relating to an alleged violation of this Ethics Policy. In addition, there will be no retaliation where an employee makes a good faith report of the commission or possible commission of any criminal offense to a law enforcement officer. Employees are protected even if the allegations are mistaken or unsubstantiated, as long as the employee reasonably believes the reported conduct constitutes a violation of the Ethics Policy. One who makes a claim or report under this Whistleblower Policy in bad faith, or knows or has reason to know that such claim or report is false or materially inaccurate may be subject to disciplinary sanctions.
2) Confidentiality of Investigation. Reports under this Whistleblower Policy will be treated confidentially with disclosures made on a need-to-know basis only to those directly involved in the investigation of the reported concern. To the extent possible within the limitations of law, policy, and the need to conduct a competent investigation, confidentiality will be maintained.

F. Violations. Violation or noncompliance with this Ethics Policy may result in discipline, including termination of employment under the employee handbook of the respective entity.

G. Amendments. The Ethics Policy may be amended from time to time. In consultation with the General Counsel, the PMA Executive Director and the Stated Clerk (as appropriate) are authorized to make reasonable and necessary changes to this Ethics Policy. Substantive changes must be reported back to the elected body approving this Ethics Policy. Editorial changes need not be reported back.

H. Designees. Where this Ethics Policy assigns a duty to a particular officer or staff position, that officer or staff position may use a designee to complete the duties.

I. No Waiver by PMA/OGA. Nothing in this Ethics Policy shall be construed to waive any claim, assertion or defense of the PMA/OGA to exemption or exclusion from applicability of a statute and/or regulation or lack of jurisdiction of a civil court or governmental agency.

J. Training. Trainings to familiarize the staff with this Ethics Policy and its related forms and procedures will be conducted for PMA/OGA staffs by the Legal Services Office as frequently as deemed necessary by the Executive Director of the PMA and the Stated Clerk, as appropriate. Each member of the PMA/OGA staffs will be required to attend such trainings.

III. Attachment 4 -- Procedures for processing a Whistleblower Report of possible Ethics Policy violation in regards to another employee, elected member, or organization.

A. All reports under the Whistleblower Policy (See Ethics Policy) shall be submitted in writing promptly to the General Counsel. Anonymous whistleblower reports may be made by calling the hotline at (888) 236-6877 or submitting a report at www.ethicspoint.com. An anonymous whistleblower report must include sufficient corroborating evidence to justify initiating an investigation. If the alleged violation involves the General Counsel or one of her staff members, it should be reported to the Internal Auditor. The General Counsel will decide if the reported activity, if confirmed, would be an Ethics Policy violation, a possible violation of a policy or procedure not covered by this Ethics Policy, or a matter to be processed through another avenue, typically supervisor review with a report to the General Counsel. If the General Counsel decides the report will not be processed under this Ethics Policy, the General Counsel will respond to the accuser unless the report was filed anonymously. The General Counsel shall keep a log of all reports received under the Whistleblower Policy. Whether or not an investigation was done, the log will include the resolution of all reports. The log will be available at all times to the Chair of the PMA Board, the Moderator of the COGA and the Chair of the Audit Committee. If the person reporting is simply confused about an issue and how it applies, the General Counsel will ensure clarification is provided by the supervisor or the General Counsel. The supervisor will provide a written response to the employee with a copy to the General Counsel.

B. All other reports shall be initially reviewed by a three-person committee (Investigative Committee) comprised of the General Counsel, the Internal Auditor, and a third person appointed by the PMA Executive Director or Stated Clerk (as appropriate). The Investigative Committee will first determine whether or not an investigation is warranted. If it is not, the Investigative Committee shall so report. If an investigation is warranted, the Investigative Committee shall proceed as set forth below.

C. The following processes shall apply to an investigation conducted by the Investigative Committee:

1) If the report alleges a violation by PMA employees, then the PMA Executive Director shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by OGA employees, then the Stated Clerk shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by either of these officers, then the Chair of the PMA Board or the Moderator of COGA, as appropriate, shall be notified an investigation has commenced.

2) If the report alleges a violation by an elected member, then the chair of the body and the PMA Executive Director or the Stated Clerk (as appropriate) shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by the chair/moderator of the body, then the vice-chair and the PMA Executive Director or Stated Clerk (as appropriate) shall be notified an investigation has commenced.

3) The Investigative Committee shall be allowed to retain the services of experts it may need to conduct a reasonably thorough investigation.

4) The Investigative Committee may recommend administrative leave for the accused, the accuser, or others while the investigation is in process.

5) The Investigative Committee will promptly conduct its work. The typical investigation will include the following steps:
   a) Interview all parties involved with relevant knowledge, including but not limited to the accuser and the accused (if possible). Secure and review any relevant documents or other communications (if available and appropriate).
   b) Determine if there is a potential for risk to persons or property. If there is a potential risk, take reasonable measures as appropriate to protect employees and property.
   c) Complete a written report of its findings and recommendations (including employee discipline or discharge). The Investigative Committee will provide a copy of its report (including all relevant documents) to the Audit Committee. At the same time the report is submitted to the Audit Committee, copies will be provided to the accused and the accuser. The PMA Executive Director or Stated Clerk (as appropriate) will also receive a copy. Generally, the accused and accuser will have seven business days to submit written comments to the Audit Committee in response to the Investigative Committee’s written report. The Chair of the Audit Committee may extend this period if such an extension is reasonably necessary.
   d) All employees are required to fully cooperate with these investigations and shall not be retaliated against by supervisors or anyone for cooperating and participating in the investigation.

6) The Audit Committee shall consider all the submissions promptly and reach a conclusion. The Audit Committee’s conclusions shall be final and not subject to appeal. While the Audit Committee does not have the authority to discipline or discharge PMA/OGA employees, its conclusions may include recommendations in that regard. Management shall give great weight to the conclusion and recommendations of the Audit Committee. The Audit Committee shall make a full report of the matter to the PMA Board Executive Committee and the Executive Director or the COGA Coordinating Committee and the Stated Clerk (as appropriate). The PMA Board Executive Committee or COGA Coordinating Committee receives the report, and does not take further action other than to follow up with the PMA Executive Director or Stated Clerk to ensure appropriate action was taken. An employee who has received a disciplinary action (including employment termination) may appeal that action via the process set out in the applicable employee handbook.
7) PMA/OGA will ensure that whistleblower reports under this Ethics Policy by an employee are dealt with impartially and confidentially. To that end, information will only be shared on a need-to-know basis so as to fulfill the process. Any employee who violates the confidentiality of this process shall be subject to disciplinary action, including employment termination.

8) PMA/OGA prohibit retaliation, including but not limited to making any threatening communication by verbal, written, or electronic means, against any employee who reports in good faith or provides any information concerning violations of the Ethics Policy or applicable state or federal laws or who provides truthful information relating to the commission or possible commission of any criminal offense to a law enforcement officer. PMA/OGA will not discharge or discriminate against any employee with respect to compensation, terms conditions, or privileges of employment because the employee in good faith (or any person acting pursuant to the request of the employee) reports, discloses, testifies, or otherwise informs PMA/OGA, pursuant to the Whistleblower Policy, of a violation by any employee, elected member, or organization.

9) Any employee found engaging in retaliation will be subject to disciplinary action, including termination of employment. Any elected member found engaging in retaliation will be subject to discipline by the PMA or OGA (as appropriate).

IV. Relationships and Other Policies

A. Relationships

I. Deployments

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board deploys a limited number of its members to support the work of other organizations, as directly mandated by the Organization for Mission, and as required to facilitate intra-agency collaboration:

A. Board of Pensions – 1 voting member
B. Committee on the Office of the General Assembly – 1 corresponding member
C. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation – 1 corresponding member
D. Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program – 2 voting members
E. Presbyterian Women, Inc. – 1 voting member
F. Mission Responsibility through Investment – 2 voting members
G. General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations – 1 voting member

II. Missional Relationships

The Presbyterian Mission Agency acknowledges that we are not solely responsible for the achievement of the Great Ends of the Church identified in Book of Order F-1.0304. Our role is to be faithful stewards of God’s blessings by focusing only on what the Church needs from the national church today, using the unique resources of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. We often work in partnership through missional relationships. This document identifies the types of missional relationships and the relevant approval processes.

There are four categories of formal Presbyterian Mission Agency missional relationships:

- Institutional relationships
- Professional associations
- Missional Partnerships
  - Presbyterian Mission Agency organization wide
  - Office partnerships

A listing of the current missional relationship partners may be found on the Board website (http://pmab.pcusa.org)

A. Institutional Relationships

Institutional Relationships are those between the General Assembly and another organization. In these cases, the Presbyterian Mission Agency is responsible for cultivating the relationship and requesting General Assembly approval, but the relationship isn’t limited in scope to the Presbyterian Mission Agency.
There are relatively few of these relationships. A covenant between PC(USA) and the other organization will place the relationship in the context of the church’s missional directives, describe appropriate expectations for staff services and support, as well as note any special responsibilities granted as part of the relationship.

Approval: The General Assembly, upon recommendation by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

B. Professional Associations

Professional Associations are related organizations of church professionals within a given area of expertise. Professional associations also serve the missional purposes of the church, and in that context the Presbyterian Mission Agency role is one of recognizing and networking leaders. A relationship agreement between the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the other organization will place the relationship in the context of Presbyterian Mission Agency missional directives and describe appropriate expectations for Presbyterian Mission Agency staff services and support.

Approval: Leadership Cabinet, upon recommendation from the respective ministry area director, for a four-year term

Notification: Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

C. Presbyterian Mission Agency Organization-wide Missional Partnerships

Presbyterian Mission Agency organization-wide missional partnerships are groups whose relationship with the Presbyterian Mission Agency is not limited to a single ministry area, but extends across the work of the Agency. Because covenanted groups carry out specialized ministries on behalf of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, their covenant is not established with an office, but rather with the Agency as a whole. These organizations are linked by common cause and a specific relationship to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. There are relatively few of these organizations, as most of missional partnerships are with particular offices. A covenant between the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the other organization will place the relationship in the context of Presbyterian Mission Agency missional directives, describe appropriate expectations for Presbyterian Mission Agency staff services and support, as well as note any special responsibilities granted as part of the relationship.

Approval: The Leadership Cabinet, upon recommendation from any two ministry area directors, for a term of four years.

Notification: Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

D. Presbyterian Mission Agency Office Partnerships

Presbyterian Mission Agency Office Partnerships are relationships between a Presbyterian Mission Agency office or ministry area and another organization. These relationships are bound together by common cause and a specific relationship with another organization. An office partnership is typically limited in scope to a given office or ministry area. An office relationship document will place the relationship in the context of Presbyterian Mission Agency missional directives and describe appropriate expectations for Presbyterian Mission Agency staff services and support.

Approval: The Leadership Cabinet, upon recommendation from the Ministry Directors Team (MDT) a ministry area director, for a term of four years.

Notification: Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

III. Racial Ethnic Caucuses

There are six racial ethnic caucuses within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

- African American: National Black Presbyterian Caucus
- Asian: National Asian Presbyterian Council
- Hispanic: National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus
- Korean: National Caucus of Korean Presbyterian Churches
- Middle Eastern: National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus
Native American Consulting Committee.

In 2014, the racial ethnic caucuses, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board approved a covenant of understanding regarding the role and relationship of racial ethnic caucuses within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

IV. Other Denominational Committees

A. General Assembly Advisory and Advocacy Committees

The 205th General Assembly (1993) approved the creation of one advisory committee and two advocacy committees. They are:

- Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy
- Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns
- Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns

An advisory committee is related to an entity or agency of the General Assembly that is formed for the purpose of providing advice, recommendations, resources, information, or counsel to its parent body.

An advocacy committee is related to an entity or agency of the General Assembly that is formed for the purpose of providing resources and support for a stated cause, constituency, policy, or defined interest through recommendations, advice, counsel, and efforts that endorse, define, or encourage.

The committee reports regularly to its parent body and constituency. The above-named committees shall have members as detailed below; elected for four-year terms with a maximum of eight years. For those who continue from the similar committees, continuous service is counted.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee shall nominate the members, for election by the General Assembly, and shall monitor the rotation of committee members among the synods.

The Chairs of the advisory committee and advocacy committees shall be elected by the members of the respective committees.

Whenever the work of the committee takes the members beyond the audience of the PC(USA), nationally or internationally, there shall be intensive pre-trip briefing which shall include current church policy, political situations and possible conflicting ideologies and shall include training on dealing with people of differing cultures, faith and backgrounds. When statements to the media are necessary they shall ordinarily be made by the Chair of the committee, based on the approved policies of the General Assembly.

1) Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

This advisory committee shall consist of twelve at-large members selected for special expertise and geographical diversity.

a) Accountability

i. The committee shall be accountable to carry out the processes and procedures, and for the identification of financial implications, generally required by all entities for presentation of material to the General Assembly. However, it is understood that the nature of the committee’s work occasionally may create difficulties for all concerned in these areas.

ii. The committee shall be accountable for the content of its work to the General Assembly in accordance with the Manual of the General Assembly, “Forming Social Policy;”: “The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy will be responsible for the process of developing and recommending social witness policy to the General Assembly. If any other entity is involved in processes of developing and recommending social witness policy, then appropriate consultation and linkage with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy shall be undertaken.”

iii. Staff responsible for the planning and coordination work of the committee shall be accountable to the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency through the Director, Compassion, Peace and Justice, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.
b) Search Procedures

i When the coordinator position becomes vacant, a search committee of seven members shall be appointed by the Executive Director, with membership as follows:

(a) In consultation with the Chair of ACSWP, three shall be appointed from the Committee, one of whom shall be the Chair of the Search Committee.

(b) In consultation with the Chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, three shall be appointed from the elected members of the Board.

(c) The Director of Compassion, Peace and Justice shall provide staff services to the Search Committee and shall have voice but not vote.

(d) The Chair of the Search Committee shall communicate the Search Committee’s recommendation to the Director of Compassion, Peace and Justice.

ii The Director of Compassion, Peace and Justice shall appoint and have supervision of the coordinator for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

iii The search and appointment shall be guided by, and in accordance with, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Employee Handbook.

c) Budget

Funding for the work of the committee comes from the per capita budget except for the staffing costs which are accounted for in the budget of the office where the staff is lodged.

d) Staff Relationships

The Social Witness Policy Office and the Committee relate most closely to the Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry Area in order to be a regular part of information channels, staff meetings, teams and discussions. Relationships with other ministries shall be developed through staff participation in ‘staff week’ meetings, staff teams and consultative processes.

e) Access

Access to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Leadership Cabinet for planning and consultation shall be on invitation of the Executive Director or at the request of the coordinator for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. At least annually, there will be a meeting of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and representatives of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee for strategic reflection and anticipation regarding social witness policy concerns.

The committee shall submit its General Assembly report to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee for review and possible comments by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

f) Liaisons

A staff person shall be named from the Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry as liaison to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

g) Relation to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

Access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, social involvement reports, Advice and Counsel Memoranda, a yearly narrative report, and other appropriate correspondence. Advice and Counsel Memoranda are to be developed cooperatively with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns as appropriate.

h) Assigned Functions

i Prepare policy statements, resolutions study papers, social involvement reports, or Advice and Counsel Memoranda on the church’s social witness for study and recommendation to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative; seek concurrence of the Board relative to financial implications on plans for studies.

ii Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of social witness policy or strategy, including interim statements concerning pressing social issues, the Board may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly. Facilitate two-way communication with all parties throughout policy development and advisory processes.

iii Prepare special studies at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or its Ministries on matters of social witness.

iv Work cooperatively with the Ministries and all councils in coordinating the interdependent process of social policy formation, implementation, and monitoring.

v Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its representative committees on overtures, commissioner resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that recommend policy direction or action on social witness.

vi Maintain an up-to-date and accurate Social Policy Compilation of General Assembly social witness policy and provide information to the church as requested.

vii Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret the social witness policies of the General Assembly.

viii Identify facets of the church’s social witness that enable or obstruct effective action. Analyze, in cooperation with the General Assembly Ministries, the effectiveness of social witness in councils, institutions, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency. After consulting entities that have primary ministry responsibility and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, report to the General Assembly on the advisory committee’s findings, together with recommendations for improving social witness.

ix Report directly to the General Assembly because of the need to maintain and advance a prophetic witness of the church.

2) Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

This advocacy committee shall consist of the following persons:

- Two African American (*)
- Two Asian American (*)
- Two Hispanic (*)
- Two Middle Eastern (*)
- Two Native American (*)
- Two At-large members elected with consideration for special expertise, fast-growing racial ethnic segments, geographic diversity and ethnic balance.

(*) Members of the five racial ethnic caucuses (African American, Asian American, Hispanic, Middle Eastern, and Native American) shall select one member from each caucus to be elected through the General Assembly Nominating process to serve a four year-term with eligibility for one additional term.

a) Accountability and Lodgment

Staff responsible for the planning and coordination work of the committee shall be appointed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director in consultation with the Advocacy Committee. The staff shall be lodged within the office of the Executive Director, unless the Advocacy Committee consents to staff being lodged outside that office. Such staff shall be accountable for the work of the committee to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director through the Manager for Diversity and Reconciliation.
b) Budget

Funding for the work of the committee comes from the per capita budget except for the staffing costs which are accounted for in the budget of the office where the staff is lodged. The Advocacy Committee shall propose a yearly budget to the Manager for Diversity and Reconciliation.

c) Access

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. In accordance with the recommendation of the 220th General Assembly (2012), the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall meet at least once every two years with the elected leadership of the advocacy committees for strategic reflection and anticipation concerning racial ethnic concerns.

Access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, racial involvement reports, a yearly narrative report, Advice and Counsel Memoranda, and other appropriate correspondence. Advice and Counsel Memoranda shall be developed in consultation with other advisory and advocacy committees as appropriate.

The committee shall submit its General Assembly report to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee for review and possible comments by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

d) Participation in Review Process

In each year when the Presbyterian Mission Agency is being reviewed by a General Assembly committee, either individually, or collectively with respect to the “service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies in implementing the General Assembly’s mission directives,” the Mission Agency Board will:

- Assign one of its elected members to attend an ACREC meeting for the purpose of developing a collaborative work relationship,
- Invite a representative from ACREC to attend a meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

e) Assigned Functions

i Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and Advice and Counsel Memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative.

ii Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of racial ethnic concerns including statements concerning pressing issues the Board may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

iii Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of racial ethnic concern.

iv Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

v Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.

vi Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs relative to racial ethnic concerns.

vii Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concern.

3) Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)

This Advocacy Committee shall consist of:
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

- Two clergywomen
- One woman church lay employee
- One Presbyterian Women Churchwide Coordinating Team Vice Moderator for Justice and Peace
- Eight members at-large, chosen to balance the committee geographically, racially and ethnically, and with consideration to age and expertise.
- At least four members of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns shall be racial ethnic women. At least two, but no more than three members of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns will be men.

a) Accountability and Lodgment

Staff responsible for the planning and coordination work of the committee shall be appointed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director in consultation with the Advocacy Committee. The staff shall be lodged within the office of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director, unless the Advocacy Committee consents to staff being lodged outside that office. Such staff shall be accountable for the work of the committee to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director through the Manager for Diversity and Reconciliation.

b) Budget

Funding for the work of the committee comes from the per capita budget except for the staffing costs which are accounted for in the budget of the office where the staff is lodged. The Advocacy Committee shall propose a yearly budget to the Manager for Diversity and Reconciliation.

c) Access

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. In accordance with the recommendation of the 220th General Assembly (2012), the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall meet at least once every two years with the elected leadership of the advocacy committees for strategic reflection and anticipation concerning women’s concerns.

Access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, a yearly narrative report, Advice and Counsel Memoranda. Advice and Counsel Memoranda, and other appropriate correspondence shall be developed in consultation with other advisory and advocacy committees as appropriate.

The committee shall submit its General Assembly report to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee for review and possible comments by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

d) Assigned Functions

i  The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns shall assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403. The committee shall monitor and evaluate policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church and the world; and shall advocate for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society.

ii Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and Advice and Counsel Memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative.

iii Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues the Board may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

iv Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns.
v Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women’s concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

vi Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women’s concerns.

vii Monitor the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns.

viii Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s concerns.

B. Committee on Theological Education

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) has direct access to the General Assembly and their work is coordinated through the Theology, Formation and Evangelism Ministry.

As constituted by the 198th General Assembly (1986) and reaffirmed by the 205th General Assembly (1993) the Committee on Theological Education has the following purposes: to further the cause of theological education in the church; to provide a vehicle through which the individual theological seminaries can coordinate their activities and report to the church; to provide for official communication from the church to the seminaries; to preserve the freedom of the seminaries for the benefit of the church; and to assure visible representation of theological education at the national level of the church’s organization.

1) Committee Membership

This committee of the General Assembly will consist of:

- One representative appointed by each of the ten PC(USA) seminaries;
- Thirteen at-large members for special expertise and geographical diversity, who are elected through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process to serve four-year terms, with eligibility for one additional term;
- Corresponding members representing seminaries that have renewable covenant relationships with the PC(USA);
- A corresponding member representing the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation; and up to three corresponding members representing non-Presbyterian seminaries as determined by annual vote of the Committee on Theological Education.

2) Staff Accountability and Lodgment

Staff responsible for planning and coordinating work of the committee shall be appointed by the Director of the Theology, Formation and Evangelism Ministry in consultation with the Committee on Theological Education. The staff shall be lodged within the Theology, Formation and Evangelism Ministry and be directly accountable to the Director of the Theology, Formation and Evangelism Ministry.

3) Budget

Funding for the work of the Committee on Theological Education, including related staffing costs and allocations to the seminaries on behalf of the denomination, shall be accounted for in the budget of the Theology, Formation and Evangelism Ministry.

4) Access

The Committee on Theological Education shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Access shall be in the form of resolutions, a yearly narrative report, comments on issues before the Assembly, and other appropriate correspondence. The yearly narrative report shall be forwarded to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Coordinating Committee for possible comment. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Committee to Nurture the Body will be responsible for developing relationships with the Committee on Theological Education.
5) Assigned Functions

a) To develop and maintain a comprehensive overview of theological education from the perspective of the whole church.

b) To identify, develop, and propose strategies for a systemic approach to theological education within the denomination.

c) To serve as an advocate before the whole church for theological education and to interpret the mission of the denomination’s seminaries to the whole church.

d) To provide a way for the church’s needs to be addressed to the denomination’s seminaries.

e) To review the effectiveness and stewardship of the seminaries on behalf of the church.

f) To encourage and enhance cooperation among the theological seminaries of the denomination.

g) To relate the councils and agencies of the PC(USA), particularly those which have responsibilities for theology and worship, for education, for candidacy, and for leadership development for pastors and church members.

h) To maintain appropriate relationships with those responsible for theological education in other branches of the church catholic.

i) To receive and act upon requests and recommendations from the church.

j) To receive and review reports from the theological seminaries appropriate to the work of the committee;

k) To identify the issues, needs, and opportunities of the seminaries, individually and corporately, and, where appropriate, address these as requests and recommendations to the church;

l) To authorize use of Theological Education Fund monies, prepare an appropriate formula for disbursements to the theological seminaries of the PC(USA), and to advocate for financial support of the seminaries.

m) To maintain relations with educational and ecumenical associations which share common concerns with the committee.

n) To serve as an agency of the denomination for relating to theological seminaries other than those of the PC (USA).

o) To recommend to the General Assembly those theological seminaries which shall qualify as members of the Committee on Theological Education.

C. Other Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Related Committees

The following committees have reporting relationships established by the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. If the Chairperson of one of these committees wishes to address a Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Committee, he or she may request time from the Chair of the committee prior to the meeting. Ordinarily, such requests will be granted subject to available time on the docket, and the relevance of the request.

1) Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI)

The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) is responsible for implementing General Assembly policy related to mission responsibility through investment. MRTI assists the church at all levels to utilize its investments as key instruments to promote its mission goals in society. MRTI provides leadership for effective engagement of the private sector in partnership with ecumenical colleagues in the United States, and in collaboration with indigenous churches, ecumenical bodies and local groups in other nations.

a) Budget

The budget for MRTI is developed by staff and proposed to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for approval by the General Assembly.
b) Composition

MRTI is composed of:

- two elected representatives named by each of its member agencies:
  - Presbyterian Mission Agency Board,
  - Board of Pensions and
  - Presbyterian Church(USA) Foundation/New Covenant Trust Company

- one representative each from the elected membership of:
  - the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy,
  - the Advocacy Committee on Women’s Concerns and
  - the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns.

In addition, the General Assembly elects three At-Large members bringing MRTI’s total membership to 12 persons.

c) Relation to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Committee for Outreach to the World.

d) Staffing Relationship and Lodgment

Staffing for MRTI is provided by Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry Area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

e) Assigned Functions:

MRTI’s primary function is to develop and implement a coordinated strategy for the General Assembly’s Investment Policies and Guidelines for the General Assembly and for subsequent General Assembly action related to investment or divestment. Specific assigned functions include:

i. recommend, as needed, revisions or additions to the General Assembly’s Investment Policies and Guidelines (for use by the Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Church (USA) Foundation, Inc., New Covenant Trust Company; and other fiduciaries within the church family) designed to reach mission goals of the General Assembly,

ii. recommend to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board specific actions on the exercise of investor rights and responsibilities such as proxy voting, initial filing of shareholder resolutions, and joining with other shareholders in litigation calling for regulatory oversight or other forms of redress,

iii. recommend to appropriate ministry areas or related bodies, middle governing bodies, institutions and communicant members of the Presbyterian Church (USA) ways and means to carry out General Assembly investment policies respecting social concerns, including the voting of proxies on shareholder resolutions,

iv. appoint representatives to ecumenical organizations through which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to advance its work in the area of mission responsibility through investments, and

v. assist Compassion, Peace and Justice in coordinating corporate responsibility concerns with mission program and strategies on economic and social justice.

2) Mission Development Resources Committee (MDRC)

The Mission Development Resources Committee makes decisions on Church Loans, Walton Awards for New Church Development and Mission Program Grants (New Church Development, Congregational Transformation and Specialized Ministries). Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Committee to Nurture the Body.
a) Budget

MDRC provides input on the work of the Mission Program Grants, Church Loans and the Sam and Helen R. Walton Award. The budget for these items is included in the Racial Ethnic and Women’s ministry area.

b) Staff Relationships and Lodgment

The Office of Mission Program Grants staff that is responsible for planning, coordinating, and supporting the work of MDRC reports to the Director of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministry Area or designee.

c) Search Procedures for Staff

The Associate and Administrative Assistant staff members within the Office of Mission Program Grants shall be appointed by the director of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministry Area in accordance with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Employee Handbook.

d) Relation to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

MDRC reports to the Committee to Nurture the Body, typically in the form of action items, information reports and changes to the MDRC Manual of Administrative Operations.

e) Assigned Functions

The primary focus of the MDRC is to respond faithfully to the church growth commitment of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. This work is conducted in partnership with synods and presbyteries engaged in church growth mission through the allocation of grants and loans. The MDRC implements its work through the following functions:

i Allocating grants for new church development, new worshiping communities, and presbytery support for continual congregational transformation;

ii Originating and overseeing the payment and repayment of Presbyterian Mission Agency loans to new and existing congregations for site acquisition, building construction, renovation, and other related projects;

iii Recommending policies, procedures and guidelines that govern the grant and church loan programs;

iv Interpreting the purpose and availability of the grant and church loan programs to the whole church, instilling hope for future ministry to keep the church alive and growing;

v Responding in partnership with mid councils to new and emerging ministries;

vi Reviewing and recommending to the Presbyterian Mission Agency new congregation projects nominated to receive Sam & Helen R. Walton Awards.

3) Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee (PDAAC)

a) Purpose

The purpose of the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee is to review the work of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and give policy advice. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance “is a ministry of relief and response to national and international disasters, aid to refugees and displaced persons, refugee resettlement and efforts toward development.” This ministry is “carried out through ecumenical partnerships, related church agencies, mid councils, and congregations.” Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly. This committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Committee for Outreach to the World.

b) Budget

The budget for Presbyterian Disaster Assistance is developed by staff and proposed to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for approval by the General Assembly.
c) Composition

The Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee is comprised of seven (7) At-Large members, nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly. Members serve a one four-year term and are eligible for consideration to one additional term.

d) Accountability

This committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Committee for Outreach to the World.

e) Staff Accountability and Lodgment

Staff responsible for planning and coordinating the work of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance are appointed by and accountable to the Director of the Compassion, Peace & Justice Ministry Area.

f) Assigned Functions

i. Assist in setting strategic program direction.

ii. Contribute knowledge and expertise in disaster relief.

iii. Ensure that Presbyterian Disaster Assistance is strategically aligned with the priorities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

iv. Promote and interpret the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering.

v. Provide advice concerning expenditure of designated funds over $500,000 in response to large scale disasters.

vi. Provide input on the development of an annual budget.

vii. Work with staff to develop and implement communication and fund-raising strategies.

4) Presbyterian Hunger Program Advisory Committee (PHPAC)

a. Purpose

The purpose of the Presbyterian Hunger Program Advisory Committee is to guide the church’s response to hunger and its underlying causes.

b. Budget

The budget for the Presbyterian Hunger Program is developed by staff and proposed to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for approval by the General Assembly.

c. Staff Relationships and Lodgment

Staff responsible for planning and coordinating the work of the Presbyterian Hunger Program are appointed by and accountable to the Director of Compassion, Peace and Justice.

d. Relation to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Committee for Outreach to the World, typically in the form of minutes and changes to the PHP Advisory Committee Operating Guidelines.

e. Assigned Functions

The committee carries out the following tasks:

i. Recommend Presbyterian Hunger Program operating guidelines in concordance with PMA goals and work plan.

ii. Recommend policies, procedures and guidelines that govern the Presbyterian Hunger Program grant process.
iii. Review grant requests and make funding (grant) decisions within the approved guidelines.

iv. Promote the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering through highlighting the work of the Presbyterian Hunger Program, Self-Development of People and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance.

v. Promote Presbyterian Hunger Program initiatives in congregations and presbyteries.

vi. Suggest the development of programs and strategies for implementing the “Common Affirmation on Global Hunger,” and other General Assembly policies related to hunger and poverty.

5) Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People (PCSDOP)

The National Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People provides the opportunity for the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and non-members to help establish partnerships with economically poor, oppressed, and disadvantaged people in the United States and around the world, which helps them to develop toward their own potential, self-determination, and human dignity. (People who are not Presbyterian may be nominated, elected, and serve). The National Committee shares this ministry with mid council committees, as the focal point of the Church’s efforts to promote the self-development concept and cause.

a. Direction & Accountability

The Presbyterian Committee on the Self Development of People (PCSDOP) receives direction for its work through the Mission Work Plan, and the Presbyterian Committee on the Self Development of People Manual of Operations, which are approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The Presbyterian Committee on the Self Development of People reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board through the Board’s Committee for Outreach to the World.

b. Staff Accountability and Lodgment

Staff responsible for planning and coordinating work of the committee shall be appointed by the Director of the Compassion Peace & Justice Ministry in consultation with the Presbyterian Committee on the Self Development of People (PCSDOP). When seeking a new coordinator for SDOP, an interview team will be identified in consultation with the PCSDOP Steering Committee. At least two members of the PCSDOP shall serve as a part of the interview team. The staff shall be lodged within the Compassion Peace & Justice Ministry and be directly accountable to the Director of the Compassion Peace & Justice Ministry.

c. Assigned Functions (to be performed with accountability to the Committee for Outreach to the World and/or the Compassion Peace and Justice Ministry area, and subject to available funds).

i. SDOP shall be responsible for creating and maintaining its own Manual of Operations.

ii. SDOP shall provide program, strategy and oversight for the church’s mission of self-development with poor, oppressed and disadvantaged people.

iii. SDOP will implement the criteria and guidelines for funding local projects.

iv. SDOP will be responsible for receiving, reviewing and approving/rejecting local project proposals.

v. SDOP will be responsible for training and certifying local SDOP committees.

vi. SDOP will work in collaboration with PDA and PHP to carry out joint projects consistent with the mandate of each committee.

vii. Work cooperatively with ecumenical partners in carrying out SDOP’s mandate.

viii. Educate the church on the condition and status of poor and oppressed communities and train the church in theological issues related to poverty.

ix. Promote and Interpret the OGHS offering within the church at both the congregational and mid-council levels.

6) United States Advisory Committee (USAC) of the Jinishian Memorial Program (JMP)

The Jinishian Memorial Program (JMP) is an endowed ecumenical ministry of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and part of the World Mission ministry area that supports ongoing programs benefitting Armenians.
in need in Armenia, Lebanon, Syria, Turkey, and Jerusalem. JMP has a U.S. Advisory Committee (USAC) composed of three individuals of Armenian descent, and two who are members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency staff. The USAC is mandated by the will of Mr. Vartan H. Jinishian. USAC’s function is to give advice and guidance, especially as to the amount and direction of the appropriations to effectuate Mr. Jinishian’s wishes. The USAC operates pursuant to the terms of Mr. Jinishian’s will and the Guidelines for the Administration of the Jinishian Memorial Program (Guidelines) then in effect. The Guidelines are approved by the USAC and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

D. Committee on the Office of the General Assembly

(This relationship is described in a separate document.)

E. Other Policies

1. Open Meeting Policy for business gatherings

   Open Meeting Policy
   Approved by the 209th General Assembly (1997)
   Amended by 218th General Assembly (2008)

   a. The work of the church is strengthened when it is done in a spirit of openness and trust. Church members have a basic right to know about the work done and the decisions made by entities within the church. Church leaders have a basic responsibility to honor that right by conducting their business with a spirit of openness and vulnerability to public scrutiny. Therefore, open meetings shall be the norm for all such entities.

   b. It is the policy of the General Assembly; the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the entities and work groups related to them, that their meetings shall be open to all interested persons. A separate policy exists for governing non-business gatherings. Documents being considered at such meetings shall be available to interested persons at the meeting.

   c. In certain circumstances, when the confidentiality of the subject matter is impeding the open work of the group, its meetings may be closed. These requirements apply:

      1) Subjects dealt with must be limited to property negotiation, personnel, civil and criminal litigation, including cases under the Rules of Discipline, or security.

      2) Closed meetings may be authorized only after serious consideration and by a majority vote of the members present. Such closure must be limited in time and scope to matters in 3(a) above.

      3) In closed meetings, only voting members and other persons invited by the group to serve it are to be present.

      4) The reason(s) for closing must be announced before closure and also must be recorded in the minutes.

      5) The decisions reached shall be recorded in the minutes, and shall be made public as soon as possible following the end of the closed meeting.

   d. Since staff groups have neither authority nor responsibility for establishing policy; their meetings are not subject to these provisions. This does not preclude them from opening their meetings.

   e. The provisions of this policy shall apply to visitors and to representatives of both church and public media, including print, electronic and photographic journalists.

   f. All the provisions of this policy are to be applied equitably to all persons and groups.

   g. The Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly is responsible for resolving questions relating to the application and interpretation of the open meeting policy.

   A separate policy exists to govern non-business gatherings.

   Note: The 218th General Assembly (2008) directed the entities subject to the PC(USA) Open Meeting Policy to post the dates, times, and locations of their open meetings on the PC(USA) calendar Web page within a reasonable time of making such plans.

2. Media and Visitor Policy for Non-Business gatherings
Representatives of the media and visitors are welcome at non-business gatherings of groups structurally related to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Many non-business gatherings are intended to provide participants with the opportunity to openly examine personal and corporate issues of faith and life. Media representatives and visitors are asked to honor this atmosphere of openness and acceptance. If there is a business session within a non-business gathering, the open meeting policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall apply during that session.

The following policy pertains to non-business gatherings of groups structurally related to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

a. Media representatives will register as such, including the name of the publication or media outlet for which they are acting as a media representative. Media representatives and visitors should wear name tags identifying themselves as such during all portions of the gathering.

b. Media representatives will not be required to pay registration fees. They will be responsible for their own accommodations, meals, and transportation. Visitors will register and be required to pay appropriate fees.

c. Media representatives are observers and may not speak or actively participate in any portion of the gathering unless invited.

d. All plenary sessions are open.

e. All non-plenary sessions are also open. Media representatives and visitors are asked to identify themselves as such at the beginning of non-plenary sessions. In small groups whose purpose is the sharing of personal issues of faith and life, the discussion may be closed to media representatives and visitors at the choice of the small group participants.

f. The provisions of this policy shall apply to visitors and representatives of both church and public media, including print, electronic, and photographic journalists.

g. All the provisions of this policy are to be applied equitably to all persons and groups.

h. The Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly is responsible for resolving questions relating to the application and interpretation of this policy.

Independent Auditor's Report

Audit Committee
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

Report on the Financial Statements

We have audited the accompanying consolidated financial statements of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, and its constituent corporations, which comprise the consolidated statement of financial position as of, December 31, 2017 and the related consolidated statements of activities and changes in net assets and cash flows for the year then ended, and the related consolidated notes to the financial statements.

Management’s Responsibility for the Financial Statements

Management is responsible for the preparation and fair presentation of these consolidated financial statements in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America; this includes the design, implementation, and maintenance of internal control relevant to the preparation and fair presentation of financial statements that are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error.

Auditor’s Responsibility

Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these consolidated financial statements based on our audit. We conducted our audit in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the consolidated financial statements are free from material misstatement.

An audit involves performing procedures to obtain audit evidence about the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. The procedures selected depend on the auditor's judgment, including the assessment of the risks of material misstatement of the financial statements, whether due to fraud or error. In making those risk assessments, the auditor considers internal control relevant to the entity's preparation and fair presentation of the financial statements in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the entity's internal control. Accordingly, we express no such opinion. An audit also includes evaluating the appropriateness of accounting policies used and the reasonableness of significant accounting estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall presentation of the financial statements.

We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our audit opinion.

Opinion

In our opinion, the financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation as of December 31, 2017, and the changes in their net assets and their cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

Other Matter

The financial statements of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation for the year ended December 31, 2016, before the restatement described in Note 17, were audited by another auditor whose report dated June 29, 2017, expressed an unmodified opinion on those statements.

As part of our audit of the December 31, 2017 consolidated financial statements, we also audited the adjustments described in Note 17 that were applied to restate the 2016 consolidated financial statements. In our opinion, such adjustments are appropriate and have been properly applied. We were not engaged to audit, review, or apply any procedures to the 2016 consolidated financial statements of the entity other than with respect to the adjustments and, accordingly, we do not express an opinion or any other form of assurance on the 2016 consolidated financial statements as a whole.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation
Notes to Consolidated Financial Statements
Years Ended December 31, 2017 and 2016

Note 1 - Organization and Nature of Operations

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), ("PCUSA") is an unincorporated body of Reformed Christians, who have agreed to conduct worship and other religious activities in conformity with the then current version of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitution, which contains among other things, in its Book of Order, a Form of Government setting forth a detailed formal structure of the PCUSA. As an ecclesiastical organization, PCUSA does not exist under any federal law. Central to the structure of PCUSA is the concept of mid councils (formerly referred to as governing bodies). At the national level, the council is the General Assembly. The ecclesiastical work of the PCUSA at the General Assembly level is carried out by a number of ministry units and related agencies.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation ("PCUSA, A Corporation") is a corporate entity of the General Assembly of PCUSA, and is the principal corporation of the General Assembly. All voting members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board are members of the Board of Directors of PCUSA, A Corporation. PCUSA, A Corporation receives and holds title and/or maintains and manages property and income at the General Assembly level related to mission activities; generally maintains and manages all real and tangible property not held for investment, including the insuring of such property; effects short-term investment of funds prior to either their disbursement or transfer to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the "Foundation") for longer-term investment; acts as the disbursing agent for all funds held for the General Assembly and for other governing bodies and entities upon their request; and provides accounting, reporting, and other financial and related services as the General Assembly or Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may direct or approve.

PCUSA, A Corporation is a tax-exempt religious corporation under Internal Revenue Code Section 501(c)(3).

Note 2 - Basis of Presentation and Summary of Significant Accounting Policies

Basis of Presentation: The accompanying consolidated financial statements reflect the consolidated operations of PCUSA, A Corporation and its constituent corporations, which are presented on the accrual basis of accounting in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America. The constituent corporations of PCUSA, A Corporation are the following: General Assembly Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); The Historical Foundation of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, Inc.; The Hubbard Press; Pedco, Inc.; The Presbyterian Historical Society; Presbyterian Life, Inc.; Presbyterian Publishing House of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc.; Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). All intercompany transactions have been eliminated in consolidation.

For external reporting purposes, PCUSA, A Corporation's financial statements have been prepared to focus on the organization as a whole and to present balances and transactions classified in accordance with the existence or absence of donor-imposed restrictions. Net assets and related activity are classified as unrestricted, temporarily restricted, and permanently restricted as follows:

- Unrestricted-Undesignated: Net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted undesignated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon, which are available for general church purposes.

A minimum reserve requirement for unrestricted undesignated net assets is monitored by the Board. If the reserve falls below the minimum reserve requirement, further action could be taken by the Board to redesignate unrestricted designated net assets.
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

Note 2 - Basis of Presentation and Summary of Significant Accounting Policies (Continued)

- Temporarily Restricted: net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions that may or will be met either by actions of PCUSA, A Corporation or the passage of time. Temporarily restricted net assets primarily consist of contributions and related investment income.

- Permanently Restricted: net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions to be maintained permanently by PCUSA, A Corporation. Generally, the donors of these assets permit PCUSA, A Corporation to use all or part of the income earned on related investments for general or specific purposes. Permanently restricted net assets consist primarily of endowment funds and revolving loan funds.

Cash Equivalents: For purposes of reporting cash flows, PCUSA, A Corporation considers investments with an original maturity of three months or less when purchased to be cash equivalents.

Investments: Investments are recorded at fair value. Investment transactions are recorded on a trade-date basis. Realized gains and losses are recorded using the specific identification of securities sold on funds held by the Foundation and using the historical cost of securities sold on funds held by other investment managers.

The Trustees ("Trustees") of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the "Foundation") believe that the net asset value of its alternative investments is a reasonable estimate of fair value as of December 31, 2017 and 2016. Since alternative investments are not readily marketable, the estimated value is subject to uncertainty and therefore may differ from the value that would have been used had a ready market for the investments existed, and such differences could be material.

Long-term investments held by the Foundation represent General Assembly endowment funds, which are generally not available for immediate use.

Contributions from Congregations: Contributions from congregations include amounts in-transit at year-end.

Allowance for Loan Losses: The allowance for loan losses is maintained at a level considered by management to be adequate to provide for loan losses inherent in the loan portfolio. Management determines the adequacy of the allowance based upon reviews of payment history, recent loss experience, current economic conditions, the risk characteristics of the various categories of loans, and such other factors, which in management's judgment deserve current recognition in estimating loan losses. The allowance for loan losses is increased by the provision for loan losses and reduced by net loan charge-offs.

Annuity and Life Income Funds: PCUSA, A Corporation is an income beneficiary of trust funds held by the Foundation. In accordance with current accounting standards, PCUSA, A Corporation has recorded, as an asset, the net present value of the future income to be received from the funds.

Inventories: Inventories represent books, periodicals, and curriculum produced by PCUSA, A Corporation for distribution. These items are stated at average cost.

Property and Equipment: Property and equipment consists principally of the PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment, domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land, and property held for disposition.
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

Note 2 - Basis of Presentation and Summary of Significant Accounting Policies (Continued)

Property and Equipment (Continued): The PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment are stated at cost or fair value at the date of donation, if donated. The domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land, and other properties are recorded based on fair value at the date of donation, appraisal value, or replacement cost. Expenditures greater than $5,000 which increase values or extend the useful lives of the respective assets are capitalized. Depreciation is computed using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the assets.

PCUSA, A Corporation holds title to various other foreign properties. Such properties include properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land, and property held for disposition. PCUSA, A Corporation has administrative responsibility for property taxes, insurance, maintenance, and improvements for these properties. Generally, it is PCUSA, A Corporation's policy to exclude the cost or donated value of foreign properties from its financial records.

PCUSA, A Corporation reviews for the impairment of long-lived assets subject to depreciation and amortization, including property and equipment, whenever events or changes in circumstances indicate that the carrying amount of these assets may not be recoverable. If this review were to result in the conclusion that the carrying value of long-lived assets would not be recoverable, then a write down of the assets would be recorded through a charge to net assets equal to the difference in the fair market value of the assets and their carrying value. No such impairment losses were recognized for the years ended December 31, 2017 and 2016.

Property Available for Sale: At December 31, 2017 and 2016, property in Santa Fe, New Mexico is classified as available for sale. PCUSA, A Corporation entered into a contract for sale of this property in March 2017 and expects to close in 2018.

Deferred Revenue: PCUSA, A Corporation holds special events each year. Monies received to support future special events are recorded as deferred revenue.

Collections: PCUSA, A Corporation's collections consist of works of art, ecclesiastical objects and papers, historical treasures, archeological specimens, and other assets. The collections, which were acquired through purchases and contributions since PCUSA, A Corporation's inception, are not recognized as assets on the consolidated statements of financial position. Purchases of collection items are recorded as decreases in unrestricted net assets in the year in which the items are acquired or as temporarily or permanently restricted net assets if the assets used to purchase the items are restricted by donors. Contributed collection items are not reflected on the consolidated financial statements. Proceeds from deaccessions or insurance recoveries are reflected as increases in the appropriate net asset classes.

Use of Estimates: The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements. Estimates also affect the reported amounts of revenue and expenses during the reporting period.

Income Taxes: PCUSA, A Corporation is exempt from income taxes under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. However, PCUSA, A Corporation is subject to federal income tax on any unrelated business taxable income.

Note 2 - Basis of Presentation and Summary of Significant Accounting Policies (Continued)

Income Taxes (Continued): Accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America prescribe recognition thresholds and measurement attributes for the financial statement recognition and measurement of a tax position taken or expected to be taken in a tax return. Tax benefits or liabilities will be recognized only if the tax position would "more-likely-than-not" be sustained in a tax examination, with a tax examination being presumed to occur. The amount recognized will be the largest amount of tax benefit or liability that is greater than 50% likely of being realized on examination. For tax positions not meeting the "more-likely-than-not" test, no tax benefit or liability will be recorded. Management has concluded that it is unaware of any tax benefits or liabilities to be recognized at December 31, 2017, and does not expect this to change in the next 12 months.

PCUSA, A Corporation would recognize interest and penalties related to uncertain tax positions in interest and income tax expense, respectively. PCUSA, A Corporation has no amounts accrued for interest or penalties as of December 31, 2017 and 2016. PCUSA, A Corporation is no longer subject to examination by taxing authorities for the years before December 31, 2013.

New Accounting Pronouncements: In August 2016, the FASB issued Accounting Standards Update
No. 2016-14 (ASU 2016-14), Presentation of Financial Statements of Not-for-Profit Entities. This updated guidance changes presentation and disclosure requirements for not-for-profit entities to provide more relevant information about their resources (and the changes in those resources) to donors, grantors, creditors and other users. This guidance included qualitative and quantitative requirements in the following areas: 1) net asset classes; 2) investment return;
3) expenses; 4) liquidity and availability of resources; and 5) presentation of operating cash flows. This standard will be effective for the calendar year ending December 31, 2018.

In May 2014, the FASB issued ASU 2014-09, Revenue from Contracts with Customers. The standard's core principle is that a company will recognize revenue when it transfers promised goods or services to customers in an amount that reflects the consideration to which the company expects to be entitled in exchange for those goods or services.
This standard also includes expanded disclosure requirements that result in an entity providing users of financial statements with comprehensive information about the nature, amount, timing, and uncertainty of revenue and cash flows arising from the entity's contracts with customers. This standard will be effective for the calendar year ending December 31, 2019.

In February 2016, the FASB issued ASU 2016-02, Leases. The standard requires all leases with lease terms over 12 months to be capitalized as a right-of-use asset and lease liability on the balance sheet at the date of lease commencement. Leases will be classified as either finance or operating. This distinction will be relevant for the pattern of expense recognition in the income statement. This standard will be effective for the calendar year ending December

In June 2016, the FASB issued ASU 2016-13, Financial Instruments-Credit Losses. The standard requires a financial asset (including trade receivables) measured at amortized cost basis to be presented at the net amount expected to be collected. Thus, the income statement will reflect the measurement of credit losses for newly-recognized financial assets as well as the expected increases or decreases of expected credit losses that have taken place during the period. This standard will be effective for the calendar year ending December 31, 2021.

PCUSA, A Corporation is currently in the process of evaluating the impact of the adoption of these ASUs on the consolidated financial statements.

Note 2 - Basis of Presentation and Summary of Significant Accounting Policies (Continued)

Subsequent Events: Subsequent events for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation have been considered through the date of the Independent Auditor's Report which represents the date the consolidated financial statements were available to be issued.

Reclassifications: Certain reclassifications have been made to the prior year consolidated financial statements to conform to the current year consolidated financial statement presentation. These reclassifications had no effect on the change in net assets.

Income received by PCUSA, A Corporation from the Foundation is net of administrative fees of outside managers.

Note 5 - Beneficial Interest in Perpetual Trusts

Funds held in trust by others represent resources neither in the possession nor under the control of PCUSA, A Corporation, but held and administered by outside trustees, with PCUSA, A Corporation deriving only income from such funds. Such investments are recorded in the consolidated statement of financial position at the fair value of the principal amounts, which represents the estimated present value of the expected future cash flows, and the income, including fair value adjustments of $7,188,030 and $1,512,944 during the years ended December 31, 2017 and 2016, respectively, is recorded in the consolidated statement of activities and changes in net assets.

PCUSA, A Corporation is a named beneficiary in certain trusts for which it has been unable to obtain the necessary information to measure its interest. Therefore, these trusts are not recorded.

Note 6 - Endowment Composition

In accordance with the Uniform Prudent Management of Institutional Funds Act (UPMIFA), the Organization considers the following factors in making a determination to appropriate or accumulate donor-restricted endowment funds:

1) The duration and preservation of the fund.
2) The purposes of the donor-restricted endowment fund.
3) General economic conditions.
4) The possible effect of inflation and deflation.
5) The expected total return from income and the appreciation of investments.
6) Other resources of the Organization.
7) The investment policies of the Organization.

Appropriation of Endowment Assets: PCUSA, A Corporation receives spending formula from the Foundation whereby PCUSA, A Corporation receives investment income from unrestricted and restricted endowments. The endowments are owned, held and invested by the Foundation for the General Assembly's use as the PCUSA, A Corporation has a beneficial interest in the income of these endowment funds.

The current policy calls for a 4.25% annual total return payout rate of the average market value based on the 20-quarter rolling average with an eighteen-month lag. Pursuant to this policy, the Foundation paid the beneficiaries of certain endowments 4.5% (based on the December 31, 2016 market value) and 4.4% (based on the December 31, 2015 market value) in 2017 and 2016, respectively. The spending formula will be monitored to determine the effects of changing return and inflation expectations on the preservation of purchasing power and the generation of appropriate levels of spendable income.

Investment Policies: The Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation are charged with the responsibility of managing the endowment assets that benefit the Church. The overall goal in management of these funds is to generate a long-term rate of return that provides sustainable distributions to support the mission within reasonable levels of risk.

The Trustees adhere to modern portfolio theory, which has as its basis risk reduction through diversification. Diversification is obtained through the use of multiple assets classes as well as multiple investments within these asset classes. Asset classes that may be used include (but are not limited to) domestic and international stocks and bonds, hedge funds, private equity (venture capital and corporate finance), and real property (real estate, minerals and timber). The investment strategy is implemented through the selection of external advisors and managers with expertise and successful histories in the management of specific asset classes.

The Trustees' role is one of setting and reviewing policy; and retaining, monitoring, and evaluating advisors and investment managers. It is the Trustees' desire to find ways to invest these funds in accordance with the social witness principles of the PCUSA. The Trustees will review the investment policy statement at least annually.

The primary financial objectives of the permanent endowment funds (the "Fund") are to (1) provide a stream of relatively stable and constant earnings in support of annual budgetary needs and (2) to preserve and enhance the real (inflation-adjusted) purchasing power of the Fund.

The long-term investment objective of the Fund is to attain a real total annualized return of at least 5%. The calculation of real total return includes all realized and unrealized capital changes plus all interest, rent, dividend, and other income earned by the portfolio, adjusted for inflation, during a year, net of investment expenses, on average, over a five-to-seven year period. Secondary objectives are to (1) outperform the Fund's custom benchmark, a weighted average return based on target asset allocation and index returns and (2) to outperform the median return of a pool of endowment funds with broadly similar investment objectives and policies. The Fund's objective is to attain estimate nominal compound return of 9% with a standard deviation of 11.3% of the current portfolio.

The ability of each borrower congregation to pay PCUSA, A Corporation for the loan(s) made to the congregation may depend on the contributions the congregation receives from its members. Therefore, payments to PCUSA, A Corporation may depend on the level of membership of the borrower congregations, and on the maintenance of adequate contributions by individual members to their congregations, as well as on prudent management by those congregations of their finances. The following is a summary of the gross loan balances for each Synod at December 31, 2017 and 2016.

Note 10 - Property and Equipment, net (Continued)

Property and equipment decreased 34.6% due to the transfer of the Ghost Ranch Education and Retreat Center operations to the National Ghost Ranch Foundation (NGRF) effective December 31, 2016, with the Foundation's constituent corporation, the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ("BCE") resuming control of the real property and improvements. PCUSA, A Corporation previously operated Ghost Ranch Education and Retreat Center under limited power of attorney from the Foundation. The property is now held by BCE as investment property.

Note 11 - Benefits Data

Substantially all employees of PCUSA, A Corporation participate in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the "Benefits Plan") which is administered by the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the "Board of Pensions"). The Benefits Plan is a comprehensive benefits program, which provides a defined benefit pension plan, a long-term disability plan, a death benefit plan, and a major medical plan. The assets of the Benefits Plan are commingled for investment purposes; however, accounting for each plan is separately maintained.

The defined benefit pension plan's total net assets available for benefits, as reported by the Board of Pensions, were $8,658,320,000 and $7,734,336,000 at December 31, 2017 and 2016, respectively. The defined benefit pension plan's total Accumulated Plan Benefit Obligations, as reported by the Board of Pensions, were $6,600,749,000 and $6,228,650,000 at December 31, 2017 and 2016, respectively. Since the Benefits Plan is a Church Plan under the Internal Revenue Code, PCUSA, A Corporation has no financial interest in the Benefits Plan assets nor does it have any liability for benefits payable, contingent or otherwise, under the Benefits Plan or its components.

PCUSA, A Corporation pays the entire cost for employee participation in the defined benefit pension plan, long-term disability plan, death benefit plan and employee-only coverage associated with the medical plan. There is employee cost sharing for employee-elected levels of coverage related to spouse and/or dependents. Employees have the option to purchase additional coverage such as dental, long-term care, and life insurance.

PCUSA, A Corporation makes two levels of employer contributions for the lay and term contract benefit eligible employees into the retirement savings plan. The OGA regular lay exempt staff receive employer contributions that adheres to the lay equalization schedule. Effective 2017, all PMA lay staff and OGA lay non-exempt staff receive an employer contribution of 4% of base salary. Contributions to the lay equalization plan were $72,126 for 2017 and $610,379 for 2016; and contributions to the 403b plan were $520,197 for 2017 and $0 for 2016, respectively.

Credit Risk: PCUSA, A Corporation maintains cash and cash equivalents with various financial institutions. At times, such cash and cash equivalents may be in excess of the FDIC insurance level. PCUSA, A Corporation has not experienced any losses in such accounts and management believes PCUSA, A Corporation is not exposed to any significant credit risks on cash and cash equivalents.

Note 13 - Fair Value

United States generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) define and establish a framework for measuring fair value and expand disclosures about fair value measurements. GAAP emphasizes fair value is a market-based measurement and enables the reader of the financial statements to assess the inputs used to develop those measurements by establishing a fair value hierarchy for ranking the quality and reliability of the information used to determine fair values.

The assets and liabilities carried at fair value are classified and disclosed in one of the following three categories:

- Level 1: Valuations for assets and liabilities traded in active exchange markets, such as the New York Stock Exchange. Valuations are obtained as of the measurement date from readily available pricing sources for market transactions involving identical assets or liabilities (market approach).
- Level 2: Valuations for assets and liabilities traded in less active dealer or broker markets. Valuations are obtained from quoted prices by third party pricing sources for similar assets or liabilities; quoted prices in markets that are not active; or other inputs that are observable or can be corroborated. The valuation methodology for Level 2 investments consists of both income and market approaches, as appropriate for the specific investment.
- Level 3: Valuations for assets and liabilities are unobservable and significant. Valuations reflect management's best estimate of what market participants would use in pricing an asset or liability at the measurement date.

In many cases, a valuation technique used to measure fair value includes inputs from multiple levels of the fair value hierarchy. The lowest level of significant input determines the categorization of the entire fair value measurement in the hierarchy.

Treasury bonds, equities and mutual funds are valued at the closing price reported in the active market in which the bonds are traded (Level 1 inputs). Corporate bonds and agency bonds are valued at quoted prices for identical or similar assets in non-active markets since these bonds trade infrequently (Level 2 inputs - market). Mortgage backed securities are valued using matrix pricing, which is a mathematical technique widely used to value debt securities without relying exclusively on quoted prices for the specific securities, but rather by relying on the securities' relationship to other benchmark quoted securities (Level 2 inputs - market).

The fair value of the certificates of deposit, equity investment, and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. ("PILP") denominational accounts were recalculated by applying the interest rate to the initial investments, and no discounts for credit quality or liquidity were determined to be applicable (Level 2 inputs).

The investment in the unitized pool is managed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation. The investment objectives of the fund are to (1) provide a stream of relatively stable and constant earnings in support of annual budgetary needs and (2) preserve and enhance the real (inflation-adjusted) purchasing power of the fund. The Foundation's investment policy is documented in the Statement of Investment Policies and Objectives for the Endowment Fund amended November 14, 2013.
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

The underlying investments in the unitized pool are held in accordance with specific guidelines set forth by the Foundation and various targets have been established with regard to allowable investments purchased by the unitized pool.

At December 31, 2017, the underlying investments of the unitized pool consist of the following asset classes:

<thead>

Withdrawals from the unitized pool are available within 90 days with prior written notice. Pursuant to U.S. GAAP, management has considered redemption restrictions to assess classification of the fair value inputs. As a result, unitized pool assets with redemption periods of 90 days or less are considered Level 2 fair value measurements. The fair value of the beneficial interests in the perpetual trust assets (life income funds and funds held in trust by others) is based on a valuation model that calculates the present value of estimated distributed income. The valuation model incorporates the fair value of investment holdings, which are readily marketable securities valued at quoted prices and incorporates assumptions that market participants would use in estimating future distributed income. PCUSA, A Corporation is able to compare the valuation model inputs and results to widely available published industry data for reasonableness. PCUSA does not have the ability to redeem the investment within 90 days (Level 3 inputs - market).

The amount of fundraising expenses as a percentage of funds raised was 9% and 13% for the years ended December 31, 2017 and 2016, respectively. Please note that in 2017, there were more disasters than typically have occurred in recent years and the Presbyterian Disaster Program received $12.8 million above their budgeted amount for disaster relief. This affects the lower 2017 fundraising percent.

Note 15 - Commitments and Contingencies

PCUSA, A Corporation holds and participates in a self-insurance fund that exists to provide a source of funds for that portion of certain losses not covered by commercial insurance to cover deductibles on commercial insurance and for certain classes of uninsured losses. Various General Assembly-level agencies and corporations are included in the Fund. The largest possible loss to be assumed in any one event or occurrence is $250,000, with $1,000,000 as the largest potential aggregate of all claims in a single calendar year.

The minimum balance of the self-insurance fund shall not fall below $5,000,000 as a result of claims paid. In the event this happens, an assessment will be made to the insured entities to return the fund to the $5,000,000 minimum balance. The assessment will be based on each insured entity's 5-year loss ratio. A 1% minimum assessment will be made by the entities that have not experienced any losses in the 5-year period. The balance of the Fund reflected as designated net assets by PCUSA, A Corporation was $6,763,390 and $6,102,565 at December 31, 2017 and 2016, respectively.

During the ordinary course of business, PCUSA, A Corporation is subject to pending and threatened legal actions. Management of PCUSA, A Corporation does not believe that any of these actions will have a material adverse effect on PCUSA, A Corporation's consolidated financial position or change in net assets.

Note 16 - Related Party Transactions

Foundation: The Foundation provides certain investment, custodial, and deferred giving services to PCUSA, A Corporation. The Foundation recoups the cost of those services not covered from the income of its own endowment funds by quarterly charges against the investment pools in which the funds administered by the Foundation are invested. These charges were recovered from the principal and income of these pools. Such costs consist of salary and benefits; outside investment services; and other operating expenses.

The income received by PCUSA, A Corporation from the Foundation is net of administrative fees of outside managers as described previously. PCUSA, A Corporation's investments and unrestricted and restricted endowment owned and held by the Foundation totaled $308.2 million and $281.1 million and investments held by the Foundation totaled $68.4 million and $59.6 million on behalf of the General Assembly at December 31, 2017 and December 31, 2016 respectively.

The Foundation's administration, custodial and investment management fees are assessed monthly based on the prior month end market value against the total fund.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation approved to transfer the operations of Ghost Ranch Education and Retreat Center to the National Ghost Ranch Foundation (NGRF), with responsibility being transferred to the Foundation's constituent corporation, the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ("BCE"), effective December 31, 2016.

Board of National Missions: There are certain church loan funds whereby the fiduciary ownership belongs to the Board of National Missions, a constituent corporation of the Foundation. PCUSA, A Corporation is the disbursing agent for those funds under a limited power of attorney from the Foundation. PILP administers the Loan Program under an administrative services agreement with PCUSA, A Corporation. Accordingly, these funds are not reflected in the consolidated financial statements but are administered by PCUSA, A Corporation. These loan funds were approximately $267,000,000 and $247,000,000 at December 31, 2017 and 2016, respectively.

Board of Pensions: PCUSA, A Corporation served as a receiving agent for funds designated for the Board of Pensions. PCUSA, A Corporation received $1,160,266 and $1,149,266 from congregations for the years ended December 31, 2017 and 2016, of which $303,303 and $325,385 was yet to be remitted to the Board of Pensions.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.: PCUSA, A Corporation leases office space and provides administrative support to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. ("PILP") by contract. For the years ended December 31, 2017 and 2016, administrative support charged to PILP was $158,402 and $153,788, respectively. Office space charged to PILP was $63,447 and $61,599 for 2017 and 2016, respectively.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (Continued): On June 29, 2000, PCUSA, A Corporation entered into an operating agreement with PILP under which PILP will provide administrative services (e.g., origination and loan servicing) for PCUSA, A Corporation's church loan program at cost in an effort to streamline the coordination process between PCUSA, A Corporation's church loan program and PILP's loan program. PCUSA, A Corporation reimbursed PILP $774,950 and $775,171 for the actual costs of such services during 2017 and 2016, respectively.

PCUSA, A Corporation and PILP have issued joint loans through participation agreements. For the years ended December 31, 2017 and 2016, total loans outstanding were $30,427,273 and $30,228,014 respectively, under these participation agreements.

PILP issued a secured loan to PCUSA, A Corporation for the benefit of the Presbyterian Historical Society during 2015. The balance was $330,000 and $306,940, respectively, as of December 31, 2017 and 2016. The terms of the agreement call for 120 payments, with an interest rate of 4.25% and a maturity date of February 1, 2027.

PCUSA, A Corporation has a current commitment, effective May 1, 2014, to PILP for five years to invest up to $5,000,000 in short and intermediate term accounts called denominational account receipts (DAR). As of December 31, 2017 and 2016, investments with PILP were $8,082,918 and $8,012,432, respectively. At December 31, 2017 and 2016, fixed interest rates ranged from 0.30% to 1.49% and 0.45% to 1.74%, respectively, and the adjustable rate ranged from 0.25% to 1.19% and 0.40% to 1.14%, respectively. For the year ended December 31, 2017, the Foundation did not invest with PILP from PCUSA, A Corporation's unrestricted endowment funds.

Presbyterian Publishing Corporation: PCUSA, A Corporation leases office space to Presbyterian Publishing Corporation ("PPC") under an operating lease. For the years ended December 31, 2017 and 2016, rental income was $164,889 and $161,278, respectively. PPC's lease expired at the end of 2014 and a new lease addendum was signed for 2015-2018. Other related expenses charged to PPC for telephone, postage, and copy services were $62,365 and $49,849 in 2017 and 2016, respectively.

PPC pays PCUSA for supplemental warehousing and distribution services. Fees paid by PPC under this agreement in 2017 and 2016 were $37,021 and $27,549 for fulfillment fees and $188,188 and $102,929 for freight, respectively.

PPC publishes various pamphlets, magazines, and books for PCUSA, A Corporation during the year on a project-by-project basis. Expenses related to this type of work in 2017 and 2016 were $157,442 and $171,826, respectively. PPC also pays PCUSA, A Corporation for advertising space in various church publications. Advertising expense under such arrangements was $2,269 and $1,725 in 2017 and 2016, respectively.

Note 17 - Prior Period Adjustment

During the year ended December 31, 2017, PCUSA, A Corporation identified misstatements in the prior year's financial statements. PCUSA, A Corporation determined several outside trusts for which it is the beneficiary had not been recorded. The value of these trusts as of January 1, 2016 was $4,668,371 which increased beginning permanently restricted net assets. Certain expenses relating the Theological Education Fund for the years ended December 31, 2015 and 2016 totaling $1,396,845 and $709,935, respectively were not expensed. Properly reflecting these expenses resulted in a decrease to temporarily restricted net assets as of January 1, 2016 of $1,396,845. In addition, during 2017, the Presbyterian Mission Agency's Legal Office reviewed the General Assembly Mission Board's ("GAMB") Restricted Fund and determined it was board restricted rather than donor restricted. This resulted in an increase to unrestricted designated net assets and a decrease to permanently restricted net assets of $15,394,309 as of January 1, 2016.

10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION
Item 11-01

Moved to 10 Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination, as Item 10-11. [See p. 831.]

Item 11-02

[The assembly approved Item 11-02 as amended. See pp. 55–56.]

On Calling for an Immediate Moratorium on All Executions—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Join the 171st (1959), 177th (1965), and the 189th (1977) General Assemblies of the United Presbyterian Church; the 106th General Assembly (1966) of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.; and the 197th General Assembly (1985), 212th General Assembly (2000), 219th General Assembly (2010), and 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and declare its continuing opposition to capital punishment.

2. Call for an immediate moratorium on [all executions] [the imposition of the death penalty] in all jurisdictions that impose capital punishment [and for the commutation of all death sentences to sentences of life imprisonment].

[3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries, to post and publicize an updating of its resources on criminal justice and capital punishment, including the General Assembly’s resolution on Restorative Justice (2000), guidance for prison ministries, and any actions from the 223rd General Assembly (2018) advocating greater fairness in policing, provision of public defenders, availability of diversion and treatment programs, bail and sentencing standards for drug and other crime, consistent with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s vision of a less violent and more healing society, based in the teachings and example of Jesus of Nazareth.]

[3.] [4.] Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate the call for an immediate moratorium and our continuing opposition to capital punishment to the president of the United States, our representatives in Congress, as well as the governors and legislators of the thirty-three states with persons incarcerated while awaiting execution [and to call for the commutation of all life sentences to sentences of life imprisonment].

Rationale

This is the fourth anniversary of the last resolution of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding capital punishment.

Since 2007, seven more states—New Jersey, New York, New Mexico, Illinois, Connecticut, Maryland, and Delaware—have abolished the death penalty. We give thanks that the death penalty has been abolished in a total of nineteen states.

Both as Christians and as citizens of the United States of America, we believe that one of the greatest tragedies that can occur is the execution of an innocent person by the state, yet we know that this has occurred repeatedly throughout history. Human judgment is always fallible, including the judgments of juries and judges deciding death penalty cases.

It has been recognized by numerous authoritative sources that the death penalty has been imposed in a racially discriminatory manner. No state has been found to be in full compliance with the American Bar Associations Guidelines and other ABA policies regarding the death penalty. Even those states that have “adopted” the guidelines often have fallen short in finding qualified defense counsel and providing adequate compensation for defense counsel and supporting services (Director of ABA Death Penalty Representation Project July 31, 2017).

We recognize that the death penalty is a moral issue that demands paramount discernment by legislative and judicial bodies. Since 1973, 159 people have been released from death row with evidence of their innocence. From 1973–1999, there was an average of three exonerations per year, nationally. From 2000–2011, there has been an average of five exonerations per year, nationally (Death Penalty Information Center, Facts about the Death Penalty, current as of July 7, 2017). Given these rates, it is reasonable to assume that judges and juries will continue to make such errors in future death penalty cases. Yet such errors are not morally defensible.

Nor can the legal system, as presently structured, provide any assurance against innocent persons being subjected to the death penalty. In recent years, prisoner appeals have actually been curtailed, increasing the risk of the execution of innocent people.

In 1996, new legislation drastically limited federal court review of death penalty appeals and gutted public funding of legal aid services for death row prisoners (PC(USA), 212th General Assembly [2000]).
Further, human judgment is flawed and influenced by human sinfulness. For example, in 1990, the United States General Accounting Office reported a pattern of evidence indicating racial disparities in charging, sentencing, and imposition of the death penalty. In 82 percent of their studies, race of the victim was found to influence the likelihood of being charged with capital murder or receiving a death sentence, i.e. those who murdered whites were found to be more likely to be sentenced to death than those who murdered blacks. This finding was remarkably consistent across data sets, states, data collection methods, and analytic techniques. The finding held for high-, medium-, and low-quality studies (U.S. General Accounting Office, Report GGD-90-57, Death Penalty Sentencing: Research Indicates Pattern of Racial Disparities, February 26, 1990, 5).

A comprehensive study of the death penalty in North Carolina found that the odds of receiving a death sentence rose by 3.5 times among those defendants whose victims were white (Professor Jack Boger and Dr. Isaac Unah, “Preliminary Report on the Findings of the North Carolina Death Penalty Study 2001.” University of North Carolina, April 16, 2001).

A study in California found that those who killed whites were more than three times more likely to be sentenced to death than those who killed blacks and more than four times more likely than those who killed Latinos (Glenn Pierce and Michael Radelet, “The Impact of Legally Inappropriate Factors on Death Sentencing for California Homicides, 1990–1999.” Santa Clara Law Review, Vol. 46. 2005).

As of July 7, 2017, among the 1,456 people who have been executed in the United States since 1977, 307 have been executed for interracial murders. Of these, 20 involved white defendants and black victims and 287 involved black defendants and white victims (Death Penalty Information Center, Facts about the Death Penalty, current as of July 7, 2017).

Our legal system does not currently assure that persons accused of crimes receive full economic justice. The right to effective counsel is recognized as one of our most fundamental rights, and one of our most important protections against wrongful convictions. However, about 90 percent of those persons facing capital charges cannot afford their own attorney.

As Christians, we recognize God as sovereign in all spheres of human life, including the political sphere. We declare that God’s commandment against killing is still good law. We follow a Lord who taught us to go beyond “an eye for an eye.” We believe that human individuals and institutions are sinful and make mistakes. And, as humans, we lack any power to correct our errors if we wrongly execute another human being.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-02 calls for renewed witness for a moratorium on the death penalty in the states where it remains on the books.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval with amendment by adding a new Recommendation 3. and renumbering current Recommendation 3. as Recommendation 4.

“[3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries, to post and publicize an updating of its resources on criminal justice and capital punishment, including the General Assembly’s resolution on Restorative Justice (2000), guidance for prison ministries, and any actions from the 223rd General Assembly (2018) advocating greater fairness in policing, provision of public defenders, availability of diversion and treatment programs, bail and sentencing standards for drug and other crime, consistent with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s vision of a less violent and more healing society, based in the teachings and example of Jesus of Nazareth.]”

The Advisory Committee commends the Presbytery of Atlanta and concurring presbyteries in putting forth this overture and helping increase the number of states adopting a more humane policy than capital punishment. This overture is rightly similar to that approved in 2000: https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/5-Presbyterian Teachings on the Death Penalty-2000.pdf.

The overture’s rationale underlines the racial, economic, regional, and other inequities in the application of the death penalty and the resultant rate of false convictions. At the same time, the fundamental theological and ethical arguments against the death penalty would stand even if the administration of justice in each case were flawless. The Gospel is about calling people to repentance and protecting people from violence in thought as well as deed. Past General Assemblies have considered arguments for the purported deterrent effect of capital punishment, ways that survivors may find recovery and (sometimes) the capacity to forgive, and modes by which other countries have decreased their murder and violent crime rates without the death penalty (murder rates in the U.S. are currently declining in most jurisdictions).

The amendment ACSWP proposes seeks to make Presbyterians more aware of the Christian moral logic undergirding the church’s positions, as is found in the Restorative Justice policy: https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/4-restorative-justice-2002.pdf. Clearly past commissioners, for example, have recognized that the innocent victim of a sociopath cannot be restored to this life, but that restorative justice encompasses the character of the whole community that must “weep with those who weep” and yet “repay no one evil for evil” (Romans 12:15b, 17a, NRSV).

The amendment would also cover dissemination of any measures approved in the reports, The “Gospel from St Louis” on urban ministry in the context of racial and class division, and “Healing Not Punishment” on reforming drug laws.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

_A dvise & Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns._

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-02.

Believing that “The LORD gives both death and life; he brings some down to the grave but raises others up,” (1 Samuel 2:6, New Living Translation), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), informed by the committee’s advocacy purpose to address injustices toward people of color both within the PC(USA) and society, is in total agreement with the following statement in the overturing, and thus it strongly supports its approval:

It has been recognized by numerous authoritative sources that the death penalty has been imposed in a racially discriminatory manner. No state has been found to be in full compliance with the American Bar Associations Guidelines and other ABA policies regarding the death penalty. Even those states that have “adopted” the guidelines often have fallen short in finding qualified defense counsel and providing adequate compensation for defense counsel and supporting services (Director of ABA Death Penalty Representation Project July 31, 2017).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency has a helpful summary of the PC(USA)’s policy and teachings on the Death Penalty, including this action from the 212th General Assembly (2000):

The 212th General Assembly (2000) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Reaffirms the positions of the 171st (1959), 177th (1965), and 189th (1977) General Assemblies of the United Presbyterian Church, the 106th General Assembly (1966) of the Presbyterian Church U.S., and the 197th General Assembly (1985) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (Minutes, 1985, Part I, p. 682) and declares its continuing opposition to capital punishment.

2. Calls for an immediate moratorium on all executions in all jurisdictions that impose capital punishment.

3. Directs the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate the call for an immediate moratorium and our continuing opposition to capital punishment to the President of the United States, our representatives in Congress, as well as the governors and legislators of the thirty-eight states with persons incarcerated while awaiting execution.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-02.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta has clearly articulated adequate rationale for this overture calling for an immediate moratorium on all executions, and the ACWC wholeheartedly advocates for its passage.

Our rationale is approached through the lens of gender justice. That is, looking at how the execution of human life extinguishes not only the accused, but also extinguishes the possibility of restored relationship and healing between the accused and their family, and even the healing of the murdered individual’s family.

The Death Penalty Information Center states “The death penalty adversely affects both families of murder victims and families of the accused, according to two recent journal articles in _Psychology Today_:

1. Dr. Robert T. Muller reports that psychological studies have found that the death penalty produces negative effects on families and friends of murder victims (referred to as “co-victims”). One University of Minnesota study found that just 2.5 percent of co-victims reported achieving closure as a result of capital punishment, while 20.1 percent said the execution did not help them heal. That may be because, as one co-victim described it, “Healing is a process, not an event.” A 2012 Marquette University Law School study reported that co-victims had improved physical and psychological health and greater satisfaction with the legal system in cases where perpetrators received life sentences, rather than death sentences. The authors of that study said co-victims, “may prefer the finality of a life sentence and the obscurity into which the defendant will quickly fall, to the continued uncertainty and publicity of the death penalty.” Lula Redmond, a Florida therapist who works with family members of murder victims, said, “More often than not, families of murder victims do not experience the relief they expected to feel at the execution. Taking a life doesn’t fill that void, but it’s generally not until after the execution that families realize this.” A number of co-victims expressed sympathy for family members of the condemned, but the death penalty process also can polarize the families, obstructing healing for both.
2. An article for the University of Michigan Journal of Law Reform by Professor Michael Radelet of the University of Colorado at Boulder describes the retributive effects of the death penalty on the family, friends, and attorneys of death row prisoners. Radelet compares these impacts to the effect of life without parole and argues “that the death penalty’s added punishment over life without parole often punishes the family just as much as the inmate, and after the execution the full brunt of the punishment falls on the family. This added impact disproportionately punishes women and children.” These effects on people other than the inmate, he writes, “undermine the principle that the criminal justice system punishes only the guilty and never the innocent. The death penalty affects everyone who knows, cares for, or works with the death row inmate.” [R. Muller, “Death Penalty May Not Bring Peace to Victims’ Families,” Psychology Today, October 19, 2016; M. Radelet, “The Incremental Retributive Impact of a Death Sentence Over Life Without Parole,” University of Michigan Journal of Law Reform, Volume 49, Issue 4, 2016.) See Studies and Victims. https://deathpenaltyinfo.org/node/6539.]

Continuing, the ACWC examined how a moratorium on all executions might positively impact women and families. No matter if the person is a woman or a man serving life without parole, that person is still a spouse, partner, or parent even though they are incarcerated, and opportunities for having relationships with their family members are encouraged at most prison facilities. Relationships are the key to transformation from brokenness to wholeness for every human being, each one created in God’s Holy Image. C.S. Lewis said, “The majority of people’s problems are caused by the fact that they are disconnected with the rest of creation.” If disconnection is the root of many of our problems, then reconnection with family members can be a significant key to a person’s transformation, even while incarcerated, and the maintenance of connection (relationship) can positively impact the lives of all involved.

Terry Kupers, M.D. writes, “The most striking feature of the literature about the benefits of visits for prisoners, their families and communities, is that there is little if any contrary argument and conflicting data to the general principle that the better the quality of visitation throughout a prisoner’s incarceration, the better the effects on the prisoner, his or her post-release adjustment, the family of the prisoner and the community. There is such a strong and universal consensus on this point that many states assume the positive correlation in their official policies.” [Terry A. Kupers, M.D., “Brief Literature Review, re: Prison Visiting,” (October 9, 2000), National Organization of Forensic Social Work, nofsw.org/wp-content/.../11/THE-IMPORTANCE-OF-FAMILY-VISITATION.docx.]

Thus, if no one benefits from the execution of a human life, and everyone has the potential to benefit from a sentence of life without parole, the ACWC sees the advocacy of the approval of this overture as a no-brainer.

On Recognizing the Reverend Henry Highland Garnet’s Prophetic Voice for Today—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to:

1. Recognize the prophetic witness of the Reverend Henry Highland Garnet, pastor of 15th Street Presbyterian Church in Washington, D.C.[4] and Shiloh Presbyterian Church in New York City,[4] and founding pastor of Grace Memorial Presbyterian Church in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, which is celebrating its 150th anniversary this year.

2. Authorize an anniversary publishing of “A Memorial Discourse,” to be published by the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, with the proceeds to benefit [the 175-year-old] 15th Street Presbyterian Church, Grace Memorial Presbyterian Church, and St. James Presbyterian Church, which will soon celebrate its 125th anniversary, in close proximity to Hamilton Grange National Park. Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) shall consult with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns on how the new publication can best meet the needs of contemporary and future ministries of the PC(USA) including the unique needs of local congregations and youth ministries [the successor church to Shiloh Presbyterian Church].

3. Encourage the members of the [denomination] [PC(USA)] to visit [these congregations] as shrines to freedom [these congregations] and to actively support their continuing ministry.
4. Encourage Presbyterian seminaries and other institutions of higher learning to actively study the impact of this divinely gifted orator and writer, and the way in which his witness helped lead to such documents as the Confession of Belhar.

5. Request Presbyterian Publishing Corporation to include “A Memorial Discourse” in any materials developed in the future for the study of The Confession of Belhar.

Rationale

The Reverend Henry Highland Garnet gave what is considered the most important speech in African American history as the first of his race to address Congress on February 12, 1865. The stakes were immense. President Abraham Lincoln, a frequent visitor to New York Avenue Presbyterian Church a block from the White House, had just achieved the Congressional passage of the first constitutional amendment in sixty years. Lincoln, through the House chaplain, decided that Garnet could make the moral case for the prosecution of a bloody war and a watershed change in American society during a Memorial Service on his 56th birthday. The lesson for today’s times was that Lincoln chose the most strident and most eloquent opponent of slavery over the preceding two decades instead of seeking a conciliatory or middle-of-the-road approach.

In a Memorial Discourse published by the Session of 15th Street Presbyterian Church soon after the speech—the speech, which became known by its signature phrase “Let the Monster Perish, Perish Now and Perish Forever”—was combined with Garnet’s first major address to those enslaved in the United States in Buffalo in 1843 and his message of thanks to the relief committee after the anti-draft riots in New York City in 1865. That original speech was considered inflammatory because it called for a general strike and armed rebellion by those in slavery. In 1863, as the dean of black pastors in New York City, Garnet was sought by mobs for lynching.

Senator Charles Sumner, the architect of Congressional Reconstruction, gave his copy of “A Memorial Discourse” to the Harvard University library where the heavily annotated passages show how Garnet guided Sumner’s subsequent passage of the 14th Amendment and 15th Amendment. That a mere eighteen months later, Garnet saw his faith confirmed through God’s movement in history is a profound Scriptural lesson, the modern equivalent of the parting of the Red Sea. As the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) discerns its adherence to the new Confession of Belhar, Garnet’s witness is the roadmap for addressing such issues as the retention of Confederate statues and continuing disparities in wealth, education, health, and well-being. In that first speech, Garnet said, “Let Your Motto Be Resistance, Resistance, Resistance.”

Garnet has been obscured in a tide of revision that tells the story of the American Civil War through the lens of the Confederacy. Having ordained Garnet, still a fugitive slave, as an elder and then a pastor in the Presbytery of Troy, the PC(USA) has a responsibility to history and to the Creator to witness his prophetic voice and to let his words speak not only for those in bondage but for the spirit of unity and moral righteousness displayed by the American people in 1865 with the passage of the 13th Amendment. Garnet tells us today that the tough issues can be addressed, that right can prevail and that justice only awaits our courage to speak as God would have us to do.

Many people are unaware of the Reverend Henry Highland Garnet’s extraordinary impact. This video, at 15th Street Presbyterian Church in Washington, D.C., from last Easter, reenacts three of his most important messages. Here is a digital copy of A Memorial Discourse, which the session of 15th Street printed soon after the most important speech in African American history.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-03

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-03 reminds the church of the witness of the Reverend Henry Highland Garnet and requests reprinting of a key speech.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval based upon additional considerations below.

In their rationale, the proponent presbyteries suggest a connection between the prophetic work of Rev. Garnet and the recent adoption of The Confession of Belhar by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Such a link could be made in the writing of the U.S. Accompanying Letter recommended in Item 14-01. Remembering the role played by abolitionists in the Presbyterian church in the pre-Civil War years would be part of the contextualization of Belhar called for in that overture.

In the comment from the Presbyterian Publishing House (Westminster/JohnKnox Press), they factor in the cost of commissioning a new introduction to what would be a small booklet containing several of Garnet’s powerful orations. The challenge would be to put Garnet’s forthright call for slaves to rebel into dialogue with other approaches to black liberation up to Martin Luther King Jr. and the South African authors of The Confession of Belhar. Garnet, born into a family that escaped slavery when he was young, was uncompromising in his abolitionism and held a position similar to that of John Brown.

For commissioners unfamiliar with Garnet’s role, an online search can reveal some of the numerous treatments of his life that testify to his influence. For an early recovery of his role, including the reprinting of ten of Garnet’s writings, see Earl Ofari, “Let Your Motto Be Resistance:” The Life and Thought of Henry Highland Garnet (Boston: Beacon, 1972).

PPC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-03

Comment on Item 11-03—From the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC).

The Reverend Henry Highland Garnet served as pastor of Shiloh Presbyterian Church in New York City, Fifteenth Street Presbyterian Church, Washington D.C., as president of Avery College, a co-ed school for free people of color, and later as the pastor of Grace Memorial Presbyterian Church, both in Pittsburgh. His “A Memorial Discourse,” delivered February 12, 1865, in the House of Representatives, Washington, D.C., is considered by many as one of the important speeches in African American history. The speech was reenacted by John William Templeton as part of the 175th anniversary of Fifteenth Street Presbyterian Church.

His lecture now resides in the public domain and is available to view and download free of charge through several sources on the Internet, including Google Books, Archive.org, the Hathi Trust Digital Library, the New York Public Library digital collection, and other sources. Hardback and paperback reprint editions of a short book that includes Garnet’s speech along with an introduction, a biography of Garnet, and various responses to his speech, are available for sale on Amazon.com.

Westminster John Knox Press, the book imprint of Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, receives no denominational funding for its work. To reprint this title would require typesetting, proofreading, and printing costs, in addition to the cost to hire someone to write a new introduction to the work. We estimate the cost at $4,825, including the cost of a new introduction, for a paperback printing of 1,000 copies. Alternately, an ebook-only edition of the book could be produced for $2,335. The work would require approximately twelve months to complete. Given the wide availability of free editions of the work, we do not expect that a new edition would generate many proceeds.

Item 11-04

[The assembly approved Item 11-04 as amended. See pp. 13, 57.]

On Clarifying the Position of the PC(USA) Regarding Appropriate Boundaries of Religious Liberty—From the Presbytery of Boise.

The Presbytery of Boise respectfully overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to take the following actions to affirm and clarify the position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding the appropriate boundaries of religious liberty:

1. Affirm the “Guiding Principles for Ethical Decisions Concerning Religious Freedom Around the World” as approved by the 214th General Assembly (2002) (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 666ff), as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s position regarding the intersection of religious freedom and human rights, and a sound application of the denomination’s policy statement, God Alone Is Lord of Conscience, as adopted by the 200th General Assembly (1988);

2. Affirm, consistent with these actions of previous assemblies, and the principles of the Confession of Belhar, that religious freedom is not a license for discrimination against any of God’s people, and cannot justify the denial of secular employment or benefits, healthcare, public or commercial services or goods, or parental rights to persons based on race, ethnicity, [sex], gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, [religion], or gender expression.
3. Direct the Stated Clerk and the Office of Public Witness to oppose legislative, judicial, and administrative efforts at the state and federal levels to limit the protection of persons based upon race, ethnicity, [sex,] gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, [religion,] or gender expression in the guise of religious freedom.

4. Encourage synods and presbyteries to oppose legislative, judicial, and administrative efforts at the state and federal levels to limit the protection of persons based upon race, ethnicity, [sex,] gender, physical limitations, sexual orientation, gender identity, [religion,] or gender expression in the guise of religious freedom.

5. Encourage all Presbyterians to distinguish between our historical understanding of our religious freedom to practice the essential tenets of our faith, and the misuse of the term religious freedom as a justification for discrimination in the provision of secular employment or benefits, healthcare, public or commercial services or goods, or parental rights to persons based on race, ethnicity, [sex,] gender, physical limitations, sexual orientation, gender identity, [religion,] or gender expression.

Rationale

The misuse of “religious liberty” is costing lives and depriving individuals of basic human rights. The federal government and state legislatures are considering and passing legislation, and adopting administrative rules and regulations, under the guise of religious freedom, that in reality are nothing more (or less) than a targeted attempt to promote a singular religious viewpoint that does not believe LGBTQ individuals are entitled to the full scope of human rights to employment, healthcare, and parenting rights. These laws give businesses, service and healthcare providers, government workers, and private citizens engaged in commercial activities the unfettered right to discriminate against others, deny them needed services, and impose their own religious beliefs on others, so long as they cite their religious or moral belief as the reason for doing so. Similarly, individuals found to have violated laws guaranteeing against discrimination in public accommodations and the delivery of commercial services are claiming a right to assert religious freedom as a shield against liability for such discrimination. Categorizing discrimination against individuals on the basis of such individuals’ race, ethnicity, physical limitations, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, or gender expression as an exercise of religious freedom flies in the face of the foundation of such freedom—the assurance of the dignity and basic human rights of all human beings—and should not be condoned by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The General Assembly, in its previous approval of “Guiding Principles for Ethical Decisions Concerning Religious Freedom Around the World” by the 214th General Assembly (2002), of the policy statement, God Alone Is Lord of Conscience by the 200th General Assembly (1988), has laid a firm foundation for the necessity of and boundaries for the exercise of religious freedom. However, neither statement addressed the misuse of religious freedom to justify denial of basic human rights to individuals based upon race, ethnicity, physical limitations, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, or gender expression. Recent executive and legislative actions—such as the “Presidential Executive Order Promoting Free Speech and Religious Liberty,” issued May 4, 2017, and the so-called “First Amendment Defense Act”—seek to justify discrimination against individuals, particularly individuals who face discrimination based on their sexual orientation, gender identity, or gender expression under the guise of religious freedom. Likewise, in Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission, the United States Supreme Court is currently determining whether individuals can avoid liability for violating state anti-discrimination laws regarding public accommodations and the delivery of commercial goods and services by claiming a religious right to engage in such discrimination. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should speak with a clear voice for “the destitute, the poor and the wronged” (Book of Confessions, Confession of Belhar, 10.7) to affirm that “religious freedom” can never be a pretext for denying all of God’s children basic human rights and freedom from discrimination in secular employment or benefits, healthcare, public or commercial services or goods, or parental rights.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-04

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-04 requests that the General Assembly affirm and clarify the position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding the appropriate boundaries of religious liberty.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 11-04 be approved as amended below:

That the category “sex” be included in all of the listings of identification throughout the overture.

Recommendations 2 and 3 would now list “… persons based on race, ethnicity, [sex,] gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, or gender expression…”

Recommendations 4 and 5 would now list “… persons based on race, ethnicity, [sex,] gender, physical limitations, sexual orientation, gender identity, or gender expression…”
ACSWP has submitted a related item for approval by the assembly, Item 11-15, “A Resolution on Religious Freedom Without Discrimination.” The committee regards Items 11-04 and 11-15 as supportive of each other and advises approval of both. However, Item 11-15 specifically addresses religiously motivated discrimination against women in their reproductive capacities, among other differences between the two statements.

As Item 11-15 notes, numerous claims of “religious freedom” have sprung up in the courts. In addition to the denial of goods and services to LGBTQ persons, these claims often involve women’s access to reproductive health care.

The 204th General Assembly (1992) approved a report on “Problem Pregnancies and Abortion,” which stated that churches must support “full and equal access to contraceptive methods.” It also affirmed “the ability and responsibility of women, guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, in the context of communities of faith, to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies,” including “the considered decision of a woman to terminate a pregnancy.” The basic human right to control one’s reproductive decisions is now being threatened by those who use their religious values to discriminate against women (and men) who choose to make different, legal decisions. This position was reaffirmed by the 220th General Assembly (2012) in the resolution “On Providing Just Access to Reproductive Healthcare.”

All categories describing human sexuality and identity are cultural constructs. Sex and gender are not the same, so it is wise to explicitly prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex and on the basis of gender identity and expression. Including “sex” in the listing of identifiers ensures that the church oppose all forms of religiously motivated discrimination.

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-04.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-04

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-04.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns agrees that “religious freedom” is not a license to discriminate against God’s people. ACWC feels that such language is distorted and misused for oppressive and marginalizing purposes. Additionally, so called religious freedom has been used to interfere with women’s rights to safe and affordable medical care and for the purposing of controlling women’s bodies by way of limiting reproductive healthcare options. As people of faith, committed to justice, we should all be troubled by the continued assaults on the reproductive wellbeing and healthcare for women. We affirm that God alone is Lord of Conscience and that women, with their healthcare providers, are the only persons informed and equipped to make the best decisions about their bodies, their health, and their wellbeing, as well as that of their families. Item 11-05

The assembly approved Item 11-05 as amended. See pp. 13, 57–58.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

“[1. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) to change its name to Racial Equity Advocacy Committee (REAC).]

“[4.] [2.]Direct all six agencies of the PC(USA) to move toward changing “racial ethnic people” to “people of color” in all documents, parlance, and programs from this point forward.

“[3. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) to change its name to Racial Equity Advocacy Committee (REAC).]
“3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) and the Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA) to change “Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)” to “Racial Equity Advocacy Committee (REAC)” in all documents, parlance, and programs.”

Rationale

These recommendations are a final response to the following referral:

The ACREC sought to ensure that terminology changes would be made denomination-wide. The first recommendation assumes that the agencies will immediately update any web-based references to “racial ethnic people” to “people of color,” and that any already printed documents will be used up and then updated to reflect the new language as new printings are required. This allows for good stewardship of the resources already in print.

This referral response also made evident the need to update ACREC’s own name to replace the term “racial ethnic.”

Reflection on scripture led to many passages that made clear that God, at times through human servants, administered justice and equity to all the people. Psalm 9:7 supports this, as does Isaiah 11:4, Micah 3:9, Psalm 99:4, Exodus 23:6, and Isaiah 30:18, just to name a few.

The following is a summary of the process followed by the committee in coming to the name, Racial Equity Advocacy Committee (REAC):

1. The ACREC engaged in a daylong training about white supremacy and the components of systems that support and perpetuate systems of white privilege and power.
2. From this training and follow-up conversations, members of ACREC concluded that “racial equity” was a more accurate representation of the work and ministry to which the advocacy committee is called on behalf of people of color.
3. Unlike racial equality, racial equity results when you cannot predict advantage or disadvantage by race. Rather, the route to achieving equity will not be accomplished through treating everyone equally. It will be achieved by treating everyone equitably, or justly according to their circumstances, which we believe is the work of the committee advocating for people of color.
4. As referenced in the response to referral to Item 11-24 from the 222nd General Assembly (2016), people of color must be the ones to name themselves, and it is always most appropriate to ask individuals how they prefer to identify. This is the committee name that the Racial Equity Advocacy Committee has chosen for ourselves.
5. Language is ever evolving, and this terminology must be revisited regularly and appropriate naming determined by people of color themselves.
6. This conversation again raises the urgency of deconstructing systems of white privilege/supremacy and paternalism—work that must be completed by white people themselves.

A Resolution to Respond to Disparities Experienced by Black Women and Girls—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) direct the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to form a five-member task group (majority black women and members to be identified by ACWC with a passion and experience of advocating for black girls and/or women) to:
1. Study the research on disparities of black girls and women, including the results of the report “Girlhood Interrupted: The Erasure of Black Girls’ Childhood” published by the Georgetown Law Center on Poverty and Inequality with the intention of interjecting and expanding the work that is already being done around the national church in the area of racial justice to include the particular lived experiences of black women and girls.

2. After study and discernment, make recommendations on how the PC(USA) can strategically and prophetically engage and determine how the church might be most effective in impacting in this important social issue.

3. Propose an action plan that acknowledges and makes visible the predicament of black girls and women to the church, recognizing the humanity of black girls and women so that the PC(USA) might take the disparities seriously and develop programming and resources that participates in addressing these disparities.

4. Meet two times in-person as well as electronically as needed.

5. Utilize annual funds ($7,000) allocated by the 220th General Assembly (2012) to the Women of Color Joint Working Group to supplement costs of meeting and necessary resourcing.

[Financial Implications: Per Capita Annual $11,060. Total—$22,120]

Rationale

“Racism is the opposite of what God intends for humanity. It is the rejection of the other, which is entirely contrary to the Word of God incarnate in Jesus Christ. Racism is a lie about our fellow human beings, for it says that some are less than others. Because of our biblical understanding of who God is and what God intends for humanity, the PC(USA) must stand against, speak against, and work against racism.”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has consistently understood our heritage to include both public witness and practical discipleship for God’s justice in the world, particularly on behalf of the most marginalized in our midst. Although we recognize the pervasive sin of racism, in conversations in the church around racism and racial disparities, black girls and women are often overlooked, undervalued, and rendered invisible. These external views and tropes seek to dehumanize and stereotype black girls and women. At this critical moment in history, when racism, sexism, and misogyny explicitly abound throughout the current culture, causing significant spiritual and emotional violence against women, it imperative for the church to hear the voices of those long silenced. This proposed task force would be action toward the commitment of the PC(USA)’s decade of “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.”

Studies consistently demonstrate that starting at a young age, black girls are disproportionately suspended and expelled, a crisis that has continued repercussions for black girls, women, and whole communities. And, although black girls and women are only 13 percent of the overall population, they make up 1/3 of the people killed by police. Further, research indicates that black girls’ childhoods are erased as they are viewed as needing less nurturing, protection, support, and comforting, and as more independent, knowing more about adult topics, and knowing more about sex.

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-07.
ACREC supports this overture as it brings awareness to the rich diversity of voices combating racism and prejudices from the church. This overture supports our commitment to human diversity and the inclusion of those who are marginalized and oppressed by racism.

“Racism is the opposite of what God intends for humanity. It is the rejection of the other, which is entirely contrary to the Word of God incarnate in Jesus Christ. Racism is a lie about our fellow human beings, for it says that some are less than others. A Report with Recommendations on Drug Policy: Putting Healing Before Punishment—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the following affirmation and recommendations:

Affirmation

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a responsibility to provide advocacy “for effective drug policies grounded in science, compassion, and human rights” (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 630). The “war on drugs” has generated numerous destructive and deadly side effects while failing to deliver an adequate or effective response to the problems associated with illicit drug use. In light of this, we call on church and society to shift approaches: to put healing before punishment.

This report begins by showing that the war on drugs is not working. While we can’t know what the world would look like if we had not declared war on drugs, attempts at eradication have become at least as destructive as the drugs themselves. Our punitive approach has spread violence at home and abroad. It has caused disproportionate harm to communities of color, contributed to crime and to the crisis of mass incarceration. At the same time, its harsh penalties failed to prevent an opioid crisis, which has become the leading cause of death for young adults in many states. This report comes at a time when the public’s acceptance of marijuana is propelling efforts to decriminalize and legalize cannabis for medical and recreational use.

Instead of punishment, this report advocates a therapeutic approach to the problems associated with psychoactive drug use and abuse. This includes effective campaigns to discourage drug use and an expansion of harm reduction programs, such as needle exchanges. It calls the church to learn from the successes and failures of nations and states that have decriminalized or legalized drug use and developed social service networks to reduce the harms associated with drug use.

This report distinguishes between “decriminalization” and “legalization.” “Decriminalization” refers to reforms such as those that legalize growing and possessing small amounts of cannabis. “Legalization,” by contrast, refers to laws that would legalize its commercial production and sale.

The healing model envisioned in this paper would move away from criminalizing all drug use, but would still require drug regulation (as with tobacco, alcohol, and other pharmaceuticals). Therefore, in line with earlier General Assembly action supporting medical marijuana, it calls for an evidence-based revision of the 1970 categorization of drugs upon which the drug war was based. We need a scientific basis for proportionate criminal sanctions, responsible regulation, and effective therapy.

This report expects that the scientific evidence may suggest that some drugs are so addictive and dangerous that they require strict regulation and possibly proscription. But it also anticipates that the evidence will indicate that other drugs should be decriminalized or have the penalties associated with them lightened. Fines and penalties may need to be attached to particular drugs to encourage addicts to seek treatment.

This report recommends that State and Federal Governments decriminalize personal cannabis production, possession, and use. It does not recommend legalization at this time because an evidence-based policy requires further research, particularly into the impact of cannabis on the developing brains of late adolescents. Our experience with big tobacco and pharmaceutical companies involved in the opioid epidemic teaches us that drug companies habitually put profits before people. Too swift a move to legalization is creating a trillion dollar industry that will fund bogus research, corrupt our politics, and advertise to the detriment of public health.

This paper is concerned about the harmful potential of many currently illegal (and some legal) drugs, including the possibility of addiction. Some drug use can injure health, impair human performance, and harm relationships. Drug use has spiritual dimensions. Even non-addictive drug use can orient life away from life with God in community with others. In addition to calling Christians to promote prevention and treatment, this report invites the church to recognize that the scale and scope of compulsively consumed drugs, including alcohol, reveals a culture-wide, spiritual problem. It calls the church to respond to the deeper issues that drive people, even non-addicts, to escape reality and numb pain.

A. Principles for Building a House for Healing

1. Presbyterians should be guided by the wisdom of our theological and ethical tradition as we consider reforms to drug laws.

2. Drug policy should be based on scientific evidence and informed by practical experience gathered from states, national, and international “experiments” with criminality and legalization.

3. Our theological tradition teaches us that God intends secular law to restrain evil and to guide and restore.

4. The criminal justice system should be dedicated to “restraining evil,” protecting citizens from behavior that harms or puts others at risk. A responsible community should protect the common good by legislating restrictions and protective interventions.

5. The bulk of government, church, and private resources dedicated to addressing the public health consequences associated with substance use and abuse should be dedicated to guiding and restoring people; this includes education, prevention, harm reduction, as well as physical and mental health care.

6. Specialized drug courts should offer treatment, restitution, and other alternatives to incarceration whenever possible.

7. The lives and rights of poor people, communities of color, and women in the United States and around the world are no less sacred or valuable than anyone else’s lives or rights.

8. Good drug policies are equitable with regard to race, income, and gender.

9. As a denomination that is predominately white, PC(USA) members have opportunities and responsibilities to address racist structures, processes, and social outcomes that cause the war on drugs to disproportionately impact people of color.

10. Drug use and addiction reflects and contributes to a broken societal ethos that calls for a holistic and communal response.

11. Public, cultural, and societal messages concerning drug use can set social expectations that can create an ethos of prevention and recovery.

12. The church is called to respond to drug addicts and abusers with compassion and healing. When possible, the church should support alternatives to incarceration.

13. Economic incentives for involvement in drug production and trafficking need to be addressed. Current drug policy has had unacceptable, unintended consequences for low-income populations at home and abroad.

14. The increase in gun violence in Latin America attributable to U.S. drug policy and U.S. gun industry exports is inconsistent with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s theology of peacemaking.

15. People should have access to essential medicine. With careful controls and under medical guidance based on good scientific research, cannabis, opiates and other therapeutic medications should be available for people who would benefit from them.
B. Recommendations Based on Principles for Building a House for Healing

The goal of these recommendations is to encourage each congregation to develop a referral plan for cases of problematic drug use, to gather insight into the structural violence that underpins current drug policies, and to understand how to support healing and advocate for constructive change.

Recommendations

A. Recommendations for PC(USA) Action and Policy

1. Each presbytery is encouraged to designate a drug policy facilitator to support congregational engagement and awareness of advocacy and treatment options. The Presbyterian Mission Agency is similarly encouraged to assist presbyteries in identifying facilitators, drawing on earlier health ministries contacts, and the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) networks of mutual support.

2. Facilitators are urged to visit congregations in their presbyteries to support their deeper reflection, learning, and engagement, and to assist interested congregations in the following processes:

   a. Education

      (1) Use material that is accurate scientifically, age-appropriate and credible, oriented to harm reduction and not simply abstinence, and which presents Christianity as a grace-filled and body-affirming way of joyful service in the world.

      (2) Survey congregation members’ experiences (or absence of experiences) of drug use, drug enforcement, incarceration, treatment, and recovery, and determine the best ways for members to learn from their communities and obtain reliable information.

      (3) Hold congregation and community forums on changing drug law so that they are made more just, effective, and compassionate. These should include listening to people of color and seeking economic diversity.

      (4) Produce worship materials that refer to this report’s goals and recommendations. These may encourage a celebration of God as healer and source of joy and connection, in contrast to our culture’s over-stimulation and worship of unlimited consumption.

      (5) Educate church leaders that substance abuse is often a co-occurring disorder with mental illness and in order to move towards recovery on one, both must be addressed.

   b. Community Service

      (1) Help Presbyterian congregations develop a referral process for problematic drug use, including non-punitive treatment and recovery facilities, harm reduction programs, and police and non-police options in their communities.

      (2) While recognizing the benefits of abstinence-based approaches for many people, promote non-prohibitionist efforts to reduce the harms from high-risk drug use among both youth and adults.

      (3) Support reentry programs for people released from incarceration.

   c. Engagement and Advocacy

      (1) Encourage churches to host addiction recovery groups and to engage in constructive dialogue about treatment, prevention of abuse, and harm reduction. Congregations, 12-step programs, and counselors are also encouraged to explore how both drug use and recovery relate to the quest for meaning and joy in life, found by Christians in Christ and God’s reign.

      (2) Advocate for harm reduction legislation and measures, such as needle exchanges and all-night drop-in centers. To this end, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) invites other faith groups, including members of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., to join us in this endeavor.

      (3) The 223rd General Assembly (2018) recommend that PC(USA) participate in the UNGASS follow-up to the 2016 United Nations General Assembly Special Session (UNGASS) on Drugs.

B. Public Policy Recommendations

In addition to congregational engagement in the process of drug policy reform, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) recommends the following reforms and actions by federal, state, and local governments. Presbyterians can advocate these changes with both elected officials and candidates.
1. Encourage Congress and the Executive Branch of the Federal Government to:

   a. Call on the U.S. government and the United Nations to revisit the global prohibition regime and allow states’ and nations’ flexibility to explore alternatives to criminalizing illicit drugs and to test them against the realities on the ground. For instance, recognizing that some states have fully legalized marijuana with regulation, U.S. federal law should also allow this.

   b. In concert with the Federal Government, encourage states to examine decriminalizing and reducing punishments for the use and possession of some currently illicit drugs by adults. In particular, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) recommends decriminalizing cannabis, pardoning and expunging the records of those who have been arrested for cannabis infractions, and enact laws that would allow states to try different approaches to cannabis regulation. As the goal of drug reform is to increase public health and safety, further movement towards legalization generally should take place after publicly funded study of social, educational, crime-related, and medical impacts. Particular care must be taken to restrain commercial interests who will seek to privatize profits while socializing the costs. To this end, it is advisable to prohibit all advertising and lobbying. It is also important to separate production and sale, using state-run (not simply licensed) facilities for sale, monitoring purity, and studying consumption patterns. Appropriate warnings, labels, age-limits, and other restrictions should be applied. We anticipate that the science may dictate that some drugs continue to retain penalties to encourage people to enter treatment.

2. With regard to public health:

   a. Revise the current outdated scheduling of controlled substances, based on publicly funded, scientific, public health criteria.

   b. In connection with Recommendation 2.a. above, increase epidemiological and biomedical research on effects of drugs, patterns of drug use, and impacts of punishment and regulation in order to support best practices in treatment, recovery, and public health.

   c. Expand treatment availability based on scientific findings in 2.b., above, and medically assisted treatment for those who may otherwise find stability hard to achieve.

   d. Provide city and county public health agencies the resources they need to serve as first responders to overdose, problematic drug-induced behavior, and mental illness, so that law enforcement is not the only or primary first responder. Establish overdose prevention as a public health goal and make the antidote Nalaxone available. Promote Good Samaritan legislation to protect persons who notify emergency responders of an overdose.

   e. Drawing on evidence of effectiveness, reevaluate which behavioral health treatments are supported by insurance coverage. In the absence of universal health care, the eighteen states that have not done so should embrace the Affordable Care Act’s expansion of Medicaid coverage to low-income individuals.

   f. Lift the ban on federal funding for needle exchange programs and revise laws on drug paraphernalia (including the possession of clean needles), which is consistent with reducing risks of the drugs themselves and associated diseases of HIV/AIDS and Hepatitis C.

3. With regard to the judicial system and policing:

   a. Condition grants of federal funds to local police and sheriff’s departments on ending racially and ethnically discriminatory policing and expanding community trust.

   b. Eliminate the sentencing disparities between crack and powdered forms of cocaine. Expand the scope of executive orders and group pardons for the release of drug offenders who were sentenced unjustly under the 100-to-1 crack-cocaine and other inequitable and excessive sentencing provisions.

   c. Make our criminal justice system more just by reforming mandatory sentencing and restraining prosecutorial discretion, especially with defendants who are unable to receive or afford effective counsel and cannot review the evidence against them.

   d. Eliminate preemptive post-incarceration sanctions for drug offenses that create barriers to recovery and family reintegration, including employment discrimination, restrictions on public housing, and voting.

   e. Enable social service agencies and community representatives to engage in restorative justice and investment practices together with people who have been harmed by police violence, unjust mandatory minimum sentences, and disparate drug law enforcement.
f. Increase and improve the use of drug courts that deal knowledgeably with persons accused of crimes, particularly nonviolent offenses, probation or parole violations, and cases where children are impacted, to facilitate treatment, training, education, and employment.

g. End or radically reform asset-forfeiture laws to prevent police seizures of property without due process.

h. Offer people convicted of the nonviolent sale of illicit drugs opportunities for training, education, and employment as an alternative to incarceration and a felony record.

i. When laws legalize or decriminalize possession of cannabis, appropriate governmental bodies should pardon or commute penalties of those sentenced under the old rules and expunge the old conviction from their records.

j. Offer diversion options or pathways for offenders that replace prosecution within the criminal justice system. These alternatives can be pursued at any stage of the process: pre-booking, post-charge, or post-conviction. Examples of the pre-booking model is the (Law Enforcement Assisted Diversion) LEAD program initiated in Seattle in 2011, now in six cities. This four-year pilot program permits police to refer offenders directly to housing, treatment, and other services. Another example is the Police Assisted Addiction and Recovery Initiative (PAARI), started in Gloucester, Massachusetts, where if individuals come to the police department and turn in their paraphernalia, police do not arrest them but instead would steer them to treatment. This is now being done by more than 300 police jurisdictions nationwide. (These options would precede drug courts, which are generally post-conviction).

4. Economic Policy:

a. Many foreign regions that grow coca and poppies have become economically dependent on the exports to the U.S. of drugs made from these plants. While our drug problem results mainly from our demand, a successful program to squelch that demand will require complementary adjustment in these places to develop agriculture and other beneficial economic activities, to replace coca and poppy growing. To promote sustainable economic development in these countries, the U.S. should modify its foreign policy in at least these four ways:

   (1) Demilitarize our foreign aid. It undercuts development prospects when we put more weapons in the hands of governments with, at best, weak democratic and humanitarian institutions.

   (2) Provide financial and technical aid for infrastructure and social services in rural areas, increasing their capacity to produce and market non-drug products. For instance, drugs have high value to weight; switching to other products and activities requires more efficient transport facilities.

   (3) Do not punish countries that allow cultivation of coca or other drug crops for domestic consumption, especially when these are part of the traditional culture, as with coca leaf in the Andean countries. Doing this, or pressuring them to carry out defoliation campaigns, fuels resentment toward the U.S. and pushback against our drug policy.

   (4) Pursue international trade policies that facilitate these countries legitimate exports to the U.S., such as fruit and cut flowers.

b. Promote economic investment in or provide opportunity elsewhere for U.S. communities that have been devastated by disinvestment and harmed by discriminatory drug law enforcement and/or drug-related violence. Encourage the limiting of employee drug testing to what is needed to safeguard the person’s performance of a job, and remove punitive drug testing and other penalties on recipients of public assistance, applicants for public professional licenses, scholarship assistance, and other means of self-betterment and participation in society, in concert with Recommendation 3.d. above.

5. Foreign and Immigration Policy:

a. Sharply reduce the transfer of weaponry, training, and equipment from the United States to police and militaries in Latin America as part of the war on drugs. Make such transfers of arms and training transparent to the public, to promote accountability. Disclose the extent and general nature of surveillance cooperation and strengthen financial disclosure laws to reduce corruption, money-laundering, and cross-border tax evasion. Advocate congressional and other public hearings on the human rights and economic development impacts of the war on drugs and any foreign aid linked to it.

b. The President of the United States should take executive action to ban the import of assault weapons into the United States, where many are sold and trafficked to criminal drug-trafficking organizations in Mexico and Central America.

c. Provide political asylum and immediate release from detention, pending appropriate process, for those who have fled violence and have a credible fear of violence in their home countries where the war on drugs is occurring,
These affirmations and recommendations are in response to the following referral: On a Two-Year Study to Discern How to Advocate for Effective Drug Policies—From the Presbytery of San Francisco (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 631).

PART I: WHY THE WAR ON DRUGS FAILED

This report recommends shifting our approach to drug use and abuse from a punitive to a healing model. It does not deny the serious risks and harm incurred by ingesting some illicit substances, whether one is addicted or not, and it recognizes that one cannot prove a hypothetical, namely, how society would have developed had we tried another approach. But it chronicles how the costs of eradicating illegal drugs have become a cure worse than the disease itself. It encourages the church to love our neighbors, all of them: those harmed by drug abuse, addicts, drug dealers, and people in communities devastated by the drug trade. It calls the church to examine the damage caused by our war on drugs and work to heal our communities.

Contribution to Crime

Experts agree that the drug war contributes to crime and violence, even as they debate the extent of its contribution. The maximal argument goes like this: The war on drug suppliers and users creates a violent, underground, criminal economy. Steal from your local liquor store and the owner need not threaten or use force. She can call the police and they will protect her. By contrast, drug merchants operate outside the law and can’t call the police. They depend solely on violence and intimidation. This explains why studies find that most “drug-related violence” is not due to the drugs themselves (drug induced violence) or addicts committing crime to support their habit, but due to the criminal enterprises that legality makes possible.

Jill Leovy contends that the maximal argument has it almost exactly backwards, claiming that a dysfunctional culture encourages illegal activities to flourish. She observes that where young men have few opportunities and there is weak rule of law, gangs fill the vacuum. She notes that in many urban areas the criminal justice system “is at once oppressive and inadequate.” It is oppressive because it is preoccupied with nuisance abatement and rapidly escalates to violence in response to perceived threats. It is inadequate because it fails to protect black men from bodily injury and death. When the state fails to maintain, in the sociologist Max Weber’s terms, “a monopoly on violence” it sets the stage for gang protection and vigilantism. The Mafia predates prohibition, arising in 19th century Sicily in areas with the weak rule of law.

Leovy’s findings suggest that relaxing criminal penalties for drugs may not reduce drug-related crime as much as is sometimes claimed. So long as policing in poor communities is inadequate and men do not have access to decent employment opportunities, gangs will form. So long as guns are plentiful, gun violence will be the norm. And so long as society upholds barriers to remunerative and legal employment (inadequate schools, community isolation, lack of transportation, racial discrimination, etc.), people who currently go to prison for drug-related crimes will seek other schemes to make money without regard to legality. Ending prohibition did not eliminate the Mafia; it changed their business model as they turned to other criminal activity.

This said, it does not follow that ending the drug war would have no impact. Drug gangs reach for the low-hanging fruit and drug trafficking affords easy and significant profits. The task force, whose initial study informs this report, examined the terrible crime wave that swept over Ciudad Juárez, El Paso’s, sister city along border, which suffered more than 3,000 homicides in 2010. In talking with Susie Byrd, former city council member in El Paso, she explained, “You can buy … a pound of marijuana [in Mexico] for $23 and … sell it in Chicago for $770. So, the markup is extraordinary.” Tremendous revenues make drug trafficking an attractive venture, despite the risks, particularly for those in communities with limited employment opportunities in the legitimate economy. Drug profits fund one side of the drug was as they are “invested in state-of-the-art weapons, hiring gangs to defend their trade, paying off public officials, and making drugs easily available to children. …”

The criminal economy corrupts other sectors of society. Drug traffickers have a particular need to launder money because drugs are primarily paid for with cash, which is bulky, difficult to move, and, in large quantities, draws the attention of law enforcement. Criminal enterprises have used diverse methods to launder money; some involve large banks. Since 2010 federal investigators have accused Wachovia Bank (subsequently taken over by Wells Fargo) and banking giant HSBC of violating banking regulations. They charged that they moved some $420 billion and more than $679 billion, respectively, through their accounts on behalf of Mexican drug cartels. Prosecutors charged that Wachovia “willfully” overlooked the suspicious nature of this probable drug money and knowingly failed to institute standard anti-money laundering mechanisms, ignoring persistent and urgent warnings from a London whistleblower and others. When the investigation of Wachovia began, money-laundering activities simply shifted to banking giant HSBC. Neither the banks nor the individual bankers involved were prosecuted. Instead, Wachovia made a $160 million federal payment, less than one twentieth of one percent of the amount it helped launder, while HSBC paid a much larger forfeiture and fine of $1.9 billion.
The shift from Wachovia to HSBC is an example of what experts call “the balloon effect, where squeezing with tighter enforcement in one place produces a swelling or increase in traffic in another.”\textsuperscript{10} Interdiction efforts push the drug trade somewhere else. Victories in eliminating one source are negated by the emergence of other sources, traffickers, and routes. In this connection, we note that targeting low-level producers, transporters, and sellers of illicit drugs, generally targets poor people who chose the risks associated with drug trafficking because structural poverty presents them with few economic options. Such people are easily replaced.

The balloon effect is also observed in the strategy of going after high-level traffickers. “While the arrests of kingpins make for splashy headlines,” The New York Times noted, “the result has been a fragmenting of the cartels and spikes in violence … as smaller groups fight for control. Like a hydra, it seems that each time the government cuts down a cartel, multiple other groups, sometimes even more vicious, spring up to take its place.”\textsuperscript{11}

The balloon effect is also seen among trafficked substances. During the opioid crisis a crackdown on prescription opioids pushed people to use more deadly heroin and, then, to use even more lethal fentanyl and carfentanil. These are so powerful that they often require multiple doses of naloxone to prevent overdose. Given the danger these drugs pose, some might prefer to crackdown on the dangerous drugs and push people to consume safer drugs.

Drug interdiction and crop eradication efforts in Bolivia, Colombia, Peru, Caribbean countries, and most recently Mexico and Honduras all demonstrate the “balloon effect” and suggest the futility of the drug war.

\textit{Contribution to Mass Incarceration}

America’s criminal justice system has been in severe crisis for thirty years. During the 1970s, the U.S. had a relatively low rate of incarceration compared to other industrialized countries. Today, despite some easing of the incarceration rate over the past decade, we have the highest rate of imprisonment in the world.\textsuperscript{12} The U.S. has 5 percent of the world’s population, but jails 25 percent of the world’s prisoners. According to a study by the International Center for Prison Studies, the U.S. locks up 716 per 100,000 people, by contrast most modern industrial countries imprison fewer than 150 per 100,000.\textsuperscript{13} A 2012 study found that United States taxpayers spent $30 billion jailing 2.3 million souls.\textsuperscript{14}

These shocking figures do not tell the whole story. Some states (such as Louisiana) and counties incarcerate people at much higher rates, driving up the national average. Taxpayer expenditures do not include the devastating human costs. These include diminished employment opportunities, earning potential, and marriage possibilities.\textsuperscript{15} In some states, ex-cons lose the right to vote, to serve on a jury, to run for public office, and to live in publicly subsidized housing. There are also lost opportunity costs, the fact that people in prison never develop full potential and are prevented from contributing to society. Taken together, it is impossible to justify how a youthful indiscretion with cannabis should so severely damage life prospects and diminish the community.

Experts agree that America’s war on drugs plays a role in the crisis of mass incarceration, though they disagree somewhat about the extent of its contribution.\textsuperscript{16} Experts, such as John Pfaff, note that the vast majority of people in prison are in for violent crimes and claim that the role America’s war on drugs has played in mass incarceration is sometimes overstated.\textsuperscript{17} Only 16 percent of the people in federal, state, and county prisons are there on drug charges and “freeing every single person who is in a state prison on a drug charge would only cut state prison populations back to where they were in 1996–1997, well into the ‘mass incarceration’ period.” Although Pfaff encourages us to be realistic about what changing drug laws would accomplish, he acknowledges,

The war on drugs is not trivial: about 200,000 people in state prisons and another 100,000 in federal institutions are serving time for drug crimes… most would likely be better handled outside the prison, and many would perhaps be best left alone altogether by the criminal justice system.\textsuperscript{18}

A series of small decisions over forty years created mass incarceration. It is unrealistic to think a single decision will reverse it. That said, changing our drug laws is a good place to start.

Finally, raw national statistics do not express how unevenly mass incarceration and the drug war impact people of color. A recent study found that one in seventeen white males can expect to go to prison. By contrast, it found that one in six Latino males and one in three black males can expect to go to prison.\textsuperscript{19}

\textit{Impact on People of Color}

The structural racial and economic disparities endemic to U.S. society and its criminal justice system have made America’s drug war particularly destructive to black and Latino minorities and their communities. The historical review in Appendix A shows that this is partially by design, as violations of laws for drugs associated with minority groups regularly receive harsher penalties than drugs used by whites. Consider, the 18-to-1 sentencing disparity that currently exists between chemically identical, crack and powdered forms of cocaine (the disparity used to be 100-to-1!) The main difference is that poor, urban blacks smoke the former, whereas wealthy, white suburbanites snort the latter.
The injustices of America’s criminal justice system are so widespread and systemic that they deserve a separate church study. For the purposes of this paper, we note some enduring problems: the lack of effective community policing; the routine failure to solve violent crime in poor black and Latino communities; the lack of a state monopoly on violence in many urban communities that contributes to gang vigilantism, protectionism, and to a fear to testify; a “warrior ethos” among police and the militarization of police operations and equipment; videos of police encounters that end with excessive, often lethal force; the absence of bail money for poor people; the absence of adequate legal counsel for poor people; the rise of prosecutorial power; mandatory sentences; the decline in jury trials; the fact that black men receive sentences that are 20 percent longer than white men; tactics that systematically target poor minorities, such as those identified by the Attorney General’s report on Ferguson, Missouri. These defects damage people of color, alienate blacks and Latinos from the criminal justice system at every point, and undermine the quality of life in poor and predominately minority communities. Naming the savage institutional racism that distorts America’s criminal justice system does not deny the presence of faithful, and even heroic, police officers, prosecutors, public defendants, and judges.

Many of these inequities are not the direct result of drug policy, per se, but due to racial and economic inequalities endemic to the larger society and its criminal justice system. Still, the drug war adds its own layer of cruelty and injustice. A 2013 study showed that blacks self-report using illicit drugs during the previous month at very slightly higher rates than whites (10.5 percent to 9.5 percent). Yet arrest rates for drug offenses are two to four times the rate of white people. The black imprisonment rates are even more unequal, 5.1 to 5.8 times higher than whites. Meanwhile, a recent study of Massachusetts’s drug courts that mandates treatment instead of prison shows that participants are overwhelmingly non-Hispanic whites.

Even if one supposes that some are imprisoned because they plead guilty to lesser drug offenses, rather than a more difficult to prove violent crime, this represents an injustice. Poor suspects are at a significant disadvantage when they negotiate with prosecutors: they do not have access to the evidence against them (which they would have in a trial) and regularly lack adequate legal counsel. This explains why innocent suspects so often plead guilty to lesser offenses (such as drug crimes) rather than risk a trial that could put them in jail for a more serious offense they did not commit.

Blacks are not the only minority group who disproportionately suffer from the drug war. In the past two to three decades, the policies, rhetoric, and enforcement agencies that address illegal drugs and immigrants have become increasingly of one fabric. The backdrop for this merging of drug, counterterrorism, and immigration policies is the “threat narrative,” which blends the policies through fear. “The dominant public narrative conceives of and portrays immigration as criminals, an economic, social, cultural, and political threat,” observes the National Alliance of Latin American and Caribbean Communities. A recent example of this narrative is use of the word “surge”—commonly used to describe military offensives—to describe the large number of Central American children fleeing violence to the United States. President Trump has amplified the threat narrative despite conclusive evidence showing that immigrants commit crime at much lower rates than native-born Americans.

As a result, drug laws are applied even more punitively and arbitrarily to immigrants than to U.S. citizens. For example, a U.S. resident with a green card can be deported for a single minor offense occurring decades before. Noncitizens in deportation proceedings who have been convicted of a drug offense (with few exceptions) are also ineligible for bail, and will face mandatory imprisonment until their hearing. “Drug trafficking” in immigration law does not distinguish between drug cartel leaders and someone who sells a small amount of cannabis to a neighbor; both are classified as “aggravated felonies,” with the harshest immigration consequences. The Department of Homeland Security can deport someone if it has “reasonable belief” the person sold drugs, even without a conviction.

Some impacts of the drug war fall more heavily on the poor, regardless of racial group. Civil asset forfeiture, for example, allows police to seize assets from anyone they believe has been involved in a crime, without charging them or showing evidence that they were—that is, without due process. Since 2008, police have seized cash and property worth $3 billion in more than 55,000 seizures on highways and elsewhere, according to a Washington Post investigation. Hundreds of local drug task forces rely on seized cash to cover more than 20 percent of their budgets. The United States also promotes asset forfeiture procedures internationally. In January 2015, then-Attorney General Eric Holder issued a directive prohibiting the use of federal law to seize assets without warrants or criminal charges, although agents may still use existing state forfeiture laws to seize assets. Evidence indicates that, like other aspects of the drug war, these seizures disproportionately impact people of color.

The ACLU has identified the war on drugs as an important driver of the “school to prison pipeline,” which they define as “policies and practices that push our nation’s schoolchildren, especially our most at-risk children, out of classrooms and into the juvenile and criminal justice systems,” and prioritizes incarceration over education. The pipeline operates through underfunded schools, zero-tolerance discipline policies, reliance on police in schools for discipline, private disciplinary schools, poor legal representation for minors, and lack of educational services in juvenile facilities. In sum, the drug war inflicts a layer of cruelty in a society and criminal justice system riddled with structural economic and racial injustice.

Impact of the Drug War Abroad

The United States has promoted an international approach to drug interdiction. It has compelled other countries to comply with our policies, sometimes using economic and diplomatic sanctions, other times backing up these sanctions with military Drug trafficking fueled the growth of organized crime in Mexico and Central America, making hundreds of communities in these countries extremely dangerous. Crimes frequently go unreported because law enforcement is widely perceived (and often documented) to be collaborating with criminal groups. The drug economy along the Mexican-American border constitutes something like 70 percent of the economy.47 According to Edgardo Buscaglia, a research scholar in law and economics at Columbia University, officially the Mexican government acknowledges the disappearances of more than 30,000 people … but the truth is no one knows how many people are missing in Mexico. Not the government, which does not have a national registry of the missing. Not the families caught in emotional purgatory. Not the authorities in states like Veracruz … The entire state is a mass grave.”

The rigid attitude of the U.S. has done much to destroy political and economic relations of the US with Bolivia, and to lesser extents with Peru and Colombia. The war in Colombia, fueled in part by more than $8 billion in U.S. counter-narcotics aid, most of it military, has displaced nearly five million Colombians, with reports of more than 4,700 extrajudicial killings by the armed forces. More than 95 percent of these killings remain unsolved.49

In Brazil, “In the context of the so-called ‘war on drugs,’ military police forces have unnecessarily and excessively used lethal force, resulting in the deaths of thousands of people over the past decade,” according to a report by Amnesty International.50

The futility of military approaches to reduce or control drug production is illustrated by U.S. involvement in Afghanistan since 2001. The United States has spent an estimated $750 billion on military and police assistance and operations.51 Yet the country remains by far the world’s number-one grower and exporter of poppies used to produce heroin—as it was before 2001. Indeed, poppy production has more than doubled during the period of U.S. war and occupation.52 In this connection we note that drug crop “eradication campaigns have frequently had devastating consequences for the environment,” according to the UN Development Program.53 and police action.34 It has pressured Canada, the United Kingdom, and Australia to curtail or cancel opiate maintenance programs.35 It has also exported its incarceration policies, funding prisons in countries such as Colombia and Honduras.36

Drug cartels function by controlling territories through which illicit commerce passes. Some territories, such as those on the U.S. border, are particularly valuable. The organizations’ income comes not just from drug profits, but by taxing all licit and illicit commercial activity in the territory that they control. Those who don’t pay the cartels’ “tax” face their terrible and certain wrath.

The U.S. military has trained soldiers to combat the cartels. Unfortunately, because the cartels pay soldiers and police more than the state can, this has played directly into the drug traffickers’ game. For instance, the United States trained most of the inaugural members of the feared Zetas cartel, when they were members of an elite Mexican Special Forces unit, the GAFEs. In a related episode, the United States Southern Command trained and assisted Guatemalan Special Forces troops, known as Kaibiles, as part of its drug interdiction program. Former members of this group participated in the Guatemalan genocide in the 1980s. But now the Zetas have recruited Kaibiles for their valuable military skills and set up operation in the small jungle town the U.S. built for the Kaibiles training base.39 As Kelly Wells testified to the task force in El Paso:

This has very serious implications for the US strategy for the war on drugs. Up to this point it has focused on giving more resources, more money, more arms, training, etc., to law enforcement in Central America, which overwhelming evidence suggests is often implicated in the crime itself. So we’re basically giving money and arms and training to the criminals. Directly.40

The military approach to U.S. drug control efforts in Latin America has deepened the history of U.S. military intervention in the region, contributed to a serious human rights abuses, undermined civilian governance, militarized police forces, and blurred the distinction between military and civilian police functions.41

The Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) operates in sixty-five countries and has the largest presence overseas of any U.S. law enforcement agency. Despite this large footprint, Congress exercises little oversight, allowing its actions to remain in shadow.42 A recent study of DEA in Central America and the Caribbean concluded that “the DEA’s coordinated drug enforcement operations contribute to increasing the level of violent and property crimes in the region.”43 Although U.S. policy in Central America has focused on narcotics, the region suffers the highest homicide rate in the world. Perhaps the starkest example of a breakdown of democratic institutions today is Honduras where cocaine cartels have spread violence and corruption.44 After a coup d’état forced the elected president into exile in 2009, the rule of law disintegrated and violence soared with a resurgence of death squad tactics and targeted killings of land rights advocates, journalists, LGBT persons, lawyers, and political activists. Both military and police are allegedly involved in abuses and killings and almost never brought to justice.45

In Mexico, an estimated 100,000 men, women, and children have lost their lives to the war on drugs between 2007 and 2013, when President Felipe Calderón declared the war. In addition, more than 26,000 Mexicans have been disappeared,46 and countless numbers have been wounded and traumatized. Massive deployments of military forces across the country have led to disappearances, extrajudicial killings, and torture.47 Jorge Winckler, Attorney General of the state of Veracruz, says,
In response to these catastrophic outcomes, a growing number of Latin American leaders are calling for formal reconsideration of global prohibition and militarized drug control policies. In March 2016, three former Latin American presidents, who themselves promoted and carried out military approaches to drug eradication, joined their voices to call on the United Nations and the world to call a halt,

Outdated drug policies around the world have resulted in soaring drug-related violence, overstretched criminal justice systems, runaway corruption and mangled democratic institutions. After reviewing the evidence, consulting drug policy experts and examining our own failures on this front while in office, we came to an unavoidable conclusion: The “war on drugs” is an unmitigated disaster.54

Failure to Prevent the Opioid Crisis

An opioid crisis has engulfed the nation even with the war on drugs in full swing. Since 1999 overdose deaths have tripled and in many states death by overdose has become the leading cause of death for young adults. Some states, such as West Virginia and New Mexico, have the highest rates of drug overdose they’ve ever seen.55 Nearly half of non-working, prime working-age men (ages 25 to 54) take opioids daily and some experts claim that the opioid epidemic is a principal contributor to the decline in labor force participation.56 Pew Trusts reports that the opioid crisis has dramatically increased the number of children placed in foster care, overwhelming state resources.57 The problem is so great that it has become increasingly common to hear law enforcement and politicians say, “We can’t arrest our way out of this epidemic.”

The increase in heroin deaths has been almost entirely among white people, while heroin-related deaths and emergency room visits among black and Hispanic people have remained stable.58 For this reason many look cynically upon Americans sudden discovery of compassion in response to the current opioid epidemic.59 They suggest this is largely because whites are using and abusing. Be that as it may, the opioid epidemic points to the ineffectiveness of punitive approaches to the problems associated with drug use and abuse.

Why the Church Must Speak

The drug war has exacted a terrible price. It has targeted communities of color and provided disadvantaged youth with a gateway to more serious crime. It has created a violent, underground, criminal economy and has demanded enormous expenditures in law enforcement at home and massive militarization abroad. It has added a layer of cruelty to a society and criminal justice system that already suffers from pervasive economic and racial injustice. Yet it failed to prevent the emergence of an opioid emergency.

The drug war’s ineffectiveness and human cost demand that the church speak. It is likely that many American Presbyterians are unaware that the war on drugs causes so much harm given how the damages tend not to fall on our largely white congregations. Can there be a different approach? What do our deepest religious tenets of faith call us to do? That is the topic to which we turn.

PART II. TOWARD A THEOLOGY OF CONSCIOUSNESS, DRUGS, AND COMMUNITY

Christians affirm that human consciousness and drugs that alter consciousness are part of God’s good creation. Crystalline clarity of thought to perceive, reason about, and respond to the world is God’s gift. Vivid cognizance of the self, the world, and God is a source of wonderment and delight.

Human consciousness is not static, but has plasticity. Among the things that can impact consciousness are psychotropic substances. Depending on their properties they may shift our perception of space and time, intensify our sense of connection with others, or diminish perceptions of pain, and stimulate pleasure. Some mask our consciousness, dull our judgment, and diminish our capacity to react quickly. Others sharpen our acuity. The impact on human consciousness may not be due simply to a drug’s psychopharmacology, but may result from cultural conditioning and expectations habituated by prolonged use.

Good Drugs, Fallen World

Psychoactive drugs are part of God’s good creation. Our brains produce opioids and cannabinoids. Nicotine works in the brain and other organs because its molecules are shaped like the neurotransmitter, acetylcholine. Cocaine works on the limbic system. These drugs affect our consciousness because our brains have receptors for them. This accounts for their medicinal effectiveness.

These drugs, like every other part of God’s good but fallen creation, can be misused. Even use of non-addictive substances use can cloud consciousness, diminish the capacity for responsible behavior, and hinder the work of the Spirit. Psychoactive drugs can mask emotional pain, preventing us from squarely facing the truth of our lives. They can distract and demotivate. They can promise the rewards of pleasure without summoning achievement or transformation. This, coupled with the human propensity to self-deception, is what makes some drugs so attractive, insidious, and disorienting. We do well to approach drug use remembering, the “body is the temple of the Holy Spirit” (1 Cor. 6:19).

Drug abuse reflects and compounds the brokenness of God’s good but fallen world. In a world with a history of racial injustice, where minority communities are abandoned by the larger society, where there is little opportunity, but abundant alienation, hopelessness, and pain: drug use and the drug trade present possibilities of escape. For those in situations of abundance, drug abuse can be a prideful rejection of the obligations that privilege imposes.

The tragedy of our fallen world is that even putatively honorable attempts to control the problems associated with drug use and abuse can become so broken that they are a cure worse than the disease. This happens when the punishment is worse than the crime. It happens when the war on drugs sacrifices innocents in marginalized communities in order to protect “our youth.” It happens when drug laws reinforce society’s prejudices and structural injustices. It happens when we refuse to fund harm reduction and rehabilitation. Instead of achieving the wholeness God wants for us, we increase the alienation and brokenness of the world. We have fought the drug problems with the wrong weapons,

Indeed, we live as human beings, but we do not wage war according to human standards; for the weapons of our warfare are not merely human, but they have divine power to destroy strongholds. We destroy arguments and every proud obstacle raised up against the knowledge of God, and we take every thought captive to obey Christ. (2 Cor. 10:3–5).

Christians often understand drug abuse in terms of character and will power, disregarding how other factors influence behavior. For example, Native Americans have a predisposition to alcoholism due to differences in how they metabolize alcohol. Experiences of pain and loss can incline people to abuse drugs. Social context also influences action, including features of particular social locations, cultural taboos and assumptions. Christians should not only encourage moral and responsible behavior, but they should respond to the personal and structural evil that underlies the drug trade and that motivates people, even non-addicts, to escape reality. Some are drawn into drug subcultures by a lack of opportunity, by the want of a healthy community of adults and peers, or by the absence of noble purpose for their lives. Others take drugs to “self-medicate,” to escape their situation and to dull psychic, physical, and emotional ache. Still others seek transcendence, mystical experience, and pleasure. Some drug usage, such as the use of Ecstasy at a rave, reflects a desire to bond with others in ecstatic community. These cravings differ in important respects, but they suggest dimensions of personal and social brokenness and longing that the church must address.

Alcohol as a Model

As we think theologically about mind-altering substances and their place in human life, we do well to recall that the Bible comes from a culture well acquainted with a powerful, mind-altering substance: alcohol. In places the Bible praises alcohol for “gladdening the heart” (Ps. 104:15), which sounds like a celebration of pleasure. Other passages recommend wine for medicinal purposes (1 Tim. 5:23). We also note that Jesus came “eating and drinking” and was accused of being a habitual drinker (Lk. 7:34). He turned a staggering amount of water into wine at Cana and instituted alcohol for sacramental use in communion.

Such positive appraisals of alcohol wash up against our experience of alcohol’s destructive potential. We know people addicted to alcohol and others who have done catastrophic harm while under its influence. We see the wisdom of scriptures that warn against drunkenness (Gal. 5:21, Eph. 5:18, 1 Pet. 4:23, etc.). When we consider the damage alcohol causes, we sympathize with our Presbyterian forbearers who organized temperance movements (which originally encouraged temperance and did not demand prohibition).

Perhaps we best reconcile scriptural affirmations, warnings, and experience by remembering the Apostle Paul’s advice, “‘All things are lawful for me,’ but not all things are beneficial. ‘All things are lawful for me,’ but I will not be dominated by anything” (1 Cor. 6:12).

The “me” Paul has in mind is not, “me” in isolation, but “me” in community with God and others, for Paul elsewhere insists, “If we live, we live for the Lord” (Rom. 14:8). Living for the Lord means picking up our cross and following the one who lovingly laid down his life for the world. If we live for the Lord then calculations of what is beneficial for “me” must include others: family, coworkers, drivers and pedestrians on the road, as well as others who may be impacted more indirectly, those who struggle with addiction, and those who would benefit if money spent on alcohol were directed elsewhere.

Jesus’ life demonstrates that consideration of others before God does not demand the denial of pleasure or an ethic of abstinence for everyone all the time. Certainly, we have an obligation not to tempt those who struggle to stay sober. Similarly, we have an obligation to abstain from the recreational use of substances that are highly addictive or harmful to our health. Our obligations to others suggest the contours of an ethic of temperance and prudence that should guide our use of alcohol and other drugs.

Covenant and Obligation

A Christian social ethic regarding drug use and regulation will be shaped by the recognition that humans are social creatures and that God has bound our lives together in covenantal communities: families, congregations, neighborhoods, towns, states, nations, and the great society of being that flows from God. While these communities make our lives possible, we should not approach these communities instrumentally, solely for what we get out of them, or as a means to our ends. They require our care and participation. They are both gift and demand.

A covenantal view of human life intensifies a sense of solidarity with and obligation to others. For this reason, it should heighten our distress at the enormous cost and waste the war on drugs extracts. The prophetic demands of our faith go far beyond the war on drugs, of course. They call us to address longstanding structural injustices and institutional racism in society and in the criminal justice system that are exacerbated by a punitive approach to drug abuse and which make drug use and the illicit drug trade attractive options for people.

The covenantal insight that our lives are bound together resists the temptation to allow our obligation to God to distract us from our obligations to others who are suffering. As Jesus says, “If you are at the altar and there remember that your brother or sister has something against you, leave your gift there in front of the altar. First go and be reconciled to them, then come offer our gift to God” (Mt. 5:23–24). Given the failures of the war on drugs, how can we worship?

Recognizing that our lives are bound together, a covenantal view refuses to ignore “the least of these” (Mt. 25) and must be concerned about the disproportionate toll that the punitive approach to drug interdiction and eradication has taken on communities of color and other nations. Those who ignore “their” suffering or who view it as an acceptable sacrifice to save “our own,” crucify Christ all over again.

A covenantal approach to drug use and regulation will be concerned about the welfare of others impacted by policy decisions, including addicts, potential addicts, drug dealers, and those harmed by inebriated behavior. Our concern must extend to the environmental destruction caused by eradication efforts.

A Christian social ethic regarding drugs will be guided by a theology of grace in its approach to addicts and those who suffer because they love them. It will remember the humanity of drug users; they are made in the image of God. It will resist viewing imprisonment and other anguish that addicts endure as just punishment or as God’s chastisement. Rather, it will recall how, when Jesus was criticized for welcoming the despised Zaccheus, he graciously responded, “I have come to seek and save the lost” (Lk. 19:1–10).

Research indicates that because compulsive drug use is viewed as a personal failure, it is even more stigmatized than criminal behavior. The stigma attached to addiction causes addicts to hide their dependency. It makes them reluctant to enter treatment, worsening clinical outcomes. Even after entering treatment addicts are frequently unwilling to discuss their addiction with families and health-care providers. This isolation confounds their recovery. The stigma associated with addiction sticks to addicts’ families as well, furthering a cycle of silence and shame. The church makes a faithful witness when it frames addiction within God’s redemption and compassion.

Inspired by a theology of grace we recognize that chemical dependency is but one form of addiction and seek ways to offer addicts healing rather than punishment. Even as we want to avoid enabling destructive drug use, we promote harm reduction strategies to keep those who struggle with drug dependency alive, protect the community, and encourage healing. We advocate research into addiction recovery and ensure everyone has access to treatment.

A Christian social ethic regarding drugs will be concerned about potential addicts, recognizing that the easy availability of drugs can lead some to stumble. Prohibition contributed to a steep decline in rates of cirrhosis of the liver. Between 2002 and 2014 cannabis use among adults more than doubled due to legalization and more permissive attitudes. Among pregnant women the prevalence of marijuana use during the past month jumped 62 percent. Of course, by itself, this does not warrant criminalizing cannabis anymore than it justifies criminalizing alcohol. But it does encourage us to fund effective addiction prevention programs, screening, and regulation.

The concern of a Christian drug ethic will extend to those involved in the drug trade. Many enter criminal activity, selling dangerous substances because they believe they have few other options. Some are genuinely indifferent to the suffering they cause. All, however misguided, regardless of how much harm or death they have caused, bear the image of God. While society has a responsibility to restrain evil, this should never be forgotten.

A Christian drug ethic will protect the innocent from drug-induced harm. We want to discourage perilous activities that are compromised by inebriation, such as driving. Toward this end, we need to more clearly understand when users of different drugs are sober and when they are not.

Finally, a Christian social ethic extends its concern to every dimension of creation before God. Given how all creation has value to God, we cannot ignore or discount the environmental side effects of crop eradication.

The Law’s Purpose and Limits

A Presbyterian social ethic regarding drugs will be instructed by John Calvin’s three uses of the law: (1) to convict us of our sin, (2) to restrain evil, and (3) to goad us to righteousness. These three uses of the law are made more helpful when we also differentiate God’s moral law (which operates on the conscience through a communal ethos) from secular law (which is enforced with the power of the sword). Because God orders the world through political authorities, secular law ought to reflect moral principles that serve the divine purpose. This is why it is misleading to say that government should not “legislate morality.”
In a pluralistic society the decision about what should be left to personal or communal morality and what should be legislated into law is inevitably contested. Growing pluralism can force governments to reconsider existing laws. Sectarian communities can try to dominate the political sphere by enacting their narrow moral visions. Though the distinction between God’s moral law and secular law cannot be firmly fixed for all time, we do well to understand the problems associated with legislating too much of God’s moral law as secular law. Secular law is a blunt instrument. When government legislates too much, it fails to account for the moral nuances of particular circumstances. It denies the moral integrity of individuals and encroaches on freedom of conscience. When governments go too far in enforcing God’s moral law with secular power, it dishonors the moral and religious diversity of the public, becoming oppressive. Excessively restrictive laws fail to lead people to righteousness. It provokes cynicism and rebellion and can even be called “immoral.”

Following Calvin’s “second use of the law,” secular government has a responsibility to restrain evil. It does this by preventing criminals from menacing the innocent and by punishing wrongdoers to deter crime. Following Calvin’s “third use of the law,” God intends secular law to have a restorative purpose that coheres with a theology of grace. Our criminal justice system needs to recover this latter, restorative purpose. This will lower recidivism and enable former offenders to more easily reenter and more fully contribute to society upon release.

Calvin’s third use of the law alerts us to the limitations of draconian drug laws and helps us distinguish between the sobriety imposed by jailing people and rehabilitative addiction therapy. It encourages us to lobby for effective drug abuse education and prevention and moves us to seek alternatives to punishment in drug courts and drug treatment.

Finally, a Christian social ethic for drug use and regulation will be humble. It will recognize the likelihood of unintended consequences. It will remember how temperance movements, started to voluntarily curb alcohol abuse, intensified into an intolerant movement that passed a constitutional amendment banning alcohol for all people. A train of unintended consequences followed. The limits of secular law were soon recognized and the amendment was reversed a mere thirteen years later. Many of the ostensibly noble intentions that inspired the war on drugs are being similarly tested. Its evil effects outweigh the good it was trying to do. We invite the church to learn humility as it moves deliberately, but never uncritically, to work for the reconciliation of the world (2 Cor. 5:18).

PART III: THE WAY TO HEALING

In this section, we explore policy recommendations that will contribute to a healing approach to the problems associated with drug use and addiction.

Prevention

The best way to control harmful drug use is through prevention. Prevention campaigns should raise awareness of risks of early exposure of young people to addictive substances, including tobacco, alcohol, and other drugs. They should be messaged properly and packaged on appropriate media platforms so that it appeals to audiences of parents, youth, medical personnel, and the broader community.

Prevention also involves screening to identify those at risk of addiction, offering low-level intervention (counseling) for those as low risk of addiction and referral for treatment for those with a high risk for addiction. Screening should be included as a part of a routine health survey in order to provide early intervention. It will require training health-care professionals, nurses, those who serve in primary care offices, emergency rooms, and dental practitioners.

A Call for Research

The way the law treats a given drug ought to correlate with its medical risks. Unfortunately, current U.S. drug classifications are badly outdated and correlate poorly with the risks various drugs pose. Toward this end, it is important to consider addictiveness as well as the possibility of deadly overdose, recognizing that other factors should also be considered when weighing a drug’s risks and potential for abuse. We need publicly funded research so we have a scientific basis for proportionate criminal sanctions, responsible regulation, and effective therapy.

A public health approach to drug policy should also consider the risks that drugs pose to human development. Child abuse pediatrician Dr. Kathryn Wells says, “We know alcohol is the worst substance of abuse you can use during pregnancy, most damaging to the fetus, without a doubt based on the information and research we have now.” Neonatal and breast milk exposure to heroin and cocaine also pose significant risks, including infant withdrawal syndrome. Risks from fetal exposure to cannabis by the mother are not well-studied.

Again, considerable research suggests that adult and adolescent brains respond differently to drugs. Because adolescent brains are still forming, drug use exposes them to greater risk of addiction. This danger is compounded because it occurs during the period when adolescents are typically separating from their parents and other authority figures and forging their own identity. This period of psychological development is frequently characterized by rebellion, risk-taking, and experimentation. We need more publicly funded research to understand the hazards of adolescent drug taking and how it might inform responsible drug policy.
We also need publicly funded research into effective drug treatment and rehabilitation. Currently, there is substantial disagreement about how to best treat opiate addiction. Some claim that maintaining addicts on safer opiates or other drugs provides the most promising approach to treatment. Others counter that this does not move people to sobriety, but constitutes government-supported addiction. Unsurprisingly, pharmaceutical companies that stand to profit are lobbying states to adopt treatment approaches that utilize their products.\textsuperscript{75} In this connection, we note that Casa Columbia recommends establishing evidence-based accreditation standards for treatment programs.\textsuperscript{76}

Decriminalizing Cannabis

This report reaffirms previous General Assembly action that the Federal Government and states legalize cannabis for medical use. It also recommends decriminalizing the production and possession of cannabis for personal recreational use at the state-level. It also advocates greater freedom for a diversity of state laws at the federal level, while discouraging the development of commercial interests and thwarting their ability to injure public health.\textsuperscript{77}

We anticipate that decriminalization could be a precursor to some type of legal regulation for recreational use. Legal regulation, if properly constructed, could offer advantages over decriminalization. It would pull the plug on the criminal economy. Depending on research results, it may also mandate cannabinoid content and dosage so that the drug is made safer and less addictive. If that time comes, we anticipate that we would prefer that cannabis be more restricted than in the states where it is currently legal, largely because we are concerned about preventing commercial interest from undermining public health. (Legal-regulation, like decriminalization, can take a variety of forms. For a discussion of this, see footnote 78.\textsuperscript{78})

This brings us to the concerns that preclude recommending legal-regulation at this time. First, much of today’s cannabis is much more potent than the cannabis of a generation ago, with THC levels (the cannabinoid that imparts the high) rising from approximately 4 percent in 1995 to approximately 12 percent in 2014. In addition, the “CBD content (various CBDs can shape the type of high produced and may have protective benefits) has fallen on average from approximately 0.28 percent in 2001 to \(<0.15\) percent in 2014, resulting in a change in the ratio of THC to CBD from 14 times in 1995 to approximately 80 times in 2014.”\textsuperscript{79} Since cannabis was legalized in Colorado, THC levels have increased dramatically, some cannabis tests at 32 percent. In this connection, we note that commercial interests blocked attempts to regulate THC levels for health purposes.\textsuperscript{80} Today’s cannabis presents health risks that were nonexistent in the 1970s.

Second, efforts to legalize cannabis have created an industry with a potential for trillions of dollars in profit. This industry is already lobbying and it will fund “research” and advertise without regard to public health. We have seen the damage done by big tobacco, whose sham studies claimed that smoking was safe and whose campaign contributions blocked sensible regulation, such as laws mandating smoke-free bars, which were key to reducing tobacco use. The current opioid epidemic provides additional warning to how commercial interests put profits over people.\textsuperscript{81} Even now, pharmaceutical companies are lobbying states to mandate their drugs in opiate maintenance programs. They want legislatures to force drug courts to make offenders choose between an injection with their drug (whose benefits remain disputed) or jail.\textsuperscript{82} The lesson is clear: Big Pot does not care about public health.

Before we move to legal-regulation we ought understand the science and what an evidence-based drug policy should look like. Many of cannabis’ psychopharmacological properties remain unknown because research was severely restricted because it has been classified as a Schedule I drug. The brain’s cannabinoid receptor system was only identified in the 1990s and is still little understood. Research is needed in a number of areas. We need to understand the impacts of the different cannabinoids on cannabis abuse disorder and psychosis.\textsuperscript{83} We need to better understand how cannabis interacts with other drugs.\textsuperscript{84}

We need research into how cannabis impacts sobriety.\textsuperscript{85} We know that cannabis intoxication impairs driving, though the deficits associated with cannabis inebriation differ from alcohol and are generally thought to be less severe. For example, people under the influence of cannabis alone tend to compensate by driving more slowly. However, when people consume cannabis with alcohol (as they frequently do), the deficits are frequently worse than either alone.\textsuperscript{86} Unlike like alcohol, cannabis lingers in body fat. Marilyn Huestis, who heads the chemistry and drug metabolism section at the National Institute on Drug Abuse, says,

It gets trickier when you try to factor in the chronic effect of smoking weed. … We found [chronic, frequent smokers’] brains had changed and reduced the density of cannabinoid receptors. … They were cognitively impaired for up to 28 days after their last use, and their driving might also still be impaired for that long. It’s scary.\textsuperscript{87}

How long does it take different dosages to be metabolized? How long should a commercial pilot abstain from consuming cannabis before flying? How long before it is safe for a surgeon to operate? How does chronic use impact performance? Currently we don’t know and there are no accepted standards of practice. We should understand this before making cannabis more widely available.

We also need to learn more about the impact of cannabis on mental health.\textsuperscript{88} Cannabis’ disruption of short-term memory is well-documented. Adolescents and young adults who are heavy cannabis smokers show markedly less connectivity between the neuronal axons of the hippocampus, the part of the brain associated with long-term memory.\textsuperscript{89} We do not know that whether chronic cannabis use causes permanent damage to learning and memory, though some researchers doubt that the deficits ameliorate.\textsuperscript{90}

High doses of THC can cause mild, transient psychosis. It can also worsen the symptoms of people with schizophrenia. More troubling is evidence that suggests that cannabis is associated with an increased risk for and earlier onset of psychosis. Some believe that the problems associated with cannabis abuse disorder, because it is much more common, exceed the dangers of psychosis. Still, because regular cannabis use among adolescents correlates with significant mental health problems, it is a concern. Two researchers, Meghan Haney and Eden Elvins, who interpret the evidence supporting causality differently, “agree on the biological plausibility of a causal relationship between adolescent cannabis use and negative psychiatric outcome.”\textsuperscript{99} In light of this they call for further longitudinal research, such as the Adolescent Brain Cognitive Development Study—or ABCD Study.\textsuperscript{92} Additional research, exploring whether the mix of cannabinoids in marijuana affects psychosis and addiction, may inform the regulation of cannabinoid content. (For more about the association of prolonged cannabis use and mental problems see Endnote 93.\textsuperscript{93})

Undoubtedly, social attitudes toward cannabis use have changed dramatically in the United States. Currently a majority of U.S. citizens favor its legalization. Given generational differences, this majority will likely grow. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is more ambivalent.\textsuperscript{94} Twenty-nine states have legalized cannabis for either medical or recreational use. Seven states and the District of Columbia have legalized the sale (or made it easier to share) cannabis for recreational use.\textsuperscript{95} We need to follow these “experiments” with an eye to what their successes and failures may teach.\textsuperscript{96}

In summary, legalization requires responsible regulation, which should be based on scientific evidence that we do not yet have. If we move too quickly to allow commercial interests to profit from what promises to be an exceedingly lucrative market, public health will suffer. Having said this, it is hard to justify inflicting draconian sentences on people for growing, possessing, or using small amounts of cannabis. As President Carter once told congress “Penalties against possession of a drug should not be more damaging … than the use of the drug itself.”\textsuperscript{97} Thus, this report recommends decriminalizing the possession and use of cannabis for personal use as the next responsible next step.\textsuperscript{98}

\textit{Harm Reduction}

This report encourages a number of proven and promising harm reduction programs as a way of shifting to a healing approach to the problems associated with drug abuse. It calls for legislation to put naloxone (a medication that prevents opiate overdose) in the hands of first responders. It supports needle exchanges to limit the spread of disease,\textsuperscript{99} Good Samaritan laws to encourage people to report an overdose without fear of legal repercussion, and supervised injection facilities. The latter reduce the possibility of children encountering discarded syringes and other drug paraphernalia. More importantly, these programs have proven to reduce the spread of disease and have a promising track record for getting people into treatment.\textsuperscript{100} This report also encourages creating a stronger network of certified addiction rehabilitation and maintenance programs based on the best addiction science we have.

As we consider how best to craft an effective healing approach, we do well to learn from the experiences of other countries, particularly those that have combined decriminalization (or reduced punishment) with some of programs described above. In 2001 Portugal reduced the penalty for possession of all drugs from a criminal to an “administrative offense.” Instead of prison, they send offenders to a Commission for the Dissuasion of Addiction. These informal panels include drug counselors and social workers. They can levy fines and ban people from raves, concerts, or bars. In addition to the legal changes, Portugal dedicated significant resources to outreach, treatment, and other services.

The results of these changes are somewhat disputed, leading some to compare the Portuguese experiment to a “Rorschach Test.”\textsuperscript{101} On the one hand, within a few years of enacting these policies the rate of drug interdiction (still illegal) had risen by 500 percent, the rate of self-reported life-time, yearly, and monthly drug use rose slightly, and the number of drug users in rehab climbed by 63 percent (largely because rehab was available).

On the other hand, reported yearly and monthly drug use among people aged 15–24, those considered most at risk of addiction, steadily declined from 2001 to 2012.\textsuperscript{102} Despite fears, addiction rates have fallen significantly, by 50 percent. There has also been a decline in overdose deaths and cases of HIV and AIDS. The drug user population has aged, suggesting that fewer people are starting to use.\textsuperscript{103} Today, the Health Ministry estimates that only about 25,000 Portuguese use heroin, down from 100,000 when the policy began.\textsuperscript{104}

Some heroin addicts will use no matter what, often with devastating health and social consequences. Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and Canada supply safe places and drug supplies to minimize the risks of harm to self and others, to wean addicts from using, as well as to reduce collateral crime, such as theft to supply their habits. In Switzerland, less than 15 percent of program participants relapsed into daily use after three years, while crimes committed by those in the group fell by more than two thirds. “Some make a virtually complete recovery,” according to a researcher of a similar program in Britain, “but others, we get them from a bad place to a less bad place.”\textsuperscript{105} In Vancouver, British Columbia, a trial of controlled heroin administration in a clean environment led to improved family relations, employment, and mental health, and to lower use of other drugs compared to patients receiving methadone, according to a study in the \textit{New England Journal of Medicine}.\textsuperscript{106}
The U.S. government has actively encouraged these sorts of innovations. In light of the deep, persistent, and varied harms that punitive drug policies have generated worldwide, the United States should allow other nations to implement diverse approaches. There is a similar imperative for the Federal Government to allow states flexibility to remedy racially disparate sentencing, reduce and prevent health harms for drug users, and invest in other public health programs.107

Drug Courts

This report recommends expanding drug courts.108 Drugs courts provide an alternative to incarceration for people who have been arrested for drug offences. Begun in 1989, there are now more than 2,700 such courts in the U.S.109 Drug courts operate in a variety of ways, sometimes offering and other times requiring treatment for addicts. If a convicted person declines or fails in treatment, drug courts can sentence them to prison.110 They can also exercise jurisdiction in cases where it can reasonably be claimed that persons who have committed non-drug crimes were influenced by their drug use in committing the crime.

While experts disagree about the efficacy and ethics of involuntary treatment for addicted persons, meta-analyses of drug court evaluations suggest that this alternative strategy reduces recidivism and substance abuse111 and the drug courts may be a cost-effective alternative to imprisonment.112 Drug courts can also involve faith-based organizations that minister to persons struggling to overcome addiction.

There are several important issues, however, that should be understood regarding drug policy reform and the use of drug courts:

• In some jurisdictions non-addicts arrested for possession can have their cases placed into drug courts. Rehabilitation is inappropriate in these cases. That said, since addicts consume the greatest share of all drugs, they are more likely to be caught possessing drugs.

• Sometimes prosecutors do not cooperate with judicial officers. When this occurs, it can undermine the drug court’s purpose of offering treatment options to drug-dependent people coming into the judicial system.

• A strategy that combines drug courts with decriminalizing or lowering the penalty (levying fines for instance) for the possession of certain drugs could unclog courts and empty jails.

• Drug courts prefer not to incarcerate people for personal drug consumption. This forces society to confront the imperative of providing addicts with effective, publicly funded treatment.

• It may be that we should learn from Portugal’s Dissuasion Commissions adding trained drug counselors or others with expertise regarding to advise the judge and the defendant and enact lesser penalties and fines that won’t require locking up those who refuse.

The Church’s Calling

God calls the church to love the world the way God loves it in Jesus Christ. We live out this calling in a number of ways: by inviting people to new life in Jesus Christ, by casting a vision of graceful flourishing before God, by hosting 12 Step meetings and pursuing policies that prevent drug abuse and that reduce harm, and make treatment available. In short, we work to build a house of healing in our congregations and in God’s world.

APPENDIX A

THE RACIST HISTORY OF THE WAR ON DRUGS

A century ago, opiates and cocaine were freely available, and used medicinally and recreationally by people throughout the United States. Scores of patent medicines, elixirs and tonics contained significant amounts of opium or cocaine. Opiate dependence peaked in the United States near the turn of the twentieth century, when the number of addicts was estimated at close to 250,000 in a population of 76 million—representing a drug addiction rate far higher than that of today’s society.113 The prevailing attitude was that drug addiction was a health problem, best treated by physicians and pharmacists. Obviously, we do not want to return to the era of unregulated drug markets.

Public attitudes concerning drug use changed as perceptions of drug users shifted.114 Although white Americans consumed their fair share of opium, societal prejudice against opiates grew along with the influx of Chinese immigrants whose opium dens were viewed as foreign and threatening. In 1875 San Francisco passed the nation’s first drug law banning only the form of opium smoked in Chinese opium dens. In 1902, the Committee on the Acquirement of the Drug Habit of the American Pharmaceutical Association declared: “If the ‘China-man’ cannot get along without his ‘dope,’ we can get along without him.”115 The first state drug prohibition was passed in 1909, when California outlawed imported opium for smoking.

In 1910, Dr. Hamilton Wright, the progenitor of U.S. anti-narcotics laws, reported that contractors were giving cocaine to their black employees in an effort to get more work out of them. A few years later, stories proliferated about “coca-crazed Negroes” in the South. An article in The New York Times went so far as to state that cocaine made blacks shoot better, and would “increase, rather than interfere with good marksmanship.” Another reported that some southern police departments had switched to .38 caliber revolvers because cocaine made blacks impervious to smaller .32 caliber bullets. Evoking highly racially, and gender-charged imagery, an article in Literary Digest, a popular magazine of the era, claimed that, “most of the attacks upon white women of the South are the direct result of the cocaine-crazed Negro brain.”

To read these stories one might not know that blacks were using cocaine and opiates at lower levels than their white counterparts or that the drug users were actually committing very little crime. The gross distortion, rank appeals to racism, and sensationalism of these media stories generated support for the Harrison Narcotics Act of 1914 that restricted the manufacture and sale of opium, coca, and their derivatives.

Cannabis spread alongside the emerging American jazz scene of the 1920s and 30s, as blacks and whites began socializing as equals and smoking the drug together. Anti-marijuana propaganda of the time cited this breach of racial norms as typifying the social degradation caused by the drug. Officials in New Orleans attributed many of the region’s crimes to cannabis and claimed it was a dangerous sexual stimulant. Harry Anslinger, head of the newly formed federal narcotics division, warned political and community leaders about blacks and whites dancing together in “teahouses,” and stoked racial prejudice to stiffen drug laws.

The first federal law targeting cannabis possession and use, the Marijuana Tax Act of 1937, was enacted during the Great Depression. Proponents substituted the Spanish word “marijuana” for the more common “cannabis” to scare white Americans. They also employed racist stereotypes, claiming that Mexican immigrants, who competed with unemployed white Americans for agricultural jobs, engaged in cannabis-induced violence against whites. The American Coalition, an anti-immigrant group, stated:

Marihuana, perhaps now the most insidious of our narcotics, is a direct by-product of unrestricted Mexican immigration. … Mexican peddlers have been caught distributing sample marihuana cigarettes to schoolchildren. Bills for our quota against Mexico have been blocked mysteriously in every Congress since the 1924 Quota Act. Our nation has more than enough laborers.

Drug use was again racialized in 1971, when President Nixon declared that drugs were “public enemy number one” and that the threat required an all-out offensive. John Erlichman, Nixon’s top domestic advisor, later clarified Nixon’s motivation,

The Nixon campaign in 1968, and the Nixon White House after that, had two enemies: the antiwar left and black people. You understand what I’m saying. We knew we couldn’t make it illegal to be either against the war or blacks, but by getting the public to associate the hippies with marijuana and blacks with heroin, and then criminalizing both heavily, we could disrupt those communities. We could arrest their leaders, raid their homes, break up their meetings, and vilify them night after night on the evening news. Did we know we were lying about the drugs? Of course we did.

From 1978–1984 cocaine use spiked 700 percent. During this time, partly due to racially charged media hype, the nation became fixated on smokable cocaine known as crack. In response to this, and with black support for a more punitive crime policy, the 1986 Anti-Drug Abuse Act established mandatory minimum prison sentences that made penalties for crack used by urban blacks were made grossly harsher (100-to-1) than penalties for powder cocaine used in the suburbs, despite the fact that use rates were similar and chemically they are identical. The disparity in sentencing guidelines significantly impacted African Americans, not only because whites and blacks consumed cocaine in different forms, but also because the greater penalties for crack, in contrast with the negligible penalties for powdered cocaine, proved an incentive for law enforcement.

In 2010 the U.S. Congress and President Obama took bipartisan action in 2010 to address this gross inequity.

The Fair Sentencing Act did not eliminate this injustice, since the law was not retroactively applied to those sentenced under the 1986 law and still applied a disparity of 18-to-1 for sentences for crack and cocaine.

APPENDIX B
THE HISTORY OF THIS REPORT

This report was requested by the 221st General Assembly (2014) in response to overtures from seven presbyteries, to provide advocacy “for effective drug policies grounded in science, compassion, and human rights” (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 630). To carry out this request, the Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy in 2014 designated a team to study drug reform. Their report was delivered to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) along with a recommendation that the report be tested in the church. Materials were distributed to middle judicatories and discussed at meetings in Colorado, Arizona, South Carolina, and other places. A question about support for the legalization of cannabis was included in a Presbyterian Panel Survey in 2017.

With these inputs and fresh evidence from places that have revised their drug laws, in 2017 the Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy decided to adjust the initial paper’s recommendations. Instead of calling for legal regulation, this report calls for decriminalization at the state level of the production and possession of cannabis for recreational and medical uses, while calling for federal laws that allow the state-level experiments. The committee felt that this shift was needed to create time to do the scientific research that ought to inform responsible drug regulation.

The paper was rewritten in support of this recommendation and for clarity. The new draft of the paper has been tested with experts on drug addiction and criminal law.

APPENDIX C
Definitions Used in this Paper

Addiction is “any repeated behavior, substance-related or not, in which a person feels compelled to persist, regardless of its negative impacts on the person’s life and the lives of others.” Addiction can be physical and/or psychological. Gerald May provides a five-part definition that combines both: “(1) tolerance (build-up of resistance, requiring higher dosage), (2) withdrawal symptoms, (3) self-deception, (4) loss of willpower, and (5) distortion of attention.”

Decriminalization means to legalize non-commercial production, possession, and consumption of currently illegal drugs for personal use. In the section on Portugal decriminalization refers to an approach that takes drug use and possession of small amounts out of the criminal justice system, while assigning lesser penalties and fines.

Drugs in this paper generally refers to any psychotropic substance, not substances that are administered for therapeutic purposes.

Legalization refers to laws, such as we see in Washington and Colorado that legalize and regulate the commercial production and sale of marijuana.

223rd General Assembly (2018)
Harm reduction refers to efforts to control the deleterious and sometimes deadly effects of drug consumption. These include naproxolene to prevent overdose deaths, needle exchanges, safe houses where addicts can shoot up and be encouraged to seek treatment, and opiate maintenance programs that discourage criminal activity and remove the temptation to seek drugs on the street where purity and uneven dosing pose significant risks.

Institutional racism does not necessarily involve racist intent, but refers to systematic ways that institutions manifest racially disparate and unjust outcomes.

Legal-regulation means to legalize the commercial production, possession, and sale of currently illegal drugs. We hyphenate the term, rather than simply call it “legalization,” in recognition that public safety requires restrictions on some substances.

Mass Incarceration is often used to mean historically high incarceration rates. In this paper it will be used for what is, in effect, the incarceration of entire groups—as in the fact that the incarceration rate for black men without high school degrees can be (depending on the state) as high as one in three.

Prohibition the Volstead Act (1920) prohibited the manufacture, distribution and sale of alcohol, but did not criminalize the possession or consumption of alcohol. Our approach to other drugs has been much more harsh.

Racism refers to racial prejudice plus power that is exhibited by institutions, communities, and individuals. More recent concepts such as “white privilege”, “micro-aggressions”, and “subconscious/internalized racism” help us understand the unconscious dynamics of discrimination. These approaches move us beyond the more limited, individualized, dictionary definition of racism as “belief in the superiority of a particular race and prejudice based on this belief.”

APPENDIX D

Summary of Previous PC(USA) Policy on Drug and Alcohol Use and Abuse

Throughout much of its history, the PC(USA) has been concerned about the effects of alcohol and alcoholism. It was actively involved in the temperance movement in the 19th and early 20th centuries, even to the point of nominating in 1873 that “the Church is essentially a temperance society and her members shall use all their influence for the suppression of the liquor traffic.” The 139th General Assembly in 1946 urged reinstating prohibition of alcohol as well as abstinence by PC(USA) members. (Minutes, PCUSA, 1946, Part I, p. 325-7.)

In the 1960s and 1970s, the General Assembly called for increased efforts to medical and therapeutic treatment of alcoholism as well as narcotics addiction, to a large extent adopting a “disease model” for understanding them. As early as 1965, the General Assembly called for efforts to criminalization of drug addiction. The 170th General Assembly in 1976 called narcotics addiction a “medically-social problem arising from many diverse factors, including psychological and physiological dependency on drugs, family instability, cultural conflicts, and social and economic deprivation” which necessitates legal distinction in the criminal punishment between those who sell to support their habit and those who profit from addiction. (Minutes, PCUSA, 1966, Part I, p. 381-382.)

In 1978 the PC(USA) published a special issue of its journal, Church & Society, on drug abuse, titled “A Body Broken: Substance Abuse and the Church.” The following year’s 206th General Assembly issued an extensive statement and recommendations on drugs and drug policy. Much of the language in the 206th statement has been included or adapted in this paper. The statement (Minutes, PCUSA, 1979, p. 326-7.)

The 1993 statement went on to encourage economic reversion and public investment in need-reduction policies:

- Education concerning the addictions, and prevention programs.
- Public health maintenance programs, which include counseling.
- Habilitation of individuals who are addicted, and rehabilitation programs for their families.
- Justice in educational opportunity.
- Justice in economic opportunity.

It also urged “reversal of current U.S. drug supply limiting policies:
- Mandatory drug sentencing.
- Zero tolerance policy and property confiscation without due process.
- Erosion of personal rights and equal protection under the law, etc.
- Decriminalization of possession with judicial focus on drug manufacturers and suppliers.

It called for:
- The nation to establish “treatment on demand” for those with chemical dependencies and their families.
- The support of innovative, economically sponsored treatment programs and halfway houses, with access to medical support, particularly in economically impoverished regions and neighborhoods.
- The decriminalization of U.S. drug war policies in foreign countries, and replace low-intensity conflicts with programs of economic aid and local self-sufficiency.”

ENDNOTES

1. While often characterized as “experiments,” we note that state and international efforts to decriminalize and legalize drugs lack controls and other aspects of the scientific method.

3. Paul Goldstein has identified three categories of “drug-related” murders: psychopharmalogical (drug-influenced), economic (where someone kills another in the process of trying to feed their drug habit), and systemic (the outcome of aggressive patterns of interaction within the system of drug use and distribution). After examining homicides classified as “drug-related, he and other researchers determined that approximately 8 percent were “multidimensional” (they did not fit the three types), 14 percent were psychopharmacological, 4 percent were economic compulsive, and all the rest (74 percent) were systematic, that is due to drug gangs controlling their markets. See “Relationship of

   In this article, we argue that the mafia arose as a response to an exogenous shock in the demand for oranges and lemons, following Lind’s discovery in the late eighteenth century that citrus fruits cured scurvy. More specifically, we claim that mafia appeared in locations where producers made high profits from citrus production for overseas export. Operating in an environment with a weak rule of law, the mafia protected citrus production from predation. …

   fold—the black marriage rate fell twice as fast as its white counterpart. More than 40 percent of black men and women never marry; the large majority of black children are born out of wedlock. One reason for those statistics is that a sizeable fraction of black men of marriage age are either in prison, about to go there, or just released. … Black incarceration rates contribute to that gap: even after sentences are served, the

60. When we celebrate communion, we do not emphasize wine’s intoxicating effects, but it redness and viscosity as “the word made visible” and a means of experiencing Christ’s spiritual presence. See also Paul’s criticisms of drunkenness during communion in the Corinthian Church (1 Cor. 11:17–22).

61. There is considerable debate about whether addiction should be characterized as a “disease.” While the American Medical Association and the American Society of Addiction Medicine both designate addiction as a brain disease, others question whether the disease model is helpful. Lance Dodes says, Addiction has very little in common with diseases. It is a group of behaviors, not an illness on its own. It cannot be explained by any disease process. … In addiction there is no infectious agent (as in tuberculosis), no pathological biological process (as in diabetes), and no biologically degenerative condition (as in Alzheimer’s disease). The only “disease-like” aspect of addiction is that if people do not deal with it, their lives tend to get worse. That’s true of lots of things in life that are not diseases; it doesn’t tell us anything about the nature of the problem. See, “Is Addiction Really a Disease? If Not What Is It?, Psychology Today (Dec. 17, 2011) https://www.psychologytoday.com/blog/the-heart-addiction/201112/is-addiction-really-disease.

65. There are many accounts of the three uses of the law, among them Calvin’s in the Instruction in Faith (Louisville: Westminster/ John Knox, 1992, reissue of Fuhrmann translation with Leith forward) especially chapter 17’s discussion of sanctification and the law being written on the heart, and in the answers to questions 93–97 in the Westminster Larger Catechism.

71. The margin of error for developing dependence on heroin was much higher than for other substances—5.6 percent, so the probability of developing heroin dependence among users actually ranged from 17.5 percent to 28.7 percent. 77. The discrepancy between state and federal laws sets a bad precedent, essentially inviting states to engage in the doctrine of nullification, wherein they ignore the federal laws criminalizing pot. This “compromise” undermines rule of law and sets a bad precedent. Why if some states decide, by similar logic, to ignore federal laws against racial discrimination, for minimum wages, or in favor of gay marriage? We believe that the Federal government should have the most liberal laws governing the use of cannabis while encouraging, at this point, decriminalization at the state level. In particular, we would hope that the federal government would discourage commercial production and sales, perhaps preventing the interstate commerce. The goal would be to allow time publically-funded research to proceed and responsible legislation to be written without the corrupting influence of Big Pot.

78. Legal regulation can take a variety of forms. For a survey of different approaches to loosening laws on cannabis, see https://www.rand.org/blog/2016/12/the-legal-marijuana-middle-ground.html. Proponents of legalization for recreational use sometimes point to Uruguay as a model. Uruguay has legalized the sale of cannabis under very strict conditions. It restricted sales to limited number of pharmacies and only allows registered citizens to purchase small amounts. These restrictions are designed to prevent Netherlands’ style drug tourism, profiteering, over indulgence, and the development of a secondary market that resells legally obtained drugs. https://www.nytimes.com/2017/07/19/world/americas/uruguay-legalizes-pot-marijuana.html.

83. While THC is the psychoactive ingredient in pot, other cannabinoids may regulate marijuana’s addictiveness and psychotic effects. For example, the popular “skunk” type of marijuana is very high in THC, yet contains low levels of CBD that appear to reduce the incidence of harm. See Linda, A Parker’s report of contemporary research in, Cannabinoids and the Brain (Cambridge: MIT Press, 2017).

85. The Denver Post did a study of National Highway Traffic Safety Administration statistics for Colorado and found that the number of drivers testing positive for cannabis has risen faster than the increase in usage. It also found that:

The 2013–16 period saw a 40 percent increase in the number of all drivers involved in fatal crashes in Colorado, from 627 to 880, according to the NHTSA data. Those who tested positive for alcohol in fatal crashes from 2013 to 2015—figures for 2016 were not available—grew 17 percent, from 129 to 151. By contrast, the number of drivers who tested positive for marijuana use jumped 145 percent—from 47 in 2013 to 115 in 2016.

The role of cannabis inebriation played in the fatal crash is undetermined and whether the rise is due to legalization is disputed. See, https://www.denverpost.com/2017/08/25/colorado-marijuana-traffic-fatalities/.

94. A Presbyterian Panel Survey found Presbyterians are somewhat ambivalent regarding legalization: 40 percent of Presbyterians opposed legalizing cannabis, 39 percent favored legalizing cannabis, and 21 percent expressed no opinion. Researchers noted, a number of panelists objected to the wording of the cannabis question. The question asked whether panelists believe using cannabis should be legalized. These panelists indicated they might support cannabis use for medical purposes, de-criminalizing but not legalizing cannabis use, or legalizing use for adults only, but not outright legalization. Some panelists stressed cannabis’s harmful effects. See “Report: Advisory Committee Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) Self Study and Committee Review Research” Presbyterian Research Services, (9/11/2017), p. 24.

96. Though the different state decriminalization and legalization projects are commonly called “experiments” they technically aren’t because there are no controls, as you would have in a well-structured, scientific experiment.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-08
Advice & Counsel on Item 11-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-08.

ACREC supports this overture as it brings awareness to a misappropriate application of laws unjustly and unfairly applied to people of color who have been marginalized and oppressed by racism. Thus, people of color are suffering punitively but not receiving healing support from the church.

“Racism is the opposite of what God intends for humanity. It is the rejection of the other, which is entirely contrary to the Word of God incarnate in Jesus Christ. Racism is a lie about our fellow human beings, for it says that some are less than others. Because of our biblical understanding of who God is and what God intends for humanity, the PC(USA) must stand against, speak against, and work against racism” (Facing Racism: A Vision of the Intercultural Community Churchwide Antiracism Policy: https://facing-racism.pusa.org/).

Item 11-09

[The assembly approved Item 11-09 as amended and with comment. See pp. 56, 58–59.]

[Comment: The Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues feels it is necessary to create a new task force as described in Recommendation 5. in order to take immediate and decisive action.]

A Resolution on Sexual Misconduct in the PC(USA)—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to declare that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) confesses its failure to listen to the long-silenced voices of [victims] [survivors] of clergy sexual misconduct, repents its institutional sins of ineffective sexual misconduct policy, and commits to the deep systemic changes needed to create just systems.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk, in conjunction with the declaration named in Recommendation 1, to commit the PC(USA) to complete transparency on the number of charges of sexual misconduct at all levels of congregational and denominational life and to encourage mid councils, while respecting confidentiality, to voluntarily submit the number of sexual misconduct allegations and charges within their bounds to the Stated Clerk to be reported to each General Assembly.

3. Direct the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to provide and, where necessary, develop pastoral, Trauma-Informed Clinical Care (TIC)1 based and theologically-grounded resources for healing [victims] [survivors] and their families, congregations, and presbyteries from sexual misconduct within the church, including:

   a. Healing resources that extend beyond individual victims to:
      • spouses and couples;
      • families and communities;
a. Healing resources that extend beyond individual victims to:
   • spouses and couples;
   • families and communities;
   • congregations and presbyteries.

b. Theological resources for healing the faith of primary and secondary [victims] [survivors] and congregations.

c. Restorative justice resources for healing congregations and presbyteries.

d. Culturally appropriate resources for the full diversity of PC(USA) congregations;

e. Access to the resources of individuals and organizations with proven skills for healing from church sexual misconduct.

4. Direct the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, and the Presbyterian Foundation to provide mandatory, annual sexual misconduct training for their employees that include pastoral and Trauma-Informed Clinical Care resources along with legal resources, and that emphasize representing the denomination as a place of truth-telling, justice, accountability, and pastoral and theologically-grounded healing.

5. Direct the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC), in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), [“Safe and Sacred Space Task Force,”] and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to form a five-member task force composed of [victims] [survivors] and advocates for [victims] [survivors] of sexual misconduct. The task force will oversee the implementation of Recommendations 1. thru 4. while undertaking a comprehensive examination of Presbyterian policy, judicial process, and rules of discipline. It will evaluate the need for a Sexual Assault Response Coordinator within each presbytery and the collection of the number of sexual misconduct allegations and charges occurring within the bounds of the denomination. The task force will be staffed by both OGA and PMA, and will report back to the 224th General Assembly (2020) with recommendations on how the PC(USA) can be more effective in ensuring justice, accountability, and pastoral support for individuals, families, and congregations when charges of sexual misconduct have been made.

Rationale

I have endowed you with my Spirit ...
So gentle that you do not break a bruised reed,
Or quench a wavering flame,
Faithfully you will bring forth true justice.
—Isaiah 42:1b, 3 The Inclusive Bible, 2007

It takes great courage for victims of sexual misconduct to come forward. When sexual misconduct occurs within the church, the risk is even greater for the damage is not only physical and emotional but also spiritual. There is a betrayal of trust that strikes at the heart of a victim’s ability to trust their faith, their faith community, and, ultimately, God.

In the Presbyterian process, victims who file a formal disciplinary accusation expose themselves to rigorous scrutiny and criticism by their congregations and presbyteries. Churches have never been comfortable talking about sexual matters. There is a tendency to view clergy sexual abuse “as a personal matter between an individual and God even when it is an abuse of power, hence, a matter affecting the community.” Fearful that truth-telling might jeopardize membership and funding, the church has been prone to denying sexual misconduct or to minimizing its reality with platitudes like “Why can’t we all be Christian and just forgive?”

Clergy sexual misconduct is particularly difficult to acknowledge since it challenges the protected status ascribed to ministers as representatives of God. The clergy offender is likely to be in a respected position of authority with the power to impinge the credibility of victims from the pulpit, in congregational life, and among colleagues in the presbytery. The likelihood that victims will become alienated from their faith community is very real. As a result, clergy sexual misconduct sends out ripple effects beyond individual victims to impact spouses and children, families and marriages, congregations and presbyteries.

Because all sexual abuse is, at the core, an abuse of power, certain populations are more vulnerable to such abuse. For instance, children and youth, developmentally disabled adults, and immigrant night shift workers are often the targets of sexual misconduct. To the extent that our denominational culture has been grounded in white supremacy and patriarchy, it justifies the idolatry of whiteness and maleness thus creating situations ripe for the abuse of perceived power over others.

Gender inequities rooted in theological misunderstandings based in patriarchy leave women within the church particularly... vulnerable to sexual misconduct, not only from other clergy, but also to sexual harassment from male members of their congregations. For women clergy, sexual misconduct has an impact on their bodies, their emotional well-being, their ministries, and ecclesiastical futures. Yet, according to PC(USA) research in 2016: 84 percent of female teaching elders have experienced discrimination, while only 48 percent of male respondents believe that gender inequity is a problem.3

In an article entitled “This Moment Isn’t (Just) About Sex. It’s Really About Work,” Rebecca Traister says that a focus on sex:

lets us off the hook, permitting us to look away from broader horrors, whole complex systems of disempowerment and economic, professional vulnerability… Gender inequity is what explains why women are vulnerable to harassment before they are even harassed… What makes women vulnerable is not their carnal violability, but rather the way that their worth has been understood as fundamentally erotic, ornamental; that they have not been taken seriously as equals; that they have been treated as some ancillary reward that comes with the kinds of power men are taught to reach for and are valued for achieving.4

The #MeToo/#TimesUp movements have shaken our social institutions with their revelations. With the exception of a response from our PC(USA) Co-Moderators,5 however, the Presbyterian church has remained largely silent. The denomination has failed to live up to its prophetic tradition by calling for systemic change.

As a former Presbyterian mission, Cameron House, in San Francisco’s Chinatown, was the first national PC(USA) program to come forward with its experience of clergy abuse directed at three generations of Chinese American boys over a forty-year period.6 With more than forty known victims—and estimates that the number is in the 100s—Cameron House had the unique experience of working directly with the denomination at the national level. Unfortunately, victims reported an experience that too often did not lead to healing but instead added to a sense of woundedness by the institutional church. Other Presbyterian victims have also reported that they have experienced more justice and compassion in the U.S. court system than they did in the ecclesiastical judicial process.7

At the denominational level, the current PC(USA) structure for handling clergy abuse is divided between the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and focused largely around legal counsel and insurance providers. From a victim’s perspective, the result is confusing, protective of the institution, and poorly communicated. The website, for instance, appears to be primarily designed, not for victims, but to inform and protect presbyteries on the judicial process.

Because of its roots in the interdependent Chinese culture, Cameron House recognized that clergy sexual misconduct does not just impact individuals. It sends out ripple effects on spouses and children, families and marriages, congregations and local communities. Though compassionate justice for victims involves more than just adjudication and discipline of the offender, Presbyteries rarely provide victims, their families, or congregations with the consistent support needed to sustain them during the protracted and difficult investigative proceedings under the Rules of Discipline. In fact, under Presbyterian polity, there is no such thing as an allegation of sexual misconduct since it is not until charges of sexual misconduct have actually been brought that an allegation retrospectively becomes about sexual misconduct.

Though Presbyterians are a connectional denomination, with regards to clergy sexual misconduct, apart from legal implications and the judicial process, the connections between the national denomination and its mid councils are minimal. There is little sharing of sexual misconduct experiences or healing resources between presbyteries, connections that might be particularly helpful for culturally diverse congregations. Currently, the PC(USA) does not even know the full extent of sexual misconduct occurring within its bounds. This only perpetuates an atmosphere of secrecy that allows clergy misconduct to continue.

The PC(USA) is not starting at square one on the issue of sexual misconduct. In the past, there have been studies and policy changes aimed to address inequities and confusion. Yet, the reporting process remains rife with inconsistencies and unclear protocols at great cost to victims, their extended families, their congregations and, ultimately, to the church as an instrument of justice. If the issue of sexual misconduct within the church is to be brought out of the darkness of secrecy and into the light of transparency, the PC(USA) sexual misconduct policy and protocols need to be updated in light of a study by the task force that is called for in this resolution. Theological resources, beyond the ability of mid councils to create, need to be provided and, where necessary, developed—not just to heal individual victims, but to heal secondary victims and congregations.

At this critical moment in history when racism, sexism, and misogyny abound throughout the current culture, causing significant spiritual and emotional violence, it is imperative for the church to hear the voices of victims who have long been silenced. Though confession and repentance are central tenets of the faith, it will require great courage for the PC(USA) to confess its institutional sins of past ineffectiveness and undertake the deep systemic changes that are needed to create just systems. With the current energy surrounding sexual assault issues, the PC(USA) has an opportunity to claim responsible leadership and take the next steps toward justice, accountability and healing.

Time’s Up

It is time for the PC(USA) to set aside its fears that truth-telling will jeopardize membership and funding, confess its failure to listen to the long-silenced voices of victims of clergy sexual misconduct, repent its institutional sins of ineffective sexual misconduct policy, and commit to the deep systemic changes needed to create just systems.
It is time for the PC(USA), while respecting confidentiality, to acknowledge the full extent to which clergy sexual misconduct is occurring in the denomination by collecting aggregate statistics on the actual numbers of sexual misconduct charges within its bounds.

It is time to make a pastoral, theologically-grounded, and trauma-informed healing process central.

It is time to train all program staff, across both OGA and PMA divisions, to represent the denomination as a place of truth-telling, justice, accountability, and healing.

It is time to create a task force of victims’ advocates to ensure that these crucial changes occur.

Definitions

Sexual Misconduct is the comprehensive term used in this report and recommendations to include:

Child sexual abuse; including, but is not limited to, any contact or interaction between a child and an adult when the child is being used for the sexual stimulation of the adult person or of a third person. The behavior may or may not involve touching. Sexual behavior between a child and an adult is always considered forced whether or not consented to by the child. In the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the sexual abuse definition of a child is anyone under age eighteen.

Sexual abuse as defined in the Book of Order. “Sexual abuse of another person is any offense involving sexual conduct in relation to (1) any person under the age of eighteen years or anyone over the age of eighteen years without the mental capacity to consent; or (2) any person when the conduct includes force, threat, coercion, intimidation, or misuse of ordered ministry or position” (Book of Order, D-10.0401c).

Sexual harassment; defined for this policy, is as follows: unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature constitute sexual harassment when:

a. submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual’s employment, or their continued status in an institution;

b. submission to or rejection of such conduct is used as the basis for employment decisions affecting such an individual;

c. such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual’s work performance by creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working environment; or

d. an individual is subjected to unwelcome sexual jokes, unwelcome or inappropriate touching, or display of sexual visuals that insult, degrade, and/or sexually exploit men, women, or children.

Rape or sexual contact by force, threat, or intimidation.

Sexual conduct is offensive, obsessive, or suggestive language or behavior, unacceptable visual contact, unwelcome touching or fondling that is injurious to the physical or emotional health of another.

Sexual Malfeasance is defined by the broken trust resulting from sexual activities within a professional ministerial relationship that results in misuse of office or position arising from the professional ministerial relationship.

Misuse of technology use of technology that results in sexually harassing or abusing another person, including texting or emailing suggestive messages and images to persons with whom one has a ministerial relationship. It is never appropriate to view pornography on church property. When this includes a person under the age of eighteen, it is considered child abuse. There is never an expectation of personal privacy when using technological equipment owned by a church or church entity or within the context of ministry.

1. “Trauma-informed: A trauma-informed approach to the delivery of behavioral health services includes an understanding of trauma and an awareness of the impact it can have across settings, services, and populations. It involves viewing trauma through an ecological and cultural lens and recognizing that context plays a significant role in how individuals perceive and process traumatic events, whether acute or chronic. In May 2012, SAMHSA convened a group of national experts who identified three key elements of a trauma-informed approach: “(1) realizing the prevalence of trauma; (2) recognizing how trauma affects all individuals involved with the program, organization, or system, including its own workforce; and (3) responding by putting this knowledge into practice.” Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), Trauma Informed Care in Behavioral Health Services (Rockville, MD: US Health and Human Services, 2012), 4, xiv. <https://store.samhsa.gov/shin/content/SMA14-4816/SMA14-4816.pdf> (15 February 2018).

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-09

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-09.

ACREC is grateful for this resolution brought by our partners, ACWC. We would highlight, in particular, the need ACWC has named to provide culturally appropriate resources for the full breadth of diverse cultures included in our denomination. In some contexts, simple translation may be appropriate, but we would also stress the need for resources to be created by or in close partnership with those within the particular communities in order that cultural contexts are taken into account. At a time when the PC(USA) is naming its own complicity in the sin of racism, repenting, and beginning the work of reconciliation and renewed commitment to equitable treatment for all members of the body of Christ, we have no choice but to invest in resourcing the full body of the PC(USA).

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-09

Comment on Item 11-09—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to approve Item 11-09.

As the elected body charged with holding the structures and systems of the PC(USA) accountable to the values of our faith, COGA affirms this important call from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) for a reckoning in the PC(USA) around sexual violence and sexual harassment.

The institutional church stands alongside all other institutions in the United States with the structural patterns and marks of white supremacy and patriarchy deeply entrenched in who we are and how we address problems. COGA agrees that the church’s policies, procedures, and practices in response to sexual violence have been inadequate and re-harming in some profound ways for many people, communities, and the church as a whole.

COGA commends to the assembly the comment from the Office of General Assembly (OGA) on this overture, which provides information for past assembly actions and current processes underway to address these issues in the OGA.

COGA urges the assembly to implement a multilayered approach to this complicated problem. The PC(USA) needs more than study and self-examination, the church needs practices and transformation. To that end, COGA commends to the assembly the crucial call in this overture for a “trauma-informed response” to this problem. Sexual trauma runs deep into bodies, relationships, communities, and congregations. Sexual trauma can leave harmful and trivialized patterns of relationship, communication, and problem solving that persist for generations. Avoidance, secrecy, bullying behavior, distrust, and collective shaming and blaming can take hold in ways that are hard to recognize when an individual and a community have not been extended life-giving support in the wake of sexual trauma.

Without a trauma-informed approached, one experience of sexual violence can morph into cultures, systems, and reactions that protect abuse of power and silence truth telling. Trauma-informed work takes time and relationships of trust. COGA acknowledges that the kind of trust required for this work takes intentionality, repentance, and long-term practices on the part of our denomination.
COGA also acknowledges the need for leadership at all levels of our denomination to make this transformation effective. The voices of those most impacted need to lead the way in how this unfolds. COGA, therefore, encourages the assembly to center the voices of those most impacted by sexual violence in its discernment concerning this overture, rather than focus on legal and financial matters. The church’s response must be a compassionate and constructive one, not a corporate and defensive one.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk …” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). COGA regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-09

Comment on Item 11-09—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The OGA advises the assembly to refer Recommendations 3. and 5. in this resolution to the Safe and Sacred Space Task Force appointed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), which will report to the 224th General Assembly (2020).

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directed “the Office of the General Assembly to form a task force made up of representatives from mid councils and local governing bodies to work with congregations on implementing child/youth/vulnerable adults protection policies and appropriate responses.” The Safe and Sacred Space Task Force was appointed in July 2017 and began its work in August 2017.

The members of the task force are in the Exhibit Hall in the Office of the General Assembly booth and would love to talk with folks about your experience and about their work.

The interim report from the Safe and Sacred Space Task Force can be found in the referrals section of pc-biz (Item 01-02, I. Referrals in Progress, E. Task Force for Safe and Sacred Space Interim Report) and is duplicated below:

E. Task Force for Safe and Sacred Space Interim Report

Interim Report from the Task Force for Safe and Sacred Space

The 221st General Assembly (2014) directed the Office of the General Assembly to appoint a task force to help congregations implement child, youth, and vulnerable adult protection policies. Members of the Task Force for Safe and Sacred Space were identified in June of 2017:

Nancy Cavalcante: Synod of Living Waters, Presbytery of Mid Kentucky
Windy Johnston: Synod of South Atlantic, Presbytery of Tropical Florida
Jody LeFort: Synod of the Covenant, Presbytery of the Western Reserve
Doreen Der McLeod: Synod of the Pacific, Presbytery of San Francisco
Sheila Palmer: Synod of South Atlantic, Presbytery of Florida

The task force held its first meeting in Louisville, August 14–15, 2017, reviewing the resources that can be accessed through the PC(USA) website and beginning to identify additional sources for education and training materials. Representatives from the task force attended the October 2017 Mid Council Leaders Gathering to seek feedback regarding the needs of congregations as they implement protection policies. Our continuing work, individually and in conference calls in November and December of 2017 and February of 2018, has been focused on identifying best practices and effective resources for education, training, and response.

The task force will meet in Louisville in March of 2018. Part of that meeting’s agenda will be a conversation with a survivor of sexual abuse in the church. The need for healing materials has surfaced, and we hope this conversation will result in suggestions of processes for congregational healing when abuse does occur.

Because the task force did not begin its work until mid-2017, we are not prepared to report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018). Members of the task force are committed to continuing efforts and anticipate making a final report to the 224th General Assembly (2020).

Creating Safe Ministries, https://www.presbyterianmission.org/legal-resources/creating-safe-ministries/, in the Presbyterian Mission Agency section of the PC(USA) website begins with this statement: “God intends for the church and its ministries to be a safe place for all to encounter God and grow into lives of service and fulfillment. We are called to be a holy community.” The Task Force for Safe and Sacred Space joins other groups and individuals in the church whose efforts respond to that call.

Item 11-10

[The assembly approved Item 11-10. See pp. 41, 59.]

In support of the Gospel witness from dedicated congregations and pastors in the St. Louis area, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy encourages the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to approve the following affirmations and actions:

1. Commends the congregations and pastors of greater St. Louis for the Christian witness in their community ministries of justice and service, and commends all those who have engaged in conversations and education about the tensions of race and class that contribute to the need for those ministries.

2. Cautions any Presbyterian Christian reading of the unjust practices and unequal structures of the St Louis area that its racial and economic divisions are not unique, so that the call to each reader and our church as a part of the body of Christ is to learn from and apply the lessons of the tragedy in Ferguson and subsequent protests to our own communities and to our larger society.

3. Affirms the support of the Reformed Christian tradition for public protest, community organizing, and the commitment to social righteousness that has led St Louis area Presbyterians, ecumenical partners, and many others to protest on matters of criminal justice and needed reforms of police practice and accountability.

4. Expresses gratitude to
   a. the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy for its hosting not only the 223rd General Assembly (2018) but the 2017 Big Tent celebration (July 6–8);
   b. those specific congregations that hosted the Congregational Conversations on “Race, Reformation, and Reconciliation,” that contributed to this report; and
   c. the congregations in Giddings-Lovejoy that are not in the St. Louis metropolitan area but which are nonetheless supportive of intentional witness and program in that area.

5. In the calling of urban mission, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) urges greater experimentation in the use and transformation of church properties in ways that preserve Presbyterian and ecumenical ministry and witness in poorer and gentrifying communities, noting the creative “ROC SALT Mission Center” (Rochester Serving and Learning Together), a multi-program initiative in building of a former congregation, approved by the Presbytery of Genesee Valley, in October 2017.

6. In specific learnings from the pastors and others who have shared information and reflection on their congregations’ ministries in and around St. Louis, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) encourages other congregations to consider as examples:
   a. The public and often prophetic leadership role of pastors inside and outside the church and the ways presbytery, synod, and General Assembly assistance can be provided in sometimes very stressful situations, as described in testimonies in this report;
   b. The comprehensive summer program developed by Third Presbyterian Church, noting its training of counselors and the range of support it has received, including from the Dardenne Prairie congregation;
   c. The use of Family Systems analysis of high-stress situations, such as that in Ferguson, Missouri, in church and community;
   d. Participation in church-based community organizing through Metropolitan Congregations United, particularly led by Second and Oak Hill congregations;
   e. Education programs for high school students from suburban communities that give them not only exposure but understanding of urban conflict and tension, such as ventured by the Ladue Chapel senior high program;
   f. Engagement with nearby seminary faculty, staff, and students, as has happened with Eden Seminary; and
   g. Ecumenical participation, particularly with the United Church of Christ, and in interfaith partnerships as well.

7. Further, to the urban mission of the PC(USA), those presbyteries that have developed overall visions for urban ministry and employ policies or principles to determine the use of funds from property sales in racial ethnic communities, are commended for those efforts, such as the historic recommendation of the Presbytery of Detroit that 80 percent of such sales be used for continuing ministry in those areas. Urban congregations and presbyteries are encouraged to review the survey of urban presbytery property policies and practices that is available from the offices of Self-Development of People (SDOP@peusa.org) and Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (acswp@pcusa.org); request Property Policy Survey by Rev. Phil Tom, Urban Ministry Network.
8. Encourage the Presbytery of Baltimore, in its preparation for the 224th General Assembly (2020), to invite city churches and their pastors to reflect on and share with that assembly how the Holy Spirit is moving in their growth and change in membership and mission, including evangelism, mission, and witness to justice, peace, and healing in that city.

9. In the area of criminal justice and police procedure reform, affirms the findings of the Department of Justice, Civil Rights Division, Report of March 4, 2015, on the police practices of the Ferguson municipality, which apply more broadly to many other municipalities and to the city of St. Louis itself. These findings, as summarized by Theodore M. Shaw, Esq.: “Investigation of the Ferguson Police Department illuminates a municipality that is dependent on practices and policies that criminalize its majority black populations through traffic violations, municipal ordinances, false arrests, charging practices, and impositions of penalties for petty violations and charges that lead to debt and imprisonment” (The Ferguson Report (N.Y.: New Press, 2015), p. ix). Remedies thus supported for all civil jurisdictions include:

   a. methods to deescalate confrontations with all citizens, regardless of color, specifically reducing the use of electroshock weapons (and other electronic control weapons, or ECW), chemical mace, tear gas, and attack dogs, as well as guns;

   b. revising guidelines, training, and accountability with regard to use of force and use of deadly force by officers;

   c. hiring a more representative and diverse police force and municipal court staff, and increasing effective civilian oversight of tested community policing practices, together to increase the professionalism of police and respect for the dignity of citizens;

   d. eliminating bond, cash bail, and in-person appearance practices that have no public safety justification and serve to imprison people punitively for petty sums, disrupting family life and employment, and adding to arrest records on technicalities, bringing justice into disrepute;

   e. reducing the incentives for prosecutors to use their discretion in charging and disclosure of evidence to seek higher incarceration rates while increasing the number and capacity of public defenders to protect poor suspects from coercive plea bargains—practices that currently tilt the justice system toward the well-to-do.

10. Further, to the reform of police practice in the arrest of suspects, use of deadly force, and prosecutorial favoritism in the fair trial of officers involved in killing civilians, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) supports gun violence reduction (policies detailed by prior assemblies), better training, greater transparency and departmental accountability to reduce the numbers of persons killed annually by police (1,146 in 2015, of whom 234 were unarmed and 1,091 in 2016, of whom 169 were unarmed), and the pattern by which young African American men are four times as likely to be killed compared to young white men killed (see https://www.theguardian.com/us-news/2017/jan/08/the-counted-police-killings-2016-young-black-men). Reporting of civilian and police officer deaths to the FBI should be standardized and made more comprehensive, including data on the proportion of persons involved with mental illness, with specific protocols for reducing their death and incarceration rates.

11. Further, to the reform of the U.S. prison system, the largest in the world, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) affirms the longtime Presbyterian church goals of reducing incarceration rates, particularly of nonviolent individuals; restricting the solitary confinement of all prisoners, especially those under 21; developing restorative justice programs involving (when possible) the victims of fraud, theft, or violence, and thus ending mandatory minimum sentencing rules; the removal of financial incentives for incarceration, including the end of for-profit prisons and underpaid convict labor; revision of multidecade sentences and punitive restrictions on parole, particularly with older inmates; and greatly improved education and rehabilitation programs for inmates, including strict enforcement of the provisions of the Prison Rape Elimination Act of 2003 in all jails, prisons, and immigrant detention facilities.

Introduction: A Gospel from St. Louis

This report looks at Christian faithfulness in today’s city of St. Louis, Missouri, described through the witness of five congregations, with reflections from a theological educator and the general presbyter of the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy. It does not presume to speak for all St. Louis Presbyterians or congregations. It does make recommendations that build on previous Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urban mission policy, and for this reason involves the Urban Ministry Network and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. Just as protests over police accountability in the St. Louis suburb of Ferguson, Missouri, contributed to a national wave of protest, so the lessons gained from St Louis Presbyterians matter to the larger Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), particularly to those in city congregations. The title is not ironic, but a way to affirm the Good News that comes to us from all the peace-seekers in St. Louis.

This is not a report from the presbytery, but testimony from several congregations and their pastors that is part of a conversation about urban ministry begun by the General Assembly report, “The Gospel from Detroit,”
The Role of Congregational Conversations at the Big Tent Conference, July 6–8, 2017

The “Big Tent” is a conference held during the year between General Assemblies, originally a gathering of ten networks of particular concerns from across the church. At the 2017 Big Tent in St. Louis, the theme of “Race, Reconciliation, and Reformation” was addressed by a panel, most of whose pastor members then hosted conversations at their churches for groups of participants (who were bused to each site). This report builds on the presentations made by the pastors on the panel and the congregational conversations, which were distilled in follow-up conversations.

Context of Congregational Public Witness in PC(USA)

For some people, the public witness of the church simply means the condition of its building, seen from the outside and with outsiders’ eyes. Another frequent and more justifiable focus is on the pastor, key representative of the congregation. The pastor not only helps the congregation discern its mission, but often leads in particular areas. If the pastor’s basic worship and caring responsibilities are done with sincere commitment, he or she will be trusted, even if not everyone in a congregation shares all his or her views. The pastor and other leaders in the congregation can then serve as effective bridges to other parts of the community, through ecumenical colleagues, community organizations, other civic partners, and projects. The public witness of the church can then be part of an evangelism that presents the whole gospel of Jesus Christ in places where the community is in need of justice and healing.

Another part of a congregation’s social ministry reflects its denominational tradition and connections to its presbytery. These links can give the members a larger horizon for understanding how God is active in the world. Each congregation’s public witness comes out of that set of relationships and sense of mission, combined with the challenges of their historical moment. In the case of Detroit in 2013, it was a financial crisis and bankruptcy. In St Louis, in 2014, with the killing of a young black man in Ferguson, it was the exposure of racial divisions. This led to some very intentional and Spirit-filled public witness, some of which is described in this set of testimonies.

Context of St Louis City and County

According to the Census Bureau, the demographic context of St Louis is a city of 311,000 in 2016, down from 319,000 in 2010, in a standard metropolitan area (SMA) of almost 3 million, ranking 19th in size in the United States. That SMA contains East St. Louis, a smaller separate city in Illinois. Black (46 percent) and white (44 percent) Americans constitute the majority of the city’s population. Though Hispanic (4 percent), Asian Americans (3 percent), Native Americans and persons claiming two or more races reside in the city, most attention is given to the relations between the two larger populations. The administrative structure restricts the city itself to boundaries established in 1877, constraining its tax base and putting most historic growth in inner- and outer-ring suburbs. There are eighty-nine municipalities in St Louis county, meaning a large number of smaller governmental entities that are demographically primarily white.

Context of the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy and Ecumenical Context

The Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy consists of 78 congregations with 119,164 members. Ten congregations are in St. Louis, four without ordained pastoral leadership, and a number of other congregations are considered St. Louis congregations though they are in neighboring suburbs. The Presbyterian Historical Society provides an interactive map of Presbyterian presence in the city and region: https://pcusa.maps.arcgis.com/apps/MapTour/index.html?ap-pid=8dfe240a91a44058b4e3e82f03845. As in the case of Detroit and many major cities, policies that led to the creation of largely white suburbs dramatically weakened the “Mainline Protestant” congregations in the city, and some of those congregations themselves moved to the suburbs. The Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy is developing new strategies to witness to the reverse migration of middle class young adults into some sections of St Louis and its inner-ring suburbs today. St. Louis is also the historic center of three denominations, the Evangelical & Reformed Church (now part of the United Church of Christ), the Missouri Synod Lutherans, and the Church of God.

From the work of the Urban Ministry Network, which was initiated in response to the Gospel from Detroit, the context of urban mission is one of presbyteries seeking to encourage growth with diversity, to strengthen congregations that serve areas with people of color, to provide creative options for transformation and witness with properties, and to inspire the new wave of gentrification with a concern for justice.
PREFACE: God’s Redemptive Action in St. Louis

From the Reverend Craig Howard, Transitional Presbytery Leader, Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy.

The church of the 21st century is a church of action. Whether we call it missional, community-focused, or outward-motivated, change is the new reality. Congregations are shifting the life of the church from within the confines of pews and walls, into the streets and drama or even liturgy of the public square. We are experiencing it in Giddings-Lovejoy, and in the city of St. Louis.

Some of the activity is newsworthy and garnishes national attention. When the streets came alive with protest over the killing of Anthony Lamar Smith, pastors and members of Giddings-Lovejoy were there. We marched, we chanted, and some were even arrested. It was action for justice that maintains a community’s moral framework. It was action fed by our worship in Spirit and in truth.

Other activities are low key and more humble. After spending a decade stripped of its accreditation, the St. Louis public school system received full accreditation in 2017. In response, several congregations in Giddings-Lovejoy are partnering with individual schools in tutoring, field trips, and providing supplies.

Public protest has created different conversations in our congregations. We are talking about unfair housing, inadequate healthcare, and economic and ecological injustice. These conversations are happening in our pews and in the coffee houses where we meet. As a presbytery, we are committed to dismantling racism and white privilege. This means reading in book groups, attending trainings in presbytery gatherings, and coming together as congregations sharing pulpits, choirs, and fellowship. We are determined to break the habit of Sunday morning being the most segregated public hour of the week.

The experiences of the congregations that follow embody God’s redemptive action. They are in the city, and in suburbs. Some are wealthy in dollars, all are wealthy in justice. These five congregations saw what was happening to the city of St. Louis and decided to turn their faith into action. They are far from the only churches stepping up, but all were involved in Big Tent “congregational conversations” about Race, Reconciliation, and Reformation.

In a letter this past fall inviting the PC(USA) to St. Louis, the presbytery leadership wrote, “St. Louis is by no means alone in struggling with what it means to be an inclusive and just community in the 21st century. Urban, suburban, and rural; North, West, or South; gay, straight, and other; black, brown, yellow, mixed, and white—all of us are learning how to become the beloved community, a reality that Jesus lived and died and rose again to create.”

This is still our struggle. As a presbytery we have not yet attained the goal of being the beloved community. But we press on to make this goal our own, because through his death and resurrection, Christ Jesus has made us his own.

Yours in the faith and action that we share,

(The Reverend) Craig Howard, D.Min.

The Witness and Mission of Third Presbyterian Church, St. Louis

By the Reverend Cedric Portis, Senior Pastor of Third Presbyterian Church.

[This is the first of five congregation-based voices heard by participants in the Big Tent Gathering of Presbyterians, July 6–8, 2017, in St. Louis, Missouri. Rev. Portis presented the meditation below at the “congregational conversation” hosted by Third Presbyterian on July 7th. After the meditation are two brief statements on Third’s approach to mission. Rev. Portis is a member of the Urban Ministry Network, PC(USA), and co-chair of the Committee on Local Arrangements for the 223rd General Assembly (2018).]

Excerpts edited from: “The Reality of Race, Meditation” by the Reverend Cedric Portis

When the Pharisees challenged Jesus, he often replied, “have you not read what it says in scripture?” When longtime white Presbyterians, trapped in the rut of racism, ask this Black disciple for insight on how to change this country, I ask, have you not read Acts 17 and 26, where it says that “God has made of one blood all the nations of this earth”? Is this not a denomination of Word and Sacrament? God has said we are equal. Why don’t we start there, long before the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution and the contradictions of our history.

Change has to start in the pulpit. We cannot build upon the pre-existing condition of racism developed over almost 500 years. Not your fault? Correct. Contemporary white people didn’t do those horrible things. But you still reap the benefits of slavery. And you are shaped by an inherited belief system as it relates to the African-American. This belief system conditions how you see what appears on TV, and what happens when you are in the company of a person of color.

Pastors, we must preach the truth about the pre-existing condition of racism and not pretend it doesn’t exist or ignore it. Do most PCUSA pastors preach scared because they fear for their jobs? God has not given us the spirit of fear. Do you fear that if you preach the truth about this pre-existing condition, you will be denied a pulpit? But if you don’t preach the truth about this condition, you are denying the people the treatment necessary to eradicate this racism. We cannot excuse a condition that we see when there is more compassion and outrage when a gorilla in a zoo is shot than when a young black man is left dying and dead in the street for hours.

It is not just a church issue. But the spark for change must come from the church. We have been silent, indifferent, or ambivalent about addressing this condition in the context of our local churches for far too long. It is killing people, and it is killing our culture. If we continue to let this condition become terminal, we are to blame.

Due to cell-phone camera technology we have now become more exposed to the epidemic of the killing of unarmed black men by police officers. We are outraged and we should be. But, beloved, this is not a new phenomenon. I believe that God has made it so that humanity as a whole may witness it. So that we might be moved by compassion to do something about it. I feel that God is calling the church to stop crossing to the other side of the street while the person is lying, dying a short distance away. The Lord we serve is still calling us to be the Good Samaritan. But why does the killing racism persist in our United States, despite some advances?

In my view, this has to do with the depth and distinctiveness of American slavery. Slavery has existed as long as there have been human beings, well before the pharaohs of Egypt. But most of the time slavery was not linked to racism, and it did not label the enslaved group, ‘nonhuman.’ But American slavery did. And when Africans were labelled non-human or sub-human, the sixth commandment doesn’t apply anymore. Matter of fact, most of the Bible doesn’t apply any more. I can kill the African slave because it is not murder, because they are subhuman. They are animals. I can tear their families apart. I can run chemical experiments on them, because no one cares. Society comes to view them as nonhuman.

And this became the attitude of the church, with our balcony seating arrangement for the animals and countless other separations and alienations. And the practice was continued because it provided for a good conscience. The atrocities of Monday through Saturday were nothing more than owners dealing with their animals. The African slave was no different. … Greed allowed for the systematic de-valuing of human life.

So how did people not hear what is written in Exodus 22, Leviticus 18 and 24, and most ironically and cruelly, Deuteronomy 27? That text says that anyone who has sex with an animal must be put to death. Slaveholders must have ignored that as they continued to rape African women and men from the mid-1600’s through the mid-1800’s. Furthermore, legal decisions came up with the perverse formula that African-Americans were to be counted 3/5ths human for the purposes of apportioning state representation. Does that not reflect the less-than-human label? Think of that when you hear today that an African American has to be twice as good to be considered or noticed for achievements. In a way, they are still multiplying that 3/5 by 2 to get at least a whole number.

The condition of domination was part of how our young nation was formed and how it has been informed with through an inherited framework of inequality. This is why there is not outrage of a whole nation when the killing of unarmed black men by police goes on and on. This is why the disappearance of young black girls in Atlanta goes on without alarms going off. This is why the Tuskegee syphilis experiment could go on. This is why Ferguson was burned down but the National Guard protected Clayton … why Watts was burned to the ground but Beverly Hills was untouched. We as a country have grown up viewing the African American as less than human and until that is addressed, the killings will continue, the disappearances will continue, and we as a country will continue to implode.

Brothers and sisters, this history is our pre-existing condition But it does not have to be our reality … or our future. Don’t get me wrong. This is not just a “white people have to change and everything is going to be alright” scenario. There is work to be done in both cultures so that cross-cultural synergy can be possible in a spiritual, emotional, and physical co-existence.

Black lives have to start mattering to Black people inside as well as on signs and slogans, T-shirts and tattoos. We, too, suffer from this pre-existing condition in how we view ourselves, even in little things. I thought all white people could play golf…until I wore out a bunch of colleagues on a course. But children of God, we are called to be trailblazers … Salt and Light. Those elements Jesus calls us don’t accept a reality, those elements change the reality.

So we must stop living like we don’t face a pre-existing condition. How do we change? Maybe you are called to partner with another ministry. [Third partners with the Dardenne Prairie church, which helps support Third’s extensive summer program for children, and their pastor spoke that night at the Big Tent conversation.] Be in prayer about where God is leading your ministry individually and collectively.

When we think of the amount of work to be done, we can be paralyzed. But that is partly because we want the change to occur over night, without us being involved. That is a fantasy. The systemic change that is required to change history may indeed look like a snow mountain when we have only a shovel. Then remember that we believe God can move mountains, but our charge is to start digging! One scoop at a time with our families. One scoop with ourselves, then one scoop with our schools, our elections, our places of work, but our social clubs, and above all, in our places of worship.

We keep shoveling with the expectation that one day we won’t live in fear of one another, one day we won’t live in a city where in one place they have an abundance of food and resources and just a couple miles away there are food deserts and limited resources. One day we can worship together not out of a mandate or out of guilt but because we love God and love one another. One day when the Glory comes it will be ours. One day when the war is won, one day when all is said and done, we will overcome the preexisting condition caused by the existence of dehumanizing slavery in this country. Then we will all stand and cry, Glory!

Community Transformation Strategy and Christian Witness

[The brief statement below was made on April 27, 2017, in affirmation of the presence of the Reverend Cedric and Mrs. Varonaki Portis, and the contribution of Third Presbyterian Church to the Police Officer Memorial Prayer Breakfast of the St. Louis Area Police Chiefs Association.]

Community Transformation has various essential components. Resource provision through partnering with other organizations who serve the community is one of them.

Third Presbyterian Church was proud to be a Silver Level Sponsor of the St. Louis Area Police Chiefs Association at their Police Officer Memorial Prayer Breakfast yesterday.

Third Presbyterian Church understands that financial support to other partners and foundations in community is part of the church being a resource-providing transformational entity.

So yes, we were the only church sponsor and many were shocked and surprised that Third Presbyterian Church was sponsoring at the same level as some multimillion dollar companies. Our church understands that we can’t be everything to everybody. Thus, we are charged—as we are able—to support financially others in community who do what we can’t do to transform our larger community.

Jesus said be salt and light. Don’t blend in ... change things ... and we are doing just that: changing the traditional way the church is thought of in the St. Louis community.

We will be a resource provider—not a resource extractor—in our community. We will continue to be a bright light of transformation.

The church owes a tithe to the community in which it serves. It is blessing when we can also witness as the salt and light of Christ. Be blessed.

Pastor Cedric Portis.

The Summer Program, Flourish Ministry: From the Third Presbyterian Church website

[In early 2017, Rev. Portis, Rev. Crumpton (see two sections further on), and the Reverend Paula Cooper, then of Curby Memorial Presbyterian Church, all spoke to the Urban Ministry Network. Rev. Portis described several distinctive community engagement programs; this summer program has become sufficiently large—300 children—to require a separate administrative structure.]
Cry, the Beloved City: Acute and Chronic Anxiety in Ferguson, Missouri.

By the Reverend Mike Trautman, Pastor, First Presbyterian Church, Ferguson, Missouri.

On August 9, 2014, an 18 year old African-American by the name of Michael Brown was shot multiple times and killed by a white police officer during what seemed to be a routine police stop for allegedly violating a local Ferguson regulation. This event triggered a series of events that caught the attention of the nation and the world.

A group in our congregation was already involved in a considerably lower intensity dialogue on race with neighbors, and we were totally caught off guard on the aftermath of August 9th. Tension and anxiety spread throughout the church and the metro St. Louis area. I needed to regain my bearings in the midst of the maelstrom that ensued and so I turned to my mentor the Rev. Dr. Paul Smith, who cut his teeth in the Civil Rights Movement and the fight for African Americans that has been ongoing for over the last fifty years. Under Paul’s guidance I turned to Howard Thurman’s “Jesus and the Disinherited” for theological insight and then to the Family Systems theorist, Murray Bowen, in order to understand the psycho-social dynamics that were spiraling out of control. I have also drawn on Mahzarin Banaji and Anthony Greenwald’s book, Blind Spot, and Daniel Kahnemann’s, Thinking, Fast and Slow. These works were essential in preparing my pastoral and mission responses to the crises at hand.

My title is an adaptation of Alan Paton’s, Cry, The Beloved Country (1948), a novel about tragedy, love, and heroism in apartheid South Africa. The poet, Archibald McLeish, speaking when Paton received the Medal of Freedom in New York (1960), echoes the Family Systems approach to living in places of tension with integrity:

“To live at the center of the contemporary maelstrom; to see it for what it is and to challenge the passion of those who struggle in it beside him with the voice of reason-with, if he will forgive me, the enduring reasons of love; to offer the quiet sanity of the heart in a city yammering with the crazy slogans of fear; to do all this at the cost of tranquility and the risk of harm, as a service to a government that does not know it needs it...”

Family System’s theorists define anxiety as the response of the organism to real and imagined threats in its environment; suggesting that people’s behavior can be greatly affected by such real and imagined threats. They also see anxiety as being manifested in two ways, acute anxiety and chronic anxiety. “Acute anxiety generally occurs in response to real threats and is experienced as time limited.” (Bowen and Kerr, p.113), while chronic anxiety is not time based and usually resides hidden and deep seated in the lives of people affecting their ability to navigate their way through life.

Although Bowen and Kerr tend to think of chronic anxiety as an anxiety caused by an imagined threat, I see chronic anxiety as a culmination of life events that leave its mark on an individual’s sense of self and one’s sense of safety in one’s environment. Certainly in Ferguson we have seen the devastating effects of when an acute anxiety producing event (the shooting of Michael Brown) awakens the chronic anxiety (economic disparity, police enforcement issues) and a sense no one really cares what happens in certain neighborhoods) that lies just beneath the surface producing a tsunami of intense emotional reactivity.

The early burst of looting and property violence coupled with growing crowds of protesters were seen by many to be a real threat to the civic life of the community of Ferguson. While at the same time there was a growing imaginary “real?” fear that all the protesters were potentially dangerous which led police to an overwhelming display of force that resembled more a military intent on combat, than a civic police force called to protect the crowd as well as local businesses. An anxious police confronted an anxious crowd and Ferguson seemed on the verge of intense violence. Fortunately people of courage and insight on both sides of the divide were able to use their presence and their power to make important decisions that prevented more extreme forms of violence. Bowen believed that people who showed such differentiation (maturity) could make a difference even in the midst of such intense reactivity.

“Either or thinking” became commonplace among many, as people increasingly were polarized by the events unfolding around them. I was struck how the anxious environment sped up everything that was happening so much that there was little time for thoughtfulness as everything seemed to be reaction to something else. Context, nuance and complexity were quickly cast aside by the growing anxiety which was manifested in automatic emotional reactions. It was as if all of us were strapped into a giant roller coaster speeding down the tracks with no brakes or hill to stop us from descending into madness. Blame and scapegoating became rampant as people wanted to fix the problem by coming to judgment without having all the information needed to make such important decisions as to the facts of the shooting and who deserves to be punished (if anyone) for the death of Michael Brown.

BFST (Bowen Family Systems Theory) was invaluable in helping me begin the process of thinking and feeling my way through the early weeks. I am convinced feelings are essential in helping the higher functioning cognitive parts of the brain navigate human relationships. Being open to my feelings during this time enhanced my ability to be compassionate and respectful of others, whose journeys are quite different than my own. BFST has spurred me to become curious and to put aside, as much as one can, preconceived notions of who is right or wrong, and come face to face with one’s own reactivity, biases, and internal contradictions. While I certainly was not the ideal “non anxious presence,” I do believe that my work in studying BFST and my work in my own family of origin, provided a small levee that helped hold back the onrushing waters of reactivity and anxiety that surrounded me and that exist within me.

Viewing this event through the BFST lens has made me aware of the roles that all of us play in this ongoing tragedy, and that awareness invites us to a renewed sense of personal responsibility. I relearned how hard it is to step out of linear cause-and-effect thinking and to think through the simultaneous issues using “systems thinking”. Linear cause-and-effect thinking may offer the possibility of immediate relief from the issues at hand, and perhaps indicates a number of quick fixes that can put a damper on the growing anxiety; however, it also leads to a stunted view of the various interactions that fuel much of the anxiety and reactivity at work. Such symptom relief does not provide the depth to get to the deep roots of the presenting problem. Systems thinking helps one reflect on such hot button issues as “white privilege”, “racism”, and racial biases in police enforcement. There is much more that BFST is inviting me to learn from what is happening in Ferguson.

In addition to trying to be “differentiated,” or self-aware and able to step back from group anxiety, the family systems theory does support showing up and being a “non-anxious presence,” and from that independent position determining whether to adopt a more prophetic or pastoral approach. As a pastor and as a church committed to the people of Ferguson for the long haul, our public witness, outreach, and hospitality seek to treat everyone as equals in God’s eyes. The two other resources, Blind Spot, and Thinking, Fast and Slow, add two elements, to my self-understanding at least.

Perhaps the best illustration of “blind spots” or perhaps, “mind bugs,” is the Implicit Association Test (IAT), which measures your responses to split second images of people of different races. Despite my conscious commitment to anti-racism, I had a similar experience to that of Malcolm Gladwell:
“I took it the first time and it told me I had a moderate preference for White people... I was biased—slightly biased—against Black people, toward White people, which horrified me because my mom's Jamaican... So I did what anyone else would do: I took the test again!... Same result. Again, same result, and it was this creepy, dispiriting, devastating moment.” Malcolm Gladwell, author, The Power of Thinking Without Thinking, talking to Oprah Winfrey

Thus, beyond the particulars of Ferguson—which it is our responsibility to address—there is our awareness: “Part of what IAT tells us about us when it reveals hidden biases, whether about the elderly, dark skinned people, or gay people, is that the membrane that divides the culture “out there” from our mind “in here” is permeable. Whether we want them to or not, the attitudes of the culture at large infiltrate us.” pp67-68

What Daniel Kahneman’s book gives us is an understanding of Thinking Fast, or System 1 thinking, which operates automatically and quickly, shaped by evolution to provide a continuous assessment of the main problems that an organism must solve to survive: How are things going? Is there a threat or major opportunity? … approach or avoid? Thinking Slow, or System 2 thinking allocates attention to the effortful mental activities that demand a lot of attention, and it is this that we are not able to do quickly.

The long-term mission of a church in a place like Ferguson is to live out reconciliation in ways that disrupt the black/white dichotomies of thinking and unthinking—often difficult with our white majority as a traditional Presbyterian Church. It is also challenging as any social body to attempt to transcend (or at least resist) our tribal evolutionary history of distrusting “others.” So we try to tell a different story of respected and valued compassion.

The culture and witness of Second Church is strong in many areas. The historic building, designed by Theodore Link, is an architectural landmark in the city, with a basilica dome, red tile roof, and elegant Tiffany windows. The newly refurbished Schantz organ is known city wide, and the church hosts a free music series each year that draws hundreds of community participants. Curious and progressive in its outlook, Second Church adults engage in serious conversations around issues of race, theology, and social ethics, and the congregation expects strong, progressive preaching. Blessed by significant endowments and generous members, the ministry and witness of this 225 member congregation remains strong.

But the most outstanding strength of this congregation is its extensive community outreach – over 150 of its members are involved in one or more hands on ministries in the community. The Good Ground Food Pantry has been feeding hungry people every Saturday for over 40 years. A dozen members tutor in two inner city schools. Meals are prepared and personally shared with homeless shelters every winter. Second Church hosts the largest hands on ministries in the community. The Good Ground Food Pantry has been feeding hungry people every Saturday for over 40 years. A dozen members tutor in two inner city schools. Meals are prepared and personally shared with homeless shelters every winter. Second Church hosts the largest urban Girl Scout troop in St. Louis, and regularly provides support and counsel to formerly incarcerated individuals. Each month, a group of volunteers provides a birthday party for residents of a nearby home for indigent women. Partner organizations which share the Second Church building include a Care and Counseling Center, an active neighborhood organization providing support and advocacy for the elderly, and a large ecumenical, interfaith social justice advocacy consortium. Second Presbyterian Church sings, talks, and walks the Good News of the Gospel.

The Power of Thinking Without Thinking

The Vision and Journey of Second Presbyterian Church, St. Louis.

By the Reverend Susan Andrews, Interim Pastor, and congregation members.

A Vision Is Born

Second Presbyterian Church is a historic urban congregation, established in 1838. Now in its third location, in the eclectic neighborhood of the Central West End, Second Church has mirrored the racial journey of the city. The original founders and members of the congregation were the financial and social elite of the city, with a heart for reaching out to the poor and the needy. But as demographic and racial changes came to St. Louis, these Presbyterians had decisions to make. In the 1880’s when the Civil War was tearing apart the state and the nation, Second Church took a strong pro-Union and abolitionist stance. The church split, and eventually moved to a new location. Then, in the 1960’s, when the Central West End was in decline and civil rights issues were convulsing the nation, Second Church—by a vote of 513 to 500—decided to stay in the city. As a strong anchor institution—along with Barnes-Jewish Hospital, St. Louis University, and the Washington University School of Medicine—Second Presbyterian Church has offered leadership and witness as the Central West End has come back to vibrant life.

Since the late 1800’s, Second Church has welcomed black members—though they were few in number until recently. In 2006, when a local black congregation split, 20 members of that community joined Second Church — bringing the balance within the congregation to 20% people of color and 80% white members. Including the growing LGBT membership, Second Church has, all of a sudden, become a truly multi-cultural congregation — with all the gifts and all the challenges that such a reality brings.

Recently the Session has become 50 % white and 50% black — a crucial step in becoming a changed community. Three different sets of conversations related to racism and white privilege have opened up new levels of understanding, resulting in deepened friendships and increased authenticity. Some of these conversations have not been easy, but honest listening to the experiences and feelings of those who are different has enriched the fabric of the congregation’s life. Perhaps most difficult has been acknowledging differences in worship and music styles. Second Church is steeped in classical European liturgical and musical traditions — and opening up to new genres of music continues to be the most challenging part of this multi-cultural journey.

What Second Presbyterian Church is learning is that the church of the future will not be like the church of the past. Given the dynamic demographics in the neighborhood, the secular forces drawing people away from the church, and the changing spiritual needs of younger generations — as well as the thriving life experiences of different racial groups — Second Church has the unique opportunity to become a new kind of spiritual community for curious, contemporary people. May it be so! Susan Andrews

THE JOURNEY OF RACE, RECONCILIATION, AND REFORM

(1838–2017)

SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH—ST. LOUIS

October 10, 1838—Second Presbyterian Church organized—first building at Fifth and Walnut.

223rd General Assembly (2018)
Session resolved to open one night weekly to preach the Gospel to the people of color in the city.

1840—Greeley Sunday School and Mission started as outreach to the poor—1800 students

1841—Marie Bailey becomes the first African American member of the congregation. She attended the “Colored Sunday School.”

1861—Elder Hamilton Gamble, charter member of 2PC, only dissenting vote on the State Supreme Court in the Dred Scott decision—which reinforced the institution of slavery

1864—church split, with Second taking a strong pro-Unionist and anti-slavery stance

Christmas Day, 1870—new building dedicated at Lucas and thirteenth

1872—Dr. Samuel Niccolls (Pastor, 1865–1915) elected Moderator of the General Assembly

Late 1890’s—a group of Chinese men were welcomed into the church

1896—Second Church moves to Westminster Place and Taylor—a new wealthy neighborhood with mansions and an exclusionary housing covenant—seeds of Delmar Divide are sown—congregation becomes a “blue stocking” church

July 19, 1915—Dr. Niccolls advocated for the leadership of women on national entities

1940’s—neighborhood begins to “decline;” tract of land purchased for eventual relocation in Ladue; plans went awry and Ladue property sold 1950’s—neighborhood continues to change and deteriorate; mansions become boarding houses; whites move out; middle class blacks moved in; hardening of the Delmar Divide; black worshippers were welcomed awkwardly.

June, 1955—Dr. Skinner (a member of GA Committee to write the Confession of 1967) arrives

April 15, 1958—Second Church members commit to pray about their future—leave or stay?

January 25, 1961—by a vote of 511–500, 2PC decides to stay in the city—immediately transforming from a fashionable congregation to an urban, missional congregation

Spring, 1961—Earline Clay becomes the first black member joining through the Confirmation Class process

May 25, 1969—members of the Black Liberation Front marched into the church, demanding to speak and urge reparations; they were welcomed to the pulpit

1970s—ecumenical partnerships focused on strengthening education and housing for the poor; the first black pastor, Paul Smith, becomes a Parish Associate; the church welcomes several black families

1970s—Good Ground General Store (Food Pantry) begins weekly ministry—continuing today

1990’s—tutoring programs and urban Girl Scout troop begin and continue today

2013—Second Church welcomes 20 new black members, supported and welcomed by the Rev. Mary Gene Boteler—bringing the percentage of non-Caucasian members to 20%—the official definition of an inter-cultural congregation. A growing number of LGBTQ believers also join the congregation.

2015—Rev. Boteler is visible and vocal after the police brutality episodes in the Ferguson area; the congregation becomes supportive of the Black Lives Matter movement.

2015-2017—Recommitment to the vision

1) Over an 18 month period, three series of Holy Conversations are held for black and white members to learn about each other’s histories and to talk candidly about Racism and White Privilege.

2) The strong music tradition of 2PC is expanded to include more jazz, gospel, and global music.

3) Black History Month is recognized and celebrated in worship.

4) Session leadership is half black and half white.

And the Journey Continues …

The Ever-Contemporary Context of Church Ministry

by the Reverend Clyde R. Crumpton, Cote Brilliante Presbyterian Church, St. Louis

The history of the Cote Brilliante Presbyterian Church provides an iconic example of racial change in a major US city. The church is thought to have evolved from an interdenominational mission school and chapel which were located on the Cote Brilliante Tract. As the neighborhood increased, more and more persons requested a formal church organization, and voted in favor of a Presbyterian church. The St. Louis Presbytery organized the new church on September 29, 1885, with approximately forty-five charter members.

At the time of construction (1894-5), the church’s new building was considered one of the most handsome structures in the area. The new church ministered to a Caucasian membership. It grew and prospered for many years. But in the late 1940s and early 1950s change began to occur. The number of White families began to decline due to a breach in a “restrictive covenant,” which restricted non-White families from purchasing properties in this neighborhood of Cote Brilliante. The case of Shelley vs Kraemer decided by the Supreme Court [344 U.S. 1 (1948)] had a significant impact on Cote Brilliante, as it voiced the widespread practice of keeping African-Americans (and other racial-ethnic persons) from buying property through restrictive covenants.

In 1945, Mr. J. D. Shelley, an African-American, bought a house at 4600 Labadie Avenue (close to the church, at 4673 Labadie). He was unaware that a restrictive covenant existed on that property since 1911. The owner agreed to not enforce the covenant, but another resident, Louis Kratmer, who lived nearby sued in St. Louis Circuit Court to enforce the restrictive covenant to prevent the Shelley family from taking possession of the property. The trial court ruled in Shelley’s favor, but the Missouri Supreme Court reversed the decision in favor of Kraemer. The Shelley’s appealed to the United States Supreme Court. On May 3, 1948, the United States Supreme Court rendered its landmark decision holding that “racially restrictive covenants” cannot be enforced since this would constitute state action denying due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. The national impact of this victory for racial justice led to the Shelley home being listed as an American Historical Landmark. (It remains a private residence, not open to the public.)

Not surprisingly, African-Americans began to move into the neighborhood at a dramatic rate. The Cote Brilliante School was designated as a school for African-Americans and other changes were made in the community to accommodate the changing population. Despite a continuing decline in the church membership, no effort was made to minister to the new neighbors. The congregation, which had supported Kraemer, sought to sell the building and move the congregation. They also considered combining with other White congregations. Eventually the members began to sell their homes and move to the suburbs, abandoning the church. The final communion service was held on Sunday, May 27, 1956. In just eight years, from the time of the Supreme Court decision in 1948, until the final communion service at Cote Brilliante Presbyterian Church in 1956, so many White families had moved out of the neighborhood that the All-White church CLOSED! In just eight years! The epitome of “White Flight!”

The Presbytery retained jurisdiction over the church and its properties. It stipulated that the church be re-opened as a mission for the Black neighbors and that the name “Cote Brilliante” be retained. After extensive search, a call was extended to an alumnus of Johnson C. Smith Seminary, Rev. William G. Gillespie, who was then pastoring as the first black Moderator of both the Synod of Missouri and the Presbytery of St. Louis.

Locally, educational and senior housing facilities had passed. Eighty-nine neighbors responded, of which three joined the church, at that first service. This was the beginning of the reorganized Cote Brilliante Presbyterian Church and the legacy of Rev. Dr. William G. Gillespie who, as an activist, re-established Cote Brilliante under the guiding dictum of a loving, caring, sharing, serving congregation. Cote Brilliante today includes in its ministry to the community a food pantry, clothes closet, benevolent fund, youth and senior activities, and encourages community awareness, engagement and activism, i.e. voter registration and voter education, tutoring and mentoring in neighborhood elementary schools, and collaborations with other community organizations for jobs, housing and a prison re-entry program.

Reverend Gillespie arrived in St. Louis on August 1, 1956. There was no fanfare upon his arrival; he had no friends or relatives to greet him, no place to live, and no one from the Presbytery to assist him, as promised. He only had a key to the front door of the church. His family was forced to return to their home in Knoxville, TN, to await a vacancy in the church manse that had been rented to others. His furniture was stored in the church sanctuary and the Pastor’s study. He registered for a room at the Northside YMCA.

The church had been closed during a hot summer. It was surrounded with tall grass and weeds. The interior was shabby and in disrepair and water covered the basement floor. Reverend Gillespie realized he had assumed a tremendous task. Thoughts of leaving the city went through his mind. With encouragement from his wife, he decided to face the challenge before him. He tackled the maintenance problems alone. He was the janitor, the groundskeeper, the secretary, the mechanic, as well as the preacher.

Reverend Gillespie prepared brochures and placed a sign on the lawn and an article in the local newspaper announcing the reopening of the church and introducing himself. He walked the streets knocking on doors inviting neighbors to his first worship service scheduled for September 16, 1956. Eighty-nine neighbors responded, of which three joined the church, at that first service. This was the beginning of the reorganized Cote Brilliante Presbyterian Church.

By December 22, 1957 Reverend Gillespie was officially called as Pastor. He became known and respected throughout the country. He was elected as the first black Moderator of both the Synod of Missouri and the Presbytery of St. Louis. Locally, educational and senior housing facilities and programs he pioneered were named after him. He served as Pastor for 53 years until retiring in 2009. He was a pillar in the community. At his funeral in 2011 an apology was presented by the Executive Presbytery, on behalf of the Presbytery, for not being there as promised in 1956 to support Rev. Gillespie in reopening the church and re-establishing its ministry. The apology came 55 years too late, 2 years after he retired and 1 week after he had passed.

Today’s Challenges

Today, Cote Brilliante Presbyterian Church continues to proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ for the salvation of humanity, our neighbors; continues to maintain divine worship, promote social, economic and political righteousness; to participate in God’s mission to care for the needs of the sick, the poor, and the lonely; and to free people from sin, suffering and oppression. This holistic understanding of the Gospel reflects the Great Ends of the Church and the legacy of Rev. Dr. William G. Gillespie who, as an activist, re-established Cote Brilliante under the guiding dictum of a loving, caring, sharing, serving congregation. Cote Brilliante today includes in its ministry to the community a food pantry, clothes closet, benevolent fund, youth and senior activities, and encourages community awareness, engagement and activism, i.e. voter registration and voter education, tutoring and mentoring in neighborhood elementary schools, and collaborations with other community organizations for jobs, housing and a prison re-entry program.

At the same time, since the death of Michael Brown in 2014 at the hands of Law Enforcement in neighboring Ferguson, MO, events have called us to be clearer about the social implications of the Gospel. The current Pastor of Cote Brilliante, Rev. Clyde R. Crumpton has actively engaged and challenged the Cote Brilliante family and neighbors to take a stand for justice and righteousness for the greater good of the entire community, to oppose racism, oppression and privilege. Our call to action was reinforced after another “Not Guilty” verdict of a White police officer in September 2017, in the shooting death of an unarmed Black man, Anthony Lamar Smith, which was actually caught on video. This pattern of impunity directly contradicts the love and justice of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which is at the core of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This is why we actively engage in protest, to seek justice where harmful injustice abides. Our young people want to see clergy on the street, and we need to be there—often in clergy wear—for the awareness and consciousness of everyone.

At the Big Tent panel discussion in July 2017 at Washington Assembly, it was stated that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been “dismantling racism” for decades, yet it still seems pretty intact. In fact, Jim Crow (the name and face of racial discrimination) is now James Crowe, Esquire. An example of James Crowe, Esq. was seen in the campaign rhetoric of now President Donald Trump in his seemingly coded language of fixing the problem with urban America. It seemed to speak particularly to rural White America about Black America, suggesting Black America is the problem with America. Later Mr. Trump appealed to Black America asking, “What do you have to lose?” Our response, “Everything!” Affordable healthcare, livable wages, affordable housing, public education, the right to vote; everything that is currently being challenged, compromised or taken away. James Crowe, Esq. represents the language and culture that makes race in America an issue. This keeps America divided with the age-old tactic of divide and conquer. As it appears, racism has not gone anywhere; he just made a wardrobe change! This is where the church also must be engaged.
But God is not about race and sometimes economies are not either. Keeping people divided appears to allow the rich to oppress everyone and in the process get richer! This appears underway in the weakening and redirection of funding for the Affordable Healthcare Act, although its passage under President Obama may appear as racially motivated by some. Minimum wages continue to be eroded, which puts more money in the pockets of big business. Affordable housing funds are being cut or moved around to benefit developers, with the Secretary of HUD (Housing and Urban Development), a Black man, the one appointed to bring the bad news to urban America. The Secretary of Education has indicated that charter schools will have favor over public schools. Who will control those charter schools? Add now the tilt upward of the tax law. The rich are getting richer, the poor poorer—poorer healthcare, poorer income, poorer housing, poorer education—poorer future. This is where the church must have a voice for the voiceless.

Now, because we say “Black Lives Matter” does not diminish the fact that all lives matter. All lives do matter and whether Black or White, poor, low-income or middle-class, rural, suburban or urban. And, yes, poor, low-income, and middle class White America is also under attack! They, too, have everything to lose! But as long as James Crowe, Esq. and the coded language from leadership make Black America the problem, too much of White America cannot see their pockets being picked and their rights and privileges eroding. Yet, God is still in control and quite aware of how people in America, all people, are being treated, mistreated, abused or neglected. America is behaving like the goats in Matthew 25:31-46 and not the sheep. Look at the massive influx of guns into urban America. This is why the church must take a stand.

Since August 9, 2014, upon the death of Michael Brown, we have been forced to observe the true social, economic, and political dynamics of our community and country. Since that day, more of that top layer of American fabric has been pulled back, uncovering the infectious spread of racism through generations of systemic political, judicial, and educational control and manipulation. The entire nation was afforded this examination, at the expense of the Ferguson community, and communities like Charlottesville, Virginia, where the neo-Nazi edge of White Supremacy came into view. However, just as the St. Louis community was moving into a place of healing, we re-lived the experience of unaccountable police power in the dismissal of charges against the white officer who had been videotaped shooting Anthony Lamar Smith. James Crowe, Esq. showed up in the courtroom masked as the judge. The St. Louis community is again under examination.

Since 2015, across the United States there have been over 600 instances in which a Black civilian has been killed by a police officer or died while in police custody, circumstances that closely parallel the killings of Michael Brown and Anthony Lamar Smith. To name a few, lest we forget: Eric Garner, Tamir Rice (age 12), Walter Scott, Freddie Gray, Sandra Bland, Alton Sterling, Philando Castile. Over 600! This is why the church must seek justice.

In her book, The New Jim Crow, Michelle Alexander identifies the New Jim Crow in various contexts, i.e. social, economic, judicial, and political, among others, each demonstrated through the effects of mass incarceration. (See https://www.vanderbilt.edu/ctp/The New Jim Crow.pdf ) Alexander comments that she “came to see that mass incarceration in the United States had … emerged as a stunningly comprehensive and well-disguised system of racialized social control that functions in a manner strikingly similar to Jim Crow” (p. 4). “Strikingly similar to Jim Crow” is what we identify as James Crowe, Esq. Alexander states, “Arguably the most important parallel between mass incarceration and Jim Crow is that both have served to define the meaning and significance of race in America.” She adds, “Slavery defined what it meant to be Black (a slave), then Jim Crow defined what it meant to be Black (a second-class citizen). Today mass incarceration defines the meaning of blackness in America: Black people, especially Black men, are criminals. That is what it means to be Black” (p. 197).

In other words, Blacks in the United States are looked upon as slaves, second-class citizens and criminals! This, of course, is by design and viewed this way by the neo-Nazi, white supremacist, other so called hate groups and some poorly educated and/or poorly informed White Americans. This is why the church must educate.

Given this history of slavery, racial discrimination, and mass incarceration, we may wonder how much the protests of Blacks and Whites matter? Our history – America’s history – will not change. Can we seriously think that protest alone will dismantle racism?! Should we not dismantle the Dismantling Racism and Privilege (DRAP) program itself and strengthen Advocacy Committees for justice and equality? Under God, should we not organize as faithfully as we can – economically, socially, politically, and judicially, for the disenfranchised (Black and White) to become stakeholders with the rights and privileges of all other U.S. citizens?

In our contemporary context the church is called to be a voice for those unheard and the oppressed, to advocate for truth, justice and the Christian way, to love thy neighbor and promote peace. We seek to fulfill what the LORD requires, that we act justly, love mercy and walk humbly with our God. This is the legacy on which we must continue to build. Herein lies salvation for both the oppressed and the oppressor. Perhaps not much has changed since Rev. William Gillespie arrived in 1956. But the ministry and mission of Cote Brilliante Presbyterian Church endures, striving to further develop a sustainable community of healthy families, schools, and businesses. The legacy of this loving, caring, sharing, serving congregation continues in the love of God, in the light of the Gospel, and in the power of the Holy Spirit.

God’s Peace and Blessings from Cote Brilliante Presbyterian Church, Rev. Clyde R. Crumpton, Pastor

A Dream-Vision-Hope from Oak Hill, St Louis

By the Reverend Erin Counihan, Pastor, Oak Hill Presbyterian Church, St. Louis

I originally wrote the letter below to share with the presbytery and the congregation I serve during the Stockley Protests in St. Louis in October 2017. Our community was rising up, again, after another police officer was acquitted on murder charges, this time in the 2011 killing of Anthony Lamar Smith. (This case had lingered for a long time, and the judge’s ruling was released only after he had retired and moved out of state). Since 2014 when Michael Brown was killed, and shortly afterward VonDerrit Myers was killed in our Oak Hill neighborhood, our community has been called to both conversation and action.

Starting in those initial protests, the community stood up and said we can’t take this anymore. We people of faith then started trying to listen and follow the young leaders who have refused to be silent, who have refused to accept these injustices, and who have continually called us out and urged us on. We read and discussed books, we worked with community organizers, we listened to speakers and theologians, we had hard conversations over lunch after worship. Some of us marched. Some of us offered our buildings as safe sanctuary for protesters. Some of us went to committee meetings and civilian oversight board meetings, and meetings with elected officials.

But as you can see from this letter I wrote in 2017, more than three years into this work, we still debate how to go about this work and if pastors and churches should be doing this work. I’ve heard good, wise, faithful people speak of their disappointment in specific protest tactics, their frustration about a lack of clearly identified leadership and/or goals of the movement, or that this kind of repeated, public protest is just creating more division.
But I’ve also seen new leaders rise up, new relationships developed, new passions and ministries ignited, new learnings explored, and new understandings take hold. So we continue having hard conversations about race, about justice, about politics, and about how our churches and we as people of faith “should” engage in these conversations. And still, we do the work. There’s been more and more Presbyterians who show up to the meetings, who follow young people of color into the streets and up to city hall, who are reading new news sources and research, who are being changed by a movement that God has called us to hear, notice, and engage.

Because this “Gospel from St Louis” is a way of sharing what our struggle means with readers from across the country, the letter below is only slightly edited. It was written not only for my congregation, but for the presbytery that elected me moderator. These positions of trust require the sharing of truth. Thus my letter reflects conversations in both church communities, and seeks to explain why I—and a growing number of others—cannot let this struggle go.

FROM THE OAK HILL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NEWSLETTER, October, 2017

This is hard.

And I get that. This conversation that we are having in our community here in STL and in neighborhoods, schools, churches, and communities all around our country, about racism and policing and protest. It’s hard. All the emotions. All our different cultural backgrounds and personal relationships, histories and experiences, political leanings and theological positions. It makes it hard and complicated and difficult to talk about. But I have this little flicker of a vision or a dream or a hope that church could be the very place we can go and gather and discuss and debate the things that matter most to us, the passions of our hearts and the great questions of our spirits, and disagree and explore and learn and try, and still stay in relationship with one another. In my dream-vision-hope it is still hard, but it is good and gives us life and reeks of faithfulness and makes God proud. So here it is.

I am a rule-following girl. Looking at my Facebook posts, my photos, well, even listening to my sermons, over these last months and years, you may not think so, but deep in my heart, I am a rule-following girl. I like to make lists and check things off. As a kid I loved getting gold stars on the chart for assignments completed. I love a super detailed worship bulletin and I still read all the instructions before I even take the pieces out to play a board game. My friends tease me because even jaywalking makes me anxious.

I am a rule-following girl. The rules provide structure and order and help me to understand my proper place here, and how things are supposed to run over there. Maps and rules and agendas and plans are how I make sense of the world and my work my church and often, even, my identity.

And much of that is because the rules are designed to work for me. The rules are designed for my comfort. The rules are designed to keep me safe, to help me advance, to keep me wealthy, to keep me protected. I am a straight, white, cis, Christian, middle-class woman. With a very few exceptions, the rules were designed to help me. But the thing I keep learning is this: the rules don’t work that way for people who don’t look like me. Friends and neighbors and strangers and scholars and journalists and authors tell me about how the rules in our society hurt, silence, oppress and kill black and brown people, Muslim and atheist people, and so many others.

I often hear folks who look like me say, “Well, if he just followed the rules...” But then I see another video of someone of color following the rules and getting pulled over and arrested anyway. Of someone going to the bathroom where the rules say they are supposed to and getting assaulted anyway. Of someone trying to follow the rules or obey a command and ending up dead anyway. And so what do I do when the rules that protect and uplift me, are keeping others down? What does God call me to do?

And I hear it in my head: Do justice, seek kindness, walk humbly with God.

For me, doing justice has meant working to change the rules, to make them more equitable. That means doing my research, organizing with others, signing petitions, engaging with elected officials, pursuing legal action, and participating in direct action, too. Yup, that means taking to the streets, and standing there, to demand justice. So, me, the rule-following girl, ends up in the street breaking the very rules that make me so comfortable. Breaking the rules in order to help change them. In order to stop squashing my neighbors. In order to stop the killing of my neighbors. In order to dismantle the white supremacy that serves me so well. In order to be a part of bringing God’s justice to all. In order to bear witness to God’s rule-breaking love and grace and power, even in this time and in this place.

And it’s super uncomfortable. And it is divisive. And it messes with our commutes and our comforts, our theologies and our understandings, our structures and our community. And that is hard. And that is also the point.

I know we don’t all agree. I hope we can all talk about it. I hope that if you are excited or angry, if you are confused or motivated, if you are frustrated or disappointed or inspired or curious, that we can talk about it. I am just a phone call, text, email, or coffee date away. Please reach out. Ask questions. Pray. Join our Touchy Topics Book Club to read and learn, attend a meeting of the STL Anti-Racism Collective and get training, get involved with MCU’s Break the Pipeline campaign and take action.

May God be with us as we discuss. May God be with us as we debate. May God be with us as we work and do the justice that is required of us. May God be with us as we love. As we love.

In order that Love may finally set the rules, Pastor Erin

Marks of a Faithful Human Freedom Movement in St Louis

By the Reverend Deborah Krause, PhD, Dean of the Faculty, Eden Theological Seminary, Webster Groves, Missouri.

As a religious leader I saw the police killing of Mike Brown and the uprising in Ferguson in 2014 as a revelation. In the true meaning of “apocalypse,” it was an “unveiling” of the deeply entrenched structural racism and white supremacy on which the region of St. Louis is built. It’s not that these structures have not always been present, destroying and demeaning Black lives while benefingiful lives like my own, but Ferguson shone a light on this system that demands a reckoning. As a lifelong resident of this region and a lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church (USA) within it, I would say that the revelation of the “marks of a faithful church” through Ferguson would be to be working actively to dismantle these structures, and to interrogate and root out the idolatrous hold of white supremacy that has blocked the church thus far from being a meaningful agent for anti-racism and social transformation.

In this reflection on the freedom struggles in St Louis since August, 2014, I have looked to the scriptures—my field is New Testament—and to relationships in my congregation and presbytery. Here, however, I point to four marks of a wider faithful movement in which many Christians and
The four marks are (I) the conviction that Black Lives Matter (BLM), a confession of sin and of faith; (II) the call of God to go out into the streets, with ecumenical and interfaith partners; (III) the critical appreciation of our institutional histories, in my case, that of Eden Seminary; and (IV) the energy to work for a different future for the whole community.

I. Racism is a social disease. It is not about personal preference—whether or not we have a black co-worker, or best friend. Racism is about social power—factors beyond our own personal will, and it is knitted historically into the social, economic, political, legal, educational, and religious institutions of our country. In fact, it is so deeply and historically knitted that it poses innocently and naturally as “the way things are.” But the way things are is not natural—it is constructed.

- Disparities of Police stops between white and Black people in which in St Louis, city and county in 2015 roughly 50% of the people stopped were Black even though Black people make up less than 28% of the population—are not natural.

- Disparities in children moved by the public school system from in-school discipline to the juvenile justice system – in 2014 over 1000 Black children were so moved, and just 60 white children—are not natural.

- Disparities in national wealth in which white households hold $142,000 on average, while Black households hold less than $19,000—are not natural.

In this context as a Christian I hear the declaration “Black Lives Matter” to be a confession of sin for white people of faith in America. BLM has for me cut to the truth of where we are and where we are being called to be as a nation. Currently to say “Black Lives Matter” is to confess that our country does not function to value Black lives equally. If it feels like a challenge, or even a prejudicial thing to say, if you want to retract: “All Lives Matter,” please listen. Saying BLM (a phrase begun in Florida) is a way to illumine these disparities of structural racism in our society. It is a way to say that until we can value Black lives in this country, then all lives do not matter. One of the frontline leaders of the Ferguson Freedom movement, Cathy (‘MamaCat’) Daniels puts it this way, “Of course ‘all lives matter,’ but until mine matters as much as yours, I’m going to be specific: Black lives matter.” For those of us in the majority, BLM is to confess that we have much work to do in dismantling the structures and practices of racism in this country that have rendered Black children more vulnerable to illness, poor education, and a racialized prison system, while most of our kids benefit. To me, a mark of the faithful church in America following Ferguson is a church that is confessing the sin of racism and white supremacy.

But that is not the only way I hear this refrain. For me, BLM is also an Affirmation of Faith. In short, while protecting Black and Brown citizens from the wages of structural racism is our duty as white people of faith, eradicating white supremacist ideology from our own psyches, habits, and institutions—even churches—is our collective calling.

BLM is not just a summons to honor and protect the value of Black Lives. It is a call for those of us who are white to relinquish our idolatrous commitment to our whiteness, and to get free to our own humanity. As we work on our racism, therefore, we do not do it simply to be well-intentioned white people trying to help the less fortunate. We do it as Christians who are dependent on the grace and love of our creator God. We do it with the passion to be liberated from the disfiguring and damaging power that racism and white supremacy have over our lives. We do it because we yearn to be free and whole—in God’s image. A mark of the faithful church in America after Ferguson is a church that is affirming its faith in the sovereign God of creation by interrogating our idolatrous worship of whiteness and working to live into our baptismal calling of living in the Spirit of Christ—neither Jew or Greek, slave or free, male and female.

Black Lives Matter—Let us say it knowing that our very lives, our full humanity, our freedom in Christ cannot be realized until it is true.

II. A Moral Summons to Be Seen and Heard in STL

A former faculty colleague, Leah Gunning Francis, has written a book that profiles many of the religious leaders who were inspired by the Ferguson Freedom movement: Ferguson and Faith: Sparking Leadership, Awakening Community (Chalice Press, St. Louis, 2015). Through interviews and reflections she chronicles how leaders in different parts of the region heard the summons to come into the streets to stand up for Mike Brown and to call out and work for change. You can feel that call in the testimony of Rev. Erin Counihan, a newly arrived pastor soon elected Moderator of Presbytery, who became a true leader of our churches when another tragic police killing occurred in her part of St. Louis.

For me, this summoning is evidence of how a concept like “Next Church” that we hear hoped for in this historic time of transformation is really happening. Whatever form the church is going to take it must be able to move into spaces with others (of different faiths and no faith at all) to witness to and join the redemptive work of God in the world. The Ferguson protesters called us out of our churches, schools, and homes and into the streets. Following them, and listening for God’s purpose in this work for justice in our region has re-organized us into relationships and activities that hold hope for our ongoing reformation into whatever the Spirit holds in store for the church that is next. We need to honor the organizing work of Metropolitan Congregations United that helped that re-organization take place, and recognize leaders—like Mary Jean Boteler, then at Second Presbyterian, and Rabbi Susan Talve, of Central Reform Congregation, who helped muster support.

As I look back over these past several years, I have found myself in interfaith work like I’ve never been before. I found myself in intercultural dialogue and work on antiracism like I’ve never been before. These are all things I said I cared about, but now I’m doing way more of them. It’s like I
III. Critical Appreciation of our Institutional History:

As Dean, I’ve been thinking a lot about the history and the vocation of Eden Seminary in light of BLM and the need to end structural violence in our society. Think about it – Eden was founded in 1850 by German-Prussian immigrants who were running away from war. They built the school to meet the needs of their growing immigrant population on the frontier, and the place they choose to locate is eastern Missouri in 1850. Turns out, they walk right into a war, and build right on top of where racial tensions are getting ready to blow up. And so from the beginning, quite unwittingly, the school has been involved in this country’s struggle for human freedom. Now it’s had lots of days, decades in fact, where it pretended like that argument wasn’t going on, but the school was founded on the threshold of the Civil War, and in the middle of an on-going struggle.

Maybe this has something to do with why we’re still here. Maybe what happened in Ferguson is not incidental to our history, but integral to it. I can’t help but wonder if the traditions, resources, and mission of our school are called by God to be in service of this particular struggle in North American for human freedom.

In the early years of the school you have events like the Camp Jackson Affair in 1861 where German immigrants helped to hold the armory against a secessionist attack (led by the governor) outside of St. Louis. The role of the German immigrant population (who were largely anti-slavery and pro-Union) in fighting off that attack is well established. Eden students (then on the Marthasville campus), and members of area Evangelical churches were among the civilians who helped to hold the armory. When I think about those students and church members, I cannot help but think of colleagues and students who took to the streets of Ferguson after the shooting of Mike Brown to stand against state sponsored racism and violence. Imagine, back in 1861, the Governor of Missouri was trying to raid the armory for the South. The seminarians and church folk who stood against the governor no doubt withstood a lot of public challenge that they were destructive, disobedient, and out of line. Doesn’t that sound familiar? Then and now, the call to stand in the street and stand up against the forces of dehumanization is consistent. Maybe that’s why we are still here.

But you know it is also a lot more complicated than that. Early on the Germans, who were pacifists, and who hated slavery, were on the right side of history in many ways. They’re in Marthasville where there are plantations, and they’re in the slave state, but they don’t have slaves. All this is true, yet they were no doubt segregationists and probably racist, despite being right on the slave question. This ambivalence is a huge part of the history and current reality of this school.

And the ambivalence lives in the churches. The German heritage churches in towns all around St. Louis include some very conservative communities. Racism has certainly abided in these towns, and the churches haven’t transformed that – just as the Seminary has not transformed the broader St. Louis area. We are caught in this web of sin, and even while we have some resources for naming and fighting it, we are also often unable to extricate ourselves from it.

One story in our history gets at this ambivalence on race in a powerful way. When I first joined the faculty at Eden in 1992 I remember learning that the Seminary was the first Euro-American institution of higher learning in Missouri to admit a person of color. That was in 1932. That fact was shared with me as a part of the heroic history of the school as an agent of social transformation, and I was proud of it. I have over the years pointed out to friends and colleagues at St Louis University and Washington University that their schools (in 1945 and 1958 respectively) began to integrate decades after Eden. In 1932 Eden admitted an AME pastor named Joseph Gomez to its STM program, the first Black student admitted to a White graduate school in the state of Missouri.

Since Ferguson, however, I have done some reading that has somewhat clouded this heroic history. Turns out that Rev. Gomez was admitted at Eden, but only after he had first been denied. According to Gomez’s biography written by his wife, Joseph and the local chapter of the NAACP identified the seminary as a good candidate for testing desegregation on the basis of its mission statement. At the time, Eden had a mission that read something like: “Eden Seminary…is a school open to students of all Christian denominations.” So Gomez, on the basis of that mission statement, applies, and he’s rejected. And I think he probably knew he would be because it’s a White segregated institution. So anyway, he was denied.

That little detail was left out when I first heard the story, but it is such an amazing part of it, because Gomez and the NAACP went on a letter writing campaign in the St. Louis Argus and church publications pressuring the school to admit him because the mission statement says “open to students of all Christian denominations” – and this is a student of Christian denomination. So what is preventing you? At that point, the faculty reconsiders and admits him. He graduates in 1934 with an STM.

Now this kind of strategic social pressure seems like a foreshadowing of the kinds of challenges to segregation that lead 20 years later up to Brown vs. Board of Education. It’s like a precursor to the landmark desegregation act in our nation’s history – and Eden is a part of that history. As it turns out we were a reluctant part in that history. It was our vocation, embodied in that mission statement that bore the seeds of our redemption – that paved the way for Gomez and others to call the seminary out of its sinfulness to join the human freedom movement. This has helped me see the ambivalence of the seminary towards its role in the human freedom movement. We are at once culturally reluctant and vocationally summoned beyond our acculturated horizon. That is who we are. It’s far from heroic, and it should always alert us to the need of God’s grace in the witness of our sisters and brothers who suffer and who are in the struggle.

Recently in a Board of Trustees strategic planning meeting I told the Gomez story. We were talking about our vision and mission. I proposed we state very openly that we are an anti-White supremacist, antiracist institution, because who knows what horizon of our acculturation we’re not seeing today.

If we claim that we are an anti-racist and anti-White supremacist school we will need to move from that old comfortable idea of “how can we be more welcoming and hospitable” to Black students and people of color. If we are called to be engaged in the human freedom movement, then what we’re doing is not just trying to be welcoming to African Americans. We’re working to engage all our students, faculty, and staff (White, Black, and Brown) as agents of transformation, as agents of anti-racism, as agents of human freedom in their leadership in church and society.

White supremacy is idolatry. Every part of the tradition of this school, from the Evangelical German and Reformed heritage to the faculty’s current liberation and postcolonial theological perspectives hates idolatry. So if we hate idolatry and if we want to create transformational leaders, what kinds of transformation are we talking about? Of this society? Of us, of the people? What needs to be transformed is our sinfulness and brokenness which is expressed socially, systemically, most pointedly, I think, in our context as White supremacy and structural racism. This is the summons of our vocation in our place and time—both as a school and as part of the church. Rather than a center that welcomes people in, the metaphor of a movement is helping me to see the seminary as an agent through which God’s purposes are flowing — if we can just have the faith to open up and join in.
The realization of God’s beloved community.

St. Louis feels these threats in a unique way. As we name the structural sin that is manifested in racism, poverty, violence, and crime. #Ferguson

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-10

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-10.

ACREC supports this overture as it brings awareness to a misappropriate application of laws unjustly and unfairly applied to people of color who have been marginalized and oppressed by racism. Thus, people of color are suffering punitively, but not receiving healing support from the church.

“Racism is the opposite of what God intends for humanity. It is the rejection of the other, which is entirely contrary to the Word of God incarnate in Jesus Christ. Racism is a lie about our fellow human beings, for it says that some are less than others. Because of our biblical understanding of who God is and what God intends for humanity, the PC(USA) must stand against, speak against, and work against racism.” (Facing Racism: A Vision of the Intercultural Community Churchwide Antiracism Policy: https://facing-racism.pcusa.org/)

The recommendations support the core values of ACREC as it seeks racial and economic justice and equity, thus enabling the realization of God’s beloved community.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-10

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-10.

We commend ACSWP on the detailed call to action. Since the formation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 1983, there is no historical moment where there has been a more acute threat to women’s rights, racial and ethnic rights, and LGBTQ+. St. Louis feels these threats in a unique way. As we name the structural sin that is manifested in racism, poverty, violence, police brutality—to name a few—it is also important that we lift up and recognize the ongoing sin of patriarchy and misogyny. In particular, black women and children in St. Louis suffer more significant health disparities (including infant mortality and breast cancer) and are disproportionately affected by the overall economic conditions [http://www.flourishstlouis.org/flourish-commits-to-zero-racial-disparities-in-infant-mortality/].

ACWC advises approval and requests that issues of gender are lifted up and recognized as an ongoing social justice issue.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-10

Comment on Item 11-10—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Office of Public Witness respectfully suggests that the policy recommendations be expanded to include a ban on the distribution of surplus military weapons and equipment to local police departments, enhanced data collection on use of force, and violence intervention programs in local municipalities.

Item 11-11

[The assembly approved Item 11-11 as amended. See pp. 55, 59]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation from the Presbyterian Intercultural Network (PIN), recommends that the 223rd General Assembly (2018)

1. “Declare an Imperative for the Reformation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in being a Transformative Church in This Intercultural Era.”

2. Declare the period from 2020 to 2030 as the “Decade of Intercultural Transformation” by focusing on transformative priorities and initiatives across the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

3. Immediately denounce the persistent and demonic presence of racism and the misuse of power and privilege in our individual and institutional lives. Invest in training and identifying trained antiracism facilitators, who will provide a geographically accessible and affordable network for congregations and mid councils, and develop a process for connecting facilitators and congregations and mid councils who seek assistance.

4. Immediately after the 223rd General Assembly (2018), direct the Moderator to appoint a cross-sectional task force to develop and publish priorities and guidelines for congregations, mid councils, and General Assembly entities for the “Decade of Intercultural Transformation” and recommend appropriate resources to deepen understanding and skills for resisting [racism, classism, sexism, and heterosexism] [discrimination based on race, class, gender, sex, or sexuality]. Promote awareness of resources currently available that deepen understanding of intersectionality and skills for resistance including those less frequently discussed, such as interfaith competencies so essential in these times.

5. Direct the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), the Presbyterian Foundation (FDN), the Board of Pensions (BOP), the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC), and the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP) to develop relevant intercultural programs, resources, events, and antiracism training to assist persons in recognizing intersectionality or how differences treated oppressively are experienced simultaneously in ways that amplify and complicate the consequences of each aspect of oppression.

6. Strongly encourage mid councils and congregations to hold white privilege recognition, cultural humility, and antiracism trainings throughout the church and commit themselves to disrupting racism and intersectional inequality, including intercultural and intracultural realities.

7. Strongly encourage the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the mid councils to promote integration of the Confession of Belhar into their study life and worship to celebrate its implementation.

8. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly to equip congregations and mid councils to form intercultural coalitions, networks, new worshiping communities, and congregations across the church that worship, work, share meals, study, share communion, and advocate for racial and intercultural justice, with a respectful awareness and appreciation of each other’s ethnicities, cultures, socioeconomic status, able-bodiedness, gender and sexual identity and expression, and languages.

9. Urge the session of each congregation, as well as each mid council, seminary, Presbyterian Women’s groups, and other entities, to take action to be intercultural in their life, work, and worship.

10. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to encourage, assist, and support presbyteries’ committees on ministry and committees on preparation for ministry to
a. Urge candidates for ministry to engage in internship and/or field education experiences in intercultural settings; especially for “white” students to work in a racial and cultural context different from their own.

b. Provide opportunities for candidates for ministry to gain experience preaching and teaching about racial justice.

c. Include members of diverse intercultural backgrounds on committees on preparation for ministry, guiding candidates for ministry.

d. Encourage synods and presbyteries to institute dismantling racism programs and encourage all staff and clergy to take the training every three years in like manner of PC(USA) mandated sexual abuse policy.

d. Provide regular white privilege recognition, cultural humility, and antiracism trainings at presbytery gatherings.

e. Support seminarians in their study and learning from diverse readings and topics in seminary curriculum about the lived realities of people of color in the U.S. and the life experiences of immigrants to the United States.

11. a. Direct General Assembly to focus on planting new congregations, and raising indigenous leadership for all levels of the church from within communities of color, with special emphasis on the Latin, African American, Native American, and immigrant communities.

b. Remove barriers and create pathways to full inclusion in the PC(USA) for congregations and pastors coming from historically non-white traditions.

[If these directives require changes to the Book of Order, these changes should be presented to the 224th General Assembly (2020).]

12. Encourage all members, particularly “white” members, in the PC(USA) to work to end racism in our individual and institutional lives by working on the following eight steps:

- Recognition
- Repentance
- Resistance
- Resilience
- Reparations
- Reconciliation
- Recovery
- Resonance

[See Appendix A for a brief explanation of the steps.]

Rationale

The Presbyterian Intercultural Network (PIN) affirms that we are living in an increasingly intercultural society that brings numerous challenges and opportunities for effective and relevant ministries.

Becoming a “Church of Intercultural Transformation” is embracing the fullness of God’s image in every person and community, and intentionally and decisively making room for all of God’s people by disrupting the status quo, working to end racism, and working to eliminate oppressive systems of power and privilege (see Appendix B for a Glossary of Terms).

A “Church of Intercultural Transformation” fairly represents the whole people of God, where confession, repentance, forgiveness, restitution, reconciliation, and redemption are made possible by following Christ’s path of self-emptying and sacrificial love for people of all races, cultures, and ethnic backgrounds, all of whom are created in God’s image. (cf. Phil 2:6–8 and Gen. 1:27).

A “Church of Intercultural Transformation” gathers in prayer, worship, and mission, and commits itself to practices of mutual recognition and understanding of difference through intentional self-examination, relationship building, and equitable access to power.
Becoming a “Church of Intercultural Transformation” is gathering with people of different racial, ethnic, and cultural identities, interacting with one another, learning and growing together, building relationships and becoming transformed and shaped from each other’s experiences.

In the “Church of Intercultural Transformation,” no one is left unchanged. Some examine their own cultures more deeply, some are changed through their interaction with others, many learn more about what it means to be in intercultural community together.

A “Church of Intercultural Transformation” addresses racial and cultural power imbalances, and people are able to learn from each other through the power of the Holy Spirit, leading toward the transformation of all people.

The commitment to become a “Church of Intercultural Transformation” is expressed when the church begins to live its faith by:

- Celebrating and using God’s gifts of theological and liturgical richness that arise from all of God’s people’s racial, cultural and linguistic diversity.
- Intentionally seeking ways to engage the genuine racial, cultural, and linguistic diversity of all members of the church in all church structures, councils, agencies, and organizations.
- Supporting the development and distribution of multilingual resources in the languages of members of the church.
- Engaging in effective prophetic advocacy and public policy development on the issues of race, class, gender, and sexual identity and expression, economic and environmental justice.
- Expanding curriculum to educate about different racial and cultural heritages, histories, and traditions in the church and society, as well as educating about racism, sexism, classism, power and privilege, cultural humility, and different ways of learning and practicing the Reformed faith.
- Assuring that writers of church publications are of different racial, cultural, and linguistic backgrounds and that images used in denominational publications and promotions show Presbyterians of color as ministers, elders, and leaders in the denomination, rather than relying on portrayals of people of color as objects or recipients of mission.
- Encouraging ministers and leaders in the church to engage in white privilege recognition, cultural humility, and anti-racism training, and to participate in immersion experiences in other cultures and languages.
- Including people of different races and cultures on boards of trustees, finance and property committees, and in the planning and implementation of financial management and stewardship in the church; promoting faithful, equitable, and just stewardship; and sharing of financial and property resources by those in God’s intercultural community.
- Incorporating an ethic of mutual accountability in relationships with one another at all levels of church governance by reporting to one another regularly on progress and areas of difficulty and obstacles to equity.

Appendix A: Eight Steps to End Racism (See Recommendation 10)

1. RECOGNITION—As it happened in John 20:11–18, like Mary Magdalene, we hear our names called and recognize that we are captive to the power of race. We cease denying that race has power in our individual and communal lives.

2. REPENTANCE—We acknowledge to ourselves and to others that race has power in our lives and contributes to our white privilege.

3. RESISTANCE—We commit ourselves to combating the power of racism in ourselves, in others, in churches, and in institutional life. Because of its long reach in American history, at times we will feel like those who are battling principalities and powers in Ephesians 6:10–20.

4. RESILIENCE—We are called to affirm the traditional ways of combating racism while seeking new ways to engage a powerful force that continues to be present in American life and that continues to evolve.

5. REPARATIONS—We commit ourselves to doing our part to repair the breaches that have been made through racism, including psychological, spiritual, and economic damage.

6. RECONCILIATION—We recognize that we have long benefitted from racism and that in order for reconciliation to take place, we will need to work the first five steps listed above.

7. RECOVERY—We receive and commit ourselves to live by a new vision of a humanity created by God to live in love, equity, and justice rather than in the hierarchy and domination of the system of race.
8. RESONANCE—We understand and resonate with our own cultural background.

Appendix B: Glossary of Terms

Antiracism: An active and consistent process of change to eliminate individual, institutional, and systemic racism, as well as the oppression and injustice racism causes. (Source: Canadian Race Relations Foundation’s Glossary of Terms)

Class: A category usually used to divide members of society into groups in terms of their economic status. The American Heritage Dictionary defines it as “a social stratum whose members share certain economic, social, or cultural characteristics.”

Classism: The cultural, institutional, and individual set of practices and beliefs that assign value to people according to their socioeconomic status, thereby resulting in differential treatment. (Source: Canadian Race Relations Foundation’s Glossary of Terms)

Culture: The mix of ideas, beliefs, values, behavioral and social norms, knowledge and traditions of a group of individuals who have historical, geographic, religious, racial, linguistic, ethnic, or social context, and who transmit, reinforce, and modify those ideas, values, and beliefs, passing them on from one generation to another. It results in a set of expectations for appropriate behavior in seemingly similar contexts. (Source: Canadian Race Relations Foundation’s Glossary of Terms)

Cultural Identity: Seeing oneself in relation to one’s own ethnic or cultural group. There are many different affiliations that we hold that come together to create a unique cultural identity for each of us. Our cultural identity is very complex with each group membership intersecting with the others. Because of this complexity, we cannot be judged, labeled, or categorized based on one aspect of our identity. (Source: D. Merrill-Sands, Holvino, and Cumming. Working with Diversity: Working Paper NO. 11, Center for Gender in Organizations, Simmons Graduate School of Management, MA, USA, 2000.)

Cultural Humility: The ability to understand, appreciate, communicate, and interact with persons from other cultures, races, genders, and belief systems different from one’s own in order to effectively engage with people in God’s intercultural community.

Culturally Humble Organization: The policies and practices of an organization, its values and mores, which enable that organization and individuals in the organization to interact effectively in an intercultural environment: assessing culture, valuing and managing the dynamics of difference, adapting to difference, and institutionalizing cultural knowledge. Cultural humility is a “way of being” that is reflected in the way an organization treats its members, its employees, its clients, and its community.

Cultural Identity: Seeing oneself in relation to one’s own ethnic or cultural group. There are many different affiliations that we hold that come together to create a unique cultural identity for each of us. Our cultural identity is very complex with each group membership intersecting with the others. Because of this complexity, we cannot be judged, labeled, or categorized based on one aspect of our identity. (Source: D. Merrill-Sands, Holvino, and Cumming. Working with Diversity: Working Paper NO. 11, Center for Gender in Organizations, Simmons Graduate School of Management, MA, USA, 2000.)

Discrimination: Treating members of a targeted group less favorably than those of the dominant group. This often occurs when the dominant group determines the accessibility of goods or services for, and/or the rights and privileges of, the targeted group. (Source: Association for Women’s Rights in Development.)

Ethnic Group: A group socially defined on the basis of cultural characteristics of diverse types such as language, religion, kinship organization, dress, and mannerism, or any other set of criteria deemed relevant to the actors concerned. (Source: Merrill-Sands, D., Holvino, and Cumming. Working with Diversity, Working Paper, No. 11, Center for Gender in Organizations, Simmons Graduate School of Management, MA, USA: 2000)

Ethnicity: A social construct that divides people into smaller social groups based on characteristics such as shared sense of group membership, values, behavioral patterns, language, political and economic interests, history and ancestral geographical base. (Source: Maurianne Adams, Lee Anne Bell, and Pat Griffin, editors. Teaching for Diversity and Social Justice: A sourcebook. New York: Routledge, 2000)

Gender Equality: Women and men have equal conditions for realizing their full human rights and potential to contribute to national, political, economic, social, and cultural development and to benefit equally from the results, not by becoming the same, but by correcting the systemic nature of inequality. (Source: Association of Women’s Rights in Development)

Institutional Racism: When the values, norms, beliefs, standards, and expectations of a dominant group become the basis for organizational policies, practices, arrangements, and appropriate behaviors, and result in unequal distribution of benefits and opportunities. The power to control resources, determine access, reward and punish behaviors, distribute benefits, and privilege is lodged in norms of the dominant group and access is denied to people of different identity groups. (Source: Merrill-Sands, D., Holvino and Cumming. Working with Diversity)

Intercultural: Respecting and embracing different cultures or cultural identities within a society or nation, holding each as equally valuable to and influential upon the members of society. An intercultural church treasures the different cultural contexts that God gives to different individuals and communities and values diverse expressions of practicing the faith. It offers a positive vision of the whole community, together in its difference. It encourages a healthy critique of each other’s points of view, and it values the give and take of respectful relationships. It also takes steps to become a multilingual community.

Intercultural Church Movement: Igniting the intercultural vision in the church is a radical transformation calling all of us to change. The movement inspires Presbyterians to: I- Interact and build deep relationships with people of different races and cultures, E- Educate in the areas of cultural humility and intercultural ministry, and I- Involve ourselves in intercultural coalitions to ignite the vision for intercultural ministries in the church in this new era.
Intercultural Coalitions: Individuals of different races and cultures who join together in groups as allies, advocates, and partners, learning from one another, strategizing and taking action to disrupt racism, actively resisting white privilege, challenging social and historical inequalities that permeate institutions, and joining together in the vision of becoming God’s intercultural community.

Internalized Oppression: External oppression becomes internalized oppression when the oppressed come to believe and act as if the oppressor’s belief system, values, and way of life are reality.

Intersectionality: The experience of the interconnected nature of race, gender, class, ethnicity, etc. (cultural and social), and the way they are imbedded within existing systems, such that they define how one is valued. The reality for people who suffer not only from one form of bias, but also experience a range of other forms of oppression. For instance, most women of color experience discrimination not only because of their race but also because of their gender; in other words, women of color live the intersection of gender and race discrimination.

Prejudice: A pre-judgment drawn in the absence of evidence and held in the face of evidence that contradicts it. (Source: Working Definitions prepared for antiracism training in the PC(USA))

Privilege: In organizational systems, large or small, privilege refers to the unearned benefits that come from having access to the tangible resources and social rewards of that system. Privilege also extends to the power to name and influence the functions of the system itself. Privilege in any organizational system includes the ability to have one’s voice heard and/or exercise power, to shape the norms and values of the system (group, organization, society).

Race: A socially constructed category—rather than an objective, scientifically, or biologically consistent characteristic of a person or group of persons—developed during the period of European colonial expansion that uses characteristics such as skin color, facial features, and body structure as a basis for classifying people.

Racism: (Power + Racial Prejudice = Racism) Racism in the United States is a social system in which some are advantaged and others are disadvantaged because of skin color. Racism is not primarily about individual prejudice or an individual’s beliefs and attitudes. It results from a merger of social power and racial prejudice to create systems that treat people differently whether intentionally or unintentionally. It shapes institutions and structures, so that they provide privileges for some while oppressing others. It involves inequality and unfair access to the distribution of such resources as money, education, information, and decision-making power between dominant and dominated groups.

Sexism: Refers to gender stereotyping of women and men as hierarchically ordered (men over women) and also as confined to limited cultural identities and roles as “masculine” and “feminine.” It is expressed in the exclusion of women from certain types of employment or leadership roles that are assumed to be the prerogatives of males. Sexism is expressed in personal, interpersonal, cultural, economic, legal, and political terms, and is part of a total social and cultural system. (Source: Rosemary Radford Ruether, Dictionary of Feminist Theologies, Westminster/John Knox. Letty M. Russell and J. Shannon Clarkson, 1996.)

Stereotype: A fixed notion or conception of a person, group, idea, etc., allowing for no individuality and no critical judgment of individual cases. Stereotypes are usually based on false generalizations about a particular category of people, and are often used to justify the actions taken against members of that group. (Source: Maurianne Adams, et. al.)

White Privilege: “White privilege” names the unearned advantages that come to whites in the system of racial preference. Whites tend to assume that they are “normal” and that others are “other.” This puts them in the powerful position of defining the world. The concrete benefits of access to resources and social rewards and the power to shape the norms and values of society that whites receive, either consciously or unconsciously, by virtue of their skin color in a racist society where those who are considered to be white are the dominant group. Generally white people who enjoy such privilege do so without being conscious of it. The sense of whites as non-raced and others as being racialized perpetuates the assumed authority of whites to define, and with this assumed authority whites define everyone (themselves and others) in terms of themselves. Whites assume the right to make meaning, to describe, analyze, and define reality. This definition nearly always places whites and their/our definitions and understandings at the center; all others are hyphenated or labeled as other. ### ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-11

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

“12. [Declare the PC(USA) an Intercultural Church.]”

As a reformed and always reforming church we are about transformation. As followers of the incarnate Word, we are to incarnate the message of Christ to the world God so loved by building bridges that are strong and wide enough for all to cross safely. To do so, our name must say it all. It is not enough to say so “because we live in an increasingly intercultural world.” If we are serious about providing the Good News in a cup that people recognize, then an intercultural world needs an intercultural church.

In addition to all the rationale the overture listed above, one that is of most importance is the biblical mandate we have in both the Old and New Testaments. The biblical mandate of a multicultural/intercultural community of faith envisioned by God, (as “God created a world of every kind” (Gen. 1), promoted by prophets (Gen 12, Isa. 56, Isa. 66:18, Joel 2) who called for a one “house of prayer for all people” made “of every nation, tribe, people and language” and disciples (Acts 2:1–2), (Acts 10), (1 Cor. 3:16), and (Rev. 7:9) who emphasized a unified gathering of multitude without partiality or discrimination, and of which Christ died for (Jn. 3:16, Mt. 28:18–20) and commissioned us to go to all nations and to gather all nations and tongues & to heal all nations (Rev. 22).

We recommend that the “Cross Sectional Task Force” work closely with the Presbyterian Intercultural Network and collaboratively with ACREC, seeking council from previous experiences and expertise and must have the power to evaluate the state of the church as it seeks to become truly intercultural church. This call of multicultural/intercultural church must not be assigned to or directed by a racial ethnic area. It must be made clear that it is a call made by the whole church to and for the whole church. Thus, the burden of achieving this must become the responsibility of the whole church as one community working on a shared goal.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-11

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-11.

We commend Presbyterian Intercultural Network (PIN) for their important analysis on racism, classism, sexism, and heterosexism and call for the church to actively engage in resisting and repenting from these forms of structural sin. Since the formation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 1983, there is no historical moment where there has been a more acute threat to women’s rights, racial and ethnic rights, and LGBTQ+. This is a critical moment in history that the church lives into a Presbyterian Heritage of resisting the Powers and Principalities and recognizing a Reformed theological commitment that attends to the cultural context and seeks to speak the prophetic word of God.

ACWC commends PIN for the thorough and intersectional analysis and advises approval of 11-11.

Item 11-12

[The assembly approved Item 11-12 as amended. See pp. 13, 60.]

On Affirming and Celebrating the Full Dignity and Humanity of People of All Gender Identities—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

The Presbytery of New Castle overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to approve the following resolution:

Affirming and Celebrating the Full Dignity and Humanity of People of All Gender Identities

Standing in the conviction that all people are created in the image of God and that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is good news for all people, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) affirms its commitment to the full welcome, acceptance, and inclusion of transgender people, people who identify as gender non-binary, and people of all gender identities within the full life of the church and the world. The assembly affirms the full dignity and the full humanity of transgender people, their full inclusion in all human rights, and their giftedness for service. The assembly affirms the church’s obligation to stand for the right of people of all gender identities to live free from discrimination, violence, and every form of injustice.

Making these affirmations, the assembly acknowledges that the church has fallen short of these commitments and obligations. In the world and in the church, transgender people too often experience and suffer discrimination and violence. The church has failed to understand fully and to celebrate adequately the full spectrum of gender embodied in God’s creation. As a result, we have participated in systemic and targeted discrimination against transgender people, and we have been complicit in violence against them. The assembly affirms the scriptural obligation to work for justice for all God’s children, and particularly here to work for justice for people of all gender identities. We have fallen short of this obligation, and—by the grace of God—commit ourselves to do better.

These affirmations and this commitment are rooted and grounded in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, in the breadth of Scripture, and in the Reformed Tradition. Scripture affirms that all people are created in the image of God. In God’s creation, we see and experience God’s image expressed across a broad and life-giving expression of gender. Honoring the breadth and variety of our gender identities and expressions is one of the ways we can come to an even deeper understanding of who we are created to be in relationship to God and each other. The Hebrew Scriptures, the Gospel, and the Reformed Tradition affirm the dignity and worth of all people and call on individuals and communities to work for the well-being and protection of all people. Because we recognize that people of all gender identities are created equally in the image of God, we also recognize that we share a mutual obligation to stand for the right of all people and all gender identities and gender expressions to live free from discrimination and from violence. The image of God expansively and specifically includes people of all gender identities including transgender, cisgender, gender non-binary people, and people of all gender expressions.

Accordingly, the General Assembly empowers, authorizes, and directs the Stated Clerk and the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Office of Public Witness, to advocate for the rights of transgender people and for legal protections to ensure and protect the full humanity and dignity of people of all gender identities. Specifically, the Stated Clerk and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Office of Public Witness) are authorized to support the right of transgender individuals to - serve in the military, and every type of government and public service;

- full access to public accommodations, including gender-inclusive restrooms;
- full legal protection against discrimination, particularly with regard to employment, housing, education, and health care;
- title IX protections for transgender students against violence and bullying;
- other legal protections that guarantee and safeguard the full rights of transgender individuals.

The General Assembly also encourages congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to welcome transgender and gender non-binary people into the life of the church and to continue to grow in compassion and knowledge about the full expression of our individual and respective gender identities. To that end, the General Assembly directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to consult with existing LGBTQIA+ focused advocacy organizations to develop and/or adopt educational resources to support congregational and denominational learning, and encourages synods, presbyteries, seminaries, and congregations to do the same.

Transgender inclusion is lived out in our congregations and Presbyterian institutions in the following ways:

- Welcoming statements that specifically name transgender and gender non-binary people as included within the life of the church.
- Policies that are inclusive of transgender and gender non-binary people.
- Available facilities such as bathrooms that are either designated as gender neutral, or allow for transgender and non-binary people to use the facility that matches their gender identity.
- Worship, liturgy, and hymns employ language inclusive of all gender identities.
- Transgender and gender non-binary people’s pronouns are respected and used appropriately.

Rationale

Our call as Christians is to welcome the diversity of all God’s creation.

- “For by God all things were created, in heaven and on earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones or dominions or rulers or authorities—all things were created through God and for God. And God is before all things, and in God all things hold together” (Col. 1:16–17).
- “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is no male and female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus” (Gal. 3: 28).

The terms to describe and define sexual orientation, gender identity and expression evolve as individuals name the nuances of who they are created to be. While language is inadequate to keep up with the depth of human experience, the Directory for Worship also reminds us, the church is committed to using language in such a way that “all members of the community of faith [may] recognize themselves as equally included, addressed, and cherished by God” (Book of Order, W-1.0302). For the purpose of this overture, we use the following description of the terms to describe transgender and gender non-binary experiences:

- Transgender: an intentionally broad term that can be used to describe people whose gender identity is different from the gender they were assigned when they were born.
- Gender Non-Binary: a term that is often used to describe people whose gender identity is not exclusively male or female, including those who identify with no gender, with a gender other than male or female, or as more than one gender.

In the world and in the church, transgender people, and those who are gender non-binary, too often experience and suffer discrimination and violence. The findings of the 2015 U.S. Transgender Survey, the largest survey examining the experiences of transgender and gender non-binary people from all fifty states, the District of Columbia, American Samoa, Guam, Puerto Rico, and U.S. military bases overseas, “reveal disturbing patterns of mistreatment and discrimination and startling disparities between transgender people in the survey and the U.S. population when it comes to the most basic elements of life, such as finding a job, having a place to live, accessing medical care, and enjoying the support of family and community.”

• Of 28,000 respondents, just in the year prior to the survey (2014), 30 percent who had a job were fired, 46 percent of respondents were verbally harassed, and 9 percent were physically attacked because of being transgender. Nearly one-third (29 percent) of respondents were living in poverty, compared to 14 percent in the U.S. population. The majority of respondents who were out, or perceived as transgender while in school (K–12), experienced some form of mistreatment, including being verbally harassed (54 percent), physically attacked (24 percent), and sexually assaulted (13 percent) because they were transgender. Transgender people of color have some of the highest rates of discrimination, unemployment, and poverty compared to white transgender people, and to people who share the same race. While respondents in the U.S. Transgender Study (USTS) sample overall were more than twice as likely as the U.S. population to be living in poverty, people of color, including Latino/a (43 percent), American Indian (41 percent), multiracial (40 percent), and black (38 percent) respondents, were up to three times as likely as the U.S. population (14 percent) to be living in poverty. The unemployment rate among transgender people of color (20 percent) was four times higher than the U.S. unemployment rate (5 percent). The survey also notes that growing visibility of transgender issues has lifted up not only the voices of transgender men and women, but also people who are non-binary, “with non-binary people making up over one-third of the sample, the need for advocacy that is inclusive of all identities in the transgender community is clearer than ever.”

In confession, we recognize and name the places we fall short in our relationship with God and with one another. For the church, the Confession of 1967 acknowledges, “In each time and place there are particular problems and crises through which God calls the church to act. The church, guided by the Spirit, humbled by its own complicity and instructed by all attainable knowledge, seeks to discern the will of God and learn how to obey in these concrete situations” (Book of Confessions, 9.43). In this particular time, the testimony of the harm and violence transgender and gender non-binary people face daily in this country calls upon the church to act. We confess that the violence impacting transgender people is not new, and that the church has not yet been outspoken to claim transgender and gender non-binary people as created in the image of God. In our own denomination, transgender and gender non-binary people have longed to use their gifts within our sanctuaries and within ordained ministry. Our silence as a church has meant that those who are transgender or gender non-binary seeking to serve the church have not received calls to ordained service, or have felt unwelcome to bring their full gifts into the life of the church.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has previously affirmed the need for the church to stand for the dignity and worth of “homosexual persons” (the term used at the time of passage). Given the disproportionate rates of discrimination and harassment faced by transgender and non-binary persons, the church is called to expand its affirmation of the dignity and worth to include transgender and non-binary people.

• The 117th General Assembly (1977) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) asserted “the need for the church to stand for just treatment of homosexual persons [sic] in our society in regard to their civil liberties, equal rights, and protection under the law from social and economic discrimination which is due all its citizens” (Minutes, PCUS, 1977, Part I, p. 174). The 1978 and 1979 General Assemblies of the PCUS reaffirmed this decision (Minutes, PCUS, 1978, Part I, p.190; Minutes, PCUS, 1979, p. 208).

• On Affirming Civil Rights and Nondiscrimination for All Persons, Regardless of Sexual Orientation.

That the 214th General Assembly (2002) direct the Stated Clerk to communicate the following action to all clergy, congregations, and seminaries:

The General Assembly reaffirms these resolutions adopted by the 190th General Assembly (1978) of the UPCUSA—

1. Calls upon Presbyterians to work for the passage of laws that prohibit discrimination in the areas of employment, housing, and public accommodations based on the sexual orientation of a person. (Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 575)

In the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity in our Book of Order, the church is to be identified as “a community of people known by its convictions as well as by its actions” (F-2.01). To that end, this overture embraces two specific actions: advocacy and learning, for the denominational leadership and agencies, mid councils, congregations, and seminaries. It authorizes the office to engage in the issues of our day to advocate for the rights of transgender and non-binary people and for legal protections to ensure and protect the full humanity and dignity of people of all gender identities. At the same time, it encourages learning in order to grow in compassion for transgender and gender non-binary people. Resources to support this learning can be drawn from a number of sources including:

• The National Center for Trans Equality has compiled a number of resources for education on transgender and non-binary persons: https://transequality.org/about-transgender.
Transgender Law Center developed an action center focused on supporting laws to prohibit discrimination for transgender individuals: https://transgenderlawcenter.org/resources.

Teaching Transgender Toolkit offers a range of curricula to help individuals teach workshops on transgender education: http://www.teachingtransgender.org.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-12

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-12.

Item 11-12 asks the General Assembly to affirm and celebrate the full dignity and humanity of people of all gender identities.

As the rationale for Item 11-12 so eloquently explains, we live in a time when “language is inadequate to keep up with the depth of human experience.” Presbyterians are being asked to recognize and affirm language that best describes the deep feelings of identity that many people are experiencing. Gender and sexual identities are being described in new ways with new terminologies. As the rationale for 11-12 reminds us: the church has declared a commitment to using language in such a way that “all members of the community of faith [may] recognize themselves as equally included, addressed, and cherished by God.” Approval of this item will give evidence of that commitment.

ACSWP has submitted Item 11-14 to the assembly, in part because our committee is very concerned about the mistreatment of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender persons by others who use religion to demean and discriminate. We hope that Presbyterians will not only repudiate the mistreatment of any persons but will affirm the God-given humanity of people of all gender identities. Transgender and gender non-binary persons have amazing gifts to offer the church, and their calls to membership and leadership deserve both affirmation and celebration.

As a community of discipleship, seeking to embody the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the PCUSA has an opportunity to declare that the love and justice of God is for all people. Making clear that “all people” includes transgender and gender non-binary persons will demonstrate that Presbyterians intend to be a “community of people known by its convictions as well as by its actions.” Let us be seen as a denomination that continues to grow in compassion and knowledge about the full expression of our individual and respective gender identities.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-12

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-12.

ACREC’s work and advocacy is for the full recognition of all people of color regardless of gender identity. Therefore, ACREC echoes the need for us as the PC(USA) to affirm and celebrate people of all gender identities.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-12

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-12.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns has expressed concern for the safety of transgender people in our statement published September 10, 2015, “In response to murders and violence against transgender people”:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recognizes that the binaries of “men” and “women” do not fully reflect the gender identities of all God’s people. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has declared in the Book of Order that, “there is no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person.” (PC(USA) Book of Order, F-1.0403) Our advocacy for women includes all those who identify as women and those whose lives are affected by discrimination connected to their gender. The transgender community is one such community. (https://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/advocacy-committee-for-womens-concerns/#tab-2)

The transgender community and all non-binary gendered people face barriers, discrimination, and violence that most cisgender people will never face, yet they offer much to the church. We strongly recommend the approval of this beautiful statement of affirmation of inclusion of all within not only the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) but within our communities.

ACWC also recognizes that not only is education necessary, but also action supporting legislative and policy change, both in our nation and our denomination.
COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-12

Comment on Item 11-12—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to approve Item 11-12.

COGA affirms the theological, ecclesial, and biblical foundations of this overture. COGA invites the assembly to acknowledge the precedent set by past assemblies for this call to solidarity with those who are carrying the heaviest burdens of homophobia, racism, and economic injustice in our society. The assembly has spoken strongly in the past about the church’s responsibility to provoke justice for LGBTQ people and communities. COGA sees this overture as an important next step in the church taking responsibility for the active concern Jesus Christ calls us to have for those who are disadvantaged and harmed by unjust systems.

COGA also affirms the role the church has in looking at our own biases and practices that exclude, either intentionally or unintentionally, those who do not conform to gender binaries. This overture is more than a call to the powers and principalities for equity and justice; it is a call to the theological, biblical, and ecclesial integrity of the church.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk …” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). COGA regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly.

Item 11-13

[The assembly approved Item 11-13 as amended. See pp. 13, 60.]

On Celebrating the Gifts of People of Diverse Sexual Orientations and Gender Identities in the Life of the Church—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

The Presbytery of New Castle overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to approve the following resolution:

1. Celebrating the expansive embrace of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the breadth of our mission to serve a world in need, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) affirms the gifts of LGBTQIA+ people for ministry and celebrates their service in the church and in the world.”

2. The assembly celebrates that over the years, LGBTQIA+ people have faithfully, lovingly, and courageously served in every kind of service to which Christian disciples are called—notwithstanding the church’s efforts to exclude them from particular types of service.”

3. The assembly laments the ways that the policies and actions of the PC(USA) have caused gifted, faithful, LGBTQIA+ Christians to leave the Presbyterian church so that they could find a more welcoming place to serve, as they have been gifted and called by the Spirit.”

4. At the same time, the assembly gives thanks for the LGBTQIA+ pioneers of the faith who have persisted in relationship with the Presbyterian church, at great personal cost and sacrifice, together with the whole of the LGBTQIA+ community, moving the church toward a more generous, loving, and just understanding of God’s grace.”

5. The assembly also gives thanks for those who continue to seek deeper understanding, and more authentic welcome, even amid discomfort or uncertainty about how best to show hospitality, in the spirit of continuing Reformation.”

6. Today, openly LGBTQIA+ people are leading churches, preaching the gospel, serving those in need, and otherwise using their gifts for ministry in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

7. With an eye toward the future, the assembly affirms God’s presence and call in the lives of all God’s people and commits to seeking justice, equality, and inclusion for all in church and society.

8. The assembly calls on the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency (through its Office of Public Witness), and all who represent the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to actively work for the protection of human and civil rights, both in the United States and around the world, especially the rights of marginalized and oppressed groups, including people facing discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity.

9. The assembly calls upon mission co-workers and ecumenical representatives to advocate for justice and equality for all God’s people in ways appropriate to their cultural and ecclesiastical context.

10. The assembly encourages all congregations and councils of the PCUSA continually to seek to expand their welcome so that all might know the Good News of Jesus Christ and encourages all other communions to do the same.
Rationale

The assembly celebrates that over the years, LGBTQ+ people have faithfully, lovingly, and courageously served in every kind of service to which Christian disciples are called—notwithstanding the church’s efforts to exclude them from particular types of service.

They have served as ministers of Word and Sacrament, proclaiming the inclusive good news of God’s love for all people in Jesus Christ, embodying Christ’s expansive welcome at the table, and reminding the church again and again what it means to live with integrity into our baptismal identity as beloved children of God.

They have served as ruling elders, leading congregations with wisdom; they have served as deacons, loving and caring for the church and its people. And, beyond ordination to particular service, they have served the church in worship, ministry, and mission, with countless acts of tender mercy.

Since 2011, councils have been permitted under the constitution to ordain people without regard to sexual orientation or any other matter not related to their calling, gifts, preparation, or suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry. Today, openly LGBTQ+ people are leading churches, preaching the gospel, serving those in need, and otherwise using their gifts for ministry.

Still, the General Assembly has never explicitly affirmed the gifts and lives of LGBTQ+ people; some councils have elected not to ordain some LGBTQ+ candidates; and some inquirers, candidates, and already ordained deacons, elders, and ministers do not feel free to serve openly. Many churches with whom we are in ecumenical relationship still do not ordain LGBTQ+ people. This overture, therefore, will serve an important purpose expressing the assembly’s affirmation.

Concurrences to Item 11-13 from the Presbyteries of Heartland and Mission.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-13

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-12.

Item 11-13 asks the General Assembly to affirm and celebrate the full dignity and humanity of people of all gender identities.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-13.

Over the years, LGBTQ+ persons have experienced exclusion and hostile treatment by Christians, including Presbyterians. Nevertheless, many have been faithful members, frequently under pressure to hide their true identities. Some have been ordained to office as pastors, elders, and deacons. Others have been teachers, musicians, scholars, and the whole spectrum of employment and volunteer offerings. The legacy of their service to Jesus Christ and the church has been an unrecognized and unappreciated gift.

It is past time for giving thanks. Now the PC(USA) can claim this moment to acknowledge the pain and suffering of those who were denied their calling, some of whom left in order to serve elsewhere. Now the PC(USA) can approve the recommendations in Item 11-13 and give thanks for the perseverance and devotion of LGBTQ+ Presbyterians. Now is the time to celebrate with gratitude all of those whose faith in God, commitment to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and hope in the power of the Holy Spirit have brought the PC(USA) to this moment.

With recent changes in the Book of Order, LGBTQ+ persons may now be ordained in the PC(USA). However, granting permission for ordination by means of a church-wide vote didn’t fully acknowledge the years of suffering and exclusion endured by the many who sought and were denied ordination. Now is the time to speak of the painful history and celebrate God’s grace and love that have made a genuine welcome of LGBTQ+ persons possible.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-13

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

ACREC’s work and advocacy is for the full recognition of all people of color regardless of sexual orientation and gender identities. Therefore, ACREC echoes the need for us as the PC(USA) to affirm and celebrate the gifts of people of diverse sexual orientation and gender identities in the life of the church.
Advice & Counsel on Item 11-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-13.

With passage of this overture, this General Assembly would clearly affirm the gifts and ministries of those of the LGBTQ+ community long silenced and excluded from the table. ACWC celebrates the hard work of the LGBTQ+ affirming organizations like More Light Presbyterians, Presbyterian Covenant Network, That All May Freely Serve, and PARITY (formally known as Presbyterian Welcome) who have functioned from outside the current structure of the PC(USA).

The PC(USA) via the action of this General Assembly can live into its commitment to be inclusive of all people by seriously considering the formation of a task force to study the need for a structural change within the church to give LGBTQ+ people a seat at the table and more importantly voice to be heard.

We conclude with a quote from 222nd General Assembly (2016) Co-Moderator, the Reverend Jan Edmiston:

“We deserve to belong because of who we are—not in spite of who we are. But it takes work and vulnerability to become who God made us to be.

“The best kind of church is a spiritual community that not only allows people to be the people God created us to be, but encourages people to be the people God created us to be. God created us to serve God by serving each other. God created us to honor God by honoring each other.

“I want to belong to that kind of church” (https://achurchforstarvingartists.wordpress.com, April 11, 2018).

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-13

Comment on Item 11-13—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to approve Item 11-13.

COGA acknowledges Item 11-13 as an important accompaniment to Item 11-12 (On Affirming and Celebrating the Full Dignity and Humanity of People of All Gender Identities). For the assembly’s statement of solidarity in Item 11-12 with LGBTQ people in civil society to have theological and spiritual integrity, the assembly is also called to acknowledge the harm the church has done and, in some contexts, continues to do to LGBTQ people in our structures, practices, and systems.

COGA acknowledges the painful past of the PC(USA) around questions of ordination, marriage, and the full embrace and participation of people of all gender and sexual identities. COGA urges the assembly to spend time for reflecting on that past together as God’s people who practice repentance and who trust in God’s promise to redeem and transform broken relationships.

COGA also acknowledges and affirms all the ways LGBTQ people have served and continue to serve the church with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk . . .” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). COGA regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly.

Item 11-14

[The assembly approved Item 11-14 as amended. See pp. 56, 60.]

On Praying for a Movement of the Spirit to Engage Presbyterian Congregations in Nation-Wide Action to Prevent Gun Violence—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

The Presbytery of New Castle overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to:

1. Confess that, in spite of fifty years of Presbyterian advocacy to reduce gun violence, we [have been paralyzed by fear of the gun and ammunition lobby and our church has] [have] not adequately applied the power of God’s love to the issue of gun violence, with more than 1,600,000 Americans dying from guns since 1968 and many millions more wounded, orphaned, and devastated by gun violence.

2. Commend:

   • All prior General Assemblies that have created church social witness policy for steps such as universal background checks, greater gun safety, and a ban on assault weapons.
• Presbyterian Disaster Assistance for their creation of the films, Trigger: The Ripple Effect of Gun Violence and Tapestry: Reweaving the Fabric of Community After Public Violence, and the book, Recovering from Un-Natural Disasters, as well as for their faithful presence, on behalf of the PC(USA), with communities impacted by mass shootings.

• The Office of Public Witness, Office of the Stated Clerk, Office of the General Assembly, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Peacemaking Program, Self-Development of People, Presbyterian News Service, Presbyterian Collegiate Ministry Network, and other agencies of the church for their witness during fifty years of Presbyterian policy for sensible steps to reduce gun violence.

• Those congregations, colleges, camps, and office facilities in the Presbyterian family that have voted to post signs on their buildings similar to the “No Guns in God’s House” signage called for by the 221st General Assembly (2014) as a witness against the proliferation of guns in our society, and all other congregations that have studied, prayed, and acted on this issue in other ways.

• All pastors who include the mission of reducing gun violence in creating liturgies and in their preaching, and all Christian educators who offer gun violence prevention resources for study groups and libraries.

• The Presbyterian Peace Fellowship for its creation of the Gun Violence Prevention Congregational Toolkit and other resources for local Presbyterian congregations on this issue.

[3. Call upon God to wake us up from seeing gun violence as normal and to grant divine courage to our more than 10,000 churches that we might foster a nationwide conversation on gun violence in every community; specifically, to stand in prayer during the 223rd General Assembly (2018), to share this overture and prayer with the presbyteries and synods, to share it in any other way possible, and to encourage every General Assembly commissioner and observer to continue to pray when they go home for a movement of the Spirit to engage our churches in study and action to prevent gun violence. May every congregation know that the whole church has prayed for them and for God’s intervention through them in the face of a gun violence epidemic. In love, may our churches help our country enact sensible steps to prevent gun violence from murders, suicides, accidents, family disputes, and mass shootings.

[3. This is the time for us to act and intervene in the gun violence epidemic. We will stand in prayer during the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to share this overture, to take action, and to pray with presbyteries and synods, to share it in any way possible, and for every General Assembly commissioner, and to encourage every General Assembly commissioner and observer to continue to pray when they go home for a movement of the Spirit to engage our churches in study and action to prevent gun violence. May every congregation know that the whole church has prayed for them and for us to take transformational action in this gun violence epidemic. In love, may our churches help our country and enact sensible steps to prevent gun violence from murders, suicides, accidents, family disputes, and mass shootings.

[4. Encourage congregational and presbytery leaders

[a. to work with teen and young adults especially in proposing local and state legislation prior to and in preparation for the 2018 and 2020 elections, to hold elected officials accountable, and to ensure accurate historical treatments of gun violence are included in high school curricula; and

[b. to create opportunities for study of this issue in the local churches and at the presbytery level with an emphasis on the use of resources from the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship. Such studies should make every effort to incorporate the perspectives of communities of color which already bear the burdens of racialized policing and which struggle under education and economic oppression, two root causes of violence, which grow out of the long history of the continual and systematic reassertion of white supremacy.]

[c. to strategize with ecumenical partners based on the five elements on successful social movements cited in the General Assembly report, Gun Violence, Gospel Values (2010, p. 14), including use of the prayer below in public worship and protest events.]

[Suggested Prayer:]

Gracious God, whose mercy never ends, whose Spirit brings the Kairos moment for change:

We confess our past willingness to abide the deaths of more than 1,600,000 souls lost to gun violence since 1968—the children, the parents, the distraught, as well as millions more injured, ruined, orphaned, widowed. Help us to comprehend this carnage and not become numb.

We commend and give thanks for the long witness of the General Assembly and all Presbyterians who are already engaged in preventing gun violence. We call upon you, Lord; we have nowhere else to turn. Galvanize all of us, every congregation in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

223rd General Assembly (2018)
Wake us up in our pews and our lives; do not let Christ find us asleep on this watch. Rather, Lord, grant to our church members, both those of us who own guns and those of us who do not, a unity of purpose to change the national debate on gun violence. Show us the way to study, prayer, and action at the local community level.

At all the places where you are proclaimed, give us courage to stand against principalities and powers. Grant us the joy of using the gifts that you provide—energy, intelligence, imagination, and love—to help our communities and our nation heal from this sorrow and tragedy. In Christ’s name we pray, Amen.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-14

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-14—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-14 calls upon God to assist the current movement to end gun violence and suggests a prayer to be disseminated.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval with amendment by adding a new Recommendation 4. and renumbering current Recommendations 4. through 10. as Recommendations 5. through 11.

“[4. Encourage congregational and presbytery leaders

“[a. To work with high school students especially in proposing local and state legislation prior to the 2018 and 2020 elections, to hold elected officials accountable, and to ensure accurate historical treatments of gun violence are included in high school curricula; and

“[b. To strategize with ecumenical partners based on the five elements on successful social movements cited in the General Assembly report, Gun Violence, Gospel Values (2010, p. 14), including use of the prayer below in public worship and protest events.”]

This overture reflects the growing hope that 2018 may be a “turning point” in the efforts against frequent gun violence, a “Kairos’ moment ignited partly by the leadership of Parkland, Florida, high school students. Major retailers of guns raised ages for purchase on their own and some also phased out sales of assault weapons, at least to those under 21. Overall there was a deep cynicism about politicians’ calls for “thoughts and prayers” after periodic, predictable, and hence preventable mass shootings, and about the reflexive blaming of mental illness in general for a particularly U.S. kind of mass homicide. Responsible gun owners were also being seen to step away from the increasingly ideological gun lobby.

The study task force formed in response to action by the 218th General Assembly (2008) included in its report an analysis of why previous efforts to change gun laws and culture had failed. Praying for a social movement or a revival is a good thing, as are research and organizing. Drawing on sociologist Doug McAdam, among others, the study team lifted up five elements, of which the fifth, “a sense of viability,” seemed key. In Christian terms, the five components are:

• a critical understanding of the problem, or high sense of grievance;

• a living connection to the commitments from our tradition for moral action, or a strong moral imperative;

• an informed perspective on the shifts in political, cultural, and social realities that open up new opportunities for collective action;

• an appreciation of the abundance of resources we bring to our effort;

Hence ACSWP’s amendment is designed to build upon past General Assembly policy and address the particular strategic possibilities of the current moment. Youth advisory delegates: does this sound right to you?

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-14

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

ACREC supports this overture as it calls congregations to take proactive action to prevent gun violence. No longer will Presbyterian congregations be paralyzed and threatened by gun and ammunition lobbies. ACREC supports congregations working to realize peace and safety of all God’s creation. ACREC believes this overture will save lives by creating a safe community and restoring peace.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-14

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-14 with comment.

Item 11-14 calls for the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to (1) confess, (2) commend, and (3) to pray together, asking that God “wake us up from seeing gun violence as normal and to grant divine courage to our more than 10,000 churches that we might foster a nationwide conversation on gun violence in every community” (Item 11-14, Recommendation). It even provides a suggested prayer for us all. While the ACWC advocates for the approval of Item 11-14, we hold strongly to the notion that, because of the impact that gun violence has upon women, children, men, and families, so much more can be done during this General Assembly of the PC(USA) than offer prayer.

The American Psychological Association has published at piece titled “Gun Violence: Prediction, Prevention, and Policy” (“Gun Violence: Prediction, Prevention, and Policy,” American Psychological Association, http://www.apa.org/pubs/info/reports/gun-violence-prevention.aspx.), which calls for evidence-based, multifaceted solutions to the urgent and complex problem of gun violence in this country. The 58-page report includes conclusions and recommendations, such as “what works” (evidenced-based data) at both the individual level and the community level. Recommendations for policies to reduce gun violence are also included in this report, as well as the role of mental health and mental illness. Family influences are highlighted, stating, “Families can play a role in establishing and maintaining normative beliefs about violence and gun usage. Youth from families that encourage the use of guns for solving problems also may be exposed to such attitudes in other contexts, e.g., in communities and with peers, and may perceive firearms to be an appropriate means to solve problems and protect themselves” (p. 9).

With regard to how gun violence affects women, this same report from the APA’s report states, “Specifically, men are most likely to be killed in a public place by an acquaintance, whereas women are most likely to be killed in the home by a current or former spouse or dating partner (i.e. ‘intimate partner’). Women compared with men are especially likely to be killed by a firearm used by an intimate partner” (Sorenson, 2006). “Women are killed by current or former intimate partners four to five times more often than men” (Campbell, Glass, Sharps, Laughon, & Bloom, 2007), including by firearm. With this knowledge, then, the ACWC is called to advocate for more to be done on the issue of gun violence.

To consider action items at the 223rd General Assembly (2018), the ACWC refers Assembly Committee 11 to resources previously prepared by the PC(USA), including but not limited to:

1. “Gun Violence Prevention Congregational Toolkit,” published by Presbyterian Peace Fellowship, and accessible at: http://presbypeacefellowship.org/gun-violence/resources#WueKuliwY2w. This toolkit includes seventy pages of educational resources, pastoral responses, action tools, case studies, small group study programs, worship/biblical, and pastoral care resources, sample signage for “No Guns in God’s House,” and more than 160 links to educational resources and action ideas, including gun violence prevention national groups and local contacts in all fifty states.

Included in the webinar is a theological framework for understanding our culture’s relationship to guns, as well as providing for congregations’ tangible examples of action items, resources, and education. Thanks to the generosity of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, Presbyterian Outlook is able to offer this webinar at the reduced rate of $9.99.

While the ACWC strongly advocates for the approval of Item 11-14, we urge Assembly Committee 11 to take up this important issue of gun violence, bringing forth further recommendations for action steps for synods, presbyteries, and congregations to engage in conversation, education, and prevention of gun violence in our communities and our nation.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-14

Comment on Item 11-14—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

This overture commends those engaged in the development of liturgical resources around the reduction of gun violence. The Presbyterian Mission Agency notes that the latest edition of the Book of Common Worship (WJKP, 2018) affirms and shares this concern, as it includes “Prayers After a Violent Event” (BCW 593–4), a “Service After a Violent Event” (BCW 595–8), a “Service for Justice and Peace” (BCW 599–601), suggested biblical readings and hymns for communities affected by violence \((BCW\, 602–3)\), and guidelines for interreligious gatherings in times of conflict and crisis \((BCW\, 639)\), as well as numerous specific intercessions for “an end to violence in our neighborhood and in our world” \((BCW\, 106)\).

Item 11-15

A Resolution on Religious Freedom Without Discrimination—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

In keeping with its Historic Principles of Church Order \((1788)\), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 223rd General Assembly \((2018)\) of the Presbyterian Church \((U.S.A.)\) approve the following affirmation and action steps:

Affirmation

Presbyterians have enjoyed the benefits of First Amendment protection to exercise their religious freedom since the Bill of Rights became part of the U.S. Constitution in 1791. Our Historic Principles of Church Order of 1788 state clearly: “We do not (…) wish to see any religious constitution aided by the civil power … \((F-3.0101b)\).” The principle of religious freedom should not mean the right to discriminate against or impose one’s views upon others. In our commitment to be disciples of Jesus Christ, the Presbyterian Church \((U.S.A.)\) is called to stand against oppression and in support of human dignity for all people. Because religious freedom must be “equal and common to all,” as our Historic Principles further state, it cannot be maintained as a matter of privileged exemption for powerful individuals or groups.

The Synod of New York and Philadelphia considered “the rights of private judgment, in all matters that respect religion, as universal and unalienable,” and that every religious body “is entitled to declare the terms of admission to its communion” and other internal matters. We believe it weakens religious freedom when it is invoked in ways that deprive people of their civil and human rights to equal protection under the law, or seek to justify exclusion and discrimination. In the civil rights era, United States civil courts rightly rejected the claims of those who said racial integration would violate their religion.

Initially in 1978, our denomination concluded that the denial of human rights to gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender persons on the basis of religious belief was inconsistent with our Christian faith, as well as with our commitment to the principles of equality under the law as Americans. The 199th General Assembly \((1987)\) of the Presbyterian Church \((U.S.A.)\) called for “the elimination … of laws governing the private sexual behavior between consenting adults [and the passage] of laws forbidding discrimination based on sexual orientation in employment, housing, and public accommodations.” In affirming these principles at this time, the General Assembly thus states its understanding of the Christian faith to be opposed to discrimination on matters of gender orientation and identity, and in support of freedom of the conscience in matters of reproductive rights. As a church faithful to Jesus Christ, we cannot let discrimination in the public sphere be tolerated or excused on the basis of “religious freedom.”

Action Steps

In order to effectuate the above principles, based upon legal and theological understandings of the First Amendment and free exercise of religion consistent with those of the Reformed tradition in the United States, the General Assembly:

1. Resolves to stand against any invocation of ‘religious freedom’ \[(in the public sphere)\] that deprives people of their civil and human rights to equal protection under the law, or that uses ‘religious freedom’ to justify exclusion and discrimination;

2. Encourages the Stated Clerk to file or co-file amicus curiae \(\text{(Friend of Court)}\) briefs opposing efforts to promote exclusion and/or discrimination in the name of “religious freedom”;

3. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the Office of Public Witness \((\text{OPW})\), to oppose legislative and judicial efforts to use “religious freedom” as a justification for discrimination and denial of equal rights and/or equal provision of services or benefits by any legally-chartered entity;

4. Affirms the 214th General Assembly \((2002)\) statement “Guiding Principles for Ethical Decisions Concerning Religious Freedom Around the World” \(\text{(*see note)}\);
5. Directs the Office of the Stated Clerk to send this resolution[with the rationale] to every congregation and presbytery, encouraging Presbyterians to distinguish between the historical understanding of religious freedom to practice one’s faith and current efforts to discriminate against, exclude, and marginalize vulnerable people in the name of “religious freedom.”

*NOTE: In its work with church partners and other religious bodies overseas, the boundaries between church and state are not always along the same lines as in the United States. Often the right to retain specifically Christian or religiously based social services needs to be respected by both U.S. and local governments and foreign donors, including the U.S. and international agencies, with protection of both church-related sites and personnel. The underlying Reformed principle is that the church should be independent of the civil power and also of service to the common good.

Rationale

Current challenges

The federal Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) (1993) was initially intended to protect minority religions, especially Native American religious practice. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) initially supported RFRA, consistent with our respect for its original intent: to allow persons and religious groups to practice their faith without constraint of the government. With the passage of twenty-one state RFRA and expansive interpretation by the courts, however, “religious freedom” has become a weapon aimed at excluding, marginalizing, and discriminating against vulnerable populations. Masterpiece Cakeshop, Ltd. v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission, pending (as of early 2018) before the United States Supreme Court, brings an intensified threat of harm as the plaintiff seeks to justify discrimination by cloaking it in constitutionally protected “religious freedom.” If this baker’s religious freedom argument prevails, any business which claimed that its product or service involved religious creativity or expression could attempt to deny service to gay people based on a claim of religious freedom. This “religious freedom” case relies on the First Amendment’s protection for freedom of speech. The baker contends that his cakes are works of art and expressions of speech; therefore, he argues that he has the right to refuse to sell them to anyone whom he deems to be outside of his moral boundaries.

Numerous other claims of “religious freedom” have sprung up in the courts, most frequently involving women’s reproductive rights and lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender issues. Two examples where religious reasons are given for the denial of legal services are:

- In 2014, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that an employer can deny birth control coverage for religious reasons (Burrell v. Hobby Lobby), even though no-copay birth control is guaranteed under the Affordable Care Act (ACA) and business entities, whatever their governance or ownership, should not impose particular faith claims on their employees.

- In a 2016 Texas ruling, U.S. District Judge Reed O’Connor held that doctors could refuse to treat transgender persons as well as women who had previously had abortions. He accepted the argument of self-described Christian medical associations and insurance companies that treating these patients constituted “material cooperation with evil.” This judgment implies that the government cannot require doctors and insurance companies to treat or cover anything they believe to be “evil,” in exception to generally understood professional standards and public licensing obligations.

See additional examples of “religious freedom” claims used to deny essential services and discriminate in the areas of reproductive health and LGBTQ rights in the Appendix to this rationale.

Christian Theological Bases

The fundamental principle of universal human dignity rests on the biblical foundation that humankind is created in the image of God (Gen. 1:27). From this imago Dei, we conclude that no form of discrimination is defensible on religious grounds. When Presbyterians confess our faith in A Brief Statement of Faith (Book of Confessions), we affirm our calling to “hear the voices of people long silenced and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace” (lines 70–71). Additionally, The Confession of Belhar, added to the Book of Confessions by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), calls us to resist all behavior that is dehumanizing. There can be no religious freedom without equal respect for the dignity of all persons, a dignity that is denied when services are denied. When claims of “religious freedom” become public efforts to exclude and discriminate, we are called to speak up for justice and stand with the oppressed.

Presbyterians have historically valued religious liberty and continue to support the freedom to act according to one’s religious beliefs. However, in cases involving the refusal of goods and services, false claims of “religious freedom” cause direct harm to those who are denied access. Legislating such claims as cases of protected religious freedom would undermine years of progress in state and federal civil rights and anti-discrimination law. The key distinction lies in whose choice is being limited or protected. Personally choosing not to have an abortion or use birth control, for example, is religious freedom. Making that choice for someone else, on the basis of one’s own religious principles, is religious oppression—as is done when an insurance company denies health care coverage for birth control or a doctor refuses to prescribe contraceptives. Using one’s own idea of religious freedom” to limit the lawful choices of others through your own economic leverage creates a dense pattern of religiously sanctioned discrimination. In this way, some religious groups believe they can have politically what they failed to accomplish through persuasion in the “culture wars” of the 1980s and 1990s.

The 200th General Assembly (1988) approved the social witness policy, “God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience” (https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/1-god-alone-is-lord-1988.pdf). The first principle espoused in the study is that “each worshipping community has the right to govern itself and order its life and activity free of government intervention” (p. 12). The First Amendment’s Free Exercise Clause protects the ability of church members to live out their faith, in the community’s life as well as privately. Since 1988, there has been much debate about what the “exercise of religion entails,” such as whether it could include refusing to bake a cake for a gay couple’s wedding or refusing to provide emergency contraception based on an opposition to abortion. These examples are mentioned, not because they push the limits of the Free Exercise Clause, but because they have become the recent test cases that seek to change the legal understanding of religious freedom in the United States.

Historically, religious freedom has meant protection from oppression, rather than economically imposing one’s religious convictions on others. People committed to nonviolence claim “conscientious objection” to fighting in wars on the basis of religious beliefs; however, these individual stands involve the refusal to harm others and are in no way the same as refusal to provide services to others.

The 211th General Assembly (1999) approved the study, “Building Community Among Strangers,” which stressed the tension between building community across religious lines while maintaining the commitment to our own faith beliefs. (https://www.presbyterianmission.org/wp-content/uploads/4-building-community-among-strangers-1999.pdf) This tension asks Presbyterians to remain committed to their own faith beliefs while recognizing the complicated nature of living in community with those who do not share the same faith. Being a good neighbor means being a good listener, particularly with those who do not agree with us. It also requires us to ensure that our neighbors can practice their own faith without fear of reprisal or interference from government or those who wish to harm them.

Religious Freedom and Human Rights

The 214th General Assembly (2002) utilized a human rights framework with its statement “Guiding Principles for Ethical Decisions Concerning Religious Freedom Around the World.” This movement towards a human rights framework allows the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to advocate internationally and domestically for the protection of everyone’s rights. Within the statement, the church calls on governments to “to promote and protect religious freedom” and writes:

Governments have responsibility to promote and protect religious freedom and should:

a. give specific protections concerning religious freedom in their official policies, constitution and practices; and should not:

b. co-opt, manipulate or constrain religious practice by any persons, groups or religious bodies except as may properly be necessary for the protection of human rights for all;

c. limit or deny religious participation in public life; or

d. discriminate either for or against any religious tradition or organization.

Current examples show that some state laws and interpretations of federal laws have enabled discrimination against certain groups—often marginalized minorities—with the goal of privileging a specific interpretation of Christianity—an interpretation which our denomination has rejected (an interpretation of Christianity that makes heterosexual orientation a matter of faith). This resolution calls on individual churches, presbyteries, and synods to stand against religious oppression and for religious freedom for all in their local contexts.

The human rights framework was introduced with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) in 1948. The freedom of religion and belief was codified in Article 18 of the declaration, which stated that all persons have the freedom to hold their own beliefs in regard to religious and nonreligious matters, to change their beliefs, and to practice their beliefs. This was further developed in the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR). The ICCPR expands on UDHR Article 18 to include a freedom from coercion in either practice or belief. While the Article 18 does allow governments to put limits on this freedom in the name of public health and safety, the ICCPR calls on governments to tread lightly in limiting religious freedom. The United States has signed onto both of these documents. One implication is that the United States agrees to implement these agreements in both practice and law within the United States. Presbyterians must distinguish between the UN’s intended protection, which is in accord with our historical understanding of our religious freedom to practice our faith, and current efforts to discriminate, exclude, and marginalize vulnerable people in the name of “religious freedom.”

The United Nations expanded further on the concept of religious freedom with the 1985 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, which the United States did not sign. As pertains to our current discussion, Articles 3 and 4 of the declaration discuss the elimination of discrimination on the basis of religion. or belief. Article 4 calls on governments to remove any forms of religious discrimination, including current examples where religion is used as an excuse to refuse to serve customers who hold different beliefs than the business owner.

If accepted, the expansive interpretation of religious freedom opposed here could, through ever-expanding exemptions granted to more and more persons and entities—pastors, priests, doctors, nurses, pharmacists, florists, restaurant workers, hotel wonders, rental car companies, travel agents, and county clerks who issue and sign marriage licenses—effectively authorize a parallel legal order with re-inscribed discrimination against women (and men), LGBTQ persons, and marginalized others. Rather than protecting the freedom of religious practice, following these precedents would place courts in danger of blurring the separation of church and state by sanctioning religiously motivated discrimination. The initial intent of “religious freedom” was to be like a defensive shield protecting the diverse practices of religious faith. It was not intended to be used as a hostile sword to discriminate against people seeking legal services and equitable resources. Such practices of inequality perpetuate second-class citizenship in the name of religion, a violation of the First Amendment’s prohibition of government establishment of religion.

APPENDIX: Case Examples

Some additional cases involving a “religious freedom” defense for refusing services and discriminating against particular categories of persons:

Reproductive Health Care

Since Roe v. Wade became the law of the land, the idea of “religious freedom” has been used to deny safe, legal abortions to women and endanger women’s health. In this way, laws have been enacted to override medical standards of care that are in the best interests of patients.

- In Kansas, a patient can’t sue her doctor for withholding accurate information about her pregnancy if the doctor believes that the patient would have an abortion after receiving the information.
- In South Dakota, a pharmacist can refuse to provide contraceptives even when a patient has a prescription from a health care provider.
- In Maryland, a hospital can refuse to provide permanent birth control services to women who have decided that this type of contraception is right for them.
- A U.S. District Judge in Texas ruled in 2016 that doctors could refuse to treat women who had previously had abortions. Judge Reed O’Connor contended that the nondiscrimination rule in the ACA violated the “religious freedom” of doctors and insurance companies that consider abortion to be “evil.” (These citations are adapted from Planned Parenthood Action Fund Report, “Religious Refusal and Reproductive Health;” and January 3, 2017, article by Mark Joseph Stern in Slate, “Judge: Doctors Have ‘Religious Freedom’ to Refuse to Treat Trans Patients, Women Who’ve Had Abortions.”)

Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Rights

The rights of LGBT persons are being challenged on many fronts under the banner of “religious freedom.”

- In October 2017, the Justice Department released a sweeping “license to discriminate allowing federal agencies, government contractors, government grantees, and even private businesses to engage in illegal discrimination, as long as they can cite religious reasons for doing so.
- The Supreme Court will soon hear the case of Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission. The bakery owner refused to sell wedding cakes to same-sex couples, claiming that Colorado’s Anti-Discrimination laws violated his freedom of speech and exercise of religion.
- In Washington state, a gay couple approached Arlene’s Florist to purchase flower arrangements for their wedding in 2013. They were denied on the basis of the owner’s religious beliefs.
- A New Mexico case in 2006 involved a refusal by the co-owner of Elaine Photography to film a lesbian commitment ceremony, claiming that doing so violated her Christian beliefs.
- Innkeepers at the Wildflower Inn in Vermont in 2012 refused to host the reception of a lesbian couple due to their personal feelings and a no-gay receptions policy.
- An Illinois couple were denied by two facilities in 2011 to host their civil commitment ceremony, and in one case were subjected to a biblical lecture on homosexuality.
- Catholic Charities in Illinois excludes unmarried couples, especially same-sex couples, who were qualified to act as foster or adoptive parents.
- Currently there are thirty-two states that have marriage equality laws regarding same-sex couples. Even in some of those states, and elsewhere, government officials refuse service to gay couples based on their religious beliefs.
- A graduate student in a university counseling program in Michigan refused to work with a gay client on the grounds that it violated her religious beliefs.
- In 2016, North Carolina passed a law requiring transgender people to use bathrooms corresponding to the sex on their birth certificate. In Mississippi an even broader law allows people and institutions to deny services to gay people on the basis of their religious beliefs.
ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-15

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-15—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

ACREC appreciates the resolution brought forward by ACSWP. As people of color, we have long faced injustice in the name of “religious freedom” and calls the church to acknowledge the misuse of this freedom in the history of this country and the church’s complicity in the inhumane and unjust ways people of color have been treated in the past and continue to be treated today.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-15

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-15—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-15.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns agrees that ‘religious freedom’ is not a license to discriminate against God’s people. ACWC feels that such language is distorted and misused for oppressive and marginalizing purposes. Additionally, so called religious freedom has been used to interfere with women’s rights to safe and affordable medical care and for the purposing of controlling women’s bodies by way of limiting reproductive healthcare options. As people of faith, committed to justice, we should all be troubled by the continued assaults on the reproductive wellbeing and healthcare for women. We affirm that God alone is Lord of Conscience and that women, with their healthcare providers, are the only persons informed and equipped to make the best decisions about their bodies, their health and wellbeing, as well as that of their families. A Resolution on Honest Patriotism—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Faced with an unprecedented crisis of public dishonesty and chauvinistic nationalism, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approves the following affirmations and directions for its mission and witness:

Affirmations

The 223rd General Assembly (2018) acts to lift up our church’s long commitments to active civic engagement, responsible citizenship, and prophetic witness; believing these commitments to be rooted in our faithful response to God’s call for Christians to be stewards of creation; and witnessing the corrosion of democratic institutions.

The phrase “honest patriotism,” popularized in Donald W. Shriver’s 2005 book, Honest Patriots, means “loving a country enough to remember its misdeeds.” Such misdeeds are usually those times and places where particular groups were denied “equal protection under the law.” Just as the ancient Hebrew prophets stood up to kings and queens, so have Christians understood the prophetic calling to entail a moral freedom to challenge the misuses of power, even within the church or state themselves, “in season and out of season.” Honest Patriotism is thus a check on the exclusivist nationalism that otherwise denies equal respect to other peoples, conceals injustices committed by one’s own side in any conflict, and makes reconciliation and common action harder to achieve both in the United States and abroad.

Drawing on our Reformed Christian reading of scripture and our church’s Preliminary Principles, which influenced democratic revolutions in Britain and the United States, this resolution addresses the vital freedoms of the First and Fourteenth amendments to the U.S. Constitution and their application to changes in the nature of communications, media, and the public square. We make this statement out of concern for both the God-given rights of persons and for the cultural commons that allows for the open transmission of our values and convictions.

1. We affirm and honor the work of citizens of the United States who have chosen public service as part of their vocation. This includes, but is not limited to, civil service employees, members of the judiciary, and our elected representatives in the Legislative and Executive branches of our national government. Public employees of local and state governments also serve the common good. We further affirm, as part of our Reformed tradition, that their work is part of God’s design for the governance of creation.
2. We affirm the imperative for honesty in the public statements, proceedings, publications, and theological witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), recognizing that our faith is based, at its core, on a commitment to truth. In like manner, we call upon all citizens, as well as governments, to recognize commitment to truth as a core value and to be vigilant in demanding honesty in our public and private interactions. Christians must scrutinize news sources and reject those that oversimplify or sensationalize conflicts and demonize other human beings and peoples.

3. We affirm the protection of the freedom of speech, as enshrined in the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America. We recognize that meaningful civic engagement is dependent upon the protection of this freedom, which keeps our engagement lively, meaningful, and prophetic. As this freedom involves clashing ideas of what is true and false, the United States’ legal tradition makes it the responsibility of citizens and their elected representatives to develop measures of public accountability for truthfulness in the public square in all its forms: over public airwaves, through cyberspace, and through proactive requirements of public disclosure by government agencies and publicly chartered profit and nonprofit entities.

4. We affirm the widest possible public access to information and to the products of cultural activity. We recognize that such freedom to listen is vital to the free exchange of ideas and to the practical application of freedom of speech. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) opposes any attempt to limit this free exchange, including but not limited to, monopoly ownership of media outlets and the dismantling of net neutrality. This excludes only the production and promotion of hate speech, designed to exclude others from such access or endanger their persons and property.

5. We affirm the rights of all citizens to freedom of assembly. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) opposes any attempts to abrogate this freedom, including, but not limited to, attempts to criminalize, manipulate by false information, or in other ways delegitimize peaceful protest. New forms of surveillance by drone and electronic means, as well as increased use of military equipment by police forces, require increased public accountability of all policing and security agencies. Similarly, data gathered from electronic devices about personal communications and purchasing history should be governed by privacy protections and not used commercially or otherwise without permission.

6. We affirm the freedom of the press, guaranteed in the First Amendment to the Constitution. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) opposes any attempts to abrogate this freedom, including, but not limited to, threats, intimidation, and the denial of access to certain members or organs of the press for partisan reasons.

7. We affirm the rule of law as inseparable from our Reformed commitment to truth. Recognizing that human law is a human creation and therefore subject to error, we nonetheless affirm the democratic principle of equal protection under the law, as enshrined in the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. Institutionally, this equal protection is guaranteed by an independent judiciary, the maintenance of which must continue to be a national priority. This has customarily meant laws to insulate judges from partisan politics as well as the use of objective qualifications in their selection, both of which approaches this assembly would endorse.

8. We affirm the need for free critical inquiry that is unhampered by censorship. Commitment to integrity and to the truth must also extend to those whose vocation it is to seek out the truth and to add to the store of human knowledge. We therefore oppose any governmental, educational, or other institutional restrictions on the initiation, maintenance, or publication of research.

9. We affirm the right of citizens to participate in the democratic process. Fundamental to that process is the right to vote. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in affirming its commitment to honest patriotism and responsible citizenship, therefore opposes any efforts to restrict participation in elections, including, but not limited to, voter suppression initiatives and racially based and/or partisan gerrymandering.

Directions for Its Mission and Witness

The 223rd General Assembly (2018) further approves the following measures for consideration by its members and congregations and action by its agencies.

1. In order to faithfully model civic responsibility and engagement, the members and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are encouraged to be active in civic life, engaging in critical and constructive discourse and prayerfully considering the import of the Gospel message to our body politic.

2. In order to faithfully model honest and open governance, all councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), from local to national, are encouraged to be open and transparent in their decision-making processes. At the same time, church procedures and expectations of staff and volunteers should not infringe upon the privacy and autonomy that support freedom of Christian conscience.

3. In order to faithfully model freedom of expression, all councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), from local to national, are encouraged to seek out and learn from diverse perspectives, and to examine their current practices so as to ensure no voice is silenced, however unintentionally.
4. In order to faithfully model full participation in governance, all councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), from local to national, are encouraged to make whatever accommodations necessary to ensure the full and active participation of members in the decision-making process of the church. These accommodations may involve, but are not limited to, the dissemination of relevant materials, the translation of said materials into appropriate languages, and the scheduling of meeting times for deliberation. All councils should consider part of their leadership to include a convening function designed to bring together leading thinkers in public conversation and constructive debate to engage members across the larger church in discerning what mission and discipleship entail.

5. In order to faithfully model critical inquiry, colleges and universities historically related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are encouraged to continue to honor the role of the humanities, including the teaching of religion and ethics, in their curricula, so that the complex values of culture and society can be better understood.

6. The Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the Office of Public Witness, and other ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are directed to advocate and witness for policies consistent with the affirmations above.

7. Presbyterian elected officials and other civil servants are invited to respond to the affirmations and background statement and to participate in briefings, seminars, and adult education programs that may educate and engage our members.

Grounding and Charge:

These affirmations draw on a long tradition of Reformed involvement in the political arena. We are cognizant that we live in a time and place where it is incumbent upon us to speak boldly. We also know that we speak along with a great cloud of witnesses who have come before us. Nothing that we affirm here is wholly new, in the sense that our tradition has always viewed the faithful guardianship and exercise of our rights as citizens to be central to our mission.

The issues we address here have been the subject of the social witness policy of our denomination for generations. The 195th General Assembly (1983) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) adopted the report, Reformed Faith in Politics. Claiming that we are “inevitably political and religious,” that report outlines the theological and biblical rationale for our commitment to good government and “affirm[s] responsible participation in politics as an indispensable part of the calling of all Christians.”

The 200th General Assembly (1988) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) adopted the policy statement, God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience. A comprehensive examination of religious liberty in both historical and contemporary contexts, this statement likewise endorses a robust Presbyterian voice in our political system, and calls us as a denomination to safeguard such participation. The report asserts:

… it is a limitation and denial of faith not to seek its expression in both a personal and a public manner, in such ways as will not only influence but transform the social order. Faith demands engagement in the secular order and involvement in the political realm.

More recently, the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved a policy statement on voting rights and campaign finance reform, Lift Every Voice, which was updated in 2016 to include recent Supreme Court cases. The assembly spoke forthrightly to recent decisions that allow virtually unlimited and undisclosed sums to be spent in elections, and to decisions that weaken protections for minority voters.

It is in such a spirit and with such a faith that the above affirmations are offered. They are congruent with the long tradition of Reformed theology regarding the political order, and they both build upon and are dependent upon the stated policies of the denomination. Yet, in offering them now, we recognize an urgency of time and place. We believe that in moments such as these, when core values of robust democratic participation in the life of the commonwealth are under threat, we are called to claim our heritage and to offer our witness.

Rationale

PART I: HONESTY AS A REFORMED CHRISTIAN VALUE

So then, putting away falsehood, let all of us speak the truth to our neighbors, for we are members of one another. (Eph. 4:25)

Honesty is a paramount biblical virtue. Of the advice and guidance given to the various early Christian communities in the epistles, the exhortation to be truthful to each other resounds in its repetition (see, e.g. 2 Tim. 2:15; Col. 3:9; 1 Pet. 3:10–12). This theme is echoed in the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Book of Order states:

That truth is in order to goodness. ... [N]o opinion can either be more pernicious or more absurd than that which brings truth and falsehood upon a level, and represents it as of no consequence what a [person’s] opinions are. On the contrary, we are persuaded that there is an inseparable connection between faith and practice, truth and duty. ... (Book of Order 2017–2019, F-3.0104)
Why must Christians be committed to the truth? First, we are so committed because we are commanded to be. In the foundational moral law of the Decalogue, we are commanded not to bear false witness (Ex. 20:16). In his commentary on the ninth commandment, John Calvin makes it clear that we should not construe this commandment narrowly simply because its wording appears to apply to judicial proceedings. Calvin writes, “The purport of this commandment is, since God, who is truth, abhors falsehood, we must cultivate unfeigned truth towards each other.”

The command for honesty is not arbitrary. Calvin taught that the law has a threefold purpose: to convict us of sin, to restrain social evil, and to help us to grow in righteousness and in gratitude for grace. It is this third purpose of the law, that it makes us better Christians, which Calvin claims as the principle purpose. Biblically this understanding of honesty, that it is central to our moral growth and character, is perhaps best represented in the book of Proverbs, a collection of advice on moral behavior. The rewards of honesty and the perils of dishonesty are a constant presence throughout Proverbs. A brief sampling includes:

“There are six things that the Lord hates, seven that are an abomination to him: haughty eyes, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, a heart that devises wicked plans, feet that hurry to run to evil, a lying witness who testifies falsely, and one who sows discord in a family.” (Prov. 6:16–19)

“Whoever walks in integrity walks securely, but whoever follows perverse ways will be found out.” (Prov. 10:9)

“The integrity of the upright guides them, but the crookedness of the treacherous destroys them.” (Prov. 11:3)

“Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord, but those who act faithfully are his delight.” (Prov. 12:22)

Christians are committed to the truth, secondly, because dishonesty displays a fundamental lack of respect for other persons. Dishonesty is a means to control, to master, to gain at another’s expense. As such, it violates the command to respect the dignity all of God’s creation. When we lie to another person, we treat them as a means to an end, rather than as an end in themselves. We deny the truth that all persons are created in the image of God. From Calvin again, we read, “…we must not by calumnies and false accusations injure our neighbor’s name, or by falsehood impair his fortunes; in fine, that we must not injure any one from petulance, or a love of evil speaking.”

Thirdly, and perhaps most importantly for a discussion of honesty and civic responsibility, dishonesty corrodes trust—a crucial ingredient to a functioning community. Robert Bellah, et.al. note, in the beginning of The Good Society, “Democracy requires a degree of trust that we often take for granted.” Drawing on H. Richard Niebuhr’s work in The Responsible Self, Bellah and his colleagues note that distrust weakens our ability to participate responsibly in the world around us, leading us to “rupture, not strengthen, the solidarity of the community or communities we live in.”

This worry about the breakdown of our communities also animates the pronouncements of the Hebrew prophets when they warn about the dangers of cultures where truth is not valued. From the prophet Jeremiah:

Beware of your neighbors, and put no trust in any of your kin; for all your kin are supplacers, and every neighbor goes around like a slanderer. They all deceive their neighbors, and no one speaks the truth; they have taught their tongues to speak lies; they commit iniquity and are too weary to repent. Oppression upon oppression, deceit upon deceit! They refuse to know me, says the Lord. (Jer. 9:4–6)

Finally, when we speak of honesty as a Christian virtue, we must speak with humility about the human capacity to know the truth. Our social location, our cultural assumptions, our traditions all color the way in which we apprehend what is true. These same conditioning factors can lead us into error with regard to truth. Our historical “truths” have at supported practices and beliefs that clearly run counter to our call as Christians. We have endorsed human bondage, disenfranchisement, and oppression. So we must own that we do not know the truth as God knows the truth. Our own reformation is a continual process.

To be clear then, we can be honest and at the same time be in error. The ethical mandate for honesty recognizes the limitations of our intellects. The command, therefore, is to sincerity, to not deliberately mislead, to correct errors when we are made aware of them, and to allow others to do so as well. Honesty admits of error, but does not tolerate deceit.

PART II: PATRIOTISM AS A REFORMED CHRISTIAN VALUE

Let every person be subject to the governing authorities; for there is no authority except from God, and those authorities that exist have been instituted by God. (Rom. 13:1)

The opening verses of Chapter 13 of Paul’s letter to the Romans give us the most extensive reflection on the role of government to be found in Christian scriptures. Although Paul’s words have been used at various times to demand unquestioned obedience to the state, the Reformed tradition has used Paul’s reflections as a base for a different reading of civil society—one that respects the state as ordained by God but also demands that citizens participate in the ordering and maintenance of the earthly community.

If honesty is a virtue common to Christian theology generally, civic participation is especially, if not uniquely, a mandate for Reformed Christians. Again, Calvin is instructive here. He devotes the final chapter of the Institutes to civil government and makes it clear from the outset that its institutions are ordained by God for the good of humanity, writing:
Calvin explicitly rejected the competing and contemporary Anabaptist vision of the state as diseased and worth avoiding. He clearly stood opposed to the vision that “civil government is a polluted thing with which Christians should have nothing to do.”15 This claim has contemporary relevance as well. As Reformed Christians we stand in support of a theological tradition which honors government as a good, and stand in opposition to those who see government as a necessary evil, or worse.16 The casual denigration of government, the reflexive rhetorical impulse to understand government as an alien force that stands against us, must be resisted in the strongest terms if we are to be faithful to our theology.

Neither, of course, does the Reformed tradition embrace an uncritical endorsement of government in all its actions. We do not stand for the Divine Right of Kings (or Presidents). The State “can assume the face and character of Pilate.”17 The church, then, has a duty to the state: to maintain a prophetic voice, with which to constantly remind the state of its calling.18 The confessions we have embraced are explicit reminders of our duty in this regard.19

So we, in the Reformed tradition, understand the institution of government to be ordained by God, and therefore sanctified; but we also understand its propensity, as a human institution, to sin. One of the most grievous sins to which government is prone is the usurpation of power to which it is not entitled, particularly in the form of subjugation. The history of the Presbyterian Church in the United States has been a history of the embracing of democratic institutions and forms of government as the most effective ways of maintaining a government which resists this temptation and is faithful to its calling. We have relied on the principle, enumerated by John Locke and others, that we are all, first and foremost, created by God. As such, we believe there is a certain dignity within ourselves that cannot be violated.20

Reformed Christians have been instrumental in demanding that, whatever form of government we establish, the proper role of government is its service to the people. To this end, it must respect the rights of its citizenry. Karl Barth writes:

As disciples of Christ, the members of His Church do not rule: they serve. In the political community, therefore, the Church can only regard all ruling that is not primarily a form of service as a diseased and never as a normal condition.21

Since before we were a nation, Presbyterians on this continent have been vigilant in securing the active voice of the citizenry in their own governance. Since Rev. Francis Makemie’s struggles against the royal governor of New York, this church has been clear that the vocation of our government is best served by the free participation of the people whom it serves. We stand committed to the rights enumerated in the Bill of Rights of our Constitution and referenced in the affirmations above.

If we are honest in assessing our history, both as a nation and a church, we must also repent of our own complicity in denying such free participation to entire groups of our population, both through law and through practice. This is precisely the test presented in Donald Shriver’s Honest Patriots, which describes our history with Native and African Americans and compares our country’s efforts at honest memory with those of Germany and South Africa.22 We have been a country, and we have been a church, which has paid scant attention to the voices of people of color. We have been a country, and we have been a church, which has paid scant attention to the voices of women. We have been a country, and we have been a church which has paid scant attention to the voices of LGBTQ persons. In the words of Letty Russell, we have operated in a “patriarchal paradigm of reality” that “accept[s] the marginalization of the powerless as a given.”23

When we see such marginalization of voices in our congregations, we must correct it. When we see such marginalization of voices in our civic life, we must combat it. Our “Brief Statement of Faith,” found in the Book of Confessions, calls us “to hear the voices of peoples long silenced.”24 Only active listening to voices from oppressed communities, undertaken in a spirit of repentance, will lead us forward. Without the collective knowledge and wisdom found in these communities, our responses will always be inadequate. As James Cone notes, “The grounding of Christian ethics in the oppressed community means that the oppressor cannot decide what is Christian behavior.”25

Committing ourselves to honest patriotism means an uncompromising attention to full democracy. It means that our government must protect the full participation of all of its citizens. And the most direct means that democracy gives us of making all voices heard—the vote—must be protected without qualification. This is a bare minimum of what we must expect from our government.

As Reformed Christians we believe that our government has responsibilities to its citizens, that honest patriotism must be a virtue of those whom we call to positions of leadership. What responsibilities do we as the church, then, have to our government? In addition to the respect owed to the institution of government as established by God, we owe the government our intercession, our active participation, and our prophetic critique.

So first, we must pray for our government. Because we profess to believe in the power of intercessory prayer, because we profess to believe that God hears the prayers of God’s children, our prayers for those institutions and those people to whom we entrust our governance are vital. Karl Barth writes, “The Christian community prays for the civil community. It does so all the more since the civil community as such is not in the habit of praying.”26
But intercession through prayer, in and of itself, is not enough. Barth goes on to remind us that in making our civil community the object of our prayers, we assume responsibility for that community. We would not be taking our responsibility seriously, says Barth, if we did no more than pray. For the Reformed Christian, active participation in civil society is not a luxury. It is not a right we can choose to exercise or not as our whims may drive us. It is part of our calling as Christians to be active participants in God’s ordering of the earthly commonwealth. Robert McAfee Brown, in his book Spirituality and Liberation, gives us a powerful statement of the connection of prayer to civic participation. He writes:

A prayer of intercession may be a trip to the city jail to provide bail for someone wrongly arrested because of having the wrong skin color; and act of praise of God may be the affirmation of a Laotian child’s success in the English as a Second Language program…a blessing may be the gift of time and money that enables a woman victimized by sexual harassment to secure legal help; a prayer of adoration may be the formation of a political coalition to fight a specific injustice at city hall.

Bearing our civic responsibilities as Christians in mind, we must also at times, in our role as active Christian members of a civil community, take seriously our prophetic role. Because we understand the state as ordained by God we must, in all humility and acknowledging our own propensity for error, call the state to task when it fails in its obligations. Calvin, as deferential as he at times was to governing authorities, minced no words in challenging them when they violated their obligations. He writes:

… even magistrates ought to do their utmost to prevent the liberty, of which they are appointed guardians, from being impaired, far less violated. If in this they are sluggish or little careful, they are perfidious traitors to their office and to their country.

At times, this prophetic role may take the form of both conscientious objection and civil disobedience. Because no state acts consistently with the demands of justice at all times, because we acknowledge the power of sin not just in our individual lives, but also in our institutions, there will be times when we cannot, in good conscience, participate in or endorse an action or a policy of our government. At such moments, with full knowledge of the civil consequences of our actions, we may be called to resistance. Our prophetic critiques may lead us to moments of discomfort and even danger.

We offer the affirmations above in the spirit of these obligations—intercession, active engagement, and prophetic critique—that the church holds towards the government.

Finally, we acknowledge that the church, if it is to call itself honest, must model in its own practices and institutions the same virtues to which it calls the government and broader society. As a human institution, we acknowledge our own participation in sin and the need for corporate confession. Where we demand honesty in our governmental institutions, we must be honest in our own work. Where we demand the protection of freedom of conscience, speech, and assembly in our civic life, we must be careful not to abridge such freedoms ourselves. Where we champion the full participation of all members, we must not create structures in our own corporate life which violate that principle. Where we demand social justice in our broader culture, we must not be timid in our critique of our own shortcomings. Returning to Karl Barth for a valediction:

Perhaps the most important contribution the Church can make is to bear in mind in the shaping of its own life that, gathered as it is directly and consciously around the common centre, it has to represent the inner within the outer circle. The real Church must be the model and the prototype of the real State. The Church must set an example so that by its very existence it may be a source of renewal for the State and the power by which the State is preserved.

12. The term patriotism carries with it a great deal of baggage including its etymological root in the word patria (fatherland). Aware of the problematic gendered nature of this term and the patriarchal heritage it may embody, we nonetheless hope to reclaim a type of love of country that has traditionally been denoted by this term. As will become clear, we see such love of country manifest particularly through civic engagement and active citizenship, which includes prophetic critique. We also note that such patriotism must always be constrained by our obedience to God.

31. With regard to the contemporary “carriers” of the four freedoms of the First Amendment, this resolution cannot do justice to the complexities of intellectual property law or the ways that “culture war” issues have been increasingly revived in political debate. A creative synthesis of political and cultural thinking on the “cultural commons,” however, can be found in Lewis Hyde’s, _Common as Air: Revolution, Art, and Ownership_ (2010), which devotes much of its attention to updating the concerns of the U.S. founders in today’s cultural and media environment. There have also been proposals that an analogue to a nonpartisan “consumers’ union” be developed to rate the truthfulness of media outlets. Others favor returning to an updated version of the “fairness doctrine,” which required public broadcasters to present at least two sides of contentious issues.

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-16—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve Item 11-16.

This is a timely and well-written resolution. It reminds Presbyterians of their call to speak truth when speaking truth may be costly. It also reminds us to be humble in recognizing that while at times when we feel we are speaking truth, we may be in error. As noted within the report, such a time is:

> We have been a country, and we have been a church, which has paid scant attention to the voices of people of color. We have been a country, and we have been a church, which has paid scant attention to the voices of women. We have been a country, and we have been a church, which has paid scant attention to the voices of LGBTQ persons.

Declaration on Where We Stand Regarding Concerns About Direction Towards Autocracy That This Country Is Taking—From the Presbytery of Hudson River.

The Presbytery of Hudson River overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to affirm the following declaration [and offers it as a resource to congregations]:

1070 223rd General Assembly (2018)
As confessing Christians, we trust God, whom we know through Jesus Christ, in whose name we pray as others pray in other names
We are obligated to declare our concerns about the direction towards autocracy that our country is taking.
We say Yes to God’s power of love and justice for the neighbor as well as the self; and we say No to demonic power that urges hate of the other, scatters blame, and creates civic discord.
We say Yes to our imperfect democracy with one person, one vote, and No to any corruption of our elections.
We say Yes to universal health care and No to care based on the ability to pay.
We say Yes to safe schools, houses of worship, and public gathering places; and No to civilian access to assault [and/or military-style] weapons.
We say Yes to core human values and No to dividing our humanity by ideology and partisanship.
We say Yes to bridges and [preservation of families and] No to walls.
[We say Yes to affirming and celebrating the full spectra of human identity and No to discrimination and bigotry.]
We say: “In life, and in death we belong to God.”

Rationale

Our Reformed tradition has, from its inception, claimed a vigorous role for the church in public life. Our tradition affirms that government is a good, created by God for the right ordering of the earthly realm. We also acknowledge that government, as it exists on earth, is a human institution, and thus subject to the debilitating effects of human sinfulness. At those times when our government acts to violate norms central to what we believe, we claim the right to raise our voices prophetically against those policies that do so.

John Calvin, in The Institutes of the Christian Religion, speaks with clarity about the authority of the state, but also of its limits. He writes:

But in that obedience which we hold to be due to the commands of rulers, we must always make the exception, nay, must be particularly careful that it is not incompatible with obedience to Him [sic] to whose will the wishes of all kings should be subject, to whose decrees their commands must yield, to whose majesty their sceptres must bow.”

If Calvin’s language is difficult for 21st century Christians to parse, existing as it does in a vocabulary of absolute monarchy, Karl Barth extends Calvin’s claim to a 20th century context, and places on the church an obligation. Barth writes:

If the State has perverted its God-given authority, it cannot be honoured better than by this criticism which is due to it in all circumstances. For this power that has been perverted, what greater service can we render than that of intercession.”

The Book of Confessions of the Presbyterian Church, (U.S.A.) contains two documents from the church’s history in the 20th century that took the prophetic role of the church seriously and dared to speak truth to power. The Theological Declaration of Barmen, written in response to the dehumanizing policies of the National Socialist Party in Germany, and the Confession of Belhar, written to stand against the apartheid policies of the government of the Union of South Africa, are both vibrant and living witnesses to the power of our theological tradition and the weight of the responsibilities we claim as Christians living in the body politic.

Drawing specifically from the work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor bodies, these words from The Confession of 1967 resonate particularly:

The members of the church are emissaries of peace and seek the good of man [sic] in cooperation with powers and authorities in politics, culture, and economics. But they have to fight against pretensions and injustices when these same powers endanger human welfare. Their strength is in their confidence that God’s purpose rather than man’s [sic] schemes will finally prevail.

We also claim our prophetic vocation as the people of God in these words from A Brief Statement of Faith:

In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.”

Our theology calls us, as Presbyterians, to be active participants in the political life of the world and to speak when fundamental tenets of our faith are being violated. At such a time as this, the words of Jesus in the Gospel of John guide us:

If you keep my commandments, you will abide in my love, just as I have kept God’s commandments and abide in God’s love. I have said these things to you so that my joy may be in you, and that your joy may be complete. This is my commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you. (Jn. 15:10–12)

Responding to Racist Nationalism—From the Presbytery of Hudson River.

The Presbytery of Hudson River overtures the 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA) to respond to expressions of racist nationalism in the statements and actions of politicians and government officials by taking the following actions:

1. Approve the following resolution:

The 223rd General Assembly (2018) of the PC(USA) strongly condemns the unjust, racist disparagement of people and entire nations [lately], promoted by politicians and government officials at all levels in the mistaken effort to place “America First.” As Christians, our call is to bring to “all nations” (Mt. 28:19) the good news that God loves all people equally. [Historically, America has been “first” in espousing human equality as the principle on which nations are founded.] We call upon our national leaders to lead by that principle. We pray that God may open the minds and hearts of the American people to understand that the real problems they face result from real causes and not from the presence of demonized “others.” We commit to working with people of good will, regardless of political or religious affiliation, in a collective effort to solve the real problems facing our nation and the world. We ask forgiveness from those who have been hurt by hateful rhetoric and harmed by unjust government policies. We acknowledge our responsibility and urge our elected officials to speak out against hate and “to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly” with God (Mic. 6:8).

2. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to send this resolution to the president of the United States and to each United States senator and representative.

3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through Presbyterian World Mission, to send this resolution to world mission partners.

4. Encourage PC(USA) pastors and congregations to publicize this resolution in their communities and with officials of local and state government.

Rationale

Valued members of PC(USA) congregations and mission partners abroad are from countries that have been disparaged in the recent debate over immigration. Our friends deserve to hear from us a renewed commitment to stand with them in a relationship of equality and genuine Christian love. Seeking cooperation among “people of good will, regardless of political or religious affiliation,” this statement is nonpartisan and does not focus on remarks by any one individual. The problem is bigger than one comment by one man. It is a problem in which, under a democratic form of government, all citizens share some measure of responsibility. Acknowledging our share and asking forgiveness may serve as an example for others.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-18

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-18—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

ACREC supports this overture as it brings awareness to unnecessary suffering of people of color who have been marginalized and oppressed by racism perpetuated by nationalism based on white racial superiority. The current reality is that people of color communities suffer from this false spirit sustained by nationalism fueled by racism. There is no room or tolerance in the body of Christ or in the PC(USA) for evil powers that exclude and divides the church.
The recommendations support the core values of ACREC as it seeks racial and economic justice and equity thus enabling the realization of God’s beloved community.

When we realize the exclusion and suffering of God’s people, Jesus calls us to pray for the movement of the Spirit to provide the courage to support action to prevent gun violence.

Valued members of PC(USA) congregations and mission partners abroad are from countries that have been disparaged in the recent debate over immigration. Our friends deserve to hear from us a renewed commitment to stand with them in a relationship of equality and genuine Christian love. Seeking cooperation among “people of good will, regardless of political or religious affiliation,” this statement is nonpartisan and does not focus on remarks by any one individual. The problem is bigger than one comment by one man. It is a problem in which, under a democratic form of government, all citizens share some measure of responsibility. Acknowledging our share and asking forgiveness may serve as an example for others.

A Self-Study Report—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

In fulfillment of its mission to serve the prophetic calling of individual Presbyterians, congregations, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and in accountability to the review process mandated by the General Assembly, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy requests that the 223rd General Assembly (2018) approve the following directions from ACSWP’s self-study, and receive the background report and appendices, so that insofar as possible:

1. ACSWP shall continue to find ways to communicate with young adults on emerging challenges to Christian conscience and new social movements, bringing to bear policies and resources of the General Assembly and inviting committed and passionate activists to participate in the theological and ethical development of social witness for the church.

2. ACSWP shall increase the numbers of writers, readers, and subscribers of Unbound: An Interactive Journal of Christian Social Justice.

3. ACSWP shall strengthen its relationships with the PMA’s Theology, Evangelism, and Formation ministries, with the Westminster/John Knox Press, and with Christian educators to assist in the dissemination of General Assembly policies and development of curricula and educational strategies related to the policies.

4. ACSWP shall work collaboratively with mid councils both to obtain feedback regarding work in progress and to disseminate General Assembly policies, working (as with pastors and presbytery leaders in Detroit and St Louis) also to help the voices and learnings from their local and regional prophetic engagement be shared with the larger church and society.

5. ACSWP shall offer assistance to General Assembly Moderators and Presbyterian Mission Agency Board leaders in the framing, resourcing, and convening of churchwide conversations on theological-ethical challenges and justice movements, thereby helping also with the ongoing reformation of the church’s own institutional life.

6. ACSWP shall work with the General Assembly Nominating Committee to ensure the representation of racial ethnic and age diversity of ACSWP membership.

7. ACSWP shall deepen its ecumenical connections and cooperation within conciliar and Reformed bodies in the development of social teaching and witness, drawing upon the Social Ethics Network of Presbyterian professors of religion and ethics in the creation of new vehicles for Christian discipleship and solidarity.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) serves the prophetic calling of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by providing the General Assembly with careful studies of pressing moral challenges, media for discussion and discernment of Christian responsibilities, and policy recommendations for faithful action.

I. Introduction

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) presents the following report as a measurement of performance for the multiyear review period of January 1, 2010, through December 31, 2017. Previous examinations of the church’s social witness structures have occurred in 1936, 1949, 1977, 1993, and 2010.
The ACSWP welcomes the task of self-assessment as such data collection and reflection provide time and energy to consider how best to achieve our mission. Congruent with the review standards, this self-study seeks to demonstrate that over the 2010–2017 review period, ACSWP has demonstrated “fidelity to mission and partnership” and “effectiveness of services.”

In submitting this report, ACSWP invites General Assembly commissioners to think about how important it is that the church not be silent in the face of tragedy, injustice, and the denial of responsibility. The church is asked to address these situations with wisdom, hope, and courage, even when its membership is not entirely of one mind.

The information in this report is compiled from documents that describe the normative work of ACSWP and data sources that provide evidence for most recent actions of and opinions about the ACSWP’s work during the review period. Resources and data for this self-study are:

- Texts of the church’s confessions;
- Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Manual of Operations;
- ACSWP meeting minutes and written agency summaries submitted to General Assemblies;
- Minutes of the 2010 (219th), 2012 (220th), 2014 (221st), and 2016 (222nd) General Assemblies;
- Quantitative 2010 and 2017 survey findings of church leaders and the May 2017 Presbyterian Panel Survey, Volume 2; and,
- Qualitative findings from two focus group discussions and survey respondent comments related to the value of social witness policy and the readership of Unbound, ACSWP’s online journal focused on Christian social justice and policy.

In the spring of 2017 Presbyterian Research Services surveyed church leader constituencies (PMA staff and board members, synod and presbytery staff, and General Assembly commissioners) and summarized responses regarding general levels of awareness of and agreement with ACSWP’s work. Survey respondent comments also were made available to the self-study writing team and selected information from the comments has been incorporated into this assessment. In a special effort to include perceptions of leaders in presbyteries that have been critical of ACSWP’s work, Presbyterian Research Services also conducted two focus groups at the Big Tent 2017. Big Tent participants from presbyteries that have voiced some criticism of ACSWP were invited to be focus group participants.

Using both qualitative text and quantitative data, this report is organized into seven sections:

1. Introduction;
2. ACSWP Organizational Location, Functions and Policy Development Process;
3. 2010 General Assembly Review Committee Recommendations and ACSWP Response;
5. Leadership in Social Witness;
6. ACSWP Challenges and Limitations; and
7. ACSWP Future Objectives.

The fundamental denominational structure as defined in the Design for Mission was organized around the concept of mission embodied in The Confession of 1967. That confession’s most explicit ethical section lifts up four concerns: peace, economic justice, racial justice, and “chaos in family life.” The adoption of the Book of Confessions in 1967 also brought forward much explicit moral teaching in The Second Helvetic Confession, The Heidelberg Catechism, and The Scots Confession. The most recent confession to be included in the Book of Confessions, the Confession of Belhar, specifically affirms seeking truth in the face of cultural ideology or doctrines that would legitimate forms of injustice. Overall, these confessions strengthen the connection between theology and ethics in the church and affirmed a place for the church’s moral voice in society.

Congruent with the confessional affirmation of the importance of social witness in the Reformed Tradition, Presbyterian Research Services surveys report large majorities of Presbyterians today affirm the value of social witness in our denomination (Table 1). While this affirmation varies by constituency, significant majorities report social witness as “very important” or “important” for the PC(USA).
Our denomination’s structure promotes this social witness mandate in the church confessions and the affirmation of its importance among surveyed Presbyterians in multiple ways. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is the organizational mechanism to develop, interpret, and monitor policies that encourage and challenge the church and society to reflect and act in faithful response to God’s call to do justice. It is ACSWP’s mission to help the church’s representative bodies speak with wisdom and forethought on challenges to Christian conscience as is formally expressed in the ACSWP Mission Statement:

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) serves the prophetic calling of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by providing the General Assembly with careful studies of pressing moral challenges, media for discussion and discernment of Christian responsibilities, and policy recommendations for faithful action.

The charter for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is the document Vision for Social Policy and Social Witness: Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness, approved by the General Assembly in 1993. That report updates previous approaches to social policymaking in the church in light of A Brief Statement of Faith (1991). The approach described in this document has been designed to provide the best possible discernment, reflection, and analysis to the General Assembly and its agencies and hence to the whole church. The intent of ACSWP staff and committee members is to do this work on a reasonably timely, cost-effective and participatory basis.

II. ACSWP Organizational Location, Functions, and Policy Development Process

An accurate assessment of ACSWP’s fidelity to its mission during this review period requires an understanding of ACSWP’s organizational location, mandated functions, and normal processes of performing these functions.

A. Organizational Location

Fidelity to its mission requires the ACSWP to support the prophetic voice of the church. Guided by the Holy Spirit, ACSWP offers its recommendations to the shared conscience of the church as it seeks the mind of Christ. The Hebrew prophets and much of Jesus’ teaching are the basis for Christian concern for justice. Fundamental, too, to the Jewish and Christian faiths is the pattern of having prophets play a role separate from that of kings. To apply this fundamental pattern today within the church, a prophetic function requires autonomy in relation to the central power of the organization. Within the church, ACSWP’s separate General Assembly-elected committee structure allows ACSWP self-direction, while the administrative structure places its staff under the authority of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Framed by the prophetic PC(USA) role, ACSWP functions as a General Assembly standing committee with direct access to the General Assembly and to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB). The ACSWP is constituted to have twelve members who are elected by the General Assembly for four-year terms, renewable once. Its members are chosen for their experience in and commitment to social witness, professional expertise in social ethics and fields frequently involved in social questions, and for their diversity of background and viewpoint, including theological diversity. Currently all committee members hold masters, doctoral, or legal degrees. Usually several members have served or are serving in the pastorate.

The ACSWP strives to cooperate and collaborate with the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and with the Advocacy Committee on Women’s Concerns (ACWC). While the mandates of ACREC and ACWC include assisting ACSWP in policy development, the functions of ACSWP and these two “advocacy” committees are primarily complementary. ACREC and ACWC focus on advocacy and monitoring social policy for their respective constituencies. Liaison members from the ACREC and ACWC committees attend ACSWP meetings and ACSWP members attend, as liaisons, the meetings of the advocacy committees. Members of the three committees also often consult with each other as they write advice and counsel memoranda regarding General Assembly overtures.

According to the PMA Manual of Operations, three members of the PMAB are also elected to the ACSWP. The intention is to have a membership overlap for strong coordination and communication with the church’s central direction-setting body. For most of 2017, there remained only one ACSWP member who had also been a member of the PMAB. The PMAB has not nominated current members to replace those whose terms were expiring while it deliberated ways to reduce its size and restructure internally. Thus, ACSWP has functioned with ten of its mandated twelve members. In September 2017, the PMAB approved a new governance structure that halves its own number to twenty and includes only one shared ACSWP/PMAB member.
The relationships of ACSWP, the PMA Board, and General Assembly have been maintained, as required, by regular ACSWP reports submitted to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and a narrative report, plus meeting minutes, submitted to every General Assembly. Also, as stated in the Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations, ACSWP representatives meet annually with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee for strategic reflection and anticipation of social witness policy concerns.

The current ACSWP coordinator is the Reverend Chris Iosso, PhD. At the time of the 2010 review, the ACSWP coordinator position was located in the PMA Executive Director’s office. Currently the position is located in the area of Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries where much policy interpretation occurs.

B. ACSWP Mandated Functions

To assist the church in its role of promoting social witness, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations assigns the following specific functions to ACSWP:

1. “Prepare policy statements, resolutions study papers, social involvement reports, or Advice and Counsel Memoranda on the church’s social witness for study and recommendation to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative; seek concurrence of the Board relative to financial implications on plans for studies.

2. Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of social witness policy or strategy, including interim statements concerning pressing social issues, the Board may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly. Facilitate two-way communication with all parties throughout policy development and advisory processes.

3. Prepare special studies at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or its Ministries on matters of social witness.

4. Work cooperatively with the Ministries and all councils in coordinating the interdependent process of social policy formation, implementation, and monitoring.

5. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its representative committees on overtures, commissioner resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that recommend policy direction or action on social witness.

6. Maintain an up-to-date and accurate Social Policy Compilation of General Assembly social witness policy and provide information to the church as requested.

7. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret the social witness policies of the General Assembly.

8. Identify facets of the church’s social witness that enable or obstruct effective action. Analyze, in cooperation with the General Assembly Ministries, the effectiveness of social witness in councils, institutions, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency. After consulting entities that have primary ministry responsibility and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, report to the General Assembly on the advisory committee’s findings, together with recommendations for improving social witness.

9. Report directly to the General Assembly because of the need to maintain and advance a prophetic witness of the church.”

In these ways ACSWP counsels the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on the use of the church’s corporate voice as an advocate for justice, peace, and environmental sustainability. The Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) complements The Vision for Social Policy and Social Witness: Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness. In its description of the church’s organization, this document reaffirms ACSWP’s location in the policymaking rather than program implementation areas of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

C. ACSWP Social Witness Policy Development Process

The essential process of policymaking is the development of documents that are submitted to the General Assembly for approval/revision/disapproval, interpretation and dissemination. “Forming Social Policy” in the General Assembly Manual lists the following five types of documents to be developed by ACSWP:

- Policy Statements. Developed in response to General Assembly action, position statements can take the form of longer proposed “policies” that develop principles based on biblical and confessional resources, review history and data, and provide a theological and ethical framework for church strategies on major questions.

- Resolutions. These policy documents, usually shorter than full policy statements, apply previously approved policies to particular matters, such as applying church human rights policy to a particular national or regional crisis.

- Study Papers. The General Assembly can request that an issue be studied or ACSWP can determine that an emerging issue is important enough to stimulate church-wide study of a social concern. Sometimes studies are conducted as part of a multi-year process leading to recommendations in light of church-wide or more focused feedback. Each policy statement and most resolutions also include a rationale section as a reasoned and grounded basis for GA positions. Study papers provide such foundation for policy statements and resolutions.

- Social Involvement and Monitoring Reports. These documents address issues of urgency and importance, and may analyze ACSWP’s own role in addressing a given subject. Monitoring reports examine how the church is applying its social policies in its program work. Monitoring of program work is often not put into formal reports, however, but is shared in on-going consultation and cooperation with program areas.

- Advice and Counsel Memoranda. These statements provide informed comment that applies existing policies of the General Assembly to new decisions. Of practical help to the commissioners, the memoranda often suggest ways to combine overtures so that the assembly does not need to vote repeatedly on similar matters. The memorandum assemble relevant data, descriptions of past and present church practice, and theoretically informed comment on possible consequences and public policy implications. Such memoranda usually recommend concurrence or non-concurrence, based on the relevant policy, analysis, or consequences. Advice and Counsel memoranda may also be addressed to PMA members as it deliberates and prepares policy recommendations for the General Assembly.

Study teams of church member experts volunteer their time to develop these position statements that provide the basis for recommendations that the General Assembly may approve with or without amendment, receive for study, or disapprove. Subject specialist consultants are also employed to draft documents, in consultation with the study groups. The ACSWP, as a whole, reviews the study teams’ reports and determines their readiness for submission to the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

While review of proposed policy statements by church and congregational leaders is not always possible prior to General Assembly deliberation, there has been particular effort during this review period to encourage church-wide deliberation and dialogue regarding critical social witness matters, specifically regarding the issue of the church’s policy on war and peace and most recently regarding the critical problem of drug use, criminalization, and prison incarceration as a result of the “war on drugs.” Both social witness issues required discernment by as many Presbyterians as possible and were written as study papers to be considered, discussed, and critiqued prior to being finalized as submissions to General Assembly. These dialogue and feedback processes still had limitations with regard to getting the attention and time of leaders to provide feedback, but they provided some significant input into development of the policy statements.

Prior to assessing the accomplishments that resulted from this policy development from 2010 to 2017, however, an initial review task is to describe if, and how, ACSWP responded to the recommendations made to ACSWP by the 2010 General Assembly review committee. If regular review is to have utility for both the church and the standing committee, it is necessary to learn the potential outcomes of the previous review committee recommendations. How and to what extent did ACSWP respond to the 219th General Assembly (2010) review committee’s report?

III. 2010 General Assembly Review Committee Recommendations and ACSWP Response

In addition to commending ACSWP for its work, the 219th General Assembly (2010) Committee on Review of General Assembly Permanent Committees reported the following three recommendations for ACSWP:

1. Recommends training for ACSWP’s committee members and staff as they work with the public and the media to ensure appropriate and accurate communications.

2. Recommends that ACSWP work with the Office of Communication of the General Assembly Mission Council to improve communication with the whole church, especially younger people, utilizing emerging technological tools.

3. Although we recognize that it is not the mandate of ACSWP to disseminate information, we recommend that ACSWP work with Research Services to better understand why certain members of the church have a better understanding of ACSWP’s work and use that (knowledge) as a basis for better communication with congregational leaders.

ACSWP had suggested communication improvements in its 2010 self-study and all three recommendations were related to this problematic aspect of ACSWP’s work. ACSWP responded to the first recommendation regarding public and media relations by arranging a public relations firm conduct a training at the October 2011 meeting in Denver.

In response to the Review Committee’s Recommendations 2 and 3, ACSWP began developing an online communication tool—an online journal. In September 2011, the General Assembly Mission Council (now the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board) designated the developing journal to be the successor to hard copy journal Church & Society. In October 2011, ACSWP launched, with the support of the Compassion, Peace, and Justice ministries area, Unbound: An Interactive Journal of Christian Social Justice (www.justiceunbound). Not only designed to strengthen the social witness of the whole church through dissemination of approved General Assembly social policies, this tool is also intended to be an open forum on areas where new witness is needed. It allows for and encourages dialogue about the social policies that either are under consideration or have been approved by the General Assembly. Furthermore, Unbound can include recent updates or examples of how the policy may be applied. The name, “Unbound,” refers not only to the lack of binding, but to Jesus’ words at the resurrection of Lazarus, “unbind him,” and to images of prisoners freed. Currently, the Reverend Chris Iosso is the general editor of this online journal and Henry Koenig Stone is the managing editor.

Thirty-three issues of Unbound have been published since its 2011 launch. The journal has won awards from the Associated Church Press for articles in 2012 (4 awards), 2013 (3 awards), 2014 (7 awards), 2015 (5 awards), and 2016 (8 awards), across several categories, including two articles chosen from 2016 for the anthology, Best Religious Journalism. Most recent examples of the types of awards won by Unbound and its contributors are listed below. These examples are the eight awards for work produced in 2016 and presented to Unbound in April 2017.

- Award of Excellence, Laura Cheifetz—Personal Experience/1st Person Account
- Award of Excellence, Chris Iosso—Editorial or Opinion Piece
- Award of Excellence, Alonzo Johnson—Personal Experience/1st Person Account
Publication was interrupted in the first half of 2017 due to scheduling of staff turnover, although General Assembly action and generous donations kept the journal authorized. Two issues were published in the latter half of 2017, along with seven topical stories on matters such as the “#MeToo” movement.

In an effort to learn the extent of readership, a recent Presbyterian Panel survey found that 20 percent of ministers and only 6 percent of congregants have read an Unbound article. While readership in the general population of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is very low, there is substantially more readership among leaders in the denomination (Table 2).

Unbound links to the ACSWP Facebook page and Twitter accounts and there is effort to increase readership especially among young adults through these social media links. Occasionally an Unbound article will go “viral” on social media. For example, one article by Rev. Iosso, entitled “Resisting the Creed of Greed: Are Economic Traitors Betraying Our Country?,” had a wide “reach” at the time Congress was debating changes in the U.S. tax code. Because the article was shared through Facebook accounts, more than 10,000 people received notification of the article and 851 individuals indicated through “clicks” on the link that they took a look at it. Such “reach” of our denominational social justice witness likely goes beyond PC(USA) ministers and congregants who initially “share” a link of an Unbound article. Most important, 286 people recorded a comment or shared the article with friends on Facebook.

PC(USA) leaders, including current and former ACSWP members and subscribers to the ACSWP newsletter “Salt and Light,” were asked to select adjectives that describe the journal. A very small percentage of survey respondents judged the journal to be “too narrow in focus” (6 percent), “superfluous” (5 percent), and/or “too secular” (5 percent). On average and most important, the majority of survey respondents describe the journal in positive terms (Table 3).

Relevant to the specific 2010 review recommendation that ACSWP improve communication with “especially younger people,” some survey respondents (16 percent) chose to describe Unbound as “young adult oriented.” In these early years, while this online journal has begun to gather some momentum in readership and has had much positive response in this review period, Unbound should be perceived as a successful start-up in response to the 2010 committee review. Overall, while challenges persist and will be addressed in Section V of this self-study report, ACSWP’s responsiveness to the 2010 committee review recommendations reflects very good effort to exhibit “a constant faithfulness to and in fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA).”

The ACSWP has developed and submitted to General Assembly all five types of documents described above during the 2010 to 2017 review period. Policy statements, resolutions, study papers, and social involvement/monitoring reports are listed in Tables 4–6. In addition to listing the submitted documents, the data include the General Assembly action regarding each document. Most all the submitted papers in Tables 4–6 were “approved” or “approved with amendments” by the General Assembly with the result that most of the documents have become statements approved by the PC(USA). Because the numbers of advice and counsel (A&C) items are large in each General Assembly year, the lists of A&Cs submitted by ACSWP to each General Assembly are included as Appendices A to D. The purpose of these statements and A&Cs is to strengthen the social witness of the PC(USA) and, thus, demonstrate ACSWP’s fidelity to its mission.

A. Policy Statements

Five policy statements developed by ACSWP were approved by the General Assembly during the review period (Table 4). Four policies focused on the systemic political and economic issues that impact individuals and families and recommend how our church should respond to the needs of these groups. A fifth policy statement, “Risking Peace in a Violent World” was the final statement from the multiyear peace discernment process and adopts five new peace-making affirmations. A sixth proposed policy statement, “Putting Healing Before Punishment,” which addresses drug use and addiction and the war on drugs, has been submitted to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

B. Resolutions

Much of ACSWP’s work in the past eight years has been the development of resolutions—statements that apply previously approved social policy to specific situations. All but one of the fifteen submitted resolutions were either General Assembly “approved” or “approved with amendments.” See Table 5 for the list of resolutions developed and submitted to the General Assemblies.

C. Social Involvement Reports and Study Papers

Five study/social involvement reports were submitted to the General Assemblies (Table 6). When there are issues of urgency, ACSWP has the mandate to provide the General Assembly with direction regarding a current issue or “crisis.” An example is the 2010 report “Living Through Economic Crisis,” which responded to the 2008 recession and the resulting credit crunch and massive foreclosures. Also, study papers, such as “Putting Healing Before Punishment” submitted in 2016, are a mechanism to seek discernment by congregations and denominational leaders regarding the content of a developing policy statement. The discernment regarding new peacemaking affirmations also used this study paper process over a period of six years.

D. Advice and Counsel Memoranda

To inform the General Assembly decision-making process, ACSWP provides policy interpretation for considering overtures from presbyteries, commissioners’ resolutions, proposals by agencies and corresponding bodies through Advice and Counsel (A&C) memoranda. In applying the church’s accumulated social witness policy decisions, many A&C memoranda suggest both wording changes to reflect previous policy and program recommendations. A&C content is often written in consultation with presbytery representatives, agency staff, and ACREC and ACWC members.

The goal of the A&C documents is to show how a recommendation may or may not work, to show policy precedents, to raise and address objections, or to outline implications. This ACSWP function is intended to help the commissioners make informed decisions. When the A&C opposes a given course of action, it often proposes an alternative that might represent something of a “win-win” compromise.

In assessing the fidelity to its mission and the effectiveness of its service, ACSWP looks to how the General Assembly responds to these memoranda offerings. Table 7 reports the number of A&C memoranda submitted to business in each General Assembly year as well as reporting the proportion of overtures on which the General Assembly action was congruent with the A&C recommendation. The data to support this table are included as Appendix E which lists the A&C memoranda.

In each of the General Assemblies, ACSWP submitted between forty and eighty A&Cs in response to overtures, agency, and special committee reports. Equally important to this large amount of work is the scope of the A&C work, as evidenced by the number of different GA committees to which A&Cs were submitted. In this role, ACSWP has responded to social justice issues across the business of the GA rather than limiting this task to committees that focus only on identified social justice-oriented overtures.

Most important is the finding that indicates the General Assembly has concurred with the majority of the advice and council memoranda provided to GA commissioners at these most recent General Assemblies. The majority of ACSWP advice is congruent with GA action (Table 7). In some cases, the GA may not have taken all the advice and counsel of a particular A&C. Congruency is defined broadly as GA approving or disapproving an overture in accordance with a ACSWP recommendation to approve or disapprove. Actions of answering an overture by approving an alternate overture have been analyzed on the basis of the ACSWP recommendation and the approved alternate action.

This pattern of congruence between the A&C advice and GA action is, of course, co-relational, not causal. Recent survey data, on the other hand, indicate that the A&Cs contributed to the GA committee decisions and the final GA plenary votes. The 2017 survey completed by commissioners to the 221st and 222nd General Assemblies (2014 and 2016) indicate that the A&Cs were judged to be helpful to these decision-makers. The great majority of the GA commissioner respondents (79 percent) reported the A&Cs to be very helpful or helpful in their work. This positive perception of the ACSWP’s A&C work indicates this work has essential utility and is an effective means of strengthening social witness in the PC(USA).

These survey findings also allowed ACSWP to learn the recent commissioners’ perceptions of ACSWP work compared to perceptions obtained for the 2010 committee review. Fifty-four percent of the commissioners who responded to the 2010 survey reported the A&C work was “very helpful” or “helpful” to their work as commissioners at GA2006 and GA2008 compared to the almost 80 percent who were so positive about the A&C work almost a decade later (GA2014 and GA2016).

The causes of the large increase in positive responses from 2010 to 2017 are not found in the survey data. Clearly, there are likely a number of reasons for the increased positive findings in 2017. Such factors may be fewer commissioners from presbyteries that might be negative of ACSWP work, different political and economic circumstances of congregants and congregations, different socio-demographic characteristics of the commissioners and different types of overture issues. Regardless of the contributions of these potential external factors to the increased satisfaction with ACSWP, the work of ACSWP seems to be more widely acknowledged as helpful during this current review period than in the decade of the last committee review. The important ACSWP advice and counsel role to the deliberation of the General Assembly is evident at the end of this review period and seemingly, as indicated by survey findings, is more salient to commissioners than a decade ago. Such survey results provide robust evidence that ACSWP demonstrates effectiveness in its mission.

These policymaking document data indicate that during the review period there have been numerous accomplishments in the form of General Assembly approved social witness policy and resolutions generated or advised by ACSWP. Such findings provide evidence that ACSWP is effective in contributing to the enhancement of social witness of our denomination. Still there remains the important question of ACSWP’s leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work of social witness policy development and application/implementation of approved General Assembly policies. ACSWP assumes a leadership role in the promotion of social witness and justice

V. Leadership in Social Witness

In addition to fulfilling its mandate by developing social policy and providing advice and counsel to the General Assembly and Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, ACSWP has exhibited important leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources of social witness. This leadership is evidenced in five types of activities presented below:

1. Leadership in Applying Policies to Emergent Issues

The ACSWP exhibits leadership in its efforts to keep the church current with topics addressed in the past. For example, ACSWP staff has helped both Stated Clerks and Moderators during the review period with public statements addressing human rights issues and other issues of social justice. ACSWP and/or its staff drafted or contributed to statements on gun violence, Middle East issues, criminal justice, US-Cuban relations, energy, and campaign finance reform. In such efforts, ACSWP is proactive and able to bring to the attention of General Assembly and Presbyterian Mission Agency Board potential areas where social witness will be required of the church.

2. ACSWP Leadership with PMA and OGA Staff and Elected Members

   a. Using the General Assembly approved policies that have been developed by ACSWP, the Washington Office of Public Witness (OPW) is guided in its efforts to support congressional legislation or testify against proposed legislation that is contrary to PC(USA) social policy. The OPW has recently used tax policy, Israel-Palestine statements, and environmental policies in advocacy arguments toward pending congressional legislation.

   b. The ACSWP coordinator attends Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) meetings. He provides updates on projects to keep the elected members aware of social witness opportunities and challenges. The committee has written Advice & Counsel memoranda to the PMAB as a whole and letters to the board’s Governance Task Force, the Way Forward Commission, and the Vision 2020 Committee, relating structure to mission and arguing for more vision by the leadership.

   c. The ACSWP coordinator sits at “tables” with program staff, providing policy bases for projects and helping develop applications of General Assembly actions. Currently, the ACSWP coordinator is co-convener of the Middle East staff team and a member of the “Green Team.” The Unbound managing editor, as ACSWP staff, has been a member of the trafficking staff table and social media work group.

   d. The ACSWP works with PC(USA) mission networks to contribute knowledge about General Assembly policy and to gain knowledge from them to update policy. For example, a recommendation to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) by ACSWP, in cooperation with the Cuba Partners Network, called for the PC(USA) to celebrate and strengthen the ecclesial relationship and partnership between the PC(USA) and La Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada en Cuba (IPRC). It asked the assembly to update the partnership agreement “in light of new hopes and realities as we assess together new opportunities for mutual mission.” Another example is the membership of two current ACSWP members in the Israel-Palestine Mission Network, with which the ACSWP coordinator also works. In addition, the ACSWP coordinator has met with the Syria Lebanon Partnership Network.

3. Leadership in Policy Interpretation Using Presentations and Trainings

   During the review period, the members and staff of ACSWP have made many presentations, workshops, and sermons to classes, church groups, and conferences. In 2010, the ACSWP coordinator developed a colloquium on the Accra and Belhar Confessions. In 2011, at Big Tent, the co-chairs of the Economic Crisis study team presented a workshop and invited response from the conference participants. Workshops and discussion groups were also led by ACSWP members and staff at the 2015 and 2017 Big Tents. Also, each year ACSWP elected and staff members offer workshops at the CPJ Training Day in Washington, D.C., which directly precedes the Ecumenical Advocacy Days.

4. Leadership Provided to Educators

   The ACSWP staff and elected members meet regularly with theological and ethical educators to strengthen the connection of educators with the work of the General Assembly and the social witness of the church more broadly. This leadership includes working with the Social Ethics Network (SEN, formerly the Theological Educators for Presbyterian Social Witness [TEPSW]). This group is composed primarily of Christian ethicists currently or formerly serving in seminaries and other educational institutions related to and/or in covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A).

   The Social Ethics Network meets annually on matters of social witness policy where it reviews papers and provides a testing ground for Christian social-ethical analysis of many issues. The ACSWP coordinator assists this group informally and its members provide a willing pool of academically proven volunteers and consultants on ACSWP study projects. In the fall of 2011, the Social Ethics Network (SEN) led a Planning Consultation on Peace Teaching and Discernment in Presbyterian Seminaries, Colleges, and Universities at the San Francisco Theological Seminary (SFTS), San Anselmo, California. Another example was the discussion of the resolution, “Honest Patriotism,” in gatherings before the American Academy of Religion in 2017 and Society of Christian Ethics in early 2018. These college and seminary professors are also encouraged to use PC(USA) social policies in their classes.

5. Leadership in Ecumenical and Evangelical Connections

   The ACSWP reaches out to other mainline Protestant, African American, and Orthodox churches through its coordinator’s service on the Peace and Justice Committee of the National Council of Churches of Christ (NCCC). Also, ACSWP meets at least every third year in Washington, D.C., and includes sessions with the NCCC president and leaders of such organizations as Sojourners (“Evangelical”), Faith and Public Life, and Creation Justice Ministries.
a. The coordinator no longer serves on the staff team of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations, but continues to advise the group primarily on areas of ecumenical social thought. The coordinator served in that capacity for the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC), staffing and advising the “Message” committee at its June, 2017, General Council in Leipzig. The coordinator has also presented a paper on environmental policy convergence with Methodist and Lutheran colleagues in the Society of Christian Ethics.

b. The ACSWP has also taken a lead to engage in mission conversations with self-described Evangelical Christians in the areas of human rights and human trafficking, areas where other mainline churches and women’s organizations (notably Presbyterian Women) have initiated advocacy efforts. The ACSWP staff and elected members have sought to learn from Evangelical Christian efforts of rescue and rehabilitation with sex trafficking victims and have engaged in dialogue about the place of justice in evangelism overseas.

While ACSWP provides leadership in social witness in the national PC(USA) bodies and ecumenical groups, Presbyterian congregants are not often aware of how ACSWP provides such leadership both in the development of policy and in its interaction with other groups. Comments reported in the recent survey indicate there are congregants who expressed a lack of awareness of ACSWP work or were confused about its role. Some know the policy positions but do not know how they were reached. Some other respondents stated that the work of the committee should, but did not reach to the congregations. Such qualitative findings lead to a discussion of ACSWP challenges and limitations.

VI. ACSWP Challenges and Limitations

The ACSWP has confronted persistent challenges and limitations in this review period very similar to the challenges of the previous decade. Three significant challenges and limitations are described in this section: (1) dissemination of PC(USA) social witness documents; (2) ACSWP as a “Lightening Rod”; and (3) engaging youth and young adults in social witness policy.

A. Dissemination of PC(USA) Social Witness

A continuing challenge is dissemination and interpretation of General Assembly approved social witness papers and recommendations to other councils (synod, presbytery, and session), local congregational leaders, and congregants. Even with the additional communication tool of Unbound, social witness policy is often unknown. A good vehicle is the book, Five Risks Presbyterians Must Take for Peace by Christian Iosso, the ACSWP coordinator, based on the peace discernment report approved by the General Assembly in 2016. Westminster/JohnKnox Press judged this report to be readily convertible into marketable form.

This dissemination task has not been a mandated primary or sole responsibility of ACSWP. Rather the Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations states that ACSWP should assist others in their responsibility to disseminate social policy. The ASCWP is assigned the responsibility to “Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret the social witness policies of the General Assembly.” The ACSWP staff works with the General Assembly (GA), Office of the General Assembly (OGA), and Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) leaders whose responsibility it is to communicate and interpret social witness policy.

Still, ACSWP is mandated, as stated in the PMA Manual of Operations, to “Maintain an up-to-date and accurate Social Policy Compilation of General Assembly social witness policy and provide information to the churches requested.” Church leaders also perceive that it is ACSWP’s responsibility to broadly communicate and interpret PC(USA) documents. ACSWP is challenged to meet this expectation because of limited staff resources. While the elected ACSWP members very much appreciate the excellent work of the 2.5 FTE ACSWP staff, their concern has been that the ACSWP mandated functions, especially the compilation and dissemination function, require more staff time to accomplish well than is currently available.

B. ACSWP as a “Lightening Rod”

The General Assembly Manual recognizes that ACSWP can be a “lightning rod” at times, and that this can be the case precisely when ACSWP is doing its job. This situation is a persistent challenge. On issues of social witness with a potential to spark conflict and public criticism, ACSWP strives for discretion while maintaining commitment to its mandate.

In this review period, as in the previous review period, ACSWP has worked in a milieu where many Presbyterians value its work, but some leaders and members are critical of what work is done or how it is accomplished. In the most recent survey, the overwhelming majority of written comments about ACSWP were positive and supported the mission, the value, and the effectiveness of ACSWP. There were negative comments about ACSWP, however, as some respondents stated that the work of the committee is biased and/or too political. Several respondents commented that “the church had NO business addressing social justice issues.” The Research Services summary of survey findings reported:

Some survey and focus group participants believe the committee (ACSWP) should limit its activities to what they see as its core mandate: advising the General Assembly. It should discontinue other activities. Others believe the committee itself should be disbanded, because its core mandate is to advise the national church leaders considering making pronouncements on issues. These Presbyterians believe it would be wise for denominational leaders to stop making pronouncements, in which case ACSWP would no longer have a purpose.
Recent statements by the PC(USA) Stated Clerk, however, indicate that denominational leadership continues to make pronouncements based upon approved General Assembly social witness policy. For example, in November 2017, the Stated Clerk wrote to Congress urging legislators to pass a “clean” DREAM (Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors) ACT “that offers hope for young migrants by providing a pathway to citizenship” [http://www.pcusa.org/news/2017/11/stated-clerk-urges-fast-action-clean-dream-act/]. Given the more prominent positive attitudinal survey findings presented in Table 1 and continued public statements regarding social witness made by PC(USA) leadership, it can be argued that ACSWP, even at the risk of being a “lightening rod,” should steadfastly continue to work to fulfill its mission.

Some similar criticism has come as well in the form of General Assembly overtures. The most organized critique of ACSWP along these lines came at the 222nd General Assembly (2016) in a set of nine overtures from the Presbytery of Foothills in South Carolina. An effect of these overtures would be to instruct ACSWP to be primarily an educational body. Although the General Assembly disapproved all of the overtures from the Presbytery of Foothills, ACSWP leadership met with Presbytery of Foothills leaders in an extensive visit with follow-up. Such dialogue with individuals who are critical of ACSWP’s work has been one way ACSWP has tried to learn how to improve the process of social witness policy development and, thus, to achieve its mission more effectively.

While certain areas may question the role of corporate social witness more than others, the committee has continued to build relationships in locations where it meets, consulting with local and regional mission leaders, and helping bring engaged voices in General Assembly cities like Detroit and St Louis into dialogue with the larger church on issues of race and class.

C. Engaging Youth and Young Adults in Social Witness Policy
